IT'S SPRINGTIME IN CHINA, TOO.

As I walked across the lawn this morning, with the wet mist falling on my face, and the puppie bouncing at my heels, it was hard to believe so much of the world is full of hunger and hardships. We live in what is considered a more prosperous part of this Nation, but even here life is very unstable and humble. Rice, the main stay of each family, is more and more expensive each day. Tuesday, I paid my gardener Monday's price of rice, only to find that I had short-changed him $40,000. We pay our salaries according to the price of rice. You can see how useless money in the bank can be, for even the rich.

But also, as I walked, I felt grateful and glad for there are people that care. To prove it, yesterday there arrived a box of hand-made baby clothes—pink and white and soft to touch—some of America's finest. My teacher and I sorted the things carefully—some of the things will go into immediate use, and some will be stored away and used slowly as the need arises in the hospital. This is the third box of this sort and it arrived the day after I opened a "Well Baby Clinic." Our "Well Baby Clinic" is the first adventure into public health and as yet we don't know if it will be a success or not. The first day we opened it was pouring rain outside and we expected to just sit. We had offered free baths to the babies in the south end of town. But when they came, we measured, weighed, took their temperatures, and passed out advice. Nine babies turned up, in spite of the rain. We are a little worried because our baths are so popular even in the rain. I'm afraid during the summer months we will have to limit our work to health examinations of well children, inoculations, vaccinations, and health advice, and start up our weekly baths again in the winter months when they have no fires in the home and the children stay dirty for months because of the cold. In the summer baths are given at home. If our health work loses popularity, we can again use the bath as a drawing card. Its different from the old days when people went out and begged mothers to bring the babies in for baths.

Spring has arrived and strange new flowers, and fresh green buds appear everywhere. With the warm spring and summer-like days, old smoldering sicknesses reappear and we are busier than ever. Tuberculosis especially seems to get a fresh start after the cold winter days and colds bring in their toll. We have also had several meningitis cases, and minor surgery. The students are becoming more and more helpful. This week they started giving medicine and hypodermics. That's a big step in the life of a student nurse.

Thank you one and all for the many letters.

Sincerely,

FRANCES L. WHITAKER.

VALLEY MISSIONARY RALLY.

The Mission Rally for church groups, one and four, Valley Virginia Conference was held on May 5 at 8:00 at the Bethlehem Church with an exceptionally good attendance.

The devotional was presented by Mrs. Clyde Koon, wife of the pastor of the host church, assisted by Mrs. Shirley White, who rendered a solo, "Open Wide the Door," which was in keeping with the topic of the evening, "Opening Doors."

Officers elected for the following year are as follows:

Group I District Superintendent—

Mrs. Florence Bryan; Secretary

—Mrs. Harold Rhodes.

Group IV District Superintendent

—Mrs. Clyde Koon; Secretary—

Mrs. Shirley White.

The two groups were privileged to have as guest speaker for the evening Miss Louise Bookwalter, a missionary and teacher, on furlough from India. The inspiring message brought by Miss Bookwalter gives us all a better insight into the needs of the people of India and a deeper understanding of our dark-skinned brothers in another land.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

HAW RIVER, N. C.

The Missionary Society of the Haw River Congregational Christian Church under the leadership of Mrs. Artelia Poole, president, is doing a splendid work. The meetings are well attended and the programs are given in a most interesting manner. The Christmas program led by Miss Lillie Horn of Burlington at the home of Mrs. Bill Pearson was very good. After the devotional the members enjoyed a real Christmas party with tree and gifts for every one.

Three of the young people from the Youth Fellowship, Marvin Sharp, Ruth Williams and Kaye Pearson, gave a musical program.

The society has helped in furnishing the new parsonage, and is very proud of it.

The November program was a candlelight service in the church. It was very impressive and well-attended.

Although the Society is small in number, we are trying to meet all requirements.

For the June meeting, we are planning a picnic supper at the church and we are looking forward to having some of the members of the Evangelical and Reformed Church of Burlington meet with us.

MRS. LILLIAN GARRISON,

Secretary.

SUFFOLK, VA.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Suffolk Christian Church sponsored the Second Annual Woman's Banquet which was held in the Fellowship Hall on May 7, at 7:00 p. m., with about 225 mothers, daughters, grandmothers and granddaughters present. Mrs. W. A. Daughtrey presided and welcomed the guests. She also introduced all officers and circle chairmen and thanked them for the fine work being done.

The Program Chairman, Mrs. John G. Truitt, presented the guest speaker, Mr. William R. Savage, principal of the local high school, who spoke on the influence mothers have played in the lives of great men of the past and the part they have to play in shaping the world in the future. He quoted George Howard as saying, "I had rather have one good mother than 100 school teachers." He also quoted Lincoln's remarks, "All that I am I owe to my angel mother," and Napoleon's saying, "Give France good mothers and she will have fine sons." "The world is at a crossroad," said Mr. Savage, "and without the influence of great and good mothers there

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

The Virginia Museum of Fine Arts is having a special showing of Jewish Ceremonial Art. We enjoyed seeing it very much. They are also having their spring puppet festival and we especially enjoyed "Katina and the Jewel Tree." The Jewish art will continue through June 13 and if any of you are in Richmond try to see the lovely things.

The very oldest things to be seen are oil paintings like many of us have made in church school. There were several marked with the seven-branch candlestick and a few with Hebrew letters. One came from Hebron and another from Jericho and several of them were terra cotta and were made in Roman days.

Hanging at either end of the gallery are oil paintings on a crude type of canvas and stretched to fit a clumsy frame. These frames and paintings are alike except for their pictures. One shows the Return of the Ark of the Covenant from the Philistines, and the other is The Anointing of David by Samuel. Painted in primitive colors and with a very flat style they look very, very old. These were painted by Professor Herbert J. Gute of Yale University. He copied them from wall paintings at the Synagogue Dura Europos in Syria. In the painting of David, Samuel has the horn of oil ready to place the oil on David's head. David doesn't look very happy. Perhaps it is because the artist had no depth to his painting.

There are many cloths and hangings to be seen. Some of them are richly embroidered covers for the Torah, others are towels and table cloths to be used at Passover time. Several of them have delicate lace insets and Hebrew symbols woven in the lace or fabric.

Much of the art has to do with the Torah. You will remember that the first five books of the Old Testament are the law or Torah. There is a hand-copied Torah made in 1823 by a German named Isaac Holberstadt. He copied the letters beautifully and illustrated the paragraphs and divisions. Then he carved the beautiful wooden ends for the scroll to be rolled on. There are silver, brass and gold breastplates for the Torah. These lovely pieces cover the Torah and have a crown at the top. Some are richly inlaid, some have filigree or scroll work, still others are engraved.

There are pointers to use when reading the Torah. These were made of precious metals and woods, and are richly ornamented with carving or jewels and many have silken strings or tassels.

In one corner of the gallery stands a huge candelabrum. It was made for the Hanukah or Feast of the Lights. On top is a phoenix, a mythological bird, that represents the eternal life of Judaism. At the end of the candleholders are tiny doves to represent the proverb, "The congregation of Israel is like unto the doves." Fierce lions form the feet of the candelabrum. This is such a big one, but there are many smaller Hanukah lamps. Made of silver, brass and pewter they have many shapes and designs.

Another festival is commemorated with paper flags to decorate the hut for Sukkah or the Feast of the Tabernacles. That is the time when the Jewish families build lovely little huts of pine or other pleasant smelling woods and eat in their huts and give thanks. These flags are hung on the walls and many of them had pictures of the stag and lion, symbols of Judah and the faithful Jew.

At the Feast of the Passover commemorating the freedom from Egyptian slavery, there are prescribed foods to eat. One of the loveliest silver pieces is a Seder Plate for Passa and on it are engraved the foods to be eaten: an egg, shank bone, bitter herbs, parsley. There are Ethrog boxes to hold citron, Kidush cups to hold wine for Passover or other holidays.

Girls would be interested in the very old marriage rings. Several have embossed stones that have the seven-branched candlestick, one of gold has a tabernacle on top so that it looks odd and must be very heavy.

We think about these happenings in our study of Jesus as a Boy and Palestinian life. It is important, too, that these pieces should be on exhibit just at the time when the new state of Israel came into existence.

THEY SHOULD GROW UP TOGETHER.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I refer to self-reliance and the child. "Let me carry your purse for you, Jane—or you'll be likely to leave it here when you get off, you know." The speaker, a pleasant-looking woman, and the little girl who was with her had boarded the downtown bus on which I was riding. "When we reach town," she continued, "I'll help you select a nice present for Daddy."

All interest in their shopping trip faded from the child's face as she gave up the pretty red handbag, murmuring, "All right, Mother."

She appeared to be about eight years old—quite mature enough to take care of her own purse. I wondered if the mother expected always to be at her daughter's side. How could this little girl ever learn to take care of her belongings if she were never given any practice?

Later in the morning I was standing in one of the stores beside another mother and daughter, who, it seemed, were engaged in a similar shopping expedition. I couldn't help overhearing their conversation, and I thought of the first mother and wished she were with me. Before us many inexpensive articles were displayed on counters that were low enough to come within the range of a child's vision.

My attention was first attracted to this mother and daughter by the parent's kindly voice at she said, "You've had time to look at a number of things Daddy would enjoy, Virginia. Have you decided what you want to buy?"

"Yes, Mother," the little girl replied, holding up a small pocket-diary. "I think Daddy would like to carry this diary in his pocket. It has ever so much space for notes, and it has three calendars—one for this year, one for last year, and one for the year after this—1949."

"Did you look at the price mark?" the mother inquired. "You must be sure you have enough money to pay for it."

"I looked at the price before I decided, Mother," answered the child. "It's marked thirty-five cents. That will leave fifteen cents from this week's allowance to put away toward my box of paints."

"I thought you wanted to buy the paints this week," her mother said.

"I can buy my paints next week, Mother," declared the small Virginia. "This week I want to get Daddy a nice present for Father's Day."

Her mother had one more question. "Won't you be sorry if, when you reach home, you find that all your friends have new boxes of paints?"

"Oh, no, Mother! I can make nice pictures with my old crayons."

While the young shopper was completing her purchase, her mother vention, although Forsyth County in North Carolina has been holding them for over a year and Eastern Virginia began them last winter. We are sure that rallies like these are helpful to churches in a local area, and what we'd like to plan for in the coming months is to establish them, perhaps holding them two or three times a year. It's in this way that all young people can know the latest in Convention news, best in materials, learn new officers, and know each other. And if any of you have some suggestions to offer about these district meetings, will you let us know about them? When we pool our good ideas, we always can have the best in Christian young people's work.

The spring rally of the Western North Carolina young people will be held May 30th at Sophia Church at 4:30 p. m.

For those of you who aren't quite sure of where Sophia is, here are directions: On Highway No. 311 (on Asheboro-High Point road), about eight miles out of Asheboro. The church is on the right as you enter Sophia.

This rally will be a "preview" of summer camp, with worship, slides of "A Day at Camp Hanes," songs, picnic supper (young people are to bring their lunches and the ladies of the church will furnish the drinks), and Christian fellowship.

We hope to see all of your churches represented, young people of Western North Carolina!

The new (and better) packets are being made up right now—but they won't be available until July 12 at the School of Missions at Elon College. However, you may put in your order for your packet any time, and we'll reserve one for you. And if you fail to buy a packet at the School of Missions, you'll have another chance at any Sunday School Convention to be held after July 12 and at the young people's summer conferences and camps this summer. Make plans in your budget now to get your packet in the summer—this is the only way to make plans for the fall and winter months in your society.

The Junior Pilgrim Fellowship of the Elon College Community Church sponsored the new religious movie, "Beyond Our Own." An offering was taken for mission projects.

DEAR FELLOW P. F.'RS:

We enjoy reading your programs and decided to share some of ours with you. We've had a Town Hall meeting and found it lots of fun. Also, it was easy on the leader because everybody had to give ideas and help. Our subject was "Dramatics and the Christian Life." We divided into small groups, each with a question to discuss. Then, at a given signal, we returned to our meeting room and presented our thoughts to the entire group. All the talks were interesting, from the modern movies and Christianity to the subject of our own play, "Bashful Bertie," which we're presenting May 14. We got definite results in the form of better worship services. You see, one group discussed the use of dramas by the leader to put all members in a quiet worshipful attitude. Last week, Dorothy West tested the ideas expressed, and we had the best worship service we've ever had. The service was planned entirely without the aid of an adult. Perhaps we're growing up in our thinking.

While we're talking about programs, I'd like to mention the one Dorothy used last Sunday—Book Reviews! It sounds like school, but it was good. Louise Currin told us about Betty Betz's book, Your Manners are Showing, which is a know-how for young people. Jean Simmons reviewed a book based on actual happenings in the leper colony at Colon. The name of this book is Who Walk Alone. Our Director of Religious Education, Miss Mary Walker, gave us In Henry's Backyard, and, say, it's good! It's a child's book, but it has a very grown-up idea on our world and the races in it. Dorothy West reviewed The Robe, by Lloyd C. Douglas. That was all the time we had but there are some other books we are going to talk about some day, and My Dear Ego is first on that list.

Before I close I want to say that these two programs are an outcome of our Retreat which we held in March. We think a Retreat is a necessary and a wonderful part of Pilgrim Fellowship. In the words of Jean, "A Retreat has everything—serious moments, fun, worship, planning, time to think, time to work, time to play, time to renew our purpose in our hearts." We come away with a renewed knowledge of what we're doing, how we have failed in the past, and what we're going to do about it.

walked over to a counter on which bright boxes of water colors were being displayed. I could see that she was tempted to gratify her daughter's wish for a box; very wisely, she refrained.

As the two walked away, I noticed that the little girl was carrying her package and her purse, and I wished that more mothers would give their children opportunities to learn to take responsibility.

Bewilderment regarding money is the basis of many tragic mistakes in adult life. Parents foolishly decide not to "worry" their children about financial affairs, and so they permit them to grow up in a fancied world of ease and abundance. How much kinder it is to give boys and girls some understanding of earning, saving, and spending—so that they are guided naturally into the realization that money once spent cannot be reclaimed in order to purchase something else.

The only dependable way to help children to understand money is to give them practice in its use. Grown persons who began when very young to have the care of small sums of their own may be expected to handle, with reasonable confidence and success, the larger amounts that now come into their possession.

REPUBLIC NOT DEMOCRACY.

Down to the time of Woodrow Wilson, the United States was seldom described as anything but a republic. The word democracy occurs rarely in state papers. Nearly always the country is "the republic." Thomas Jefferson was the founder of the Democratic Party; but, in his first inaugural address, though he refers several times to the republic or the republican form of government, yet he does not once use the word democracy or any derivative of it.

The pledge long used in our schools is a pledge of loyalty "to the flag, and to the republic for which it stands."

Julia Ward Howe did not write the "Battle Hymn of the Democracy."

MEN WHO DARED TO STAND FOR GOD.

LESSON X—JUNE 6, 1948.

By REV. W. STANLEY CARNE.

LESSON TEXT: Daniel 3:4-7, 13-18; 6:10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Acts 5:27-32.

LESSON TOPIC: The example of Daniel and his three friends.

It is easy to see that as Chapters 2 and 7 go together, so do Chapters 3 and 6, and 4 and 5. Quite clearly Chapters 3 and 6 and 4 and 5 have symbolical significance, independent of their historical value. The first pair shows us by the example of Daniel and his three friends how wonderfully near God is to His Saints, especially when, faithfully adhering to their Master, they seem to be crushed by the world-power. The second pair present the two kings of the first monarchy, as an example of how God can suddenly humble the world power at the very height of its insolence and rebellious scorn, and of how little reason the faithful have to dread its might.

The Fiery Furnace.

God has never left Himself without a witness. An Enoch and a Noah found on the eve of the flood; an Abraham in Chaldea, and a Lot in Sodom. While the multitudes were falling prostrate before the golden image Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were in their closet on their knees. Where was Daniel? Probably now as often, at some distance from the court. Wherever he is, he is worshipping the God of Heaven. If at hand like his three friends, fearless of the consequence, he refuses to obey the summons to the plain of Dura, but for this time left unmolested by his enemies, for reasons which we can only conjecture. Now, not Daniel, but his three friends, are to be made illustrious through all time for their faith in and their fidelity to the true God. Daniel in noble self-forgetfulness, is content to leave them the honour of the deed, without being careful to give the grounds of his non-participation in it; an incidental confirmation of the genuineness of the history.

"There are certain Jews whom thou hast set over the affairs of the province of Babylon." This language is indicative of the spirit which prompted the accusation. Three faithful Jews so exalted, a likely butt for the shafts of envious idolatrous natives. There is nothing to be found against these men, as in the case of Daniel, except concerning the law of their God. In a world lying in the wicked one, fidelity to God is hardly able to escape the malice of men. In a corrupt time "He that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey." False or hostile accusation for the truth's sake, according to the Sermon on the Mount, is to be rather rejoiced in by the servants of God. Here are the footprints of the prophets and of the Master Himself, and the servant is not greater than his Lord.

The charge, true in a way, but made with evil intention, was answered with meekness, firmness and faith. "O Nebuchadnezzah, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter." This is not discourtesy but the spirit of real earnestness. "Our God whom we serve is able," then they continued, "We will not serve thy gods. "The fiery furnace with the favour of God, and a good conscience, was much to be preferred to the comforts of a palace, with them. To a Jew or a Christian enlightened by the divine revelation, compliance was sin, though to the heathen it might be but a matter of indifference. The three Exiles knew their duty, and they knew in whom they believed. The God they served was able, if He pleased to deliver them from the furnace or preserve them in it, as according to tradition He had done for their father, Abraham, before them, in the very land. He who had answered prayer at the time of the king's distress, could answer prayer now. If the fire had consumed their bodies, then God could take their spirit into paradise. Better a thousand times to die with His favour than to live without it. Better a fiery furnace for the body than the fire of hell and guilty conscience for the soul.

When the king commanded, there was nothing but to obey, for rulers are to be obeyed. It would be ungrateful to the king from whom they had experienced so much kindness. To die now would end their usefulness. Regardless of what their countrymen thought there was but one thing to do. Duty was clear, and they accepted it.

It is due these three men to remember that, in the unexplained absence of Daniel, they exhibited the same heroism, the same superior intellectuality, and the same devotion to principle, which characterized Daniel. One of the sublimest passages attributed to men of God in any age, is found in these words, "We will not do it, we will not argue about it; and if our God in His infinite wisdom will not deliver us, we will still believe Him and die in the furnace, but we will not worship thy false god or obey thee in this matter." These men would die in any event, rather than worship a false god.

Let Fire Confirm the Issue.

God has been with His church from the beginning. The bush may blaze, but their faith will spread the more, thus they will glorify their Lord. Blunders of friends, bitterness of enemies, opposition of foes, all things will aid the cause of Christ.

Thousands in latter days have walked calmly to the stake, cheered by the words of these young Hebrews, who illustrated that religious principle, founded on an intelligent conviction of truth, fixed in the heart beyond the reach of argument. There is a state of religious experience, possible to every Christian, of which this is a sample, we no longer need argument to support our conviction. Pride and passion shut both eyes and ears to reason. Matthew Henry suggests that these executioners were in a hurry to carry out their brutal task, however they themselves were overcome by the extreme heat of the furnace. Down went the three young men, but the God of Abraham vindicates His honour in Babylon.

"Did we not cast three men bound into the fire?" he suddenly exclaimed. "Lo, I see four men, loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like unto the Son of God." Here is a city standing at the head of the civilized world. The land is one of the graven images. The worshippers of the only true God are captives, while Bel, the great idol, seems triumphant. Three faithful servants of Jehovah, because of their fidelity, had been cast into the fiery furnace, and their God saw fit to deliver them.

The king's former impressions and convictions are revived and strengthened. He now heralds the rights and glories of the true God, and issues a decree warning all people on penalty of death, to be true to Jehovah. The three young Hebrews are restored to office, with increased honour, and the cause of the true religion was strengthened throughout the land, surely "the wrath of man shall praise Thee."

MISSIONS.

them it is all new; they hear it from the lips of a man who was once just such a restless unprivileged Chinese child as each one of them. How many does he touch? I looked and wondered and the children shouted alleluia.

The service of rejoicing over, the children poured out to the playground where there was an egg hunt. (Eggs being eight thousand dollars apiece, there couldn't be an egg for everyone. But sixty or seventy were lucky finders, and the rest enjoyed the hilarity.) The sun now lay warmly on the low school rooms which line the north wall of the church compound. Pastor Ch'i joined me for a moment as I stood looking at them and their pupils.

"You kept the teaching going all through the Japanese occupation," I said. "I remember we had that gift from Mrs. Proctor just the summer of 1939, and you got hold of that extra-solid, second-hand building material and had the rooms finished before Pearl Harbor. I went home on furlough in 1940. The building was well done; the rooms look substantial still."

"Yes," he said, "it was God's mercy to us that the American friend sent the money when she did. The Japanese allowed me to stay here because of the school. Without it I could not have saved the church. They were suspicious of that."

"How many children study in those rooms?" I asked.

"Over two hundred."

I reflected. The gift had been two hundred dollars in gold. It built the rooms, which has meant schooling and Christian fostering for two hundred children for ten years. That works out to what? I'm very bad at arithmetic but I think it's something like twenty cents a year a child . . . up to now . . . and the investment is good for another twenty years at least. Moreover it had helped to keep Pastor Ch'i with his people.

We had Easter breakfast in the long low room where the Ch'i family does everything but sleep. The Ch'is have a small courtyard on the church premises and are on duty night and day. I always enjoy a meal there. The floor is of gray brick which looks warm in the sun which pours through the paper lattice on the south. There is a capacious desk, a stove, and side table where there are family pictures. But the center of the room has a long table on which all sorts of occupations take place. As we went in this morning we found Yu Chen's eight-month-old baby lying on the board, while her mother tried to teach the little thing how to roll over on her exceedingly fat little tummy, to the great delight of all the young aunts and uncles gathered admiringly about. Never have I seen a family enjoy more than we enjoy this one; I am included in the family, because in addition to long years of friendship, I am as foolish about that chubby child as any of them.

But it took only an instant to clear away the baby and put out the chop sticks and bowls. In another moment we had taken our places . . . ten of us, and Pastor Ch'i offered our Easter thanksgiving. Then we had hearts-of-corn, porridge (because that is my favorite), and steamed dumplings filled with scraps of pork and crisp vegetables, because it was Easter. The talk went around about the work of Lent just over, about the gratitude of the young girl teachers in the school who get salaries of $8.00 a month and are grateful to an American Board friend who gives each one an American dollar in addition with which to improve the diet possible on the above figure, which, however, sounds impressive when you say it in Chinese: $4,000,000. We were always going back to talk about the baby who constituted a tiny human version of a celestial alleluia—so frequent and so sweet was the mention of her. And . . . "Did you know that today we shall give her to God?" inquired the young mother using the phrase for the baptism of a child. But at last the dread topic intruded . . . the Communists, would they come soon?

Pastor Ch'i benign and gray-haired, survivor of imprisonment by the Japanese, did not register the apprehension in our faces.

"I am not afraid," he said quietly. (Alleluia, in my thought.)

The meal over the daughters cleared away and washed up and soon the congregation began gathering, for in Haitien when we go to church we include a good hour of sociability before and after our worship. Pastor Ch'i receives the men in his school office; but the women came to pass the time of day with Mrs. Ch'i, and I, of course, stayed with her. We had the baby more rosy, more smiling, more entrancing than ever, so I considered our entertainment by far the best, especially as I was witness to the coy but happy smiles of our Yen-ching University student daughter when the woman inquired about a certain Yen-ching University man who visits Lan Chen's brother with persevering assiduity! When the church bell began to ring we all trooped into the church, and found it already crowded.

There were children this time. In fact, there were nursing mothers with babies gay in red caps and comfortable; and there were two- and three-year-olds who pattered up and down the aisles, looking sweetly up into the faces of those who were old enough to sit still. But these were surrounded by their elders and betters. There was Contractor Tung, the most prominent of our business men. There was Mr. Tao a middle school teacher who had come out from Peking to be present with his family. There was the blind boy Chang brought Pastor Wen our retired minister who pronounces our benedictions. There was Fu Ma, a servant in a campus family; there were university students, and our own staff of school teachers, with some of their public. In the rear sat two very shy boy soldiers; and scattered through the audience were the very poor. With prayers and hymns we worshipped together and after the reading of the great Bible passages, came the baptism of the babies—our own behaving beautifully; and then the reception of new members—all of them young and earnest. We also had a good solid sermon lasting the better part of an hour!

When I emerged the second time into the sunlight, now beautifully warm, the church members were preparing to eat their noon meal together in the schoolrooms and there was pleasant greeting and bustle connected with arrangements. I had Easter still to celebrate, so I could not remain to the communal love feast. Pastor Ch'i walked with me to the tall wrought iron gates, which are his pride.

"We have seen this church and this school grow from very small beginnings," I said to him. "On such a day as this we give thanks."

"We give thanks," he gravely returned.

The day is far spent. The sun is down behind the dark shapes of the hills. Next Easter is in the hands of God and I have less than the steady courage of my friend who shepherds the village church. But for such as he I do give thanks. Christ is risen. Alleluia.

It is the height of absurdity to sow little but weeds in the first half of one's lifetime and expect to harvest a valuable crop in the second half.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

The building which the Orphanage bought at Camp Butner, near Durham, N. C., has been dismantled carefully by first-class carpenters, who did an excellent job, and we have hauled it to our grounds on our own truck. We will begin erecting a new building at an early date, and maybe two buildings, as we got enough fine lumber out of it to build more than two buildings.

The weather continues dry and cool in this section. It has greatly hindered us in our garden; hard to get a stand-of anything, and harder to get plants we transplanted to live.

Our wheat is looking good and we hope nothing will happen to it before harvest. We are always uneasy about hail storms until the wheat is harvested and in the garner. We have cut twenty-eight acres of alfalfa and got it cured and in the barn without rain on it. On account of the frost and freeze we had on Easter Monday, it was cut short of what it would have been.

We seemed to have had our share of sickness this spring. Mr. Hilliard, our dairyman, had an attack of pneumonia, and was confined to his room for an entire month. Mrs. Farmer was ill in the hospital for six weeks. Now, Miss Brakefield, a matron in the same building, is in the hospital, and will be out several weeks. It makes it hard on the rest of us when a matron is taken ill and is out for some time. We have come to the conclusion that we need an extra matron to fill in when one drops out, and do extra duties when it becomes necessary. Who would like to have the job? If you are interested, write the Superintendent of the Orphanage and we will take it up with you. It seems to me there might be a good woman in the Congregational Christian Church who would be interested in this work of love. It is interesting work, and if you love children I know you would be interested.

It is interesting to watch a child grow and develop from early childhood to young womanhood or manhood. Then how interesting it is if they develop into fine influential persons to go out in the world and make good. The Orphanage is a worthwhile institution and has given many children an opportunity in life.

The Promotion of Daniel.

Daniel was a great man, he was preferred above the presidents and princes, He was a man of prayer, whatever happened he never forgot that act of communion, he spoke with wisdom, his syllables were flashes of glory. Belshazzar had a great feast, attended by a thousand guests, it was magnificent, idolatrous, and profane. Suddenly in the midst of the mirth and revelry, a hand was seen writing on the wall, fear and alarm filled the king's heart. None understood the meaning of the writing.

Daniel had been appointed at the head of the Magi in Babylon, so he was sought as interpreter. He read the message and gave the meaning. 'Twas a pronouncement of doom upon the king which ended with the words, "Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians." The days of Babylon and Babylon's king were numbered. So the days of every state. "The very hairs of our head are all numbered." How clearly we see the effect of sin to shorten the existence of states and individuals. On the other hand prayer added fifteen years to Hezekiah's life, and repentance saved Ninevah from an impending and threatening destruction.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

would be no world of tomorrow. Mothers have always set the moral code, manners, and habits of the world, and without mothers and women who will be willing to sacrifice, there will be nothing left in this world worth saving."

Music was furnished by a trio composed of Misses Julianne Brinkley, Frances Hall, and Elizabeth Fowler, who sang "The Holy Hour" and "Mother's Prayer." A quartette composed of Mrs. Ethel Saunders, Mrs. Gladys Morgan, Mrs. M. F. Hall and Miss Susie Powell, sang "Love and Mother" and "Home, Sweet Home," accompanied by Mrs. David Brown Harrell. A saxophone trio—Jackie Pettit, Grace Pierce, and Robert Bangley, accompanied by Pat Hurley, played several selections. A toast to the daughters was given by Mrs. George Rogers, to the mothers by Mrs. George Wells, to the grandmothers by Nancy Ann Newman, and to the women by Dr. John G. Truitt.

The banquet hall was beautifully decorated, and a delicious dinner was served by the men of the church. To this group of men go our thanks and appreciation.

We hope that this event will become an annual affair, and that in so doing we may create a more nearly perfect Christian fellowship among the women of our church.

MRS. J. W. UNDERWOOD,
Secretary.

MAY FELLOWSHIP DAY AT ALBEMARLE.

The women of the Missionary Society of the Congregational Christian Church of Albemarle, N. C., observed May Fellowship Day, May 7, by having "Family Night" at the church. We used the suggested Worship Service and Mrs. Walter Hall led a short meditation on, "Let Us Dream of Children."

After the worship period, we enjoyed a fellowship hour around a table seating fifty, which was beautifully decorated with tall, red candles and red and white flowers. At this time we welcomed our husbands and families; and in observance of National Family Week, we had a round-table discussion about "Ways in Which We Could Enrich Our Family Life." Refreshments were served. A gift was presented to the oldest and youngest mother present.

Besides the May Fellowship Day offering, the treasurer reported that we had made over $85.00 on a special project.

In Memoriam

HUDSON.

Mrs. Maude Hudson, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Hogue Vernon, passed away at her home in Semora, N. C., on May 16, 1948. She was sixty-seven years of age. She had married the late Sterling P. Hudson on February 20, 1902.

Mrs. Hudson is survived by two sons: Luther of Semora, and Vernon of Milton, N. C. Surviving her also are one sister, four brothers, and one grandchild.

Mrs. Hudson united with Lebanon Christian Church of Semora, N. C., at the early age of twelve and has been a loyal member these many years.

The funeral service was held at Lebanon on May 17 by Dr. C. E. Newman and M. W. Andes, assisted by two pastors of local churches. The church was well filled by friends and relatives.

May the Father God bless the family in this and other times of need.

MARK W. ANDES.

HOLLAND.

We, the members of the Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church, were saddened March 29, 1948, by the passing of our beloved friend and member, Mrs. Sallie Mae Whitley Holland. She will be greatly missed by her church and many, many friends and most of all, in her home where she served as a devoted wife and mother.

To pay tribute and desiring to express love and respect from the church, be it therefore resolved:

1. That we are grateful for such a true friend and member, one who had a strong Christian character and lovable personality. May each of us strive to be more like her.

2. That we extend to her bereaved family, especially her husband and children, our heartfelt sympathy and commend them to the Comforter whose grace is sufficient for every need.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. W. T. COX,
Mrs. JULIAN CARR,
Mrs. OTIS V. JOYNER,
Committee.

BLAND.

On March 9, 1948, God in His infinite wisdom saw fit to call from our midst Mrs. Mamie Butler Bland who was a faithful and loyal member of Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church. The influence of her smile, her ever ready word of cheer, her thoughtful solicitude of others and the love which dwelt in her heart have left an indelible imprint upon the memory of those who knew her.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.

2. That we, as Christians, emulate the Christian spirit shown in her life and service and strive to be more Christlike in our daily living.

3. That we extend to her loved ones our sincere and heartfelt sympathy and pray God's blessings may rest upon them.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. JULIAN CARR,
Mrs. W. T. COX,
Mrs. OTIS V. JOYNER,
Committee.

AN OPEN LETTER.

ther ministers should not be deprived of their rights to minister, and without state hindrance and delay. It is affirmed in Article V of your Constitution that "discussion of religious matters is absolutely free," and your forthright words convince us that your government will implement this declaration.

But do not the Lateran Pacts now virtually establish a majority monopoly over the spiritual life of the Nation, including these minority groups? A distinguished judge of the Italian Court who is of Protestant faith has affirmed, "Laws should protect minorities against majorities, but here the Catholic majority is favored not only by the laws but by the way they are interpreted." We do not ask that the majority be deprived of its favored status. We do voice the hope, held by the overwhelming majority of all American citizens, that the rights of all religious minorities in Italy be now fully considered and protected.

Specifically, the Italian-Jewish community has asked, thus far in vain, that religious instruction, however compelled to the majority faith, be optional to the minorities on the ground that "the right of everybody to educate their own children according to their own religious conviction is a part of liberty." Also, our fellow-Protestants affirm that the only churches rebuilt by the Government under the War Damage Law have been churches of the majority faith. Synagogues of Milan, Leghorn and Balongre are still in ruins. In September, 1946, the President of the Council of Protestant Churches of Italy sought help from the Government in restoring four demolished and ten damaged churches. This assistance has not yet been granted. On November 23, 1947, the disbanding by the Prefect of Naples of the Pentecostal sect (because they were accused of giving instructions "contrary to the spirit of the Regime") had an unhappy influence upon our American religious community. These and other particulars even more serious are of concern to the Protestants of America.

In America, we grant even to those with whom we greatly disagree, that freedom which we the majority passionately cherish for ourselves. Our Communist and associated radical movements have used to great advantage the effects of the Lateran Pacts, upon the life and religious liberty of all Italians who are not Roman Catholics. What your government now does to correct these inequalities will contribute immeasurably to our American understanding and growing appreciation of your leadership, and to world unity for the establishment of democracy everywhere and for the securing of an enduring peace. We ask for our fellow-Protestants and all other minorities in Italy only that—indeed, less than that—which is guaranteed to and realized by our minorities in America.

To this triumphant hour, we have supported your struggle and we rejoice in your victory. Now we would support your leadership to secure for all Italian religious groups their right to worship God and to exercise their religious faith according to the dictates of conscience.

EIGHT vs. ONE.

Eight Quarts of ale and one quart of milk. These were the tools of a perhaps not too singular drama lately in a small Maine community, a drama witnessed and reported by a local resident.

A seedy rural inhabitant stomped into the general store and local malt beverage outlet: "I want eight bottles of beer."

"Size," said the clerk.

"Quarts o' course," said the man.

"But Henry," said the anxious voice of the woman who had accompanied the man, "We need a quart of milk."

"By the be-geepers, woman, didn't I buy you a bottle of milk yesterday?"—Bangor Daily Commercial.

There is no man in any rank who is always at liberty to act as he would incline. In some quarter or other he is limited by circumstances.

The Greatest Fraternity on Earth

I was traveling on the train in Korea. At a way-station an old Korean gentleman got on and took the seat facing mine. He carried a heavy bundle wrapped neatly in a white cloth. We rode for several miles in silence, when suddenly the old man addressed to me a generous sentence in the Korean tongue which conveyed about as much to my mind as a code message from Mars. But I was prepared for the emergency and replied, "Chosen mal morogessimnidah." It was the one phrase I knew, and I could employ it quite glibly. The man smiled. Presently he tried me on another sentence. Again I said, "Chosen mal morogessimnidah." But the old man was determined, and he made a third sally at me with another long effusion in Korean. I was about to give him my stock reply when suddenly it flashed upon me that I had recognized one word. Somewhere amid all the confusion of sound I had caught, "Yesu." It was the name for Jesus. I pointed to myself vigorously and said, "Yesu." And he, with the same gesture, repeated, "Yesu."

No words can describe the sudden sense of fellowship that I felt with that old man. Here we were, traveling along together, two mutes, unable to reveal our thoughts to one another or to delve into the experience of the other. But we had one wonderful word in common, and that was enough.

Presently my companion unwrapped his bundle and produced a huge Bible. He turned through its pages and indicated with his finger a line that he wanted me to read. I shook my head hopelessly—then a sudden thought came to my mind. The structure of the Bible is essentially the same in Korean and in English, and I knew that the Orientals began at the back and read to the front. Borrowing his Bible for a moment, and noting the number of chapters in the contiguous books, I discovered that he was pointing to the First Epistle of John, the third chapter and the fourteenth verse. I looked it up quickly in my English Bible and read, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." Then searching through my Bible for an appropriate reply, I found Psalm 133:1. It was easy to find it for him in his Bible because I could identify the Psalms by the one hundred and fifty chapters. I pointed my finger at the chosen verse and this is what he read, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" He read it with many nods and smiles.

For another half hour we passed the Bible backward and forward, and through its sacred pages entered into a new experience of that warm fellowship in Christ.

The greatest fraternity on earth is the brotherhood of the Christian Church. In this the Church offers the brightest hope for the re-uniting of a broken, divided world.—The Rev. Dr. C. Darby Fulton on CBS "Church of the Air."

How Religion Helps in Illness

By REV. ALBERT W. PALMER, D.D.

How did I make my contribution to this process of getting well? How did I secure and maintain a quiet and curative peace of mind? Principally, I believe, by my religious faith. And, more specifically, by three attitudes of mind which that faith made possible:

1. The first of these was Acceptance. I didn't rebel against the new experience. "If this is the way I've got to live from now on, I'll try to make a success of it, and I believe God will help me."

2. The next thing was Affirmation. I repeated well loved scripture verses and hymns. I reaffirmed to myself the basic faith I had long ago expressed in five paragraphs called "Christian Watchwords." I simply said to myself: "I have taught this faith, now it is up to me to see if I can live it!"

3. The third thing that helped me was Appreciation and Gratitude. Ever since last summer I have had a new and deepening feeling of appreciation and gratitude for my wife and my home, first of all, and then for my memories of places, books and people, and for the kindnesses of friends—flowers they sent and notes and prayers and visits. And then, beyond all these, gratitude for the ministries of Nature. I have always been a nature mystic, but now more than ever. As soon as I could get out-of-doors and lie on my chaise-lounge in the garden, I found a spiritual joy in every flower, every tree and every bird-song. I shall never forget the absolutely overwhelming sense of gratitude which came to me that first day when I was permitted to sit up in a wheel-chair and wheeled myself to a window where I could look up at the quiet majesty of the mountains for the first time in three months. I had a new sense of communion with God in Nature. I know just what Tolstoy meant in his Pilgrim Song:

"My blessings rest on this fair world,
On mountain, valley, ocean;
And heaven's blue banner high unfurled,
The clarion winds in ceaseless motion."

I could, as Tolstoy said, "Clasp the whole creation in fervent rapture to my heart."

I know what Jesus meant when He said: "Consider the lilies of the field." I know that God is here, close and intimate and comforting, giving life and renewing strength and beauty. I just surrendered my life in quiet trust to the indwelling ever-present God.

And so being ill has been for me a religious experience—and I think the religious experience has helped me to get well.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Home Coming and Memorial Day services will be held at Salem Chapel on June 6, beginning at 10:00 a. m.

Rev. and Mrs. Allen L. Hurdle will begin work in Carroll County beginning June 13. They will serve until the middle of September.

Congratulations are in order for Editor and Mrs. Robert Lee House upon the arrival of Joyanna, at St. Luke's Hospital, on Friday, May 28. Mother and daughter are reported doing fine. They are expected to be at home at the parsonage after Wednesday of this week.—Mg. Ed.

Mr. Roy A. Larrick, President of the Valley Conference has recently been elected Grand Warder of the Grand Commandery, Knights Templar of Virginia. Mr. Larrick is also active in the civic and social affairs of his community in addition to being a loyal member of our Winchester Church.

Miss Ruth I. Seabury reached Japan for her special service to Doshisha University on March 29, 1948, while Rev. and Mrs. Vaughan Dabney expected to land in Yokohama on April 17. Dr. Dabney will divide his time between the Tokyo area and its churches and theological seminary, and Doshisha University in Kyoto.

Mr. David Hamm has prepared mimeographed copies of the revised Maranao Dictionary which Dr. Laubach compiled and which has been brought up to date by Mr. Hamm. The demand for this dictionary is so great, as well as for other literature in that language, that plans for setting up the presses and turning out books is being pushed rapidly.

The Missouri State Conference met in Springfield on May 10-11. The vote of the conference was 79 per cent in favor of the merger. The St. Louis Association was 82 per cent in favor of the merger. Mr. W. C. Rawls is a member of the Board of Directors of the State Conference. Christian Century reports that the Chicago Union by a 146-50 majority voted approval of the merger on April 13.

The Service Flag in our Newport News Church was lowered last Sunday evening in an impressive ceremony. Chaplain W. W. Jones officiated. A bronze plaque was unveiled bearing this inscription: "The Tower and Bell are Dedicated in Memory of Lt. David Harrison Collins, U.S.N., Who was Lost at Sea, December 18, 1944, and in Honor of the Young Men and Young Women of This Congregation Who Served in World War II."

CORRECTION.

In the list of member of the Executive Board in the issue of THE SUN of May 20, the names of Rev. J. Everette Neese, Secretary, and Rev. Robert Lee House, Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, should have been included.

In the list of members of the Board of Christian Education the name of Rev. J. Everette Neese should be deleted and the name of Rev. Robert M. Kimball added.

In the list of members of the Board of Publication the names of Rev. Robert M. Kimball and Rev. R. A. Whitten should be deleted and the names of Rev. W. Millard Stevens and S. E. Madren added.

HAPPY HOME.

As a result of a fire in Happy Home Church last year the sanctuary has been completely renovated at a cost of $3,000. A dedicatory service was held Sunday, March 28. New pulpit furniture consisting of nine pieces was presented to the church by Mr. George W. Hill in memory of his wife, Mrs. Julia Hopper Hill who had served as church pianist and secretary for many years. The dedicatory service was concluded with a candle light service and communion.

Cradle Roll Sunday was observed in April with sixteen of the twenty-one members present to receive certificates. A new parsonage is near completion. The Pilgrim Fellowship is making progress under the leadership of Miss Virgie Searce, president. The Sunday school has seven classes. Revival services will be held the first week in July.

CORNER-STONE LAYING AT BETHLEHEM CHURCH, ALTAMAHAW, N. C.

Sunday, May 16, was a significant day in the history of the Bethlehem Church of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. At the morning service the Annual Memorial Day was observed, with special music, the sermon by Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, pastor-elect, decoration of the graves in the church cemetery and the service of reverence for those who are buried in that historic place. A bountiful dinner was served on the church grounds, and in the afternoon the corner-stone laying for the new church took place. Superintendent Wm. T. Scott presided at the services and the presentation of gifts for the corner-stone were received by Mr. Crutchfield. Contents for the Treasury Box included a Bible, United States Flag, North Carolina Flag, Christian Flag, Communion set (the original one used by Bethlehem Church), bread, wine, history of Bethlehem Church, copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, copy of Elon College Catalogue, copy of The Christian Annual, picture of the church officers, picture of the present church building, names of the church building committee, Sunday school register, coins of United States money, Burlington Daily Times, Greensboro Daily News, and plans for the new church building. Motion pictures were made of the cornerstone laying.

Bethlehem Church is to be congratulated on the plan for the new building which is now under construction. This church was organized in 1832 and has had a significant and useful history. The new building will enable the church to render continued service for the present day and coming generation. The membership of the church at present is 456, with a Sunday school of more than 200 regular attendance.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE.

By C. B. RIDDLE.

Naturalists would not cite the Bible as a reference book on natural history and yet there is much of it in its pages. Animals, birds, fish, reptiles and insects are freely mentioned, even commented upon.

Birds stand out most prominently among the numerous Bible references to the lower animals. This is only natural, for having attracted the attention and admiration of man from the earliest times, they antedate himself. In the scale of creation they are the second of the creatures which were endowed with life. First came the beasts of the sea, then birds.

References to animal and bird life in the Bible are very general compared with man's present-day knowledge of these creatures. But teaching of natural life not being one of the aims of the Bible, species and their habits are not enlarged upon.

There are 290 references in the Bible to birds. More than 100 of these are general in the sense that they refer simply to birds as such. Some 175 references are made to certain types of birds, and in all 31 species are mentioned. Varying widely, they range from some of the smallest to the largest of all—the ostrich.

One of the earliest mentions of birds after the creation is at the time of the flood. When the patriarch Noah desired to learn something of the receding waters, he employed the raven and the dove. The raven never returned; the dove did. After the third errand the bird did not return.

A noteworthy event of the passage of the Israelites through the desert was concerned with birds. At a time when starvation was facing the multitude, it is recorded in Numbers 11:31 that: "There went forth a wind from the Lord and brought quails from the sea and let them fall by the camp." This reference is of special significance because it is one of the earliest mentions of bird migration.

The decorative value of birds was well appreciated by the ancients. There is abundant evidence in writings and drawings which still survive. As might be expected, it was the peacock which figured to the greatest extent. Pheasants and cranes were also kept in the gardens of oriental wealth. King Solomon enhanced the grounds of his palace by the presence of the peacock as is evidenced in I Kings 10:22.

David knew something of the elusiveness of partridges, for in his flight from King Saul, David asked the king why he "had come out to seek a flea, as when one doth hunt a partridge in the mountains."

It was thought by the ancients that ostriches were such heavy birds they could not sit upon and incubate their eggs. So they covered them with sand and left their hatchings to the sun. The extraordinary speed of the ostrich is mentioned in Job 39:18, in which it is stated that this bird "scorneth the horse and his rider."

Eagles claim a large proportion of Bible references to birds. Their commanding presence could no more have failed to attract the admiration of ancient peoples than it does today. The frequent use to which the eagle was put as the emblem of authority and might is indicative of the regard in which it was held.

Much of nature's seeming mystery is understood by watching the habits of its creatures. The man who spends much time in the woods and fields arrives at conclusions impossible to reach indoors. Job realized this and said: "But ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee; and the fowls of the air, and they shall tell thee."

The practice of keeping birds in cages is very old, for it is also mentioned in the Bible. Not only did individual families enjoy such pets but it evidently was practiced on a large scale, at times forming what might be called ancestral aviaries. In Jeremiah 5:27 it is said that "As a cage is full of birds, so are the houses full of deceit."

Snaring birds by use of nets is referred to in Proverbs 1:17 and their wildness is indicated: "Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird." The net had to be set without the knowledge of the intended victim, since seeing the net prepared, it would not enter. Thus it is

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE GENESIS OF INSPIRATION.

Whence cometh inspiration, the inspiration of the poet, the prophet or the scientist? The ultimate answer lies in the heart and mind of God. The more immediate answer is found in the attitudes, habits and aspirations of God's children. It is at once an attainment and an obtainment, the achievement of man and the gift of God.

An idea may sleep for decades within a scientist's mind, then suddenly return and lead to a great discovery, according to Dr. Otto Loewi, Nobel Prize winner. This visiting scholar has been lecturing at the Richmond Area University Center on the workshop of discoveries. He pointed out that great discoveries have been the uncovering of something that already existed through either chance or accident, intention and careful investigation, or by intuition. Criteria of excellence include not only "the weight of publications," but also "the number of sleepless nights when one struggled with major problems."

Moses lingered by the subjective or objective burning bush and found within that holy flame illumination for his life's work. Isaiah returned again and again to the temple until the august presence of the Most High became the central and controlling reality of His life. Amos brooded over man's inhumanity to man until the hot breath of God's displeasure forced him to cry out against sin in high places without fear or favor. St. Peter waited in prayerful expectancy until he became an instrument of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost for increasing the population of the Kingdom of God with three thousand souls. St. John was habitually in the spirit on the Lord's day and out of his poignant wrestling with the towering evil of his day came a glorious vision of the triumph of righteousness which has given heart to generations of the persecuted.

The Holy Spirit should remind us that the opportunities for inspiration are not in inverse proportion to the lapse of time since Jesus inspired men by his stately physique and contagious personality. The inspiration of the poet and orator, the discoveries of scholar and scientist, the generosity of the benefactor and philanthropist, and the dedication of the minister and missionary should suggest that the spirit continues to move "where it listeth." Attentive listening for "the still, small voice," constant activity "where cross the crowded ways of life," and persistent wrestling with the ethical and spiritual issues of our day are the conditions under which the miracle of inspiration is most likely to occur.

BROTHERHOOD PAYS OFF.

The "too good to be true" stories about which we read are usually at such distance as to lose the force of reality in our lives. Now here for a change is a grand story with local flavor. The people of Henderson, N. C., are reaping the harvest of cooperation and friendliness. Sigmund F. Teiser was a poor boy when he first went to North Carolina; but diligence and perseverance, coupled with just dealings on both sides, soon made him prosper. He died recently and, although himself a Jew, he left instructions for the executors to send $100 to every church in the county, regardless of denomination or creed. Rev. J. Frank Apple reports that our Henderson Church was one of the 112 churches included in the bequest. Of this total, 59 were white and 53 Negro.

It is refreshing to hear this immediate and convincing evidence of brotherhood. The financial returns are gratifying, but are only a part of the total benefits of such a bequest. The tangible returns are a token of the equally real, yet intangible riches which accrue in any community where genuine brotherhood is the rule of life.

CHALLENGE AND RESPONSE.

The issuing of the annual report of the Rockefeller Foundation is a matter of interest to many people. Raymond B. Fosdick, president of the Foundation, adds his words of mature wisdom which are worthy of wide consideration: "The present is one of the supreme moments of challenge, in which, as Tynbee says, the character of our response determines the chances of our survival. The past is littered with the wreckage of nations and empires which tried to meet the crisis of their times by physical means alone. Our response today cannot be confined to this lower level, unless we can rise to greatness and lift our answers to an intellectual and ethical plane, our fate will be the fate, not only of all the nations that preceded us, but of all species which specialized in methods of violence and of defensive armor."

Mr. Fosdick concludes his incisive analysis of our times with these words: "The issues of our time and of human destiny will be determined, not at the physical, but at the ethical and social level. Material power and dollars and military ascendancy may preserve us temporarily; but the dynamic tensions of our society can be relieved only by moral and social wisdom."

The fantastic blessings of philanthropy are summarized in this report of the Foundation. Among its achievements, money or men supplied by the Foundation have: Developed the vaccine which brought yellow fever under control; sharply reduced deaths caused by malaria and hookworm and acquainted much of the world with methods of fighting these diseases; built the world's first big atom-smasher at the University of California; built the 200-inch Mount Palomar Telescope, which will project man's sight into the universe two times farther than was possible before—helped improve scores of public health systems around the world as well as start twenty-five nursing schools in fourteen countries; trained more than 9,000 men in all branches of science, including some of the top men now in nuclear physics and the scientists who discovered the medical uses of penicillin.

Mr. Fosdick is especially proud of the total of $44,000,000 spent in China and thinks this one achievement will be best remembered. Of the yellow fever campaign, in which five Rockefeller scientists lost their lives to the diseases they were fighting, he says: "We made some terrible mistakes, but we finally made the vaccine. With it, Latin America has been safe from major epidemics. Without it, the whole Allied campaign in North Africa would probably have been impossible." He thinks that the chief purpose of a foundation should not be to support accepted principles but "to work on the frontiers of knowledge, for this is venture capital we're using."

The ethical issues involved in the accumulation of the Rockefeller fortune are another story, but the present Foundation has released a host of ameliorating influences and is one of the greatest examples of the constructive, far-reaching influences of philanthropy.

MUST THIS UNION FAIL?

The New York headquarters of the Congregational Christian Churches has announced that the current plebiscite in that denomination is running against ratification of union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Voting will continue until June 1, but returns from 1,800 churches and 105,000 individual members are already in, and these do not show the 75 per cent approval which the denomination's commission on union set as the requirement for ratification. Approximately 63 per cent of the churches and 62 per cent of the members voting have favored union, and this proportion is not expected be much altered in the final tabulations.

Meanwhile, the Evangelical and Reformed Church, although its commission called for only a two-thirds vote for ratification, is approving the proposed merger by overwhelming majorities. Some synods are casting unanimous votes for union; so far not one synod has voted against it. Whether Congregational coolness may affect the later voting in the E. and R. synods remains to be seen, but leaders of that denomination, though obviously disturbed at having encountered a rebuff they were not expecting, believe that the heavy vote of approval will continue to the end. If this union is killed, it will be the Congregational Christian Churches that have killed it. But is the union killed?

No, it is a misunderstanding of the situation to regard the union proposal as dead at this point. It has, to be sure, suffered a serious setback. The union will not be ratified this year. But it has not been permanently defeated—at least, not yet. And we believe that throughout Congregationalism there is so pervasive a demand for Christian unity—such as impelled this body to take the lead in inviting all American Protestant denominations to confer on the attainment of a general union—that when the peril to this pending merger is realized, forces will rally to keep the proposal alive and ultimately to secure its adoption. The Congregational Christian invitation to all the churches to meet to negotiate for an inclusive union would look pretty bedraggled if this negotiation with only one church ended in repudiation.

I.

What is the actual situation as regards this union in the Congregational Christian fellowship? First, the voting is not complete. Many of the small churches have not yet been heard from. It was these churches which made their influence felt at the Grinnell session of the denominational General Council two years ago and forced the union proposal before the whole church for action. Conceivably, these smaller churches might at the last moment change the outcome of the plebiscite. Or they might at least lift the proportion of the vote in favor of the merger.

Second, the voting is only advisory. This is not generally understood, even by Congregationalists. But it is the General Council, which meets in Oberlin, Ohio, on June 17, that has the final word. The plebiscite is designed to show the General Council what local congregations, associations and state conferences think on this matter, but it can do no more than that. Moreover, the 75 per cent provision is simply an advisory proposal, made by the commission on union, for the guidance of the General Council. It has never been accepted or made mandatory by the council. The commission on union merely advised that if the plebiscite showed a 75 per cent favorable majority in all the four voting categories—conferences, associations, churches and members—this would indicate such overwhelming approval that the General Council should declare the union in effect at once. The commission on union made no suggestion as to what the General Council should do if the vote failed to reach the 75 per cent mark.

Third, the General Council is free to make its own decision as to what to do. The moral influence of the plebiscite results will of course be very great. But that is not the only factor in the situation. Is the expressed desire of at least 63 per cent—and by the time the Oberlin meeting opens possibly more—of the churches to be ignored? Is no attention to be paid to the charge, widely made, that much of the opposition to the union has been based on a misinterpretation of what is proposed and what involved, and that congregations and individuals have consequently in many instances voted in ignorance or delusion?

Fourth, there are at least three sets of interests which the Oberlin General Council should try to safeguard. There is the genuine devotion of the Congregational Christian fellowship to the cause of Christian union. There is the evident desire of a very large part of that fellowship for this particular union. And there is the right of minority, always vital in any democratic organization, to have its views made known and its legitimate objection met, without in so doing setting up an actual minority rule over the majority.

II.

It may turn out that the Oberlin gathering will face the greatest test of its denominational statesmanship and Christian leadership in dealing with this third requirement. Many who have voted against the pending merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church have declared that they are not opposed to union, but only to the proposed terms of (Continued on page 14)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Bells have been connected with worship across many centuries. Moses wrote of "bells of gold," and as one who was once accustomed to the sweet sound of the farm bell ringing a call to dinner I would say a bell of bronze, or even cast iron, is good enough for me. Did you know that in Burma there is a bell twelve feet high, and sixteen and one-half feet in diameter, weighing 260,000 pounds? And that is not the biggest one. There is one in Moscow, more than two centuries old which is twenty-one feet high, also twenty-one feet in diameter, and weighs 432,000 pounds. In old Peking, China, there is a bell fourteen feet high, weighing 130,000 pounds, and thirteen feet in diameter. These bells intrigue me. A fellow would have to have quite a storage room if he were making a collection of such bells like some people collect glass and china puppies.

When the Big Ben in London rings it is the call of 30,000 pounds of singing metal, or the church bell of St. Paul's, London, 11,470 pounds; St. Peter's, Rome, 18,600; Notre Dame, Paris, 28,672; and in Montreal, Canada, there is a church bell weighing 28,650. Happy is that city or countryside which can hear the call of the church bell on the Holy Sabbath. There is something indefinably sweet about the ringing of the church bell. By the way, historians tell us that our Liberty Bell was brought from England in 1752 and that it was recast twice in 1753, and that it has an inscription on it: "Lev. 25:10, Proclaim liberty throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof."

Life is surrounded by bells—the doorbell, the school bell, the time bell in your clock, the work bell, the warning bell, the Liberty bell, the wedding bell, the church bell. You may add still others. One could meditate on the doorbell, or the school bell, or the church bell—the three of them suggest a trinity which the world dares not overlook: the home, the school, the church. It was Longfellow who wrote:

The bells themselves are the best of preachers,
Their brazen lips are larned teachers,
Their pulpits of stone in the upper air,
Sounding aloft without crack or flaw,
Shriller than trumpets under the Law,
Now a sermon and now a prayer.

In many places the tiny little bell that the superintendent tapped to "bring the classes back together" in the little one-room Sunday school has long since been forgotten, but even so it had a friendliness, a neighborliness, which in every church and Sunday school we shall do well to recapture, if it has been laid aside with the tiny little bell. From that little bell to the great ones let us heed their "now a sermon now a prayer." And let us join with Tennyson in:

Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

WHITHER BOUND ARE WE?

Civilization today faces the most critical hour in human history. We stand at the cross roads of time. Pessimism is the dominant note. Never was there a time when even strong men felt so helpless. Fear grips us as we read the headlines of the morning paper or listen to the last newscast at bedtime. We think of our children, whisper a prayer and hope for the best.

Some of us who have lived on well past the three-quarter century mark think back to our school and college days. Man trusted his neighbor then. Plain people gather at the old cross-roads country church on Sunday and worshipped God in the beauty of holiness. Revival seasons and family prayers were a part of the common program of daily living.

Back there international leaders sat down around the council table and discussed and settled their differences in a friendly way. Today they meet, agree to disagree, and then begin to get ready to shoot it out on some foreign battlefield.

Man today is his own worst enemy. In spite of his unusual enlightenment and his discoveries in the field of science, there is behind his inventions of marvelous machines a spirit of greed and hate. No wonder things look gloomy ahead. World observers today are worried over what they see on the horizon yonder.

One correspondent recently said: "Something is happening to our civilization. Barbarism is lowering itself over us like a hood over a man who is to be banded. We walk around directionless. Our civilization threatens to disintegrate."

The flower of American youth marched away to World War II only to realize that they were in a death struggle the like of which they had never read about in school histories, not merely because of the powerful weapons and the masses of men involved, but because of the ideologies that had precipitated the whole bloody affair. Tens of thousands of these fine sons never came back.

There is no mistake about it—we stand on the threshold of the greatest transformation in world history.

We fought World War I "To make the world safe for democracy," so said the immortal Woodrow Wilson. We fought the second World War "to end war." True the shooting stopped, but the war is still on. We speak today of the brotherhood of man. In reality where does that state of thought and action exist? Make a check of the strikes and threats of strikes in our nation today then ask the employer and the employee who is to blame. Each accuses the other. Has it become impossible for men to agree on anything when life itself is at stake?

Has not this principle known as the brotherhood of man just about vanished from the thinking of even sensible men? A noted divine recently summed up the present situation in the following words: "The acts of men not only defeat its realization but deny its reality. The thunders of war deafen our ears to the crying claims of brotherhood. Violence and crime clamor against it. Selfishness and greed sneer at it. Injustice, oppression and wrong stifle it."

Whither bound are we? Are we approaching the end of the world? is this old planet, like a decrepit old man, living on borrowed time? This old earth, scarcely more than a speck in God's great universe, a million or two years in the making, seems just now to be coming into its own. Men who live upon it are growing wise. They are learning how to destroy it, if and when. But men of vision tell us the worst is not to be. There are too many good people in the world. God needs his own to create a new world order now in the making. Such has been the course of events in ages past. Man is learning his lesson.

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

PRESIDENT'S REPORT TO BOARD OF TRUSTEES—MAY 24, 1948.

INTRODUCTION.

Present day emphasis on education is encouraging and hopeful. The federal government is undertaking to see that every child in this country has a chance to be educated and to be prepared for a full and useful life. To this end large sums of money have been appropriated and much larger sums are in prospect. These appropriations are not only for secondary but for higher education as well. Federal aid for education would be of tremendous assistance to sections of our country with low incomes and expensive educational programs. We all realize that there is an element of danger in such a procedure. Can the federal government give direct financial support to education and keep its hands off of control? If the government is to follow its appropriation with its authority, our educational system will become a political football to be bandied about by unscrupulous politicians in their connivings to realize their ambitions. On the other hand, if the federal government would give equal financial support to a nation-wide program of education, secondary and higher, and place the responsibility of control upon educational forces, free from political domination, no one could question its blessing.

It is as plain as day that existing conditions and present trends constitute a severe test for the church college. The test is not in the field of education but in the field of finance. The church college is lacking not in opportunity but in money. With adequate financial support the church college is free to build a curriculum to match society's needs, and to pursue its course of instruction on an individual basis and for the enlightenment of all.

There is no question but that the campus of the church college holds the key to freedom in education and that freedom in education is the foundation stone of our American democracy. The questions that confront us who are interested in freedom in education and in our democratic way of life are:

1. Do we need a dual system of education in this country? That is, the state system of education supported by taxation and now also by private endowment, and the church-related and privately endowed college supported by the Church and the benevolent giving of public spirited citizens.

2. Are we willing to give money in amounts necessary to maintain the level in education attained by

JAMES MUILENBURG, Ph.D.

Dr. Muilenburg is a Congregationalist and professor of Hebrew and Cognate Languages, Union Theological Seminary, New York City. He was the special lecturer at the Grinnell General Council.

THOMAS ALFRED TRIPP.

Dr. Tripp was educated at Oklahoma A. & M. College, Yale University and Columbia University. He received the degree of Doctor of Humane Letters from Piedmont College in 1941. He is the author of the following publications: "Rural People and the Church," "The Farmer's Search for Economic Democracy," "Characteristics of the Rural Family," "Rural Poverty and Rural Morale," "Rural Americans on the Move," and numerous short articles and research reports.

state schools made possible by state and federal support? The accrediting agencies advance their standards in keeping with the advance of colleges and universities with adequate financial support.

3. Are we willing to seek and receive federal support for our church and church-related colleges? If so, what becomes of the law of separation of church and state?
4. Would the church college be willing to solicit and receive federal aid indirectly through scholarships comparable to the present practice under the G. I. Bill of Rights?
5. With reference to the program and needs of Elon College, a minimum of $1,600,000, in addition to the total already received in cash and pledges on the Million Dollar Campaign will be required. Are we willing to set ourselves to the task of raising this amount for the college?

THE NORTH CAROLINA RURAL CHURCH INSTITUTE.

The interdenominational Rural Church Institute which is to be held at Duke University, Durham, N. C., June 7-11, 1948, presents an unusual opportunity to those interested in Rural Church work. The program should be most instructive.

Dr. David E. Lindstrom, professor of Rural Sociology, University of Illinois, and author of Rural Life and the Church, will address the Convocation on Tuesday morning, June 30.

Dr. Thomas Alfred Tripp, director of the Town and Country Department, Board of Home Missions, Congregational and Christian Churches, will teach a classroom course on "The Work of the Rural Church" throughout the week at the first class period.

At a second class period each day one of the following men will speak:

Mr. Ollie E. Fink, Executive Secretary, The Friends of the Land, Columbus, Ohio, June 8, on "Conservation."

Dr. H. Brooks James, in Charge of Farm Management Research, State College, Raleigh, June 9, on "The General Agricultural Outlook."

Mr. James G. K. McClure, President, Farmers Federation, Asheville, June 10th, on "Farm Organization and the Church."

Dr. C. Horace Hamilton, Head of the Department of Rural Sociology, State College, Raleigh, is in charge of a large exhibit on rural life being prepared for the Convocation.

THE MISSION PERIOD ENDS WITH JUNE.

The Mission Board seeks to carry the message of Jesus Christ to the homeland and unto the uttermost parts of the earth. It is your hand, your feet, your opportunity to fulfill the great commission of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

We are approaching the closing month of the Mission Period and we are far short on our goal. We urge churches, Sunday schools and individuals to send their contributions promptly.

THE PENNY-A-MEAL PLAN.

This is the closing month of the "Penny-A-Meal" plan. Many of our churches, Sunday schools and individuals have been setting aside this "Lord's portion" for the work of missions at home and abroad. You are urged to send your contributions for March, April, May and June either through your church or Sunday school, or directly to The Mission Board, Elon College, N. C., before the end of June.

The Penny-A-Meal money may be designated for Shaowu, Church Extension, or for such other denominational missionary causes as the giver wishes.

SHAOWU.

We must not—we cannot—fail our fellow servants, the Jacksons, Dr. Riggs and Miss Whitaker in Shaowu. We must raise $10,000.00 to fulfill our pledged word to support them. We have a long way to go to complete our $10,000.00 commitment. June is here and Mission Period ends June 30.

To May 31 we have received $5,280.57 on our $10,000.00 goal. We have pledges from local churches and individuals amounting to $1,400.00, and conditional pledges amounting to $400. When these pledges are paid we should have approximately $7,080.57. That is considerably short of the necessary $10,000.00. Please support Shaowu. Send your contributions to The Mission Board at once.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

The Mission Board has found it necessary to borrow $5,000.00 in order to fulfill the Board's commitment to the building program of our Ashboro Church. If you could see that lovely church which Dr. Lester and his good people have erected in that important center of our denomination you would see the wisdom of our investment there. We believe you would wish us to help that growing church to complete its building. The Board did so believing you would send your liberal offerings to the Board before the end of June.

The Mission Period ends with June. Please send your missionary contributions now. We shall be grateful for your support.

THE MISSION BOARD,
Wm. T. Scott, Ex. Sec'y.

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
May 17, 1948.

DEAR FRIENDS:

I (Dick) am back in Shaowu at last—and it's good to be home. Ray Giffin, Walter Smith and I came up river to Yankou for the Executive Board meeting of the Synod May 1 to 4. We had quite a lively session and managed to get a few problems threshed out. One of our main problems is how to divide our few ministers among so many pastorless churches. It was finally decided that for the next year, I am to go to the Yankou church once every three months for a week or two as temporary minister. Yankou is two days down the river by rice boat from Shaowu and three days back (on foot), so I'm going to have right much traveling to do.

One real advance was made. The Board agreed that the five churches of the Synod which have full time pastors should progressively be made self-supporting within five years. Then, the money which the Southern Convention sends to us can be used to open new work.

It was decided to have three Laymen's Training Courses in the three districts within the next few months. In North Fukien, one of our greatest lacks is that of a trained lay leadership. The plan is to invite all the leaders and prospective leaders of the churches in the district to this one-week Lay Training Institute. Training will be given in Bible Study, Church Organization and Management, How Churches Become Self-Supporting, Christian Family, Preaching and Evangelism, How to Organize and Run a Sunday School, How to Pray, Public Health and Christian Worship. It is our hope that these leaders can go back, and on a voluntary basis, help their local churches, many of whom have no minister. The first of these training schools will be held in Yankou from May 30 to June 7. I will teach courses on Hymns and Bible Study.

After some discussion, it was decided to ask the American Board and the Southern Convention to send five new workers or families to help us.

1. Rural Minister.—In an area as large as North Fukien with so many problems pressing from all sides, I feel desperately the need for another American minister to share the burden of this load with me. Much that needs to be done goes undone because I just can't do it all. Many vital decisions are made daily with fear and trembling (and many mistakes are made). I so often wish there were another minister to talk these things over with. Is there another minister in or around the Southern Convention who feels the call of God to come to Shaowu. If so, let him make all haste to come out to help us. Dr. Scott can tell you the necessary procedure to volunteer.

2. Agricultural Worker.—China is an agricultural country. Eighty-five

A MESSAGE FROM THE BROWNS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Davao City, P. I.,
March 11, 1948.

Miss Virginia H. Brinkley,
310 Cedar Street,
Suffolk, Va., U. S. A.

Dear Miss Brinkley:

I have just returned from a number of extended field trips to find your letter among my correspondence and regret I have not had time to answer it before. You see, Rev. Walter Tong returned to America last December for his first real vacation since 1937, and I have come with my family to take his place. Because I am a new-comer, because of the damage done by the war, and because of the tremendous growth of our churches, I find it very difficult to keep up with everything.

I do not know just what your plans are, but if you need information concerning the Philippine Mission I will be glad to do all I can for you. I am a graduate of Harvard, '44, served as pastor in New England for two years, and have been here for a little over one year. I am married and have three children, the last little girl being born in Davao only last January. I am enclosing a picture.

I am interested in your plan to print a booklet about your six Project-Missionaries along with a prayer service. We have worked hard to organize women's groups here but, because they have little education, no background in Democracy, and almost no printed information to guide them, we are rather unsuccessful. If, therefore, you complete your project, I would appreciate receiving a few copies for distribution here. I am taking for granted you know that English is the commonest language in these islands.

We send general letters occasionally and will put you on our mailing list. Possibly you can get some material for promotional work from something we may send in such a letter, or, at your request, we could send answers to special questions you might have.

I will send your letter along to Mr. Tong and I am sure you will be hearing from him in the near future.

Thank you for your interest in this great mission task and for the efforts you are making on behalf of those who have not yet heard the story of God's love as revealed in Jesus Christ. I pray your joy might be as full as ours as we labor in this difficult, but fruitful, mission field.

Sincerely yours,

ELTON W. BROWN.

(NOTE: Rev. and Mrs. Elton W. Brown are taking the place of the Walter Tongs, who are now on vacation in the States. . . . These missionary letters afford opportunities for groups to have special projects, by supplying some of the things needed, as mentioned in the letters.)

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS AND PASTORS' SCHOOL.

Each Woman's Society should send at least one delegate—send the president if possible—to the School of Missions and Pastors' School to be held at Elon College, N. C., July 12-16; fee, $12.00. Begin planning now so you may have the money to send her. Mrs. F. C. Lester, 840 Sunset Drive, Asheboro, N. C., is chairman of plans for the School.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Keep us, O God, from pettiness; let us be large in thought, in word, in deed.

* * *

Let us be done with fault-finding and leave off self-seeking.

* * *

May we put away all pretense and meet each other face to face—without self-pity and without prejudice.

* * *

Teach us to put into action our better impulses, straightforward and unafraid.

* * *

Grant that we may realize it is the little things that create differences; that in the big things of life we are as one.

* * *

And may we strive to touch and to know the great, common, woman's heart of us all, and O Lord God, let us not forget to be kind.

—MARY STEWART, Colorado, 1904
(Quoted from the Year Book of the California Federation of Women's Clubs.)

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

per cent of her people are farmers. Yet, they are the forgotten people of China. Victims of high interest, exorbitant rents, poor health, high taxes, outworn land and methods of agriculture, their lot is truly hard. Most of the members of our North Fukien Synod are farmers. We have the opportunity thrust in our laps to help them. The organizing of credit unions and cooperatives, and the teaching of better methods of land cultivation is a pressing need. Is there in the Southern Convention someone with experience along the lines of an American county agent who would be willing to come where the need is so great. Two American UNRRA agriculture specialists who came to Shaowu last fall said that here was the finest opportunity for rural service they had seen anywhere in Fukien Province. There are several young men here who are trained in agriculture who only need the leadership to go ahead. I feel this is a pressing need and I pray that God will lay this challenge upon some young man's heart to undertake to meet it.

3. Educational Worker.—It is our hope that in addition to the primary school, the Han Mei Junior High School will open this Fall after being closed for about 17 years. Shaowu educational standards are much improved over former years, but they are still incredibly low. A trained educator who will invest his life in North Fukien will make a lasting contribution to China and to the Kingdom of God. The Chinese greatly respect education. They love and adore their teachers. They clamor for the opportunity to learn—yet so few get the chance. We hope you will find it possible to send an educator to us in the near future.

4. Public Health Nurse.—I don't need to tell you how important this need is. In an area where the death rate exceeds the birth rate because of disease, where three out of four children never reach maturity, where plague is endemic, where millions die yearly because they don't know the simple rules of hygiene and sanitation, our Christian responsibilities are not fulfilled unless we do all within our power to help.

5. Woman's Evangelistic Worker.—Although the position of women is much better than it used to be, their lot is still hard. How eagerly they respond to the love and friendship of anyone who tries to improve their position, teach them how to be better

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR LITTLE FRIENDS:

We have a new member of our family. Joyanna arrived on May 28 at St. Luke's Hospital, the third member of our family. Jonathan is the oldest, then Andrea Lee and now Joyanna. We are beginning to be a real family.

Because mothers are usually very busy these days sometimes people say, "You will be so busy," or "My, but you will have your hands full." The only thing I think to say to that is—what better way to spend my time or use my hands? We have fun together.

Families that grow together in love and understanding are very wonderful. Recently a "Bill of Rights" has been given for children. Here are some of the points: Every child has a right to be well born, Every child has a right to be wanted and loved, Every child has a right to cultural background, Every child has a right not to be exploited, Every child has a right to good nutrition and medical care, Every child has a right to spiritual growth, and Every child has a right to know of the brotherhood of man. There may be some others and these may not be absolutely correct because I am writing them from memory, but those are the main points I think.

It is hard to believe that every child is not wanted but it is true. Many people want a boy or a girl and then feel very unhappy if their wish doesn't come true. Our world needs both and both are wonderful!

Exploited is a rather big word. It really means that parents should give their children the opportunity to decide for themselves what they would like to be. It also means that mothers shouldn't "show off" their little girls or boys for their own pleasure. The other points are easy to understand.

Some folk want their children to stay little forever. Growing up is much nicer. At a week of age, a baby just lies and eats, at 18 months he walks around, at three years he is very sociable and goes to Sunday school, and at eight he has had community and school experiences. Yes, growing up is very nice.

Growing in the family is not easy but it is done every day. Recently we studied in Sunday school about the mother turtle who laid eggs in the soft mud and then forgot about them and when the little turtles hatched there was no one to love them or feed them. Instead they crawled off, each in his own way, looking for food. I am glad that I am not in a turtle family—it really isn't a family at all.

We may read in the Bible of many families in the Old and the New Testaments: Joseph and his brothers (not such a happy one!), David and his brothers, Jesus and those with him in Nazareth, and Mary, Martha and their brother. Families are a part of God's wonderful plan for us.

"LET ME DO IT MYSELF."

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.

(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

We had company who would breakfast with us, and our three-year-old son was taking a long time to lace his shoes. To have him ready sooner, I took the laces from him. Though he lustily objected, crying out, "Let me do it myself, Mother!" I persisted in lacing the shoes. Then I started breakfast. "We must adhere to an orderly routine," I thought.

Soon after this, I visited the kindergarten; my little daughter wanted me to see their project—a toy shop. The week before, the project had been a streetcar, but I had been too busy to make the visit at that time. The shop, arranged in one corner of the large room, made a brave showing. Rows of orange boxes which the children had painted green were standing on end. These boxes made the walls of the shop, while their tops served as counters and their partitions formed shelves underneath.

The children were making toys to sell in the shop. One little girl had some green water-color paint which she was industriously applying to the outside of a pasteboard box. Two girls were tacking wheels onto carts made of boxes. Some boys were making airplanes. One boy started to nail two boards together, but the nail bent and fell to the floor. He began teasing the boy beside him.

"How are you getting on with your airplane, Albert?" inquired the teacher.

He looked at her helplessly. "The nail bent," he said.

She encouraged him to find it, and then she straightened it for him and stood by while he drove it in. But when she left him, instead of getting another nail, Albert dropped his hammer and went to look at the little girl who was beginning to put lavender paint on the inside of her green box.

"Your airplane needs some more nails, Albert," said the teacher.

Albert found a nail, but then he could not find his hammer. The teacher showed him where it was and again stood over him until he had driven the nail in. Although she left him with another nail in his hand, he could not decide where to drive it, until she came back and helped him to choose the place. "Now see if you can finish this all by yourself," she said.

"I can't do it alone." The little fellow's lips quivered. "Mama always helps me."

I remained until the close of the session, and while the children were putting on their wraps I talked with the teacher.

Soon Albert came, saying, "I can't find my other mitten."

"Feel in your pockets," advised the teacher.

The boy began feeling about in his jacket pockets, and out came the mitten.

"Albert seems to be a good deal of trouble," I said, when he was out of hearing.

"He has not been here long," the teacher answered, "and he is one of those children whose mothers do everything for them. He has no self-confidence—has to be helped almost every step of the way. You notice how well most of these children take care of their wraps and that they put them on without help."

"I suppose when they first come, you see a great difference between the children," I ventured, "and, of course, it depends largely on whether or not we mothers have encouraged them to do things for themselves."

"Yes," agreed the teacher, "it is really very easy to help children too much; and it is an unkindness, for they are afterwards at a great disadvantage."

Walking home, I pondered over the case of the helpless Albert, and then I remembered how I had persisted in lacing my small boy's shoes while he was indignantly protesting, "Let me do it myself, Mother!" I was no better than Albert's mother—really worse—for I was placing formality above my little son's opportunity to gain a worthwhile experience. If I continued such practices, he might grow to be another helpless five-year-old.

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

To the Children's Workers of the Southern Convention Churches—

Have you made your plans for observing Children's Day in your church? If you haven't, you will want to know something about available programs and about the special offering you may make at that time.

Here are some program suggestions from the Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Mass.: The Lord's Prayer—Children's Day Service, 1948, for Congregational Christian Churches (price not yet listed); Children's Day Helper—Recitations, Songs, etc., 30c; Children's Day Suggestion Book—Recitations, Songs, etc., 30c.

From the Meigs Publishing Company, 229-31 North Pennsylvania St., Indianapolis 4, Indiana: We Would See Jesus—Pageant for Children with Music, 30c; Children's Day Treasury—Recitations, Drills, etc., 30; The King's Garden, by Sumerau—Pageant for children from Cradle Roll through Intermediates. Gives opportunity for children's consecration and missionary emphasis, 30c.

If you'd like more information concerning such items as promotion certificates, plaques, award pins, baptismal booklets, and Bibles, for a Children's Day observance, write to The Pilgrim Press, Boston, Mass.; The Methodist Publishing House, 5th and Grace Streets, Richmond 16, Va.; or The Presbyterian Committee of Publications, 8 North Sixth St., Richmond 9, Va.

Then, too, you will want to have a supply of the special envelopes available for your Children's Day offering. This is the one time of the year when the Board of Christian Education asks for you to give "over and above" your regular apportionment. Do you know what your money will do, through the Board of Christian Education? It strengthens our Sunday schools; it provides helps for Daily Vacation Bible Schools; it aids young people and their enterprises; it supports the work of the Convention Office and of the Field Worker.

Many of you benefit all through the year from the work of the Board of Christian Education—will you support the Board's work so that it may continue to serve you? I shall be glad to send you as many offering envelopes as you believe you can use at your Children's Day Service, so that you may share in the Board's work of strengthening Christian Education.

BETTY CHICOINE.

PEPSI-COLA SCHOLARSHIPS AWARDED.

In keeping with its purpose of presenting opportunities for higher education to the youth of America, the Pepsi-Cola Scholarship Board has announced the names of 121 high school seniors across the nation to receive scholarships which will send them to college with full tuition, a monthly allowance, and traveling expenses paid for four school years. Twenty-six additional awards, called Honorary Scholarships, were given to students who made distinguished records in the contest but did not have financial need.

Announcement of these awards was made by John M. Stalnaker, director of the Board, who stated that the winners were chosen from among 46,112 superior students elected to represent 10,629 high schools in the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico which participated in the fourth annual Pepsi-Cola competition.

The awards these contestants have won, which have a value of $330,000 are financed by the Pepsi-Cola Company upon the recommendation of its president, Walter S. Mack, Jr. Designed to discover young men and women of outstanding ability and train them for leadership within their own fields, the entire program is offered as a public service to the youth of America, Stalnaker said. The administration of the program has been placed in the hands of the Pepsi-Cola Scholarship Board, which is incorporated separately from the company and composed of some of the nation's leading educators.

In announcing the 1948 winners, Stalnaker said that a total of 722 awards were granted to boys and girls throughout the country this year. One hundred and twenty-one were Four-Year College Scholarships, at least two of which were awarded in each of the 48 states and in the District of Columbia, and one each in Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico. Seventeen of these scholarships were set aside specifically for Negroes in those states which have separate educational systems for the colored.

Seniors who won the Four-Year College Scholarships will have their full tuition and other required fees paid for four years at any accredited college they wish to attend. In addition, they will receive a $25-a-month allowance for four school years and travelling expenses at the rate of three cents a mile for one round trip between home and college each year. They may select any course of study which leads to an A. B. or B. S. degree and they need only remain in good standing in their colleges to maintain their scholarships, Stalnaker said.

The 575 runners-up for the Four-Year College Scholarships were given College Entrance Awards. Approximately ten of these were granted in every state and five in each of the territories. College Entrance Award winners will receive $50 to help defray initial college expenses if they register at an accredited academic college for the 1948-49 term.

The boys and girls who won awards in the fourth annual Pepsi-Cola scholarship competition were first elected by their classmates to compete as students who were "most likely to make an important contribution to human progress," Stalnaker said. These candidates then took a special scholastic aptitude test in their own schools in November. Fifteen finalists from each state (eight where only one scholarship was to be granted) were selected on the basis of the scores made on this test, and these finalists took the regular supervised college aptitude test of the College Entrance Examination Board in January. Of the twelve contestants in each state (six in the case of only one scholarship) who ranked highest on this second test, the two top-ranking students who had financial need were given the Four-Year College Scholarships and the runners-up received the College Entrance Awards.

One of Solon's laws was that, in case of insurrection in the city, he who does not attach himself to either party, or act on either side shall be branded with civic infamy. Solon's theory was that neutrality in a disturbed condition of the State indicated either indifference to the public well-being, or the most sordid selfishness.—Dr. Peabody's "Plutarch on the Delay of Fine Justice."

THE MESSAGE OF THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

LESSON XI—JUNE 13, 1948.

By REV. JOHN L. GWIN.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Who knoweth whither thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"—Esther 4:14.

LESSON: Esther 4:10-17; 9:20-22, 26, 27.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalms 441-8.

An Intriguing and Interesting Story.

The Book of Esther is one of those rare books which you cannot put down, until you have finished the last word in the last chapter. It has all the characteristics of a modern novel, and enough reader interest to rank with the best. The whole gamut of life's emotions is portrayed in the ten short chapters. To really appreciate this dynamic and moving book, get a modern translation (Moffatt's is excellent) and read it through at one sitting.

The Plot.

Because Queen Vashti refused to come to the banquet of her king-husband, Ahasuerus, he divorced her on recommendation of the wise men of the court. Memucan, no doubt the wisest of the sages, said, "Queen Vashti has wronged not only the king but all the officials and all men in every province of King Xerxes. This behavior of the queen will come to the ears of every woman, and they will look down on their husbands . . . let the king assign her position to a better woman. So, when the king's decree is proclaimed in every quarter of his realm, all women shall show honor to their husbands high and low." If this reasoning of Memucan seems a little ridiculous to us today, let us remember that present-day divorces are granted on even flimsier grounds.

King Ahasuerus, after a thorough search throughout his kingdom, chose Esther, a Jewess and cousin of Mordecai, to be the new queen. It is interesting to remember, however, that before Esther was chosen queen, even before she could go into the presence of the king, she had to spend twelve months undergoing beauty treatments. Six months of the treatment was with oil of myrrh and six months with perfumed preparations.

Mordecai had once exposed a plot to take the life of the king, but he had never been given any recognition for this loyal act. Haman, the chief minister and the most dastardly of all villains, had a great dislike for Mordecai, because he refused to bow to him. No doubt, he felt like he had done far more for his king and country than Haman and saw no need for the subservience that Haman demanded. But Haman became so inflamed with this disobedience that he sought not only to do away with Mordecai, but also all the Jews throughout the empire. Thus by his cunning and concealment of his real motives, he obtained from King Ahasuerus an edict to destroy all the Jewish men, women, and children.

Mordecai, learning of Haman's trickery, sent a message to Esther to intervene on the Jews' behalf. Queen Esther, remembering what had happened to Vashti, knew full well the danger that would be involved and hesitated to take this responsibility. Mordecai insisted, stating that she would also be destroyed for she was a Jewess, unless she could persuade the king against the decree. He further stated, "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

After Mordecai had caused her to see fully this great responsibility and also opportunity to save her people, she sent this answer to him, "Go and gather all the Jews to be found in Susa, fast for me, eat and drink nothing for three days and three nights; I and my maids will fast as you do; and so I will go to the king, though it is against the law. If I perish, I perish."

Through the great courage of Esther, she not only won the king over to her way of thinking and saved the lives of the Jews throughout the empire, but she brought about the downfall of Haman, whose place was taken by Mordecai. In addition, the king issued a new edict which allowed the Jews to slaughter their foes. The festival of Purim was instituted because of Esther's great work.

The Message of Esther for Today.

We can safely say that some of the moral concepts in this book are not in accord with the teachings of Jesus. The spirit of revenge which the Jews manifested against their enemies can never be reconciled to the New Testament teachings of Jesus. But Esther's seizure of an opportunity to save her people at the risk of her own life is a fundamental Christian teaching. She realized her responsibility and had the courage to say, "If I perish, I perish." This same dauntless courage must be manifested today if we are to build the Kingdom of God on earth. The opportunities and the challenges are here, but we need more Esthers if we are to achieve a total victory. As Christians, we must perceive and accept our daily opportunities for service and become as courageous as Esther. You are come to the kingdom for such a time as this. What will you do?

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

mothers, and who brings them the good news of God's love.

We realize that the Southern Convention might find it a bit difficult to send at once all of the above workers, even if they were available. But we want you to be thinking about these needs with us. Pray about them. Talk them over with your friends. Perhaps you know someone who is suited to one of these specific tasks and who would be willing to come. Speak to him. If the first two of the above mentioned could be sent to us this year, it would greatly increase the effectiveness of our work. These are the minimum needs, a goal for the future, which, it seems to me, must be achieved if we are to fulfill our responsibilities to these whom we are pledged to help.

The conference further recommended five young people, four men and one woman, to enter seminary in the fall—Timothy Chang in Duke Divinity School, the rest in Foochow and Nanking seminaries. I wish you could meet all five of these young people. They are really outstanding. This new leadership will make a great difference in the future of our small struggling churches. Let me here stop to thank all who have made contributions to help these young people prepare themselves for the work.

You may be interested to know that in North Fukien there are about 480,000 people. Our Christian work consists of three schools, two hospitals and 15 churches with a membership of 1,153. We are still a decided minority, but our Christian community includes many of the leaders and outstanding citizens. Thus our influence is far out of proportion to our numbers. Nevertheless, you can see the magnitude of our task if we are to reach all the unreached.

After the conference, we came back by boat and bus to Shaowu in three days. Fortunately the roads are much better now than they were last year. We only had to get out to push once. Dorothy and little Lewis did not come up to Yankou because of difficult travel conditions. They will remain in Foochow until the hot season. At that time we will spend about two months on Kuliang mountain until the intense heat passes. Dr. Ed Riggs and Nurse Francis Whitaker came to Yankou for the conference. Dr. Ed distributed quite a few medicines, chiefly malaria pills, to be given out in the country to people who cannot get to the hospital.

When the conference concluded, after much persuasion, I finally prevailed on Ed and Frances to go down to Foochow. The most important reason, of course, was to see Lewis, secondly, they could take a look at the Foochow hospital and talk with their medical friends, and thirdly, to get a change before starting in on their busy season. Reluctantly, they set out on the launch for a two-day stay in Foochow after I promised that if the hospital urgently needed them when I got back, I would wire them immediately.

Imagine my surprise, when upon returning to Shaowu, I found a wire saying: "Request month's vacation from hospital. Purpose, honeymoon. Ed and Francis." I was quite surprised although the Chinese here say they saw things progressing in that direction all the time. Everyone is quite happy about it. They are admirably suited to each other and together they will make an even greater contribution to the Kingdom of God. Later, a letter came from Ed apologizing for sending me back up to Shaowu alone, and explaining that this was all on the impulse of the moment—but it had seemed the thing to do; to which I said, "Amen." They are probably in Tientsin right now. They were to fly there so Frances' father can marry them. You may be interested to know it is cheaper to fly in China than to go any other way. I know you in the Southern Convention will be happy to know about this latest development. Many of you met Frances when we were commissioned in Waverly.

With this good news, I'd better bring this lengthy epistle to a close. I wish I could tell you more about Lewis, but I haven't seen or heard from him or Dorothy for four weeks. The rainy season has caused the rivers to flood and very little mail is getting through.

Many thanks for the fine letters you have sent, for the baby gifts for Lewis, for your interest in our work as evidenced by your generous support, and for your prayers.

Cordially,

DICK JACKSON.

RURAL FOLK CAN HELP IN OVERSEAS RELIEF.

People close to the earth, who see where their food and clothing come from, can understand better than others what happens to a nation's economy when war lashes across the land.

In Europe and Asia, the earth, where crops once grew, has been seared and pocked by battle, turned salt by the intruding waters of the sea or eroded by rampant rivers from broken dams. In the wake of such terrible forces still lie the twisted industries of town and city, the ruined farmlands, the carcasses of cattle, mules and other animals that could not be saved.

The rural folk of just the state of Virginia could help thousands of war-destitute who are living under the most primitive conditions, poorly housed, hungry and ill clothed. The Virginia Council of Churches suggests some ways it can be done through Church World Service, the interdenominational overseas relief agency.

If you have clothing you don't absolutely have to have—of any size, kind or description, so long as the material is good—write to the Church World Service Center at New Windsor, Md., and ask for a clothing bag in which you can put it for easy mailing back to the Center.

There are other articles you can put in the bag—shoes, blankets, comforts, sheets, household utensils, soap, candles, toys, Bibles, sewing equipment—anything not breakable but necessary for everyday living.

Millions of people are hungry, too. Home canned—in tin—meats and fats or dried beans and fruits are foods practical for overseas shipping.

A more lasting contribution to the food problem can be made through the Heifer Project Committee located at the CWS Center. Cattle, purebred sires, and goats are being sent to Europe, Japan and China. Donate such an animal or the money to buy one—$175 for a heifer and $50 for a goat.

Many items commonplace in Virginia, would be priceless in another country. Feed and fertilizer sacks—prints or plain white—can supply the terrible need for cloth. Hand and garden tools, even small farm implements, in good repair, are invaluable.

Excess fats and tallow, of which farms are the best source, are tragically needed in lands where there is almost no animal fat and where grains must be used for food and seed. Consequently there is not only a shortage of fats and oils for eating purposes but also for making soap—something that many people have scarcely seen since the early war years. A card to the CWS Center will bring you a grease can which you may fill and return to be made into soap at a church-operated factory. Your gifts of homemade or commercial soap will be equally welcome.

For more personalized giving, fill a woman's handbag, new or second-hand, with a countless variety of items that women use—thread, needles, handkerchiefs, comb, brush, tooth powder, tooth brush, soap, wash cloth, bobbie pins, safety pins, elastic, hose, material, lipstick, powder, etc. Enclose your name and address with it.

Or fill a "towel kit" for some child. Fold a towel in half, end to end, sew up the sides and fill with clothing, toys, school supplies, and toilet articles and sew it shut. To the kit fasten a tag which gives your name and address and the age and sex of the child who should receive it.

All these contributions need only be sent to the New Windsor Center. Church World Service, the reconstruction organization of twenty-two cooperating denominations, is your opportunity to minister to the have-not nations of the Good Earth. You can do your share by contributing money to your denominational overseas relief fund and sending your material gifts to New Windsor.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE.

seen that the nature of birds has not changed through the centuries.

Both Isaiah and Hosea refer to the rapid flights of birds, and migration is again mentioned in Jeremiah 8:7: "Yes, the stork in heaven knoweth her appointed time; . . . the crane and the swallow observe the time of their coming, but my people know not the judgment of the Lord."

The song of birds as an accompaniment of spring is mentioned in the Song of Solomon 2:12: "The flowers appear on earth; the time of the singing birds is come, and the voice of the turtle dove is heard in our land."

Hence, man may, by careful observation, learn much from birds, for they, like the heavens, declare the glory of God.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The graded school closed last Friday night, May 28. The Orphanage had two fine girls to graduate, Martha Beers and Jane Faulkner. Martha has made the honor roll the entire year. She wants to be a secretary and will enter Elon College this fall to take the secretarial course. Jane has done well in school, and has specialized in cooking while at the Orphanage. She has always wanted to take a beauty course and has made arrangements to enter King's Beauty School in Greensboro and will leave next week to enter school. She has made herself very useful and has been a wonderful help to the matrons in her building. She was a good worker in any department and was easy to work with.

George Jackson (Jackie) Wilkins has a bad case of mumps. He has a round ruddy face and his little jaws were swollen very badly, and he has felt so badly he did not know what to do. He came in the office one day and crawled up in my lap and laid his head on my shoulder, and it seemed to ease the pain. I felt so sorry for him I had to pet him a little anyway. My heart always goes out to a little helpless child. Jackie is such a sweet little fellow one cannot help but love him.

We began to build back a house in the place of the one that was burned some weeks ago, and got the foundation almost done and it began to rain and the brick masons had to quit. During last week we had a fine season for which we are very thankful, as the ground was dry and hard.

The boys and girls are out of school now, and I guess we will have more help from the boys on the farm and the girls in the buildings. We can get good work out of the little boys until they get tired, and then they want to play.

Eastern Virginia Conference is the "Banner Conference" this week, and Berea (Norfolk) and the First Christian Church in Portsmouth are the "Banner Churches." They were the only two churches in the entire Southern Convention to remember us this week. Where are the one hundred and ninety-seven that overlooked us? The two churches sent us the sum of $32.51, and our goal is $50,000 for the year. We are appealing to the churches to raise $25,000 of this amount.

Prices of everything we have to buy are high; so much higher than last year. Our income so far this year has been less. It forces us to draw heavily on our bank account. When our expenses are more than our income it reduces our bank account that much. I have faith to believe you will do better than this next week. Eighty little children to care for—food, clothes, and many things to buy—at the present prices!

union. And some of the sections of the Basis of Union submitted by the commissions of the two denominations which have caused the most heated debate are, it seems to us, ambiguous. Certainly if ambiguities exist they should be cleared up. And if a few simple amendments to the Basis of Union would meet the objections of other dissidents, these likewise should be brought forward.

The difficulty which Oberlin will encounter at this point is obvious. The Evangelical and Reformed Church will have voted for the Basis of Union as now proposed, and changes in the wording of that document would probably require that the whole process of negotiation and ratification in the E. and R. Church be repeated. There is, however, a possible approach to this difficulty which we trust the Congregational leaders favoring union will not overlook. One of the charges made by some of the union's opponents has been that no constitution for the united church had been drafted or submitted, and that the churches have therefore been asked to buy a pig in a poke. Actually, this is not so, for the Basis of Union, when put into the usual documentary form, was to become the constitution. But technically, the charge stands. There has been no constitution presented for adoption.

III.

Very well, then, why may not the Oberlin General Council authorize the proper bodies to proceed with the drafting of a constitution, and set the terms under which this constitution may be considered and either adopted or rejected? This would be an official action by the denominational body having authority, and the only body having authority, to take such action. It would concern itself with a document which under any circumstances would have to be submitted to the Evangelical and Reformed Church before that denomination could conclude its action in favor of union. It would provide a period for more careful consideration of the union proposal, and should produce a more complete participation by churches and members in the voting. And it would make it possible, in drawing up the new constitutional document, to take into account the points that have been raised against the Basis of Union, and so far as these are legitimate objections, to remedy them.

No great harm will be done if the Congregational Christian Churches postpone a decision on this proposed union for another two years. Deferral of the decision would show ministers and members that the allegation, frequently made in letters we have received from opponents of the union, that the "top brass" of the denomination is determined to force it through regardless of consequences, is false. Large bodies move slowly, and another two or four years is not too long to wait for virtual unanimity. But if the General Council allows the issue to be pushed to final action and defeat at Oberlin, festering wounds will be left inside the Congregational fellowship, a great church will appear in an ambiguous and deceptive light in the eyes of its fellow churches, and the cause of Christian reunion will be tragically set back, not only in this communion but for all Protestantism. This need not happen. This union need not fail. If there is sufficient wisdom and brotherly concern for the total welfare of the Kingdom of God shown at Oberlin, the General Council has it within its power to insure that it does not fail. —Editorial in The Christian Century.

In Memoriam

WALTERS.

Dr. Charles M. Walters was a devoted and faithful member of the First Christian Church of Burlington, a sincere Christian, and a skilled and devoted physician. He was a "life member" of the Board of Deacons of his church and was always faithful in the performance of his duties as a Deacon of the church. He was always interested in the welfare of his church and constant in his desire and efforts to live as a true follower of Jesus Christ. His large practice was a living witness of his faithfulness and skill as a physician. He was in a real sense a partner with God in ministering to the sick of his community.

We, the members of the Board of Deacons of the First Christian Church, wish to express our gratitude to God for giving us such a co-worker as Dr. Walters; to express our sense of loss in his passing; and to extend our sincere sympathy to the members of his family.

COOPER.

Richard L. Cooper, Sr., was a devoted Christian in all the relationships of his life—as a merchant, husband, father, citizen, and as a churchman. He was a member of the Board of Deacons of the First Christian Church of Burlington and felt very keenly the opportunities and responsibilities of that office. He was always loyal to his church and faithful to his high Christian principles. In his sudden passing on Monday, March 29, the community lost a valuable citizen and the church a faithful member.

We, the members of the Board of Deacons of the First Christian Church, wish to record our sense of loss in his passing; to express our thanks to God for giving us such a faithful co-worker, and to extend to his family our heartfelt sympathy.

NEW EDUCATIONAL SOUND FILM.

"The 26 Old Characters" is the title of a new educational-informational sound motion picture produced by The Jam Handy Organization now being released to schools, colleges, churches, and other interested cultural groups free of charge. This visualizes and explains the origins of writing, beginning with picture writings and drawings on prehistoric cave walls, and tracing the development of writing down to the present day. The picture is free of advertising, and is a contribution to American education by its sponsor, The W. A. Sheaffer Pen Company. It is loaned to churches in 16 mm., two reels in length, with a running screen time of approximately 20 minutes. CONVENTION OFFICE SECRETARY RESIGNS.

Mrs. Dorothy Carson, office secretary and bookkeeper for the past two years, has resigned to accompany her husband to Peabody College, Nashville, where he will pursue graduate studies. Mrs. Carson has been a faithful servant of the Convention and we appreciate her services.

There will be an interim when we will have a vacancy in this office. There will be some unavoidable delays in the work of the office during that time and during the period of adjustment with a new secretary. We solicit your patience. Should errors be made, please let us know and we will do our best to correct them.

bers met in a dwelling until Rev. S. J. Williams of the M. E. Conference and Mr. W. J. Jennings, superintendent of the L. Banks Holt Manufacturing Co., obtained our present church building. In 1932 under the leadership of Rev. J. F. Apple, the Carolina Congregational Christian Church was organized with fourteen charter members. The charter members are: Mr. and Mrs. Earnest Paylor, Mr. Lonnie Thomas, Mrs. Mabel Thomas, Mrs. Royal Councilman, Mrs. Odie Councilman, Mr. John W. Trollinger, Mrs. Helen Trollinger, Mrs. Elsie Councilman, Mr. George Hall, Mrs. Mary Phillips, Mr. William Glenn, Mrs. Florence Glenn and Mrs. Mattie Dickens. In 1935 the building was remodeled and two classrooms added. Since that time we have added two more classrooms. While Rev. Melvin Dollar was pastor a parsonage was purchased and moved to its present location. In 1938 the heirs of the L. Banks Holt Company deeded the building to the Deacons of the church. This building has been remodeled into our present church. At the present we are in the midst of building a hut with four rooms and a forty-foot auditorium which we plan to use as the Children's Christian Education Building and for various social activities of the church and community. We are planning to finish the heating system this summer. This project was started under the leadership of Rev. W. Walter Hall. At present our church membership is 89 and our Sunday school enrollment is 149. The following pastors have served: Revs. Roy D. Coulter, G. C. Crutchfield, J. Everette Neese, O. A. Elmore, Melvin Dol-particular day of the Lord's last week.

Thursday evening a Candle Light Communion Service was held, in which eleven men and the pastor sat at the table, each having a lighted candle before him representing a disciple. As each man read his part of the scripture, which had to do with the Last Supper and the betrayal, he extinguished his candle, which when the last candle was extinguished left the auditorium in darkness with the exception of a lighted tree in the chancel. The service was effective and climaxed a week of spiritual uplift. The choir prepared special and appropriate music for all the services. The program for the week was as follows: Palm Sunday—"The Kingship of Our Lord;" Monday—"The Authority of Our Lord;" Tuesday—"The Teaching of Our Lord;" Wednesday—"The Love of Our Lord;" Thursday—"Candle Light Communion;" Friday—"The Seven Last Words."

A Sunday School Center which began immediately after Easter has been instrumental in increasing the attendance from an average of 80 to 130.

A man can no more take in a supply of grace for the future than he can eat enough today to last him for the next six months; or take sufficient air into his lungs at once to sustain life for a week to come. We must draw upon God's boundless stores of grace from day to day, as we need it.—Moody.

OUR CHURCH COLLEGES

By BRYANT DRAKE, Secretary
Department of Higher Education

All of us have a stake in our church colleges, for state controlled education is unsafe unless nearby are free, private institutions maintaining high standards and progressive patterns of education. Furthermore, private secular institutions, which put their faith in negative non-sectarianism, contribute little toward the goals of Christian education.

The Church College has some very difficult problems to solve, for it must depend upon tuitions and private philanthropy. Its justification for existence is the principle of separation of church and state, so it cannot ask for tax money, yet tax-supported institutions will doubtless be much more generously provided for in the future. It is a question whether individuals and churches will increase their financial support in proportion. However, the Church College possesses some definite advantages:

1. It is a small institution. Anyone who doubts the advantage of smallness should observe freshman and sophomore classes in overcrowded universities where the "small" classes have 60 in them and the large classes have several hundred. He should observe the registration procedures in which long lines of students receive a minimum of counselling. He should note the number of students "eliminated" at the end of the term, partially because of academic inability, but also because it is important to get a little elbow room.

2. It is an institution of liberal education. The university is broken up into vocational schools, and almost inevitably a student drifts into one of these schools and concentrates before he should. Hence the church college student is usually a more liberally educated person. This is observed at student conferences, for the church college person, with his broader background in philosophy, history, economics, sociology, literature and Bible, is at an advantage in discussions, and doubtless will be at an advantage as a member of a community.

3. It is more flexible in planning. For instance, Dakota Wesleyan University has been chosen by the Foundation for Integrated Education as a "pilot plant" for testing "core" subjects. One supposes this is because such an experiment can be carried out most readily in a small school.

Run down the list of colleges where experiments in education are taking place and it will be evident that the small private institution seems to be the best adapted for experimentation. However, the Board of Trustees must give solid support to these departures from the conventional, therefore, the selection of the Church College trustee is of great importance if the institution is to be free and progressive.

4. It is a Church College, and for that reason many factors are at work in its life against secularism. For instance, students are quick to call attention to any inconsistency in its program with the pretension of being a "Christian college." The claim to church relationship is a commitment in itself. Education under religious auspices is different from education under secular auspices, for it has a different world view and purpose, and therefore different results are obtained. So long as this is true the Church College has something special to offer.

COMMENCEMENT and VOCATIONS

Who'll Volunteer for the Ministry?

The Exhibit for Church Vocations at meetings of the National Vocational Guidance Association this spring in Chicago provides graphic evidence that secular career advisers are for the first time being made aware of the opportunities in the church field, through the Federal Council's Commission on the Ministry. A number of inquiries have resulted from the display, which offers material from both the Commission and the Student Volunteer Movement.

SUMMARY OF REPORT FOR 1947 OF THE CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES IN THE U. S.

By FREDERICK L. FAGLEY,
Associate Sec'y, the General Council.

The Year Book of the Congregational Christian Churches for 1947 has just been issued, and the following summary has been prepared by the General Council office, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

The number of churches in 1947 as reported is 5,765—a loss of 18 from the number reported the year before. Twenty-nine new churches were organized, and 47 were closed or merged with some other church.

The merging of churches and the closing of some churches evidence the effect of changing population. The net growth in membership as noted below shows that the long range trend is still in the direction of fewer but larger churches. The average membership per church has risen from 163 members in 1931 to 203 members per church in 1947.

The average membership per church has steadily risen from 1836 (the year national figures were first assembled) when the figure was 97 per church; 1883, 99 per church; 1903, 112 per church; 1923, 151 per church; 1944, 190 members per church, and in 1947 203 per church.

Membership Record—

Total Membership in 1946—1,150,853; 1947—1,173,626; net gain, 22,412.

This net gain in membership is one of the largest gains ever witnessed by the fellowship. It is equal to the establishing of 100 new churches in the year with the present average membership of 203 per church.

For the year—40,202. This is a drop from the record number (42,442) received on confession in 1946.

Letters received in 1947—44,023; Letters given in 1947—21,421; Excess of letters received—22,602.

Many more persons are received by letter than transfer to other churches. This may be interpreted, perhaps, that some denominations are more careful to give letters to departing members and urge them to join a church in the community to which they are going than are our churches. Far too many church people are reluctant to take letters of church membership. Many keep alive a sentimental feeling for their "old home church" but gradually allow their interest and attendance to dwindle un-

SUEPRINTENDENT'S HOME.

The Committee on Superintendent's Home feels that we have been very fortunate in the unfolding of plans for a home for the "hired help" of the Convention. Recently there came a real break in our favor and we were able to go back to plans for building which we had developed last year and abandoned because of excessive costs.

The picture of the house appearing in this issue of THE SUN is, with minor changes, the future home of the Convention Superintendent. The house, having four rooms downstairs and three rooms up, with full bath on each floor, and basement, is to be erected at a cost of $14,000, including the lot. The Executive Committee of the Executive Board has approved and ground has been broken for the foundation. There will be a loan, already approved, from the Church Building Society, for $9,000.00. This is to be repaid $225 per quarter, plus three per cent interest. The amount already set up in the convention finances for this biennium is sufficient to take care of the mortgage payments. We have $3,000 on hand. Obviously, we need $2,000 (plus enough for necessary expenses of executing papers and exceptions in the contract, totaling perhaps $500) to see this project through. There are individuals throughout the Convention who will want to make an investment in this forward step. There are churches, Sunday schools, classes, young people's groups and missionary or ladies' aid societies which will want to help. The interest should be sufficient to bring this fund into balance in a few short weeks. We hope you will rejoice with us that the Convention is making this forward step.

How Can We Help the Economically Unproductive, the Handicapped and the Neurotic?

By HENRY LEE ROBISON, JR.

Executive Secretary, Virginia Council of Churches

To save life, give it meaning, zest and flavor, are among the multiple functions of religion in our everyday existence.

The average man today may claim that he has no place in his thinking for theology. His chief concern, he explains, is making a living and getting along with his neighbors by being honest and minding his own business. And yet that is exactly the concern of theology. In fact, theology is one of the commonest commodities of the market place. It is handled daily by the people whether they recognize it or not. The theology by which man lives is made up of his conception of what God is like, and what Man is, and the meaning of life.

In the eighth psalm the question is asked: "What is man?" The answer to this plunges us at once into life's complex and complicated realities. According to the King James version, the psalmist says: "Thou has made him a little lower than the angels." Another version translates this: "Thou hast made him a little less than divine" while a third declares, "Thou hast made him a little lower than God." Choose which you may and the problem is about the same.

Religion has always answered the question "What is man?" with this threefold explanation? In the first place, Man in relation to God's creation is the Crown of Creation. Secondly, in relation to God, Man is a son made in His image. And in the third place, Man in relation to his fellow man is a brother.

This complicates life. If we could say "some men" by peculiar gifts are thus in high relationship to creation, to God and to the human race, we could settle the matter of our responsibility to the economically unproductive, the handicapped, and the neurotic. We could use the gas chamber for some. Isolate others in asylums or prisons, and send some to the far away islands and forget them. But the problem cannot be solved so simply as long as we allow theology to complicate our lives.

It is not even satisfactory to say: "I am my 'brother's keeper.'" Sometimes the state must be the "keeper" in the form of a nurse for a tubercular patient, an attendant for the mentally ill, or a guard for the socially sick. But the "keeper" relationship is not as satisfactory for the Christian. He must be a brother, and as a brother share the burdens of his brother. This means that it behooves us to seek constantly for improved ways to enrich the lives of the members of God's family.

"When the Nazis entered upon systematic extermination of all the feeble-minded in Germany, the Christian conscience was aroused throughout the world," says Dr. Seward Hiltner, executive secretary of the Commission on Religion and Health of the Federal Council of Churches. Then he adds: "What do we more than these?"

Certainly, it is a virtue not to exterminate. But it is doubtful whether the crowding of 180 persons in a "cottage," 400 in a dining hall, herding large groups in a dormitory, at 6:00 p. m. to be awakened at 5:00 a. m. can be considered a basis of Christian dealing. We must be grateful for the humanitarian progress on the part of our state governments who have established 76 institutions in this nation for the feeble-minded, containing a hundred thousand persons. But we must yet go on to give adequate care to this group. Furthermore, we must make provisions to educate and care for an additional half million persons in this country whose intelligence is too low to permit them economic independence in a complex society.

Since 1945 a number of studies

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE NEW LOOK

The "new look" came in with a swish and entrenched itself leech-like on the feminine figure. It now enjoys an uncontested place in the feminine wardrobe of America. There is no little irony in the fact that we have have been sending relief to the very country from which the style edict for more cloth and elongated dresses emanated. Relief, to be sure, has been speeded by the wholesale discarding of outmoded skirts. The general result at home is a raft of misses who resemble children in mama's clothes. Such is our popular subservience to the dictatorship of styles. The democracy of taste has been relegated to a conspicuous minority. Some prophet must arise to challenge the ethics of style and social regimentation.

A new look is needed, one which is genuine rather than artificial. Many of our neglected and eroded farms need a new look. Many of our city slum sections need a new look. Much of our political chicanery needs a new look. Some of our artless-churches are suffering for a new look.

"Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart." The so-called new look may be purely ornamental and artificial. "O Jerusalem," cried Isaiah, "put on thy beautiful garments." The garments of pride and lust were to be exchanged for the garments of righteousness and peace.

The paramount need of our day is a new outlook, one motivated by altruism rather than dictated by expediency, one which views the world and its poignant need through the eyes of Jesus.

OMNIBUS TO OBERLIN.

Hospitable Ohio will play host to approximately 2,500 lay and clerical delegates from the Congregational Christian Churches of America, and the four corners of the world, when the Biennial Meeting of the General Council meets at Oberlin College, June 17 to 24. The opening session is at 2:00, Thursday, June 17, and the Council plans to close at noon, Thursday, June 24.

The General Council has a historic connection with Oberlin because it was there that it was organized in 1871, and there also that the Council for Social Action was born in 1934. Paying tribute to Oberlin, Dr. Frederick L. Fagley, Associate Secretary of the Council says: "Its idealism, its prophetic mission and its consistent leadership in religious and social affairs have a vital significance. For Oberlin, as Theodore Roosevelt once said, 'is the community of the applied square deal.' It is the home of freedom and fellowship."

While there will be study, discussion and action on many vital national and international issues, two paramount items on the General Council program will be the launching of a comprehensive program in the churches for revitalizing Christian stewardship and the developing of better churchmanship, and, action of some kind on the question of the proposed merger between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Ohio is one state in which the number of Congregational and Christian Churches were approximately equal.

Council delegates will study under expert leadership vital problems covering a wide field of subjects in a series of ten Section meetings from two to four each afternoon. These Sections are: "Evangelism—The Basic Task," "Issues in Christian Education," "The World's Hunger for Food and Faith," "Our Christian World Mission 1948-50," "The Rural Church," "Church and Economic Life," "Church and Race," "The Church and the World of Nations," "Church, State and Education," and "Christian Vocation." Each group will assemble findings and recommended actions to the General Council as a whole before the meeting is over.

To underline the need for deepening spiritual resources the Council, in addition to its daily Noon Chapel Service led by the Council Chaplain, Dr. Alfred Grant Walton of Brooklyn, N. Y., and its 8:00 o'clock Morning Devotions, is initiating a Prayer Vigil in Fairchild Chapel during every waking hour of the meeting for unbroken intercession throughout the Council.

Dr. Albert W. Palmer of Los Angeles, Calif., the present Moderator, will make the main address on the opening evening, Thursday, June 17. Dr. Boynton Merrill of Columbus, Ohio, will preach the Council Sermon, Sunday morning, June 20.

Among the elections will be that of a Moderator, a layman, for the next Biennium of the General Council, and a new Executive Vice-President for the American Board of Foreign Missions.

Among the special speakers announced for the Council will be: Dr. Franz Kleijn of the Hague, Netherlands, active in the underground during the war; Hon. Byron Price, Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations; Dr. Earle H. Ballou, just back from Peiping, North China; Rev. W. Andrew James of Surry, England; Mrs. Welthy Honsinger Fisher of the United Council of Church Women; Dr. Alan Boardman Taylor of Durban, South Africa; Dr. Robbins W. Barstow of the World Council of Churches, New York City; Dr. Lorrin Shepard of Istanbul, Turkey; Miss Katherine F. Lenroot, Chief of the U. S. Children's Bureau, Washington, D. C.; Dr. Ronald Bridges of Berkeley, Calif.; Mrs. Walter C. Tong of the Philippine Islands; Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher of New York City; Dr. Liston Pope of Yale University, and Dr. Douglas Horton of New York City, Minister of the General Council who will make the opening address Thursday afternoon, and others.

The traditional Council Lectures, five in number given in the last two Bienniums by such distinguished scholars and theologians as Dr. William Ernest Hocking and Dr. Reinold Niebuhr, will be delivered this year by Dr. Walter M. Horton of Oberlin under the general subject, "Toward a Reborn Church."

There will be the usual business sessions with reports and recommendations from some thirty Commissions and Committees, among them the Committee for Christian Democracy; the Commission on Interchurch Relations and Christian Unity; the Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains; the Committee on Church and Race, et cetera.

One of the most colorful sessions will be Monday evening, June 21, when the American Board of Foreign Missions presents a Service of Commemoration for a Century of Christian Missions in Foochow, Fukien Province, China. At this time there will be the Premiere of a beautiful technicolor movie entitled, Letter from China, filmed this past year in Fukein Province with a cast of young American missionaries and Chinese associates.

This evening program will also include brief greetings from Christian Nationals from India, China, the Near East and possibly Africa. There will be a Processional of missionaries with the flags of all nations and at the close an impressive Dedication Service for nine new young Americans going into Christian overseas service in China, Japan and Turkey.

At its special session on Friday evening, June 18, the Council for Social Action will present Social Action Awards and show for the first time its new promotional film, "Mr. Harris Joins the Human Race."

There will be separate sessions for women Saturday afternoon, June 19, when Miss Katherine F. Lenroot of Washington, D. C., speaks on "Through the Eyes of Children," and also on Sunday afternoon. There will be a session for laymen and ministers on Sunday afternoon on "Protestantism and Democracy" led by Prof. James Hastings Nichols of the University of Chicago, author of the religious best seller, Primer for Protestants.

This will be no ordinary or perfunctory Council for, as Dr. John Scotford says, "The eyes of the world will be upon us at Oberlin."

Youth in the Atomic Age

Commencement Address by DAVID E. LILIENTHAL, Chairman
United States Atomic Energy Commission at Gettysburg High School, Gettysburg, Pennsylvania

All over America in hundreds of towns and villages and cities young people—a million one hundred and twenty thousand of them—are graduating from high schools. We are not alone here tonight.

From this night forward, you are no longer children; you are changed. We of the older generation look upon this river of youth, and we are happy in its beauty and its inexhaustible energy. But in our happiness we are also sad.

In this familiar conflict of emotion, there is a clue to the state of the world today. The world is changing; we want change just as we want you young people to grow up—actually we would not have it otherwise—but quite perversely we also want the old days, the unchanged past.

Change: in that one word lies the key to the world we live in. It's a time of change in which you young people are being graduated, a time of ferment and tumult in the world. It's commonplace to say so, but it is nevertheless literally true that there are in these days greater changes and momentous events in the course of a single year or two than once transpired in decades or even a century.

And now there has come a change that may be as great or greater than any that preceded it: the discovery of how man may release the fantastic energies within the heart of the atom. This is a portentous discovery, but it is just the barest beginning, just scratching the surface of knowledge of the atom and its nucleus. New discoveries will come, come rapidly, now that the sod has been broken, now that the long-closed door is opened. Some of you who graduate from high school this spring will open wider that door. Many of you, within a decade, will add mightily to this new knowledge.

Some of you will become scientists; you may design new atom-smashers that may even dwarf the giant ones we now have; and with these great machines you will venture forth on journeys into the unknown, bringing back with you reports of those foundations of life that lie within the atom. Voyages of discovery did not cease with Columbus and Magellan, for within the atom are new continents as vast, as full of adventure and of opportunity as any new land ever sighted by the mariners of old. And the modern voyagers are young people, for these explorations call for the vaulting imagination, the daring and the energy of youth.

Some of you—you million of this years graduates—will become physicians and some biologists, and in the next decades you will use atomic energy to search out the cause of disease and to ease the sufferings of mankind in ways that none of us now can clearly foresee. Some of you will become engineers and chemists and technicians, and you will harness the energy of the atom; you will use unseen radiation to make new metals and new materials that today are unknown; you will build and invent and design machines and labor-saving devices beyond our imagination. Some of you million will be nurses, some clergymen and missionaries perhaps; some will go into professional military service, some into business; many will be teachers and housewives. All of you I hope will be active citizens, not mere spectators. And in every walk of life, whoever you are, whatever you do as a life's work, this much is clear: your work, your play, your dreams and your hopes will be profoundly affected by the new discoveries of science, of which atomic science, while but one of several, is symbolic of the whole.

Let me say it again: Change: that is what is occurring today, all over the world even into the most remote mountain valleys and islands of the seas.

What is it that causes these changes? Chiefly this: machines, inventions, discoveries of science and engineering and medicine. The high-powered microscope, the radio, the airplane, ever faster and larger. Inventions, discoveries, machines, these change the face of the earth, change the setting of people's lives, change empires, and profoundly affect peace and war.

Sometimes we forget what is behind the machines and the discoveries. We say: "This is the Atomic Age," and thereby perhaps obscure the truth that like all other times of man, this is the Human Age; that behind new knowledge are individuals, human beings, men and women driven by a ceaseless urge, the desire to know, the desire to understand the world.

There are always those who fail to comprehend this. They have said—all through the ages they have said: "Why everything has already been discovered. We now have the last word, the final truth." They want to put an end to thinking, to inquiring, to reaching out for any more of this new knowledge that leads to change. So they pass laws—or gather in mobs—to try to control what people think, or they burn the books or throw the cyclotrons into the sea. But no laws or mobs can change the

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Sunday school conventions are soon due. What a fine thing it would be to have them well prepared, well attended, and filled with enthusiastic reports of a good year's work. Our Sunday schools—at least those with which I am personally acquainted, and that means several of them—are doing better. They are taking on new life. Their attendance is better, and their interest, as well as their fruits are better. This is certainly all to the good. Now that they are headed upward let us have some really great Conventions, and plan for still greater improvement next year.

I have appointed a committee of five to nominate the fifteen major officials of our Sunday school in Suffolk and be ready to make their report to the quarterly conference of the church the first Wednesday night in July. Other churches will follow their own manner of doing this work, but every church or Sunday school should be thinking of the Sunday School Convention in July, and getting their "house in order" for that Convention. In the Eastern Virginia Conference we like to have all our officers elected before the July Convention in order that reports made to the Convention will name the new officers in the local schools.

It has been observed that since Convention dues of 15 cents per member are paid to the Convention treasurer that many school hold their enrollment down to a more or less "active" roll, rather than taking the full enrollment for the entire year, which is perhaps all right, but it has a tendency to lessen the total Convention records. Personally I should like my Sunday school to keep an accurate record of every member enrolled at all times during the entire year and give the over-all figure as the years enrollment. If we kept our church rolls on the basis of those who attended the services more or less regularly we should have to cut them, and the difference between our church enrollment and our Sunday school enrollment would not be as great as it is. I suggest that we seek faithfully to serve every member on our church roll, to be the kind of church they can be proud to be a member of even though for some reason they cannot attend it regularly; and that we take enough interest in every pupil who enrolls in our Sunday school during the entire year to at least count him when we report how many our Sunday school enrolled during the year—even if we do have to pay per capita tax for each of them. They should be worth at least 15 cents to us, and we should be worth to them that which cannot be estimated in dollars and cents.

May I suggest that all pastors, superintendents, department superintendents, other officers, and all teachers, be looking forward to our Sunday school conventions in our various Conferences, and doing a bit of thoughtful work to see that they are better and that each of our local schools grows in effectiveness, and in the Spirit of the Master Teacher.

ROSEMONT.

The revival at Rosemont which began May 17th and ended May 28th was indeed a great success.

The guest speaker, Rev. Roy S. Hulan of Illinois, gave both interesting and inspiring messages, and the entire congregation was loud in its praise of his splendid work, and he and his family (Mrs. Hulan and two boys) will long be remembered by his friends at Portlock.

Mr. Poythress did a grand job of leading the congregational singing and sang a solo each evening. The senior choir was faithful in attendance and rendered special music each night. The young people's choir also added to the musical program and had charge of the music one evening.

The three preachers—Hulan, Poythress and Council, sang a trio on two occasions and proved that they could both sing and preach.

The services were well attended and much enthusiasm shown. Much of the success of the meeting was attributable to the evangelistic visitation which preceded the services. A rough estimate of the attendance, according to a card system which was used, showed a total of 1,654 having attended the two-week service. There were eight professions of faith and two transfers from other churches.

The baptismal service was held Sunday night, May 3, at which time eight were baptized by the pastor, Rev. Herbert G. Council.

Mr. Council has given untiringly of his time and talents to this work and has endeared himself and his family to the entire community of Portlock. We, as a congregation, are quite proud of our young pastor, and feel that his work among us has really begun in earnest and are looking forward to great times ahead for Rosemont under his spiritual guidance.

A LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

609 Sheldon St.,
Madison 5, Wisc.,
May 31, 1948.

Rev. Robert Lee House, Editor,
THE CHRISTIAN SUN,
Richmond 21, Va.
Dear Mr. House:

All your readers who have even meager understanding of the bases of the American Republic and appreciation of the advantages that come to American citizens by reason of the foresight of the founders, will applaud the article by John C. Vivian in THE SUN of May 27. Every word of his article is true, and well worthy of the consideration of all Americans. I would like to add a few thoughts, further developing the conclusions of Mr. Vivian.

Democracy is a government of men; hence it is a materialistic concept. It is not surprising that the ancient Greeks should have declared that "the voice of the people is the voice of God," but this same declaration by twentieth-century man, in the light of Christian teaching, is nothing less than heresy.

That there might be something inherently valid, true, or approaching the divine in the expressed will of a majority of any group, large or small, might be acceptable to a humanist, pragmatist or materialistic atheist, but the Christian cannot accept it.

Rule of the majority, as such, and without limitation, means the rule of the stronger; hence might is right in the democratic concept.

Communists claim to be the greatest democrats in the world, and they have every right to make that claim. Communism is a logical, we might say inevitable, development of the ideology of democracy.

The difference between our American Republic and democracy is much more than a matter of form.

Our American government was founded because of the development, in America, of a new political philosophy of the importance and dignity of the individual, of men free because they are created to be free, and men equal before their Creator and before the government. This is a Christian ideology, transferred to the

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

WHY COMMEND THE COLLEGE?

One of the most pleasant privileges of being at Elon College is to have your friends visit you during the commencement season. You also have the opportunity of making new acquaintances, and forming new friendships mean much to you and to the College itself. Mrs. Smith and I have many of these friends in our own home. We are sorry that we cannot have them all. Among our house guests during the recent Commencement were Dr. and Mrs. John G. Truitt of Suffolk, Va. (Mrs. Truitt gave the Alumni address and it was a good one.) We were very happy to have them. In the customary thank you letter, Mrs. Truitt expressed her appreciation of the college and the work being done here and added, "Whenever I have the opportunity, I speak a good word for the College." This is greatly appreciated and means much to the College, but Dr. and Mrs. Truitt give a much more effective witness for the College than they could ever give by word of mouth or transmit by letter. They send their fine daughter to Elon College for training. This is the strongest commendation and the most telling testimony they could possibly give. Anne Truitt is a fine girl, a good student and a most cooperative spirit on the campus. She has a beautiful singing voice and uses it freely in the interest of the College.

Elon College has many good friends who support it and speak well of it, which is helpful and highly appreciated, but their witness would be so much more effective if they would send their own children to Elon College. When the members of the Congregational Christian Church send their children to their church college they are not only helping their children and their college, but they are making a very helpful contribution to their church. Young people make friends and form ties on a college campus that last as long as life itself. When these friends are in the church, the church is strengthened. The members of our church who have children to send to college should think of these things before selecting a college for their children.

Elon College is not as large as some, it is not as old as some, it is not as well equipped as some, but in many respects it is as good as any and better, much better, than a great many. We do not want Elon College to be much larger than it is. If any, it should always be in the small college class. It has not ambition or expectation of being a large college. Obviously the passing years will add to its age. It is a bit deficient in equipment but we are improving the College's equipment with every passing day. We have just now completed a new heating plant. We are working on a plan to erect and equip at least two modern dormitories which will put us a good ways on our expansion program. Watch Elon College grow. If you will send your sons and daughters to the College and invite your neighbors to send theirs; if you will send your contributions for buildings and equipment, make them generous, not too generous for your ability: you will help the College grow and make it possible for it to keep pace in its program of equipment with the passing years that add age. The fall term opens September 7. If you will send your application at once, we will do our best to find room for you.

SUMMARY OF REPORT FOR 1947.

til finally the home church removes the name from the roll. The interest in the Christian fellowship should inspire church people when establishing a new home in a distant community to move their church membership with their other prized possessions.

Members dropped in 1947 by Revision of the Roll—27,571.

The carelessness with which some churches manage the church roll is deplorable. The local church has a responsibility to shepherd its people where they are. The policy of placing all responsibility upon those who go away is bound to bring large losses to the Christian fellowship. Every church should maintain an absent member department in charge of a loyal and careful worker by whose personal interest many of those dropped would either be kept interested in the local church or influenced to take a letter and affiliate with a church in the new community.

Number of Absentees reported in 1947—164,406.

This number of absentees still continued on the rolls of our churches indicates that the trend of drifting populations has been greatly accentuated in recent years. Unless far greater attention is given to the continuous task of following our people as they move, this figure will show a greater increase in the future. What this means in the work of the church should be abundantly evident. Here is a task for today!

Number reported for 1947—517,117. A gain over previous year of 13,440.

This is a significant reversal of a long-time trend, for the Church School enrollment has been declining practically every year since 1920 when the enrollment reached 781,195. From the year 1911 to 1936 the number stood above 700,000; since then a decline has been recorded each year until the last two years. Those concerned with this department of church work have been planning definitely to stem this retreat of youth and to build the educational program of the church on a firmer foundation, and the tide has turned.

Total number of ministers in 1947—6,044. Gain for the year of 113.

Pastors—

Total number of pastors in 1947—3,312. Gain for the year of 30.

Ordination of Ministers—

Number of ministers ordained in 1947—90. This is a decrease of 24 over the previous year.

Salaries—

The average salary of the country as a whole for 1947 was $2,640, an increase of $372 over the preceding year. Yet with this increase the salary of pastors is below any recommended standard.

Financial Giving—

The giving on the apportionment was $2,940,379, a decrease of $39,109. For all benevolences the giving amounted to $5,536,816, a gain of $125,139 and the amount raised for the expenses of local churches (Home Expenses) was $24,754,281, an increase for the year of $3,035,844.

June 1, 1948.

President A. R. Van Cleave of Piedmont College received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity at the Elon College commencement.

Dr. Douglas Horton and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill were among the guest lecturers at the North Dakota State Conference, Fargo, May 11-13.

Missions

The World for Christ

TIMOTHY CHANG.

By RICHARD L. JACKSON.

Timothy Chang (Chang Syan Gwang) is beyond doubt one of the most attractive and at the same time one of the finest Christian young men I have ever met. Born of Christian parents, Timothy has been brought up in the Church. His father for years was the treasurer and business manager for missions enterprises here. His mother was a teacher in the Lo Te Girls' School and the principal of the Woman's School for Training Women Evangelistic Workers. When the bandits, who preceded the Communists, came to Shaowu in 1931, Mrs. Chang took the four children of their family and went to Foochow. Mr. Chang was captured and threatened with death, but he was later released.

Almost as far back as Timothy can remember, conditions have been unsettled in China. He was born in 1925. In 1931 came the Communists. After they left, but before things could be called "settled," the Japanese came to Foochow. Although they never reached Shaowu, the residents lived in constant fear of bombing and attack. Originally Timothy wanted to study medicine, but because of war conditions he could not go away to study. From the time he was born, his mother had prayed that Timothy would enter the ministry. In 1944 while still in college, Timothy made the decision to become a minister of Christ if the opportunity came to continue his studies. When Dorothy and I arrived in Shaowu last year, Timothy still had the determination to enter the ministry. At that time he was helping to support his family (his mother is now quite ill) by teaching chemistry in the local public school. When I noticed his leadership ability, his pleasant personality, and his devotion to Christ, I was much impressed. So, one day I spoke to him about the need for young men to serve as ministers in North Fukien. To my delight, he with hesitation replied, "I should like nothing better."

It occurred to me, how fine it would be for Timothy to have a chance to meet you people in the Southern Convention and for you to know him. When the women of the Convention decided to give the Life Membership and Memorial funds for such a purpose, I was overjoyed. We began at once to make plans for Timothy to come to America and he has been admitted to Duke Divinity School, Durham, N. C., and will enter in September, 1948. I shall miss him terribly. He has been my teacher in Chinese, he has served as the president of the young adult group and as an adviser and counselor for the high school young people's society. But he will be preparing himself for greater service when the need is great. You will like him. Please receive him as our friend and co-laborer. He will like you and will be an inspiration to you and you to him.

Timothy graduated from Fukien Christian University in Agricultural Economics in 1946 with an outstanding record. He won the highest scholarship award offered by the University. The dean says of him, "Academically speaking, Timothy Chang was one of the best students in his class, maintaining an average of 83½ throughout his college course. He is quiet, courteous and quite scientifically minded." Now Timothy has returned to the University to study English in preparation for his great experience with you people of the Southern Convention.

Nothing you people of the Convention could do will mean more to us in Shaowu than your helping such young ministerial students as Timothy. Our greatest need is trained leadership (native). The four ministers now at work with us are all past fifty years of age, and the average Chinese life expectancy is under fifty years, so new workers are imperative if the work is to go. With their ready command of the language, with their natural understanding of the people and their problems, the consecrated native leader can accomplish ever so much more than a missionary could ever hope to do—and at far less cost to the Board.

The problem of ministerial education here is a serious one. The two seminaries here (Foochow and Nanking) labor under difficulties. They both take boys directly out of high school and give them a degree in two years, so I fear the standards are not too high. Books and supplies are inadequate at this time and trained instructors in religion, as in other fields, are scarce.

For these reasons, young men and women in all professions want to go to America to study. It has been a surprise to discover how many young men and women dream about the day when they can go to America to study. I've never seen anything like it. The

A LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

Shaowu Christian Hospital,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
June 4, 1948.

Dear Miss Brinkley:

I have already been greatly impressed, and somewhat embarrassed, because so many of you have already done so much for us here, far beyond what we deserve. I feel that our relationship should not be limited to just "gimmies." I am more and more convinced that I have been enjoying a rare privilege in being here and getting to share in the daily life and aspirations of this rural community in the southeastern part of China, which has so many resemblances to your own communities, and yet so many differences. You people are continually being asked to support and give, and yet you are being denied the privilege of sharing directly in the life and experiences of this group of people here whom you have adopted as your special interest. They have viewpoints on life to contribute to the West; and knowing them and living this life here makes the whole of my life and cultural background much more interesting and meaningful. Therefore it should be my duty to serve as a pipe-line of worthwhile contributions from Shaowu to the Southern Convention and not just the opposite. It looks as if the only way I can do that is by letters, and they are wholly inadequate because I am no good at expressing myself in writing. Nevertheless this traffic of contributions should be both ways and not just from West to East.

So this brief word of greeting should be to you from the nurses of the hospital, and the wives of the members of the staff who work here, and the patient maid-servants who help in the more menial but equally necessary tasks that make the hospital run, and from the mothers of Shaowu who dare to trust Western medicine and bring their children in for Dr. Chu to treat in ways that are different from the old traditions that they are used to; from all the women of this community, who, like you, believe in striving for a better life and patiently work, each in her own place, with the patience that is peculiar to women, to achieve it. They are all trying to make their contribution, too; and while their contribution at present cannot be as substantial and as practical to send back to you as yours have been to them, at least their spirit and intention is the same.

With apologies for the clumsiness and inadequacy of this message, I remain

Very cordially,

Ed Riggs.

HAVE YOU HEARD?

The School of Missions is to be held at Elon College, July 12-16. The cost is $12 ($2 registration and $10 for room and board). The first meal is on Monday night and the last meal at Friday noon. Plan to send your president, your program committee, and other leaders. Study books and Bible material for next years work will be taught. Workshops will be held every afternoon for workers with Cradle Roll, children, young people, small societies and large societies. Some of the leaders are Dr. Martin Goslin, Dr. A. D. Stauffacher, Dr. Ira G. Black, Mrs. Rowland Cross, Mrs. Judson Fiebiger.

government is sending students to study agriculture, engineering, medicine, economics, etc., and it seems to me that our religious leaders should be given an equal opportunity if it is possible. We certainly want our ministers to get as good training in their field as those in other professions are getting.

All these facts enter into my recommendations that some of our fine young men come to American to study in seminaries. For our ministerial students, I believe the experience of being in our American churches, witnessing present day methods, actually taking part in a going program of a local church will be very helpful. To you at home will come the joy of hearing and seeing the witness of Jesus Christ from the lips and life of these young men won to Christ through your gifts and the labors of your missionaries.

HOW CAN WE HELP?

have been organized and authorized by the Federal Council of Churches Commission on Religion and Health. Projects are being conducted to improve religious programs in institutions housing the handicapped, demonstrating how the Christian conscience can work through our churches to help man assume intelligently the responsibilities of brotherhood in the fields of the economically unproductive, the handicapped and the neurotic.

One Sunday morning in the midst of the first hymn of the service I chanced to glance down the center aisle of my church and noted a familiar face on the right about two-thirds down. I could not recall where I had seen this man before. He was not a member of the church, and I was sure he had not been in the congregation before. When the service was over, I tried to locate him in the throng but he evaded me. The next Sunday he was there again, and again I failed to locate him after the service. The third Sunday I made sure that I would get to meet my friend.

During the singing of the last hymn I walked down the aisle and gave the benediction from the rear of the church. Just as I passed this man, my mind clicked, his name came to me and the name of the place where I had known him.

As the congregation went out I shook hands with my visitor and asked him to wait awhile so I could talk with him. He consented. When the people had gone, I inquired where he was living and finding that it was in the direction of my parsonage, I invited him to ride with me. As soon as we were in the car, he said, "You know I came to your church because I knew your father." I was pleased at hearing this and inquired about himself and his family. He told me that eight years before he became mentally ill. The family physician had suggested that he enter one of our state hospitals with the assurance that he would recover. He said that they had been helpful to him at this hospital and now he was discharged and fully recovered. His general health was good and he had a job. But during his stay in the hospital his children had grown up and married and his wife had become self-supporting. They were all kind to him but they had so adjusted their lives that they no longer needed him. He viewed this as the greatest tragedy of his experience.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR LITTLE FRIENDS:

Now that school is over and vacation is ahead what will you do? Some of you will go away to camp, to day camp or to Bible school. Many of you will be staying at home and I want to suggest some things you might do for a stay-at-home vacation.

There will certainly be some rainy days. Save your main reading for those days. Have you read any of your Sunday school books lately or Sunday school papers? If you save them, look over them and find the Scripture references in the Bible by yourself if you can. Rainy days are good for cutting out pictures and paper dolls. You might send the pictures to the Jacksons in China, paste some on heavy cardboard and cut them out for the nursery class in your church school, or paste them in a scrap book.

Ask mother if you may have scraps of cloth, a few old hats, shoes and pieces of jewelry. Then you have the "props" as actors say, for plays. Make up your own and get your brothers and sisters or neighborhood gang to help put it on. Bible stories make nice playlets. Or if you had rather, make puppets of clothes pins and let them do the acting while you do the talking. For this you will need a big box set on a table. Put a piece of cloth around the table so your feet will not show, cut out the bottom of the box so you can slip the puppets through, make your scenery in the box, dress your dolls with long clothes to cover your hands and then prepare your play. It's fun.

Take a walking tour. In my city there are so many places to see. One of the nicest is the Valentine Museum which has a great treasure of dolls and toys of by-gone days. There are tiny tin soldiers, flat irons, cradles, jacks, dolls, doll clothing, dishes and tea sets all used long ago. They also have a collection of foreign dolls. The boys and girls of Newport News might go to the Mariner's Museum although riding would be in order instead of walking. In Norfolk or Portsmouth a trip to the river would be worthwhile. Many boats and ships are to be seen. If you live in the country go walking to see wildflowers, or birds, or whatever you like best.

Begin making your Christmas presents. There is more time when vacation is on than when school is in session. For a little person, paint and string spools, or paint different size tin cans that have been opened with a smooth can cutter. Make book covers for older friends and something very special for mother could be a woven place mat. Use paper or heavy binding paper. Lay the strips lengthwise, then weave crosswise, tuck in the ends, and shellac both sides.

You might try memorizing some verses from the Bible. Just to know them because someone said learn them doesn't do much good, but if you discover this summer that the "earth is the Lord's," then learn its lovely words.

A PRAYER FOR CHILDREN'S DAY.

By Samuel McComb.

Almighty Father, we bless thee for the children thou hast given us, and for all the joy they have brought us. We would consecrate them anew to thy service, and we would train them in knowledge and love of thy commands.

Reveal to them the glory and beauty of life. Enable them to rise to their supreme opportunities. Inspire them with a spirit of truth and courage and self-control.

Write the law of kindness in their hearts, that they may hate all cruelty and love all goodness and mercy with perfect love. As they grow in age, may they grow in grace; through Jesus Christ. Amen.

A KIND WAY.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"No doubt he has a kind way," remarked a guest on looking at a photograph of one of his host's relatives.

A kind way!—could we ask for a more desirable personality trait for ourselves or our children?

An intimate acquaintance of mine left the state in which she had been brought up and went to live amidst unaccustomed surroundings. The people she met seemed reserved and cold; she missed the greeting of old friends very keenly and soon became so homesick that she felt actually ill. Then she moved to another locality; here there was a more neighborly spirit. The smiles and friendliness of these later acquaintances acted as balm to her lonely heart, and she was soon restored to normal health and happiness through their kind ways.

Even very small children can be taught neighborliness, thoughtfulness and tact; and these are, after all, really kind ways.

As soon as children are old enough to write, they are old enough to have birthday books in which to note the dates of the birthdays of members of the family and close friends. Sending simple birthday messages, writing their own thank-you notes, selecting and buying small gifts for Christmas and other anniversaries help our boys and girls to establish the habit of kind ways.

A great minister once preached a sermon on being kind in a kind way. "If kindness is performed as a duty, in the spirit of do or die," he declared, "a great deal of its balm is lost."

One of our neighbors, who is particularly desirous of teaching her black-eyed twins that "only the kind are great," encourages the children to take bouquets of gay flowers grown in their gardens, as well as some of the delicious soups and custards which she makes, to their friends and hers when any of them are ill or in trouble.

"In this way my children are forming a habit of sympathetic thoughtfulness that they will never lose," she remarked. "It is becoming a definite part of them. They receive grateful smiles and words of appreciation and are happy to bring the messages that are sent to me."

Teaching courtesy and a kind way takes time. But how important it is to acquire gracious habits in early childhood, and what an excellent way this is to utilize time! One of the simplest ways of teaching children to become thoughtful and gracious is, of course, to present qualities for imitation that are commendable. We all know how highly imitative the little ones are.

Encouragement is essential, since gratification and satisfaction are gained through Mother's and Dad's approval.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

The Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention is charged with the responsibility of promoting Daily Vacation Bible Schools in the churches of the Convention. We have tried this year to do the best job possible.

Six young people have been secured under Student Summer Service, to assist churches needing supervision for their schools. Six young people can hold a lot of schools during the summer. We have run into great difficulty, however, because nearly all our churches are asking for help, and are asking for it during the month of June. We had fourteen requests for schools the same week! That presents a problem. The Board of Christian Education wants to help every church which asks us for help. We can give that help if the churches will be willing to change their local plans so that they will give us a chance. It is obviously easier to change the dates for a local school than it is to shift the entire Convention set-up to accommodate a local situation.

We have several open dates in July, and have six fine young people who are capable of giving good assistance. In view of the overwhelming number of requests for help during June, and in view of our responsibility for assisting the churches, are there not a number of our churches which desire help that can switch their dates to July? Early August is not too late. Please write Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Elon College, N. C., and ask for possible open dates when we might help you with your school. Better still, perhaps, write her suggesting two or more dates when you could have a school and we will do our best to help. In the presence of the many requests for help the same weeks, we have tried to send leaders to those churches—mostly rural—where outside help would be most needed. Will you help us to help you?

JESSE H. DOLLAR, Chairman,
Board of Christian Education.

HOW CAN WE HELP?

Like tragedies go on every day in our American life. The church alone is in position to prevent them. An understanding minister in the home church together with an understanding hospital minister could have worked together to keep the ties strong enough in this family to have prevented this tragedy. The family could have been helped to adjust to a temporary separation—always looking forward to the day when they could be re-united. Instead of breaking ties—the ties could have been strengthened and the lives of every member of the family enriched.

There is a great need for intelligent and trained institutional ministers today. The relation between them and the church should be very close. This closeness can be created by the church taking the responsibility of providing the support of ministers for this major home mission field. The church can select train, and provide adequately for the support of these ministers just as they make like provisions for missionary pastors. Such a plan calls for an understanding relationship between our state institutions and the church. It also insures against the domination of the church by the state or the state by the church.

Where do we find a community of fifteen hundred persons without half a dozen churches and ministers? Yet, a large number of our public institutions are still without the ministry or the church despite the fact that their population numbers hundreds and sometimes thousands.

The charge is often made that chaplains in public institutions are lackies for the superintendents, or mere handy men to censor the mail, provide entertainment for the patients and make a good impression on the public. Often this has been true. But it is a condition that need not continue. This criticism is one of the strongest arguments for church support of institutional pastors.

The old saying that he who pays the fiddler calls the tune holds true in this field. When the state pays the salary and the superintendents of a public institution signs the check, the relationship of the institutional pastor to the staff and patient group is different. On the other hand, when the church pays the bills and works out a definite arrangement with the institutional authorities, a proper relationship is realized. When the pastor is charged with the responsibility of working out a constructive worship and instruction program for the community church (not the chapel) and seeks opportunity to know his people and their problems by constant checking with the physicians, psychiatrists and social workers, he becomes shepherd of the flock. The story of the institutional ministers' work will be different only when the pastors are chosen because of their qualifications—of the right personality, equipment and type of consecration the work requires—and when the church adequately finances this work.

Providing adequately trained and supported pastors for public institutions is not the total work of the church. Two more things are imperative.

First, a definite program for counselling families whose members are in the institutions must be worked out. Institutional ministers are responsible for making confidential reports to the local parish pastors. At the same time a relationship of confidence with the inmate or patient must be maintained. This requires sound judgment and a special sensitivity on the part of the minister.

In the second place, the churches in the local community have special responsibilities toward the institution. Persons in the institution must be helped to develop a wholesome attitude toward the larger community of which they are a part. The local ministers by regular visits to the institutional church can contribute much toward this. By thus serving the institutional community the churches can help the institutional population feel that they belong to the society at large.

The numerous types of social work known today have grown out of the experience of the church in its effort to minister to the handicapped. It has been quite proper, that as institutions have grown and social work techniques have become specialized and enlarged, that this work should be taken over by the community. Frequently, however, this has resulted in the church and its off-spring growing apart. Every effort should be exercised to help the church to continue its interest in and to make its unique contribution to the ministry of social work in our world. The church and the state should cooperate in every way helpful in ministering to those in need.

One morning there was a note in my box at the State Prison where I

THE HOPE OF THE MESSIAH.

LESSON TEXT: Ezekiel 34:11-16, 22-31; Daniel 7:13, 14; Zechriaiah 9:9, 10; 12:10; 13:1.

LESSON XII—JUNE 20, 1948.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 1:46-55.

MEMORY SELECTION: For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulders—and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace.—Isaiah 9:6.

At no time since that of the Israelitish prophets have the texts which constitute this Sunday's lesson been more pertinent than at the present time. The history of the Jews from the time they first entered Palestine until the dispersion was one of oppression and of encroachment by other nations.

Strategically situated as a channel of commerce for the larger nations which surrounded them, the Jewish traders became rich because of the economic advantages which ensued. The pearls and precious stones of the East, the perfumes and incense of Arabia, the gold and silver and brass from the South, the wealth of Egypt, passed by caravan to the north and to Mediterranean ports. And in trade came the purple of Tyre and the products of Asia Minor and of Europe.

Certainly no greater opportunity for material wealth was ever offered. But as the Jew waxed wealthy, he became the object of jealousy and cupidity on the part of the other nations. Oppression and bondage followed.

There is small wonder that in these times of destruction and defeat, that their hope should go out for the Messiah that had been promised. Indeed the coming of the Messiah was the only hope of a solution of the difficulties which surrounded them.

Proud America has lived isolated from the rest of the world by the oceans which surround her, immune from attack, protected by her formidable navy from the cupidity of other nations. But today the picture is changed. The airplane has annihilated distance, the atomic bomb is but one of the powers of destruction that can assail us. We, like ancient Judea, are surrounded on all sides by those who are jealous of our standard of living and ready to pull us down to theirs. Even our attempts to play the Good Samaritan are misunderstood and often unappreciated.

Is there a solution to our problem? Will universal military training make us secure? Must we annihilate the rest of the world before it can destroy us? Is there any answer to this problem which confronts us, and to a possibly greater degree confronts the rest of the democratic world?

The writer once heard Roger Babson make the statement that unless the moral and spiritual world kept up with the material world, the result would be chaos. David Lilienthal says something of the kind in his address to the high school graduates of Gettysburg and the nation. There, and there alone, is the answer to the problem—the coming of the Messiah.

We have His promise that "He shall speak peace unto the nations: and His dominion shall be . . . to the ends of the earth." Shall we put our trust in our material might, or shall we accept his promise on his terms?

MENTAL HEALTH IN MODERN SOCIETY.

Thomas A. C. Rennie, M. D., and Luther E. Woodward, Ph. D., published in 1948 by The Commonwealth Fund. 422 pp. $4.

The authors have indicated realistically, but without cumbersome detail the mental health problems that arose in connection with the recent World War and have indicated what was done about them. They have described the extent to which we are today confronted with mental health problems, including the major illness, personal maladjustments and the large social issues such as war and peace and improved relations in industry and among peoples of different races and creeds. They have discussed the responsibilities of all professional people and of parents in the building and maintaining of sound mental health in their communities.

Like all good books this one is rooted in the life experience of its authors. Dr. Rennie was born in a devout Scotch Presbyterian family in the Highlands of Scotland some distance from Glasgow. He played the organ in the Presbyterian church from the tender age of five to thirteen, when he came with his family to America where he completed his general education. He continued his avid interest in literature and music but decided upon medicine as his career. He specialized in psychiatry at Phipps Clinic of John Hopkins University and did teaching in psychology in the undergraduate school. More recently he has been Associate Professor of Psychiatry at Cornell University Medical School and Clinical Director of the Payne Whitney Division of the New York Hospital. Thus he brings to the book not only his artistic appreciations but also wide experience in treating people who are emotionally ill and in teaching medical students and graduates.

Dr. Woodward grew up in an equally devout Lutheran family in the Juniata Valley which is nestled in the Appalachian mountains. He first trained for the Lutheran ministry at Gettysburg and Gettysburg Lutheran Theological Seminary. Feeling the need for increased knowledge of individual differences and more tools for helping those people who are most in need of assistance in solving their social and personal problems, he pursued graduate study at Teachers' College, Columbia University, taking his Ph.D. in 1932. Then followed two years at the New York School of Social Work, majoring in psychiatric social work with field work assignments in family service agencies and child guidance clinics. Throughout his graduate study he continued to serve a small Lutheran Parish, which helped to give substance to his studies and opportunities for practical application. For two years he did special case work and consultation in another church setting and for eleven years served on the staff of the Bureau of Child Guidance of the New York City schools. In 1943 he served as Social Work Adviser to National Headquarters of the Selective Service System and from 1944 to the present has been Field Consultant of the Division on Rehabilitation of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene.

Ministers will find value not only in the chapters on Pastoral Counseling and Church Life, but in chapters describing the work of other allied professions, particularly if they are interested in the development of an integrated program of service to people in the communities in which their congregations are located.

YOUTH AND THE ATOMIC AGE.

human mind, the eternal human spirit. The spirit of free inquiry is part of the very nature of man himself.

New knowledge, such as the secrets within the atom, bring vast physical changes. But inventions and machines and new knowledge not only change the physical setting of life, not only bring remote parts of the country and of the world closer together, not only fill the air with voices and music and pictures, not only devise new ways of saving lives and suffering and new ways of destruction. Such changes are physical, but there are also changes that are not physical. There are changes that are called social, or economic, or political, that is changes in the conditions of society, in the relation of one person to his neighbor, of workmen to their employers, of farmers to city-dwellers, of people in one country to those in another country. These, for lack of a better term we call human relations.

We need social inventions to help us to improve these human relations. We need inventions in human relations that may aid men to live together without injustice and without violence, without cruelty and bigotry, without depressions and wars. These inventions call for much the same open mind, the same high intelligence, the same spirit of experimentation, that are required for great scientific discoveries.

We are all familiar with social inventions, devices men have painfully worked out to enable them to live together more harmoniously. All kinds of illustrations will occur to you. Some are simple, such as a zoning ordinance or a stop-and-go traffic signal. Others are more complicated or more profound, such as a Bill of Rights and a Supreme Court that protects the liberties of the individual even against the arbitrary action of a majority; or the idea (which at one time was quite novel) of the whole community joining to hire men to carry pistols so every man needn't carry one—the idea of a professional police force. The idea of a United Nations is, of course, a human relations invention, on a world-wide scale.

Each of these social inventions—from the simplest to the most profound—was designed so men might live together with a greater measure of security, of dignity, and opportunity. Such measures as these don't just happen, any more than atomic energy or radar, or a B-36 just happens. They are the product of thinking, the product of experiment, the product of the inquiring mind.

They have this further similarity—these two different kinds of inventions—social and physical: Both grow out of the past. Both stand upon a foundation of existing knowledge and past experience. In this sense there are no physical discoveries that are “revolutionary,” and no social inventions that do not grow out of the soil of past human experience and are nourished by that experience. The release of atomic energy is the product of centuries of man's insistent inquiry into the nature of his physical world. And the social invention that will, in the days to come, serve to channel that discovery into beneficial fields, and control and prevent the use of atomic energy for war and destruction, that invention, too, must have its roots in man's history. It must start from where we are, and build upon that.

We build, in science and in social life and international relations, upon what we have and what we are. But the edifice that is built upon this foundation must be one that looks out upon man as he wants to be, that faces his future, not his past, one that satisfies the unconquerable aspiration of men and women to make tomorrow better than yesterday.

It's a curious and sometimes a sad fact that the very men whose genius has contributed most to changing the physical setting of life—for example, a great manufacturer of automobiles or of a revolutionary chemical process—these often are the most surprised and even angry when they find that they themselves, through their products, have radically changed the way human beings live and therefore the way they think and act. The physical changes of science and the machine inevitably bring changes in the relations of men, one to another. When human relations get badly out of joint we have such troubles as strikes, and depressions, such catastrophes as revolutions and wars.

Some people (usually though not always older people), find in new discoveries—and atomic energy in particular—a cause for the deepest despair. It's not uncommon, as you well know, to hear predictions that the end of civilization is near at hand.

I do not share this gloom about the future. No sensible man can minimize the difficulties of adjusting ourselves to the many new conditions of life on our planet, including those brought by atomic energy and atomic weapons. No one can minimize the skill and patience and inventiveness and faith it will take to adjust our human relations to the even more numerous changes that you and your generation will see. But I doubt, somehow, that you young people will take much stock in these predictions of dire and utter calamity. In every other generation there were many people who were sure that the world was going to the dogs. Most of us however are firm in a faith that we will go right on, meeting new difficulties as they come, struggling through them, and doubtless creating new problems as old ones are solved or managed. This is surely no time to despair and lose hope, just because we are acquiring more knowledge than we yet know how to apply for human benefit.

Knowledge always has a two-sided aspect. It can be used for good, for human betterment, for the making of a world in which there is less suffering, less poverty, less misery. Or it can be used to increase jealousy and bitterness and hatred among men, used for destruction and wars. Which it shall be depends upon human beings, upon the human heart, the human spirit, upon how well we, as human beings, are able to work out our relations one to another. Whether the future is black or is bright surely depends not upon how much we know but how we use what we know. For myself—I firmly believe that as the children of a loving Father it shall be our destiny to find the way to use our knowledge for the flowering of the human spirit and the glory of God.

Greater knowledge about the world, this will, I think, be the keynote of the immediate future. But greater knowledge, alone, will not be enough. There must also be greater love and understanding among men. And there must be greater faith, faith in humankind, and faith in the purposes of the Creator of the Universe. Knowledge, love, faith, with these three the Atomic Age, the age in which you shall live, can become an age of mercy, of joy and of hope, one of the blessed periods of all history.

HOW WILL YOU BALANCE?

The following appears back of the bench in one of our county courtrooms, hung in a frame:

“From the day you open your eyes there is entered on the Book of Eternity a page with your name. You are given a limited length of time to accomplish something worth while. Your account may be closed at any moment. How will you balance?”—Albion Weekly.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

What is more beautiful than a field of golden grain ripe unto harvest. The writer visited a field of wheat on the Orphanage farm a few days ago, and as we stood at the edge of the field and looked out over the field of waving grain, heads well filled and the straw tinted yellow, it was one beautiful sight. It is like a shock of corn gathered in its season. But there is something more beautiful than the golden grain or a shock of corn. It is a life well spent and filled with good deeds.

The writer was talking to a fine young man sometime ago, and during the conversation he said: "I have never tasted a drop of whiskey and I have never dissipated in any way." I just thought, what a noble young man. I have know him for a number of years and not one word of criticism have I ever heard of him. There is nothing more beautiful than a beautiful life lived.

When the writer first came to Elon he had known "Uncle" J. W. Weltons" for a number of years, and always considered him one of the finest characters we ever met. During his last illness I went to see him just a few days before his death. He said he so was glad I came, and he took my hand in his and held it during my stay. He could not talk above a whisper, and I had to put my face close to his in order to catch his words. As I sat by his bed and tried to catch his every word, it almost made me feel that I was talking to him on the other side. I just thought how beautiful it was to live such a beautiful life as he had spent in leading others to live a Christian life.

In our orphanage work we always try to impress upon our girls and boys the value of a beautiful life—a life of honesty and truth; a life of Christian character; a life lived above just criticism; a life which is filled with good deeds and leaves behind us footprints that we would not be ashamed for others to follow in.

HOW CAN WE HELP?

was serving as minister. It was from Mike who worked in the print shop. He wanted to see me. Frequently our paths had crossed on the prison grounds, but I was unable to make any sort of impression on the youth. The request surprised me as well as his fellow prisoners.

I sent for him and when he came I invited him to sit down.

"No, thank you," he answered.
"What can I do for you," I asked. He was a slender handsome youth of twenty-two. Quiet, industrious and always minding his own business.

"Mr. Robison, don't get me wrong," he said in answer to my inquiry. "I don't go in for this religious stuff, but I thought you would help me."

The Lord endowed me with an easy smile and a sense of humor. I smiled and said, "That's all right. How can I help you?"

He took a small piece of paper from his pocket and laid it before me on the desk and said, "You see that?"

It was a pencil drawing of a man's head made from a newspaper print.

"This is some of my work," he explained. "I have a gift for drawing. The doctor tells me that I have trouble and that when I get out I will have to make my living by using my head rather than my hands. I wondered if you would get me a magnifying glass like this"—indicating a reading glass with a handle.

I assured him that I would be glad to get one.

"Of course, I shall pay for it and for your trouble," he added. And then as he turned to go, he repeated: "Now don't get me wrong. I don't go in for this religious stuff." I laughed this time and stood up as he went out.

I had a reading glass in my bureau drawer at home that had belonged to my mother. It had not been used for six years since her death, except one day when Jim, who was ten, had spent a day in bed with a cold and had used the glass to burn a hole in the sheet.

That night as I was preparing for bed, I recalled my promise to Mike. I slipped the reading glass into my coat pocket.

The next day was not my regular day for visiting this institution, but I dropped by and sent for Mike. When he came in he was embarrassed, realizing that I had made a special trip to bring the reading glass. I gave it to him. He said, "Thank you, but I really didn't want you to go to any trouble over me."

I assured him it was no trouble. When he asked me how much the glass cost, I told him it would cost him nothing, but he protested. Then I said, "Mike, this glass did not cost me anything, yet I came by it honestly. It will not cost you anything if you will accept it."

He expressed his gratitude, but warned me a third time that he "did not go in for that religious stuff." Again I laughed and this time he smiled. As he went out of the door, he looked over his shoulder and said, "Mr. Robison, I always thought you were a stuffed shirt, but you're okay by me."

From the records I learned that Mike had come from Maine; that his people were nominally Catholic; that his father had died when Mike was about fourteen; this his mother had remarried; and although Mike had stuck it out through high school, he was never very happy over his mother's re-marriage. As soon as school was out, he went to sea and landed at Norfolk where he got into difficulty with some other sailors and had come to prison.

I saw Mike a few times in the print shop and looked over his drawings.

About ten days before he was to go out I sent for him, as I did all the men, to ask about his plans. This was not to give advice, but to let the men who wanted to "just talk it over." When Mike came in, I said, "Well, Mike, I see you will soon be going out. What are your plans?"

This time Mike sat down and relaxed more than ever before. He seemed glad to "talk it over."

"I am going to Washington," he told me. I asked him why he chose that city.

"Well, in the first place, it's out of Virginia," he explained. Many men said this because there is an additional year for second offenses in Virginia.

"In the second place," he said, "Washington is a big place. I want a job with a commercial artist where I can learn and earn. There ought to be some jobs like that in Washington."

I agreed with his reasoning and added, "Mike, I have a friend in Washington who has helped a great many people. She is Mrs. Morris. Would you like her address?" He said he would. Then I explained that when one goes into a new place it was important to establish an address that is acceptable and that it is also important to meet people who will be helpful.

I gave him the address on the back of my card, then added, "Mike, several times you have told me that you don't go in for 'that religious stuff.' Do you mind telling me what you meant?"

"Well, Mr. Robison," he began, "I find that the churches are not interested in people. They are simply interested in building up their membership and getting money. The Catholics want to get the Protestants. The Protestants want to get the Catholics. The Methodists want to get the Presbyterians and the Baptists want to get the Methodist. They aren't really interested in helping people."

"Mike, I am a Protestant minister," I told him, "and I wouldn't walk across the street to change a man from one church to another, but I would be willing to give my right arm, if need be, to help you understand what God can mean in the life of a man." We talked a few minutes about God and then with a brief prayer we shook hands and Mike went out.

That night I wrote Mrs. Morris and told her that a week from Friday Mike would come to see her.

Three weeks later I received two letters. Mrs. Morris wrote me, thanking me for sending Mike in to see her. The other letter came to my office from Mike, thanking me for sending him to Washington. Of course, I didn't send him to Washington. That was his own idea.

In the next letter Mrs. Morris related that on Mike's third visit "just to talk," she asked him if he had a New Testament. He confessed that he did not have one. She said, "If I give you one, a good one, with readable type, will you use it." He said he would. The next time he visited Mrs. Morris, Mike made a confession: "I have read my New Testament every day and for the first time in my life I have prayed."

He wrote me brief letters every two weeks, telling me of going to church with Mrs. Morris and of meeting some fine Christian businessmen. He walked about Washington for a couple of weeks, going to a few shows, stopping at the library to read some good books and hearing some good music. He enjoyed his new freedom to the fullest. After he had been there two weeks he landed the first job for which he applied. It was with a young commercial artist who wanted a man willing to work and learn.

He stayed for a year and then his employer closed shop to enter the Army. Mike had no job. He applied for a place with one of the Federal Agencies and gave me as a reference. The FBI sent a man to inquire about Mike's prison record. My reply was: "I would give Mike any job that I might have if it was in the realm of his knowledge and experience." The FBI recommended him and he has steadily moved up in the Federal service since his first employment.

One day soon after Mike went to Washington I had a hunch that I should go to see Mike. I telephoned—went up and met him at a well-known restaurant one Saturday afternoon. When we sat at the table, Mike unfolded his long legs, relaxed, then confided, "Mr. Robison, our chance meeting in Richmond was the turning point of my life."

I smiled, then said, "That was not a chance meeting, Mike. God was there and his church was there because you are important."

Long ago Jesus said to his disciples: "Ye are the salt of the earth." Salt as we commonly use it has a double purpose. In the first place, it saves food, keeps it from spoiling. And in the second place, it gives flavor and tang, making food tasty and desirable.

Just so should we be and do. It is our business, as brothers to our fellowmen to save life, keep it from spoiling, and give it flavor, zest and meaning.

A LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

political field for the first time by the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

The founders recognized their debt to Christianity as the source of this new political philosophy, and they founded a government which must, so long as the Constitution endures, recognize the moral (Christian) basis of the American government.

Under the Constitution, a mere majority, as such, may not and cannot work its will upon the people, their lives and liberties. Even were the majority will expressed in an overwhelming Congressional vote, that vote would be invalid if it meant the enactment of a law contrary to the moral law as laid down by the Constitution, and the Supreme Court must so decree.

Thus Americans have the protection of the moral law (Christianity) and are not subject to the whims of the majority which might well be expressed in a manner which amounts to mob rule. More and more Americans are coming to realize the values of American citizenship under the American form of government; more and more they are rebuking those short-sighted, misinformed Americans who are taking the Communist bait and extolling American democracy, something which never existed, and, please God, never will exist.

Very sincerely yours,

VERNE P. KAUB.

When a Mortgage is Paid

By JOHN R. SCOTFORD

Church life suffers from a lack of visible mile-stones. To the common man it seems as though the same routine were followed Sunday after Sunday and year after year with very little "really happening." The sameness of church life sometimes creates an atmosphere of futility. The payment of the mortgage on a church is a very definite achievement and should be hailed as such. Here is a splendid opportunity to impress the community with the vigor of your congregation. (It is often wise to let the men and women who will shout the loudest take the leading parts in the occasion, even though there are less vocal souls who have done more. The idea is to make a noise which many people will hear.)

In our personal lives we are likely to celebrate the payment of a debt by sharing a meal or a festive occasion with our friends. For a church a normal form of observance is a dinner for all who have had a share in scuttling the mortgage. That document might well be on exhibition, although for legal reasons it is unwise to consign it to the flames. Burn a "dummy" and keep the original in your safe deposit box.

A church in Wyoming recently invited all the neighboring Congregational churches to share in its celebration. Not only was it an eminently successful occasion, but one of the churches invited immediately got busy and paid off its mortgage, too.

Of all the organizations which exist on the free-will gifts of their friends, the church is the most niggardly with "thank you's." A dollar given to a political organization tinkles much more loudly than one dropped on the collection plate. When a mortgage is paid, it is quite proper that a church should express its thanks to all who have contributed. In many instances there might well be a list of donors.

The more the payment of a debt is dramatized, the more newspaper publicity it can receive. We can hardly expect the Daily Trumpet to print much of an item on the mere fact that the First Church is no longer in debt, but it will gladly send its photographer around to a banquet at which the oldest and the youngest givers sit at the right and left of the toastmaster, or at which the Board of Trustees serves a chicken dinner to the Ladies' Aid. With the exercise of a little imagination, the entire community can be made conscious of the lifting of the mortgage.

For some reason, "the man on the street" assumes that all churches have debts, and that they are staggering under them. Here is a chance to disabuse him of this fallacious notion.—Issued by Church Building Department, Board of Home Missions.

Walking with God: I. In Worship

[The first in a series of messages given by DR. ALFRED GRANT WALTON, chaplain of the General Council in Oberlin and minister of the Flatbush-Tompkins Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., at the General Council.]

It is out of wondering awe that religion and worship are born. Reverence is the mood of the soul rising in the presence of the unexplainable. Modern man has accepted the insights of the Jewish tradition and has accepted one God as the object of his adoration. We sense a mysterious power touching us on every hand. We are aware of a Law that holds the stars in their courses and guided the planets on their ethereal way. We are conscious of an energizing goodness in the world in human personality, in all loyalty and love, in all faith and hope and before that Power we kneel in adoration and praise.

There are many ways in which worship may express itself but its forms are secondary. They should never be made paramount nor confused with the thing itself. Worship is more than a posture of the body; it is a passion and a purpose of the heart.

It is inevitable that certain places should become especially sacred and should bring a special awareness of the presence of God. It is gratifying that increased attention is being given today to the improvement of church architecture. We have suffered too long from fantastic and grotesque styles of church construction. We still have many architectural monstrosities but the present trend is toward dignity and restraint. It is altogether unnecessary that Protestantism should follow the barren austerity of our forefathers and we should use more of symbolism and beauty of architectural form. No church has a monopoly on anything that the soul finds helpful in the search for fellowship with the Eternal.

One of the unfortunate aspects of modern church life, where church buildings are modest, is the disposition to use the sanctuary for other than services of worship. No church having facilities that might otherwise be available should allow an intrusion of extraneous functions to encroach upon the sanctity of the house of God.

Every service of worship should be conducted with dignity and in the beauty of holiness. Some ministers talk to God as though He were the local butcher and with the familiarity of conversation in a barber shop. The bowed head, the reverential word and the mood of humility are far more becoming to the children of the Most High.

Worship offers us relief from the tension of life, its materialistic demands, its corroding cares. It brings to the soul an inner glow, a consciousness of well being, a resurgent strength. In oneness with God we no longer see our world with the limited vision of the materialist or the doubts of the skeptic. Worship is the soul aspiring. It is a luminous pathway to the throne of God. We awake to a sense of our own divinity and our part in the order of eternity.

Dr. W. E. Wisseman succeeds Rev. Joe A. French as chairman of the Convention's Board of Publications. The Board met recently at Elon.

Rev. Guy H. Veazey announces revival services at Belew Creek, June 27-July 2, with Rev. W. J. Andes as guest preacher.

"The Pilgrims," newly organized association of the Congregational ministers of Colorado, are making a study of the Interseminary Series.

Our Pfafftown Church sent Christmas cards and other needed articles to the Jacksons in Shaowu recently.

A winter picnic (held indoors) has come to be one of the big events among our churches in South Bend, Indiana.

"From the Hillside" is the title of a new Pilgrim Press publication by Gaius Glenn Atkins. The book is a study of the Sermon on the Mount.

The book review by Ralph R. Shrader which appears in this issue was prepared for and is appearing in the Envelope Series, issued by the American Board.

E. Stanley Jones has completed the manuscript for his new book which will be published simultaneously this summer in Britain and America: "Mahatma Gandhi—An Interpretation"

Rev. W. L. Bristow of Norfolk, Va., will supply the Franklin pulpit this Sunday in the absence of Rev. Robert Kimball who is attending the General Council. Rev. Emmet Frazer is supplying for Rev. Robert Lee House in Richmond.

Mission Period closes with June. Churches and Sunday Schools are requested to send remittances of Penny-a-Meal contributions to the Mission Board, Elon College, N. C., as soon as possible after the last Sunday of June.

Rev. W. J. Andes, Allen L. Hurdle, and Superintendent Wm. T. Scott visited our Carroll County, Virginia work during the past week. Mr. Hurdle is to serve Elk Spur and Rocky Ford churches during the Summer.

Don't forget to send a gift to the Mission Board for Shaowu. We are still short of our $10,000 to be raised for the support of our missionaries

THE FAMILY PEW

I am your Family Pew;
I came across the ocean with your forefathers.
I have followed the march of peoples wherever they have gone.
I was hewed out of trees of the forest.
I was warmed by the presence of those who would worship the living God.
I am more than a board — I am an institution.
I have extended my comfort to saint and sinner who sought the presence of God.
I have had a place in rude hut or log church; I have been made beautiful in the majesty of the sanctuary.
I have seen the bloodstains of those who fought for liberty.
I have made my contribution to the welfare of those who stood for truth and righteousness.
I have been taken into the depths of the cave and the bomb cellar.
I cannot be destroyed as long as men worship — I am eternal.
I am a connecting link between the home and the world around! I am the first line of defense.
I bring comfort to the lonely.
Often I have been deserted by men who sought softer seats; men turn from me at their own peril; if they forget me they may lose their own souls.
I bear my mute testimony when the pastor exhorts.
I am your Family Pew — I can be useful only as I am occupied.

—David Hardy Dean.

there. Our people will raise the full amount, we believe. Please send your gift now.

Wedding Bells is Shaowu! Miss Frances Whitaker and Dr. Edward Riggs of our Christian Hospital in Shaowu were married recently. Miss Whitaker's father, a missionary to China from our denomination also, performed the ceremony in Tientsin. Congratulations and best wishes to our missionaries, Dr. and Mrs. Riggs.

The Board of Christian Education helps to make possible the excellent program for Vacation Bible Schools in the Southern Convention through literature and young men and women who are serving as Student Summer Service Workers. The Board provides funds with which to promote the young peoples' work and the general work of the Convention. It is hoped that many of our Sunday Schools received their special offering for the Board of Christian Education on the Second Sunday of June.

The Sunday School Convention of the Valley of Virginia Conference was held at Bethlehem Church, June 10th. Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, Chairman of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention, was the principal speaker. Superintendent Scott and Miss Chicoine were also in attendance and participated in the program. The attendance was good and the interest high. Mr. H. E. Liskey of the New Hope Church served during the past year as president of the Convention and was re-elected. The Valley Sunday School Convention is one of our most enthusiastic sessions of the year.

A revolutionary forward step in liturgical worship will be taken by Congregational Christian Churches, assembled in biennial General Council at Oberlin, Ohio when they will receive the first copies of A Book of Worship for Free Churches, published by Oxford University Press. Copies specially bound in red morocco will be presented by William H. Crawford, Jr., associate trade editor of Oxford University Press, to the Rev. Dr. Douglas Horton, Minister of the General Council, and the Rev. Dr. Albert W. Palmer, Moderator, at the General Council communion service on the first day of the biennial meetings.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF CHURCH MUSIC.

The third annual Summer School of Church Music will be held at the Assembly's Training School, 3400 Brook Road, Richmond, Va., July 29-Aug. 12.

The two-weeks school is directed by Dr. James R. Sydnor, Professor of Church Music at the Training School. He has engaged a faculty of national fame to teach courses in choral conducting, children's choir methods, voice, organ, hymnology, and repertory. Included in the faculty are Dr. Federal Lee Whittlesey, of the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant, Erie, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Madeline Ingram, Memorial Methodist Church, Lynchburg, Va.; Mr. Henry Pfohl, Plymouth Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, New York.

ADVERTISING CHRISTIANITY.

By JAMES W. GORDON.

"Visit Lake Lagoon, where beauty is only surpassed by pleasure. Silver fish in the clear, blue waters look like stars shining in the day," etc. Today even God's beauty spots of nature must be glamorized and advertised if people are to visit them. Advertising molds and regulates the life of the average American from morning to night, even as the obedient child is controlled by the parents. We eat Crabbies for breakfast because we are told in blazing headlines and moving dialogues that all athletes breakfast upon them. We wear our clothes according to the pictures of the best dressed. We brush our teeth with Ephest Tooth Cream, because it is best by test (their test). So it goes on through the day, and even into the night when we sleep on a Bursted Bubble Mattress because more doctors sleep on them than on any other mattress.

Advertising is the miracle builder and inseparable companion of success today, whether it be with chewing gum or one's personal services. In former times merchants asked the question: "Does advertising pay?" Today look at the newspapers, magazines, and billboards, or listen to the radio, and you will see how that question has been answered. Materialistic-minded companies would not spend millions of dollars yearly on advertising if they did not reap rich dividends from such expenditures.

Very often advertising is misused, but this is nothing new. In the dewy dawn of creation Satan misused advertising. He approached Eve not as the devil with horns and pointed tail, but in the most attractive and acceptable manner. He sold her on the forbidden fruit by making it appeal to her, her physical appetite, and her desire for unlawful knowledge. Today the devil still misuses advertising by tempting us through unsuspected ways and in the most charming manner. He still appeals to the lust of our eyes, the lust of our flesh, and the lust for knowledge.

All advertising, however, is not the device of the devil. Much of it is truthful and beneficial. It would be hard for us to find our way in this complex civilization without the signposts of advertising. It is difficult to think of anything that has not been misused by Satan in the pursuance of his diabolic mission. Even the beautiful and sacred name of our Saviour has been flagrantly misused by the agents of evil.

tising has as its goal the selfish profit of the deceivers. Honorable advertising is educational and beneficial to the public as well as profitable to the advertiser. The church can certainly never use the former type of advertising. It must never be glamorized and misrepresented. It must not lower itself by appealing to the fleshly man, but the church can, and must attractively, clearly, and convincingly present its message to the world in every legitimate way if it is to attain its maximum success. Advertising does pay—and the church with the truest, sweetest, and most noble message possible can certainly not afford to hide its light under the cloak of selfish self-contentment and reaction. Jesus Christ said: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." He did not say how to go—whether by foot, on donkey, by automobile, over the wireless air waves, or through the newspaper. Advertising is going, and advertising is teaching. It reaches alike the ears and eyes of the high and low, the poor and the rich, and the white and black.

The church has been too long hidden on the back streets and filled with the attitude of: "If they want the gospel, let them come to us." A sort of "trap-set-in-the-dark" situation! It is a heartening sight to see the trend of recent years for the church to build its meeting places on the main thoroughfares and thus come out of hiding. But the church must also catch the evangelistic spirit of Christ as when he gave the parable of the master who sent his servants out to compel those in the highways and byways to come to the marriage feast. That does not sound like the traditional aloofness of so many churches and preachers today. The burden of

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE COUNCIL CONVENES AT OBERLIN.

Oberlin College is eloquent in its rich, historic associations. Delegates who stop, look and listen for the still small voice of the past will catch innumerable accents and overtones of enduring worth.

Many will reflect on the fact that this school was named for John Frederick Oberlin, the Alsatian pastor and social workers who died in 1828. The name, the vision and achievements of Oberlin are worthy of preservation. Unnumbered communities in America need the ameliorating influence of Oberlin's program. More of our ministers should be members of the John Frederick Oberlin Fellowship. The very setting of this Council should accentuate the type of community ministry initiated by Pastor Oberlin.

The National Council of the Congregational Churches was organized at Oberlin in 1871. The General Council of Congregational Christian Churches, the merged body which succeeded the National Council, is now meeting at Oberlin for the second time. Who can predict what thrilling adventures and achievements in church union may transpire before the next Oberlin Council (or Synod!)?

The Memorial Arch on the Oberlin Campus is a natural setting for formal outdoor meetings as well as a favorite rendezvous for informal gatherings of kindred spirits. This is holy ground for all who are acquainted with the program and personnel of The American Board. Surrounded by such a cloud of witnesses, reminded that "the blood of martyrs is the seed of the church," delegates should be fired with a new and holy enthusiasm for the world-wide mission of the church.

Education and philanthropy have kissed each other at Oberlin. An Oberlin professor suggested to his class that some day a new metal called aluminum would be economically produced so that it could be used for a thousand practical purposes. That word fell as a seed into the fertile mind of young Charles Hall, son a missionary to the West Indies. He went on from the discovery of aluminum to the process of producing it in commercial quantities. When he died, he left over $16,000,000 of his aluminum fortune to Oberlin. As William H. Danforth said, "Oberlin gave an idea and a dare to Charles Hall, and he gave back to Oberlin a rich dividend." In such a national conclave as our General Council, transforming ideas and resources should be released for Kingdom service.

Charles G. Finney was one of the great Congregational, Protestant saints. His influence should be accentuated and multiplied during the Council sessions held in Finney Memorial Chapel. As pastor of Broadway Tabernacle in New York, president of Oberlin College, pastor of the First Church, Oberlin, author and evangelist extraordinary, Finney exercised a formative influence in American life. Extremely independent, he worked out his theology largely on the basis of his own study of the Scriptures. With slight modifications, Finney's theology would fit comfortably into the current pattern of neo-orthodoxy. The history pattern of American theology might be described roughly as "off again, on again, Finneygen."

Evangelism will regain its lost prestige and power when it is championed by reputable college presidents and no longer relegated to pseudo-apostles of higher learning. Finney continued his evangelistic work while president and pastor in Oberlin. He visited Great Britain in 1849-50 and again in 1859-60, where his preaching had great effect. Through the "Oberlin Evangelist," to which he contributed regularly, he exerted a wide-spread influence. His preaching was with power. His revivals produced permanent beneficial results. Lives were changed and whole towns were said to have been transformed. Another Finney, liberal educator, rugged theologian and flaming evangelist, is long overdue in our fellowship.

MINISTERIAL MARATHON.

We salute Dr. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk, Va., who celebrates his fiftieth anniversary as pastor of Oakland Church with appropriate services this Sunday. Dr. Johnson will preach and conduct the communion service in the morning. Following dinner which will be served on the church grounds, Dr. Frank Lewis will rise to the occasion and give the main address of the afternoon. A host of friends near and far rejoice with pastor and people on this occasion. Oakland has grown and prospered during this period of uninterrupted pastoral service.

Here is an example which should be carefully marked by ministers and congregations. A long ministry enables a pastor to lengthen his ropes and strengthen his stakes. The minister who watches every mail for a call from another church, who gazes longingly at the grass on the other side of his parochial fence, who keeps his ear to the keyhole of ecclesiastical gossip listening for some distant call will never stand as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.

On the other hand, that church which casts adoring eyes on every minister except its own, which feels that all its problems would be solved automatically with the coming of a new minister, which works harder trying to get rid of the minister than it does trying to hold up his hands, will never merit the tender ministries of a true shepherd nor arrive at the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

Thought engenders thought. Place one idea on paper, another will follow it, and still another until you have written a page; you cannot fathom your mind. There is a well of thought there which has no bottom; the more you draw from it, the more clear and fruitful it will be.—G. A. Sala.

The Prospect of World Cooperation

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN

Minister First Congregational Church, Mason City, Iowa.

The rapid shrinking of the world in the point of distance, as measured by time, increases the demand for cooperation between nations and between groups within nations if the world is to survive.

Modern inventions and modern economic conditions are bringing the East and the West closer together every day physically. And under such conditions, unless there is cooperation there is bound to be clash—unless the nations come closer together spiritually as they come closer together physically, collision and wreckage are inevitable.

Modern means of transportation and communication have made the world into a neighborhood. That being true, unless the social and religious idealism of the nations speedily function to make the world neighborhood into a world brotherhood, the barriers of distance having been obliterated—suspicions, prejudices, antipathies and hatreds will be intensified by reason of the present geographical proximity.

One of the greatest promises of world cooperation is the reviving interest within all denominations and among leaders in business and industry in World Christian Missionary effort. There can be no effective cooperation between the nations in the economic and political realms without such being motivated and directed by a Christian impulse. If the representatives of the United Nations were all Christ-minded, their efforts, instead of being characterized by cavil and contention, would be characterized by good-will and cooperation. Cavil and contention get the world nowhere except nearer to greater calamity than it has yet experienced. But Christian good-will and Christian cooperation would bring the world into its desired haven of peace and progress.

It is easy for us here in America to criticize Comamunistic Russia for its unpardonable and atrocious refusal to go along with the other members of the United Nations in building for World Peace; but let us not forget that it was so-called Christian America, following the First World War, which played the same role that Russia is now playing, when the nations of the world were then seeking to build for World Peace. To our eternal shame, it was our own nation which at that time refused to go along with the other nations in effecting and promoting the League of Nations. If we had done differently, if our nation had then entered whole heartedly into the League of Nations, instead of taking the attitude for which we now so severely condemn Russia for taking, World War II might have been averted!

The world today is threatened with moral and spiritual breakdown. The leaders of the nations and the leaders in world affairs need to realize that no political manipulation, no economic panacea can save the situation. But any economic system and any political regime in the hands of Christ-minded men and women would have hope for a better tomorrow.

We cannot help musing at times on what the World must think regarding the appeals from a divided Church for a United World. It cannot help seeming incongruous for an institution which needs to set its own house in order on the score of getting together, for such an institution to be emphasizing the importance of the nations getting together. But the rising tide of ecumenicity within all branches of the Church, the growing interest in a United Protestantism, the deepening concern about Christian Union on the part of laity and clergy gives promise of a more effective cooperation between the churches, which is absolutely essential to the realization of world cooperation. A divided church cannot hope to have much influence in effecting a United World. Indeed it seems well-nigh sacrilegious for a divided Church to ask for a United World. If the churches under the one banner of Christ cannot unite, what right do they have to expect that the nations under their different flags shall be able to unite? It is not strange that the response to the solicitous interest of the Church in its efforts to effect a United World, should be,—"Physician heal thyself."

No doubt there are many questions in the minds of other nations along this same line as regards the incongruity and inconsistency of our nation assuming the responsibility for setting other nations in order when its own house remains in such disorder in every realm of its citizens' interests. Certainly the gods must laugh in derision as they look upon our nation's efforts to direct the affairs of other nations while the imbecility of its own government permits and encourages needless strikes and lock-outs to be multiplied to the suffering and peril of the social and economic welfare of all its citizens and of the nation itself and of the world at large; while with scandalous extravagance and wastefulness our government is being subsidized by partisan politics at the expense of the people's welfare. Again, "Physician heal thyself" must be the retort of an onlooking world.

There must be intelligent, constructive cooperation between the various groups within our own nation, before we as a nation can hope to be able effectively to promote world cooperation. Our pleas for racial justice must sound but as hollow mockery to other nations knowing of the racial prejudice existing within our borders where even the rights of citizenship are denied to millions of our native born, and where society viciously slams the doors of opportunity on the faces of millions of people who have lived their entire lives in America, simply because the color of their skin is one of the many shades of black. Indeed it is unpardonable hypocrisy for us as a nation to herald abroad our idealism for racial justice for the world while we as a people complacently permit scandalous racial injustice to millions within our own borders.

The times and conditions in which we live call for a great deal more than merely talking about the need of world cooperation; they call for the actual practicing of cooperation between all the groups within our own nation, that we as a people, without apology and without the handicap of insincerity, may be qualified worthily and effectively to cooperate with other peoples "under God" in setting the world itself in order.

There are thousands of self-styled leaders running here and there throughout our own nation and throughout the world telling how to run the world when they can't even run their own lives, their own business, or their own homes along the course of moral honor and social decency. Better lives—more consistent lives—are absolutely essential on the part of all who really want a Better World, and especially on the part of those who presume to direct in the effecting of a Better World. All our talk about cooperation is but mere prattle unless we are morally qualified and willing actually to cooperate in every realm of life.

There are those who believe that the basic problem of the world's discorded condition is the economic problem. Others believe that the basic problem is political.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

For a half century—a full half century—Dr. I. W. Johnson has served in the pastorate he is now serving. On the third Sunday in June, 1898, Dr. Johnson preached his first sermon as pastor of Oakland Christian Church, and on the third Sunday in June, 1948, that church will hold a fiftieth anniversary celebration in commemoration and commendation of those faithful fifty years. So far as I know, it is a record in the Southern Convention. The late Dr. W. W. Staley, with whom Dr. Johnson held a close life-long friendship, served the Suffolk Christian Church fifty years as pastor and pastor emeritus, but Dr. Johnson has served all these years as active pastor. For most of that time he has had as his pastorate the same three churches—Oakland, Liberty Spring and Berea (Nansemond).

Those of us who have had the privilege of observing closely these three excellent churches know that they form one of the strongest pastorates in our entire Convention. These three churches have paid their conference apportionments in full every year Dr. Johnson has served them as pastor. They have grown from small churches to churches of great influence, contributing not only much money to the current program of the church but contributing leadership in all phases of our church life. They have modern church buildings with educational facilities. At the present time each of them is awake with the spirit of expansion. Their combined Sunday school attendance is close to seven hundred. They enroll in their church memberships nine hundred, forty-seven. They contributed last year $22,811. Of this amount $3,671 went to missions and benevolences.

Wherever our church folk in Eastern Virginia gather full representations from these three churches are there, whether it be the annual Conference, the Woman's Conference or Rallies, Young People's Missionary Conference or Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship. You can count on the pastor of these churches being present and also Mrs. Johnson, and they furnish a goodly part of the leadership from among their members in all such meetings. These strong churches, and this inspiring achievement have been based on good foundations of sound scholarship as a minister and preacher, warm friendships as pastors and adviser, and exemplary living both in church and business life. Dr. and Mrs. Johnson know the art of being and making friends. The three churches differ in many ways, just as personalities differ, but Dr. and Mrs. Johnson have been for half a century the common denominator of the three of them. The people of this pastorate are great people, measure by whatever yardstick you will, and they have done their part in making this record. May

FIFTY YEARS OF SERVING.

By Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D.

[Written at the request of the members of the Forward Movement Bible Class as a tribute to Dr. Johnson from the class.]

Yours were fifty tall fine years of serving,
From early youth to days more mature;
Fifty shining years of constant building
Life on foundations which aye endure.

Your earnest prayers and your Christian counsel

Given for our parents ere we were born,
Your ceaseless work as friend and our pastor,
These lives of ours henceforth shall adorn.

Today but tokens our true appreciation
Of what the fifty years have meant to us all;
Our hearts to God we lift in great thanksgiving
That fifty years ago you heard our call.

May the coming years for you and your beloved
Bring the kind of joy the world cannot give;
And may you see your years of work rewarded
By the kind of lives we who love you live!

the unfolding years bring increasing joy and happiness to Dr. and Mrs.
Johnson and their churches is the prayer and wish of this neighbor and friend.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

FIFTY YEARS AT OAKLAND.

I went to Oakland Christian Church for the first time on Sunday, June 18th, 1898 having graduated eleven days before from Elon College, North Carolina. I had never preached a sermon though I had been licensed to preach in May, 1898. This was my first activity as a licentiate. Quarterly conference was held in the church at 11:00 A. M. with about a dozen member present. Rev. W. J. Laine, prior to his death in May, 1898 had made arrangements with me to assist him in pastoral work during the summer. His death broke that contract but due to his recommendation the church at Oakland graciously extended me a call to serve as pastor for the remainder of that year. By the grace of God and the kindness of the people of this church I am still here at the end of fifty happy years.

In 1898 Oakland Church had a membership of 126, paid the pastor $218.75; paid $20.00 for home missions; paid $6.00 for foreign missions and for all other purposes paid $23.16. The total raised for the year was $267.91. The Sunday School membership was only 60. In 1947 the membership of the church was 410 and the total raised for all purposes was $4,150.00. On the third Sunday in May, 1948 the Sunday School attendance reached an all time high of 354.

The enlargement of the church building twenty-three years ago, with its new auditorium and six class rooms for the Sunday School, was a great forward step for the church. Along with this came new visions of church opportunity and responsibilities. The church is now planning additional facilities which will increase its usefulness in the community.

Space will not permit a historical review of the work done during my fifty years at Oakland, however, I do wish to express my deep gratitude for the honor and privilege extended me during these happy and fruitful years. The young and the old have been very gracious and kind. Lasting ties of friendship and spiritual fellowship have been formed. We have wept together in our sorrows and shared our mutual joys. The people at Oakland have been charitable towards me in my weaknesses, failures and shortcomings. I have given to them the best years of my life. Precious memories will follow me into the evening shadows. Together, we have shared our burdens, our tasks and our deeper devotions. If I could start my life all over again I would deem it a great and happy privilege to be pastor at Oakland Christian Church. May God bless and keep you all.

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

HONORARY DEGREES CONFERRED BY ELON COLLEGE.

The following citations were read upon the occasion of the conferring of honorary degrees at the fifty-eighth annual commencement of Elon College, May 24, 1948:

JOHN DECATUR MESSICK.

John Decatur Messick, a North Carolinian by birth, educated in the public schools of North Carolina, is an alumnus of Elon College, of the University of North Carolina, and of New York University, from which he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 1934.

Dr. Messick has been a successful teacher in our public schools and colleges. His most significant work has been in the field of administration. He served as dean of Elon College for nine years, as dean of New Jersey State Teachers College for three years, and in 1917, he was elected president of East Carolina Teachers College, Greenville, North Carolina, where he is now serving with distinction.

Dr. Messick is a churchman, a teacher, a lecturer, an author, and a willing servant of mankind.

Mr. President, in recognition of Dr. Messick's achievements, it is my privilege and pleasure to present him for the honorary degree of Doctor of Literature.

WILLIAM MUNFORD TUCK.

William Munford Tuck was born in Halifax County, Virginia. He is an alumnus of Washington and Lee University and of the University of Virginia. He received his law degree from the University of Virginia and was admitted to the bar by his native state. He entered the practice of law in South Boston, Virginia, where he has always retained his office. He is a member of local and national fraternities and of various brotherhoods. He served with the United States Marines in World War I. He has represented his district as a member of the House of Delegates. As governor of his state, the State of Virginia, he holds the highest office and honor which his fellow citizens can bestow. He is efficient, bold and courageous as a governor, and is honored and respected by all. His influence as statesman and administrator has gone beyond the borders of his state and is felt throughout the nation.

Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to present Governor William Munford Tuck for the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

ALBERT RAY VAN CLEAVE.

Albert Ray Van Cleave was born in Indiana and educated in the public schools of his native state. He earned his undergraduate degree in Indiana University and his graduate degree in the University of Chicago.

Mr. Van Cleave has devoted his life to teaching, having taught in the public school system of Indiana, in Union Christian College of Indiana, in Elon College of North Carolina, in Southern Union College of Alabama, and in Piedmont College of Georgia. He served as dean of Southern Union and Piedmont Colleges. He has been president of Piedmont College, Demorest, Georgia, since 1945.

Mr. Van Cleave is an efficient administrator, a successful teacher and a consecrated Christian leader.

Mr. President, I have the honor of presenting Albert Ray Van Cleave of Demorest, Georgia, for the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

RELIGIOUS RADIO STATION IN BERLIN PROPOSED.

A proposal has been made by religious groups in Berlin to set up a radio station there that would serve as a "mouthpiece" for Protestant, Catholic and Jewish bodies in Germany. The station would be the first of its kind in any country.

Application for permission to organize the broadcasting unit has been filed by the Association of Churches and Religious Denominations of Greater Berlin with Allied occupation authorities there.

The application stated that the proposed station would be used by 31 religious bodies belonging to the association, and would be given the backing of Evangelical and Roman Catholic authorities.

Purpose of the new station, the association declared, would be "to strengthen religious support and ethical consciousness among the German people." The group claimed that 90 per cent of the population have a religious affiliation, and said interest in religion has strongly increased since the war.

Besides representatives of the Evangelical and Roman Catholic Churches, the association comprises members of the Jewish faith, the German Free Churches, and smaller Christian sects.

Announcement has also been made that a committee which will seek to coordinate religious radio programs throughout Germany was named in Stuttgart during a conference on church and radio conducted by the Evangelical Church in Germany.

Chairman of the new committee is Dr. Hans Meiser, Bishop of Bavaria. Members include Pastor Martin Niemöller; Dr. Hans Asmussen, executive director of the Church; and Dr. Eugen Gerstenmaier, director of Hilfswerk, relief agency of the denomination. The committee will also consider the establishment of a religious broadcasting station.

LEST WE FORGET!!

We are still in the Mission Period of our Church Year. Thus far, however, our contributions to Missions, have fallen far below our goals for the period. But it is not too late to do something about the matter. In fact we are just at the point where we can do something big in behalf of the cause. The Cent-a-Meal boxes and jars ought to be coming in the last Sunday in June, and if our folks have been making regular contributions to these boxes, we ought to have a substantial sum in hand by July 1, or soon thereafter. This is a reminder to make the fullest use of your Cent-a-Meal Boxes during the remainder of this month. And if you have not been using your box, or if you do not have one, make a special offering for this cause the last Sunday in June. Sunday school and church treasurers are asked please to remit promptly to the Convention Office at Elon College. All together, let's go over the top for the cause of Christ at home and abroad.

MISSIONARY RECRUITS ANNOUNCED.

By DOROTHY P. CUSHING.

Within the last six months the American Board has appointed for Christian work abroad 18 new young missionaries. In this group are teachers of English, music, mathematics, etc.; a doctor; a nurse; a laboratory technician; a rural worker; and two office secretaries. They will go to Japan, China, India, Turkey, Africa, and Syria. They come from 11 different states as well as from England and Africa, and were born in 11 different states with four born abroad, one in China, one in India, one in the Belgian Congo, Africa, and one in England.

The group includes:

Miss V. Marie Bushong, R. N., daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Eugene M. Bushong, Longmeadow, Massachusetts, going to Mt. Silinda, East Africa.

Miss Ruby Mae Peters, daughter of Mrs. Demay L. Peters, of Chula Vista, California, to teach English at American High School for Girls in Aleppo, Syria.

George Helling, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Helling, Rosemount, Minnesota, teacher of mathematics and chemistry in American College at Tarsus, Turkey.

Robert Ramaker, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Ramaker, 971 Main Street, South Glastonbury, Connecticut, teacher of English to American College, Talas Turkey. Mr. Ramaker, former Air Force pilot, has already reached his post.

Edward B. Savage of Prescott, Wisconsin, to teach English and biology in American College, Tarsus, Turkey.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd B. Swift of Wilmington, Delaware, going for educational and rural work to North China. Mrs. Swift is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Hugh Wells Hubbard, missionaries in China. Mr. Swift is the son of Mrs. Catherine C. Swift of 1111 Bancroft Parkway, Wilmington, Delaware.

Miss Gwendolyn M. Wolsted of Cedar Falls, Iowa, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Clarence E. Wolsted, missionaries in India, as teacher of English to American Academy for Girls, Scutari, Turkey.

Miss Elizabeth J. Lee, laboratory technician, daughter of Mrs. Charlotte S. Lee, Parma, Missouri, going to Talas, Turkey.

Miss Barabara Ann Burns, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Burns, Covina, California, teacher of English in Izmir, Turkey, at the American Collegiate Institute.

Kenyon E. Moyer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenyon Moyer, Ely, Minnesota, to teach mathematics and science at American College, Tarsus, Turkey.

Miss Elizabeth I. George, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. George, Wells River, Vermont, going as a teacher to American Collegiate Institute, Izmir, Turkey.

Dr. and Mrs. Victor F. Masters, (MD.) of Kent, England, to Mt. Silinda Hospital, Mt. Silinda, East Africa.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur A. Lambert of Iowa City, Iowa, as a teacher of music, English and Bible at Kobe College, Kyoto, Japan. Mr. Lambert is the son of Dr. and Mrs. A. E. Lambert, Iowa City, Iowa, and Mrs. Lambert is the daughter of William H. Van Duzer of Redwood Falls, Minnesota.

Edgar A. Sather, son of Dr. and Mrs. E. R. Sather of Alexandria, Minnesota, going as an English teacher for three years in the American School for Boys, Talas, Turkey.

Miss Leonora Reed, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar W. B. Reed, Washington, D. C., for special secretarial work in Satara, India.

MICRONESIA AND THE MORNING STAR.

In spite of a rough trip down from Honolulu, the Star lost no time in starting its missionary travels throughout the Islands, after reaching Kusaie on February 22, 1948. Its welcome along the way has been tremendous. Mrs. Heuser writes that the people look on it with the same veneration that they would show to a cathedral, and that without doubt it will become the sacred setting for many baptisms and weddings.

The first missionaries to take a trip aboard her were Miss Anna Dederer and Rev. Charles Heuser who visited the Mortlocks, holding services of communion and baptism from island to island. Later Mrs. Hanlin and the three children went by the Star to Kusaie thus ending their long trek of seven months from America to their permanent location. Rev. Clarence Gillett was a passenger to Ponape.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

SOME FEATURES OF SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

It begins on Monday evening, June 12, and ends Friday noon, July 16.

Mrs. Rowland Cross will teach our foreign mission study for next year, on China.

Mrs. Judson Fiebiger will teach our home mission study for next year, on Our American Frontiers.

Dr. Ferris Reynolds will teach our Bible study from Galatians, "The Gospel—Unlimited."

Dr. Martin Goslin will speak to the ministers on "The Bible in Preaching."

Dr. Ira Black will teach the ministers' course on "Evangelism."

Dr. A. D. Stauffacher, executive secretary of the Missions Council, will speak to both groups.

In the afternoons, from 3 to 4 o'clock, workshops will be held for the workers with Cradle Roll, Children and Young People, and those interested in smaller societies or larger societies.

From 4:15 to 5:00, Hobby Hour will be held. Here we may learn about recreation, group singing, handicrafts, dramatics and so forth.

This is not nearly all of the interesting features, but even this is worth more than the $12.00 it costs to attend. It is not a bit too early to begin planning now to attend the School of Missions and Pastors' School.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

MOUNT ZION.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of Mt. Zion Christian Church, Eclipse, Va., met on Wednesday night, June 9, at the home of Mrs. J. R. Turner. The purpose of the meeting was to organize the missionary society and to learn more of its work.

The meeting was called to order by Mrs. J. L. Gray, who introduced Mrs. William T. Harrell of Liberty Spring, the guest speaker of the evening. Mrs. Harrell opened her program by having the group sing "Jesus Calls Us," followed by prayer by Dr. I. W. Johnson. Mrs. Harrell gave a very interesting address on "Missionary Work and Its Importance in the Church and the Home." After the address Mrs. Harrell was assisted by Mrs. Raleigh Gayle and Mrs. I. W.

Johnson in making plans for the new society.

The special guests for the evening were: Mr. and Mrs. William T. Harrell of Liberty Spring, Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk, and Mrs. Raleigh Gayle of Chuckatuck, Va.

FRONTIES OF 1948.

By LOUISA R. SHOTWELL

Assistant Secretary Home Missions Council.

On the doorstep of the United States lie five step-children: Three island groups, a peninsula, an isthmus. From time to time one or another of them becomes big news; all have rated headlines in recent months.

Time reports outsider families moving into Alaska at the rate of twenty a day. The Saturday Evening Post runs a feature-length profile of William Henry Hastie, first Negro governor of the Virgin Islands. Puerto Rican immigrants take shelter on the fringes of already crowded Harlem. The Republic of Panama declines to renew United States leases of airbases. Washington hums with talk of a forty-ninth state. Alaska? Hawaii? What are the pros and cons?

How does the United States happen to have this quasi-paternal relationship to five countries, the nearest of them a thousand airmiles from the mainland? How is our government discharging its responsibilities to them? To what degree is the church expressing its concern?

"Our geographical fronties," the Missionary Education Movement calls these outposts, as it highlights them for attention in 1948. "On Our Doorstep," the home mission book for the coming year, must have been exciting to write; certainly it makes stimulating reading.

Eighteenth century pirates and planters and slave traders of the Caribbean come to life in its pages; the gold hysteria of the Klondike and the epic building of the Panama Canal. How polyglot Hawaii, "spend-thrift with color and romance," comes to be "Uncle Sam's sociological laboratory;" how the harbor at sight of which Ponce de Leon exuberantly shouted "Que Puerto Rico" has become for the United States "a grade A political, social, and economic headache;" the history behind the headlines is all here, swiftly paced, unmarred by fictional liberties or embroidered prose.

Startling sentences leap from the text. "Half the population of Puerto Rico doesn't know what milk tastes like." "Out of this melting pot is emerging a new Hawaiian American Race." "... toasts are being drunk all over Alaska: 'Here's to Joe Stalin—Alaska's best friend!'"

Nevertheless the church woman of Boston who canceled her subscription to a denominational weekly because she found its pages too disturbing, could take comfort from selected passages of On Our Doorstep. She could read with pride of church-sponsored community development projects in Puerto Rico, and of the Palama settlement for working people in Hawaii; of the Union Church in the Canal Zone, which in 1946 out of a total budget of $39,000 gave $4,000 to home missions and $8,000 to foreign missions; of the coordinated missionary efforts on all these fronts made possible through the years by the Home Missions Council.

But anyone who prefers religion with no social implications had better close the book before he reads too far or he will be forced to some reluctant realizations. He may be led to see it his duty to find out why Federal authorities are hesitant to enforce the laws of Alaska. He may be stirred to initiate a movement in his own community to find housing and jobs for Puerto Ricans. And if he reads the book to the end he cannot escape the acknowledgement that the native of the Virgin Islands is as much his neighbor as the man in Omaha or Beacon Hills.

"MY NAME IS HAN."

Protestant Film Commission scores major advance with second production; "My Names Is Han," shows China Missions work to coincide with 1948-49 study; Simultaneous world premiere in one hundred cities held June 15.

Another major advance in the use of the motion picture for church work was revealed by the Protestant Film Commission with the announcement of the completion of the commission's second film, "My Name Is Han." The picture, which follows the significant success of the first production, "Beyond Our Own," will have a simultaneous world premiere in one hundred cities on June 15.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Boys and Girls:

Once I read somewhere about the "squirrel habit". If you have ever watched squirrels gathering and storing nuts you will know what that means. Yes, you are right, it means to save. Now I have the habit so strongly that I almost wish sometimes that I didn't, but saving these things has helped me. Let me tell you about some of hoarded things and how to use them.

Milk bottle tops. The flat kind make lovely boats. Cut a triangle of paper and slip a toothpick through and all of this into the bottle top. Then place it in water. A duck or swan may be cut from drawing paper with a little flap left at the bottom, glue the flap to the top and watch it float away. It will amuse babies in their baths.

String. It is always handy to tie on pull toys, but it is good on kites too. Do you know how to spool weave? Take a large spool and put two thin, short nails on either side of the opening in the spool. Have ready a long length of string, and a strong wire hair pin. Tie a loop in the thread and slip on nails, pull thread through and catch with hairpin, repeat this over and over until a long rope appears, this may be sewed together for hot pads or pan holders. Sewing it in a circle does best.

Pictures. We change the pictures on our walls from time to time. Nearly all of them are the ones we have cut from magazines, old worn-out books or Sunday School papers. Right now we have Jesus as a boy in the carpenter shop on the wall. Next week we might have a picture of Thomas Jefferson. Nature, animals, religious, health and food pictures—all of these are good to save.

Greeting cards. Clip the pictures if you don't want to keep all. The colored pieces of foil paper make nice trimmings too. Have you ever tried glass painting? Pick a simple frame at the dime store. Take out the glass and lay it on the picture you want to copy. Oil paints do best, but if you work vary carefully you may use water colors. In that case, use little water and mix the colors with a lot of white. Copy the picture and let your glass dry thoroughly. Turn it over to see the finished side. Frame it with a piece of tinted or colored foil in back. You will like your painting.

Well, squirrels, we can go on and on. Keep your own treasures and you will surely find a use for them.

HELPING WITH THE BUSINESS.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Novak does a first-class piece of work in resoling," said the kindergarten teacher in reply to my expressed wish to find a good cobbler. "His little Anton was in my room last year, you know."

The next morning I took my "ox-fords" to Novak's shop—just around the corner from Main Street. The door was locked. I knocked, and a neat-looking aproned woman came out of a house nearby.

She arranged for my work; then she said, "Your shoes will be ready at four o'clock."

As I walked down the street after school, I saw two children playing in front of the cobbler's shop. They evidently recognized me as a customer of the morning—although I had seen neither of them at that time. Immediately the little girl ran to the back yard calling. "Daddy, come!" The shoemaker and his wife were building a fence.

Anton followed his sister, but becoming aware that his father had heard the call, the boy ran back to me. "It's a nice day, isn't it?" he said. There was a friendly smile in his dark eyes. Then, pointing down the hill, he added, "It's fun playing in the ditch when it rains—we have a dam."

My heart warmed to Anton; he was entertaining me until someone came.

In answer to my praise of her son, as she wrapped my shoes, Mrs. Novak said, "Yes, and even Rosie helps." She tied the red ribbon on one of the child's brown braids and gave her a reassuring pat.

Rosie slid from behind her mother's screening apron, smiled at me and then ran out of doors.

"She is shy," commented her mother. "Anton was like that, too, but he soon forgot about himself after he thought out the idea of finding his father for the customers. You see, there is not enough shoe-repairing to be done here, so my husband works in the garden or mends furniture in the basement part of the time. When I help him, the children must watch for the customers."

"But don't they forget and wander away?"

"No, they're proud to help with their father's business. Really, it is the family business; we all work." Mrs. Novak painstakingly counted out my change.

"Isn't this work quite difficult for you, Mrs. Novak?"

"No, we made some business rules—they help. Anton printed them on a card. One of our neighbors helped him with the spelling."

"I'd like to see them, so I can tell other mothers," I said.

"Why yes, you may, but they're tacked up on the wall. Come over to the house."

Mrs. Novak led me into the tidy kitchen. A fuchsia with drooping red blossoms stood on the window sill.

"It was only this year that Anton learned to print." His mother pointed with pride to a large piece of cardboard tacked low on the wall.

These were the rules:

1. Be polite to the people in the shop and everywhere.
2. Try to help our customers, so they will be satisfied.
3. Smile and be friendly.
4. In the morning, Anton and Rosie must have their faces washed and their hair combed before going out.
5. Put each thing back in its place after using.
6. Hang coats and caps on hooks and Place rubbers underneath.
7. Help to keep the shop, house, and the yard clean and neat.

These seemed like practical and good rules; we discussed them, and then I turned to go.

Mrs. Novak followed me to the door. "Thank you for the work. My husband will be glad to fix your shoes again," she said.

I had been well served and would be likely to return. As I walked up the hill, I thought over what I had seen. Anton and little Rosie were getting early practice in being orderly and businesslike and were learning how to meet people. Here, also, was family solidarity, mutual responsibility, fine cooperation, and desirable attitudes.

An old potter, who was shaping the clay into the desired shape by his hands, was asked by a visitor: "Why don't you have machinery to do that?" The old man replied: "We have tried all kinds of machinery and failed; somehow it needs the human touch." God has work that can not be done by machinery.—H. F. Sayles.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

LIST SIX U.C.Y.M. CONFERENCES FOR THE SUMMER.

Six regional interdenominational youth conferences will be held again this summer by the United Christian Youth Movement, it was announced by Miss Helen Spaulding, associate executive secretary.

U.C.Y.M. is the cooperative agency of 40 denominations, 35 state councils, and 16 national youth-serving agencies. It is administered by the International Council of Religious Education.

The conferences are scheduled as follows:

1. Southern conference, Lake Junaluska, N. C., June 27-July 3, Miss Spaulding, director.

2. Southwestern conference, Eastland, Texas, July 5-11, Miss Spaulding director.

3. Pacific conference, Lake Tahoe, Nev., Aug. 1-7, Rev. Wilbur Parry, associate general secretary of Southern California Council of Churches director.

4. Eastern conference, Lake Winnetka, N. H., Aug. 9-21, Rev. William Green Fisher, Methodist minister of Ridgewood, N. J., director.

5. Rocky Mountain conference, Geneva Glen, Colo., Aug. 15-22, Rev. Adrian Edgar, Methodist minister of Cozad, Neb., director.

6. Central conference, Lake Geneva, Wis., Aug. 16-28, Dr. Myron T. Hopper, professor at College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., director.

"The aim of the conferences is to help the delegates develop a philosophy and skills for interdenominational youth work," Miss Spaulding stated.

The conferences are open to youth between 16 and 25 years who have completed the second year of high school and to adult leaders of youth.

Included in the programs will be Bible study, worship, recreation, interest groups, denominational and state meetings, and work projects.

Seminars each morning will prepare the delegates for service in building Christian communities. These include "Christian Vocations," "Christian Youth and World Outreach," "The Church in the Community."

Others will deal with evangelism, intercultural understanding, political responsibility, and economic problems. Delegates will also participate in seminars of the program and techniques of U.C.Y.M. work in communities.

Further information may be secured from Miss Spaulding, 203 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago 1, Ill.

THE GOOD LIFE.

A great deal has been said about the undesirability of drinking alcohol as a beverage.

Perhaps something should be said about the desirability of drinking water and milk.

The good life doesn't just happen—not to anyone—it has to be made.

The average intelligent and reasonably healthy person can make a life which will be satisfying, and far more.

First, of course, it must have a basis in personal philosophy. We must have a clear understanding of the kind of life we want to realize.

It isn't possible to get along very well without an intelligent relationship with the God who rules the universe. Some people who say they "don't believe in God," really mean they don't think God is an old gentleman with a long white beard. Almost invariably, they have their own conception of God.

Then, we have to accept the world, realizing that we can't adjust it to our own ideas in one short lifetime. This certainly does not mean we must accept evil, but it does mean that in spite of everything we can do, a great deal of evil will continue and there is no sense in beating ourselves to pieces against it. We just have to do the best we can and remain quiet in our minds.

Next to peace of mind, good health contributes more than any other single factor to the good life. It is easier to find love and friendship and the satisfactions which come of successful working, if we maintain good health and most of us can do it.

What are the things which contribute to health? Mental serenity, a charitable attitude toward all mankind, a goal not beyond reach, good food varied and simply prepared, with due attention to vegetables, fruits and milk, plenty of water, and a reasonable amount of exercise. In this country, these things are within the reach of most people.

The man or woman who follows the simple rules of health known to everyone, will very seldom feel any such desperate need of "escape" that he will be tempted to resort to intoxication.—Exchange.

CORRECTION.

To the Pastors of the North Carolina-Virginia Conference; The Sunday School Superintendents of the North Carolina-Virginia Conference; The Women's Presidents of the North Carolina-Virginia Conference: Will you please announce that the meeting place for the Sunday School Convention of the North Carolina-Virginia Conference, to be held July 8, 1948, will be at Mt. Zion Church, instead of at Bethel, as announced originally? We hope to see a fine representation of your Sunday Schools there!

ELIZABETH CHICOINE.

3,000 SUBSCRIPTIONS TO THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The Board of Publications of the Southern Convention is endeavoring to increase the subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the 3,000 mark. This ought to be easily done! There are 10,000 or more families in our churches of the Convention. Surely 3,000 of those families love our church and its enterprises enough to pay $2.00 per year for 50 issues of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. THE SUN costs the subscriber just 4 cents per week. Won't you endeavor to interest some family or individual in subscribing to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. THE SUN is our denomination's only weekly publication. For 104 years THE SUN has blessed the homes of our people. Let us extend its "light". Send your subscription to The Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

NOTICE CONCERNING CHRISTIAN SUN SUBSCRIBERS.

The Board of Publications has instructed the Convention Office (subscription office of THE SUN) to carry expired subscriptions not more than one month. This action is necessary because the Sun is operating on such a meager budget that the Board of Publications cannot continue to publish the paper unless subscriptions are paid. Please renew your subscriptions promptly any you will help extend the good work of the Christian Sun.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

FROM MALACHI TO CHRIST.

LESSON XIII—JUNE 27, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people.—Isaiah 1:68.

The Forerunner of His Coming.

"Behold I send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me." Thus spoke the prophet under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit concerning Jehovah's messenger. The prophecy found literal fulfillment in the person of John the Baptist. In the fullness of time God called him from the desert to proclaim the coming of the Messiah. John himself so interpreted the prophecy. And Jesus saw the fulfillment of the prophecy in the person and work of John. We too can be heralds proclaiming and preparing for the coming of our Lord. We too can help to make the crooked paths straight and to make ready His highway.

His Coming.

Many of the Jews looked forward eagerly and expectantly to the coming of the Messiah. Many of them thought that it would be a day of judgement upon the enemies of Israel, a day of vindication for themselves. But Malachi solemnly warns them the day of the Lord will not be a milk and honey affair, a lovely time for all concerned. It will, in fact be a day of heart searching and sifting. It will be as a man who is refining precious metal, separating the precious metal from the dross. It will be like the fuller as he whitens by a process of strenuous work the garments which have become soiled. Refining is usually quite an arduous process. There is a sense in which we would like to see the coming of the Lord to His temple. But when one thinks of it, it will be a stern and searching time. We shall stand forth in our nakedness before Him, the secrets of all hearts will be revealed to Him. It is significant that when John the Baptist came preaching he summoned the people to repentance. The One who should come after Him was as one who laid the axes to the root of the tree.

Healing in His Coming.

But there would be healing in His coming for those who were His own. The sun of righteousness would arise with healing in its wings—a poetic way of setting forth the gracious ministry of the Spirit of God to those who fear His name.

The Messenger of His Coming Comes.

Several verses of today's lesson concern the prophecies regarding the birth of John the Baptist and the circumstances of his coming. They make interesting and inspiring reading. How this old priest and his old wife yearned for a child and how God promised them the answer to the yearning of their hearts. And then the joy of his coming, and the prophecies of his career. With prophetic insight the father declared and depicted something of his son's career, and something of the hope that he would awaken in the hearts of his fellow-countrymen.

Between the Testaments.

From Malachi to Christ is a blank chapter so far as the Protestant Bible is concerned. To be sure something of the history of that period is contained in the books that one usually finds in a big church "pulpit Bible," the Apocrypha as it is called. But most of the events are recorded only in secular and extra-biblical writings. The Jews passed through varying fortunes during three or more centuries. Hope flared and ebbed. It was during this period that most of the religious parties of Jesus' day arose. Rome conquered Palestine and reduced it to a dependent state or province. But God was slowly and surely working out His purpose and when the hour struck, He sent His messenger before the face of His Son to prepare the way. He works in mysterious ways His wonders to perform and His works to do.

A Note of Thanks.

I take this means of thanking the Guest Writers of these Notes who kindly furnished Notes of the Lessons while I was away on my vacation trip. It was the greatest trip and the grandest month in our lives. In thirty-two days—eleven of which were spent in the Los Angeles area, we traveled 9,085 miles, visited twenty states and Mexico, and went from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and also had a sailboat and steamer ride on the Pacific itself. We went from points at sea level to points almost a mile and a half above sea level. We saw fertile farms and fruitful orchards, rolling plains and broad prairies, length-thy mountain ranges and many snow-covered peaks, barren and bleak deserts, as well as countless industrial areas and vast timber tracts. We crossed the mighty Mississippi twice, the Missouri and the Colorado, and countless lesser streams once. We also crossed the great Continental Divide twice, the roof of our country which determines whether rain falling on it flows into the Atlantic or the Pacific. We saw innumerable herds of cattle and flocks of sheep, and countless thousands of acres of growing crops. We visited some of the most famous Parks, not only in our country but in the world, and saw some of the nation's places of scenic beauty and historic interest. We spent 11 days in Pasadena, near Los Angeles one of the three great metropolitan areas in our nation. We visited many state capitols, and saw dozens of our great educational institutions. We talked with all kinds of people and had many interesting and happy experiences. And all without an accident or a mishap. Norris Dam, Grand Canyon, Boulder Dam, Hollywood, Reno, Salt Lake City, and Yellowstone Park are some of the places we visited. It was the greatest and grandest month of our lives, and our hearts will be warmed upon every remembrance of it. And snapshots, and a hundred and fifty colored slides will make it possible for us to live over the experiences, and to share them with others. Our hearts are filled with gratitude to God for this token of His goodness to us.

IN THE MINORITY.

During the time Noah was building his ark, he was very much in the minority—but he won!

When Joseph was sold into Egypt by his brothers, he was in a decided minority—but he won.

When Gideon and his three hundred followers, with their broken pitchers and lamps, put the Midianites to fight, they were in an insignificant minority—but they won!

When Elijah prayed down fire from heaven and put the prophets of Baal to shame, he was in a notable minority—but he won!

When David, ridiculed by his brothers, went out to meet Goliath, in size he was in a decided minority—but he won!

When Martin Luther nailed his theses on the door of the cathedral, he was a lonesome minority—but he won!

When Jesus Christ was crucified by the Roman soldiers, he was a conspicuous minority—but he won!—Selected.

Book Reviews

A BOOK OF WORSHIP FOR FREE CHURCHES. Prepared under the direction of the General Council. Oxford University Press, New York. $1.50.

At the order of the General Council the Seminar on Worship has continued its labors for many years until it has produced a book that our denomination may use with pride. A Book of Worship for Free Churches brings together the great worship materials of the Free Churches in a modern and dignified way. Nothing of deep and abiding value has been left out. The services which have been devised by this group of men are dignified and reverent without being stilted and meaningless for our generation. A breadth of understanding unusual in its quality has been shown, for large, small and middle-size churches will find herein that which is native to them. Prayers from the richest devotional resources have been gathered into a priceless treasury. Services of worship growing out of experience and practical usage for nearly every conceivable occasion have been included. Suggested Biblical resources for the year's varying schedule have been provided. Instruction and traditional custom insofar as symbolism and altar usage are here to be found. A Book of Worship for Free Churches is a book that we have needed for many years. It will greatly enrich and deepen the worship of our churches.

Those who have prepared this book come from diverse types of Churches and from six different denominational backgrounds. The variety of experience and opinion among the workers is evidenced in the broad quality of offerings that are made. This is a book of which the Congregational Christian Church may be proud—but more than that, it is a book which it can use!

A Book of Worship for Free Churches will be published at the time of the General Council meeting at Oberlin, Ohio.

CHRISTIAN VOICES IN CHINA. Edited by Chester S. Miao. Friendship Press. Paper $1.00; cloth $2.00.

When Robert Morrison, the first Protestant missionary to China, sailed in 1807 under the London Missionary Society, the owner of the vessel asked, "And so, Mr. Morrison, you really expect to make an impression on the great Chinese Empire?" Morrison replied, "No, sir, but I expect God will." However, at first, it looked as if even God could not change this millenium-old nation. Upon arrival in China, Morrison began to translate the Bible in a dark warehouse in Canton. He was helped by a Chinese scholar who had learned Latin from a Catholic priest in Peiping. The lives of both were in danger. After twenty-seven years, Morrison had won only three converts. At the end of his life, he wondered whether as many as a thousand Chinese would have accepted Christianity at the end of a hundred years.

What happened? Morrison's original faith was rewarded. The London Missionary Society sent reinforcements. In 1829 the American Board entered China. Other mission boards followed. China became the largest mission field in the world, and today Chinese are making a significant contribution to the emerging world church.

Christian Voices in China might well have been written to commemorate 150 years of Protestant Christianity in China. Eleven of the fourteen contributors are Chinese Christian leaders who have received their education in the Christian colleges of China and in graduate institutions in the United States. When Morrison established in 1820, an Anglo-Chinese school for "the reciprocal cultivation of Chinese and European literature," he initiated an educational movement which was destined to change the religion, politics, and economics of almost one-fourth of the inhabitants of the globe.

This book is divided into three parts: The Christian Spirit Tried by War; Special Problems and Difficulties in China Today; and New Opportunities and Challenges in the Post-war Period. The chapter headings in part three give a clue to some of the responsibilities which rest upon Christian forces of China and the West as they work together. These headings are "New Womanhood in Old China," "Evangelism Among Government Students," "The Christian Message to the Chinese Farmer," and "The Ministry of Healing in War-Torn China."

Dr. T. C. Chao's chapter on "Christian Faith in China's Struggle" will, with other chapters, richly reward the reader. Dr. Chao analyzes the causes of the disintegration of China's culture, and writes with clarity on the struggle now taking place for democracy, unification, peace and reconstruction. "For the Christian," he reports, "war is not over and conditions are getting worse. It seems inevitable that the Chinese workers in the church, facing as they do soaring costs of living, poverty and almost starvation, in many cases are irritable, weary, and troubled with worldly affairs . . . martyrdom may be forced upon some faithful souls. The Christian Church . . . struggles for its own existence. If it wins freedom of faith, of conscience, or worship, speech and publication, it wins freedom for the whole of the Chinese nation. China travails in rebirth, in fears of being still born. Only apostolic Christianity can give it deliverance."

Christian Voices in China is of importance to every American. What happens in China may determine the future of the Orient. Christians have an opportunity not only to read about currents and cross currents in China, but also through missions to help determine the nature and the strength of these currents.

The illustrations by the Chinese artist, Jim Lee, combine Chinese ancient thought and mythology with modern Christianity, and add much to the value of the book.

MY NAME IS HAN.

"My Name Is Han," filmed in China, was produced to co-incide with the 1948-49 emphasis on study of the missionary movement in that country. An intriguing combination of documentary and dramatic techniques to emphasize the broad nature of missionary work is employed. No Occidental is seen in the picture. The camera follows the Chinese reliving events of the post-war period in the places where they occurred.

The story of Han, his family and their long trek home, has a universal quality true to the fundamentals of human nature wherever it has been touched by the hand of Christ. Han, who is "practical," and his wife, who is Christian, return to find their home a shambles and their land devastated. He cannot understand the "foolishness" which prompts Christian friends to leave their own fields to toil in his.

Han sees other "foolish" men. A Chinese, who is an agricultural missionary, teaches Han how to restore his orchard; he finds other Chinese in missionary posts in the hospital, in the school, in the church. And understanding comes to Han, as it has come to many. The rental fee, $8.00.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Sometime ago a lawyer called me from a city in North Carolina and made inquiry as to the proper and correct name of the Christian Orphanage. He said a man and his wife were in his office and wanted to will the Christian Orphanage their entire estate when they were through with it. They had no children.

Some months ago a man died and left his entire estate to the Christian Orphanage at his widow's death. The Christian Orphanage appreciates being remembered in wills. The writer knows of no more worthy cause than when you are through with your earthly possessions to leave at least part of them to the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C.

I noticed in the paper sometime ago that a lady died, who was worth millions, and she left it all to different charities. She had no children, and to what better cause could she have left it? Others, who have wealth leave it all to their children. They forget to leave anything to the College, Missions or the Orphanage. If the writer had accumulated a lot of money, which he has never been able to do, nothing would give him more pleasure or joy than to leave a large portion of it to the Orphanage to be invested in young, promising girls and boys, who have been deprived of a chance in life. He wants to keep on living in the lives of others after he has gone across to the other side.

When you write out your last will and testament, it would be very gracious of you to remember the Christian Orphanage with its large family of little children. Will you do it?

CHURCH HONORS FORMER PASTOR.

Eure's Christian Church, Eure, N. C., observed its annual homecoming services Sunday afternoon, May 23, with approximately 400 persons attending.

The celebration carried a threefold program: the annual Memorial Day service, with Rev. W. L. Wood, pastor of the church, delivering the Memorial address; a Dedicatorial service, and a Love Feast, honoring the Rev. Jessie M. Roberts, now of Windsor, Va., the church's pastor for more than a quarter of a century.

Mr. Roberts, seventy-three, has, since 1903, being absent only a few years, been a faithful, untiring and ever-loving friend and pastor to his entire community.

Each organization of the church was represented with kind words, loving appreciation and presentation of a gift. The program for the afternoon was as follows: Greetings, Mrs. H. L. Umphlett, president of the Ladies' Aid Society; Introduction, Mrs. John W. Artz, president of the Woman's Missionary Society; Life Membership, Mrs. Dempsey L. Harrell; Duet, Katy Askew and Syrvillia Lassiter; Presentation of Gift, Timothy Eure; Young People's Society, Rebecca Eure; Cradle Roll, Brendy Howell; flowers, Mrs. Hollis Lilley and Mrs. Norfleet Felton; Mrs. John Artz; song by the congregation, and benediction by Rev. W. L. Wood.

At the close of the program, Mr. Roberts and his family were entertained at a cake cutting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Artz.

The Dedicatory service was broadcast at 4:30 over a local radio station.

ADVERTISING CHRISTIANITY.

going rests upon the church, not upon the man outside the church. There is not specific command in the Scriptures for the non-Christian to attend the services of the church, but many that urge the Christian to go to the sinner. The Bible places the church in the position of a solicitor—an advertiser—who must so attractively and so convincingly present his proposition that it will appeal to those who have freedom to accept or to reject.

The church today must be as the child with a new toy—anxious to tell the world of what he has. The church must fight to keep from being completely pushed out of sight by the bars, the clubs, the theatres, etc. When the church does allow itself to be pushed about without fighting back through every legitimate means, I wonder if it does not cause those out of Christ to suspect that the church really is a dying institution and that even those who still profess church membership are actually ashamed of the church and its message. Paul was not ashamed of the gospel and hesitated not to take it into the midst of the Jewish scholars, the Greek philosophers, or the court of the emperor.

To sum up, we offer three good reasons why the church should advertise:

1. To reach the lost and get them to realize their need of the gospel by planting seed thoughts in their minds.
2. To inspire its members. Nothing inspires the members of a congregation more than for that congregation to be an active and advertising church.
3. To deepen its influence in the community. The public cannot help but take notice and consider the church that is continually placed before it.

Dare we content ourselves by making excuses for the emptiness of our church buildings when there may be a way found to fill them for the hearing of the word? We must search for such a way until success is ours or we are spent in exhaustion. Advertising may be the way.—Gospel Advocate.

NO AUTHENTIC PORTRAIT OF CHRIST.

By C. B. RIDDLE.

John Brophy, the English novelist, has written a book—"The Human Face"—after studying faces for fifteen years. In addition, the author took time to read the descriptions of faces in the Bible and Shakespeare, and studied the facial expressions of thousands of portraits in many countries.

Numerous conclusions could be drawn from Brophy's treatise of the human face, but these words from his book are more than significant: "In man's face there is to be discerned a faint reflection * * * of the nature of our God, who is, who must be, we being what we are, a human God. * * * If we have invented an imaginary God, then at least it is a noble conception."

Brophy's quoted words serve as a reminder that there are no accepted portraits of Christ. Christendom has been familiar with the face of Christ for many centuries, although it is considered that all representations of the Christ face are necessarily imaginative. Reasons why there are no authentic portraits of Christ are many.

In the first place, Christ was not the type likely to be posing for portraits. His position was such that His likeness did not appear on coins, nor was He the subject of the artists of His time. He was too obscure. Except for His immediate following, Christ was generally regarded as no different from the many itinerant preachers of the time. Moreover, from about the time of the Crucifixion until many years later, the profession of Christianity was dangerous. In the period of persecutions it would have been unwise to display a portrait of Jesus.

The conventional Christ portrait which has come down was presumed to have miraculous sources. The one mentioned most often is that connected with Joseph of Arimathea. It was he who placed the kerchief over the face on the descent from the Cross, and the miraculous story is that when it was removed it bore the imprint of the Savior's features. Joseph of Arimathea went to Britain where he planted the Glastonbury thorn which still blooms every Christmas, and the kerchief became one of the great relics.

There has been one likeness which has claims to being contemporary. It is the famous Jewel of Tiberius. Tiberius was Emperor of Rome at the time Jesus was teaching in Galilee, and he was the Caesar unto whom Jesus counseled the people to render what was his. It appears that a Roman centurion either himself carved a head of Jesus on an emerald or commissioned someone else to do so. At any rate, he sent the reputed likeness as a gift to the Roman Senate together with a detailed description of the appearance of the Man who was bringing things to pass in Palestine.

The Jewel of Tiberius dropped out of sight for several centuries and did not reappear until the fifteenth century. The Grand Turk, then occupying Constantinople, had come into possession of it in some way not clear. A brother of the Grand Turk had been taken captive by troops of the Papacy fighting for Rome. Knowing that this carved head of Christ would have a tremendous value in the eyes of the Church, the Turk offered it to the Pope Innocent VIII as ransom. The offer was accepted, the brother freed, and the Jewel came to Rome.

Whether painters of the likeness of Christ have been correct in their conception of the Man of Sorrows is of little concern to those who know the effects of His spirit—something no artist can portray. This invisible thread of life is not absent in "The Human Face."

BIBLE SCHOLAR, ARCHAEOLOGIST JOINS INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL STAFF.

Coming directly from archaeological work in Jerusalem with the American Schools of Oriental Research, Dr. John C. Trever joined the staff of the International Council of Religious Education June 1, it was announced by Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary.

Dr. Trever, who was from 1944-47 associate professor and head of the department of Old Testament languages and literature at Drake University, Des Moines, will become the director of the recently created Department of the English Bible in the International Council.

He will work with the Council's educational committees, advising them on the use of the Bible in their lesson and program materials. He will also promote the use and understanding of the Revised Standard Version of the Bible, of which the New Testament was published in 1946 and of which the Old Testament will be published probably in 1951.

The new director, who is 32, comes from a year's work in Jerusalem under the guidance of Dr. Millar Burrows, director of the American Schools of Oriental Research. Among several old manuscripts Dr. Trever found and recognized a complete copy of the Old Testament book of Isaiah going back to the first century B. C. Until now scholars have had to depend upon manuscripts from the ninth century A. D. The newly discovered text will be helpful to biblical scholars in the Old Testament section of the Standard Bible Committee in their preparation of the Revised Standard Version.

While in Palestine, Dr. Trever was also assigned to take 5,000 color photographs for slide and film sets on Bible lands and customs. Previously he had prepared a slide set on the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament.

He will be available for speaking engagements at all types of meetings and conferences. He can be reached at 203 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago 1, Ill., after June 1.

THE BASIS OF UNION

By FRED S. BUSCHMEYER

Chairman for the Executive Committee

The Judges of Voting upon the proposed Basis of Union between the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Congregational Christian Churches have just reported the following totals to the Executive Committee of the General Council and we hasten to pass them on to the churches of our Fellowship.

	Resolution No. 1	Resolution No. 2
Churches—For	2,576 (65.5%)	2,818 (78.3%)
Churches—Against	1,352	781
Members—For	144,221 (63.3%)	147,680 (76.2%)
Members—Against	83,503	46,108
Conferences—For	32 (94.1%)	31 (91.2%)
Conferences—Against	2	3
Associations—For	152 (80%)	163 (94.2%)
Associations—Against	38	10

Believing it to be its duty to give some kind of counsel to the churches of our Fellowship in this emergency situation, the Executive Committee has given careful thought to the problem of achieving the highest permanent values out of the negotiations carried on thus far, and now passes on to our churches and Council delegates the following resolution:

WHEREAS, the favorable vote of the churches of our faith and order on The Basis of Union has fallen short of a clear mandate to proceed with the validation of The Basis of Union; therefore

BE IT RESOLVED, that the Executive Committee inform the churches of this result;

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the Executive Committee advise the General Council that the Executive Committee is of one mind that the General Council will best preserve the strength of the churches' life and work and will best safeguard and protect the possibility of union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church if no definite action on acceptance or rejection of the Basis of Union be taken by the General Council at Oberlin.

The Executive Committee urges and requests the delegates to the General Council prayerfully to prepare themselves to seek God's guidance, with the hope that a way or ways may be made evident whereby we may walk with our brethren of the Evangelical and Reformed Church in love and by further study come, we trust to an hour when our strength and theirs may be made one in His service.

It is hoped that the Commission on Interchurch Relations and Christian Unity will have an analysis of the voting by churches, associations, and conferences, to be mailed to delegates before they leave for Oberlin. The Commission is receiving and considering possible alternate courses of action by the General Council meeting in Oberlin, and will make its supplementary report, with a recommended procedure, when the Council is assembled.

Greetings from England and Wales

[A Council Address by REV. W. ANDREW JAMES, distinguished pastor of the Purely Congregational Church in Surry, England, and representative of the Congregational Union of England and Wales.]

The will to prevail is strong in our midst even yet, but there is creeping upon us the sense of defeatism, and we know that the strain must be relieved soon if we are to survive and make a vigorous contribution to the culture and liberty of the world.

The appalling conditions in which we had lived during the war seemed as nothing during that time because there was a greater issue at stake and we believed that when hostilities ceased we would return to plenty, and all the restrictions on our freedom would be removed, but such is not the case. For eight years we have known shortages, and in spite of three years of peace we are still stringently rationed in food and clothes.

Our churches in the bombed cities and towns are doing a magnificent job in the most discouraging conditions; the premises are damaged and quite inadequate; the homes of the people are in an appalling condition, and the leadership of the Church is a vital factor in the community. Into this environment has come, like a breath of fresh air some of the young men and women of your churches, ministers and social workers, through the generosity of the Congregational Christian Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction. These young people have made a fine contribution to the needs of our churches. We are deeply indebted to you for this, the most important contribution to England in the post-war years.

London has been badly bombed. Much that we loved has been burnt and destroyed, yet much also remains that is significant. Upstanding amid the ruins of acres of buildings is St. Paul's Cathedral, with the cross on the centre dome, glistening in the sunlight. Not far away are the Supreme Courts of Justice above which is the Symbol of Justice blindfolded and holding the scales in her hand. This, too, is unchanged. Herein is a parable. We are persuaded that though there are many trials, and not a few tribulations before us yet, on this long road of recovery, if we can but keep the cross before our eyes, that justice may prevail, the end of it will be better than the beginning, and the victory will not be ours, but to God will be the praise.

We have received such kindness and generosity at your hands in these days of difficulty and need, that our churches have been drawn perceptibly nearer to you, and we trust also that you have been conscious of a new nearness to the churches of our Union. We are persuaded that the giver is blessed not equally but more than the recipient and there is between us at this time a closer bond of fellowship than we have ever known before. May the spirit of our Master, Jesus Christ, abide in our midst, and enable us all to realize our oneness in Him.

HURDLES GO TO ELK SPUR.

On Sunday, May 30, Dr. William T. Scott visited our church here at Elk Spur, to tell us he had a pastor for us for three months. We are looking forward to having Rev. and Mrs. Allen Hurdle with us this summer. We are grateful to Dr. Scott and all who made it possible for us to have a pastor.

Sunday, June 6, was our Memorial Day. We had around one hundred twenty-five at church. Ivy Hill Sunday School came to visit us. Even though they are small in number, we think Mr. Morris and his group are to be praised. All winter they went ahead with their Sunday school, and sometimes when it was too rough to go to the school house, they would hold Sunday school in Mr. Morris' home. We know that what they are studying there will be as seed sown on good ground, for such as hear the word and receive it, bring forth fruit.

On Friday, June 4, we had a visit from Mr. and Mrs. Gleason and their family, and it was a special treat to the folks here in the mountains to have them back with us. Their words to us were to keep on.

On the third Sunday in June we are expecting Rev. G. H. Veazey and his Sunday school from Long's Chapel to visit us. We are looking forward to having them with pleasure.

May we all remain forever in God's will.

THE MODERATOR SPEAKS ON CHRISTIAN UNITY.

Next to preventing the outbreak of World War III, with all the tragedy of atomic and biological warfare and the resulting chaos and wrecking of civilization, the most important item on the agenda of the human race is the achievement of greater Christian Unity. After four hundred years of divisiveness the Christian world since 1900 has been reaching out toward unity. A new ecumenical Christian consciousness has arisen. How to implement this desire for unity without imperiling freedom of thought and liberty in growth and action is the major problem before ecclesiastical statesmanship today.

The kind of Christian unity on which I wish to dwell this evening, however, is unity among ourselves, and with the Evangelical and Reformed Church and any other bodies which may be interested. Such a union of like-minded denominations is in no sense competitive with, antagonistic to, or a substitute for the utmost federative union that can possibly be achieved. Dr. E. Stanley Jones himself has said: "If any two or more Branches (i.e. denominations) should desire to amalgamate . . . they would be free to do so under Federal Union. And not only free to do so, but we would encourage such amalgamation."

The most urgent and immediate objective before us at this General Council, as I see it, is the achievement of good understanding and unity among ourselves first of all, and then a learning of the way to go toward a happy and enthusiastic union with the Evangelical and Reformed denomination.

I say this boldly and with assurance because I notice that, amid all the turmoil and confusion of the past nine months, there has been practically no objection voiced to union with the E. and R. as such. The objections have not even been to the Basis of Union document in toto, or even in essence. The objections have been peripheral rather than central. I have conferred with several critics of the documents and their objections settle down to five, no one of which is insuperable. Most of them grow out of different interpretations as to the possible import of certain words and phrases.

Personally, I feel that these critics have taken counsel too largely of their fears and not enough of their faith. The negative vote, especially as registered by the laity in our (Continued on page 11.)

Missions in Africa

An Address by ALAN B. TAYLOR*
Durban, South Africa

Half a century ago Africa was called the Dark Continent. This year Juan Trippe, head of Pan American Airways, invites twenty leading publishers and editors as his guests to fly to South Africa in two days and to see the country in two weeks. They return and tell of gold mines, large cities, airfields and harbors. In Durban at a banquet I attended, in reply to the question, "What in South Africa has impressed you most?" they answered, "Your Prime Minister, Field Marshall Smuts."

South Africa is a country where a road built today and unused may disappear tomorrow beneath desert sands or lush jungle vegetation. Africa was, and still is, well called the Dark Continent for there is no culture there comparable to that of India or China on to which Christian culture can be grafted, no written language to spread the Christian faith unassisted by western education. Were the candles lighted by mission societies in Africa to be quenched the darkness would again become complete.

Africa's darkness will only disappear when the fire we take has kindled the fuel to be found there. An African leader who styles himself an agitator and who answers to the name of Champion, once reproved me, "Dr. Taylor, we don't need friends to work for us as much as to work with us." He was right; our part is to kindle fires, nourish and tend them until the light is truly African.

In 1921 I went out to join Dr. James B. McCord in a training scheme for African doctors. It was premature. Neither the white medical profession or government was ready for it. I now saw, too, that nurses were needed first. At that time no African nurses or midwives were being given recognized training in Natal. Twenty years after our first nurse and our first midwife passed the Medical Council's examination twenty-five per cent of all those sitting for the same State examinations were Africans. . . . Recently the Administrator of Natal, noticing the shortage of white applicants for nursing training and comparing it with the flood of African applications, gave it as his considered opinion that nursing might pass entirely into the hands of African women.

Ten years after our first graduates were registered the Province of Natal accepted the principal of a colour bar and commended the training of African nurse aides, stating that African women were incapable of being trained as nurses. Within three years it was compelled to change its policy because McCord Hospital (Dr. Taylor's hospital) had shown that they could be thus trained. Today everywhere the examples set in mission hospitals are being followed by governments. Where such hospitals have pioneered in training, in setting up district work, in appointing African graduates to positions of supervision, government hospitals are following.

Donald Mtimkulua, leading educationalist, addressing a meeting of the Natal Missionary Society last July stressed the need for more missionaries. He pointed out that the leaders of former generations were taught by teachers and preachers who had grown up in and about the homes of the early missionaries as house and garden servants, horse boys, etc., and that in these and other associations with the missionaries and in attending family prayers they had imbibed "the Christian way of living." He said, "Today we are finding more and more that our leaders are being trained in government schools and apart from any missionary influence and teachers, with the result that they graduate as heathens." Said he: "Give us more missionaries to insure Christian leadership."

Our Principles.

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.

COMMENTS ON THE COUNCIL.

A complete report of the Oberlin Council would require a volume. The purpose of this editorial and this issue is to give an authentic glimpse of the Council, a judicious yet generous sample of the countless speeches and voluminous reports given during the Council.

Genuine Democracy is evidence by the unprecedented election of a woman, Miss Helen Kenyon, as moderator. Many people will applaud this ecclesiastical elevation of femininity. Miss Kenyon, active in the work of the Missions Council, received 555 ballots and Nathaniel Talmadge 155. She succeeds Dr. Albert Palmer.

Dr. Fred Fagley, unsophisticated Associate Secretary of the General Council, has reached the age of retirement. His genial smile, cheery greeting, enveloping handshake, statistical knowledge and organizational genius have been invaluable in the General Council.

Moderator Palmer made an interesting proposal which has not been acted upon at this writing—that "this Council authorize a Special Commission on Analysis and Appraisal to study the functions and effectiveness of our denominational procedures in the local church, on state and national levels and in the world situation. What are we doing that is commendable? Wherein do we fall behind other Christian bodies, and why? What should we learn from comparable secular agencies in education and public service? What improvements, not inconsistent with our religious standards and essential Congregational freedom, could be made in our finances, our business methods, our public relations, our personnel, and our long-distance planning?"

To be sure, the ultimate and inescapable point of reference for all Council Sessions was the Merger. The entire stream of deliberations was colored by the tincture of merger debate. Formal and informal sessions were held. Day unto day uttered speech and night unto night revealed confusion. Indeed, this was a suspense-laden Council. Denominational leaders hovered over the Council, a victim of schizophrenia, like physicians over a dying patient. The split personality defied unity. Prayer, deliberation and exhortation brought an obvious converging of minds and healing of wounds, but elusive unity seemed to remain one step beyond realization. The Council sought unanimity on a variety of proposals and victory was assured on Monday when a near unanimous vote approved the Basis of Union which was prefixed by a series of interpretations, until Dr. L. W. Goebel, E. and R. President, stated that this action would require another poll in his church and probably delay union until 1951. Final action was postponed from Saturday until Tuesday. The Basis of Union was approved. Final union, however, into the "United Church of Christ" was delayed until 1949, thus allowing time to bring the percentage of our affirmative voting from the actual 65.5 up to the stipulated 75. No difficulty in securing the additional votes is anticipated. The major fears and doubts concerning union have been removed. The church has given an affirmative answer to the ancient question: "Wilt thou be made whole?"

No little importance should be attached to the fact that the Council Lectures were given this year by Walter Marshall Horton, Oberlin Professor, small of stature, with vast spiritual and intellectual dimensions. The General Council could not have made a wiser choice. The home town professor spent five months last summer at Geneva in the study Department of the World Council of Churches.

The lecturer reviewed the Ecumenical Movement, traced the historical background and brought his hearers up to date on this current theme. Using an unforgettable analogy, he described the wanderings of the modern children of Israel in the wilderness of disunity; he sketched with artistry, skill and realism the labyrinthine windings of Protestantism against this ancient and eternal background. These lectures, if published, will attract wide attention and serve the needs of many who wish to be ecumenically up-to-date.

Dr. Horton pictured the ideal of full Christian unity as "the transcendent goal of the whole Ecumenical Movement." He insisted that "Pulpit and Altar fellowship" is the indispensable requirement of genuine unity on any level. Said he: "If Pulpit and Altar fellowship could really be established, openly and officially, between a half-dozen denominations, this would break down the walls of partition which now separate them in their innermost life, making the merging of mission boards, the adoption of a common constitution, and other measures involved in complete organic union, seem relatively slight and non-essential steps."

The roll of the ecumenical patriarchs was called: William Temple (the Moses of the Ecumenical Movement), J. H. Oldham (the Joseph of the Movement), Bishop Brent, Peter Ainslie, S. Parkes Cadman, William Adams Brown, and John R. Mott, the Abraham of the Movement who is ready to cross the Jordan with Joshua.

Here is one of his grand summaries: "The Faith and Order Movement was started and has always been supported by people who have hoped and prayed and worked for Christian unity in a very special sense; people who have not been content with functional cooperation on the Edinburg plan, or church federation on the Stockholm plan, but who have passionately desired full organic union of the most complete and intimate sort. For such people, Schism in the Church of Christ is not merely an unfortunate inconvenience, giving rise to wasteful extravagance in the use of funds and regrettable inefficiency in the prosecution of Christian work; it is something far worse: Schism is sin."

How may this schism be breached? "So long as churches stand facing each other comparing their heritages, they remain too self-conscious and too proud to cross the final gap that separates them from one another. It is when they all face the needs of the world together, all feel their insufficiency to meet those needs, and fall on their knees imploring God to remake and revitalize them—it is then that God's grace really descends upon them, and quite unexpectedly makes them aware of their unity in the same transforming Spirit."

It was reassuring to have this able lecturer come to the reasoned conclusion that we may enter the Promised Land of true ecumenicity within the perceptible future: "We have taken due account of the giants, the walled cities, the hostile Hittites, and other discouraging obstacles we are likely to meet. But I hope you will also agree that for all those obstacles and difficulties, it is truly a Land of Promise, to whose gradual possession and cultivation we may look forward with faith and hope."

Cooperation in Evangelism--The Edinburgh Approach

By WALTER M. HORTON, Professor, Oberlin College

Extracts from the first Council lecture on the General Subject:

"The Ecumenical Movement Crosses Jordan"

The World Missionary Conference held in Edinburgh in 1910 under John R. Mott's chairmanship was the real beginning of the Ecumenical Movement in its modern form. Edinburgh expressed a particular sort of Christian consensus, and developed a particular approach to Christian unity, which are still powerful factors in the Ecumenical Movement.

1. The Edinburgh consensus at first expressed the unity of the "Evangelical" churches, in the Anglo-Saxon sense of the word. By the time of the Tambaram (Madras) Conference of 1938, it had become less narrowly representative of the Anglo-Saxon evangelicals, and broadly representative of all sorts of Christians who had an "evangelistic" or missionary concern.

2. The success of the Edinburgh approach is due to the unitive power of Christian evangelism, which (1) makes Christians feel the wickedness of a sectarian Gospel that scandalized non-Christian inquirers; (2) makes evangelists humble and tolerant of each other in the face of the mystery of the new birth; (3) creates a deep union of hearts between evangelists, converts, and their common Lord. Yet evangelism also creates controversy and resentment which limit its unitive power.

3. The future place of missionary evangelism in the Ecumenical Movement: it must be kept, but combined with other unitive drives. There is considerable danger that the conservative evangelicals who backed the Edinburgh Conference so heavily may find themselves "out of their element" in the International Missionary Council, as our National Association of Evangelicals already does. The leaders of the I. M. C. must do all they can to conciliate these alienated supporters, but they cannot retreat from the broader consensus achieved at Madras, and they must adopt new and progressive methods of world evangelism if they are to catch up with God's design for the redemption of our dying world order.

... When denominational barriers, built high and rigid in the age of Protestant scholasticism, got in the way of evangelical heart-fellowship and evangelical zeal for souls, they collapsed as if made of toothpicks. All the great evangelists who spear-headed the thrust of this often-renewed movement showed a sublime disregard for denominational lines: Whitefield in the eighteenth century; Finney and Moody in the nineteenth; Mott, Eddy and Speer in the twentieth.

All those "evangelical" churches which actively supported such leaders in their work of popular evangelism, and which actively supported the missionary societies whereby this work was extended to the ends of the earth, ended to be drawn together into close mutual understanding. From this missionary consensus only those churches were excluded which stood so far to the liberal "left" or the liturgical "right" that they disappeared completely of popular evangelism in its prevailing forms. It is not too much to say that the Christian Unity Movement in its "Edinburgh" form mainly expresses the influence of the "evangelical" churches. Its strength and its limitations as a unifying force both spring from this fact.

... It was the foreign mission enterprise, or to use a better term, the Christian world mission, which summed up and focused most vividly the growing unity of evangelical Christendom. When Wesley said, "The world is my parish," Protestant foreign missions were only a hope and a promise; but his vision of a world-wide evangelistic task was essentially the same which inspired Dr. Wayland's missionary cry in 1824, "Our field is the world," and the watch-word of the Student Volunteer Movement at the end of the last century, "the evangelization of the world in this generation." If the world missionary task seemed less visionary and more feasible as time went on, it was because it was increasingly realized that a task of this magnitude had to be undertaken co-operatively.

... As we pass from the early world missionary conferences to these more recent ones, we note an important change in the kind of Christian consensus they embody. They become progressively less Anglo-Saxon and more international, less "evangelical" in any partisan sense, and more "evangelistic" in a universally Christian sense, less provincially Western and more truly ecumenical in their outlook.

It was natural and inevitable that the original nucleus of the world missionary movement should be composed almost exclusively of Anglo-Saxon evangelicals. As Professor Latourette makes abundantly clear in his history of missionary expansion, the nineteenth century was a period in which "English-speaking peoples were outstanding" in world affairs generally and specifically in missions.

... Among the reasons for the extraordinary unitive effect of the evangelistic approach, three may be singled out. The first is a motive for maintaining a solid front against opposition; the second is a motive for tolerance and respect among evangelists and missionaries; the third is a reason why converted people form a more cohesive mass than unconverted people.

(1) The likelihood of alienating non-Christian hearers if Christians speak with "confusion of tongues". What men are seeking is the answer that will order their lives and bring peace into the passions and parties with which humanity is cursed; but if the advocates of an alleged Answer snarl and snap at one another with sectarian fury, their message is promptly discounted by the public, and the quest for religious truth veers off in some other direction. The necessity of distinguishing truth from error and from dangerous misunderstandings is of course part of the missionary evangelist's task; but he must do this so calmly and irenically that Gospel truth shines forth high and serene as the sun in the sky, source of the light in all lesser lights, universal

SUFFOLK LETTER.

We have 5,756 churches in our denomination. We average 205 members per church. If your church has more than 205 members it has more than the national average in our denomination. Last year our churches made a net gain of 22,412 members, which was equal to establishing 100 new churches as large as our average church, according to Dr. Fred L. Fagley.

The Southern Convention is a constituent part of our denomination. In our Convention there are 195 churches. Yours is one of these churches. These 195 churches enroll 33,539 members. Our average number per church is 172. Our Southern Convention church member averaged giving last year $20.41 to his church. Our Convention received 1,369 members last year, or nearly an average of seven per church. How many members does your church have? How much did it give last year per member? How many new members did it receive?

However well any one of our churches did last year let us all do better this year. Let each one who reads these lines ask our heavenly Father to give us more consecration, more willingness to hear and obey His voice, and more readiness to help our church to higher success. If everyone of us right where we are will think about it, and pray about it, and then go forth doing our best we shall see things happen in our local churches. We ourselves shall be happier. We shall see less to criticize in the other fellow. We shall seek new ways of helping those about us to higher heights.

If it is a Sunday school teacher we shall help him have a bigger class, and we shall find ways of encouraging him in his work. If it's a leader of a young people's organization we shall find time to help him, or if we are on a committee, or in a choir, or whatever our job or place is we shall give it some time and attention. Our congregations will make better pastors and preachers by their kindly thought and cooperation and help. And our pastors and preachers will cheer and bless their congregations by their faithful and inspiring preaching and service.

As we read these lines let us not say, well, I hope he does it. But rather let us resolve ourselves to give more if possible, attend better if we can, and to patiently render only constructive suggestions and judgments. We can make a new person of ourselves, and new porches, new conferences, and a revitalized Convention and people if we take heed thereto. And what is more we shall individually be happier. We shall increase our own friends, and multiply our own success by letting God thus use us. Every church and organization, institution, and board in our Convention will thrive and the revitalizing of our Convention with its 195 churches will have its effect on our entire wider fellowship.

WALKING WITH GOD: II. IN THE PROCLAMATION OF THE GOSPEL.

By ALFRED GRAY WALTON.

The real mission of the church is to proclaim the Christian gospel and every other task is subordinate to it. The church does not exist simply to promote good works. It is not here to sponsor every program for community betterment, to direct social reform or to be the active leader in every movement for good that the mind of man may devise. It should not be the servant of the National Association of Manufacturers or the labor unions. It should not be expected to put over financial drives for a Bureau of Social Welfare, the Boy Scouts or the Community Chest. It may be interested in these laudable enterprises and lend its influence to achieve their goals, but its primary responsibility is to change human hearts and inspire human conduct. The world cannot be made better until there are individuals who want to make it better. Evangelism has to do with the initial process, the dedication of man's will to the will of God and a definite commitment to the ways of Jesus Christ.

The church is becoming increasingly aware of this basic mission in these days when the forces of materialism are expressing themselves with increasing power and scientific advance has made man conscious of the dangerous potentialities of the powers at his disposal. Communism has become a definite threat to democracy. The atomic bomb is a reality. The nerves of the world are jittery. Unless there can be a spiritual purpose in life to furnish a meaning for human existence and unless there can be some moral controls for conduct, civilization cannot survive.

Evangelism is not simply the task of the clergy; it is the responsibility of the layman also. Every layman should be a bearer of the Christian message. It is not enough to have business men, we must have Christian business men, Christian lawyers and Christian doctors. The church has a great field of opportunity before it in the development of the idea of Christian vocation.

Religious education has gone far afield in the pursuit of its Christian goals. More attention should be given to the study of the Bible and Protestants fall far short of the Catholic church is furnishing basic religious knowledge. Sand piles, work projects and extra-biblical studies may have their value but it would be worth while if a child could at least find the Psalms or the Gospels and even more worth while if he knew what is in them. If we are to evangelize the world, we might well see what we can do for our children.

MEMORIAL DAY SERVICES AT TIMBER RIDGE.

On Sunday, June 20, Homecoming and Memorial Day services were held at Timber Ridge Congregational Christian Church. Beginning with Sunday School at 10:00 A.M.—Mr. Richard Krump, Supt., and followed with worship services at 11 A.M. The sermon was delivered by Rev. William L. Hadden, pastor of the Cork Street Christian Church, Winchester, Virginia.

For thirty-five years this church has observed annually Memorial and Homecoming services. The first record we have of the organization known as the Christian Church at (Continued on page 14.)

Overreaching Boundaries

An address by DR. ROBBINS W. BARSTOW, of the World Council of Churches, before the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches Ecumenical Service

On the evening of Good Friday last, I had the honor and the inspiration of speaking to some twelve hundred earnest worshipers in the Lutheran Cathedral Church at Tampere, Finland. They had gathered to commemorate that solemn anniversary in the midst of new tensions and fresh fears, for their representatives were at that very time engaged in the treaty discussions with Russia. The demonstration of their own faith and spiritual resiliency was far more significant than any words of greeting and fellowship I could give them in behalf of the churches of this country.

But through their dean they did express to me—and thus to you—their deep gratitude and their Christian love. They voiced their satisfaction that there were such bonds of human brotherhood and divine sonship, overreaching any boundaries of creed, nation, or continent and finding new reality in creative serving and sharing in the common search for the good life that would fulfill the purpose for which Christ had made that first Good Friday so tragically yet triumphantly memorable.

Another vivid recollection of that meeting remains with me; namely, the great mural painting above the altar of the cathedral. It is an almost gruesomely realistic representation of that phase in the Apostle's Creed, "The Resurrection of the Body." In this picture, at the left, skeletal fingers and emaciated forms are seen emerging from an open grave. In the center, a man stands flexing his muscles as he breathes again the breath of life. From the distant background and moving off to the right is the procession of the redeemed marching forward into the Kingdom of Heaven.

Without commenting on either the theological or artistic questions that might be involved, I would say that there could be no more graphic illustration of the plight of humanity today—seeking to find its way up out of the depths of suffering and despair, resisting certain forces that threaten to push it back into complete engulfment, yearning to move forward with renewed fullness of life into the promised kingdom of love and peace and joy. Nor is it too much to say that the central figure in that mural symbolizes what the Christian churches of the world working together have made possible for unnumbered thousands enabled them to live again, to breathe the air of faith and hope, to flex their muscles once more in self-help and in service to others. And yet all that has been accomplished is but a beginning, a token achievement toward the facing and fulfilling of God's great challenge to all of us today.

We must not let the fact that it is getting to be an old story dull our ears to the acute cries of continuing need. We must not rest complacently on past deeds. The factual dimensions of the church of Christ are being evolved now, by us in works as well as in faith. For by reason of circumstances determined by the inscrutable providence of God, the Christian men and women of America are at the focal point of history in a fashion that is far more realistic than rhetorical. . . .

One might catalogue indefinitely the outstanding needs and opportunities in so many lands that call us in terms of our Christian discipleship, our Christian stewardship. I would that I had the time and the eloquence to share a detailed review of the projects I have so recently seen in several countries of Europe, and to speak of others in Japan, Korea, the Philippines, Burma, Indonesia of which you have seen reports and pictures and statistics.

Out of all this, there are for this particular occasion three points of emphasis that I would like to stress.

First of all is the tremendous importance of the degree of togetherness which has characterized our post-war efforts at church relief and reconstruction. I have sat with representative interdenominational groups in Italy, Austria, Finland, and other countries, as well as with the full conferences of national executives in Geneva and been impressed with their quiet joy in a fellowship which was truly a new experience. Each church and each national denomination is enhanced as it feels itself an integral and active part in a greater whole where the emphasis is always on matters of common concern and agreement.

In lands that suffered most, the overall tragedy drew the churches together, and their community of distress was made even more evident as they shared together in the receiving and administering of help supplied by the cooperative efforts of the churches elsewhere in Switzerland, Sweden, Britain, Canada, but chiefly in the United States. It has not been a thing to take for granted. Many have been the direct expressions to me by various leaders of their profound gratification for the spiritual understandings and insights that have been the by-products of an ecumenical relief program. And it has been a wholesome thing for us who have been able to share and give together.

Let us not lose nor minimize the importance of all this as we approach another great milestone in Christian history at Amsterdam. What transpires there will be the more firmly rooted because of what we have done these past years and the way we have done so much of it. . . .

A second point which more than merits the whole of my allotted time, is a consideration of the continuing urgency of the need. While our American minds are filled and our legislative halls are echoing with many complex problems, from living costs and labor disputes, to Palestine and world peace, hunger, nakedness, sickness, homelessness, can never be laid on the table or held in suspension while some other debate rages. Children have to be fed day after day. Clothing wears more ragged to the point of utter uselessness. Crude shelters do not improve with passing weeks, nor are personality problems solved when two or three families crowded into a single room measure the passing months by repeated frictions and frustrations. Community morals are not static, but continue to sag, unless the churches, schools, and other institutions can begin to function again, repaired, re-equipped, providing the locus operandi for devoted Christian ministries.

Now these urgent situations can not be met by any words of mine—or by anybody else's talking. They demand actual practical aid by way of gifts, chiefly money gifts. Nothing else can take the place of our substantial contributions as proof of our sincerity. Let us be brutally honest as we face the facts. Throughout Europe and Asia, our representatives and colleagues, optimistically encouraged by our protestations of concern, have made extensive, though wise and conservative, plans for carrying out the most urgent priority projects. But because the actual receipts from the churches have fallen so far short, they have had to cut and cut, accommodate and readjust, to the point of heart-break.

When a great program of youth

The World for Christ

OUR RESPONSIBILITY IN CHINA.

By EARLE BALLOU,
China Sec'y American Board.

I speak for only one part of the world where God has matched our strength against this hour. But it's an important part. China is a part of the world problem, and it's a part that is peculiarly ours. It's ours as American citizens: Prof. Latour-ette has shown convincingly that down through the years and for more than a hundred years, our government has gone farther towards committing itself in positive constructive ways towards China than towards any of the countries of Europe. We have shied away from Europe despite all our ancestral connections but in China we have built up repeatedly an attitude of expectancy.

We're under a great moral obligation to help see China through her present distress. We've been far less fair to her at times in the past. We paid dearly for the stupidity of our policy during the early years of her War of Resistance against Japan, when we armed her enemy with weapons many of which were eventually used against ourselves. God's judgment fell upon us in the ways that none of us could mistake. We were niggard in the help we gave China as our ally during the later years when suffering from all the "diseases of defeat" she struggled on, keeping fully occupied hundreds of thousands of enemy troops who otherwise might have been at our throats. We can't let China down now as in weakness and exhaustion—moral and spiritual as well as physical and economic—she staggers back in the direction of recovery.

As American Christians the problem of China is ours more than as American citizens. For the Church of Jesus Christ exists today in China largely because of our efforts. Thank God for that! Thank God for the American lives and the American wealth that has been poured out during the past century and more!

We of the American Board were the first American churchmen on the field, the first to join the British pioneer, Robert Morrison at Canton.

We are celebrating our postponed Centennial at Foochow this autumn, whereas the Methodists celebrated theirs on time a year ago. But back in 1847 it was Stephen Johnson of the American Board who welcomed the first Methodist missionaries when they landed at Foochow. Thirteen years ago we celebrated the 75th Anniversary of the beginning of our work in North China, where again we were the first on the field.

A lot of American devotion, at home and among the missionary body, has gone into the founding and upbuilding of the Chinese church. For under God it could never have been without us—us American Christians who planted so much of the seed and watered it with our blood—where should we be more aware of this than here on the Oberlin campus within sight of the Memorial to our missionaries martyred in the Boxer Rebellion?—our sweat, our tears, our prayers and our dollars; and who have watched that seed become the blade, put forth the ear and here and there begin to show the full corn in the ear. An enormous store of goodwill towards Christianity, towards the West, towards America has been built up by our schools, our hospitals, our rural reconstruction, our relief work.

Did you notice a little news item the other day? That during the past year the Seventh Day Adventist sent out 545 missionaries to 73 countries, 212 of them from North America, and that 359 of that 545, or 65 per cent were new people? Our Congregational Christian membership is five times that of the SDA in this country, and few there are of us who would not claim our interpretation of the gospel of Jesus Christ is superior to theirs. But they sent out from North America more than twice as many missionaries last year as we did.

Luckily an American dollar has a greater purchasing power in North China today than it had a year ago, because exchange has climbed faster than the ruinous inflation. But that doesn't help self-support in our schools and hospitals, for the cost of living has climbed faster than income. Conditions have reached the point where school principals and hospital superintendents no longer dare to raise fees to keep pace with inflation as they have done repeatedly in the past three years. Parents of the young folks who are crowding our schools to capacity simply can't pay higher fees. This is a new and dangerous threat to the part of our program which for years has been most nearly self-supporting, and led month ago to take this action:

Voted, to ask the General Secretaries to make clear to the American Board the crisis and extreme peril in which our schools, both middle and primary, find themselves and the difficulty they will meet in going on unless there are increased contributions.

"Unless there are increased contributions." That means you, and the people you are here representing. "Unless there are increased contributions," for China, yes; for Africa, yes; for the Philippine Islands—for all our work at home and abroad. To round out liberally and with honor the Post War Emergency Program; to meet the minimum and cautious estimates that our responsible leaders have made of what we Congregational Christians must do if we are to measure up to the challenge that God puts before us these days. This is not just a great opportunity—there is an urgency here, an emergency upon which tremendous issues hang.

Friends this is no theoretical consideration of desirabilities. This has to do with the advance or retreat of the Kingdom of God; with whether the younger churches are to be nourished or starved in the years of their adolescence, an adolescence during which they have already suffered,

AN APPEAL TO THE WOMEN OF THE WORLD.

At the recent session of the Status of Women Commission an appeal to the women of the world was issued:

"We the representatives of fifteen countries gathered in the Status of Women Commission of the United Nations to safeguard the interests of all women, appeal to the many millions of women throughout the world to work in every possible way for the peace and prosperity of peoples everywhere.

"Peace throughout the world is the ardent dream of all women. We, the women of the entire world, must take our stand against war. Let us proclaim that there is no material difficulty or mental conflict between peoples that can in reality be solved by war because it ruins all peoples.

"Women are more than half the population of the world. Let us use our time wisely. Let us show the world that the growing influence of women in public life is an influence for peace and for patient striving to build friendly relations between all peoples and nations.

"There is no woman in the world who wants war, who does not know that the only guarantee for the happiness of her children and her home is that the peace of the world should be secure.

"Let the voice of the woman of the world ring out strong and clear to remind statesmen that their most urgent task is to work to remove the causes of war.

"We have a meeting ground for constructive work for peace in the United Nations. Let us strengthen this instrument. Let women plan an historical part in the prevention and removal of present and future threats of war, so that it can realize the deepest aspirations of women everywhere for a world of peace and freedom for their children and generations yet to come.—Mabel Head in The Church Woman. (Taken from United Nations Bulletin.)

The World Conference on Freedom of Information gave "Consideration to the following fundamental principles to which media of information should have regard in performing their basic functions of gathering, transmitting and disseminating news and information without fetters:

"(a) To tell the truth without prejudice and to spread knowledge without malicious intent;

"(b) To facilitate the solution of the economic, social and humanitarian problems of the world as a whole through the free interchange of information bearing on such problems;

"(c) To help promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, and to combat any ideologies whose nature could endanger these rights and freedoms;

"(d) To help maintain international peace and security through understanding and cooperation between peoples, and combat forces which incite war, by removing bellicose influences from the media of information."

It seems to me that the above four points could well be adopted by every Woman's Auxiliary in the United States. We do not need to accept the inevitability of war, because we can do something about it, and let's get busy and do something about it while we have a chance.

In the May, 1948, issue of Church Woman, you may find suggestions for the World Day of Prayer, May Fellowship, and World Community Day, 1948-49.

MAY FELLOWSHIP DAY.

May Fellowship Day was observed May 7, at the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, with a special program presented by the Ladies' Missionary Society, Mrs. R. F. Edwards presiding.

The Missionary Societies of the Shelton Memorial, Elm Avenue, and of the neighboring churches, the Central Methodist and the First Lutheran were invited to the program.

The meeting occurring during National Family Week, the theme chosen for the afternoon was "The Christian Family." The worship service following that theme was presented by Mrs. Edwards and Mrs. Stanley Carne. Mrs. J. A. Martin spoke on the subject, "The Child in a Christian Home." A solo was rendered by Nancy Lee Jones, and the address of the program was given by Mrs. F. H. Lewis. Mrs. Lewis, speaking from the standpoint of the home in relation to juvenile delinquency, said that in China the courts hold the parents responsible for the behavior of the children. She suggested that here in Portsmouth we might following this plan a step further by urging the courts to deal with both parents and children. Mrs. Lewis made the motion that representative women from those in attendance interview the judge of the juvenile court and request that the parents of children brought to his court for offenses be sentenced with the children to attend church and Sunday school regularly, reporting at stated intervals to the court. The motion was seconded and unanimously carried.

After Mrs. Lewis' address, a poem, "A Creed for Mothers," was read by Mrs. J. A. Branch. An offering for the May Fellowship Day project was received, after which the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Stanley Carne.

Following the program, a social hour was enjoyed, during which tea was served in the Ladies' Parlor of the church.

NEWS FROM LOCAL SOCIETIES.

The Ladies' Missionary Society of the Long's Chapel Christian Church held its regular monthly meeting at the church hut, Tuesday night, May 3, at 8:00 o'clock.

A very interesting program was presented by Mrs. Jamie Fonville, with several of the members taking part. The topic was "The Bible, the Light of the World."

New and old business was discussed. There were fourteen members present.

Mrs. William Fonville and Mrs. W. L. Hester had charge of the social hour.

When a man has a small trouble, he can laugh it off. But when he has a big trouble—a real trouble, he should go for a long walk. He should walk at least five miles quickly. That will send the blood bounding through his veins. It will take the blood out of his head. It will help to put him in control of himself.—Geo. M. Cohan.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Friends:

With warm weather here do you think about the water and the beach? Because I was born with the smell of salt air in my nostrils I associate it with the summertime. When I was old enough to leave home I used to lie awake at nights listening for the blowing of ships and tugs in the Bay. I longed to hear the buoy bell too.

Are you afraid of the water? If you play its game and follow its rules you need not be. Don't go in without an older person with you or nearby, don't go too far out, don't eat too much before going in and relax! Once that I found that I bobbed like a cork in the water when I relaxed I was never again afraid of the water.

It is nice to wiggle toes in the hot surface sand and then to push deeper into the cool moist underneath sand. There are many kinds of shells to be found, forts and cities to be built, caves and coves to be dug.

Reading by the seaside has special meaning. If you like Greek myths (and they are good reading!) try reading the stories of the return by sea from the Trojan wars. The river, sea or bay will soon become the troubled sea on which Ulysses and his men were voyaging home. I hope this reading will be done with well-shaded eyes.

Picnics or hotdog roasts are nice on the beach. The smell of the ocean, the gritty sand and the ever moving breeze give a very special appetite. I remember now the taste of clams cooked a dozen years ago on a driftwood fire.

Think about our Father too as you enjoy your beach trip. His sky, his sand, his ocean, his tiny creatures whose shells we find.

We thank thee God for the wild, calm waves
We thank thee God for the changing sand.
We thank thee God for the blowing breeze
We thank thee God for thy love and care.

Lakes and streams are good places to swim too. They have their special beauties around them. The water is usually colder in them and that also gives a good appetite.

Whether you spend a day or a summer at the water's side I hope it will be pleasant and that your sunburn will be gradual. Happy vacation.

DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT.

By TRELLA DICK

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Fourteen-year-old Betty Stevens was glowering as she looked over at the next-door neighbor's yard. Her mother, noticing her expression, was puzzled, for Betty had a sunny disposition and was seldom seen wearing an unpleasant frown.

Before she could inquire into the cause, Betty said crossly, "What's the use of trying to have things look attractive around here, if they won't do anything?"

"They? Oh, you mean our new neighbors. What—"

"They haven't planted a thing along their side of the driveway. Look at those weeds!"

Double driveways separate the two yards. On the Stevens' side a row of thrifty-looking petunia plants was growing.

"What kind of folks can they be!" Betty's tone held deep disgust.

"They haven't been there long, remember" her mother answered "and, with a little baby to look after, Mrs. Deming probably finds plenty of work to keep her busy in the house."

"Just the same," Betty frumpled, "you'd think the family would want to have their yard look as nice as ours does."

"Perhaps they do want to," her mother said. "Sometimes people can't do what they want to do."

"Well, I know I'll never like them if they're always going to keep their yard so untidy," Betty declared.

"Don't say that, dear," Mrs. Stevens protested. "Yards are not of sufficient importance to stand in the way of liking neighbors. I've found that 'Love thy neighbor as thyself' is a really good rule to follow, wherever the 'neighbor' may be and whatever he may or may not do. It promotes happiness and good-fellowship."

"Oh—of course you're right, Mother. I'll try to like them, but," Betty sighed, "that weedy yard isn't going to promote my happiness—especially when I think how beautifully the Beechers used to keep it."

"Why don't you do something about it?" asked her mother.

"Do something? What can I do?"

"Let me tell you a little story." Mrs. Stevens' eye twinkled. "The spring we moved into this house you were four years old. Peter was not quite one. We had no maid, and your father, because he was working long, hard hours at the plant, could help me very little. The neglected appearance of the approach to the house troubled us both, but we could not seem to find the time it would require to make it attractive. It looked, my dear"—Mrs. Stevens laughed—"it looked much worse than the one next door does now."

"Really?" Betty gazed at their lovely garden, with its wealth of spring blooms and its promise of later beauty. "It's hard to believe we were ever without flowers."

"We were! And we had but a very scraggly lawn. In contrast, the Beechers' yard was beautiful. I think Mrs. Beecher felt about us as you feel about the Demings, only she did something about it—something that would promote neighborliness."

"What did she do?" Betty asked eagerly.

"She came over one day and, saying her flowers needed thinning, asked if I'd like some of them. I hesitated because I was so busy; then she said she would be glad to help me set them out. This she did. Then everyone was happy. It was much nicer than resenting and criticizing us, wasn't it?"

Betty nodded and, lifting a laughing face, she said, "Mother, my petunias need thinning!"

"Well then—" Mrs. Stevens didn't have time to say any more, for Betty was gone.

She was back in a few minutes, her face shining. "They want me to help them; they don't know how to transplant flowers. They're glad I came over—and I am glad I went."

Betty was off before Mrs. Stevens could answer. But there wasn't much need for an answer, Mrs. Stevens thought to herself contentedly, as she went back to her work.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

"THE CAT'S AWAY."

President Smith is at the General Council. He has asked me to write an article for the college page—"some phase of Christian education, or any other subject you might think suitable." What an assignment! What a temptation! When the cat's away the mice play. Dr. Smith will not see this until it is in print. Why not write about him!

But let's start at another point—have a one-man testimony meeting. I have been here only a year. Why did I come here? Last year two other colleges offered me positions. This year two additional schools tried to interest me. Did I choose Elon because it offered a larger salary or a higher sounding title? No; all the others were more enticing at both these points.

I came to Elon because on talking with President Smith and Dean Bowden I decided they were the kind of men with whom I wanted to work. I am staying for the same reason. I am not new at college teaching. After securing my first college degree I taught in a church college in Egypt. On returning to America I concluded I could be most effective for the Kingdom of God by teaching the Gospel to college young people. After securing my seminary degree and my Ph. D. and getting some first-hand experience in the pastorate and some more foreign travel I returned to college teaching.

However, my experience with presidents and deans of Christian colleges was disappointing. They were good executives, but few of them had the least idea what the purpose of Christ was, what the aims of Christianity should be. Not one of those with whom I worked had had seminary training. They were the reaction from our schools' being run by theologians who were poor executives and untrained educators. One president handed me a list of five religious dogmas he said I must teach, not one of which is believed by a well-trained minister.

No wonder I considered giving up college teaching! Then I became acquainted with the administration of Elon and my confidence in church colleges was restored. For in President Smith and Dean Bowden the Southern Convention is extremely blessed. Here are men who know what a twentieth century college should be, know what Christianity is, and expect the two to go hand in hand. They are honest themselves and expect their teachers to be honest. They are executives and educators admired by all who know them.

However, one thing has disappointed me at Elon. Are the Baptist and Methodists more interested in the things which make Elon outstanding than members of the Southern Convention are? More Methodists and Baptists are sending their young people to Elon than are our own churches. We need to wake up and discover what a great asset we have in Elon College. I hope that next September I shall find more Congregational Christian young people in my classes.

ON CHRISTIAN UNITY.

churches, has largely resulted from fear—a rather vague fear that freedom was in some subtle and devious way being taken away from them, and that they were in danger of losing control of local church affairs. Some ministers have seen the ghost of creedal subscription hidden in the document. Others feared that a hierarchy of central ecclesiastical officialdom was in process of formation. It is usually admitted that these things were not on the surface of the document. The fear was that they were possibly there in germinal form which in the future might grow up and throttle freedom. Hence a dark suspicion that possibly something was being put over by "287" on an unsuspecting, easy-going Congregationalism.

Now personally, I do not share these fears. I have been associated with the negotiations with the E. and R. for six years now; I have known many of their leaders quite intimately; I went over the Basis of Union carefully in committee; and have shared in the counsels of our own official leadership at every step. I think I know their mind and purpose. I therefore feel the fears just mentioned are due to misapprehension and misinterpretation and have no real basis in fact.

But, and this is the important thing we must all remember, fear is a terrible and paralyzing emotion in any situation not necessarily because it is true or justifiable but just because it exists. Fear is fear, regardless of rationality. A panic does not have to be grounded in fact. A rumor, a bit of gossip, a misunderstood telephone conversation, can start a panic in any community.

The first and most fundamental thing we can do here at Oberlin is to meet all such fears frankly and openly and allay them. We must not discount them or belittle them. We must understand them, as a good pastoral counselor understands the fears of a troubled soul, understand them and then remove them, no matter at what cost, and then heal the sore place where they have been.

The fears of the thirty per cent and over of our churches and members who voted negatively on the Basis of Union are not only fears of what that document might lead to in the future. They are also fears that this Council may disregard the seventy-five per cent recommendation made by its Executive Committee and try to force the merger through regardless. This fear I think will soon be allayed when the Executive Committee presents its admirably conceived and worded resolution that no action either accepting or rejecting the Basis of Union be taken at this meeting. That resolution I hope will be overwhelmingly approved. This will then give us time to analyze our difficulties and consider how to banish fears and move forward with unity, assurance and spiritual joy.

All these minority fears can be resolved and banished if, after this resolution is passed, we then proceed to action which will assure the minority that neither now or in the future do we propose to effect a union with E. and R. or any other Christian bodies unless such union can be achieved without peril to or surrender of those aspects of religious liberty which we all hold precious and which none of us would willingly part with or betray.

May I emphasize the needs of another group largely represented here—I mean the approximately two-thirds majority who voted for the Basis of Union. Majorities, as well as minorities, may suffer bad effects from frustration. The best definition of democracy I know is that it is "the right of the majority to rule, coupled with and inseparable from the right of the minority to criticize." Democracy dies when either right is de-

MICAH, A PROPHET OF ISRAEL.

LESSON I—JULY 4, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak.—I Kings 22:14.

LESSON: I Kings 22:1-40.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 138:1-8.

A Little-Known Hero.

This man, Micah, is little-known, not only by the average layman, but even by the average minister. One suspects that you might ask a question about him on a "Quiz Program" and not get a correct answer as to who he was or what he did. And that in spite of the fact that there were a number of ministers in the audience. To be sure some folks might get him mixed up with Micah, the prophet. But he is another man altogether, an unsung prophet whose activities are summed up in a part of one chapter of Kings and the parallel account in Chronicles, a sort of back private in the rear rank as it were. Make no mistake about it, however, he was a real man, a moral hero if there ever was one. He certainly belongs in the "Hall of Fame" of Hebrews, in the list where the writer refers to "and of the prophets," heroes of faith who stood by their convictions. Let us get the facts in the case.

The Story.

Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, paid a visit to Ahab, king of Israel. During the visit Ahab reminded his guest that though Ramoth Gilead belonged to them, they were doing nothing about it—it was in the hands of the king of Syria. He asked Jehoshaphat if he would be willing to go down to take a whack at this Syrian gangster. Jehoshaphat said it was OK by him, but suggested that they inquire at the hand of the Lord. Here was a leader who thought God might be consulted about military affairs and the affairs of state. Ahab thereupon called his four hundred prophets and consulted them about the proposed venture, and they unanimously approved the thing, assuring the king that God would deliver the Syrians into their hands. It smelled a little fishy to the king of Judah—four hundred ayes and not a nay, and he asked if there were any other prophets who might be consulted so as to be sure they got both sides. "Well," said Ahab, "there is another prophet named Micah, but I don't like the guy, he is always prophesying bad things concerning me." However, at Jehoshaphat's insistence, he called Micah and asked him what he had to say.

When the messenger went for Micah, he told him what the other prophets had prophesied and suggested that Micah would do well to say the same thing. It so happened that this sturdy man of God was taking orders from nobody but God and he politely but pointedly told the messenger, "As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak." And when he came before the two kings, he spoke his piece. He prefaced his remarks with a bit of irony, telling of two visions he had had, the one of Israel scattered upon the hills like sheep without a shepherd, and the other, how a lying spirit had been put in the mouths of the prophets and how the kings had been misled. Zedekiah, evidently one of the big shots of the prophets, was burned up at this remark, and he smote Micah sharply on the cheek. The king commanded the prophet to be put in prison on a diet of bread and water. Micah simply said in so many words: "Let the turn of affairs show who is telling the truth. If you return in peace, then I am not telling the truth."

Well, events confirmed Micah's prophecy. Disguising himself and putting his robes on Jehoshaphat, Ahab went into battle. Sore pressed by the enemy, Jehoshaphat revealed his identity and was spared. But a stray arrow struck between the joints of Ahab's armour and inflicted a mortal wound. In a short while he lay dead in his chariot.

The Moral of the Story.

Well there are many interesting truths in this simple story. There is, of course, the fact that men may think that they speak for God and yet be mistaken. Micah does not charge these four hundred prophets with being crooked or insincere, he simply says they were mistaken. Mere goodness does not guarantee infallibility. Good men, the best of men, may sometimes be mistaken, may even mistake what the will of the Lord is. And this does not reflect any discredit upon God's chosen spokesmen.

Then there is the troublesome but truthful principle that men may fight for a just cause and yet not have the blessing of the God of Justice. There was one occasion in the history of Israel where the Ark of the Covenant was taken by pagan peoples, and again and again the chosen people of God were defeated and brought into subjugation. The hands of the people of God must be clean when they do battle for Him and His cause.

The outstanding truth in this lesson is the moral courage of Micah. It would have been so easy to agree with the majority, and perhaps so profitable. But here was a man who was unpurchasable, a man who was going to tell the truth no matter what the cost. He stands as a rebuke to many of us moderns who compromise the truth and who lie in word and in spirit all too often. Especially do we shrink from telling the unpleasant truth. Alas there are too many ministers who all too often preach what the folks like to hear, instead of what they ought to hear. And many a minister, out of affection for his parishoners, is putting them to sleep when he ought to be waking them from the sleep of death.

The spoken word and the written word is taken all too lightly by too many people today. There is a crying need for men like this unsung prophet and hero of that far off day and land, who boldly speaks the truth, even to those in high places, and who fears God so much that he is not afraid of the faces of men.

RESPONSIBILITY IN CHINA.

some of them nigh unto death; with the finding and training of new leadership for those churches; with the building of character strengthened with the virtues and the graces that are peculiarly Christian; with an effective Christian answer to the specious but alluring claims of anti-Christian ideologies; yes, with whether atheistic Communism or Christian Democracy ultimately wins the allegiance of a large part of the human race. It is our part of the job, the part that won't get done unless we do it. It is the part for which God must hold us responsible. Do we really mean business?

Try to put well in practice what you already know; and in so doing, you will, in good time, discover the hidden things you now inquire about. Practice what you know, and it will help to make clear what now you do not know.—Rembrandt.

COOPERATION IN EVANGELISM.

to all peoples and places. Every experienced missionary knows that this is so, and every young missionary church feels passionately that this is so.

... Perhaps the deepest reasons for the unitive power of Christian evangelism lies in the "union of hearts" which it produces, between the recipients of grace (the converts), the ministers of grace (the evangelists) and the Lord of grace in whom all find their strength and joy.

... Of course the true evangelist, like the true parent or teacher, will not presume upon his personal prerogatives. He refuses to become the object of grateful dependence, knowing that gratitude belongs not to him but to the Lord who called and sent him; and he looks forward to the day when the newly awakened convert will become independent of his father in the faith—a minister of grace to others and no longer merely a recipient of grace. The union of hearts between evangelist and convert rest at last—like all Christian unity—upon no merely personal attachment between them, but upon common loyalty to the same Lord.

... Where the impulse to evangelize others and preach the Gospel "throughout the world" begins to die out in the Church, the Church begins to disintegrate as a living fellowship; and no amount of indoctrination or skilled organization can prevent it from finally dropping to pieces, unless the missionary spirit is recovered. If the Ecumenical Movement should become a mere device for closing ranks, so as to present a "united front" but not an advancing front to the world, its doom would be sealed.

... In 1910, as for a century before that date, the great objective was still to carry the Gospel from the Western countries, where it was familiar, to those distant parts of the world where it was unfamiliar, so that every human being might have a fair chance of hearing and obeying God's Word: "The evangelization of the world in this (and it was implied in every succeeding) generation."

In 1910, society in most parts of the world was relatively stable; and if medical, educational, agricultural missions were making striking demonstrations of the social meaning of the Gospel, it was hardly expected that they would break up and remold the whole "cake of custom," in either East or West. China was still described as a "sleeping giant," bound by three thousand years of iron precedent—though the giant was feverishly rolling and muttering in his sleep. Europe was nearing the end of a century of peace and progress, which gave force to Tennyson's aphorism: "Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay." Missions could be interpreted, and were interpreted by some, as the spiritual side of the expansion of European and American civilization from West to East.

Today, less than forty years later, social chaos and moral chaos prevail in all parts of the world, both East and West. As the Jerusalem conference of 1928 duly noted, the missionary problem was no longer how to penetrate the "heathen" lands with Christian ideas, but how to withstand the alarming penetration of godless secularism into all lands, "Christian" or "non-Christian."

Ten years later, at Tambaram, it was further noted that godless secularism was only a passing phase; new pagan gods (or demons) of race and clan and nation and class were winning men's passionate allegiance, and threatening to destroy us all with their rivalries unless the One True God could step forth in majesty to save us again from polytheism.

... Faced with social chaos and resurgent paganism, the world over, the missionary movement is bound to think and plan with new boldness, if it is to catch up with God's design. The patterns and precedents to be followed are perhaps best suggested by those previous "Dark Ages" when missionary monks have established little islands of Christendom in great enveloping seas of heathendom—at first attracting individuals to these havens of refuge but ultimately converting whole tribes and nations in great mass movements, and changing the whole order of society.

The situation is both more desperate and more pregnant with revolutionary hope that Christianity has known for centuries. How long has it been since a whole nation has been so open to the Gospel as Japan is at this moment? In such a world, the remaking of nations, societies, civilizations as well as individuals must become a conscious part of the missionary objective, and methods must be employed which have some likelihood, under God, of converting the total life of a dying world order, before it sinks into ruin.

Business, measured by the Golden Rule, is a service rendered, the quality and worth of which equals the price charged and admits of a fair profit.

MISSIONS IN AFRICA.

Shortly after my arrival in South Africa, I had a great lesson in the oneness of mankind. Called to the theatre late one afternoon I was shocked to see a white form on the operating table where I was only accustomed to see black. A cup full of gasoline and a match had removed the superficial pigment-bearing cells from the whole body. The patient moaned and cried like a white woman. She required the same dose of morphine and other treatment and she died like a white woman would have died. She left her weeping husband and children just as any of you would have done. Can we read the story of the Good Samaritan, hear about the people of Africa, India and China and say: "Lord, who is my neighbor?"

In an international sense, South Africa touches us very closely. One of our South African statesmen called upon UN to consider South Africa as the bulwark of Christianity against tides rising in the East. Instead of the picture with the necessity for force and resistance implied I see rather the meeting place of the Indian and Atlantic Ocean South of our Cape. There these different waters mingle and fuse. Surely that is the Christian concept. South Africa with its white, black and brown races offers a laboratory in which international-interracial problems can be worked out by Christians without force.

WORTHWHILE BOOKLET.

"Community Help on Pastoral Problems," a report dealing with concrete ways in which ministers in both urban and rural communities may make more effective use of health and welfare resources in their communities to help meet the particular needs or parishioners, has been published by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

The 48-page booklet, written by John L. Mixon and Seward Hiltner, and published jointly by the Council's Department of Pastoral Services and the Department of Christian Social Relations, will be useful to health and welfare leaders in the community, as well as to the clergy.

A number of social workers, leaders in welfare programs and ministers of local churches were consulted in the preparation of the pamphlet, which is now available at 25 cents a copy from the Federal Council at 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

It is certainly discouraging when the income from our churches and Sunday schools is far less than our expense account. If we keep our bills paid it forces us to dig into our surplus fund to do it. Children eat just as much when our income is small as they do when it is large.

The year 1947 started off with splendid offerings. The income was good the entire year. We raised more money that year than we have ever raised during any other year since I have been your superintendent.

But not so for 1948. During January, February and March the weather was very bad, and a number of our Sunday school people could not get to church. Hence the offerings were very small, and sometimes nothing at all from some of the churches. But our expenses were even more. It took more coal than usual and the price was higher. It took more clothing as the weather was so cold. It took more shoes as it rained so much, and shoes we buy now cannot stand much water. Groceries are so much higher now than a year ago. The same amount of laundry that cost us from $45 to $50 per month now costs us from $80 to $85 per month. The matrons tell me the amount of washing sent to the laundry consists of sheets and bed spreads and things of that sort. The children's clothes are laundered here. Prices of labor and soap make the difference at the laundry.

Then, too, we wanted to raise $50,000 this year and make it the "Banner Year" of our thirty-two years of service here. We should be ahead of last year this time. I give you this information to let you know how we stand financially so far this year as to income.

It takes money to feed, clothe and care for little children, but it is worth the price. When we look back over the years and think of the fine young women we have sent out as nurses, secretaries and Church workers, and boys who are electricians, railroad engineers, builders, plumbers, as well as many other vocations in life, we feel that the Christian Orphanage has done a worthwhile work during the years. It desires your support.

ON CHRISTIAN UNITY.

nied. The minority, therefore, must not contemplate a frustrated majority with equanimity. To meet here at Oberlin and come to a full stop, period, would be a dangerous thwarting of the great ground-swell of Christian longing for greater unity. I have conferred with representative members of the minority and am glad to report that they are keenly conscious of this danger. Moreover, all of us must also keep in mind a considerate regard for our friends of the E. and R. church who have voted overwhelmingly for union. We must not leave them frustrated either!

It is therefore, psychologically and spiritually essential that we go forward toward unity for the sake of these majorities. Our motto here at Oberlin must be: "Not frustration, not retreat, but progress toward unity!"

TIMBER RIDGE.

Timber Ridge, Hampshire County, West Virginia, was in 1812. At that time a minister by the name of Joseph Thomas, familiarly known as "The White Pilgrim," came and held a meeting in a grove in a hollow just east of the present site of the church on the Kelsoe farm. About this time the log church was erected. The land was donated by William Grove. The early ministers who preached in that church building were Isaac N. Walter, Rev. Miller, Enoch Harvey, Michael Lohr, Christy Sine, Casper Allemon, and Simeon Ward.

The present building, a nice brick structure, was built in 1875, and was dedicated by Rev. Peter McCullough, of Dayton, Ohio. Ministers who have held pastorates here since the present building was erected are John Barney, Joseph Barney, A. J. Bibler, W. A. Dofflemeyer, James W. Dofflemeyer, W. C. Garland, A. R. Garland, W. T. Walters, Ira Mellott, A. W. Andes, A. R. Vancleave, Ivan R. Smith, Robert A. Whitten, and at present, Rev. Roy D. Coulter.

Among the outstanding ministers who have visited and preached at Timber Ridge Christian Church are Dr. H. Y. Rush, who later became editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty; Dr. J. P. Barrett, who was editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and was later editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty. Others were the Summerbells, Dr. Kitchen, Dr. Thomas A. Tripp, and many others too numerous to mention.

The pastor is now living in the beautiful brick parsonage erected and completed in April 1947, at a cost of ten thousand, four hundred dollars. The parsonage has every modern convenience, with oil furnace and hot water heat. The land was donated for the parsonage by Mr. and Mrs. Clement Oates, and Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Triplett. The building was erected under the supervision of a building committee composed of A. C. Oates, chairman, Fred L. Oates, Vernon Whitacre, Melvin Seldon, and A. C. Nelson.

BEFORE THE OFFERING.

A man's money is an extension of his body, an enlargement of that material, physical equipment through which his spirit works.

Money is another pair of legs, and lo! it can go where otherwise we could never go, walking amid the need of China today or ministering in India and the islands of the sea.

Money is another pair of hands and it can carry burdens that our own fingers cannot touch in our community, our nation, and around the world.

Money is another pair of vocal chords and it can speak where our voice could not be heard, teaching and preaching where in personal presence we may never go.

What a man does with his money he is in a real sense doing with himself.

OVERREACHING BOUNDARIES.

work, for instance, designed to salvage the war's lost generation, building upon what remains of leadership and equipment, adding fresh personnel and techniques, even the cautious preliminary announcements bringing a new thrill of hope to old and young alike, I say when such a program has to be reduced to a minor fraction of its intended coverage and activity, is it any wonder that the able and eager staff at Geneva is disappointed and discouraged?

When Church World Service has to close down active warehouse centers, not because the need for used clothing no longer exists, but because there is not money enough to meet the costs of processing and shipping these goods and also to do the other things that our friends overseas tells us they need even more—that is a sorry commentary on this great country of ours, the figures of whose prosperity and luxury spendings and gambling and liquor totals stagger the rest of the world! I know that the race track habitués and the chief consumers of liquor are not our church people from whom we would expect large sharings. But even so, the rest of us have not sensed the urgency of the situation, or I am sure we would have a different story to tell. . . .

The third point of emphasis I would make must have occurred to you already. For in its final analysis our situation is not primarily a question of dollars with a few spiritual implications. It is a question of basic spiritual values and their implementation in dollars. Some years ago Everett Clinchy wrote that the kind of world we would eventually have would depend upon the kind of religion that possessed the men and women of that world. Note—not the kind of religion they have, but the kind of religion that has them! Well, if the religion of Jesus Christ, the religion of brotherhood, of mercy, of sacrifice, of love, really has possession of us, some of the answers become increasingly clear.

Some of the facts become personally embarrassing. But are we possessed, gripped by the spirit of Jesus? For any who profess to be his disciples, it is impossible to evade the clear influence of his words in Matthew 25—"He that gives not, serves not, shows not love for even the least hungry child in Korea or Bulgaria, the humblest and most forlorn refugee, is thereby refusing Me."

In all of this I am not thinking of Congregationalists alone. I am think-of all our varying groups who are finding in this redemptive service—and would find it still more if it were more truly a sacrificial service—a common bond of brotherhood that translates ecumenism from a strange and somewhat bewildering term into a united way of living and doing the will of God in the spirit of Christ. It was the conference of secretaries at St. Cergue in Switzerland—men of many denominations right from the acute problems of their respective countries, men whose own clothes were scant and shabby, men who have known hunger—it was this group, not some comfortable ecclesiastic, far removed from scenes of devastation and destruction and destitution, who set as the keynote for the year 1948, even in the face of hunger and all other physical needs, "the primacy of the spiritual." That is after all church and community life as surely as it is the controlling objective for relief and reconstruction—the primacy of the spiritual in every aspect of our life.

Do you accept this interpretation of values? Then let us all act upon it—not quibbling over quotas or by comparisons with what others are doing or failing to do. Beginning with ourselves, let us implement the fullest possible program for the revival and rehabilitation of Christian lives, Christian institutions, Christian community activities.

O, my friends, that word from St. Cergue is right—our emphasis ought always to be on the primacy of the spiritual. Then this primacy must and will express and project itself practically in terms of the present emergency. And when this is done—it will be done better as it done together, in the kind of loving and understanding service that gives substance to Christ's prayer—that His followers may all be one. In this way far more than through any proclamations or votes, or convocations, do we become one, in lifting to their feet again our comrades of the way, in helping them to breathe again the ozone of faith and hope, in joining ranks all together as revived and empowered we move forward and upward into the one eternal realm of the Kingdom of God's love.

SIN.

Man calls sin an accident; God calls it an abomination.

Man calls sin a blunder; God calls it blindness.

Man calls sin a chance; God calls it a choice.

Man calls sin a defect; God calls it a disease.

Man calls sin an error; God calls it enmity.

Man calls sin fascination; God calls it fatality.

Man calls sin infirmity; God calls it iniquity.

Man calls sin luxury; God calls it lawlessness.

Man calls sin a mistake; God calls it madness.

Man calls sin a trifle; God calls it tragedy.

Man calls sin a weakness; God calls it willfulness.

There is only one remedy for sin—the precious blood of Christ which was shed for the remission of sins on Calvary's cross.—Selected.

Extracts from the Report of the Commission on Stewardship

By Rev. Samuel Noble Oliver, Chairman

. . . The first need is the need of almost all the countries of the world for reconstruction. The six years of war, closing in 1945, have left our world torn and disrupted almost beyond belief. Three years of effort in rebuilding have only sufficed to begin the task. Peoples privileged to live in countries which escaped the war now have the responsibility of assisting in the rebuilding. This is the meaning of the Marshall Plan for America.

The second need of our world is for the Gospel of Christ. Deep and pressing as the physical needs of our world, an even greater need is the need for satisfying the hunger of soul which is characteristic not only of the war devastated countries but all countries, like America, as well.

The third need of our world today is for a deeper commitment among our Christian people to the causes dear to the heart of Christ. Too long have we named the name of Christ and not lived our lives in joyous conformity with His will. We have followed the devices and desires of our own hearts. Now, to meet the challenges of Christian rebuilding, and a Christian sharing of the Gospel, we need to make an unreserved commitment of our lives and resources to His Way.

The Commission on Stewardship carefully considered this request of the Superintendents, transmitted through the Executive Committee of the General Council, and voted unanimously: "We recommend to the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches, that the major emphasis of the next biennium be the enlistment of the people and churches of our Fellowship in the experience and practice of Christian stewardship. This will mean that each church of our Fellowship should utilize every opportunity during the coming two years, to confront the Congregational Christian with the call to commit his life unreservedly to God for service in this world, and to assist the committed Christian in the ordering of his life for the greatest usefulness in the Kingdom of God."

For the individual Christian stewardship should mean at least seven things:

1. Reading the Bible daily, together with "the literature of power."
2. Weekly worship with fellow Christians.
3. Recreation, physical and mental, to balance the main vocational interests.
4. A certain number of hours of Christian work each week for which no pay is received.
5. Making certain one's income is a result of Christian activity, especially in the field of stocks and bonds.
6. Arranging one's outgo so that a certain percentage goes for Christian purposes.
7. Telling others of Christ, and helping them to lead disciplined Christian lives.

A commitment of this kind, to a fuller stewardship in the lives of our people, will mean a transformation of our churches.

Living Memorials

Mr. and Mrs. James Rajah of the United Theological College, Bangalore, admire their new baby. Son and grandson of Christian ministers, Mr. Rajah attended the American College of our Madura Mission. He is now preparing to serve as minister of the new united Church of South India.

The women of the Southern Convention, it will be remembered, sent funds from Life Memorials and Memberships to Bangalore for a number of years. (Cut appears through courtesy of American Board News Bulletin.)

News Flashes

The Suffolk Church is rebuilding the organ, adding two new stops, chimes, and replacing the old console.

Work on a new educational plant has been started at the Bethlehem (Nansemond) Church, the Rev. R. E. Brittle, pastor.

The Virginia Summer School for rural ministers will be held July 12-16 at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Blacksburg, Va.

President Leon Edgar Smith is a patient at the Alamance General Hospital, Burlington, N. C., where he underwent an operation on July 1.

The Rev. Vivian B. Harrell, Jr., is supplying the Wakefield pastorate this summer. Churches in that pastorate are: Wakefield, Burton's Grove, and Barrett's.

On Sunday, June 7, Rev. Wm. J. Andes and the Winston-Salem Church dedicated an organ recently purchased. Superintendent Scott shared in the service.

Rev. Arnold Slater, Chattanooga, Tenn., a former pastor of Damascus, at Sunbury, N. C., will assist the pastor, Rev. W. L. Wood, in an evangelistic meeting in September.

Rev. John C. Peeler, minister of the St. Mark's Evangelical and Reformed Church, near Elon College, assisted Rev. Kenneth D. Register in special services at Union (N. C.) during the week of June 21.

The Holy Neck Church is looking forward to the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention which is to be held in their church, July 20, from 10:00 to 4:00. They are expecting their new pastor, the Rev. Mr. Grice, August 15.

Rev. and Mrs. H. E. Crutchfield and family have moved their residence from Holland, Va., to R.F.D. 1, Box 90, Elon College, N. C. Mr. Crutchfield took up his work as pastor of Bethlehem and Apples Chapel Churches July 1.

More than 600 persons were served dinner at the 50th anniversary celebration of Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson at Oakland. Three new members were received into church on that day. And on the same day at an evening service at Liberty Spring Dr. Johnson received 18 new members.

It is reported that a new church has been organized near Burlington, N. C. Approximately twenty-three people have purchased a lot in a new and growing settlement. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield is conducting services in the homes of the members each Sunday evening. Zion has been chosen as the name for the new church. The group hopes to erect their educational building by early fall.

Ingram Church observed Children's Day, June 13, with a program planned by Mesdames Paul Farthing LeRoy Adams, and Clarence Landrum. A Youth Fellowship was organized recently with the following officers: Elsie Satterfield, president; Jean Marie Ferrel, vice-president; Janet Dunn, secretary; Clifton Satterfield, treasurer. Mrs. Fletcher Whitlow is the director of the Bible School, July 5-10. The pastor, Rev. Clyde Fields, is conducting the revival services this week.

JUBILEE AT TIMBER RIDGE.

In looking over the church membership roll it was discovered that one-twelfth of our membership of 245 persons had been members for at least fifty years. Believing that these persons should be set apart for peculiar honor, a "Jubilee Service" was arranged. The morning worship hour on the third Sunday in July will be devoted to this service. Each member will be given a certificate of high quality and appearance, and the women's organization will provide identical flowers for each one. Transportation to and from the church will be provided for the "honor guests." Special seats at the church will be provided that all may sit in a body.

HOMECOMING AT ISLE OF WIGHT.

The Rev. Stanley C. Harrell will speak at the Home Coming Services of the Isle of Wight Christian Church on July 18, at two o'clock. All members, ex-members and any others interested are cordially invited. It has just been remodeled, with a new heating system installed and the furniture re-upholstered. Members will be interested to learn that a new floor has been laid, new memorial windows put in and the church now contains six classrooms. Two new Bulletin Boards and various vases and other gifts have been donated.

Music—including duets and quartets, will be under the direction of Mrs. L. H. Whitley of Windsor. The history of the church will be read by S. Ray Turner of Isle of Wight, one of the young local members. Communion will be held during the services. Rev. Jesse Roberts will be the Master of Ceremonies.

THE SLEEPING CLERGYMAN.

In London last summer I saw a play entitled, "The Sleeping Clergyman." I soon discovered that the play, as such, had absolutely nothing to do with a clergyman. Instead of being religious, it was purely secular and realistic. It dealt with a terrible modern plague, and the victory of science over disease. It was filled with human problems. It came to grips with the great issues of the day. It had a measure of faith and vision. But it had nothing about a clergyman—except for the fact that all during the evening a clergyman sat on the left hand side of the stage—asleep! Once, during the course of the play, he did cause a little excitement. He opened his eyes, yawned and with some effort rose from his comfortable chair; he then stretched himself, yawned again, settled back into his easy chair and was once more fast asleep. He was indeed "The Sleeping Clergyman"!

Now is this a true picture of the part which clergymen, and the church are taking in the drama of modern life? Obviously Christian people will answer: "Of course not! The church is not only interested in human rights, and other social problems, but it is also doing something about them. We have our social organizations. We have our home and foreign mission societies. We have our schools and colleges for Negroes. And we have our religious journals which are crusading for great moral and social causes. The church is not asleep. Through the Federal Council and the World Council of Churches, it is going to win the world for Christ—if not in this generation, then certainly in the next."

This is what the well informed, loyal, missionary-minded church member will probably say. But what about labor? What about big business? What about the United States Congress, the United Nations, India, China, Russia, Europe? We certainly would not get the same kind of an answer from these quarters. For it is amazing how little real influence Christianity has in 1948.—Stanley I. Stuber to the Associated Church Press.

American Board Women, World Around

Address by MISS ALICE E. CARY, Former Missionary in Japan
Japan Secretary of the American Board

What has the American Board accomplished the world around in its work for women? From its earliest days, education has been at the forefront, in an attempt to raise the status of women in non-Christian lands. Everywhere education for girls had its beginnings in the missionary enterprise. Today where there are well run and well equipped schools for girls under government or secular control, they complement rather than compete with established mission schools. We may well look with the pride of achievement at the leadership which has grown from our schools, knowing that they were the fore-runners of enlightened education. Also they have been the training ground for the finest leadership in our fields today, for from them come the leaders of deep spiritual strength and broad educational vision.

In what other fields have our missionary women played a great part? Like all missionaries they are often called upon to be "jills of all trades." If the call were for teachers that was the thing they were ready to do if they were adequately trained and of a high enough professional standard. We have nurses, doctors, agriculturalists, social workers, writers and many other kinds of workers. Our missionaries have gone out with chickens under their arms, as it were, or equipped with nurses' and doctors' bags.

One missionary, on her way to Micronesia, knowing that she might not see a dentist for several years, carried a dentist emergency kit. Little did she think that she would be called upon to help one of the senior women who had had to be on a liquid diet for years because all her teeth were gone. What did she do? Out came her kit, she took a mould of the fellow-missionary's mouth, and sent it to a dentist on another island several days' trip away. When the dentures came back they fitted perfectly, or at least well enough for ease in ordinary eating.

Others have helped people whose eyesight did not allow of their reading their Bibles. A plea to friends back home brought many pairs of outgrown glasses, or new ones in many cases. An oculist in this country might turn grey with horror, but what relief and joy to those who were able once more to read the words of life for themselves.

The stories about our national

Christian women are thrilling telling, stories of the women we see in church and pulpit as ordained ministers, as church workers. We find nurses and doctors of a high degree of training. We know of church women in every land reaching out beyond their local church, even beyond their national church in a commitment to that same spirit which sent the first missionaries out with a need to share with others the thing that had enriched their own lives and their own people. For instance in Africa there is the Zulu woman from the southern part of the continent who has served for many years as a missionary to the people in Rhodesia, as remote from her own home in both locality and language as Mexico would be from here. Churches of India send missionaries to Java, while earnest Christians in the Gilbert Islands are asking to send some of their trained workers into our Micronesia field. For years the Women's Missionary Society of our church in Japan has sent a woman worker to Formosa and another to Korea.

The feeling of belonging to a world church has been growing among the women everywhere, the wide observance of the World Day of Prayer having played a great part in strengthening this. A quick survey of the celebration of this service in many of our mission lands illustrates this sense of mission and togetherness.

Let us follow this day around the world. In our American Board fields Japan is the first country the day reaches. From Tokyo comes a report

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.
Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

BRINGING UP THE EDITOR.

The editor is six years old with the appearance of this issue and therefore is able to qualify as a juvenile. Some day, if he is given time, he may become an adolescent! This business of bringing up an editor is a serious business, a slow process which cannot be accomplished overnight.

When confronted by a great task Jeremiah cried out, "I am but a child, O Lord!" This was no childish alibi. It was the stark realization of human inadequacy in the face of a divine task. Mere years do not guarantee maturity. Who is equal to the demands of divine service? The towering problems of the Christian pulpit and press make children of us all. We can only pray that His strength may be made perfect in our own weakness.

FLIGHT ONE.

Symbolically speaking, the editor has been "up in the air" many times, in consternation as well as in imagination. His first actual flight, however, was a return trip from the Oberlin Council. The trip was pleasant and safe, thanks be, and the editor is grateful that he is able to record this first flight.

One's first flight is painfully conducive to reflection. The fascinating beauty of a new perspective and the romantic history of aeronautics vie for attention.

To realize the antiquity of man's desire to conquer the air, one need merely turn to the mythology of the ancient Greeks. The story of Daedalus who made a pair of wings for his campainion Icarus, and the misfortune which overtook the latter when, flying too close to the sun, the wax with which the wings were fastened to his body melted and fell to the earth, is a well-known one. We smile at the story, but the truth is basic. The regnant and immemorial desire to conquer the air has laid the long and costly foundation for every modern flight.

The crude essays at human flight recorded in the early histories and literatures of many peoples, the first powered flight of a heavier than air machine by the Wright Brothers a Kitty Hawk in 1903, the non-stop flight of Charles A. Lindberg in 1927 from New York to Paris which started the world into the realization that aviation had become a world encircling reality, the tremendous impetus given to flying by the recent war, the new dimensions of flight by jet propulsion—these are some of the milestones in modern air transport which has assumed the proportions of a major industry.

When one looks down from the air upon what appears to be midget homes, automobiles and people, he thinks how small many of our petty strivings must seem to almighty God. The study of countless scientists, the daring of innumerable pilots, the genius and wealth of untold manufactueres support every modern flight. Yonder airport with its mighty beacon, its meteorological and weather information, its supporting ground crew awaits the safe landing of every plane.

In God's sky as well as on God's earth, we realize that "Underneath are the Everlasting Arms." And when the amazing, time saving flight has been completed, when we resume our terrestrial duties, the words of the ancient prophet loom with startling significance: "They shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint."

WANT A PREACHER?

A New England pulpit was vacant. The pulpit committee heard a minister preach in a neighboring church. A call was extended, and accepted. The new minister and family made their transcontinental move and are now safely and happily anchored in their new parish. The church paid slightly less than two thousand dollars for travel, moving and incidental expenses in order to secure the minister of their choice. Neither distance nor expense could daunt this congregation in their pursuit of a suitable minister.

It is not necessary to conclude that a church must go a great distance in order to find a satisfactory minister. It is altogether likely that some churches overlook nearby ministerial timber in a vain effort to import a superior preacher from afar. The wise congregation knows what it wants. It studies the record as well as the personality of each candidate for the pulpit, never makes a decision on the basis of the cheapest man available, stands ready to implement its mature decision with adequate financial support.

WANT A PASTOR?

Some congregations complain that their minister is not a good pastor, while others deliberately plan to foster the pastoral habit. Some congregations naively conclude that the minister is or is not cut out to be a pastor, while others realistically conclude that all habits are conditioned by numerous influences and that the pastoral habit is no exception to this rule.

How does a congregation go about the cultivation of a pastor? A very simple but pleasant expedient, not quite extinct, is that of inviting the parson (and family?) to dinner. That is one way of getting him to visit. And having been so rewarded for an initial visit, the average ministerial conscience would certainly demand a second visit. A number of churches in the Southern Convention are supplementing their ministers' salaries by modest allowances for travel. This puts the nonvisiting ministers on the spot. It also gives the conscientious pastor deserved assistance in meeting the unavoidable and mounting cost of travel. Finally, by intangible but none the less real ways—friendship, sympathy, understanding, moral support—every congregation opens or closes the door to a great pastoral ministry.

When men speak ill of thee, live so as nobody may believe them.—Plato.

The Lord's Supper-and Social Action

By DOUGLAS HORTON, Minister, The General Council

A number of important concerns will engage your interest at this ninth regular meeting of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches. In particular the question of the proposed union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church will be before us; but we should hardly allow the possibilities of this new alliance to lay so distracting a hold on our imagination as to cause us to neglect the consideration of our more regular but no less mighty enterprises.

The very headlines of our recent literature announce the "dangerous opportunities" which lie before us. "Near East people," I read. "are at the crossroads." What missions from the United States shall be stronger—the secular or the Christian? India needs Christian aid and encouragement to make her new tomorrow a Christian day of growth through liberty. Africa is a keystone in the arch of tomorrow, whatever shape it assumes; will it be Christian? In the great Pacific world so recently made free, our pioneering work must be completed. China is awakening; perhaps more is at stake or the world's tomorrow there than in any other part of the world.

Japan hopes for freedom from poverty, confusion, disease; shall her people turn to the past, to Russia, or to Christ? We must strengthen our historic work in Mexico—one of the great missions of tomorrow. Europe needs new faith—and the key to this spiritual reinvigoration is in the hands of the churches—that is to say that it is in part of our hands.

Our work at home is staggering in its dimensions. Literature for our church schools is in preparation and more must be projected, for no denomination is ever stronger than its schools. Summer conferences and work camps for our youth, already planned, must be administered. The fastest growing work we have in charge—that of, by, and for young adults—cries for our attention. Ministry to our college campuses, ministry to the unreached, ministry to immigrants, ministry to migrants, ministry to foreign-language groups—these and half a score of other ministries, clearly defined, well organized, call at once for review and fresh support.

The rural church, the seed-bed of our general church life, and the city church, in the midst of the disiccating winds of secularized culture—both of these seek our aid. Church extension!—this is above all else the demand of today, for if we do not follow the shifting populations, we shall be left without people, and they without us. Magazines, books, hymnals, visual aids, devotional materials, aids for radio work—if we do not utilize the instruments of modernity, the children of mammon will leave in darkness the children of light. Pensions and insurance for veterans of the pulpit, who have borne the heat and burden of the day—schools and colleges for the underprivileged, common ground interracial programs—international, intercultural, interclass approaches to Christian cooperation and mutual understanding—all these and many other foundation concerns will have their place on our agenda.

But it is at this point that you would want me to stop and say in particular what you have told me to say: This vast structure, this multi-million dollar enterprise, is no stronger than its foundation—and the foundation is our sensitivity to, our conformity with, the will of God. We can do no more for our fellow men than we are willing to let God do for us and through us. Our relations with them are beneficent, indifferent, or even evil according as our relation with Him is strong or weak. Preaching to men is empty if there is no God to preach about. Meeting the physical needs of men is a partial and unsatisfactory project if we cannot impart something to their souls. Even the satisfying of intellectual needs is a fragmentary activity.

At the conclusion of the first world war, H. G. Wells, surveying the possibilities of the future and the choice that humanity would be forced to make between international cooperation and fighting on a colossal scale, wrote, "From now on it is a race between education and catastrophe." After the last war, however, Mr. Justice Roberts made a far more astute and arresting observation: "Education and catastrophe," he said, "are now in league with one another." It is only the educated man that we have to fear. The untutored peasant cannot make an atomic bomb nor organize a modern army. Something more is needed for our safety than education: and that something is direction—the direction which is felt by a person sensitive to the will of God revealed in Christ.

Furthermore it is not only the content of our ministries which fails when our relations to God are forgotten; without a lively contact with Him, our humanitarian motives turn to dust. Only the age of faith produces missionaries and ministers in pulpit and in pew. Only the experience of God in Christ can equip a man for the crucifying experiences of work for his fellows.

What are the ways the practical ways of establishing this relationship with God and developing it? Doubtless there are many such ways but I am asked (and I cannot tell you how eagerly I respond) to suggest one way which, if earnestly pursued, would strengthen us and our enterprise beyond compute. This lies through a better understanding of the Lord's Supper, and the stewardship to God which it entails.

There are those who do not understand the Lord's Supper and feel estranged and embarrassed when it is being celebrated. There are so many others, however, who derive from it both inner serenity and social passion that the rite must surely be examined. Indeed it seems clear that the man in the pew is now beginning to have a new awareness, as his minister in our generation has made a new discovery of the significance of the Common Table.

The exciting thing about a communion service lies in its action, as is brought out in the words of P. T. Forsyth, the great English Congregational thinker, whose centenary is just being observed; "the symbolism (of the Lord's Supper) did not lie in the elements, but in the action—word and deed. It lay in action . . . on Christ's part . . . it was the action that was symbolical, the breaking rather than the bread, the outpouring (Continued on page 12.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Next week the School of Missions and the Pastors' School at Elon should bring together the pastors and a large number of leaders of our local churches. Considerable work and nearly a year of time have gone into arranging for this combined school. Best of teachers and leaders have been secured. The cost is most reasonable. The Elon campus is ready. And the possibilities for increasing the strength and effectiveness of our work are great. It is not too late to decide to attend.

By reference to the printed program I see that Dr. Martin L. Goslin, who was such a favorite last year as a Bible teacher is to be back again this year; that Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds, head of the department of Religion and teacher of Bible at Elon, is again on the teaching staff; Mrs. Judson Feibiger, wife of the State Superintendent of Iowa, and vice-president of the National Home Board of Missions, will teach the Home Mission study book: "America's Geographical Frontiers"; Mrs. Rowland M. Cross, one of our own missionaries to China, will teach the Foreign Mission study book: "China in the Asia of Today"; Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher, executive secretary of the Missions Council, New York, will speak daily on "The Mission of the Church in the Present World Scene"; Dr. Ira D. Black, New York, famous for his methods in Evangelism, will teach a course: "Techniques for Successful Visitation Evangelism"; besides these full courses there are numerous other valuables such as vespers on the campus, and addresses each evening in the chapel by outstanding leaders. There are to be workshops on all phases of church work, special conferences, and discussion groups.

And lest I forget, there is a beautiful campus, good shade, green grassy places, good fellowship, quiet rooms, good food, rest! (And perhaps you can take a few days off when you get back home to really rest.) But what you are going for is to get help and inspiration to do better work in your church and to live a happier, fuller life as a Christian, and if you go in the spirit of such an ideal you will return happy that you went. Churches and denominations which have grown and developed great strength of leadership, both local and world-wide, have been those which have made much use of just such training conferences.

Wise is that church which will encourage its members to attend such times of training and fellowship and vision. Exceedingly wise is that church will help its young people to attend their summer conferences. They have a chance there to catch a glimpse of the deepest, finest meaning of life, and to join with others in dedication of their lives to Christian living and serving. Many of the great laymen of our church had the advantage of such training and fellowship in their youth, and many of the leaders in our pulpits made their final decisions at just such conferences. Let us see to it that we have goodly representatives at our summer conferences, and let us make the most of our own local summer meetings in order that the church may gain ground rather than lose it during the summer.

AMERICAN BOARD WOMEN, WORLD AROUND.

of a collection of Yen 10,000, $2,000, to be sent to the Christians of China and the Philippines, "to those lands where we bought so much of suffering and loss." The leader of the meeting said, "We are very happy to take a share as our expression of national penitence as well of Christian fellowship of the world."

In China, at Shanghai, women of seven nationalities met and prayed together, reporting a keen interest as they prayed for the world and made a contribution for the destroyed sections of their own city. A new departure was made with the broadcasting of this service in Chinese. In another part of China a collection of $2,100,000 in Chinese money was taken for the refugees in their midst. This is not much in American money, but it is indicative of the spirit of sharing and service.

The women of South India, in addition to a sacrificial offering, voted a week of self-denial for the benefit of their own home missions program, an emphasis not noted before.

From Africa we hear of an increasing ability on the part of native women to pray out loud and for people beyond their own horizons. Dondi sent a sum of money to help the straying children of Europe, while other offerings were for the leper camps and for home mission projects. In Durban, South Africa, a meeting of five hundred young people reports a surging spirit of prayer. In many places in Africa this was the first year such meetings were attempted.

In city and village women came together, sometimes only four, another eight, but with a program of prayer begun which will lead to greatly increased participation another year. In one village there was a feeling of regret at the smallness of the collection taken, but when thought is given to the fact that most of the women there were dressed in string skirts and their babies wrapped in animal skin, any gift may be considered a large amount. When an old farmer wandered in and asked what the purpose of the meeting was, he was told, "We are praying for everybody everywhere."

Greece with its own problems and needs so very real and pressing took a collection of $18 for Macedonia to help the refugees, uprooted from their villages by the guerilla activities.

No word has come as yet about the meetings in the Philippines, but from my own experience I can tell of the wondrous spirit of generosity and forgiveness which I found there. I shall never forget standing in a little church destroyed by the Japanese and as yet not rebuilt except for bamboo uprights, and grass walls and roof. After hearing of the plight of the Japanese Christians a woman rose and said, "I think we should send some money to the Japanese Christian to help them rebuild their churches. They are so much worse off than we. "That little group took up a collection of a hundred pesos, fifty American dollars, to send to their erstwhile enemy. Not until later did I know that the husband and three children of that woman were brutally murdered by the Japanese!"

We American women take our place in the long line of hands that conveys from land to land the ongoing Christian fellowship in Christ which binds us together in mutual trust, love and service.

This is a good time for the churches of the Convention to pay their apportionment.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

CHOOSING MY COLLEGE.

Will you choose a college for your son, or will he choose a college for himself? Will you and your son sit down together, consider the pros and cons, and together select a college where he is to receive his academic training? Or will he and his school chums select his college? I read a very illuminating article sometime ago in which the writer contended that a high school graduate ready for college would and should choose his college as he would choose his friends. He made a good case of it. Perhaps he was right if education and education alone is the object. For the Christian there is more than academic training involved. If the home is a Christian home, it is interested in the spiritual welfare of its son and will want to put him in a Christian college—in a college where the faculty is selected with care and where Christian character and church connection are the determining factors in that selection. You may find good Christian men and women on faculties of state or private colleges, but church connection is not the determining factor in making up faculties for such schools. A Christian school chooses to be Christian on the campus, in the classroom, and in the very atmosphere of the school.

Does your denomination have its own college to which you and others of your denomination are expected to give support? There is a Christian duty here that no one can escape. He may ignore it. He may disregard it, but nevertheless his duty is there and will remain there until it has been discharged. When you send your son or daughter to your own church college, you render your church, your denomination, a very definite service.

When a student enters college, that college becomes his in a very definite sense. Its traditions, its spirit, its contributions, its yells all become his. He becomes an alumnus of that college and so long as he lives, he is a part of it. If he enters his own church college, he will meet many of the young people of his denomination. His friends and associates will be in his church. A solidarity of fellowship, of understanding, of interest, and of purpose is created. After graduation his interest is not divided; that is, by loyalty to his church and loyalty to his Alma Mater which is outside the fellowship of his church. He is interested and gives his support to his church and her institutions, including his church college.

Parents of the Christian Church should think of these things. There are virtues in them. The time has passed when you should be called upon to decide whether Elon College is a good college or not. Its influence, reputation, and efficiency are well established. Its rating among institutions of higher learning has been determined.

A prominent physician was being interviewed recently by an insurance agent about providing for the education of his children. His wife said, "Remember. You will probably want to send our children to Duke University." The physician asked why. Then he explained, "I went to Duke for my undergraduate work. My three younger brothers went to Elon College. When they came to medical school at Duke, they were just as well prepared as I was when I entered medical school there."

If you have a son or daughter whom you plan to enter in college in September and are considering Elon College, it would be well for you to apply at once. At Elon we shall endeavor to make room for our own church people if it is possible.

FIFTH SUNDAY OFFERINGS.

The majority of our churches are rural. Summer months are less profitable for city churches. Attendance in rural churches oftentimes increases. When worshippers attend church these days, they think not only of singing hymns, offering prayers, and listening to sermons, but they think of the wider reaches of the church. Contributions are made in a material way by contributing a part of what has been lent them that the gospel message may be carried on. In the church program education has always held an important place. This fact is accentuated by existing conditions today. If the church is to hold its position and make its contribution in this critical age, its leaders must be thoroughly prepared and seriously grounded in those things that contribute to Christian faith and Christian service.

Elon College stands as our denomination's outpost in preparing its leadership. Of course, no institution of higher learning can prosecute its program without sufficient funds for expenses and necessary undertakings. Contributions from our churches have not been very inspiring during recent weeks. We are hoping for more generous and wider support.

A LETTER FROM SHAOWU.

American Board Mission,
Foochow, Fukien, China,
June 20, 1948.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN,
1536 E. Broad Street,
Richmond 19, Va., U.S.A.

Dear Friends of Shaowu:

Do you realize what an exciting place Shaowu is, particular when you leave it? Dorothy and Dick came away to Foochow. The result was the arrival of their baby. Frances and Ed started off on a hiking trip to visit the church centers and take medical aid. Result: a wedding! We Chandlers stayed in Shaowu for many weeks last autumn with our beloved quartette. We came away sure that anything might happen. Well, it has, though not just the way we expected. Anyway, all you friends of Shaowu should be happy with us that there are now to be two homes in the Mission. For around here on this side of the world, having a home is a wonderful thing indeed—for ourselves, and for all the folks who come in and out. We found the Jackson home filling a place of light and comfort and joy; nothing else like it in that whole city. Now there will be also the Riggs home. Happy Shaowu!

It was happy we two Chandlers were to have made our trip to North China, where we lived so long, and be there when Frances and Ed came flying to Tientsin to the Whitaker home. Her parents are there in our North China Mission. We have known Frances always, and very especially claim Ed, too. So we had a real part in the wedding.

It was a simple, very beautiful home wedding. There were twenty-five friends. There were flowers in profusion, a most wonderful, tiered wedding cake made right there by expert loving hands. There was Virginia Stowe to play the wedding march, and David Stowe to be the best man. There was lovely Ming Chu, Frances' Chinese adopted sister, who came first down the winding stairs to us in her long green and white satin Chinese dress, carrying pink roses. And there was Frances who soon followed down, tall and graceful in her shimmering white gown and filmy veil with tiny white rosebuds in her hair and a bouquet of white roses on her arm. The most beautiful thing of all was her radiance and Ed's as he stepped forward to meet her and they stood before her father for their vows. My husband's prayer was for all their days and

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Little Friends:

Children's Religion is published for our parents and teachers by Pilgrim Press. Lately it has carried on the inside of its back cover a drawing and a hymn for boys and girls. Two of them have been "Fairest Lord Jesus," "Sweetest Story" and "A Mighty Fortress." If you can get a copy of this why don't you color the drawing, and paste the hymn in a book to start a hymn collection?

One of the fine things about our church is the singing. Our hymns are old and new. Some were written

When you sing, stand erectly, open your mouth wide and really enjoy the feel of the song and its words as they come out of your throat.

HAPPY HOME JUNIOR CHOIR.

The Junior Choir of Happy Home Church contributes much to the worship services, and at the same time they are enriching their young lives in the fellowship of good music. This choir renders a selection every Sunday and on special occasions for children they sit in the choir loft.

long, long ago and some are being written at this very moment.

Grown people sometimes think they can't sing anything but what they call "old favorites." Usually on study, the old favorites turn out to be the songs they learned in childhood. Let's make our "old favorites" good ones. Here are some: "Fairest Lord Jesus," "Sweetest Story," "The Wise May Bring Their Learning," "We Plough the Fields," "Sun of My Soul," the Doxology, Gloria Patri, "This is My Father's World." The list could grow and grow.

Do you memorize your hymns? Most of us know the first and last stanzas of hymns but not the in-between ones. It is as if we ate the bread of a sandwich and threw away the filling.

The Junior Choir is under the direction of Miss Ruth Helen Gunn, who is also the official children's worker and Cradle Roll Superintendent of the church.

FOR PARENTS ONLY.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

My friend, Isabel, has very vivid recollections of numerous incidents in her early childhood. What a pity it is that so many of them are unpleasant!

One day, as we sat exchanging confidences over our knitting, she said to me, "I was more than half afraid of my father when I was little. He had an ungoverned temper, and it took very little indeed to bring about a terrific explosion. I've often wondered why my mother permitted him to indulge in this lack of control. She was a charming woman with poise, intelligence, and nobility of character. She must have known that my father's emotional outbursts were harmful to him, as well as to her and to their child. Why then didn't she insist that he control himself?"

"It is hard to understand," I replied, "but years ago most women, who were subject to such trials suffered in silence."

This remark of mine brought back to me an incident that I had since forgotten, so I continued: "Once I told a spinster friend of Mother's that I had never heard my mother say a cross word to my father. The amusing reply was, 'That isn't good for any man!'"

Isabel smiled rather sadly. "Mother never spoke crossly to anyone," she said. "Of course, I didn't want her to be cross to Father, but on several occasions I did urge her to watch for an opportunity—when he was feeling good-natured—to reason with him regarding his outbursts of temper. I have never been able to comprehend why, but she always refused. Poor Mother! All those tragic years she 'suffered in silence'!"

"After we lost her, I had a heart-to-heart talk with Father. I told him respectfully but firmly that these exhibitions of anger must stop at once. And they stopped. My father had always been able to impress the outside world with his dignified bearing and fine intellect; and now he began to display delightful home qualities—he became mellowed, lovable, and understanding." With tears in her eyes Isabel added, "How often have I wished that my dear mother could have been with us and could have known him in his changed personality!"

If you, a parent, awaken to the fact that either you or your companion are acquiring a habit harmful to your children's emotional and mental health, do not ignore this condition. Should you be the one at fault, let the habit speedily fall into disuse—however difficult breaking away from it may prove to be. If it is the other parent who has the illness, talk it over with him or her affectionately, sympathetically, and firmly but very tactfully—in the absence of the children. Frequently these habits have been indulged in, over a period of years, with little thought of their harmful effects; but such indulgence should come to a quick end.

CAMP ROSLYN.JULY 21-26, 1948.

This is the summer camp opportunity for Eastern Virginia Conference boys and girls.

Who may attend? Boys and girls, age 12-14.

Where do you get registration blanks? From your minister.

What is the cost? $5.00 advance fee, and balance of $10.00 to be paid on arrival at Roslyn.

Where should registration blanks be sent? To Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Elon College, North Carolina.

* * * *

Registrations for the other summer camps and conferences are coming in—but I know there are some of you who haven't registered who want to:

Junior High, North Carolina—Hanes, August 14-19.

Junior High, Valley—Powell's Fort—August 21-28.

Senior High, Eastern Virginia—Hanes, August 14-19.

Senior High, North Carolina—Hanes, August 14-19.

Senior High, Valley—Powell's Fort, August 21-28.

Young Adult, Southern Convention—John's River, August 8-14.

Send your registration blanks and your advance payment at once.

Send checks or money orders (we really do prefer this—it's safer) and make them out to: Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Elon College, North Carolina, and state what the amount is to cover. I believe that this will help all of us.

And, to those of you from Eastern Virginia—when you send me your registration, don't forget to send your transportation money (for our chartered bus) to: Mr. Melvin Bunch, Route 2, Box 537, Suffolk, Va. The round-trip ticket will cost you $8.00—only $8.00! (The round-trip bus fare on a regular bus is about $16.00.) Send your money and your name to him now, and you will be sure of your place in the bus.

Have you enough blanks for your Junior Highs, your Senior Highs, and your Young Adults? If not, please write to me, and I'll send you more blanks right away.

Sincerely,

BETTY CHICOINE.

P. S. Some of you have been asking, "How old is a Young Adult?" Well, our answer to that is—we haven't put a top, we've just put a bottom limit (out of high school, young married couples, college age young people). So come one, come all! The E. and R. Young Adults are fine people to know—we know!

P. P. S. The Youth Convention, which was scheduled to be held at Burlington, N. C., July 10, has been postponed indefinitely because of the polio epidemic in North Carolina.

MT. CARMEL.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Christian Church has sponsored the Daily Vacation Bible School and we feel that we contributed much in the work of our Lord, in introducing his word through our school. We are grateful to Miss Ruth Dunn who was our director and sent to us through the Board of Christian Education.

We have had our regular meetings on Wednesday night after second Sunday of each month. At this time our spiritual life leader has charge of the worship service. We have our business. We also remember all our members who are sick with cards and gifts.

Our members have reviewed a chapter in our study book, "That All May Know," which was a course in world evangelism. At our regular meetings we have our program and refreshments—last week we had a weiner roast.

We are working toward a membership drive and have invited members of our community who should be mission-minded to be with us. Our attendance and interest has shown much progress.

We have our public meeting and Thank Offering program in November and had as our guest speaker Mrs. Monroe, who is a returned missionary from Japan.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

BEZALEL, THE CRAFTSMAN.

LESSON II—JULY 11, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might.—Ecclesiastes 9:10.

LESSON: Exodus 31:1-11; 35:30-39:43; II Chronicles 1:5.

As I recall it, I mentioned the fact in the Notes for last Sunday that Micaiah was a comparatively unknown character of the Bible. Multitudes of regular Sunday school folks could not tell you who he was or what he did. And even many preachers would be on the spot if you asked them to tell you something about Micaiah. But Micaiah is well-known as compared with the man who is the subject of today's lesson—Bezalel. I will confess my ignorance—I did not have the least idea of who he was until I read the lesson for today. And I suspect that there are multitudes of people who are like me in this matter.

A New Concept of Spirituality.

We usually think of spirituality as "something out of this world," a kind of pious, sentimental thing, an "other-worldly" spirit, mystic and mysterious, and quite impractical indeed, so far as the ordinary things of life are concerned. And of course we associate it with distinctly religious acts and attitudes—readers of these Notes know what they think of when somebody refers to another man as a "spiritual man" or a "spiritually-minded man." It comes somewhat as a surprise therefore to learn that there is another side to spirituality, an important side to it, something that has to do with the practical side of things. Read carefully these words, "And Jehovah spake unto Moses, saying, See I have called by name Bezalel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah. And I have filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship, to devise skilful works. . . ." Spirituality concerns spiritual graces, but it also concerns intellectual faculties, and what may seem more surprising, artistic gifts and practical abilities. This man Bezalel never preached a sermon or led a prayer meeting or taught a Sunday school class, but he was filled with the Spirit of God, and called by God for work with his hands. We need to get spirituality out of the clouds and down to earth, out of the mere heavenly down to the earth.

A Ten Talent Man.

This unknown and unheard of man of that far off day was a man of many talents. He could take a rough, crude piece of wood and with simple tools make out of it a beautiful cabinet or chest, the basis of the holy of holies. He could take a hammer and a piece of gold or brass and beat out gold leaf for the cabinet he had made, or fashion a beautiful candlestick or candelabrum. He could take scissors and a needle and make exquisite and sturdy draperies. He could take a rough piece of stone and skillfully fashion it into a rare bit of sculpture. He was a man of many talents, a genius, a craftsman and an artist.

A Sacred Stewardship.

He did not create his talents—they were given to him by God. He did not have anything that he did not receive. He was therefore a steward of his talents, accountable to God for the development and the use of the gifts of God. It was so then, is now, and evermore shall be. All that we have, and are, is a sacred stewardship from God, and we must give an account of our stewardship.

A Sacred Calling.

The ministry is a sacred calling. No greater honor can come to mortal man than to be called of God and to be put in trust with the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ. Teaching is a high calling. So is medicine. And so are many other professions. But so is farming and store-keeping and carpentry and housework and ditch-digging. The common life takes on new meaning when one sees it as a divine calling. What God has cleansed let no man call common or unclean. There is not clear-cut distinction between sacred and secular in His thinking. Even the humblest and starkest secular tasks become sacred when they are done as unto and for Him. All work well done is acceptable unto our Heavenly Father. There is no respect of persons with Him, and in a sense no respect of positions either. There are multitudes for whom life would mean so much more if they got the implications of this fact in today's lesson.

Teaching Others.

Bezalel was not only a master-craftsman himself he had the ability to teach others. That is a gift greatly to be desired. Happy were the men who worked with and under this man, great in mind, skillful in hand and large in heart as they too learned how to do.

Workers With God.

Bezalel and his fellow-workmen were workers together with God in the great enterprise of preparing the tabernacle and its contents. It must have given them a big lift as they thought of this. But those who work at the more prosaic things of life can also think of themselves as workers together with Him, or as God's fellow-laborers. As Stradivarius put it, God could not make violins without Stradivarius.

The story is told of a passer-by who asked several men as to what they were doing as they went about their tasks of building a new church. One said he was making eight dollars a day as a carpenter. Another said he was putting in plumbing at a dollar and fifteen cents an hour. But an elderly Negro when asked the question, took his questioner across the street and proudly pointing to the tower of the beautiful church replied (it should have been said that he was a hod carrier): "Do you see that beautiful church? Well, I am helping to build that." That humble Negro had caught the vision that transforms common tasks into a great creative, cooperative enterprise, a partnership with God himself.

THE LORDS SUPPER AND SOCIAL ACTION.

rather than the wine." Communion begins with giving on God's part. He gives to us the material world we live and work in, and all that pertains to us in that world.

The elements come from God to us (for no man by taking thought can make a grain of wheat or the smallest grape). Before they reach the Table, however, they have come to other men and women—to the farmer and vine grower, to the elevator owners in the West or the warehousemen in California or Northern New York, to the traders of the Chicago pit or the New York exchange, to the truckmen, ship's crews, truck and ship owners, and the builders of trucks and ships, to the baker and the vintner. With all these we unite when we, too, receive the bread and wine as God's gift; it is to the whole company of workers the very means of their living and now we as a priesthood of believers, acting with and for them, becoming part of their company, accept these gifts from God. Communion is nothing if it is not social action.

God gives us, as well, the spiritual world in which we live, with its dimensions of the past, of the present, and of the future. In its form the Communion Service faces the past; it is plainly inspired by the memory of the meal our Lord had with his disciples on the night on which he was betrayed. In its content it is replete with the present; God is there, and His people are gathered around Him. It casts light upon the future, for the very company there are an earnest of the world as it is to be. It is the basic social strategy of the Church to bring the people of the world close to each other in mind and spirit by bringing them all close to the heart of Christ; and at the moment of communion you have a perfect vision of that world—in microcosm—those men and women with bowed heads brought into fellowship with one another because all are brought into fellowship with God as He reveals Himself in Christ. Together with all other good things, God gives us a vision of our own future, when we shall be as He desires us to be.

All these things God gives us, as He gives us Himself in the symbols of the broken bread and the wine poured out.

Giving, giving, giving—the giving to us of Himself and all we need to sustain us—this is God's part in the communion.

Our part is grateful response—and this in two forms, the corporate response of the worshipping congregation, and the personal response of each member of it. In India it is said that the most sacred places are those where two rivers meet. The city of Allahabad, for instance, is a sacred city because it lies at the junction of the Ganges and the Jumna. Benares is a sacred city because it lies at the point where the Ganges and a mythical subterranean river have their confluence. How awful, by such reckoning is the place of holy communion for there the eternal river of God pours its torrents into the stream of our lives. Our part is to receive that river and through us let it flow out into the community where we live, blessing all whom it touches. In words which we Americans are more likely to be able better to understand, at the Communion Table we become God's stewards; we receive from HIM in symbol life and all things that make life good, and now it is our turn to commit ourselves to His stewardship, that we may worthily administer what he gives us as trustees.

To our spiritual ancestors the church covenant was the form in which a congregation could best respond to the gifts of God.

There is no reason under heaven—or above it—why the great God should have created me except that in His love He chose to do so. There is no reason why He should have disclosed Himself to us as a God of love, ready to endow with immortality all His loved ones (and He loves all), except that love. There is no reason why He should have revealed to us the completeness of His concern for us in the life and death of Jesus Christ, except that He is that kind of God. There is no reason why He should have given us all things richly to enjoy—but he has. No man can say with any truth that he has deserved of God any of these things. This is the mean of His grace.

When this is truly appreciated by you and me and others like us, it is as when a magnet is brought up under a card of iron filings. We are brought into a field of attraction. We are brought close to each other, each one feeling a joy in the presence of the others and a responsibility toward them, the others feeling a corresponding joy and a correlative responsibility. When in God's presence we declare that feeling mutually, promising God and each other that we will continue to live in that enjoyment and responsibility, we become a church—and the promise is the church covenant.

How rare an element in our character is commitment. We drift (as no one needs to tell us). We respond to the immediate stimuli, following the course of least resistance. It is interesting and terrible to recall that the only persons in Germany who resisted the philosophy of national socialism were—the professors? No. The industrialists? No. Labor? No. Only the committed. And yet in a world in which purpose alone can hold against the pull of secularity, we tend to lead lives which are innocent of discipline.

At the crucifixion of Christ there were many kinds of people. Most similar to us were those who came simply to look on. It never occurred to this group of people that they might be standing at a cross-roads of history, that this moment might mark a crisis in human destiny, and that they might have a part to play in it themselves. Christ alone made it a turning-point by his commitment. They did not realize that God was saying to them as well as to Christ,

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve!" They did not want to be bothered to choose anything. They escaped making a choice at all, and so escaped the tragedy that came to Christ—but they also escaped life at its fullness.

Nor does it ordinarily occur to many of us that we are always standing at a crossroads of history, that a crisis in human destiny lies at hand. We remain the objects of the play of circumstances about us, becoming seldom or never the commanding agents. Only those can take command of time who have a foothold on commitments to God, who is timeless.

Accordingly the most promising program for us Congregational Christians for the biennium just beginning is to make our commitment—especially at communion time, when it is natural to take account of our stewardship under God—deep and clear. Our conferences, boards, local churches announce their presence at this point, for they are the agencies through which God is calling for committed persons. They cannot survive without them. They need some of us to enter their service in person. They need all of us to help them financially. Financial and personal help which we give out of our excess is one thing and useful in its way, but the help which drives a solid edge into the paganism of our day is the help which is budgeted, which enjoys priority because it is given to God. Our Congregational Christian program for the immediate years ahead must be based not upon the sands of our own interests, but upon the rock of accepted stewardship to God. Our record proposal for the biennium is that we take seriously the need for personal commitment.

A card available for use in the churches, reads as follows:

Recognizing my dependence upon Thee, O God, I commit my life into thy hands. In each moment of decision, in matters small and great, I shall attempt to seek Thy Will. Through the regular and prayerful reading of Thy Word, I shall seek to know Thee more fully. Each week I shall set aside certain periods of time for Christian worship and for Christian service. In my avocations, no less than my vocation, I shall seek to glorify Thee. I shall invest my money in enterprises useful to mankind. I shall set aside a certain proportion of my income to be given for the building of Thy Kingdom at home and abroad. I shall tell others of Thee, in hope that they may have the same joy in Christian discipleship

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The splendid good showers we have been having are making the corn grow rapidly and everything else on the farm. We have already cut our alfalfa twice and will get another crop in the month of July if the rains continue. Our wheat is nearly ready for the combine. Our wheat crop is far better than we expected in the early spring. It did not look very promising at that time. We will miss our oat crop this year. It rained so continuously last fall that we did not get any planted at all. We hope our wheat, corn, and hay crops will make up for the oat crop. Farming is a beautiful occupation. A large field of growing corn that is almost a black-green when it is in tassil is something worthwhile; and what could be more beautiful than a field of wheat with its golden heads ripe unto harvest and ready to be combined and stored in the granery to make bread for the children for the next year.

Still little children appeal for a home and care. A mother brought three beautiful little boys to see me a few days ago and asked us to take them in the orphanage so she could get a job and work to help care for them. Their ages were five, seven, and nine; a mother left without a home, without any money, and with three little children to care for is up against a hard problem. She may be anxious to work, but what about the little children while the mother works.

We have a great many calls to take children from broken homes. That is one of our problems. Sometimes a mother will desert her husband and leave him with two or three children, and he appeals to orphanages for help—not on charity for he is glad to pay for their keep. And then, sometimes a father will desert his wife and go to a distant state and leave her with three or four little children. What can she do about it? She is left stranded.

Sometime ago I had a superior court judge come to see me appealing in behalf of two little boys whose mother was dead, and the father deserted them and went to the State of Texas. I said to him, "Judge we have a law in North Carolina which makes a man support his family." He said, "That is true. I can issue a warrant for him, send to Texas and bring him back and put him on the road for twelve months, but the law makes no provision for you to get anything. You would not be any better off."

It is the little helpless children who suffer. If it was the parent it would be different.

Orphanage work is a very worthy work. They have saved to society many boys and girls in the past and will save more in the future, as they are better prepared now to do a better work.

When you give your check to the Christian Orphanage it may be the means of lifting some boy or girl on a higher plane, and they may some day rise up and call you blessed. You are investing in helpless humanity. They may develop into a fine citizen of whom we may feel proud some day.

that I have known. Depending upon Thy continuing and sustaining Grace, I make this covenant with Thee this day.

There is material for a score of sermons here, and for protracted personal thought. But the end of it all is an act of the will—commitment to stewardship under God. An emphasis on commitment at communion time might renew the whole life of our fellowship. One can imagine Jesus Christ saying: "Give me a million Congregational Christians, give me a half a million, give me a hundred thousand, who have learned the meaning of commitment and have disciplined themselves to it—and I shall give you a transfigured fellowship, and finally, a changed world!"

A LETTER FROM SHAOWU.

years ahead, their home and their service in Shaowu. The honeymoon was spent outside and inside Peiping, where Frances initiated Ed into the beauties of the temples and palaces, their grounds, lakes and groves, in the inimitable setting of Peiping, city of her birth.

Right now, we suppose they are on their way back to Shaowu, with more adventures to include in this "wedding trip." For they were going "the back way," from Shanghai to Hangchow and by devious bus routes over rough roads and mountain passes, probably finishing the hiking trip set out to take as two wholly disintegrated persons, early in May! Now, the middle of June, Dr. and Mrs. Edward C. Riggs!

Frances and Ed, I believe, made history. Do you know of any other two fourth generation missionaries uniting to make a home of their own? Frances' great-grandfather was the first missionary of the famous Gulick family, early pioneer of the American Board to the then Sandwich Islands, now Hawaii. Her grandfather was missionary first in China, later Japan. Her mother came to China (to Shaowu, originally) as Mrs. Whitaker. Ed's great-grandfather, grandfather and father all served under the American Board in Turkey. And now Frances and Ed are starting their home in Shaowu. Blessings on them! Let us all undergird them in every way we can.

Sincerely yours,

HELEN D. CHANDLER.

In Memoriam

HOLT.

On Thursday, June 3, Mrs. Ella F. Holt, of 203 Park Square, Burlington, N. C., passed away after having lived at the house in which she was born for four score and two years. She was the widow of the late James G. Holt, who died in 1936, and a daughter of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Sellars Moore and Dr. John A. Moore, a distinguished physician of Burlington for many years in the more distant past, with the added honor of having represented Alamance County in three sessions of the State Legislature.

The death of Mrs. Holt marks the passing of the last charter member of the Burlington First Congregational Christian Church, of which she was a most faithful life-long member. In her life and character Mrs. Holt illustrated the highest Christian virtues of the old school. Quiet, unassuming and humble, and yet firm and steadfast in her devotion to Christian principles and practices at all times, Mrs. Holt pursued the even tenor of her way throughout her long life in such a way that her influence for good will go on for many generations to come. Loyalty was her watchword. She was unwaveringly loyal and faithful to her family, her friends and neighbors, her church and her God—one of those devout souls over whose spirits the garden of God's spicery has blown its sweetest fragrance.

For eighty-two years she tarried in this world, and then, ripe in years and in Christian experience, gently and calmly, like ripe fruit falling from the tree, cheerful to the last, she serenely passed away, leaving to her family and friends the priceless example of a devout, consistent Christian life. It was eminently fitting and proper that she should be laid to rest by her husband in the old Providence Church Cemetery where sleep so many of the good and great of the County and State.

"To live in hearts we leave behind is not to die."

COOPER.

WHEREAS, The Loyal Men's Bible Class of the First Congregational Christian Church, sustained the loss of one of its most faithful members in the death of Richard L. Cooper, March 29, 1948; and,

WHEREAS, The long and intimate relations held by Richard L. Cooper with the Loyal Men's Bible Class, renders it proper that we should place on record our appreciation for his valued and effective services to the citizens of Alamance County; therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED, That in the death of Richard L. Cooper, the members of the Loyal Men's Bible Class suffered the loss of a sincere friend and a member, who was always faithful and zealous in the work of the class, prompt to advance its interests and devoted to its welfare and progress; one who was wise in counsel and patient, considerate, kind and courteous in his relations with the members of this class; a forthright and just man, whose virtues and genial personality endeared him to the people and won for him the confidence, respect and admiration of all those with whom he came in contact; therefore,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That this class tender its sincere sympathy to the family and relatives of our deceased member in their sad affliction; that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the class records, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun," and a copy to the family of our departed member and friend.

RAYMOND.

Funeral services for Mrs. C. Rexford Raymond were conducted June 22 at 2:00 P. M., from the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Landon, and at 2:30 P. M. from the First Congregational Church at Angola, N. Y. Rev. Joseph Phillips officiated. Interment followed in the Forest Avenue Cemetery, Angola, N. Y.

She is survived by her husband, Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, D. D.; two children: Dorothy, the wife of Rev. Orville Donley Ullom, of Haverhill, Mass., and Miss Ruth Raymond of Winston-Salem, N. C.; a brother, Harmon S. Landon of Angola, N. Y.; two grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

She was the former Miss E. Rose Landon. She was a student of voice in Ithaca, N. Y., Conservatory of Music and in the Oberlin, Ohio, Conservatory of Music.

Dr. and Mrs. Raymond were married June 28, 1900. The Raymonds made a host of friends in the Southern Convention while serving at Southern Pines and Sunbury. They have resided in Charleston, S. C., for the past several years.

be suspended, but in June, 1947, it was held again—this time in connection with the Pastors' School when there were 168 registered for this "Assembly." Elon College has generously placed its facilities at the disposal of the people.

The sessions of the School of Missions and the Pastors' School have had some of the most capable national and local leaders of the Congregational Christian Church as well as leaders from the church at large.

The 1948 Session of the School of Missions and Pastors' School holds promise of being our best session to date. The program indicates high calibre leadership, and it is anticipated that we will have a large attendance representing our churches throughout North Carolina and Virginia.

Walking With God

III. In the Fellowship of Faith

[The third in a series of messages given by DR. ALFRED GRANT WALTON, chaplain of the General Council in Oberlin and minister of the Flatbush-Tompkins Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., at the General Council.]

The need for church union among Protestants is so apparent as to require no demonstration. The average layman feels that the divisions in the Christian churches are hindering the purpose to which all Christians are dedicated.

DR. WALTON

There is an incongruity between denominationalism and the spirit of Christ and it should be removed. The union which Christians seek is something that goes far beyond mere mechanical organization. Christ gave no evidence of concern for ecclesiasticism. We are truly members of His church if we are His disciples and if we are one in spirit and purpose with Him.

We should not minimize what has already been achieved in church union. We have gone far in realizing the spirit which He would desire. There is a general good will among all denominations and a growing recognition of our common interests and concerns. The hostility of a few decades ago is virtually gone. Comity arrangements are being respected; local, state and national federations are growing in effectiveness and usefulness. The World Council of Churches will soon be organized. Many other international religious organizations are already functioning successfully. Denominationalism itself has not been without some valuable contributions as individual groups helped to preserve essential parts of the whole Christian message. We may be sinners, but we are not hardened sinners. Nevertheless there is too much denominationalism and divisiveness. When a divided church attempts to speak to a troubled world its voice sounds more like the babbling of the tower of Babel than a strong effective witness for the truth of God. There is something vital at the heart of religion that needs to shine through but it is not clearly revealed because of our divisions.

To make church union effective we must have some practical plans for its realization. Some scheme must be devised whereby we may have unity in diversity. Church union must not bind us in straight jackets nor should it be so loose that all cohesiveness is lacking. Some denominations might well die for the glory of God, but the practical difficulty is that almost every one is willing to have some other denomination die except his own. Results must not be expected too quickly; you "cannot bring in the millennium with the morning milk." There must be a spirit of adventure, a spirit of sacrifice, willingness to give and take, with a resolute purpose to go steadily ahead. A lack of clearcut, well defined, practical plan of organization broad enough to encompass all yet flexible enough to preserve differences, is the major hindrance to church union today. When such a plan is forthcoming, the Christian church, now greatly united in spirit, will achieve union of greater effectiveness than anything known today.

Report of the Treasurer of the American Board

By HAROLD B. BELCHER

Since the fiscal year of the Board does not close until August 31, it is not possible to present a complete Treasurer's Report to the Annual Meetings that are held in conjunction with the meetings of the General Council. We can only present some comments on the financial situation of the Board as it relates to the present fiscal year and to the immediate period ahead. The complete report for the fiscal year will be presented to the Prudential Committee at its Plenary Session in October. Printed copies of this Report will be available for those who request it.

The budget for this present fiscal year was balanced by using approximately $250,000 beyond the receipts from the normal sources of income: that is, from apportionment gifts, from legacies and matured Conditional Gifts, and from the income of unrestricted endowment. Approximately one-half of this $250,000 came from two legacies which the Prudential Committee voted in 1946 to use in the two fiscal years 1946-47 and 1947-48 to make possible the restaffing of the work on the field as authorized by the Annual Meeting of the Board and by the General Council at Durham, N. H., in 1944. The extreme inflationary costs in the foreign fields had made it impossible to provide the support of the restaffing program from the regular sources of income. Rather than refuse to provide for the reinforcing of the depleted force of missionaries the Prudential Committee decided to use up these legacies in the two years in the hope and expectation that through the impetus of the Post-War Emergency Program the regular sources of income would increase enough to take over the load when the two legacies had been used. Then in the fall of 1947 the Prudential Committee was faced with further increased costs which made it imperative that further supplements be granted to the salaries of missionaries and national workers. There were also the demands caused by the resumption of work in Japan. The Committee therefore decided to use for this year the remainder of several special legacies which had originally been designated for particular needs. This leaves the Board with no further special funds that can be used to supplement the regular sources of income in subsequent years. These amounts, together with that part of the Post-War Emergency receipts which is used for the current budget, make up the balance of the $250,000 which is in the receipts of this current fiscal year but which will not be available in 1948-49. REPORT ON PILGRIM SERIES.

It is good to be a part of the Congregational Christian fellowship. We can be proud of our denomination. Its standards are high; the quality of its work is good.

The Shallow Ford Christian Church is faithful to its denomination but it realized last fall that it was not as loyal as it might be and that its disloyalty was hurting the local church. It recognized that its Sunday school was not using the materials that the denomination has been so carefully developing. At a meeting of the officers and teachers of the Sunday school and other people concerned with the progress of the church the matter of religious education materials was thoroughly discussed.

We discovered that for forty years the denomination had been publishing closely graded materials and urging churches to use them, but many smaller churches found them too complicated for use by untrained teachers and officers. Then came group-graded materials which proved much better. Finally, as the result of extensive study of needs and possibilities of the average church, the Pilgrim Series was developed and presented to the churches.

This sounded good to the Shallow Ford people. Therefore the first of January we started using the best materials our denomination had published. After six months we are able to evaluate our own experience with the Pilgrim Series with children and young people up through our high school class. We have tasted and found it good.

We have not used the Pilgrim Series adult materials, fearing this would be too much of a break with "the good old ways" for adults who had been using the uniform lessons from their childhood up. When Pilgrim Series materials were adopted for young people and children the adults continued to study the old uniform lessons but shifted from patronizing a money-making non-church company to using the Congregational Christian "Pilgrim Adult Bible Class Quarterly." This publication didn't have the old familiar ring, but the more it has been used the more we are coming to like it. It is stimulating rather than soothing, challenging rather than goody-goody. It is winning approval and appreciation.

However, the Pilgrim Series being used by young people and children received hearty approval from the very beginning. Most of the teachers and pupils are very happy about the change. Other churches of the Southern Convention, we are convinced, can find the same satisfaction in these improved materials.

The adoption of our own church materials necessitated some changes in our school organization. All children who had not yet gone to public school were put in kindergarten class (later those under four years of age were separated to form a nursery class). All boys and girls in public school grades one, two and three were put in a primary class; those of grades four to six in a junior class; those of the seventh and eighth grades in a junior high school class; and all high school young people and those of high school age in a high school class. This has proved to be a much more natural and normal grouping than when separated boys' and girls' classes covered long age ranges and the older ones disliked being in the same class with "babies."

We have discovered that the writers of the materials for each class really understand boys and girls of the ages for which they have written. That makes the materials much more interesting than what we had been using, and much more helpful from a Christian viewpoint as well. The entire series not only covers more Bible than did the uniform lessons, but it explains God and Christian living to each age group in terms it can understand—each group is helped to discover the answers to questions boys and girls of that age are actually asking.

No teacher aids we have seen before are as helpful as the ones provided with the Pilgrim Series. Our teachers have discovered that the writers have had real experience in Sunday schools themselves and know how to make worthwhile suggestions to the teachers. The manual for pastors and superintendents helps the leaders to recognize the relation of the work of all the classes.

We are glad that Shallow Ford discovered what our denomination is doing for us in providing materials through which our boys and girls are learning what it means to be a Christian. What if these materials do cost a few dollars more than materials we used to use! Human souls are worth a great many dollars. It was doubtless of young people as well as adults that the Master said, "Ye are of more value than many sparrows"—or many dollars.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

R-E-S-T.

One who is genuinely weary can rest in places which offer little semblance of comfort. Jesus rested in the most unorthodox places, in a boat or by a well-side. Jesus knew the secret of rest. He worked until his energy was spent, then he rested with utter abandon. Not even a storm could upset his untroubled rest. Jesus earned the right to say: "Come unto me . . . and I will give you rest."

No individual or civilization can be physically and spiritually robust without health-giving and strength-restoring rest. It is God's plan, God's provision. Worry and dissipation are the great enemies of rest. Work hard and safeguard rest. Countless lives of great usefulness have been built on this simple formula.

Summer is a time for both work and rest. In many ways that are wholesome, legitimate and profitable one may work and expend energy. The precious pearls of perfect rest are never cast by Almighty God before the service of indolence. A well-earned vacation is a birth-right which should not be forfeited. Rest and recreation should go hand in hand. Health of body and mind is the fruit of such judicious rest.

PRAYER ON THE RUN.

Jesus did not outlaw long prayers, only vain repetitions. His personal prayers ranged all the way from brief ejaculatory ones to night-long vigils with the Father. He sent His disciples out fortified with a brief, ready prayer which we know as the Lord's Prayer.

"Lord, help me to help" is a prayer suggested by Wallace C. Speers at the General Council. Mr. Speers is vice-president of James McCutcheon and Company, a member of Central Presbyterian Church in Montclair, New Jersey, and editor of a recent publication, "Layman Speaking."

Mr. Speers has suggested the kind of practical, down-to-earth praying which is needed today. It is the kind of prayer everyone can use. Try it, try it daily. This simple prayer on the lips of consecrated people could raise any church to new levels of power and influence. "Lord, help me to help."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION RESTUDIED.

Many denominations are given to criticizing each other and invariably present themselves at their best rather than at their worst. It is remarkable therefore when a major body undertakes a critical self-examination which exposes its worst rather than its best features.

The Presbyterian Church in the United States (Southern Presbyterian) is brought under rigorous criticism by its Committee of Religious Education and Publication in an extensive "Restudy of Religious Education." The four-year study is described as "a 'gloves off' analysis of the church, its job and the way it accomplishes it."

The church is predominantly an urban church in an area where the population is predominantly rural; it has less than its share of the young in a land with more than its share of young people; its membership is composed of people in relatively comfortable circumstances although it is surrounded by persons who are relatively underprivileged, and it is predominantly composed of females in a population where males slightly predominate, the report states.

It urges that the church program be pointed to the overcoming of these deficiencies.

As regards Sunday school instructors, the report says that a composite teacher in the Southern Presbyterian Church is 45 years old, a graduate of high school with one year of college, married with two children. She spends less than an hour a week on preparing the Sunday school lesson, is regularly late for Sunday school and has never taken a formal course in leadership education.

Recommendations made in the survey include a continuation of church literature which emphasizes and recognizes the church worship services as being an essential "school" or occasion of religious education, achieving a unique function not completely fulfilled by any other "school" or any other type of Christian teaching.

It is also recommended that a person be selected to give full time to a program for Christian family life and that expenses of church schools be assumed as a responsibility of the entire congregations and borne by them.

A major and sustained emphasis should be placed on the importance of drawing larger numbers of children and their parents into the church school, both from church families and those outside the congregation, another recommendation states.

Other recommendations concern improvements of teaching materials, textbooks, preparation for leadership education and staff reorganization.

It is earnestly hoped that other church bodies will take a leaf from this Presbyterian notebook and undertake the same type of realistic appraisal. A purged Protestantism will emerge.

IMPERCEPTIBLE OPERATIONS OF GRACE.

The grandest operations both in nature and in grace are the most silent and imperceptible. The shallow brook babbles in its passage and is heard by every one, but the coming on of the seasons is silent and unseen. The storm rages and alarms, but its fury is soon exhausted and its effects are partial and soon remedied; but the dew, though gentle and unheard, is immense in quantity and the very life of large portions of the earth. And these are pictures of the operations of grace in the Church and in the soul.—R. Cecil.

"A Bill of Rights for Free Churches"

By ALBERT W. PALMER, Moderator, The General Council

1. In all efforts at genuine unity and cooperation we must keep in mind this three-fold formula:

In things where we agree, unity;
In things where we differ, liberty;
In all things, the will to be one.

2. Differences, therefore, may be as precious as unities; and so we must always seek the kind of unity which includes and provides liberty for differences. Only thus can we expect to attain "the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace."

3. Two inseparable essentials for the unity of free churches are (a) the autonomy of the local church and (b) the effective cooperation of these churches in fellowship for mutual aid and effective service to the community and the world. Both of these must be adequately recognized, balanced and safe-guarded. Neither of them is unlimited. Each must recognize the other.

4. All organizations through which this fellowship is expressed and implemented, such as associations, conferences, councils, boards or synods, must be voluntary and autonomous—subject only to the churches which create them as vehicles of their cooperative desires and necessities. That is to say, they are to be controlled democratically from below, not by any centralized organization from above.

5. No creedal subscription shall be required of either ministers, churches or individual members. Historic creeds should be honored for their witness to the progress of Christian thought, but a living church must not be bound by the dead hand. It has a duty, and must have the liberty, to formulate truth ever anew in the freedom of the living present.

6. The training and ordination of ministers is a concern of the candidate, who presents himself for examination and dedication to this high office; of the local church which nurtured him or which he is to serve; and also of the fellowship of churches and ministers into which he enters. All of these concerns must be properly recognized and safeguarded also in the placement of pastors and in providing for ministerial standing, pensions, etc.

7. There are degrees and intensities of unity. As "the Lord's free people" we are united by a covenant to "walk in all the ways of the Lord, made known or to be made known to us." Present-day congregational polity possesses more forms and expressions of unity than formerly—witness the rise of mission boards, a publishing house, a system of ministerial pensions, and the General Council itself. We must keep this door for more perfect union open. We must not freeze or crystalize at any stage; but, as a living organism, we must expect to grow and develop—always, of course, in accordance with our essential genius but also in accordance with the needs of the age and of the community we are set to serve. To do this we must humbly seek, and await, the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

In preparing this document I organized six pairs of special consultants, one "pro" and one "con" in each team, and have thus tried to test reactions "all the way from sun-kissed California to sin-cussed New York," as Hugh Elmer Brown once put it. I have profited greatly from their suggestions but responsibility for the resulting document is mine alone—and I do not claim for it either ideological infallibility or verbal inspiration. But I think it points in the right direction.

This "Bill of Rights" is only a jury track by which we can get the streamliner, "Modern Congregationalism," up out of the Slough of Despond in which it has momentarily been ditched, get the diesel engine of Unity, Trust and Creative Purpose throbbing once more, and start the whole train forward on the main line toward the Celestial City—if I may bring Bunyan up to date! (I refer, of course, to John Bunyan, not Paul, though we may need both of them for the job!)

If this "Bill of Rights," or some improved form of it, shall seem to you an adequate safeguard for the precious values inherited from the past, then, after accepting it, could we not all agree to commit to the appropriate representative, and perhaps enlarged, commission the task of carrying forward our negotiations with the E. and R.? The commission could then report to us two years from now, or even a year from now, and recommend a workable plan for effecting union. This plan need not, probably cannot, be specified now. It might be a short, simple constitution; or it might be a satisfactory and reassuring interpretation of the Basis of Union—made in the light of recent criticism and of the "Bill of Rights;" or, conceivably, it might be a new document. Surely a strong and adequately representative commission could work these things out, now that we know how relatively few and simple the required adjustments are.

Perhaps the actual union could begin at the general organizational level; and then proceed, in conference and associational areas, only when and as far as local sentiment is ready. Let us hope our Commission on Inter-church Relations and Christian Unity will have some workable procedure to suggest. Surely we all want closer union with all like-minded freedom-loving churches, if we can be assured against any loss of liberty thereby. We need, and shall welcome the great increase of spiritual vitality and the stimulating wider fellowship which union will bring.

Perhaps other churches besides the E. and R. will want to come in, too. We don't want any huge monolithic Protestantism, but we don't want any unnecessary fragmentation of the liberal wing of Protestantism, either. That wing needs strengthening. Let's unite the freer, more liberal churches—and then federate with the more organizationally minded Methodists, the more aquatic Baptists and Disciples, the more orthodox Presbyterians and the more ecclesiastically traditional Episcopalians and Lutherans. We shall need a strong liberal United Free Church if we are to sing bass in that a capella choir—or even second tenor!

As we enter into the communion service later this evening, I hope we may all pray as we have never prayed before for the mind of Christ and the guidance of the Holy Spirit that, in this or some still better way, we may find "a happy issue out of all our troubles."

The present generation of youth is a betrayed generation. We have placed over the gates of our educational institutions the motto, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free," and fostered a shameful compromise between humanism on the one hand and traditionalism on the other. We have crowded out the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and have encouraged our youth to do not what is right but what seems best under the circumstances—Evangelist Bob Jones, Jr.

There can be no doubt, that, for the purpose of teaching, one illustration is worth a thousand abstractions. They are the windows of speech; through them truth shines; and ordinary minds fail to perceive truth clearly, unless it is presented to them through this medium.—E. P. Hood.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"Jesus . . . bringeth them up into a high mountain." I like to think when we go up into the house of the Lord on the holy Sabbath to worship that we have followed Jesus up into a mountain top experience. Many are the duties and opportunities of the week. On the Lord's Day we follow Him up to the divine heights of public worship. And it is as though he is saying to the heavenly Father: "These are mine, whom Thou hast given unto me." From that height we see our church—its strength, its weakness, and its need of greater vision and faith. In the light of worship we see ourselves and we aspire to be better and bigger servants of the Lord.

When we come together in our annual conference—forty-four churches fully represented, pastors, delegates, and members—again it is like following our Lord up into a high mountain. Together we feel a greater fellowship, an enlarged potentiality, and we catch a bigger view of the church. Again we hear in some hour of worship the Saviour saying: "These and all those represented by them are mine. These are they who have heard my call and have followed me." We take council together. The number of new followers who have been won are reported, the amount of work done for missions is checked on, the gifts toward helping others and healing the world's hurt is tabulated, and the sort of faithfulness our work together has evidenced is set forth, and we are often inspired to say, "This is the Lord's doings and it is marvelous in our eyes."

Like climbing a highway each turn of the road takes us higher and gives us a bigger and better view. If we keep in mind that we are following Jesus up, up into a high mountain, we shall feel a strange new friendship with all others who are there. When we come together in our Southern Convention we are representatives of each of our five conferences, and all our nearly two hundred churches. We think together in terms of the 33,000 members and a like number of associates who are a part of our responsibilities, and it is good for us to envision the Lord leading us up—his followers—where we are to get a still better view of his church, and again to say: "This is his church, his works, and it is marvelous in our eyes,"

Several of us have just recently climbed to the heights of our General Council which was recently held at Oberlin, Ohio. There the view was fine. Sometimes the wind was pretty stiff, but it was exhilarating! From that height we could see the fields from Mexico to Micronesia, which is all around the world. There we heard God's men and women talk from China to Chambon-Sur-Lignon. In languages of other lands we heard them speak. There were times when we were wont to say: "Jesus . . . bringeth them up into a high mountain." We saw, we felt, and heard, and said, "This is the church—the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes." There we could hear the Lord saying: "These and the many multitudes whom they represent are mine. These are they who have heard my call, and do follow me." Naturally we wanted to follow better, and breathed that prayer both for ourselves and for all whom we represented. It was at that height we could catch a vision of his church united to lead the nations to better unity. It was at that height that we could glimpse something of the love of God that gave His Son for the world that it might be saved. It was at that height the text of Boynton Merrill's Council sermon took on added significance: "If thou wilt send our brother with us we will go . . . for the man said unto us, Ye shall not see my face, except your brother be with you."

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

Berea, Nansemond, had its first Vacation Bible School this year. A four-day session was held the first week in June. Ninety-one pupils were enrolled, and the daily attendance averaged about 90. Mrs. Margaret Daniels was General Superintendent, and she had a very loyal group of workers to assist in carrying out the daily schedule. The pastor had the privilege of instructing the Junior Group as to the meaning of church membership. The Sunday following the close of the school five new members were received into the church. Every one was well pleased with the school and there was a general expression of a wish that next year the school may cover a period of ten days instead of four.

For the third year, Liberty Spring held a Vacation Bible School the week after the Second Sunday in June. Mrs. Parke C. Brinkley was General Superintendent and a corps of twenty-nine helpers cooperated with her and made the school a great success. Ninety-nine pupils were enrolled. Certificates were given to 77 pupils. During the week special emphasis was given in the Junior and Intermediate Departments to church membership. The pastor was asked to give two addresses on that topic. A beautiful and impressive communion service was held on Friday morning. When the sharing program was presented on Sunday night (Third Sunday in June), an opportunity was given to unite with the church. Eighteen new members were received. Four others later will bring the total to twenty-two. Two members united with Great Fork Baptist Church as a result of this school. This happened to be the day observed at Oakland as the Fiftieth Anniversary of the pastor's ministry—he having preached his first sermon on the Third Sunday in June, 1898. Every pupil in the Junior Department of Liberty Spring is now a member of the Church. This emphasis on church membership will long be remembered by the members of the Vacation Bible School. It should be a feature in all such schools.

I. W. JOHNSON.

REVIVALS.

The revival was held at Belew Creek June 27-July 2. Rev. W. J. Andes did the preaching which was an inspiration to all who heard him. Three members were received, one on confession of faith and two by transfer. The Children's Bible School was held in the afternoons the same week, led by Mr. Andes, assisted by Helen Jackson, Martha Veazey, Mrs. J. G. Neal, Jr., and Mrs. Snyder. Twenty-six pupils were enrolled twenty-three of them received certificates.

At the next regular meeting of the church four more young men united with the Church on confession of faith.

The revival at Long's Chapel was held July 4-9 with Dr. Jesse H. Dollar doing the preaching. He gave very inspiring messages which I am sure will result in a harvest from seed sown in good ground. Congregations were not large, but all who attended were made to think, so that the church was greatly revived. No members were received, but we are expecting some in the near future.

Because of the Polio in this section, the Children's Bible School was postponed.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

THINK FAST, DEMOCRACY.

Some months ago a friend of mine gave me a book. Think Fast, America was the title. The thesis of the book was that the economic strings of the world were tightening so rapidly that if America and Americans were not efficiently alert, they might "miss the bus" and find themselves in economic doldrums. This is still true and if America is not careful, she may find herself with the debts of the world planted on her doorsteps without sufficient funds to meet demands of dependents and "treasure hunters."

There is another, and perhaps more serious threat looming large on world horizons—the threat to American freedom; to American democracy. We could part with our dollars more easily than we could part with our freedom. With the loss of our freedom would go the loss of our religion. With the loss of our freedom and religion would go most of the things that we hold dear.

These are vague threats. In fact they are presented in most instances in the cloak of privilege and of blessing. Congress has just passed the draft law (in modified form, of course, but a draft law), drafting in peacetime the flower of our young manhood for military training in preparation for World War III. War clouds are rising. They are dark and lowering. The majority of our lawmakers think that this is a wise step, the only step that we could take under existing condition. There are widely differing opinions in this regard. Then, too, there are insistent demands that our Government give federal aid to education, secondary and higher, that this aid be expressed in enormous monetary grants extending into billions of dollars annually. This, too, sounds good. They tell us that such an act on the part of our government would equalize opportunity and support for our young people regardless of what their circumstances may be or where they may live. Federal support without federal control would perhaps be beneficial. The big question is: Can the Federal Government give its support in large amounts and keep its hands off of control? If control should come with support, then our whole educational system would become a "football" to be bandied about by conniving politicians in unscrupulous efforts to realize their selfish ambitions.

As we face the two above issues in our democratic country, we should remind ourselves that Germany was a military nation. She regimented her total manpower in an all out effort to win military and economic control of the world. She lost. So did Japan. So did Italy. Germany gave federal support to her entire educational system. She not only gave support but she assumed absolute control over her entire program of instruction and training. She reserved the right to say what should be taught and who should do the teaching.

Are we free Americans beginning to point the way Germany went? Are we looking for the beginning of the paths that she traveled? It is time to begin to think. Think fast, democracy, lest we unwittingly block the paths that were opened to us by our forefathers at great sacrifice and are essential to our freedom, happiness, safety, and progress.

WHICH WAY, NOW.

Again our young men come to the crossroads and so soon after the last dilemma. The draft is staring them in the face. It is not a possibility; it is a certainty. The one perplexing question with every young man subject to the draft is: shall I volunteer and get it over with, or shall I wait my turn and go when my country calls?

If you have tried to find the answer to these questions, and it is a serious undertaking, there are certain facts and possibilities that you might well consider, particularly if you are a high school graduate and ready for college. Should you enter college and are permitted to remain in college one year, this would give you a year's training and a year's experience away from home and in community life which should be of help to you in tackling the problems that are certain to confront you. In military life you would need the firmness of conviction and the strength of character that comes only from God. Conditions are more favorable for you in college than are conditions in barracks.

It is most unfortunate, nothing short of a tragedy, that the total young manhood of our country is compelled to be subjected to the language, the influences, the ideals, the loose-living, and the low moral standards of the military camp. There may be some advantages in the mental discipline and the physical training of the whole military regime, but such advantages are outweighed by far by the moral pitfalls and the spiritual hazards that lurk at the door of every camp. God help the nation and give us victory over evil.

But if you are in college and have one, two or three years more before graduation, what then? There are certain possibilities to which consideration should be given. One year from now conditions will be different. International relations will clear to a certain extent. We will know more nearly what Russia intends to do. If it is to be peace, and God grant that it may be, the war scare will be over, and the draft will be discontinued. If it is to be war, we will be near it or in it, and every ounce of manpower we have will be required. At present the odds say peace. If I were you, young man, I would take the road that leads to college in the hope that the world would be blessed with peace and my training would not be interrupted. If my hopes were blasted, then I would have at least one year of training that would fit me better for the service of my country and enable me to take better care of myself as I face the possibility of combat with the enemy. Young man you have a difficult question to decide. May your decision be correct.

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

Elon College has found it a pleasure to serve the Church through training its leadership and various other ways during the past half century and more. It is to be expected that the College would be more conscious of its opportunities and responsibilities in the matter of training leadership than the Church itself. It frequently happens that the local church does not know and otherwise is unaware of its need of a pastor, or a director of religious education, or a trained personnel for its usual functions until needs in these fields definitely arise resulting from requirements or from withdrawal of those to whom they have turned for leadership and guidance during the immediate past. It is the function of the College to keep these facts constantly before the Church that the CHURCH, MAY 1-4.

[Rev. Richard L. Jackson sent the Minutes of the Synod to "The Sun" for publication, with the idea that they would give its readers a panoramic picture of the work being undertaken in the Shaowu district. Mg. Ed.]

1. Moved and passed that church, school and other workers in North China who are forced to evacuate because of the Communist advance be invited to come to the North Fukien Synod to work. Telegram sent to that effect.

2. Moved and passed the following assignments to churches:

a.) That Mr. Lin Chang Liang become the resident preacher at the Yankou church with Mr. Jackson making frequent trips there to help in the administration of the communion, reception of new members, etc.

b.) That in the event of the arrival of ministers from North China, first consideration be given to the Yankou church.

c.) That the following women evangelistic workers be appointed to the Yankou church: Teng Gwo Chen, acting evangelistic worker and Chen Shu Chwen, assistant apprentice.

3. Moved and passed that because of lack of funds, the request of Wei Chin Ren to do full time work in the Synod be referred to a later meeting of the Board in the Fall.

4. Moved and passed that because of a lack of personnel, the request of Lan Hsia church to have Mr. Lin Chiang come to them in the capacity of preacher be deferred until the annual meeting.

5. Moved and passed that because of the lack of personnel, Rensheu church's request for a minister be deferred to the annual meeting.

6. In response to a request of the Yankou church that the ministers of the Synod move around more, it was decided that no rule could be made. All agreed that to stay too long was not good, but the length of each stay depends upon the minister, the situation and the need. (At the present time, all ministers in the four most active churches have been there from 10 to 30 years and they are all unwilling to move.)

7. Moved and passed that within five years, five churches become financially self-supporting and that a letter be sent to the secretaries and chairmen of the local church to that effect, so they can begin preparation. The churches are Shaowu East Gate, Shaowu South Gate, Tsiangle, Yankou and Kienning.

8. Moved and passed that in the payment of ministers' salaries, the plan of the Mid-Fukien Synod be followed especially in reference to basing the salary largely upon the number in each family. Whether to use rice or American dollars as a basis for salaries in 1949 was left to the finance committee.

9. Moved and passed that the Synod provide the opportunity for ministers to return to the seminary for refresher courses.

10. Moved and passed that three lay training institutes be held before the annual meeting, one in each district, the synod secretaries and the district leaders to set the time, place and make arrangements necessary.

11. Moved and passed that we request the American Board to send the following personnel to assist in the work (all of equal importance—AA classification): Rural minister, agricultural worker (county agent, home demonstration, etc.), public health nurse, educational worker, woman's worker.

12. Moved and passed that the following students be recommended for Theological study in 1948-49: Chang Hsien Kuang (Duke University Divinity School), Shiu Shen Pae and his wife in Nanking Seminary, Liao Tao Chung and Chang Wen Wei in Foochow Seminary. The other applicants were requested to wait until the Synod leaders have an opportunity to get better acquainted with them.

13. Moved and passed to add to the list of those receiving help from the Storrs scholarship fund Miss Liao Chu Yuen, and that help be given in accordance with the prescribed policy using course grades as the basis for the determination of the amount.

14. Moved and passed to recommend to the Han Mei Junior High School Board of Directors that the school be opened in the Fall term in conjunction with the primary school. Also, in view of the fact that the Board has granted $1,000 to the Han Mei School, moved and passed that in 1949, the Synod grant of $70 ordinarily given to the Han Mei School be given to the Hua Mei School.

15. Moved and passed that Dr. Riggs and the Shaowu Christian Hospital be requested to open a school for training lay doctors. Also moved and passed that each church appoint a health committee to work for the health and welfare of the members, in cooperation with Dr. Riggs.

16. Moved and passed that the name of the Yankou Hospital be "The Shaowu Christian Hospital, Yankou branch." Further decided to report to the Shaowu Board of Directors that it was to be considered a branch hospital. Pastor Liao Yuan Tao and Dr. Riggs were appointed to inspect the CNRRA medicines already received and to report to the Shaowu Hospital Board.

17. Moved and passed that medicines be given to the district leaders to be used for distribution to needy persons. (Dr. Riggs distributed medicines for malaria and worms, the two most common diseases.)

18. Moved and passed that the following delegates be sent to the anniversary meeting of the Foochow Mission in November, 1948: Liao He, Fan Ping, Liao Yuan Tao.

19. Moved and passed that the Synod loan the building opposite the Yankou Church to the young people to be used for a Youth Center.

20. Moved and passed to request the American Board to grant the following funds for the year 1949: General Work Fund, $1,570; Training of Lay Workers, $150; Han Mei Primary and Junior Middle School, $1,000; Shaowu Christian Hospital, $2,000; Property Repair Fund, $1,000. (With the exception of the last fund, the amounts are the same as requested for the year 1948. Grants for the Repair Fund would be made on the basis of money raised locally for these purposes.)

21. Moved and passed that Mrs. He Kuang to be granted $10,000,000 from the special fund given for the purpose of helping her.

22. Moved and passed to appoint the following committee to carry forward the three-year advance movement sponsored by the National Council: Huang To, chairman; Liao

With Emphasis on Missions

A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

Our School of Missions had to be cancelled, and we are sorry we cannot have our fine work and fellowship together. A very great deal of work, prayer and planning had gone into the effort to make this a school worthwhile to all who came. Our appreciation goes to Mrs. F. C. Lester, Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. Jesse Dollar, Dr. W. T. Scott, Mrs. O. H. Paris, Miss Elizabeth Chicoine and others who have spent a great deal of time planning and working for our school. Let's hope we can have it next year.

It would be impossible to try to imagine all the good that could have resulted from our School of Missions, all the fine things that would have been said, and the many friendships made and renewed. Nor could we know just how much of practical value we might have taken back home with us. One thing I am sure of—and that is that we would have become acquainted with our work for the coming year, bought literature, study books, and we would have been all set to come home and plan our year's work. The literature packets have been prepared, and were to be on sale at the school, along with the study books and Bible study books.

Since I have a packet on hand at the present, I would like to tell some of the things which Mrs. Scott has put into it and something of the plans for our next year's study. First of all, of course, there is the plan book, as usual, with plans for each month. The book begins with our hymn, "O Master-Workman of the Race," by Jay T. Stocking, followed by our theme, "Horizons Unlimited" and here a whole page is devoted to a very good interpretation of the theme. Then, Mrs. Scott takes up, one by one, the different little booklets included in the packet and explains what each is and how it may be used. This is very helpful. Then follows the plans for each month (programs suggested, etc.), a directory of officers, and the Achievement Goals.

I was very anxious to get inside this packet, and to see just what material we would have this year—and I was quite pleased to see all the interesting things. First, there are two booklets on our two mission boards. "The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions—A Five Minute Survey" does exactly that. It gives a very comprehensive explanation of the board and its work. "We Deal in Essentials" does the same thing for the Board of Home Missions. A very excellent little book is "Commit Thy Way," which contains worship services, program methods, and other things on Christian Stewardship. This booklet seems very valuable and useful for many purposes, being included in the Plan Book for use in monthly programs. "This is America" is devoted to our home mission study theme—"America's Geographical Frontiers" and contains useful information and pictures. "Hawaiian Stories" could be used along with this theme, too, and will be interesting reading to pass around. "Report from China," a white booklet decorated with lovely red Chinese characters, can be used in studying our foreign theme—"China in the Asia of Today." This booklet contains a description of our mission work in all our China stations, pictures of Dick and Dorothy Jackson, and Dr. and Mrs. Riggs.

We have another booklet containing five programs and four discussion outlines with worship services and additional resources for women's groups. The name of this is "Horizons Unlimited." There are two editions of "Guide Posts"—the April issue gives our new theme, a program calendar and list of program materials. The May-June issue includes an Installation Service written by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman. A lovely story "The Clock—a Christmas Story" is included to be used in our Christmas program. There is a pamphlet on C.W.V.R. Our Thank offering has been designate to go to C.W.V.R. next year, and we may learn what C.W.V.R. actually means and does by reading this. There are some very good suggestions from Mrs. Brown, Cradle Roll Superintendent, about things that can be done in the Cradle Roll. There will be some devotional services prepared by our Devotional Chairman, Mrs. Russell Bradford, based on the book of Galatians. A very interesting map is included, showing what mission stations we have around the world, and where they are. There are lists of visual aid material and other pamphlets, too.

Now, since you didn't have a chance to go to the School of Missions and buy a packet, you can sit right down now and order it from Mrs. W. T. Scott, Elon College, N. C. I don't know the price, but she can tell you that. You can also order your study books for next year—"On Our Doorstep" by Frank Mead, our home study book, and "China—Twilight or Dawn" by Frank Price, our foreign study book. Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds has written our Bible study book, "The Gospel Unlimited," and it may also be ordered from Elon College (Mrs. W. T. Scott or the Convention Office).

Of course, all these materials will be on sale at our annual conferences in the fall, but you may want to get them now and plan your year's work so you can be ready to begin with the first program in October.

I was planning to fill up my page next week with a write-up of the School of Missions, but no school. How about sending in some news of the societies to me, so we can read about what's going on even though we can't get together and talk about it? Thanks.

THE TURTLE.

Binnie's father came home with something tucked under his arm. It looked like a big, brownish rock. Binnie was waiting to meet him at the door and she saw it at once.

"Daddy, why do you have a rock?"

"A rock?—I haven't a rock," said Daddy.

"Well if it isn't a rock—what is it?"

Daddy pretended that he didn't understand. After just a moment of this he laid the funny looking thing down on the floor. Then Binnie could see that it was shaped something like a scalloped summer squash.

"Oh," she cried, "It's a turtle"

"Yes, it is a turtle," Daddy answered.

Binnie looked at the markings on its back and nudged it with her foot. Mother came in and Binnie called her to see the turtle.

"Turn it over," mother told her, but Binnie didn't want to touch it. Daddy picked it up and carried it through the house into their yard.

Gary and Pam who lived next door were sitting on their doorstep and they wanted to see the turtle too. Binnie's father laid the turtle on the pavement and told the children about finding it in the road. He said, "I had wanted to find a turtle for Binnie and when I was driving home from the country today I saw this one and stopped to pick him up. First I tried to get him to bite a stick for I didn't want the turtle to bite you."

Gary, who was very small asked, "Is it a boy?"

Binnie's daddy laughed and answered, "I don't know—I just called it—him."

Mother put the turtle on the grass and finally it stuck its head out a little and then the legs came out and slowly the turtle began to move. All of the children watched the turtle and Pam's dog, Sneezzer, came to bark and run around the turtle.

Binnie decided to give it a name, "Daddy called it 'him', so I will name this turtle Roger." Then all of the children jumped up and down and laughed about the turtle's name. Slowly Roger moved toward the flower border. Mother said, "Binnie we must eat our supper. Tell Gary and Pam goodbye now."

After she had eaten, Binnie hurried out to see Roger but he was gone.

She walked up and down the grass and looked into the border and under the bushes but no turtle.

She went in the house to tell her mother. Suddenly she heard Sneezzer barking and Pam and Gary laughing and calling. Binnie ran out and she saw that Roger had crawled under the fence and was in their yard. Pam was holding Roger but he had drawn in his head and feet like all bashful turtles do and once more looked like a brownish rock.

ENCOURAGE YOUR SHY CHILD TO TALK.

By RUTH PECK McLEOD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"How are you feeling today, Tommy?" inquired Mrs. Post.

"Oh, he's better," responded his mother before her son had a chance to speak. "You see, Tommy is so very timid," she added, "he just won't talk. I scold him for not answering people, but it does no good."

Later on, the understanding Mrs. Post spoke privately to Tommy's mother on the subject. "You don't realize it, Mrs. Tate," she said, "but a boy as bashful as your son is not likely to talk easily so long as you call attention to his silences and continue to answer for him. An only child, especially, is apt to be either too self-conscious to talk readily, or else to be overtalkative. One reason for many a child's slowness of speech is that he is too closely watched. Might it not be so with your boy? It is a natural for you and your husband to have your thoughts and interests centered upon Tommy, but you should both try not to fix your attention on him every time he speaks, or to comment at length on every little remark he makes, for this so embarrasses him that he cannot talk.

"Mrs. Warren's only child has a similar difficulty to overcome. I took him a birthday gift recently and, before he had any opportunity to thank me, his mother burst in with, 'Well, aren't you going to thank Mrs. Post?' A child should never be asked that question in public. Finally I took care of the situation by asking the boy questions which could be answered with single words. I said, 'You like the blocks don't you?' and 'Have you ever before had a box of blocks just like this one?' He smiled and answered the first question with a nod. Then becoming interested as he looked at the blocks, he answered the second with, 'No—hasn't.' His mother was about to correct him; I stopped her just in time.

"We are so eager for our children to make good impressions that we think they should say just the right thing in the right way at the right moment, and we forget that even many of us adults fail to do that, particularly if we are conscious that some critical person is listening to every word we utter."

"You are right," answered Mrs. Tate. "Thank you very much; I shall remember what you have said."

They were obliged to stop talking, but there was much more that might have been said on the subject.

Timid children are more likely to carry on a conversation when they are with strangers. One mother of a shy and sensitive only child became convinced of this when her boy had begun to sell magazines. He was an enthusiastic stamp collector and was eager to acquire additional pocket money with which to purchase some rare specimens. Due to this strong incentive, he surprised his parents by becoming a successful salesman. The neighbors marveled at the poise he exhibited and the excellent sales talks he gave when he was "out of his own." Upon being complimented by his mother regarding his ability to carry on conversations with his prospective customers, he said that he did not mind talking when he had "something to talk about." Boys, particularly, scorn the idle chatter of those women who make such trite remarks about them as: "Oh, how little Johnny has grown!" or "Isn't Frank the living image of his dad!"

A silent child readily senses a maternal parent's efforts to have him talk just to show off. At a recent gathering, a mother with such a motive questioned her son thus: "Albert, why don't you tell the ladies that you were the only one in your English class to receive an A?" When he made no reply, she exclaimed indignantly, "My son provokes me so! He won't talk and show how smart he is. I'm afraid he is going to be just like his Uncle Albert, who is really a wonderful research worker, but he talks so little when he comes out to our house, that no one would ever know how able he is. However, you should hear him when he speaks before a group of scientists!"

The diffident child should be given an opportunity to express himself at

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION AT HOLY NECK.

Some 300 delegates from 44 Sunday schools of the Eastern Virginia Conference will gather at Holy Neck for an all-day session on Tuesday, July 20. The morning program will commence promptly at 10:00, and lunch will be served by the ladies of Holy Neck Church.

Mills E. Godwin, Jr., President, will preside and a very interesting program has been arranged. Reports covering the year's work will be made by the various Sunday schools. The opening worship service will be led by the Young People's group from Holy Neck and the welcome will be extended by Mr. Hary Lee Weaver, Superintendent of the host Sunday school. Supt. William T. Scott, will deliver the main address at the morning session on the theme, "Live Christ—Teach Christ." Rev. W. L. Wood of Sunbury, N. C., Mrs. William T. Harrell of Liberty Springs Christian Church, Miss Mary Elizabeth Burton of the Suffolk Christian Church and Rev. Peter Young of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Virginia will all appear on the morning program.

At the afternoon session Rev. John L. Gwin, pastor of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, will bring the inspirational address on the subject, "Your Sunday School Today and Tomorrow." Dr. W. B. O'Neill of Holland, will lead the worship service. The election of officers and transaction of business of the convention will conclude the program.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The convention will open at 10:00 o'clock on the morning of July 22, 1948, at Asheboro, N. C., with the roll call, recognition of visitors and general opening business. Following this, Sunday school superintendents or their representatives will make a report on their group.

Dr. D. J. Bowden, Dean of Elon College, will be the principal speaker, using the topic, "Live Christ!—Teach Christ!" His address will be followed by a panel discussion regarding what key officers would like to see in a "model" Sunday school.

After lunch, a set of slides, "Improve Your Teaching," will be shown, followed by a skit, a business session and election of officers.

Here are the directions for reaching the church in Asheboro: At the center of town, turn west off Fayetteville Street on Sunset Avenue. Go one-half mile to the church, at the corner of Cherry Street.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

When the Convention meets on July 20, the main address, "Live Christ!—Teach Christ!" will be given by Dr. F. C. Lester of our Asheboro Church.

Following the morning address, there will be a panel discussion led by Dr. Lester, regarding what various officers would like to see in a "model" Sunday school. After lunch, there will be a skit and a set of slides entitled, "Improve Your Teaching."

The convention will be held at New Hope Church. For those of you who have not been to New Hope, here are the directions for reaching the meeting-place: Leaving Wake Forest, go east on State Highway No. 264 until you come to State Highway No. 98. Take No. 98 to New Hope.

CAMP HANES CANCELED.

The polio epidemic that is prevalent in a large section of North Carolina is the reason for the cancelation of the summer conference to have been held at Camp Hanes, August 14-19. The State Health Department recommended that certain restrictions be put on the campers and these restrictions would have cut the campers down to a very low number, making it impossible to hold the conference. We regret very much the necessity of canceling this conference, but after much consideration, we decided it was the only wise thing to do.

CAMP COMMITTEE.

EASTERN VIRGINIA JUNIOR HIGH CAMP CANCELED.

Because of the small number of registrations to the summer conference planned for July 21-26 at "Roslyn," it was deemed necessary by the Camp Committee to cancel this camp. This decision was a hard one, but we did not feel that it was fair to the camp staff or our faculty to hold the conference with so few campers.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

NAOMI, WOMAN OF FAITH.

LESSON III—JULY 18, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.
Ruth 1:16.

LESSON: Ruth.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 28:6-9.

She Had Heroic Qualities Too.

Ruth is, of course the central character and in a sense the heroine of the book of Ruth. And the story of her loyalty to her mother-in-law, Naomi is heart-warming. She had the stuff of great womanhood in her. And her very greatness has overshadowed Naomi who also had the stuff of greatness in her. She too was of heroic stature. And it is quite likely that if Ruth could speak to modern readers she would see to it that Naomi got her fair share of the plaudits of the people who read and see the drama of the story.

A Pioneer Woman.

Naomi was one of that large number of women who had the daring and the faith of the pioneer. It is an illustrious company and she belongs in it. Like many another woman, both ancient and modern, she went forth with her husband, daring the dangers, and sharing the hardships, of life in a new country and among strange people. On a recent trip to the West, the writer had occasion to learn more about the pioneer women of this country and he salutes them for their living faith and their ready spirit. They made an incalculable contribution to the life and stability of our country. And although there is not much chance of pioneering in new geographical lands in our nation, there is an urgent challenge to strong, courageous women to pioneer in fields of social endeavor and in new areas of human life.

It Took Grace to do this.

Bereft of husband, and then of both sons, Naomi found herself suddenly left without support in a strange land. She evidently felt that she would be a burden to her daughters-in-law, who were still young women. With a fine spirit of sacrifice and with the grace of God she determined to leave Moab and to return to her native land. And this in spite of the fact that she probably had little or no means of livelihood. It was an unselfish and sacrificial act and speaks well for the sturdiness and integrity of her character.

Her Religion was Contagious.

There was a charm and contagion about Naomi's religion that laid hold upon Ruth and greatly influenced her life. When it came to the show-down and the great decision, Ruth gladly gave up her homeland and her religion, to go with Naomi and to espouse her religion. It was all because of the sincerity and the charm of the older woman's religion. We would probably never heard of Ruth if it had not been for Naomi's good life. She is among that great host which no man or woman can number who have all unconsciously influenced some young woman by the genuineness and the attractiveness of their simple religious faith and works.

A Good Medicine.

Like the old negro, "Naomi had had a heap of trouble." It might well have broken her down or broken her up. In fact it would have done just this if she had turned her thoughts on herself. But she got out of herself by thinking in terms of Ruth and her future. In losing herself she really saved herself. People in sorrow and trouble can be saved only by refusing to give way to self-pity, and by becoming interested in people and causes outside themselves.

JONATHAN, LOYAL FRIEND.

LESSON IV—JULY 25, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: A friend loved at all times.—Prov. 17:17.

LESSON: I Samuel 18-20; 23:16-18;
II Samuel 1:1-27; 21:7.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Cor. 13:1-13.

A Different Kind of "Love Story."

Here is one of the world's greatest love stories. And it is a different kind of love story, for it is the story of a deep and strong love between two men. And the story gets its significance from the fact that they were real he-men. There was nothing sissy and sentimental in a weak sense about either of these men. They were strong, rugged, devil-may-care fellows. But there was a depth and nobility about their friendship and love for one another that has linked their names in one of the world's great historic friendships.

We know, of course, of David's rugged strength and raw courage. It was evidenced when as a mere lad he went forth to do battle with Goliath the Philistine giant. It was manifested again and again throughout a long and distinguished career as warrior and king. Here was a man, a man's man and a man after God's own heart.

And Jonathan was just as much a man. To be sure he is not as well known as David—that is one reason why he is included in these lessons on little known characters of the Bible. But if one reads the story of Jonathan he will find that he too was a real man, both physically and morally. He was made after the fashion of mankind at its best. It is this fact—the strong type of men who are involved—which gives point and power to the story of Jonathan and David.

"Give Me Your Hand, Brother."

This friendship started in a military exploit. Jonathan was present when David went forth to fight the giant Goliath. And when he saw that encounter something rose up from deep within him in admiration of the young man who had shown such a daring and heroic spirit. From that minute he was an ardent admirer of David's. One can imagine him as saying, "Put her there, fellow, you've got what it takes, and I'm for you, believe me." It should be noted, however, that it was not just a case of hero worship in the usual sense. In the final analysis, Jonathan admired David not only for his physical prowess, but because of his character.

A Friendship That Cost Something.

This friendship meant something because it cost something. Especially from Jonathan's standpoint. This can readily be seen when one understands that these two young men were aspirants to the same throne. According to the custom of that day Jonathan as the oldest son of Saul would have been king after his father's death. But it had been made known to David—and Jonathan also knew it—that David was to be king instead of Jonathan. And yet in spite of this fact, indeed because of this fact, we see Jonathan defending his friend, protecting his friend, furthering the interests of his friend. It is simply magnificent. Furthermore, Jonathan also loved his father. In spite of his father's weakness and insane jealousy, Jonathan respected him and sought to help his father. There was no duplicity on his part in his relations toward either man. His moral and spiritual stature grows more and more as one becomes familiar with the story. Here is something "really out of this world."

Payment in Kind.

David had little to give to Jonathan during the days of their early friendship. But he never forgot Jonathan's tried and true friendship for him. Thus it was that in later years he saw to it that Jonathan's son was spared and was taken care of by David through all his years. Alas! how often friends forget their friends of earlier days. How often people are simply fair-weather friends. But here was a friendship that held strong and true through all the tides of human affairs. And it has become immortal. The highest phrase that one can use concerning human friendship is to say that it is like unto that of Jonathan and David.

home without too much parental comment, to attend social gatherings, and to take part in different community activities provided for young people. He should be encouraged to relate at the dinner table his various experiences and to express his ideas on topics under discussion. Such attention develops confidence, for it makes the child feel that his opinions are considered worth hearing. It will not lead to conceit or aggressiveness if he is also encouraged to be a courteous, thoughtful listener.

All children need praise—some manifestation of appreciation. Well do I remember "fishing" for compliments during my adolescent years. My Mother—bless her!—belonged to the school of thought which didn't believe in much praise. When I asked, "Mother, am I pretty?" she always replied, "It's wicked for a normal, healthy child to ask such questions." I still wonder why she did not say to me, "No, my dear, you aren't pretty, but you have other attractive qualities."—Helen Green.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

God is good to us, and we have lots to be thankful for. Although we have had our disappointments, His blessings have far outweighed them. He has been our silent partner in this work during all the years, and we have often carried our problems to Him. While He has not always answered our prayers as we asked Him, He has, in the end, given our work an even greater blessing that we asked for. It is great to lean upon His everlasting arm at all times.

We are very happy to be able to be able to tell you that the three matrons who were so ill, have greatly improved and are able to take up their work again.

Vacation season is here. The children are beginning to take their vacations. My secretary went on her vacation last week. She had an opportunity to take a trip out west, and she made use of that opportunity by taking her vacation somewhat earlier than usual.

A number of our boys who are members of the Boy Scouts had a very pleasant week recently at Cherokee Camp, half going one week and the rest the next. A good friend in Burlington bought new scout suits for them and paid all of their expenses for the week in camp. This was certainly an outing for them. They thoroughly enjoyed it.

REPORT OF TREASURER OF

They will have to be replaced by increased apportionment giving if the work is to continue at its present level.

Nine Months of the Fiscal Year.

The receipts for the nine-month period through May 31 compared with those of the previous fiscal year are as follows: From churches, 1947—$583,096.45, 1948—$600,874.62, Gain—$17,778.17; from individuals, 1947—$59,219.32, 1948—$34,712.98, Loss—$24,506.34; legacies and matured conditional gifts, 1947—$152,206.88, 1948—$156,218.91, Gain—$4,012.03; including general permanent fund, 1947—$25,598.73, 1948—$29,929.33, Gain—$4,330.60. Totals: 1947—$820,121.38, 1948—$821,735.84, Gain—$1,614.46.

While the church and individual gifts (apportionment receipts) from September 1, 1947, to the end of the 1947 apportionment year (January 10, 1948) were greater than in the same period of the previous year, the receipts from these same sources on the 1948 apportionment year (January 10 to May 31, 1948) are $26,000 less than in 1947, resulting in a net loss for the nine months of the fiscal year of $6,728 as shown in the above table. This means that unless there is a substantial increase in the remaining three months of the fiscal year we will have little available to apply on the Post-War Emergency Program projects.

In the case of receipts from Legacies and Matured Conditional Gifts and income of Funds, we estimate that the amount anticipated in the budget will be received by the end of the fiscal year.

It is not possible to predict what the total expenditures for the year will be nor whether they will be in excess of or less than the budget estimates. Some unforeseen factors have already made necessary supplementary appropriations. The expenses of missionaries traveling to and from their fields will not be known until the closing days of the fiscal year. We hope that savings over estimates in some classifications will offset the amounts that will be in excess of the budget estimates.

Post-War Emergency Program.

The Board has an allocation of $297,880 in the apportionment section of this program. For the first two years $103,832.80 was received, leaving a balance of $194,047.20 to come in 1948 if the total objective is to be reached. There has been appropriated a total of $122,438.37, of which part is in anticipation of the receipts to come this year. Of the amount appropriated, $85,000 has been used toward the needs of the regular budget ($30,000 in 1946-47 and $55,000 in 1947-48), and $37,438.37 has been used for special projects that were in the original program. The completion of the goal of the program is vitally necessary to the Board, both for the support of the regular work and the completion of the special projects.

In CWVR section of the program $80,000 was assigned for the aid of our workers and constituency in the war-affected lands. Of this amount $57,850.24 has been received from CWVR and appropriated, and the balance of $22,149.76 is needed for further aid to workers in Bulgaria, Greece, Czechoslovakia and Spain.

In this section there is also the amount of $1,249,520 for the rehabilitation of property damaged or destroyed. An amount of $560,557 has been received from the CWVR and appropriated for property in Greece, the Philippine Islands, Japan, Micronesia and China; to replace personal property of missionaries; and to purchase surplus army medical supplies for hospitals in China and the Philippines. The work of property restoration has been delayed in North China because of political conditions and in some other areas because of unavailability of materials. It is now evident that the total need will be considerably in excess of the amount that will be provided by the Post-War Emergency Program and the Board will face the problem of raising the additional amounts that will be needed. The Board is deeply grateful to the CWVR for providing through their section of the Post-War Emergency Program for the replacement of destroyed and damaged property so that the work on the field can go forward.

The Look Ahead.

We do not need to speak in detail of the promotional program for 1949 and 1950—"Our Christian World Mission"—for this is being presented in other parts of the program. The critical importance of it, however, cannot be overemphasized. Earlier in the report we have tried to make clear the point that the Prudential Committee has used up all available resources to keep the work of the Board going and that these non-recurring resources are at an end. An increase of receipts from church and individual gifts of $250,000 a year above the 1945 level will be necessary to support the present level of work. Beyond this are urgent needs calling for $851,608 more. We must keep faith with the missionaries whom we have commissioned for this work and with the national Christians, and above all we, as part of the world Christian Church, must keep faith with the great commission which Christ gave to us—His Church.

APPORTIONMENTS.

Church may be informed and guided. It is a fact known to all that no institution of higher learning is or is likely to be self-supporting financially. Such institutions are dependent upon their sponsoring constituencies. State institutions have a source of securing support that is entirely unknown to the church college. The church college is necessarily dependent upon the Church for support. Elon College has found such dependence profitable and is glad to rely upon the generosity of its own church people for necessary support. Some times such support seems negligible, and the College is tempted to be discouraged, but at all times we take heart and hope and look to the future.

Walking With God

IV. In the Midst of Suffering

[The fourth in a series of messages given by DR. ALFRED GRANT WALTON, chaplain of the General Council in Oberlin and minister of the Flatbush-Tompkins Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., at the General Council.]

Some of the sufferings of humanity arise from man's ignorance of natural law. All human development requires an absolutely reliable universe, one that will act tomorrow exactly as it acts today. A universe of law is one of the many evidences of the goodness of God. It is a mirror of the Divine Constancy. In such a world there is always a possibility that humans will suffer through a disregard for law or because of ignorance of it. It is not to be expected that God will abrogate good laws in order to avoid casual disasters.

DR. WALTON

It was evidently in the mind of God that a world in which man could develop into a moral being capable of growth and fellowship with Him would demand freedom of choice. When God bestowed this divine gift on humanity He voluntarily limited Himself and assigned to man something of His own divinity. But when God limited Himself He not only opened the way for human development but He risked the possibilities of great disaster. Human suffering is a part of the risk of man's gift of freedom.

It is quite possible for us to misunderstand suffering through a failure to see it in its proper perspective. Christ bore a great amount of physical suffering, but physical suffering is by far the smaller part of the anguish which men endure. Christ met an even greater amount of mental agony. The tragedy of Golgotha with all its aching tears in the light of its larger meaning was not an evil but a good.

There is really no complete answer to the problem of human suffering. We must trust the goodness of God even when we do not understand. When we have attained such faith, the riddle of suffering will be solved and the soul will find serenity.

NUMBER 29.

Vacation Bible Schools are One Answer to the Recent Supreme Court Decision

Graduation Exercises for the Joint Daily Vacation Bible School of the First Congregational and Hillside-Merrimon Methodist Churches of Asheville, North Carolina. Rev. Earl D. Weed, pastor of the First Church is at the left end of the upper row, and next to him is Rev. Clifford H. Peace, pastor of the Methodist Church.

" . . . Whatever religious instruction the children of America are to receive in the years to come must be provided by the church and the home. We urgently appeal to the churches . . . to gird themselves for this increased responsibility and to be equally fearful of the result upon the church and the state if we should fail."—From Convention Report on Christian Education. It is earnestly to be hoped that none of our churches will let the opportunities offered by such schools as the ones held in Dr. I. W. Johnson's pastorate in Eastern Virginia and Mr. Weed's in Asheville go unchallenged.

News Flashes

Mr. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., will speak Sunday morning before the combined adult Sunday school classes of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth.

The editor attended the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention which was held at Holland, Va., this week.

Dr. Frank L. Lewis was the guest preacher for the union revival services held last week at Mount Auburn Church in North Carolina.

Rev. J. Frank Morgan of Norfolk has accepted a call to serve the Windsor Pastorate and will begin his ministry there on September 1.

Mrs. J. B. Jackson of Columbus, Ohio, mother of Richard Jackson, writes: "As an appreciative reader of THE SUN, I feel I must write and tell you how happy I am to read your accounts of the Oberlin General Council. . . . I do appreciate the interest that all of you in the Southern Convention have in our dear ones in China."

Rev. and Mrs. Joe A. French visited in Alabama the last two weeks in June. The French family, including parents, nine children, and their children—44 in all—attended the home church, Noon Day, for the morning service of June 27. This was an unprecedented reunion for the French family. The Rev. Mr. French preached at the evening service.

Announcement has been made of the resignation of Rev. Henry Lee Robison, executive secretary of the Virginia Council of Churches. Mr. Robison will return to the Methodist pastorate in the fall. Dr. Thomas C. Allen, the Council's director of interracial department, has also resigned to accept a position as co-secretary of the department of race relations of the Federal Council of Churches.

Virginia Marlette, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Marlette of Burlington, N. C., and Keith Truitt, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Truitt of the Shallow Ford community, were married July 3 by Dr. W. W. Sloan at the Shallow Ford parsonage. Living temporarily in Graham, N. C., where Mr. Truitt is employed, Mr. and Mrs. Truitt are planning to build a home in the Shallow Ford community.

WALKING WITH GOD: V. IN THE LIGHT OF ETERNITY.

The person who denies personal immortality has no more positive proof of his position than the person who believes in it. It is not the case of fact on one side and faith on the other; it is a question which faith is the more reasonable. The average person would like to know whether or not he will continue as a self-conscious, self-thinking, self-aware personality after the physical dissolution which men call death actually occurs. Christianity answers this question with the strong affirmation of faith. It is not a blind faith nor the pious hope of the simple minded but a faith rooted in deep thought, strengthened by scientific insights and bulwarked by the Christian's whole philosophy of the universe. Life is a mockery if its incompleteness here on earth, its hopes and its aspiration are to have no fulfillment. There is a certain dignity in man that insists on immortality. To think that a being of such vast potentialities should perish after three score years and ten is the supreme irrationality. To all other arguments for immortality we must add the testimony of the resurrection. We do not know what actually occurred at the resurrection but we do know that a group of discouraged and disheartened disciples became suddenly convinced that the One who had died upon the Cross lived again.

It seems reasonable to believe that the life of the soul after death will be marked with ever-increasing refinement and understanding. The end of this process is nothing less than the fulfillment of the life of the soul in the life of God. The soul of men would merge with the great Over-Soul and become a part of it. God is man's ultimate destiny.

THE CHURCH AND RADIO.

Television Chapel Scheduled.—WPIX, the new television station in New York City, owned by New York Daily News, announces scheduling a half-hour "Television Chapel" for 5:00 p. m. (EDT) on Sundays. The program is to be produced with the cooperation of the Federal Council of Churches, the National Council of Catholic Men and the American Jewish Committee.

Each group will have one Sunday a month, the fourth Sunday to be devoted to other religious bodies.

Radio Program Brings Missionary Volunteer.—A missionary has been enlisted as a result of the New York State Council of Churches' broadcast: "Headlines in Religion," heard over WGY, Schenectady. Her name is Miss Shirley Webb of DeRuyter, New York, and she graduated from State Teachers' College in Albany this past June.

Miss Webb heard a broadcast which mentioned openings for young people in the missionary field. She immediately wrote to Dr. J. Edward Carothers who conducts the broadcast, and he established for her a contact with the proper agency. She has been commissioned and will go to Japan in the fall.

There have been other inquiries from young people and it is reported that at least two of these have fair prospects of meeting the required qualifications of the mission program.

Missionary to China Asks for More Radio Stations.—Shanghai's Christian Radio is making its influence felt. After a recent broadcast more than 400 Bibles and New Testaments were sold. This station was started by a Christian layman who still contributes most of its support.

"We must have at least 50 such stations in China if we are really to grasp our opportunity," he told the Audio-Visual Survey team, headed by Rev. Everett C. Parker, Director of Joint Religious Radio Committee and the Rev. S. Franklin Mack of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., when they visited him in February.

MISS CHICOINE RESIGNS AS FIELD DIRECTOR OF CONVENTION.

Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Field Director of the Convention since September, 1946, has presented her resignation and plans to return to her home in North Adams, Mass., in September, where she will teach in the public schools.

Miss Chicoine has done good work, especially with our young people. The Pilgrim Fellowship is well organized and is doing good work, due to her good services. She has rendered valuable service to the women's work and in other ways has contributed unselfishly and effectively her talents for the development of the Convention's program. She has made many friends and she will be greatly missed.

We join her many friends in the Convention in expressing regret of Miss Chicoine's decision to leave the Convention work, but our best wishes go with her.

CWVR OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

July 1, 1948.

DEAR FRIEND:

At its recent meeting at Liberty (Vance) Church, the Southern Convention voted to adopt as its minimum goal for the work of the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction in 1948, the sum of $8,917.49, which is $2,589.18 more than we raised last year. In order to achieve this goal the Convention also authorized its Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction to request each church voluntarily to accept a quota which represents its proportionate share of the total amount. Your Committee has undertaken to do this as fairly and equitably as possible and we are asking you to assume as your quota the sum which appears below in this week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Letters have gone out to local church secretaries and pastors. The quotas assigned to churches who contributed to CWVR in 1947 represents a slight increase over the amount these churches gave last year, and is in proportion to the larger goal we seek to reach in 1948. The quotas given to churches which did not contribute last year were determined after careful consideration of what we thought might be reasonable and just for these church to undertake.

We hope you will consider your quota a fair one, and one which you can attain. At the next meeting of your church board will you present this matter for discussion and request the board to adopt this suggested quota? Please remember that this amount is only a suggestion, and if you feel that you can do more we shall be most deeply grateful, for it will require the generous giving of all our churches to fulfill our task in the remaining six months of 1948.

May we urge you to pay your quota as soon as you can do so. Gifts are lagging and during the summer they tend to fall behind even more. And yet the summer period is an excellent time to make your drive for CWVR before the fall program diverts your energies to other responsibilities. Please send your checks designated for CWVR to: Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Superintendent, Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, Elon College, North Carolina.

New literature and envelopes for the summer period are available. If you will inform me of your needs I will be glad to see that you are amply supplied.

Very sincerely yours,

FREDERICK B. EUTSLER,
c/o The United Church,

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE PUBLISHING BIENNIUM.

We are yet in the first month of the new Convention biennium. History is indeed in the making. Great progress may be made, or we may even fail to maintain the status quo in our publishing program.

It may not be known generally, but the new Board of Publications threatened a reduction in the size and frequency of publication in an attempt to balance our budget. Fearing that this might affect subscriptions adversely, the board decided to proceed on our present schedule at least for the rest of the year. Drastic steps may be taken if our publication program is not made self-sustaining.

Our publisher sustained a deficit which ran into hundreds of dollars in order to carry out the previous biennium's contract. It was thought that in the face of advancing prices in other periodicals and services, the Convention would cheerfully raise the subscription price of THE SUN. The Convention so voted. Then, strange to say, a smaller voting body reversed the decision by a majority of three on the final day of the Convention. The subscription price remains therefore at $2.00.

The Board of Publications resolved to make a courageous effort to continue the same size and frequency of publication which has proved to be most satisfactory in meeting the needs of the Convention. They decided to do this in the face of a current deficit at the beginning of the biennium. They ventured to be a Board of Publications rather than be simply bored of publication. Plans are being made to enlarge the circulation.

Did the board do the right thing? Did it move in the right direction? Does it have your hearty endorsement, your moral and financial support? Why not register your opinion? Let the board know your sentiment.

Now someone may wonder what the average subscriber can do to strengthen and perpetuate our paper's program. Our first need is that of subscribers. Make an earnest effort to secure one or more new ones. Have you ever secured one? You will experience a moral victory as you send in that first subscription. It is the Lord's work, you remember. Let us know if you can use several extra copies judiciously.

If you fail to get a new subscriber, what then? Enter a gift subscription for someone, relative or friend. This is the kind of paper you can send to all kinds of people, young and old, near and far. Many people of other denominations enjoy our publication.

It is in order to make an outright gift in gratitude to the organ which has published the sacred news of our Church for more than a century. Extra and generous gifts are made to every other institution of our Church, but the agency which promotes all of these causes and institutions, has had to subsist from time immemorial on a limited, usually unbalanced, budget.

Is gratitude and generosity out of order with reference to our Church paper? Two men go to the same church and hear the same sermon; one gives $2 a year and the other gives $200. Surely THE SUN must be worth more than $2 a year to some people! Why not pay it then? There is no law against it. "The strong should bear the burdens of the weak."

Please note our new and enlarged editorial staff listed on page 3. Good things are in store for our readers. Material of wide scope will appear. There will be a Convention-wide, nation-wide, and world-wide coverage of religious news.

If our fathers kept THE SUN shining and solvent in days of greater financial stringency, surely we can do the same today! This is no time for retraction. Forward in publication! Forward in service!

SPIRITUAL IMPLICATIONS OF THE NEW DRAFT LAW.

A strong appeal to church leaders to assume moral responsibility for men about to be drafted into the armed services was made by a combat veteran Naval chaplain at the General Council in Oberlin. Rev. Carl Knudson, resident head of the Department of Sociology at Champlain College, Plattsburg, N. Y., and a minister of the Congregational Christian Church, addressed a meeting sponsored by the Chaplains' Fellowship, representing 467 of our ministers who served in the Army or Navy during the recent war.

He said: "No one who is interested sincerely in American youth can view enactment of a new draft law without genuine moral and spiritual concern for the welfare of the young men who are to be involved. After serving in both World Wars, first as a U. S. Marine and then as a Navy chaplain and after interviewing hundreds of veteran students since the war, I am thoroughly convinced that the most important factors in protecting the service man from personality disorganization are the folks back home, particularly the church leaders.

"The man in uniform is always in danger of losing a certain sense of personal security which is the product of established kinship with his fellow man. The primary relationships of civilized life which assure him of the neighbors' regard and keep him straining every nerve to live up to their high expectations, are seldom replaced by the transitory relationships with 'buddies.' The consequent moral casualties are often more pathetic than wounded men.

"Concentrated contact with the sordid aspects of human existence, disruption of family ties, disillusionments regarding eternal values, hardening of emotions, cynicism regarding life's meaning and purpose, alienation from spiritual resources, often follow in quick succession. The soldier's best hope is in well organized, alert church leaders who fol- (Please turn to page 14.)

LIBERTY AND THE CHRISTIAN SPIRIT.

A Sermon

By WILLIAM ROBERT CATTON, Decatur, Illinois.

"Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."—II. Corinthian 3:17.

This week the Freedom Train is coming to our town. We are being reminded again of our priceless heritage of freedom. We need to be reminded. We need to remember that freedom is worth a very great price, and we need to remember that freedom has cost a very great price. We must not belittle it: nor must we take it for granted.

We Americans do rejoice in our liberty. As grown-up people, in a free country, we acknowledge no masters but ourselves. We are free to do as we please, to think as we please, to speak as we please, to enter whatever occupations we please. We are free to take any place in our social and economic order that our abilities and our energy can win for us. We rejoice in this liberty. We are glad we have it.

Freedom is a splendid thing, but there are some conditions attached to it. With freedom goes the responsibility of using our freedom wisely, and justly. It's fine to be able to do what we want. But with that goes the responsibility for wanting to do what we ought. People who are not free needn't worry about that. If some dictator is your master, and you have to do what he wants, then you aren't free: and you aren't responsible.

The Bible has a great deal to say about this. Let me read you one of the things the Bible says about freedom. "Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." We may well say likewise, "Where there is liberty, there the spirit of the Lord has got to be!" For people, for nations, the privilege of liberty means the responsibility for self-control. We are not likely to exercise this self-control unless we have the spirit of the Lord. Responsibility, accountability, self-control go with liberty. Without them, liberty is a very deceptive thing. Liberty is not likely to make you happy after all, if with your liberty you don't have self-control; worse trouble, it may well be, than if you had no liberty at all.

Self-control! Not merely the absence of wrong. Not merely putting some limits on our appetites and passions. Self-control! The positive discipline and direction of life, so that it has meaning: so that life is devoted to high purposes: so that a man achieve some success, in the accomplishment of deliberately intended results. We are not likely to have this kind of self-control, we are not likely to have this kind of discipline, of self-direction, unless we have the spirit of the Lord. And so I say, where there is liberty, there the spirit of the Lord has to be. But be sure of this: the thing to do is not to have less liberty, but more of the spirit of the Lord.

The spirit of the Lord, then: what is that? Why, it is the spirit our Lord had, in his life. It is the kind of thing that was the character and personality of Jesus Christ. I say we have got to have that kind of character and personality ourselves. We must have it—or we simply dare not be free.

Christ was one who believed in God. Almost everything else stems from that life-giving and all-embracing belief. God is. God is good. The will of God will prevail. God's will requires justice, and truth, and righteousness. A man is accountable to God: accountable for the use he makes of his time, of his ability: accountable for all he does. If any man does not believe in a good God, dare we let that man be free? Is it safe for a man to have the liberty to do as he wants, if what he wants is not directed and inspired by his accountability to God?

Christ was one who had a genuine love for all people. He had a genuine love for all mankind; he had genuine goodwill for every individual person he ever knew. This love was not just a duty with him, but a part of his very nature; a motive for his conduct. We must have that spirit. A man without goodwill; a man who hates his fellow men; a man who holds his brother in contempt; dare such a man be free? If you love me, you may treat me as you will, for it will be your honest will to treat me with respect. You will be just and honorable toward me, not because you have to be but because you wish to be. But if you do not wish to be honorable and just, dare I let you be free?

Where there is liberty, there the spirit of the Lord has surely got to be.

Christ was one who was very much in earnest. We must have that spirit. Men and women, boys and girls, who have no serious purpose, who take life not seriously but flippantly, can they be free? An Abraham Lincoln, a Pasteur, a Curie, Jane Addams, George Washington Carver, Livingstone, Gandhi, Sun Yat Sen, they can be free. They should be free. They are in earnest. They have great thoughts to think, great things to do. They must not be fettered. But what about men without purpose? What about men who have no purpose but to serve themselves? Idle people, superficial people, silly people? What does freedom mean to them? What does it mean to us, if such are free? If they are free to do as they wish does anyone know what foolish thing they will wish to do? Ah, where there is liberty, there we must have the spirit of the Lord.

Let no one think I am urging less freedom. With all its risks and dangers, I do not urge less freedom. It is the other face of the coin I urge. Not less freedom: more Godliness. If we wish men to be free, and we do wish men to be free, not just to be free ourselves but all men to be free; but if we wish men to be free, I say, then how terrible it will be if men are not also good. We must all become evangelists, if the world is to be free. Where there is liberty, there we must have the spirit of the Lord.

Yes, rejoice in your freedom, American men and women. And you boys and girls, listen to the word sent home by a young American who found himself in war-torn Tokyo in 1945, "As you live," he said, "as long as you live, give thanks you are an American." Rejoice in your freedom. With eagerness and pride repeat again this "Freedom Pledge":

I am an American, a free American;
Free to speak—without fear,
Free to worship God in my own way,
Free to stand for what I think right,
Free to oppose what I believe wrong,
Free to choose who governs my country;
This heritage of freedom I pledge to uphold,
For myself, and all mankind.

But remember also that where there is liberty we must have the Spirit of the Lord. "For ye, brethren, were called for freedom; only use not your freedom for an occasion to the flesh, but through love be servants one to another. For the whole law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Without this, who dares be free? Without this, who can be truly free.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Not every day is as busy as last Friday was. But every day is full in any active pastorate. Friday I began the day with an 8:30 broadcast over the radio, which I prepared after a very early breakfast. At 10:00 o'clock I met with the ministers and a few laymen to discuss the future of our weekday religious education program in Suffolk. Following that I went to a home from which the only son had given his life a few years ago for his country and whose body had just been returned to his family. There I met not only his family but eight of the men who served with him. At 1:00 I attended a Rotary Club luncheon. At 4:00 I conducted the funeral of the above mentioned young man. At 5:00 I attended a special meeting of our church's board of finance. At 7:00 I called in a home where one of our most loyal members is very sick. At 7:30 I called on a mother and father and a new baby in one of our local hospitals, and on four other members of our church, one of whom is very ill. At 8:30 I assisted at a wedding rehearsal, and at 9:30 I met a young father in my study for a very serious cannot-wait conference, at 10:00 I attended—a bit late—a reception for the wedding party. At 11:30 my wife and I came home with a full day's work written into the record. Through the day other comings and goings checked up as many as a dozen pastoral calls, and one long distance telephone conversation concerning church matters.

Now the interesting thing about it is I was happy and not too tired. I had been able to be of service to others. I rejoiced in the privilege of serving. In the radio message which I had delivered early in the morning I had said: "He has never let me down. He has put a song on my lips and music in my soul. I love to preach His holy word, and to offer the good life, and the redeeming Lord, to those whom I have come more and more to love. If I had my way all those within my reach would have as sturdy faith in Him as I have. Since my graduation from theological seminary I have had three congregations to love and serve and who have put up with me and my efforts. Each of them has added immeasurably to my faith in God and to my joy in service. None but an humble servant of the Lord knows the thrill of being a minister. None but such a one knows how anxious a preacher is to be of real service and real help. He suffers with them when they suffer. He rejoices with them when they rejoice. He has more than he deserves of the affection of his people. They love him in the same category as they love their church. And he returns their affection measure for measure."

Why more young people do not enter the ministry I cannot see. They do not realize how much they are missing in their opportunity to be of help to others. True the minister's family is to some extent circumscribed by the minister's life and calling, but I believe in the main they measure up. At least "Who's Who" gives them top rating among their fellow-men.

There is a growing need for stout hearted, upstanding, altruistically-minded young men to study for the ministry. The calling is not new, but those who answer it will find that it is worthy and alive.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

WHAT ABOUT CIGARETTES?

More people are smoking today than ever in the history of the human race. This is particularly true here in America. Two world wars gave an immense boost to the cultivation of this vicious habit. Millions of cigarettes were shipped overseas by well-meaning mothers and fathers to their sons in arms. From one such came back this note in a letter: "Mother, I don't know what you will think when I tell you, but I'm smoking now. Such a practice, as you know, never appealed to me, but here the other fellows insisted and to relieve the monotony and be a good sport I joined in. Now, it seems to have gotten me, but I'm going to try to confine myself to a pipe."

No man or woman, boy or girl ever began the smoking habit because of an inborn craving for the taste of tobacco. Nicotine is a deadly poison and the healthy human body does not have a weakness in that direction. Just what does smoking do to the human body? Let's take a look at the facts in the case. Nicotine is quick-acting and as fatal as prussic acid. One drop of it placed on a cat's tongue brings on convulsions and death in a few minutes. Luckily for the smoker the nicotine in the tobacco is volatilized in smoke. In smoking a pack a day the smoker soaks up 400 milligrams in a week. That much thrown into the blood stream at one time would be as deadly as an atomic bomb. It is this poison which furnishes the "pleasure" in smoking. The smoker does get a "lift" the same as he would from cocaine, heroin, marijuana or any other similar drug. Doctors tell us that these stimulate the adrenal glands, and throw an extra amount of sugar into the blood-stream. Heart action is increased; so is respiration. The blood pressure bobs up and down. Finally, there's a let-down throughout the body. Another cigarette and so on until the victim becomes a slave.

The inevitable smoker develops a "tired feeling" and wonders what's the matter. He loses appetite for nourishing food, doesn't sleep well at night and then there's a hacking cough and his throat feels like a sand-papered sore. Nicotine in the system heads straight for the heart. Ask any cardiac specialist about the "tobacco heart." He will tell you that angina, coronary thrombosis and other heart ailments are now being traced to the excessive use of tobacco.

Gene Tunney, the one-time heavyweight world's champion, was commissioned a Lieutenant-Commander in the Naval Reserves and placed in charge of physical training and athletics for the men during the war. It was found that 40 per cent of the men were unable to pass the required examinations because of bad hearts and weak lungs. He did his best to make the men under his care physically fit but it was an up-hill job. Men in training for the ring, the gridiron or the ball field are not allowed to smoke, keen irregular hours or over-eat.

Says Mr. Tunney: "Nicotine isn't the only poison found in tobacco. When you inhale you take in carbon monoxide, ammonia, carbolic acid, pyridine and a host of other tarry substances. Nicotine causes undue amounts of hydrochloric acid to pour into the stomach. Heartburn, indigestion and acid conditions are directly traceable to excessive smoking, and an almost certain way of getting stomach ulcers is to smoke regularly on an empty stomach. Carbon monoxide brings on head-ache, ammonia irritates the nose and throat. Pyridine affects the bronchial tubes. The tarry substances in tobacco are now believed to be the cause of mouth and tongue cancer."

Listen over the radio: "This tobacco by a special process of curing

SUMMER SCHOOL.

During the war the government requested the college to continue classes twelve months in the year. Some colleges inaugurated what they called the trimester system. They divide the twelve months into three periods of practically four months each. Others continued on what is termed the semester basis, two terms of four and a half months each, and then conducted summer school for six or twelve weeks as circumstances would warrant. And still others adopted the quarter system. The year was divided into three months each of equal emphasis.

In 1934 Elon College conducted a summer school of twelve weeks divided into two six-week periods. Since that date we have had a twelve-month school with commendable achievements. The summer school has its advantages and disadvantages. It enables students who so desire to complete requirements for graduation in three calendar years instead of four, thus saving one year in preparation. It affords faculty members a full year of employment instead of only nine months. It is less expensive in providing heat and lights in summer than in winter which is of practical benefit to the student and the college. On the other hand a twelve-month school places a terrific strain on the administration and faculty. Vacations of any appreciable length are entirely out of the question. Buildings and furnishings must be repaired and put in order. It is difficult to do such jobs which school is in session, and yet they must be done regardless. Then, too, students may feel that they are saving time and stepping up their schedule. Yet for a student to apply himself conscientiously and continuously to his students for three years and then face the grind of graduate school may find in the end that he has lost instead of gained. There is a question, I should say, regarding the whole picture of summer school sessions.

Elon's enrollment in summer school has been quite satisfactory. Before and during the war our summer school student body numbered from 80 to 150. Since the war we have had around 300 students for our summer school sessions. The enrollment this summer is the largest—344. This is due in part to the large number of

G. I.'s in college. As a rule they are more advanced in years. Many of them are married, have family responsibilities, and are finding it almost impossible to balance the family budget with government allowances. Naturally they want to get out of school and into professions or business as quickly as possible.

Elon's first term of summer school closes today, Friday, July 16. The second term will open Monday, July 19, and will close August 21.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

But for the generosity of the Virginia Valley Conference and the Western North Carolina Conference this part of the college's report would have been blank for this week. Thanks to Beulah, Linville, Mt. Olivet (G), and Winchester of the Virginia Valley Conference, and Brown's Chapel and Pleasant Grove of the Western North Carolina Conference. These contributions are not large but they express the interest and desire of these churches. In fact the churches and Sunday schools of the Southern Convention are not asked to contribute large amounts weekly or quarterly but are requested to contribute regularly in compliance with the amounts apportioned by their several conferences.

Elon College is grateful for any recognition or contribution that the churches of our Convention may wish to make.

REGISTRAR AND LIBRARIAN OF DUKE UNIVERSITY DIVINITY SCHOOL APPOINTED.

Appointment of Rev. George Brinkman Ehlhardt to position of Registrar and Librarian of the Duke University Divinity School is announced by Dr. Harold A. Bosley, Dean of the Divinity School. The registrar is chiefly concerned with recruiting students, conducting correspondence, handling registration and records, and assisting Dean Bosley with such matters as alumni relations. The Rev. Mr. Ehlhardt, who will assume his duties on September 1, received his B. D. degree from the Duke Divinity School in 1945. Before coming to Duke, he was a member of the history faculty at John B. Stetson University, DeLand, Fla., where he had previously received his A. B. degree.

A "SUN" BOOSTER.

Why is it so much easier for one to criticize than to praise? And when anyone can plainly see how starved people are for a little word of praise, too! To say nothing of how over-fed these same people are with criticism!

What about making a change in this one thing, starting right now? I am thinking of our CHRISTIAN SUN contributors at this moment. We have heard our SUN criticized (we've even heard ourselves doing it!) when maybe what it needed was a few more faithful souls doing all they could to improve it—such as these three to whom I think a special bouquet is due. If you have others in mind why not take it upon yourself to see that one goes their way, too?

There is our Orphanage Superintendent, Mr. Johnston, who has so faithfully and unassumingly kept us informed about what goes on at the big home of which he is head. His reports are always ready with interest, and as we read we find ourselves feeling pretty small as compared with him and his big job.

What home-maker and mother could fail to admire Mrs. R. L. House as she finds time to give from what must be a crowded schedule so that our children may have a page of their own in our church paper? Three cheers for Mrs. House, I say!

To those who have never heard Dr. L. E. Smith as he gave his reports on the work and needs of Elon College the "News of Elon College" page may not mean so much; but to those who have seen and heard the sincerity in his face and words, his written reports mean a lot, because they know his heart is in his work.

These "bouquets" may be of no more value than field daisies, but orchids could be given no more sincerely.

MISSION BOARD PROGRAM FOR THE BIENNIAL.

(FROM THE REPORT TO THE CONVENTION.)

As we face the future at least a few things seem to be imperative:

1. We should adopt some plan which would adequately and regularly underwrite the Shaowu Project. This is our responsibility and it should not be left to chance or to improvised methods.

2. In the second place emphasis should be kept upon Church Extension. Our Convention is not growing as it should, and one of the reasons is that we are not building new churches. Church Extension should have a prominent place in our program and a prominent part of our means.

3. In the third place we should co-operate with the General Council through its Mission Council in its new and enlarged program which will probably be called "Our Christian World Mission." By doing this we will be able to avail ourselves of the splendid literature and promotional materials, as well as the speakers of the new program, and also feel the uplift of doing a great task together.

4. In the fourth place we urge the members of the churches in the Convention to continue to support the work of the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction even more generously than heretofore. For the need is, in some senses, even more urgent. There should be no decrease in our giving to this worthy cause and the critical needs it represents.

5. Finally, brethren, there must be a persistent and insistent program of prayer in behalf of missions. "It is not by might or by power, but by my spirit," saith the Lord, that the Kingdom comes. The organizations and the machinery and the mechanics of missions are desirable and even necessary. But what we need most of all is the dynamic power of the Holy Spirit. The missionary enterprise was born of the Holy Spirit. It can develop and grow only by the same Holy Spirit.

WHAT ABOUT CIGARETTES?

contains less throat-irritating tars." And too: "Not a cough in a car-load."

The woman smoker excuses herself by claiming that polite society makes it necessary. The real reason is, it helps to attract attention. Fifty years ago the only women who smoked were a few grandmothers, and it was a corn-cob or clay pipe—not a cigarette. Another thing doctors are discovering today is that smoking impairs a young woman's ability to become a fruitful mother of healthy children.

When Gene Tunney was training for his fight with Jack Dempsey he was offered $15,000 if he would endorse a certain brand of cigarette. He politely refused saying he didn't smoke. The following day a company representative came back with another offer of $12,000 if he would allow them to use his picture. Then he proceeded to speak a piece of his mind.

Stalin of Russia is wise. Quietly and without any fuss about it, he is seeing to it that Russian boys and girls of today are made physically fit to become the soldiers of tomorrow.

In this country boys and girls are left to do as they please about matters of that kind. Universal military training in times like these may be necessary, provided it isn't too late. The human body is a divine thing. The least man can do is to take care of it.

Church Women at Work

NOTES FROM UNITED COUNCIL OF CHURCH WOMEN.

The fourth National Assembly of the United Council of Church Women meets November 15-18, 1948, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Every church woman is welcome and urged to attend. Workshops on first day will deal with problems, policies and principles affecting the united action of the Council. Town Hall sessions in the afternoon will afford opportunity for questions and discussions.

One of the very important matters to be considered will be the relation of the Council to the proposed National Council of Churches. What a great privilege it would be for some of our women to attend this assembly.

IF MY SON OR DAUGHTER SHOULD "DATE" A CATHOLIC.

What should my attitude be? Which course should I follow? This is one of the knottiest problems Protestant parents face. We are a tolerant people, we Americans. We want to be Christian about such matters, but should we do nothing?—say nothing?

Our Protestant children should be informed about the Roman Catholic Church. This does not mean to attack it, but rather to face with them two facts: first, that the Roman Church has made a tremendous contribution to civilization in the past; second, that the Roman Church is made up of many sincere individual members who are good Christians, but it also is a political organization which is in politics across the world, and that it is dominated by a hierarchy which tells its members what to think, how to vote, where they can worship, etc.

Our children ought to be told that they should never, under any circumstances, sign an agreement that any children born to their union would be given to the Catholic Church. They should understand that to sign an agreement is immoral for several reasons. First, it is signing away the religious freedom of unborn children. Second, it is forcing the Protestant to be a spiritual outcast in his own home as his mate and children will be taught by the Roman Church that his own religion—Protestantism—is heresy and therefore false. Third, it is an admission that one's own religion is inferior to Catholicism. Fourth, it violates the first principle of a successful marriage, namely, a give and take attitude which meets the other half way.

The Roman Catholic boy or girl is not allowed to meet the Protestant lover half way. He demands that the Protestant come all the way. Is this Christian? Can a marriage succeed which begins on that note?

Our children, many of whom have just fought for freedom, should understand that the Roman Church does not believe in or practice religious freedom. It demands it of Protestants when Protestants are in the majority, but denies it to Protestants when the Catholics are in the majority. If you would like to know what Catholicism teaches along this line, read Catholic Principles of Politics by John A. Ryan and Francis J. Boland. Protestants in Spain today do not have religious freedom.

Every Protestant youth should read If I Marry a Roman Catholic, published by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York City. It is a calm, sane discussion of this difficult problem.

Our children should know these things. Then if they continue to "date" the Catholic boy or girl, we must do nothing to make them feel that we are bringing pressure to bear upon them. We must learn to trust our Christian teaching and to believe that the seeds we have planted will bear a rich harvest for God.

Strike from mankind the principle of faith, and men would have no more history than a flock of sheep.—Ex.

OAKLAND CHURCH AUXILIARY REPORTS.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Oakland Christian Church has had a very successful year.

We have had eleven monthly meetings, one public service. The Bible study was given each meeting by our very consecrated leader, Mrs. I. W. Johnson, the Gospel of Matthew being studied.

We have a membership in the C. M. A., gave to Thank Offering, had a joint World Day of Prayer. We have given to Franklinton Center, N. C., and sent gifts to Japan as our Friendly Service.

We covered our Home and Foreign Mission study books. We have given three Life Memberships this year.

Our Auxiliary played a big part in the celebration of the 50th Anniversary of our pastor, Dr. I. W. Johnson. We planned and carried out the menu for the dinner for the all-day meeting, everyone being well fed.

We are expecting to meet all requirements for the Achievement Goals.

MRS. A. C. BUPPERT,

BUSINESS AND BARBECUE.

Fifty women of Berea (Nansemond) Women's Auxiliary met the afternoon of June 11 on the bank of the Nansemond River at Planter's Club House for a short business meeting and vespers. This is truly a lovely spot and as we sat in a large circle for worship, we opened our hearts and minds to God's truth and beauty.

The men cooked and served a delicious barbecue supper—the ladies and children were guests. All church members were invited and two hundred and fifty were present. All enjoyed the good fellowship and food.

We carried our children and they enjoyed a refreshing dip in the large outdoor pool.

It was at the close of Daily Vacation Bible School, our enrollment being ninety-two.

We are a small rural church, but we have good times together.

President.

MRS. ELIZABETH CORNELL,

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

Have some of you been going to Daily Vacation Bible Schools? This week I saw some movie pictures taken of the Bible School which was held at the Newport News Church. They were getting in line to march into their chapel and the flags were being carried carefully and the little children were walking as erectly and happily as the oldest junior.

Tuesday morning on my way to Eastern Virginia's Sunday School Convention I passed Bethlehem Church and their Daily Vacation Bible School was beginning for the morning. Little and big children were running across the church grounds. I saw just a little of the new addition to their Sunday school. It is nice to be growing whether one is a child or a church.

Many of our Bible Schools are over and some of you helped in them—perhaps for the first time. It is good experience and lots of fun. The joy of doing this work may lead some young people to full-time religious educational work. I hope it will. Others may be inspired by their leaders and teachers to do that kind of church work.

Here is an interesting account of a recent Bible School held at Rosemont:

"Our Daily Vacation Bible School was one of the best we have ever held at Rosemont. The enrollment was 110 and the average attendance was 96. There were 40 boys and girls who had a record of perfect attendance. The General Superintendent, Mrs. C. L. Richardson, was ably assisted by a large corps of workers from the church and Sunday school.

"Miss Frances Newman, a Student Summer Service Worker, was sent to us from Elon College, and she did a splendid piece of work among the Juniors. Frances endeared herself to the entire group of workers and she wrote back that she was homesick for Rosemont and all the people who were so nice to her.

"Refreshments were served each day by the adult classes. The last day the parents and friends were invited to see a motion picture and to look over the work which had been done by the children."

There seems to lurk about some men—women, too—a propensity to paltry saving—avarice.

ALWAYS READY TO LISTEN.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.
(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"The new boy who has come to live next doors certainly can play ball," remarked Ned Barton to his mother, during a longer-than-usual pause as he followed her back and forth from kitchen to pantry. Mrs. Barton was assembling the ingredients for a salad.

Ned then plunged into a lively description of the afternoon ball game, becoming quite enthusiastic when he spoke of the home run made by the "new boy."

"You're in my way, Ned," interrupted Mrs. Barton. "Why don't you go out and wait for your dad?"

"But I want to tell you about the new boy."

"What new boy?"

"Mother! That's always the way! Why can't you listen?"

"I'm so busy. Tell me once more—I'll listen this time."

Ned went over the home run again.

"Who was it made the home run?" his mother asked absent-mindedly as she finished cutting the celery. "Oh yes, the boy next door—of course. Now go on." And she began dicing apples.

But Ned, with an expression of exasperation, shrugged his shoulders resignedly and slipped out of the kitchen.

The next afternoon, Mrs. Barton while attending a tea at the home of a neighbor, listened to a discussion regarding boys and girls of high school age. Every mother who spoke felt that it was most desirable for her to have an assured place in the confidence of each of her own children. One said that the day after a party her daughter, Barbara, was always eager to talk to her of the interesting things that had happened—her partners and what the different ones had said, the dresses the other girls had worn, and what her group had done after the dance.

"Oh, isn't that just as it should be!" exclaimed another woman. "My daughter attends the high school affairs with the same crowd, but she never tells me anything. How do you get Barbara to talk? Do you question her?"

"No, I've found it best to wait until she wants to tell me. Naturally, I'm eager to hear about all that concerns her nowadays; although, I confess, when she was younger her descriptions and stories often bored me. I believe this disposition to take little part in the interests of our six to fourteen-year-old children is an almost universal failing among parents. Yet, unless we do listen to our young children, we seldom are given a chance to listen to these same children when they are adolescents.

"When they are in their teens we are anxious for their confidences. There may come a fear that they are growing away from us—perhaps even that they are losing faith. In any case, the knowledge that they are becoming daily less dependent upon us makes them increasingly dear. I had to learn this from experience.

"As I said, when Barbara was a little girl I wearied of her constant chatter and, while she prattled, I would often try to go on reading, mentally designing a new dress, or planning the meals; but the minute I began answering her in an absent-minded manner, she would stop talking and slip away. It came to me one day that I was treating her in a very discourteous manner, of course, teaching her to be discourteous, too."

"That's exactly the way I treated Ned last night, when he tried to tell me about the ball game," thought Mrs. Barton. And when he realized that I had not listened, even when he was repeating the story, he stopped talking and disappeared—I don't blame him. I wonder—yes, I think he will be more likely to tell me about his affairs when he is sixteen if I listen willingly to his boyish concerns during the next five years."

And then the voice of Barbara's mother broke in upon her musings. "You see, when we pay a price we usually receive due returns. The price we must pay for our child's confidences is a willingness to listen attentively whenever that child wants to talk."

Nagging is a habit that has many unhappy consequences; the child psychologists are constantly warning parents against the overuse of don't, stop and other words and phrases that are aimed at halting, instead of furthering, the child in his efforts to learn about the world in which he has come to live.—Helen Green.

Courage and perseverance have a magical talisman, before which difficulties disappear and obstacles vanish into air.

HOLY NECK YOUNG PEOPLE REPORT.

The young people of Holy Neck Christian Church are happy to report a very interesting and eventful year. We would like to report on some of the highlights which we have enjoyed.

We visited shut-ins, carried baskets of fruit and sang Christmas carols at Christmas in order that we might do our small part to carry a little Christmas cheer. We also had a New Year's eve party and remained in prayer as the old year went out and the new year came.

During the winter months the men of our church found time to remodel the interior of our social or meeting hall. It was left to us to clean up after the workers. It was not too difficult when we all got together, and we enjoyed a weiner roast afterwards.

We have had charge of opening exercises for Sunday school and are also responsible for worship services for the Sunday School Convention which is to be held at Holy Neck on July 20.

Meetings in the homes of various members have been enjoyed by all of us. Miss Nellie Davis is to review our study book, New World Ahead:

ASHVILLE'S JOINT DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

The two-week joint session of the DVBS of the Hillside-Merrimon Methodist and the First Congregational Churches of Asheville, N. C., was completed Friday morning, June 25, 1948, with an excellent program by all the children of the school. This was called a "sharing" program. The various departments "shared" the knowledge they had gained and the work they had done, with the other children of the school, and with the parents and visitors of the community who were invited to join in this program with them. The children of the Kindergarten were dressed to represent what they had learned about "God in Nature." They had made their own costumes under the leadership of their teachers, representing flowers, birds, butterflies, winter, spring, rain, sun, and many other of God's creatures in nature. The planning direction, and producing the entire Kindergarten department's program and course of study were under the very capable leadership of Mrs. E. G. Bolich, assisted by Mrs. Janie Sowers, Mrs. J. H. Bailey and Miss Sally Nell Wise.

The Primary Department.

The Primary Department studied "The Home Life of Jesus" as a part of the course on "The Childhood of Jesus." Games, such as the games Jesus and his childhood friends played, were planned and played by the entire group. They also studied foods which Jesus had in his home. So much material was discovered on games and foods of Jesus' childhood, that the Primary Department produced two programs in order to cover the subject. One program was given Thursday morning at the First Congregational Church, where all the school joined with the Primary Department in an hour of games and songs of Jesus' childhood, and then a luncheon was served. Five of the foods served were identical with the foods Jesus ate. They were: olives, cream cheese, wafers, raisins and grape juice. This was attractively prepared and served by Mrs. Arthur Jackson and her assistants of the First Congregational Church. The second Primary Department was given Friday morning at the closing exercises. In this the children were dressed in costumes which they themselves made, composed of appropriate head-gear fancifully colored, and bound on the head with turban bands. The children seated themselves on the floor as in the times of Jesus, gave lessons in reading, customs, and laws of Jesus' instructions during His youth. All this was due to the very excellent team work of Mrs. P. R. Holderby, department head, and Miss Luerena Zinn, the S. S. worker who is a trained worker in primary work. Other local student helpers were Miss Emily Hawkins and Miss Patricia Harmon.

Junior Department.

The Junior Department went on a "Trip Through the Holy Land." The knowledge they shared with others was the large cities of the Holy Land and why they were important; the strange fact that the Holy City is sacred to three world faiths, Judaism, the Moslems and the Christian; the Holy Land (one-fifth of North Carolina); and many other pertinent facts. This Department was under the capable leadership of Mrs. R. A. Campbell and Mrs. Paul Harmon, assisted by Mrs. R. M. Wise, Mrs. H. L. Wright and Miss Carlotta Autrey.

Exhibitions.

All departments gave display to their various handwork projects and craft shop activities; such as building temples, making scrolls, wall mottoes, making gardens, planting seeds, and in many other ways brought home to the children and the visiting parents and friends, the reality of the naturalness of the daily life of Him who has given more to "Little Children" and to the whole world of nations and peoples, than all other agencies, religions, or philosophies of all history. Jesus was "experienced" through the lives of these children as they pictured His daily life of home activities, by their play, songs, and work.

A Community Project.

The DVBS was a real community project. There were 82 children in attendance, of which 70 were in regular attendance. A perfect attendance was made by 32. There were seven denominations represented. Sixteen children were from homes either with scant contact with any church or without church affiliation of any kind. The pastors, Clifford H. Peace of the Methodist Church and Earl D. Weed of the First Congregational Church cooperated in their mutual support of the project. The complete success of the entire effort was due to the very capable and efficient directorship of Mrs. Clifford H. Peace. Her ability, patience and tactful leadership brought out the very best efforts of all workers. The pre-school planning, thoughtful preparation, and detailed analysis of needs, material and methods, gave most fruitful results in the effectiveness of the work accomplished. The school staff follows: Director—Mrs. Clifford H. Peace (wife of Rev. Peace); Heads of Departments and Assistants—Kindergarten: Mrs. H. E. Bolich, Mrs. Janie Sowers, Mrs. J. H. Bailey, Miss Sally Nell Wise; Primary: Mrs. P. R. Holderby, Miss Luerena Zinn, Miss Emily Hawkins, Miss Patricia Harmon; Junior: Mrs. R. A. Campbell, Mrs. Paul Harmon, Mrs. R. N. Wise, Mrs. H. L. Wright, Miss Carlotta Autrey; Pastors: Rev. Clifford H. Peace, Hillside-Merrimon Methodist Church and Rev. Earl D. Weed, First Congregational Church.

BARUCH, THE SCRIBE.

LESSON V—AUGUST 1, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and light unto my path.—Psalm 119:105.

LESSON: Jeremiah 32:6-15; 36-37; 43:5-6.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 82.

The Spoken Word.

A graduating class a few years ago had as its motto, "Deeds, not words." And, of course, words do sometimes seem quite ineffective and harmless. But there is power in the spoken word. The word of Jesus was with power. At His word things happened. And who can measure the power of the words of Winston Churchill during the dark days when it would seem that nothing could stop Hitler and his armed legions! It is a mistake to minimize the power of words. All this of course has a bearing on today's lesson. Hitherto Jeremiah had been preaching. He did not read from a carefully prepared manuscript but he spoke as the Spirit of God gave him utterance. But his words profoundly affected and influenced leaders and people alike.

The Written Word.

There came a time, however, when it became desirable to have the spoken word reduced to writing. Only thus can the words of a man be preserved for posterity. At the bidding of God Jeremiah wrote down the words concerning the will of God concerning the Jewish nation. Thanks be unto God that Jeremiah's words have been preserved even for us. They make sober and serious reading for this day. And they have point for our modern world, for they show how insecure mere material power, and international alliance are if irreligion and moral deterioration lie at the heart of a nation.

A Well-Known Big Man's Unknown Secretary.

Ask the average Sunday school member who Baruch was and he would not be able to give you an answer. But Baruch was an important, even if an unknown person. A lot of unknown people are important, very important. And sometimes they are comparatively mediocre people. There is a host of well-known men who would probably never have amounted to anything if it had not been for a good mother or a wise and faithful wife. And many a "big shot" is really successful in many instances because he has a faithful and efficient secretary to look after many details.

Well, Baruch was Jeremiah's "secretary" or stenographer. When the Spirit of God told Jeremiah to write down his words in the hope that the leaders would give heed unto them, it fell to Baruch's lot to write them down. He did it the hard way—for both of them. He did not take dictation in shorthand. Nor did Jeremiah speak his piece in a dictaphone for Baruch to transcribe later at his leisure. But pen in hand he laboriously took down word for word what Jeremiah had to say. Spelling out laboriously by hand with a pen on parchment on a scroll he transcribed the message of Jeremiah. It is an instance of the labor that is oftentimes back of a great written document.

Unpleasant Truth.

When the princes and leaders of Judah heard the words of Jeremiah as recorded by Baruch they were greatly disturbed. In bold language but with breaking heart Jeremiah frankly foretold the fate that was awaiting the nation that had broken its covenant, and that had been betrayed by its leaders. These high officials thought that the king ought to hear these words, but they hardly knew how to go about this delicate venture. They asked Baruch for the roll and then suggested that both he and Jeremiah go into hiding. When in due time the matter was brought to the king's attention he decided to hear the words of the roll. But it was unpleasant truth to him and as the words were read he took a pen knife and cut up the roll and cast the leaves or the pieces of the roll into the fire. He was not the first or the last person who thought that truth could be destroyed by "burning the books." Hitler is one of the more modern fools who thought this could be done. But the story of the Bible is the story of a long and determined attempt to destroy the Bible. Wycliffe and Tyndale are two men who paid a great price at this very point. The written word of God is dangerous to those who do not try to square their lives by it.

Now the Bible is a great book of comfort. It has many great and exceeding precious promises in it. And there are many who impoverish their lives by not reading these portions of the Book. But the Bible is a disturbing book, a most disturbing book indeed. And there are many people who do not read it because it does condemn them and pronounce judgment upon them, or if they read it, they read only the portions that make them feel good and put them at ease in Zion. When Jesus preached his first sermon at Nazareth where he had been brought up, the people did not take kindly to his remarks when he began to tell them that God cared for the people of other races. As long as he confined himself to generalities and precious and soft things they wondered at the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth. But they could not stomach his remarks about Naaman the leper or the woman of Sarepta—about God's care and concern for these people who were supposed to be outside the pale of God's love and care.

The same principle holds true today. Many people want the preacher to preach what they like, not what they ought to hear. They look for the passages in the Bible that soothe rather than for the ones that stir. There is the story of the old Negro woman who was giving vocal and enthusiastic approval of the minister's words of condemnation on the various sins of the congregation. But when he mentioned dipping snuff she nudged her pew-mate, saying bitterly, "Dere now, dat man's done stopped preaching now and gone to meddling." The truth needs to be preached in love. Men need to be reminded that they are sinners, that they need a Saviour, that they must repent and believe. They need to be reminded of Judgment both in this world and in the world to come. Unpleasantness is not reason why truth should not be preached.

Starting Over Again.

Poor Baruch had to do the same thing over again. After the roll was burned he had laboriously to make another roll letter by letter. He belongs to that great company who have had to start over again.

The Greeks had a foot-race in which speed and endurance were not the only tests. Each man at the start was given a lighted torch, and the laurel wreath was for the one who came in first, "with his torch alight." Success in life is not merely "getting there," but more important still, in keeping the light of God burning in our hurrying souls.—Christian Endeavor World.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

ing in the Daily Vacation Bible School of the Hillside-Merrimon Methodist Church and the First Congregational Church of Asheville. Miss Zinn, a junior of Schaufler College of Social Service Workers is spending her third summer in the S. S. S. activities. She made a most effective contribution to the DVBS just completed (June 25) by the two churches above. Mrs. Peace, director of the school, made her mistress of ceremonies for the closing program of the school which was so effectively presented as to call forth sincere expressions of gratitude and appreciation. She is planning to make her life work that of religious education, after her graduation from Schaufler next year.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The good Lord is surely good to us and comes to our rescue in the time of distress. We have sixty acres planted in corn this season. It is the most promising crop of corn we have ever had. In fact, it looks as green and thrifty as riverbottom land. But we had had only one-half inch of rainfall since the first of July, and corn began to look twisted and sick, and very much in need of rain. It had reached the stage where it had to have rain if it made anything. But I am happy to say that on the evening of July 14 we had a most refreshing rain—no storm, no wind, no thunder, no lightning, but just an all-night gentle rain, a little more than two inches in all—a refreshing season. We can hardly be thankful enough to the good Lord who sees all our needs.

The children seem to be enjoying their vacations. Nine members of the Scout troop in Elon got to spend a week at Camp Cherokee near Reidsville, N. C. They were all glad they were members of the Scout troop which gave them this opportunity. Scouting is a fine thing for boys who take an interest and try to advance so as to be an Eagle Scout. Some boys are more interested than others. Fifteen years ago we had here a very competent Scout Master, and he did the boys a lot of good. One of our boys, about twelve years of age, had to swim 100 yards to get the next degree. We had some very cold weather with snow and ice, and as soon as the snow melted away and the pond was full of ice water, this little boy was so anxious to get off the next degree he slipped off one day and went to the pond and swam his 100 yards in the ice-cold water. He did not have even a cold from his experience. He was full of energy and I often said to him, "You could succeed on a big rock in the ocean." He graduated from college and won his wings in World War II in the Air Corps.

Our income report this week shows up a little better. We are still nearly two thousand dollars behind this time last year. This has been brought about by the small income during January, February, and March of this year when the weather was so rough and people could not get to church. Fifty thousand dollars ($50,000) is our goal for the year. We are anxious to make it a "Banner Year" and celebrate my thirty-second birthday as Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage. I know you will not disappoint me.

SPIRITUAL IMPLICATIONS OF THE NEW DRAFT LAW.

low him through heaven and hell, the earth, the sea and the air, and never let him forget the old hymn, 'I would be true, for there are those who trust me.'

"Among our brightest memories of the Solomon Islands campaign are those of sailors whose morale was kept at the highest pitch by correspondence with home churches. They saw their names in church bulletins; they heard regularly from young church friends of their own age group; they were remembered with small gifts on their birthdays or at Christmas time; they were honored while home on leave; they knew that they never either suffered or rejoiced alone, for the love and prayers of their church fellowship followed them to the ends of the earth. This took an enormous amount of consecrated systematic labor on the part of the churches, but seldom in all their history have they been so highly rewarded for a like amount of time and energy.

"Every chaplain soon learned that his job was to help the church at home accomplish its mission. He could not establish deep and strong personal relationships with many of his men, but he could organize groups of like-minded personnel who could fortify each other for spiritual survival. He could provide inspiring worship services where men were reminded that they were children of God, prized by Him as friends and partners in His purpose; but always the chaplain, recognizing his role in the division of labor, realized that a man's personal victory would depend largely on the 'chaplain' back home, without uniform or rank, the pastor of the old home church."

When the microscopic search of skepticism, which has haunted the heavens and sounded the seas to disprove the existence of a Creator, has turned its attention to human society and has found a place on this planet, ten miles square, where a man can live in decency and security, supporting and educating his children unspoiled and unpolluted; a place where age is revered, womanhood defended, and human life held in due regard; when skepticism can find such a place ten miles square on the globe where the gospel of Christ has not gone and cleared the way and laid the foundations and made decency and security possible, it will then be in order for the skeptical literati to move thither and ventilate their views. But so long as these very men are dependent upon the religion they discard for every privilege they enjoy, they may well hesitate before they seek to rob the Christian of his hope and humanity of its Saviour—James Russell Lowell.

The wise Phocion was so sensible how dangerous it was to be touched with what the multitudes approved that upon a general acclamation made when he was making an oration he turned to an intelligent friend and asked in a surprised manner: "What slip have I made?"—Steele.

In Memoriam

SQUIRES.

Mamie Smith was born May 18, 1908 in Alamance County, N. C. Married to Clyde Squires, December 23, 1931. To this union was born one daughter. Mrs. Squires professed faith in Christ and joined Long's Chapel Christian Church in 1930, where she remained true and faithful till about six o'clock A. M. July 6, when she received the summons from on high to come and join the heavenly host. Funeral services were held from Long's Chapel Church at 4:00 P. M., July 7, with her pastor, this writer in charge assisted by Dr. Jesse H. Dollar. Burial in the cemetery near by. She leaves to mourn their loss besides her husband and little girl, her father, one sister and one brother and friends numbered by her acquaintance.

GUY H. VEAZEY.

BYRD.

Mrs. Texanna Wright Byrd, eighty-nine, widow of William Henry Byrd of Nansemond County, died June 19 at the home of her son, J. Pressley Byrd, Harrell's Siding, after a short illness. She would have been ninety years of age on July 22. She celebrated her sixtieth wedding anniversary in May, 1938, shortly before her husband's death, having been married in 1878. She had in her possession at the time of her death a copy of The Christian Sun in which the account of her wedding appeared, which was seventy years ago, in May, 1878.

She was the oldest member of Bethlehem Christian Church, Nansemond County, Va., and a charter member of the Ladies Aid and Missionary Societies of that church.

Her funeral was held on Monday, June 21, at the Bethlehem Christian Church, conducted by her pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle, and Dr. I. W. Johnson. Burial was in the church cemetery.

She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. J. A. Ellis of Suffolk, Mrs. C. L. Harris of Norfolk; three sons, N. W., J. L., and J. P. Byrd of Nansemond County; one sister, Mrs. Mary Hyers of Portsmouth; twenty-one grandchildren, thirty great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild.

ROBERT L. CHEEK.

On June 21, 1948, death removed from our midst a beloved friend and brother, Robert L. Cheek. He joined Pleasant Hill Christian Church early in life and was a faithful and active member of the Baracca Class.

We, the members of Robert's Sunday School Class, wish to offer the following resolutions:

1. That we realize God doeth all things well. While we mourn the loss of one who meant so much to us, and to others as well, we bow in humble submission to His divine will.

2. That we keep in lasting remembrance the high Christian standards and high ideals of service, kindness, and joyfulness which were his in daily living.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to his family in this sad and lonely hour, commending them to the great Comforter who said, "Let not your hearts be troubled."

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy entered upon the records of our Sunday School Class, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

ANDERSON.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father in His infinite wisdom, to remove from our fellowship, our beloved brother and deacon, George Gallie Anderson, from this life to that life beyond.

Brother Anderson, had been a loyal member of the Church for many years and took an active interest in all phases of his Church's work. He served on the Board of Deacons for 39 years. Recently was made a retired deacon. He was quiet, sincere and devoted to our Church and community.

The Board of Deacons of Concord Congregational Christian Church resolve:

1. That we have lost a most faithful church member and deacon of our Church.
2. That we bow in humble submission to the divine will of the heavenly Father in the death of our friend and brother.
3. That we extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved.

men, doctors, educators, anthropologists, electrical engineers and specialists in radio programming.

The missionaries will be sent to South America, the Near, Far and Middle East and Africa.

Presbyterian Church Creates Department of Radio.—At the General Assembly meeting of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. in Seattle, Washington, a new department of religious radio was approved and the Rev. Clayton T. Griswold, the denomination's Youth Budget director, was appointed to head it. Griswold has been the commentator for the General Assembly meetings for the past years. He will assume his duties September 1.

The Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. (Southern) meanwhile, at its 88th General Assembly at Atlanta, Ga., heard its radio committee ask for increased use of radio to "spread the gospel."

Television Causes Salvation Army Headache in the Bowery.—The popularity of television sets in New York City saloons has made Salvation Army work in the Bowery more difficult. A free seat at many of the major sporting events of the year can be secured in almost any tavern in New York City.

The "angels of the bowery," Captains Olive McKeown and Luella Larder, two Salvation Army lassies who run the Bowery Corps, say, "Many a sincere man determined not to drink has been lured into the barroom just to watch the television and has ended up days later seeing pollywogs, snakes and lots of queer animals and people."

To keep Bowery citizens from the taverns the Salvation Army is raising money for its own television set. An appeal has been made in the Recorder, Salvation Army magazine, for funds. The Army has expressed confidence in this "faith project" and when the set is secured the only admission requirement will be a breath free from alcoholic fumes.

Bible Quiz Show Gains Popular Attention.—WNEW, New York City station, has a Bible Quiz show each Sunday 8:30 to 9:00 a. m. The Rev. Laton E. Holmgren, Associate Pastor of the Christ Church in New York City, is quiz master. Bibles are given as prizes. The program is sponsored by the American Bible Society. The Bible quiz takes half of the program entitled "The Living Bible," the other half is devoted to Scripture readings by Douglas Stanbury and the singing of hymns.

Two members of the staff of the American Bible Society, radio director, Francis Stifter and Mrs. Gladys Crawbuck have developed the questions. The contestants are selected from different churches. Some contestants win the opportunity of appearing on the program because of winning contests in their local churches. Ministers occasionally appear on the program but are ineligible for prizes although they may take part in the Bible quiz.

Church Building Financial Notes

By CURTIS R. SCHUMACHER, Church Financial Adviser
Church Extension Division, The Board of Home Missions

The salesman, when selling, diverts your mind from the price—he stresses the article. The churches, in their Financial Projects, might well profit by his example. In any Financial Project, the church should never be presented as an expense account, or a debt. Salesmen would scoff at such an approach. Picture instead the program of the church—what it means to youth, families, the community. What place does the church occupy in your life, your neighbor's and the vicinity? What would your town be like without a church? How long would you live in such a city?

No church is a hole in the ground to be filled up—it is a spire which points heavenward. It is a great privilege to help build a temple of worship. Governor Dewey of New York said, "The importance of the work you are doing does not lie alone in the amount of money that is raised. Even more important is the way it is raised."

The Financial Project should not be a begging event. Instead, properly conducted, it should offer the opportunity of investment in that which brings returns in enriched lives, developed characters, saved boys and girls. No investment pays bigger dividends. Each individual profits. Property becomes more valuable, human life safer, virtue less in danger. Who can measure the spiritual benefits? The corporate sin of the church has been its reluctance to ask people to invest in Christianity. It begs, bargains, sells, pleads, but fails to show that what it has to offer is so precious that man cannot afford to miss the chance of participating in these values.

The workers in the church Financial Project should be trained in the technique of this approach. They should be solemnly and consecratedly commissioned as ambassadors of the church to approach the people in the light of this glorious event.

Confidence and courage in the great project are essential in all canvassers. They should be instilled with the conviction that they are not beggars, but are representing the greatest institution on earth, and are inviting people to join in their enterprise. They should show that gifts to such a cause will enrich the giver more than the recipient.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME C.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1948.

NUMBER 30.

This IS News!

When two fourth generation American Board missionaries merge—that is news! The culmination of a missionary romance was the wedding on May 25, 1948, of Edward C. Riggs, M. D., and Frances Louise Whitaker, R. N.

DR. AND MRS. RIGGS

Edward and Frances flew from Shaowu, China, to Tientsin in order to be married by Rev. Robert B. Whitaker, Frances' father.

Over 115 years ago Elias Riggs, a famed linguist who was literate in 19 languages, went as a pioneer missionary to Turkey. Each generation following him saw a Riggs in Turkey down to the father of Edward Riggs of China, who died when the young doctor was only 10.

Edward Riggs spent part of his boyhood in Turkey. Later after the death of his father, he lived in Denver, Colorado, where he attended grammar school and at that early age made up his mind to be a doctor. More than that he decided to be a missionary doctor.

Between this youth desire and his actual arrival in China as a medical missionary in 1947 lay years of study and labor. Dr. Riggs worked his way through the University of Colorado and the University of Colorado School of Medicine.

He served internships in New York City and Boston.

In 1942, with his ambition almost within his grasp, young Dr. Riggs' plans for sailing to China were changed by the war and instead he went into the Medical Corps of the U. S. Army from which he returned in 1946 as Captain Riggs with a background of military service in American, England, and Europe.

On the bride's side missionary history runs back to her great grandfather, Peter Gulick, who began his work in an obscure parish in Hawaii and helped saved the culture of that people. His children and grandchildren carried out the missionary imperative in Spain, Japan, China and the South Seas. It was in China that Lois Gulick, mother of young Mrs. Riggs, was born. Later she returned there as a missionary.

Frances Whitaker Riggs was born in Peiping, North China, and her early life was spent in a typical missionary home where her playmates were Chinese children. She went to school in China until time for college and then studied at Willamette University in Salem, Oregon, and at San Jose State College in California. In 1945 she earned her R. N. (B. S.) at the University of Oregon in Portland, Oregon.

In 1946 she sailed for China—which in a way was like going home to her—and in 1947 she was assigned to the Shaowu Hospital, and Dr. Ed!

News Flashes

After August 1, the home address of Rev. Carl R. Key will change from Tallmadge, Ohio, to 1421 Ruffin St., Durham, N. C. Mr. Key will assume the duties of Executive Secretary of the North Carolina Council of Churches, September 1.

Announcement is made of the Masanetta Springs Bible Conference. Two prominent Congregationalists appear on the program, one American and the other British: Drs. Robbins W. Barstow and John S. Whale. Thursday, August 19, is C. C.-E. and R. Day. Dr. I. W. Johnson will preside.

Henry Reed Bowen, general secretary of the New Jersey Council of Churches, was elected president of the Association of Council Secretaries at its sixth annual meeting. The association is composed of executives and staff members of national, state, and city councils of churches and religious education. Mr. Bowen is one of the few laymen who head interdenominational organization in this country. He is a member of the Congregational Christian Churches.

FORMER CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY BURIED AT CHAPEL HILL.

On July 22 death brought Mrs. D. P. Barrett surcease from pain she has suffered during her long illness with cancer. Mrs. Barrett was born Eva Olyn Reed in Alliance, Ohio, March 17, 1883. She moved with her family to Norfolk, Va., nine years later. In 1900 she met and married the Rev. D. P. Barrett of Suffolk, Va., whom she accompanied to the Christian Church mission field in Puerto Rico in 1901. After forty years and six months she returned to the United States, finally settling in Chapel Hill in 1946. There amid warm friendliness of those who knew her, she drew to a close a life full of fruitfulness in children and good deeds.

The funeral service was conducted Friday, July 23, by Dr. D. J. Bowden of Elon College.

Surviving are her husband; six children, Mrs. M. A. B. Rudd, Bethlehem, Pa.; Miss Regina Olyn Barrett, Hickory and Chapel Hill; David Palmer Barrett, Jr., St. Paul Minn.; Mrs. Mabel Barrett Jones, Chapel Hill; John Alfred Barrett, Guatemala City, Guatemala; Warren Barret, Wilmington, and six grandchildren.

JUBILEE SERVICE AT TIMBER RIDGE.

Sunday morning, July 18, the services at Timber Ridge were devoted exclusively to awarding certificates of recognition to those persons who have been members of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ for fifty years.

Each lady who entered the church building was stopped long enough at the entrance for Mrs. Coulter to pin on a corsage of sweet peas, then they were each one escorted to their places in front, which had been roped off with white ribbon by Mr. Carl Anderson, usher.

After a short sermon from the text: "Ye are a chosen people . . . that you should show forth the praises of God who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light," the certificates were awarded to them as they stood before the congregation. The church building was almost filled with people. Mr. Roy A. Larrick, president of the Valley Conference, took pictures of the fifteen ladies and three men to receive these certificates.

Their names follow: Mrs. Sallie Brill, Mrs. Belle Sine, Mrs. Minnie Oates, Mrs. Minnie Muse, Miss Maggie Spaid, Mrs. Lizzie Brill, Mrs. Gettie Oates, Mrs. Cordelia Larrick, Mrs. Nettie Capper, Miss Vernie Arnold, Mrs. Nettie Dunlap (not present), Mrs. Fannie Jackson, Mrs. Martha Shaffenaker, Mrs. Allie Nelson (not present), Mrs. Christine Seldon, Mrs. Jannie Johnson (not present), Mrs. Lattieta Larrick (not present), Mrs. Laura Morris, Mr. A. T. Brill, Mr. A. C. Oates, Mr. F. J. Seldon, Mr. Bradley Johnson (not present).

It is indeed an honor to congratulate these people on their attainment which we believe should be recognized. The Timber Ridge Congregational Christian Church takes pleasure in recognizing and awarding them these certificates.

SUMMER CAMPS.

We are as sorry as can be that we've had to cancel our summer camps of Roslyn and Camp Hanes. But, under the circumstances, we thought it was the best thing to do.

Roslyn, we're sorry to say, just did not have enough registrations to warrant holding the camp. We thought that the Eastern Virginia Junior High young people would like to have their own camp—but perhaps we can hold it next year.

Camp Hanes, as you already know, we thought best to cancel because of the danger of polio—because with the many cases reported every day to the State Board of Health we just did not want to run the risk of hurting any of you while at camp! However, as in the case of Roslyn, we'll hope for far better luck next year.

However, the Young Adult Camp at Johns River with the E. and R. Young Adults, August 8-14, will still be held. Perhaps some of you who hadn't thought of going to camp at all this year will want to go. You can still register, of course. If you don't have blanks, write to me and I'll send you as many as you need. Then, too, the Valley Camp (Junior High and Senior High) will still be held, August 21-28, at Powells Fort Camp. You can get registration blanks from Rev. Clyde Koon, New Market, Va.

Sincerely,

BETTY CHICOINE.

VALLEY CONFERENCE REVIVALS.

The following account of revivals for Group Three, Virginia Valley Conference, has been made by the pastor, Rev. R. E. Newton:

The revival was held at Newport Church, June 14-30. The guest minister was Rev. S. E. Madren. Seven souls made profession of faith in Christ. Three have already united with the church and others are expected to present themselves for membership at an early date. Such days of fellowship in prayer and praise give impetus to the work and strengthen both pastor and people for a larger service.

The revival at Joppa was held July 5-11. Brother Newton reports, "Good singing, record attendance. New additions expected in the near future." Rev. Lloyd Gochenour of Harrisonburg, radio preacher, was the evangelist. God is able, available and ready to pour out His blessings upon churches when His people come together in a spirit of humility, penitence, and prayer. We join with our Christian friends in prayer that God may gloriously revive His work in our churches everywhere.

Mr. Newton reports that a revival is scheduled to be held at Dry Run Church, Fort Valley, July 26-August 1. Rev. Clyde Koon, pastor of the Shenrock group, will be the evangelist for this meeting. Let us join these good people in prayer that God may be honored and precious souls saved for service.

Mt. Lebanon, a church which has shown remarkable progress and growth in recent years, has planned for a revival to begin September 13. Rev. Walstein Snyder, Burlington, N. C., has been secured as the evangelist

PALM STREET CHURCH REDECORATED.

The interior of the Palm Street Christian Church of Greensboro has been painted recently. It was all volunteer work, done by the men of the church. The pastor, Rev. J. L. Neese, did his share, too, proving himself a painter as well as a preacher. Work on a new building is scheduled to begin in the near future. Newly elected Sunday school officers are: Carl Wallace, General Superintendent; Harold Murchison, Ass't Supt.; Curtis Brady, Sec'y; Annie H. Jackson, Ass't Sec'y; Wilbur G. Worsham, Treasurer; Herbert Hersey, Librarian; Paul Brady, Ass't Librarian; and Mrs. Douglas Wilson, pianist. All of these officers came from the young people's class of the Sunday school. On July 10 Rev. Mr. Neese celebrated his birthday with a surprise party given by the church members.

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

A SECULAR SUMMER?

There are those who make summer a spiritual experience. Innumerable people still find spiritual rejuvenation in one or more revival services each summer. It is by no means uncommon for people to visit relatives or friends during the time of their regular protracted meeting. Many denominational lines are crossed in this way. Spiritual influences are multiplied. Summer schools, Bible schools and conferences, Sunday school conventions and the like offer timely opportunities for those who hunger and thirst after righteousness. Tourists who do not declare a moratorium on worship may include the service of one or more churches in their itinerary. Religious knowledge and appreciation are amplified immeasurably in these ways.

Unfortunately, it must be recorded, all the members of our churches are not so mindful of their spiritual opportunities during this blessed season. If it were deliberately planned some of our people could not eliminate religious observance any more completely. Here is a mother, let us say, who stays awake at night thinking of new expeditions for her obedient household. Every week-end is booked far in advance. Not only is this family with its influence and resources diverted from the church, but these multiplied secular plans and contacts rob the church at both ends. And who has not known the type of family which arrives en masse, unannounced, about the time one would embark for church and thus paralyze all further plans for the day?

The cult of the secular is a growing one. Its menace must be met by more loyal members, by a more aggressive and attractive church program.

C-O-R-R-E-C-T-I-O-N-S.

Many corrections are in every issue of our publication. Copy is read for corrections before it is given to the typesetter. All copy is proof-read before it goes into print. There is no place where the old adage, "To err is human," is more obvious than in the realm of publication. One proof reading is no guarantee against all errors. There is always that tantalizing possibility of an error even in corrections. Given a highly fallible editor, printers who must double as proof readers, a weekly schedule of publication to meet and errors are not only expected, their absence becomes slightly short of miraculous.

Few of our readers realize what is involved in the publication of a single issue. There are many headaches and not a few heartaches. Some errors are amusing and inconsequential; others are serious, embarrassing, appalling. It should not be a surprise if editors and publishers grey prematurely. Your sympathy is in the order at all times.

For instance, the editor wrote this sentence for publication in a recent issue: "God does not cast his pearls of rest before the swine of indolence." The editor paused, viewed his creation, and behold it was very good! He gave himself a generous pat on the back for writing such a smart sentence. The word "service" was substituted for "swine" in the process of typing. The "swine" were properly reinstated for the linotype operator but, ironically, yielded to "service" in the published copy. Only the clairvoyant eye can distinguish between swine and service in the editor's handwriting.

On another occasion the copy carried the title of a great hymn: "God is Good." It was quite amusing when proofreading disclosed a slight variation: "God is God." But there is great truth in this error: God is God. He not only was God in creation; he is God eternally. God is God, and nothing less. He has not abdicated, although many have tried to ignore him or take his place. God is God. This is the mighty truth of the Bible which is given multiple testimony in both Old and New Testaments.

We are happy if God makes the foolishness of man to praise him.

REVIVALS PLUS.

The traditional revival suffers as a result of being forced to stand on the one leg of conversions or members received. Since new members are not forthcoming in all services of this kind, many people have discarded the revival while others have sought ways of reviving or amplifying it.

Dr. W. W. Sloan has given his revival another leg on which to stand by using the Questionnaire which appears in this issue. This is a practical way of redeeming the revival meeting, of making it an educational as well as an evangelistic enterprise. More visible and lasting results should follow.

It is impossible to win the great prizes of life without running risk, and the greatest of all prizes are those connected with the home. No father and mother can hope to escape sorrow and anxiety, and there are dreadful moments when death comes very near to those we love, even if for the time being it passes by. But life is a great adventure, and the worst of all fears is the fear of living. There are many forms of success, many forms of triumph. But there is no other success that in any shape or way approaches that which is open to most of the many men and women who have the right ideals. These are the men and women who see that it is the intimate and homely things that count most. They are the men and women who have the courage to strive for the happiness which comes only with labor and effort and self-sacrifice, and those whose joy in life springs in part from power of work and sense of duty.

Your Sunday School and Tomorrow

An Address by REV. JOHN GWYN of Norfolk at the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention

The Sunday school has no place in the world of tomorrow. Yes, you heard me correctly. I said the Sunday school has no place in the world of tomorrow—unless it can adequately meet the needs of the men and women, and boys and girls who attend. We can even say the Sunday school has no place in the total church program today, if it does not meet the needs of the people. And only by meeting the needs today can the Sunday school be effectual tomorrow.

The Supreme Court decision relative to week-day Bible teaching in the public schools has put a greater responsibility, and together with this responsibility, a greater challenge, on the Sunday school. As officers and teachers, we must face up to this new responsibility today, and in a more effective way, plan our program of tomorrow.

You might well ask, then, how can the Sunday school be more effective today? What are the real needs of the people?

I. In the first place, if the Sunday school is to meet the needs of the people today and face up to its potential tomorrow, it must raise its standards of teaching. We can no longer select our teachers on the basis of a willingness to accept a class. They need training and study to teach Sunday school classes just as our public school teachers need preparation for their work.

Our responsibility is to give the same standard of teaching in the Sunday school that our boys and girls receive in the public school. I have been in some Sunday school classes where the teaching reminded me of the little boy whose mother took him to the photographer to get his picture made. After the photographer had posed him, he said, "Now watch the little birdie." The little boy said, "Get away from that kid stuff and expose the plate!" I went to a Sunday school once where the teacher had each one to take a verse in the printed lesson and explain it. Our teaching must be practical and meet the needs of the people. The church or conference must provide leadership and teacher training conferences for all Sunday school teachers.

II. Then, we must use modern methods in our teaching. All of us know that truth cannot change, but the methods of presenting these truths must change. The effective Sunday school of today, and the Sunday school of tomorrow must use some of these modern methods of teaching. We must, especially, make more use of visual education. It is costly for the small Sunday school, and, perhaps, this conference could work out a plan where the equipment could be available to these smaller Sunday schools. Visual education is a must in our Sunday school of tomorrow.

III. The Sunday School, if it is to meet the needs of the people, must not only teach the eternal truths in the Bible, but must provide a laboratory whereby those in attendance can learn to apply these truths in their daily living. They will learn how to apply the principles of Christianity in meeting their own individual problems, and also in the community, national, and world-wide affairs.

The Sunday school can become a powerful spiritual force in the life of the people, the community, the nation and the world, if it is willing to show the people Jesus' way and then have the courage to follow that way. The Sunday school must teach how to live the Christian life. It must teach values.

IV. The Sunday school must show to the people that education continues from the cradle to the grave, and that its teaching is for all ages. It must provide just such a program. The Sunday school of today and of tomorrow must not be only for children but also must present a challenging program for adults.

Adult education is becoming more and more popular in our colleges. Extension courses and lectures are increasing in popularity, and in many communities the Sunday school can to great advantage provide such education to those who are interested, and especially to those who would not otherwise have such advantages.

V. In the world of tomorrow, we think, for we know little of tomorrow, that men and women who work will have shorter hours and there will be an increased amount of leisure time. The Sunday school should prepare its program to that end. More recreation should be centered around the Sunday school program.

The Sunday school should be a vital part of the total church program, and we should not be afraid of experimentation and devise ways and means to make the Sunday school more effective today and adequate for tomorrow.

There are seven objectives of religious education we should strive to attain and make a vital part of our Sunday school program. These objectives set down by the International Council of Religious Education, are:

1. To lead the pupil into a personal relationship with God.
2. To give the pupil an understanding and appreciation of the life and teachings of Jesus, to lead him to accept Christ as Savior, Friend, Companion and Lord, and to lead him into loyalty to Christ and His cause.
3. To lead to a progressive development of Christian character.
4. To lead into enthusiastic and intelligent participation of the building of a Christian community and world.
5. To develop the ability and desire to participate in the life and work of the Church.
6. To give a Christian interpretation of life and the universe.
7. To give a knowledge, understanding and love of the Bible.

How does your local Sunday school measure up to these objectives today? How will you measure up tomorrow?

Concluding, let me say that no matter how competent our teachers are, no matter how effective our methods might be, and no matter what your objectives are, we, as a Sunday school must believe something. Now is the time for us to re-define our faith, to find out what we really believe about the Christian religion. We must have something concrete and definite to offer. If there is theological confusion, in what faith are our young people and older ones as well to be confirmed?

Our responsibility is great, but we do not face our tasks and problems alone. God will be our Guide—and we must lean on Him if we are to meet the challenges of tomorrow.

A gentleman who thought Christianity was merely a heap of puzzling problems, said to an old minister, "There is a very strange statement, 'Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated.'" "Very strange," replied the minister; "but, what is it that you see most strange about it?" "Oh, that part, of course, about hating Esau." "Well, sir," said the minister, "how wonderfully are we made and how differently constituted! The strangest part of all to me is that He could ever have loved Jacob. There is no mystery so glorious as the mystery of God's love."—N. T. Anecdote.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

From Monday to Friday of the past week I was preaching evenings in the Lebanon Church at Semora, N. C. The Rev. Mark W. Andes is the capable young minister. He is a minister's son, a graduate of Elon, and a theological graduate of Duke. He is of quiet, cultural manner. The spirit and language of worship come easily with him. His people love him, and already they are finding it easy to follow him. His wife is even younger and quite as well trained, and is just as anxious as he to do her part well. They have much indeed to offer their pastorate and their people.

I had lodging and breakfast in a lovely farm home which enjoyed modern equipment of rural electrification. The other nine meals I was served in nine other lovely homes. I visited during the days in a dozen more. All told I was in more than twenty homes. I found farmer folk who were unafraid of work, although the weather was very hot. From early morning until the day's end they were busy. I found a people who had visions of better days ahead. More money for themselves, and larger opportunities for their children. Everywhere there were flowers, and signs of prosperity. Most homes were surrounded by barns and fences and growing crops. There were hills. Many fields were short and quick. Many of the homes were so situated as to give a view across miles of foothills, which were very beautiful. It was quiet. The bark of a dog, the song of birds, the call of children stood out in the quietness.

At times I was sort of wondering if the place of the church in the scheme of things was as high as it should be. Perhaps it was as high or higher than the average. But even with the visiting minister and the regular pastor present the conversation seemed to indicate that the church shared only a relative place in the big goings on in many of those homes. Perhaps I am mistaken but progress seemed greater on farm and farm-home than at the church. There was still preaching only once a month. The young people and children enjoyed the same sort of Sunday school rooms—or lack of them—which their grandfathers and mothers enjoyed. Many homes had been rebuilt until they would have been unrecognizable to those who knew them in days of yore. The roads were different. The schools were different. The crops were different. So much about the church was the same, or "samer"! There were, however, healthy signs of a new day for the church. The people themselves, for instance, wanted it to hold the comparatively high place it held years ago, and they were thinking in terms of making it so. Their loyalty and devotion to their church, their pastor and his wife, and to the special revival services were an inspiration.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

The one hundredth annual session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference of Congregational Christian Churches will convene at Antioch Church, Rockingham County, Virginia, 10:00 a. m., August 5, 1948, for its regular two-day session (August 5 and 6). This conference has existed since 1838 under different names. According to historians it was organized August 27 1838, at a preliminary meeting held in Frederick County, Va., when Rev. W. G. Proctor was chosen moderator and Rev. Christy Sine named secretary. The first regular session was held at Antioch Church (host church this year), November 8, 1838. This organization gave place to the Virginia Central Conference which was organized August 10, 1849, when the first session was held at East Liberty Church, Page County, Va. In the late "sixties" of the last century there arose a division over the question of "The Declaration of Principles" and "Form of Government and Directory of Worship" as set forth by the Southern Convention. One group seceded from the Convention and formed what was known as "The Virginia Central Conference" while the other group became known as "The Virginia Valley Christian Conference." Not until 1905 did the two conferences unite into one body known as "The Virginia Valley Central Conference" at Leakesville Church, near Luray, Va. When the merger was made with the Congregational Church in 1932 the name was changed to Virginia Valley Central Conference of Congregational Christian Churches.

Mr. Roy A. Larrick is the president of the Conference and together with his committee has arranged an appropriate program in celebration of this Centennial Anniversary. The theme of the centennial session is "A Century of Devoted Service—That Jesus May Reign." Rev. R. E. Newton, host pastor, will conduct the opening worship period following the call to order by President Larrick at 10:00 a. m., August 5.

The annual sermon will be preached by the Rev. Roy D. Coulter, pastor of the Timber Ridge Church. The theme of the sermon is "Living One Day at a Time." During the morning session of the first day an address, "Christ for a Changing Age and Progress" will be delivered by the Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D., President of the Southern Convention. Other guest speakers will include the Rev. B. J. Earp, former president of the conference whose topic will be: "The Crossroads of Another Century." Mr. Earp is pastor of our High Point, N. C., Church. Charles D. Johnston, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, is scheduled to speak on the afternoon of the first day. Wednesday evening the program will be in charge of the Pilgrim Fellowship of the conference. Rev. Rev. Robert Lee House will speak. Time will also be given on the first day for the convening of the Christian Missionary Association, Rev. S. E. Madren, president.

An address, "Milestones in Christian Progress," by Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., of Florida, also a former president of the conference is to be given on the morning of the second day, August 5. Rev. W. T. Scott, D. D., Superintendent of the Southern Convention, will appear on the morning program and speak on the subject, "Building With Christ." Early on the afternoon program the Rev. E. Lautenschlager, pastor of the historical Evangelical and Reformed Church of Woodstock, will be guest speaker and use, "Go Ye Into All the World," as the topic of his message to the conference. The Woodstock E. and R. Church was founded May 14, 1748.

Matters of usual routine will be presented at each session with reports from all departments of the church work. From all indications the churches of the Valley are in a healthy condition and reports will show much progress and great good accomplished during the year now closing.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

BUILDING OPERATIONS AT ELON.

On January 18, 1923, fire destroyed the administration building on the Elon College campus. The administration building housed all business offices and the library. In addition, it provided social halls for four literary societies and classroom facilities for all instruction given the entire student body. Only the dormitories were left and some off-campus buildings with which to continue the school but it was done without the loss of a day. There was complete cooperation of faculty and students with the president, the late Dr. W. A. Harper, but of course the college could not continue with these temporary and inadequate facilities. Under the aggressive and dynamic leadership of President Harper, an expanded building program was begun. The present five fireproof buildings were erected. These buildings are substantially adequate and modern. No small college has any better. Since the erection of these buildings the college has not been in a position to do any additional building until recently, and only then because of dire necessity.

More than eighteen months ago it was evident that the present power house and facilities that have served the College so well for forty-three years would have to be replaced with new ones. The Board of Trustees of the college authorized the building and equipping of a new heating plant. Work began on this undertaking more than a year ago. It has been difficult to get needed materials and skilled labor has been scarce. The building has been completed. Boiler room equipment, facilities for heat distribution, and installations are nearing completion. Mr. Rowe of Rowe-Walsh-Jones, Durham, N. C., contractors, has notified us that the company will be ready to build a fire in the furnaces Monday, July 26. This is good news and means that we shall surely have the heating plant ready for service when school opens in September. This will insure comfort for the coming winter. (It would be good if Mr. Rowe could give us protection from the heat in summer.) Should there be those with unpaid pledges to the college, it would be of great help to the program if they could send payment at an early date.

Building operations are fearfully expensive.

The college's building program will not stop or even halt with the completion of the heating plant. At Elon College we need and must have a gymnasium. This is a "must" if we are to continue our present fine program of physical education. The erection of the gymnasium has been properly authorized. Plans and specifications are being completed this week. Bids will be asked for immediately and when the contractor has been selected, or a plan for erection of the gymnasium is agreed upon, building operations will begin. This will be another expensive undertaking but with interest and cooperation of all it can and will be done.

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

For more than two years our Convention Office has been receiving contributions from Sunday schools and churches for the college and transmitting the same to the college. This relieves our office of some responsibility and work, but it does not provide for personal contact with our Sunday schools and churches through the treasurers or sending individuals. These contacts have proven helpful in building the program of support to its present encouraging figure. As a rule, even churches and Sunday schools like to do business with the individuals or organizations they support. However, the Convention Office is doing a splendid job. It is prompt and efficient in its service and each week the college looks forward to a communication from that office. Usually it comes and is encouraging. It would be most helpful to the college and its program if all of our churches and Sunday schools would cooperate with the Convention in its plans for the support of the college. The college is anxious to cooperate and is encouraged by contributions for which it expresses appreciation.

for the Mt. Lebanon meeting. This church is located near Walstein's home and we predict that the services will be well attended and much good accomplished.

Mr. Newton announces that there will also be a series of evangelistic services held in the Leaksville Church, the date and guest minister to be announced later.

From Brother Newton's field come encouraging reports. Dry Run and Newport Churches have each spent a sizeable sum of money in painting and decorating their houses of worship. Mt. Lebanon already has a substantial sum raised to begin the erection of a new church building. The old building has been outgrown. There is great promise for the growth of this church, situated in a prosperous and thickly populated rural section. There is great opportunity for a vital service to the community and the Kingdom of Christ. Leaksville Church folk have made plans for a basement under the church. They will add greatly to the usefulness of this progressive and forward looking church by providing more adequately for its program of activities.

The Joppa Church also has plans in the making to paint and otherwise improve its house of worship.

There is every indication that these fine churches, located in the heart of the Valley of Virginia are growing and will become strong fellowships extending their arms of service, for Christ, throughout the world.

DR. LAUBACH REPORTS.

More than 250,000,000 illiterates throughout the world have learned to read by using the phonetic method, the Rev. Dr. Frank C. Laubach, pioneer literacy expert and Congregational missionary educator reported at a press conference at the headquarters of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

Dr. Laubach has just completed a nine-month tour of eleven African countries, where, under the auspices of missionaries, government officials, and business concerns, he has established literacy classes in sixty-three different African languages and dialects. During his twenty years as a missionary educator, he has taught people to read in 156 different languages.

Dr. Laubach told newsmen that the basic principle of his system is the association of pictures, words, and syllables. His method, which is similar in many respects to ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics and Chinese characters, utilizes charts and graphs which depict objects or ideas through pictures of familiar objects.

At the press conference, Dr. Laubach demonstrated his method by drilling newsmen in the first lesson of the Amharic language. Within a few minutes, each of his temporary pupils could identify five basic word sounds in this ancient coptic language used in Ethiopia.

The average illiterate, according to the missionary educator, can learn to read his native tongue in about two weeks. At the end of the first learning period, the illiterate is given a diploma in recognition of his progress, and introduced to a primer or reader which contains a 1,600-word "recognition vocabulary" utilizing Dr. Edward L. Thorndike's and a Harvard basic word list. Employing the most-used words in the language, this vocabulary accounts for 95 per cent of all the words the pupil will encounter in his native tongue.

Once the pupil is familiar with Dr. Laubach's teaching method, he is admonished by his teacher to instruct someone else. This "chain-letter" method of instruction, Dr. Laubach said, has greatly accelerated the literacy rate among world populations.

In Africa all adult education is being carried on through the use of the phonetic method, Dr. Laubach said, much of it based on his books, charts, and graphs.

While on his latest African tour, Dr. Laubach was asked by the Firestone Company to establish a literacy program on their large rubber plantation in Liberia for 30,000 native employees. Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia invited him to set up a similar program for his subjects, as did King Farouk of Egypt. In Mexico last year, the government taught over a million people to read by adaptation of the Laubach method.

In discussing the future of his literacy work, Dr. Laubach said that the greatest need for the rapidly growing literate population in Africa, and other foreign countries was a "fresh, interesting, and popularly written literature." The literature now available, he added, is "pretty dull, stilted, and academic, and fails to hold the new student's interest."

Dr. Laubach plans to spend the remainder of this year in the United States, where he will visit churches, schools, and colleges. Next year he has been invited by the Siam government to spend two and one-half months establishing a literacy program. He will also visit Korea, Australia, and New Guinea in behalf of literacy work.

Dr. Laubach's work is sponsored by the Committee on World Literacy and Christian Literature of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

CORRECTION.

In the Southern Convention Office report of receipts for funds received December 1, 1947-May 31, 1948, in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of July 15, through error Cypress Chapel was credited with $58.00 for Superannuation and $25.30 for Christmas Fund for Veterans of the Cross. The report should have read as follows:

Superannuation.

Holland $ 58.00
Christmas Fund—Veterans of the Cross.
Cypress Chapel $ 10.30
Holland 15.00

In this report contributions for Missions, Elon College and the Orphanage were not reported because these are reported weekly in THE SUN. Also it should be noted that contributions reported for the Committee on War Victims and Reconstruction covered the period from January 15-May 31, 1948.

I once met a little boy in Wales, crying bitterly at his father's door, afraid to go in. I asked him what was the matter. He told me that his mother had sent him out clean that morning, but that he had got into the water, and made his clothes dirty. So he feared to go in, because his father would punish him. Church Women at Work

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

AN APPEAL FROM MRS. PARIS.

Our Convention President, Mrs. O. H. Paris, has recently sent out a letter to the presidents of local women's societies in the Convention. This also goes to presidents and advisers of young people's societies. In this letter she has called to our attention the fact that if we are going to help our church meet its Post-War Emergency Program, it must be done before January 1. We are asked and urged to have an Unseen Guest Meal. Such a meal had been planned for the School of Missions, having each guest announce the name of their Unseen Guest (Angie Crew, the Jacksons, Jackson baby, some hungry child, etc.), and perhaps a vacant chair for each one. The proceeds from this meal would be over and above apportionment and should be sent to the state treasurer, marked, "Unseen Guest Fund." In with her letter, Mrs. Paris enclosed a list of suggestions on how to have this type of meal: At out-of-door picnics where ice cream and cakes are sold, have a box labeled, "For My Unseen Guest—Share and Share Alike." Carry the Unseen Guest plan into each home for family meals. At any occasion where you are selling articles place an offering bowl on each table with the sign, "An Equal Share for My Unseen Guest." Many more suggestions are given, and Mrs. Paris has suggested that we especially try to have this in August or September, when many societies may be having picnics.

Mrs. Paris had something to say about our Bible course for the coming year. "For a number of years now," she says, "we have been wishing we could have our own Bible study material. Well, our wish has come true. Dr. Ferris Reynolds, Head of the Department of Religion at Elon College, has prepared a text book on the Book of Galatians entitled The Gospel Unlimited."

The women's societies are to be promotional agents for this study course, so that the whole church may be included. The pastor or some other person may teach The Gospel—Unlimited in twelve lessons at the Wednesday evening prayer service or some other time. Too few of us have any actual Bible study, and it is not fair to expect to get a thorough Bible course in one evening.

In order to get the value of such a study, each person should have a copy of The Gospel—Unlimited. They are 40c per copy or three for $1.00. Your church may want to furnish copies to all who attend the course, or maybe your society could give all their members a copy. It is a very small investment to pay 40c for your Bible study material for a whole year, and there is not a single woman in the Southern Convention who knows everything about the Bible.

A price list of books and packets was included in Mrs. Paris' letter, and I will give just a few: Women's 1948-49 Packet, $1.50; On Our Own Doorstep (Home), 90c; Leader's Guide (On Our Own Doorstep), 35c; China—Twilight or Dawn (Overseas), 90c; Leader's Guide (for above), 35c; The Gospel—Unlimited, 40c each, three for $1.00. (Please include 10c for postage and handling.) Send orders to: The Literature Department, Southern Convention, Elon College, N. C.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Friends

At a church meeting recently, numbers of people spoke to me about this weekly letter or column that I write. Some of them had suggestions to make, some disagreed with things I had written and the majority asked me, "How do you find the time or when do you write?"

There is an answer to that question! I write morning, noon or night—whenever the inspiration strikes or when it doesn't. I have written with two children sitting at my feet and have typed my material with a baby on my shoulder. It can be done. Sometimes I feel in a "writing mood" and write my page for weeks in advance—the publisher likes that for he can get his type set and proof-read at his leisure. I like it, too, for while it takes time, once done, I'm free for a few weeks. It is like homework done immediately after school. Occasionally I write about current happenings, then there are the seasonal articles and best of all: news from you. So if I can find time to keep house, play with the children and mind the baby, surely you can send me some news. Please?

* * *

It happens that this letter is being written at night. It is a hot, humid night and not too far away thunder is rolling in angry clashes. Are you afraid of storms? They are a part of God's plan for our universe. We may think of storms as being violent and ugly, but there is beauty and majesty in the noise, and think of the cool refreshment after the storm has passed. When the sheets of driving rain stop, we can see the renewed earth looking and smelling its best. The clean, sweet smell of grass after a storm is quite wonderful, I think.

I am sorry that the poliomyelitis epidemic in North Carolina has caused the cancellation of many gatherings and brought fear and unhappiness to many people. Two years ago, a little girl at our Newport News Church, Eileen Rash, became ill with this disease. After a long struggle in the hospital at Norfolk, Eileen came home. She isn't well yet but she has made progress. Now Eileen is walking with braces and crutches and doing a good job. These hot days are not pleasant for extra weight and bundles as her braces are, but she keeps at it. Eileen goes to school and attends Sunday school, too. She went to the Daily Vacation Bible School this summer. Because I know her, she has come to be a symbol to me of all the children who have had polio. A greeting to Eileen and prayers for her full recovery as well as all others who are stricken this summer.

Now as I write these final words, the storm has come and the rain is falling. Soon it will be cool and I shall enjoy my rest.

SUMMER VACATION PASTIMES FOR CHILDREN.

By RUTH PECK McLEOD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mrs. Brown, who had recently moved next door to Mrs. Carl, overtook that lady on the street, and the two walked home together.

"Now that school is out for the summer, my Tom is constantly asking to go to your house to play," said Mrs. Brown. "I hope he isn't troublesome. Unlike Tom, all of your children seem to know how to entertain themselves. I suspect, though, that you subtly direct some of their activities. Do you?"

"I do plan many of their pastimes—subtly, as you say," was the smiling answer. "Work and play are fundamentally the same, and a child, mentally, places whatever he is doing in one class or the other, according to the urge it arouses. For instance, washing the car is actually not as strenuous as playing football, but a game of football is likely to be much more enjoyable, unless the natural urge to wash the car is supplemented. It might be that a desired trip would loom into view, or perhaps just a wish to surprise Father would fill the need.

"My husband and I feel that we want the summer season to be a valuable one—one in which the boys and girls will continue to develop mentally and morally, as well as physically. Chores in and around the house, that are in keeping with the ages and abilities of the youngsters, are excellent for growth in skill and for teaching the children to accept responsibilities. The boys can do such work as cutting the grass, trimming the hedge, and washing windows; the girls can sweep, dust, cook, and sew. They all can work in the garden.

"In addition the children with regard to occupations outside the home during vacations, we always keep in mind their vocational tendencies. Jim, our eldest son, since he has been old enough has had photography as his hobby, and he thinks of making it his profession. Last summer he worked with one of our leading photographers. While he didn't earn a great deal of money, he was very happy because of the experience he was gaining. He has been greatly encouraged this past winter by having won several prizes for pictures that he had taken of the Smokies.

"All Jack's thought is for science. Of course, he's still quite young, but he has taken pleasure and satisfaction in his experiments, made with a chemistry set we had bought him. He and another boy, who is also interested in chemistry, fill our basement at times with the most distressing odors, but they are careful boys and I know they visualize themselves as famous research scientists, so I don't complain.

"Jane's enthusiasm centers about dramatics. She keeps me busy hunting up old costumes for the plays she and the other girls put on. Jim, who is good at art as well as photography, helps her by painting scenery for the shows. The girls cleared five dollars at one of their benefit performances, and they were delighted to be able to give it to the Crippled Children's Hospital. They had worked together for several weeks at learning their parts and getting their properties together. That was a real educational project.

"Our playground equipment has been of great benefit for relaxation. Naturally, the smaller children enjoy this most of all, but Frank, our youngest boy, has his special interest, too—he loves animals. He takes care of the chickens, rabbits, and dogs. It is his ambition to be a farmer. He has read books on poultry and knows how to cull the flock and to feed the chickens so that they will produce the most eggs. His expenses are noted in order to be able to tell the amount of money he earns from the eggs he sells.

"The longer I live in our comfortable suburban home, the more I wish that every family could have a place like it in which to bring up their children. There are so many things that can be done where there are spacious grounds. Our youngsters made a tent out of an old shower-bath curtain. They also have a fish pond that

THE NEW 1948-49 LITERATURE IS OUT.

By now, most of you have received your order blank for the new literature for your societies. We urge you to fill it out and send it back (with your check or money order) to the Southern Convention Office, right away.

Study Books—

We've listed all the study books for all the ages, both the Home theme books ("America's Geographical Frontiers") and the Overseas theme ("China in the Asia of Today"). Even the Cradle Roll and Nursery children haven't been forgotten! Get yours—for all your age groups. Use the books—and the fine Leader's Guides—in your societies, in your Sunday school classes, in Wednesday evening services, or in special study groups for that specific purpose.

Packets—

You'll want at least one of the three packets, too:

Children's Packet—This year, for the first time, we're offering a packet for children's societies (boys and girls of Junior age, that is, 9-12). It has in it a Plan Book, some special projects "aimed for" this age group. And, we've included the two study books for the Junior age, Mingo of the Merry-Go-Round and Dike Against the Sea, with the two Leader's Guides for each. Besides this, we've also put in a fine cut-out map of China which makes a fine study project for the boys and girls. We want each church to have a packet for its children. What is the price? $3.00, which includes the study books and all! (We should add that in the Children's Plan Book there are some pages devoted to Cradle Rolls and Primaries.)

Young People's Packet—This is our second year for a young people's packet, and we think this year's surpasses last year's (although we were very proud of the first attempt.) The theme is that of the Young People (Pilgrim Fellowship) at their National Council, held at Defiance, Ohio, in June, 1948—"For the Facing of This Hour." The programs, month-by-month party and project suggestions, "extras," and the Plan Book are good. And if you don't believe us, buy one, and see! The price is the same as last year—$1.00.

Women's Packet—We like the theme for the women this year: "Horizons Unlimited." And you'll see how it runs all through the packet for the women, too. And you'll like the devotional programs, written by some of the leaders in our Convention. The packet is just so full of good material and help that even if you have a complete year of programs lined up (using what's in your packet) you'll still have ample to choose from! The price of the packet is $1.50.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

EBED-MELECH, THE ETHIOPIAN.

LESSON VI—AUGUST 8, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: As we have opportunity, let us do good to all men.—Galatians 6:10.

LESSON: Jeremiah 38:1-39:18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matt. 25:31-46.

Troubled Times.

The times were out of joint and there was none to set them right. Babylon was astride the world like a giant Colossus and there was apparently nothing that could be done about the matter, at least nothing that Judah could do. Thus it was that Jeremiah frankly told the king Zedekiah that the only thing to do was to surrender, and thus to salvage what he could from the disaster. It was of course seemingly a counsel of a coward and it aroused the opposition and the hatred of the military leaders. They asked the king to turn over Jeremiah to them to be put to death, for his words were weakening "the hands of the men of war that remain in this city, and the hands of all the people." It did look like treason. But Jeremiah knew how to read the signs of the times and although the words were unpopular and fraught with personal peril to himself, he boldly proclaimed them.

A King But a Coward.

Zedekiah was a king but a craven coward. He was like some of the men who are now ruling in Europe, a puppet in the hands of powerful military cliques. He turned Jeremiah over to these military leaders with the words "for the king is not he that can do anything against you." He could have done something if he had been a man instead of a mouse. He was a weak-kneed and week-willed. He knew full well the implications of what he was doing—it might well mean the death of the great prophet. But he had no backbone and he gave in by giving up Jeremiah.

God's Anointed.

After this military gang got Jeremiah in their hands they evidently realized the seriousness of the thing they had planned. And perhaps from fear rather than from compunctions of conscience they decided that instead of killing him outright they would put him into a dungeon in the prison and let him starve or smother to death. It could have been of course mere callousness, a desire to prolong his suffering rather than to end it all by one fell stroke. In any event they put him down into a dungeon which although not filled with water, was a mass of mire at the bottom, into which the luckless prophet sank up to his arm-pits. He was left thus to die.

A Slave But a Hero.

There was royalty in the king's house if not in the king's heart. It was in the heart of one of the king's slaves, a man with a strange name, Ebed-melech, another of the unknown men of the Bible and of history. The plight of the prophet touched the heart of this slave. He did a daring thing. Slave, and foreigner and black man that he was, he went directly to the king and interceded in behalf of Jeremiah. It might well have cost him his life, either at the hand of Zedekiah the king, or at the hands of the military clique which had put Jeremiah in the dungeon. Here was moral courage and human kindness at their best. The king was perhaps already troubled by his conscience about the matter, and convicted by the eunuch, he straightway set about to atone for his sin. He gave Ebed-melech an armed guard and told him to rescue Jeremiah and to see to it that he was given food and water and shelter. And thus the life of this great prophet was saved. And thus the life of the race was enriched. For much of Jeremiah's ministry to his people, and his message to posterity, came after this incident in his life. And yet there are not many people who know anything about this captive slave with compassionate spirit.

The End of the Kindgom.

Jeremiah's words found tragic fulfillment. Babylon marched against Jerusalem with its armed might and the city could not long resist. Contrary to Jeremiah's advice Zedekiah attempted to escape by night and was taken prisoner. He saw with his own eyes the slaughter of his own sons and his nobles, and then after he was bound with chains, his own eyes were put out. To complete the disaster his royal house was burned and the walls of Jerusalem were broken down. Thus came to an inglorious end the kingdom of Judah, never to be established again. From this time the Jews have been in a sense men without a country.

One Good Turn Deserves Another.

Kindness pays even if it never pays in kind. The kind heart is its own reward. The kind deed is recompense in itself. One should not be kind simply for hope of gain. And much kindness is never repaid in terms of money or gain. But kindness cast upon the waters has a way of coming back again, and it often comes back pound cake. This humble, heroic slave was simply obeying a humane and noble impulse when he interceded in behalf of Jeremiah. But that act paid handsome dividends a little later, for when the city was captured and plundered the life of Ebed-melech was spread in accord with the word of the Lord at Jeremiah's mouth. It doesn't always end that way in the books of this world but it does end that way when the final entry is written down in the Lamb's book of life.

The Fine Act of Being Kind.

This matter of being kind is a big factor in the life of the world. Indeed much of the world's woe is due to the lack of the spirit and the practice of the art of kindness or being kind. There is almost always an opportunity for practicing it, and it hardly ever costs much to practice it. But it can mean so much and so so much. And as that prince of kind men once wrote, "God has put in our power the happiness of those about us, that is largely to be secured by our being kind." (Henry Drummond.)

Let's Try It.

Let's try being kind to those with whom we come in contact, well say just for this coming week. Start in the home with those with whom we live most intimately but with whom we are often so unkind. And let us carry the spirit of kindness out into all our relationships this week. Let's try kindness, sincerely, persistently, graciously.

Mrs. W. V. LEATHERS,
Treasurer.WOMAN'S SOCIETY AT SUFFOLK REPORTS.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church is working diligently to attain the rating of a Superior Society. Under the capable leadership of Mrs. W. A. Daughtrey, who has served as president for two years, the society is steadily going forward in helping to put a larger stress on missions.

The program committee with Mrs. John G. Truitt, chairman, chose as the theme of the year's program's, "Opening Doors," as suggested by the woman's committee. At each monthly meeting an interesting program and a well-planned devotional has been given. This article will not be a complete report of the year's work, but a brief mention of some of the most outstanding events.

On July 12, a covered-dish supper was held on the church lawn with about thirty-five members present. Each person brought whatever dish she desired and when everything was arranged on a long table, there was a variety of food, and an abundance of it. To this writer's delight someone had brought a whole home-made pineapple cake.

After the supper, a very interesting program on our missionaries for special study, was presented by Miss Mamie Basler, who also read a devotional meditation prepared by Miss Virginia Brinkley.

One of the highlights of the year's work so far has been the review of the mission study book, Committed Unto Us, by Mrs. Robert M. Kimball of Franklin. This program was a joint meeting with the W. W. Staley Society and was well attended.

In February, the thirty-sixth birthday anniversary was celebrated with the Hawley Circle in charge of the program. This circle, with Mrs. Ray Richardson, leader, is doing splendid work and turns into the president each month a report that could easily set an example for any circle in our Convention.

During May the society sponsored the second annual woman's banquet which was attended by 225 people. When the final reports were given on the banquet, it was considered a great success in every way.

The Mueller Circle, Mrs. J. B. Kent, leader, presented at the June meeting an original playlet on "Opening Doors to Deeper Loyalty to Our Church." This short play portrayed loyalty as shown through the various organizations of the Suffolk Christian Church. (Should any society desire a copy, Mrs. Kent would be glad to send them one.)

The society was looking forward to the School of Missions at Elon. With eight or ten delegates already registered, it was a disappointment to hear the school had been cancelled, but each one heartily agreed that it was for the best—and looks forward to a bigger and better School of Missions in 1949.

Much interest has been shown in the Cent-A-Meal offering and it is hoped that when the final figures are shown they will be most gratifying. A box was sent to Miss Angie Crew in Japan as part of our Friendly Service project.

The Bible study book, Thy Kingdom Come—Beginning in Me, has been beautifully taught at the nine circle meetings each month. It is believed that renewed interest has been shown in this study this year.

May we continue to work in harmony for Christ and strive to complete this year's work with a true superior measure of achievement.

Mrs. J. W. UNDERWOOD,
Corresponding Sec'y.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

"Making hay while the sun shines" has been occupying the time of our farmer boys part of the time this week. The little boys enjoy getting out in the field and helping do what they can to assist. It takes one man to drive the tractor and two to tie the wires. Then one little boy ten years of age can stand on the back of the baler and take a little forked stick and make the hay go into the baler when it gets choked up. He enjoys riding the baler, because it is very light and easy work when the hay is not too heavy. Sometimes a little boy can take the place of a man when there is a light job to be done.

Modern farm machinery makes farm work more enjoyable than it was when the writer was a teen-age boy on a farm. While we farmed in that day the hard way, I have never regretted for a minute that I was reared on a farm. Being reared on a farm has been worth a great deal to me in my work at the Christian Orphanage, because in this work here one has to do many kinds of work. In all the years I have been here in this work I have never asked a boy to do any job that I would not do myself. Thirty-two years ago when I first took over this work I always said, "Come on boys and we will go," and they were always ready and willing to go. At that time we had quite a number of practically grown boys who were able to do good work—strong and stout. We are not so well blessed now as then, as nearly every boy who is capable of doing good work has gone out, and we are left with a group of little tots under ten years of age who are not worth much on the farm. Yet, they can pull hog weeds out of the tomato patch, and how fast they can grow! It reminds me of my boyhood days when I had to dig sassafras sprouts, and I thought our farm could produce all there was in the whole county. It was cold work on a cold day.

Fifty thousand dollars is our goal—twenty-five for the churches and twenty-five from special offerings. Let us say, "Come on and let us raise it."

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

BIBLE CLASS ON WEEK-DAY SANCTIONED.

Only one plan of the Virginia Council of Churches for week-day religious instruction in the State's public schools, a plan which eliminates all "control, supervision or responsibility" by school authorities, was declared "constitutionally unobjectionable" in an opinion released by Attorney-General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr.

The Attorney-General ruled, however, that the majority of plans for religious education previously existing in Virginia, revealed "certain responsibilities retained by school authorities" and, therefore, would be unconstitutional.

Through a letter to G. Tyler Miller, State Superintendent of Public Education, Attorney-General Almond sanctioned only one of three plans offered by the Virginia Council of Churches.

The approved plan is as follows:

"In situations in the State where a group of competent and responsible parents shall petition a county or city school board to release pupils of the elementary grades for non-compulsory, non-sectarian religious instruction for a period of one hour each week, the State Board of Education sanctions such an arrangement, providing that parent or guardian shall sign an appropriate request for such release and providing that parents in the local community shall be responsible for securing these signed requests outside of the public school and providing that the school board granting such a release and the parents to whom the pupils are to be released and such religious instructors as these parents may employ, shall understand and recognize that all classes in religious and moral instruction shall be operated independently of the control, supervision or responsibility of the public school and providing further that no public funds may be used."

Hands Off, He Counsels.

Mr. Almond commented as follows: "This plan states that the public school authorities shall have no control, supervision or responsibility over the classes in religious education. So long as the plan operates in this manner, it is my opinion that it is constitutionally unobjectionable."

Remarking that week-day religious education in Virginia public schools in the past reveals certain responsibilities retained by school authorities, Mr. Almond declared such plans as of doubtful constitutionality.

"It appears," he explained, "that in the great majority of cases, the school authorities were responsible for the failure of the child to report to the religious education class, and were likewise responsible for the discipline of the child should he misbehave in class beyond the authority of the religious education teacher to control him.

"I have grave doubts as to the constitutionality of any plan operating in such a fashion."

The education department previously had received a ruling from Walter E. Rogers, assistant State Attorney-General, that "the mere use of public school buildings during regular school hours for non-sectarian non-compulsory religious instruction, under a 'released time' plan, divorced from the type of school supervision criticized in the Champaign, Ill., case would not be forbidden."

Superintendent Miller immediately prepared letters to division superintendents in the State advising them of the attorney-general's ruling.

Mr. Miller said that local school authorities will have to compare their plan for religious education with the one approved by the attorney-general and use it as a basis of instruction. He stressed that all school supervision of any sort would have to be removed from the religious classes, according to the opinion.

The earlier ruling by Mr. Rogers approved non-sectarian prayers at the start of assembly programs in the schools and the study of churches as they have influenced history.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

they constructed with concrete; their dad helped them with that. Then he showed them how to build an outdoor oven. Many of the picnics of this neighborhood are held in our yard because of this oven. The boys and girls cook their frankfurters and bacon on it.

"One of our neighbors, as you may have noticed, has a field that is perfect for baseball and another has a tennis court—so, you see, this community is ideal for children. Of course, the main requisites for summer pastimes are that they will be safe and profitable for the child. Here, it is not so much a question of finding something pleasant to do as it is of deciding which activity to select. We always urge as much out-of-door recreation as possible.

"Beneficial summer programs need to be unobtrusively originated and nurtured by understanding parents, but there is no effort that brings more gratifying results. Such projects make for happy, contented children who are developing satisfactorily in all ways."

THE NEW 1948-49 LITERATURE IS OUT.

ment of Religion at Elon College, has written our Bible study book, just for us! And without knowing the women's theme for the year (Horizons Unlimited), he chose for his title The Gospel—Unlimited! If you haven't bought yours as yet, you'll want to, right away. You may have one copy for 40c or (and you'll probably want to do this) you may have three copies for $1.00. We'd like to suggest that the women ask their pastor (or some one else) to help them study the book at the Wednesday evening prayer service or some other time. Share this fine study of Galatians with your church! The Gospel—Unlimited!

How Shall You Buy All These Fine Materials?—

Just send your order to: The Literature Department, The Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C. And make your checks and money orders payable to the Southern Convention. (And, one more thing: will you please add ten cents (10c) to your total for the cost of handling and postage? Thank you!)

We'll be happy to help you in your selection of literature and materials for the coming year—and we'll be looking forward to hearing from you!

Sincerely,

BETTY CHICONE.

The Creating God

By STANLEY U. NORTH, Chaplain

1948 Annual Meeting, Home Missions Council of North America

"In the beginning God created the earth, and God saw that it was good."

—Psalm 19.

Pearl Buck more than anyone else has popularized the phrase "the good earth." The Chinese, who is much closer to the soil than is the average American, is more keenly aware of his dependence upon the soil than are we who live out of cans and who are inclined to lose our sensitiveness with regard to agricultural processes. As we open a can of string beans, or of peas, I suspect we rarely think of the farmer plowing, harrowing, and fertilizing his field, in preparation for the seeds to be planted, and much less do we think of the migrant farm laborers—fathers, mothers and children—who live a nomadic and underprivileged life to the end that we may open our cans and grow fat.

Nor do we give much more thought to the canning process, with its thousands of hands sorting and washing the food in preparation for the sterilizer and the container. It is not that we are calloused, but rather that we are far removed from the process. And, therefore, it is good that the Home Missions Council calls our attention and quickens our consciences with reference to the humble, but very important, laborer and his family who make possible our daily bread.

The good earth gives us everything. We ourselves came from the earth and shall return to it.

Is the earth less than the good earth, therefore? The answer is NO. God saw that it was good and it remains good. Earthquakes, blizzards, ice storms, hurricanes, tornadoes, floods—all are a part of the creative process out of which the earth has become inhabitable. Warfare, too, is of the good earth. It is nature's penalty exacted for man's transgression of earth's goodness. The creating God is dead in earnest. Either man will conform to the goodness of the earth or be destroyed.

If this be true—then our task is of the utmost importance. And in the performance of our task we need to have this basic concern, namely, that we shall be in harmony with the goodness with which God endowed the earth.

The record has it that God created man in his own image—from the earth. It is our Christian faith, however, that man is God-like in terms of his soul rather than of his physical body. It is the genius of creation that man who has emerged from the good earth shall achieve for himself an eternal soul.

Prayer—Eternal God, Creator of the universe, all-powerful and all-wise, Who didst see fit to fashion man in Thine own image, grant that we may be willing and worthy partners in the on-going process of creation.

Forgive us, we pray Thee, that we have so timidly followed the leading of Thy Spirit. We remain separated, despite the prayer of our Master, that we might all be one. We continue to put greater store on creedal differences of the past than we do on the fundamental truth of Thine inclusive love, revealed by Jesus and the prophets and the saints down through the years.

The world, which Thou hast placed at our doors, O God, demands dynamic faith, courageous spirits, indomitable wills, adventurous leadership, prophetic utterances. These are times when small mindedness will no longer suffice. The sectarian spirit is outmoded. Truly before us lies the Promised Land. We will either possess it or be dispossessed. Forbid that we should allow greed and selfishness, pride and conceit, jealousy and envy to rob us of our birthright as sons of God. Grant that we shall in truth be disciples of Him whom we delight to call Master, in Whose name we pray.

Amen.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 1948.

NUMBER 31.

Dr L E Smith I

Just for Today

Just for today I will try to live through this day only, not to tackle my whole life problem at once. I can do things for twelve hours that would appall me if I had to keep them up for a life time.

Just for today I will be happy. This assumes that what Abraham Lincoln said is true: "Most people are about as happy as they make up their minds to be." Happiness is from within, it is not a matter of externals.

Just for today I will try to adjust to what is, and not try to adjust everything to my desires. I will take my family, my business, and my luck as they come and fit myself to them.

Just for today I will take care of my body. I will exercise it, care for it, nourish it, not abuse nor neglect it, so that it will be a perfect machine for my bidding.

Just for today I will try to strengthen my mind. I will learn something useful. I will not be a mental loafer. I will read something that requires effort, thought and concentration.

Just for today I will exercise my soul in three ways. I will do somebody a good turn and not be found out, I will do at least two things I do not want to do, as William James suggests, just for exercise.

Just for today I will be agreeable. I will look as well as I can, dress as becomingly as possible, talk low, act courteously, be liberal with praise, criticise not at all, nor find fault with anything, and not try to regulate nor improve anyone.

Just for today I will be unafraid, especially not afraid to be happy, to enjoy what is beautiful, to love and to believe that those I love, love me.

Just for today I will have a quiet half hour by myself and relax. In this time I will think of God and get a better perspective of my life.

—Charles M. Simmens.

News Flashes

Rev. J. F. Apple is conducting a revival at Antioch (E. N. C.) this week.

Superintendent W. T. Scott assisted Rev. J. F. Morgan in administering the communion service at Second Church, Norfolk, Sunday.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill of New York and North Carolina is attending the Virginia Valley Conference this week.

Dr. Samuel L. Johnson who writes this week on Pastoral Counseling is pastor of the Park Manor Congregational Church in Chicago.

Dr. James W. Fifield, Jr., is now broadcasting weekly in Richmond over WMBG and WCOD (FM) Fridays at 12:45 p. m. Dr. Fifield is Director of Spiritual Mobilization.

Rev. E. M. Carter will be preaching in a meeting with his home church—Beulah—next week in the Alabama Conference. This church has given three of its members to the Gospel Ministry.

Dr. Frank H. Lewis of Portsmouth, Va., was the preacher for a union meeting with Rev. E. M. Carter in the Mt. Auburn community, July 11-16. The people heard Dr. Lewis gladly.

NEWS FROM WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

By REV. F. C. LESTER, D. D.

Dr. and Mrs. F. C. Lester and family are taking a much-needed vacation in Florida visiting Mrs. Lester's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Carleton, in Winter Park.

The ministers of the W. N. C. Conference held their last meeting of the season at the home of the conference president, George T. Gunter in Trinity, in June. The next meeting is to be in Septebmer at the Asheboro Church.

On Sunday, July 25, the Rev. L. M. Pressnell, pastor of Seagrove, baptized seven new members of that church. This was the result of a recent revival in which the Rev. F. C. Lester of Asheboro assisted, and of the fine personal work of Mr. Pressnell. All seven were men.

This seems to be the year for laymen in the W. N. C. Conference. Conference has a layman for president and a woman for secretary. Two weeks ago the Sunday school convention elected a layman, Sybrant Pell of the Pleasant Ridge Church, as its president. These are jobs that laymen can do, and these are men that can do the jobs.

The group left in Big Oak after some withdrew two years ago to set up an Independent Christian Church has paid its Conference Apportionments for the year, has made a gift to the Shaowu Mission, and has a balance in the treasury. It is hoped that before long the title to the property can be cleared, and the work can move forward even more apidly.

When Randolph County health officials quarantined the children and young people of that county the Sunday schools took a body blow. But our Asheboro Church would not be counted out. Each week material is being sent to members of the Sunday school so all classes can do the work at home. A service of worship is included. So is a report blank and an offering envelope. Dr. and Mrs. Lester delivered this material to fifty homes on Saturday before the first quarantined Sunday. Fifty-one people reported and made an offering. They will be counted as having attended the Sunday school.

THE SUMMER PROGRAM IN CARROLL COUNTY.

Our churches in Carroll County, Va., are making excellent progress in their summer program. The first week in July a week of revival services was held at the Rocky Ford Church. The average attendance each evening at 7:30 p.m. was 60 people. At the closing service on Friday night, six young people came on profession of faith and were received into the church. Rev. Roy D. Coulter, pastor of Timber Ridge Church at High View, West Virginia, was the guest speaker at this series of services.

The Sunday school at Rocky Ford elected new teachers and officers at the first of July. The school there had been inactive since early in the winter. The average attendance has been 25. Mr. Walter Edwards is the superintendent of the school. The feeling is that our attendance will increase now that we are organized and making an excellent new start.

The Sunday school at Elk Spur has continued its work since Dr. Allan

Gleason left last August. Under the capable and efficient supervision of Mrs. Worth Utt, the school is making progress. It has an enrollment of 80. Sunday, July 18, we had 100 per cent attendance. There is a small Sunday School group meeting regularly at Ivy Hill School with 12 young people enrolled. Brother Revere Morris, a member of Fancy Gap Methodist Church, has continued to teach this group since the former pastor left.

The Pilgrim Fellowship groups have reorganized at both churches and at Ivy Hill School. On Wednesday evenings, Elk Spur young people meet at 7:30 p.m. for group games and a period of worship and study. Ivy Hill meets on Thursday evenings. Rocky Ford meets on Saturday evenings at 7:30 p. m. This Pilgrim Fellowship has an enrollment of 49 young people with average attendance of 31. In all the groups there is a great deal of interest and enthusiasm in the Pilgrim Fellowship activities.

The Elk Spur Church has its regular preaching service on the first and third Sundays at 11:00 a. m. Rocky Ford has its services at 3:00 p.m. the second and fourth Sundays. The attendance is good at both of these churches.

On July 23 a two-weeks' sesion of Vacation Church School closed at Elk Spur. Thirty-six children from three to twelve years of age were enrolled with an average attendance of 30 each day. On the closing day of the school, the parents were invited to share a picnic supper on the grounds with their children. The children presented an interesting program based upon their two-weeks' study. 24 certificates were awarded to those who had been present for seven or more days. Miss Lurena Zinn from the Board of Christian Education was director of the school and primary teacher. Rev. Allen Hurdle taught the Junior-Intermediate group and Mrs. Allen Hurdle taught the Beginners group. Each day the children were picked up and returned home by a truck. We feel that our school was a great success and profitable to the parents and teachers and friends who helped make this success possible.

The first two weeks in August, we plan to hold Vacation Church Schools at Rocky Ford and Ivy Hill. Rocky Ford will have its session in the morning and Ivy Hill in the afternoon. On the staff of teachers will be Mr. Hurdle, Miss Luerena Zinn, and two men from the Moravian Church. Rev. John Fulton, Executive Secretary of the Moravian Board of Christian Education, has made possible this

REVIVING THE REVIVAL.

By W. W. SLOAN.

"I wouldn't be caught in a revival meeting. It is an admission of defeat, that a church is dead and needs to be revived. My church isn't dead," a leading and successful minister of the Southern Convention told me when he heard that Shallow Ford Church was to have a week of special services.

In some way this good brother represents the majority of our churches, for far less than half the Congregational Christian Churches across the country have had a week's program of daily revival services in the past ten years. Many of these have substituted a program of personal visitation evangelism with a high degree of success.

Does this mean the revival service is a hang-over from the dark ages, a thing of the past? I, for one, am convinced that the revival is worth saving, but it definitely needs a face-lifting. Can we picture Jesus shouting, crying, jumping over benches? If not, we need to avoid such religious ecstasy, for we should take Jesus as our guide in life and action.

How can we rescue the revival, make it more in accord with the spirit and attitude of Jesus? When churches had services regularly but once or twice a month, a concentrated dose of religion once a year was essential. Now with most churches having constructive religious instruction each week, is this intensive spurt necessary? These are questions every church, not only of our denomination but of several other denominations, is facing.

For a number of years the Shallow Ford Church has been having the customary revival service with little positive results from the standpoint of making the community, the church or individuals more Christian. They have failed to revive, bring new life to the church. Yet, in our conservative attitude of clinging to the past we scarcely considered omitting a week of evangelistic services.

Our week's program is now past and we are in a position to evaluate it. In general the Shallow Ford people feel we have made definite progress—that this week was more successful than any for many years. Rev. Kenneth D. Register, who assisted the pastor, and several ministers who gave their advice are quite happy with the method and success of the program and feel it should be shared with the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The plan used was to enable people to discover how they could become more Christian and then commit themselves to definite items of advance both as a church and as individuals.

After the sermon Monday night each person present was given a questionnaire (see page 3 in last issue) bearing the title, "Improvements I Want in My Church." Some probably felt that the advances of the past year, building a parsonage, having services every Sunday morning and every Sunday night, adopting the Pilgrim Series in the Sunday school, developing a junior church and a church kindergarten, developing young people's societies using denominational materials, and now putting a furnace in the church building, along with numerous minor improvements, were all the Shallow Ford Church needed. However, after the sixteen items of this questionnaire had been studied the idea of a much greater program for the local church began to crystalize.

Most of these items were recognized as needed and some people began to worry lest we attempt all sixteen of them in the next three months—how could we pay for them all?

The following evening a more personal questionnaire was presented to the congregation. Although the first list of suggestions could not be used in other churches without extensive alteration the second, third and fourth papers could be adopted by other churches with very little change.

The head of the second questionnaire (published last week) read, "Dedicating my talents to God I promise to serve Him in the following ways which I have checked (x)." The twenty-six items cover many phases of Christian service.

The sermon Wednesday night dealt with that which is dear to many people (Continued on page 14.)

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

A CHRISTIAN CLIMATE.

We are climate conscious. Matters not how disagreeable the climate, some will complain while others will brag about it. The vast majority of people are weather prophets who freely offer their mature conclusions concerning the imminent change of the weather. And, of course, the weather provides a ready point of departure for every bogged-down conversation. Thus the seasons with their infinite variety of climatic conditions provide a perennial topic for discussion.

Climate is determinative. The most important and best-known current in the Atlantic Ocean is the Gulf Stream, which derives its name from the Gulf of Mexico, out of which it flows between the Coast of Florida on the west and the Bahamas on the east. The Gulf Stream is readily recognizable by its high temperature and dark blue color. The central part of the drift makes its way toward the western shores of Europe and moderates their climate.

England with its northern latitude is greatly blessed by the Gulf Stream as it is bathed by the tempering winds. People do their best work in a moderate climate where they must be industrious in order to make a living but do not dissipate too much energy in combating the elements. We realize that America and England are superior nations because, for one thing at least, they enjoy a superior climate. Don't complain about the weather; Thank God for it!

While the physical climate shapes human lives to a larger degree than we usually assume, there is another and equally significant climate—the climate of the spirit. We both create and are created by spiritual climate.

We recall that Jesus could do no mighty work in Nazareth because he was paralyzed by the chilling cynicism, the clammy climate of skepticism. We, as Christians, have a responsibility for creating a climate in which the good shall flourish and the evil shall die.

A minister once said to his finance committee: "It is my business to create the spiritual atmosphere in which giving is made easy." Members of the church are climate conditioners also. They may create the climate of friendship, understanding, forgiveness, and hospitality to new truth.

There is the story of the man who visited a very fashionable church and came away with pneumonia. He was not accustomed to the frigid climate. How is the climate in your church? Is it conducive to worship, evangelism, progress? The Christian should be an active "climatizer," in the home, the church and the community.

The larger significance of this truth is reflected in a statement made by a delegate to the World Council's first assembly at Amsterdam: "From and through the revealing and guiding experience of worship, there will be sought a basis of common principle upon which Christians around the world can cooperate for world order, can determine that favorable climate and nourishing atmosphere in which Christian community and Christian world can be achieved."

HOW TO EMBARRASS A MINISTER.

Do you want to embarrass a minister? It is easy to do. The easiest way is to invite him to perform a ministerial duty in another minister's parish.

Weddings and funerals are definite functions of the church. A Christian seldom asks any one other than a minister to perform these functions. He does this because the minister represents his church. No Christian who is loyal to his own church will ask any one other than his own pastor to perform the duties of the local church. No minister ever wants to interfere with the work of a fellow minister. To ask another minister to conduct a wedding or a funeral is to deny loyalty to one's own church.

In several denominations a minister is strictly forbidden by his ordination vows and the rules of his denomination to perform any church function in another minister's parish, except at the request of the local pastor or when the local pastor is completely unable to do it himself. Our Congregational Christian churches are not so rigid, although this relationship is nearly always the first point emphasized in a course in ministerial ethics or in ministers' codes of honor.

The church ministers to its people from birth through death. The church through its pastor is responsible for the Christian nurture of the home, the Christian education of children, a Christian attitude toward marriage, an intelligent understanding of life and death. When another minister performs the duty of the pastor the pastor has been prevented from doing a part of the task which God has called him to do in the community.

The church through its pastor ministers in sickness and death. The funeral is the most sacred and intimate privilege of the pastor to demonstrate, through his relations to the family, the love of God. Only the present pastor can be of other than passing help. Only he can from day to day heal the wounds of bereavement. Christian homes are the foundation of the church. Marriage should intimately tie the new home to the church. Only the pastor of the church can bring about this relation and nurture it.

But what can a minister answer when some prospective bride says, "You married my sister; I want you to marry me" or a bereaved person says, "I joined the church when you were pastor; I want you to bury my dear one"? If he has a Christian respect for the ministry of his fellow pastor he must say, "No." But can he make those who have come to him understand? He can, but it requires tact, kindness and firmness, and some of our ministers lack one of these three qualities.

Let us not embarrass a minister by asking him to do that which his conscience tells him he must not do. Let us not put friendliness for some former pastor or acquaintance above loyalty to our own church. The minister is the servant of the church; we should not put him above the church. If we simply cannot be married or bury our dead without the presence of some minister not now our pastor, then let us ask our pastor to invite the other minister to assist him in the service. The local pastor is responsible for and in charge of every service in his church. He may invite his fellow-minister to function with him, but as long as he is pastor he alone is the representative of his church. As Christians we must uphold the hands of our pastor.

ner tensions are released by discussing intimate problems with someone whom he feels he can trust. Other patients are referred by nurses, other patients, orderlies, maids, and the social service department—in fact anyone who has contact with the man or woman who is sick.

After his period of training the clergyman is ready to return to the parish ministry. He has become familiar with illness, is not frightened, nor shocked by it. He has learned techniques and skills, which he will find ever helpful in working with his parishioners.

The pastor enters a counseling situation differently from any other person, psychiatrist, psychiatric social worker or other psychotherapist for the clergyman comes to the counselee as the direct representative of God. Parishioners may at times view their ministers as errand boys and baby tenders or professional entertainers but at one and the same time they see them as uniquely set apart.

The minister must think of himself particularly as God's assistant and be aware that God may use him in an unknown way to create peace of mind. He is a particular instrument that God may use in His dealings with His children.

The psychiatrist and others who are professional counselors must wait for clients to come to them for help—the clergyman goes looking for trouble. Part of his work is to call constantly upon his parishioners with ear and mind sharply tuned for signs of distress. He often knows a good deal about the situation before he is formally asked to give help.

The alert pastor will call with the attitude that each and every one of his flock has problems to solve and will assume that he might be asked to give help. He will pick up undertones and overtones in conversation and reflect them, hoping that in so doing his parishioner may become conscious of some point of tension.

The pastor must listen. Among Russell L. Dick's many contributions to pastoral work none is more significant than his constant insistence upon what he calls the "Listening Ministry." Freud's great discovery was that many mental disturbances and emotional upsets could be alleviated through an individual's verbalizing his problem.

Putting into words problems and tensions in the presence of a trusted individual, who has the skill occasionally to reflect particular relevant observations may stimulate further thought, give comfort and direction,

Some Principles Underlying Pastoral Counselling

By SAMUEL LAWRENCE JOHNSON, Chicago, Illinois

Mental, emotional and spiritual illness are matters for prime consideration to man. What is the position of the parish minister in this regard?

Illness of the spirit and of the emotions may often be aborted if an individual can come under the care and observation of a carefully prepared parish minister. The minister must never try to take the place of a psychiatrist—that is not his job, he has a unique field. By the relieving of spiritual and emotional tensions and the redirecting of spiritual energy he can bring about an entirely new outlook on life.

Unfortunately the average protestant minister in the United States has not been properly trained to meet this situation.

During the winter of 1947 the chaplain's office at Chicago's famed Wesley Memorial Hospital conducted a study which produced some interesting data substantiating this contention. Among the facts disclosed were these:

1. Many patients did not want their minister to know they were hospitalized. (A similar study in the Bethany Hospital, Chicago, showed that 35 per cent of the patients in this institution definitely did not want their minister to call upon them.)

2. A distressing number of local ministers when informed by the Chaplain's office that a parishioner was a patient in the hospital failed to make a call.

3. Many of those ministers who made calls on parishioners in the hospital did more harm to the patient than good.

An air of mystery hangs around illness with its medical treatment and strange smells. The visitor may often be shocked or made uncomfortably curious by what he hears and sees. The patient although perhaps not understanding them quickly detects such attitudes. Clergymen, like most laymen, are fearful in the presence of illness or when called upon to visit the sick room. Fear is contagious. If a minister is the visitor the patient may react by losing confidence in the clergyman, questioning the doctor's treatment, or just becoming more jittery generally.

What then is the answer to this situation? First the minister must acquire particular understandings and techniques. All too often his knowledge of illness is only general. Furthermore, he must learn to become aware of and recognize tensions and have very specific knowledge as to how to cope with them.

The best way for a minister in the United States to acquire knowledge and skills for the care of the ill is by enrolling himself for clinical training in one of the many great hospitals where he can be guided by the physicians and other ministers who have given particular attention to this specific work.

The clergyman taking clinical training is first introduced to general hospital routine. The instructor in nursing arts undertakes to familiarize him with bedside techniques. He makes beds, manipulates all of the gadgets that can be incorporated into a hospital bed.

The minister associates with the doctors. He goes on rounds with specialists, as do the interns and residents, and learns first hand the various types of treatment used. He comes to know the doctor on his home ground and the doctor learns to know him. The clergyman asks questions of the medical specialist and the physician of the clergyman. They come to respect each other for their individual talents and training.

The operating room with all of its drama makes up a part of the everyday life of the minister's training in a hospital. He learns the language of the medical man and is not frightened by the many methods of therapy. Finally he calls on patients.

Some patients are referred to him by doctors who recognize spiritual illness and feel that their patient will recover much more quickly if his in-

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is a joy to work at the church in these days. There are so many big problems to be solved, so many opportunities to serve, and so much joy in having some part in making the church, which has meant so much to us all, a good success in our community, and Conference, and Convention. Not everyone will look at it as you and I do, but we believe in the church and all that it stands for and so we shall give it our best. If someone calls on us to be the president of the missionary organization of our church, or to teach a class in our Sunday School, or head up the young people's work, or serve as chairman of some committee, or prepare some special program, we shall surprise them by telling them we are glad to do the best we can. And then we shall not begin to think of those who could have done it better, but will set ourselves diligently to the task of performing our duty to the best of our ability.

If you cannot serve on the committee—as chairman I mean—just tell the one seeking your help that while you cannot do it yourself you will do the best you can until you find for him someone who will take your place, and then go to work at the committee, and if you are serious about finding someone to take your place try that also, and that will help you to do the original request with greater enthusiasm. You and I will not let little things stand in the way of our doing the best we can for our church, because we know its worth, and value to our homes and our land, and besides we know its Founder, and He knows us, and we have a fellowship with Him which is worth far too much for us to offer flimsy excuses for doing the things we can do for His Church.

And there are a great many things about any church that might be improved, or any Conference, or our Convention, to be sure there are—it could take up a great deal of our time thinking about them, but there are so many good things being done—or Christianity is a farce and the Church which the Lord established is a failure—that we might as well just get right in and do the best we can toward making it better. In that course lies more happiness and joy for ourselves, and more joy and happiness for others. In that course lies patience and progress.

The other day I was tempted to be impatient, and next morning when I was writing out my regular daily morning prayer these verses came to me:

Help me to be patient is my prayer,
Not a mean old man, nor a bad old bear;
Yes, full of temper if it tempered be,
But full of strength, O Lord, from Thee.

Help me to show wisdom is my wish,
When something upsets my cart or dish;
Help me to overlook another's fault,
And take myself with a pinch of salt.

Help me to be ready, O Lord, I pray,
To share my neighbor the right of way;
And should he shove I still do not care
To be a mean old man, or a bad old bear!

Let us have a good time in life by doing our best and by helping others to do their better.

THE QUEST FOR HAPPINESS.

Every believer in the Pursuit of Happiness, as one of the three human rights set forth in the Declaration by Thomas Jefferson, should have read the article dealing with this subject in the July 12 issue of Life magazine. The views of some eighteen persons were brought out and, strange to say, among all of those scholars and leaders—ministers, professors, statesmen and business men—very few of them seem to feel that human happiness depends to any great extent upon religious doctrine. One felt that the greatest fulfillment of happiness can be experienced without adherence to Christian principles at all. Many of them were of the opinion that ideal working conditions, including cooperation between labor and management and adequate opportunity for advancement, were the chief ingredients in the pursuit of happiness.

The three unalienable rights, "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness," asserted by Jefferson are the fundamental principles upon which this country was founded. And we cannot think of "How Jefferson's heirs have succeeded in realizing happiness, or how intelligently they have pursued it" without linking their efforts with the accomplishment of the first two of these rights. There must be Life and Liberty abundantly; if not, there can be no happiness.

Nations have sought happiness and found it in numerous ways. Egypt sought it in the grandeur of her monuments and enterprises; China sought it in wisdom and courtesy; Judea sought and found happiness in rigid restraint. When the Mediterranean world became Roman master or Roman slave, Stoicism was adequate to every need. With the advent, however, of the Renaissance in Europe, wealth and luxury—two long lost brothers—returned and men began to believe in the earth again. People commenced once more to love beauty and pleasure and to honor men who could create forms capable of perpetuating mortal loveliness. Never were artists more favored, and never did a people place happiness more trustfully in art than did the Italians who, for approximately three hundred years, made their land the picture gallery of the Western world.

When Columbus discovered the New World the Atlantic took the place of the Mediterranean. England sought happiness in Empire-building, Germany in science, and France sought it with all the skill and subtlety of an inventive race. Finally, this new world, too, began to grow rich and bring to its shores adventurous souls from every nation. Because of the feverish spirit and restlessness that came from each immigrating family, this new people was most surely to seek happiness through action and success. Like a very lusty athlete, it was proud of its brawn and energy. It sought welfare of the body before the soul, security before gentleness and wealth before art. Its energies were given to growth.

Now, this New World (America) abounds in rich mansions adorned with beauty created by alien hands. While we try hard to love that beauty, to imitate and understand it, there are times when we must wonder if, after all, happiness has been found. Rich men have come to regard wealth in a matter-of-fact manner and somehow to feel, with all their earthly security, a slight emptiness of heart. Will they one day leave their mansions, as it were, set aside their wealth and renew their search for happiness? Maybe they will. America is finding that wealth is not all, and that it is not always innocent. Someone has said, "I takes much philanthropy to deodorize a fortune." Perhaps when a man gives lavishly of his wealth we tend to forget how he earned it. This is probably the secret to his greatest happiness.

Life is short and it is seldom granted to anyone to rise from poverty to riches and from ignorance to culture in a life-time. Thus we must choose

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

THE EXPANSION PROGRAM FOR ELON COLLEGE MUST GO ON.

Prior to 1946 the College requested that the Southern Convention concur in an effort to secure $100,000 with which to establish the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education in Elon College. The Southern Convention in biennial session, 1946, authorized a campaign to raise $1,000,000. The Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund was to be a part of the Million Dollar Campaign. This fund was to be known as the Stabilization and Improvement Fund; $550,000 was to be used for buildings and improvements and $450,000 to be added to the Endowment Fund. In the allotment of the proposed funds a new heating plant was not considered. It developed, however, that this was the first building in the new program that had to be constructed. The power house building, chimney, boiler room equipment, and facilities for heat distribution are nearly completed and will be ready for use in a few days. These additions are first class and will cost approximately $130,000—$52,000 less than the low bids.

The buildings included in the original draft were the gymnasium, the dining hall, and four dormitories. These buildings cannot be erected at anything like the original estimates. Prices have advanced so radically.

At the recent biennial session of the Convention held at Liberty Church, Vance County, it was voted to increase the Million Dollar Campaign to a Two Million Dollar Campaign. The Executive Board of the Convention in conjunction with the Board of Trustees of the College was directed to form and organization and proceed with a campaign. To date there has been approximately $400,000 secured in cash and pledges that should properly be counted a part of the $2,000,000 to be raised. This is a fine start and should convince all who are interested that the full amount asked for can and will be realized.

Two million dollars is a lot of money. It is certainly a lot of money for our seemingly limited constituency to raise. It will require the active participation of the entire membership of the Church, every alumnus of the College, and our friends to succeed we must.

A wider vision than we have yet experienced will be required. We must realize that without comprehensive information, intelligent constituency, and sane leadership every program of every board, committee and institution within the Convention must suffer, that this wider vision for the Church is impossible without the College and that the College cannot render the service that is expected without adequate financial support.

No one is expecting the churches of the Southern Convention to contribute $2,000,000 to the College. This is not to be a church campaign as we usually think of campaigns. That is to say, the $2,000,000 will not be allotted to the local churches and each church asked to raise a given quota, but the campaign is to be conducted on an individual basis. Every individual will be approached for an individual contribution either in cash or a pledge to be paid over a term of years.

Convention and college authorities are now working on a plan which, when completed, will be presented to the proper authorities for approval and implementation. Won't you, my friend, be thinking and praying for this necessary and understandable undertaking?

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The most optimistic among us are sometimes tempted to be discouraged. There are those upon whom we depend for help. When they fail us, it is disappointing. On the other hand, those who as a rule are pessimistic are easily encouraged by the voluntary assistance on the part of those who are expected or not expected to be of help. No one, I am sure, can fully realize the anxiety, the fears, the hopes, and the expectations of those who hold responsible positions in the church or in our church organizations when they look to those who are expected to give assistance. If such assistance comes, all good and well. If the assistance fails, there is no other source to which we may turn for the necessary help. When it comes to running a college no one has to be told that outside help must come from some source. Since ours is a church institution, we cannot look to the state. We must look to our constituency. Many, many of our friends never disappoint us; others are not quite so faithful; and others seem not to understand or they do not care. Elon College is so essential to our church and its efficiency is mandatory if we are to meet the expectations of the public including our church constituency. Encouragement means a lot. Contributions always help. The college is grateful for every assistance.

cooperative church work by sending these two young men to aid us in the schools. We are indeed grateful to him and to the Moravian Church for this generous aid. With great joy we look forward to working together in the schools.

Sunday, July 25, we were happy to have the Sunday Schools from Round Knob Missionary Baptist Church to visit our school at Elk's Spur. Our total attendance was 122. All enjoyed the spirit of study and fellowship. These churches have made it a practice to visit each other at least once each year for some time. This is a wonderful step toward mutual understanding and cooperative church work in the community.

THE QUEST FOR HAPPINESS.

one or the other. Happiness doesn't always come with an inheritance, but it comes most likely with our rise from ignorance to wisdom and culture. Therefore, the future of this great country must abound, it seems, in an intelligent search for happiness—not in wealth and success—but in the higher and more cultural things of life. Faith, hope and love as taught and emphasized by Christ seem to expand even the cells of the human body and cause it to rise to its noblest purpose. This acceleration of our processes makes for both life and growth and provides the pleasure which is the basis of all true happiness.

FRED F. MYRICK.

REPORT ON AFRICA.

"Africa is today well before the footlights on the stage of international affairs and may at any moment be in the spot-light," say Dr. James Dexter Taylor, Congregational Christian churchman and educator just back from Johannesburg, South Africa.

Dr. and Mrs. Taylor are staying at 107 Pleasant Street, Amherst, Massachusetts. He was born in Waltham, Mass. and is a graduate of Amherst College. Mrs. Taylor was born in Springfield, Mass.

A genial, alert white-haired man, no prophet of gloom but a lover of peace, Dr. Taylor, nevertheless, faces certain facts realistically, pointing out that in World Wars I and II portions of Africa were important battle fields.

"When Germany's future is decided upon, the former Italian colonies in North Africa will claim the attention of the United Nations, with Soviet claims for a foothold there well to the fore," comments Dr. Taylor who, with the exception of furloughs, has lived in Africa since 1899.

"Should there be another war many of the strategic bases of the Western powers will be in Africa and not only most of the gold to pay for it but much of the uranium with which to fight will come from there," he adds, pointing out that Johannesburg is only 38 hours from New York by air and her 5,000-acre international airport will soon be ready to receive the stream of air-traffic that already is pouring in from north, east and west and overstraining present inadequate facilities.

"Africans in all parts of the continent in response to education and the impact of western culture, are showing their capacity for every kind of skilled labor and professional service to which they can get access," Dr. Taylor says.

"South Africa, by an amazing political overturn has set aside her international statesman, Field Marshall Smuts, and his moderately liberal regime, and has saddled itself with a reactionary government whose announced program, if acted upon, will set back the clock of progress for the Africans 100 years," he adds.

"Never have the Africans so needed the sympathy and help and guidance of the Chirstian church as they do today. They freely acknowledge that most of the already great progress of their race they owe to the missionaries."

Commenting on what South African troops did in World War II in driving Italy out of Abyssinia and in turning back at the border of Egypt, at El Alamein, Rommel's crack troops, he commented: "Seventy thousand Africans participated in those campaigns. Although most of them were denied the status of actual combatants, thirty-four of them were decorated for valor and one of these, if he had been white, probably would have received the Victoria Cross."

Loved and respected for his honesty, sincerity and hard work by both whites and blacks, Dr. Taylor has been in the midst of racial situations involving white, black and brown (Indians) races, as well as the effort to weld into a nation two diverse white races—British and Dutch, with its two languages, two cultures and two sets of traditions.

He has been a fine teacher; a preacher and a "bishop" to a large group of the African Congregational Christian Church; a spear-head in the movement for church unity; a social worker; a translator (working 14 years on a revision of the Zulu Bible); an undaunted organizer of interracial groups planed to bring about better understanding and to raise the civic and economic standards of the Africans.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

THE WORKSHOP FOR LARGER SOCIETIES.

It is a bit difficult to put on paper suggestions that might have come out of a workshop on "Help for the Larger Societies," and yet our Workshop Chairman for the School of Missions, Mrs. W. J. Andes, thinks it might be worth while.

For the first afternoon, we had planned to talk a bit about organization. For instance, is your society set up on a scale that corresponds to our State and Convention officers? There should be a local person to handle every department, just as the Conference and Convention has such a person—a Spiritual Life Chairman who would look after and promote Bible study and devotional life programs—a Life Membership and Memorial Chairman who would urge groups to buy Life Memberships and Memorials and get them in on time—a good Interdenominational Chairman who would see to it that her society observes World Day of Prayer, World Community Day and May Fellowship Day, making sure that she knows where the offering for these days should go—a Friendly Service Chairman who knows about the year's Friendly Service projects and keeps them ever before the society—and so on down the list. The work of any society is made much easier when an organization functions along these lines.

A "larger" society should by all means be divided into circles—thus such things as projects, suppers, flowers for church, church visitation can be allocated to the different circles. Members seem to develop a greater sense of responsibility as their time for service comes around.

Now the second afternoon of our Workshop we were going to discuss programs, literature, Year Books and what have you. Mrs. Andes did such a good job in her recent article in the SUN on literature that I want you to look that up, read it again, and then sit right down and order your packet. By this time you have received the price list and order blank.

The first and most important thing to do after getting your packet (and Study Books) is to call a Program Committee together, take the Plan Book that Mrs. Scott has prepared for you, and plan your year's program month by month, selecting leaders and every little detail. Then, let this same committee or an appointed person get all material together and have printed or memographed a Year Book. It will be worth many times the work and cost. In this way, you can put in every member's hands and before her very eyes just what your year's work will be.

Begin now to plan for your Thank Offering Service on November 7th, or around that date. We are suggesting that you make it a public service, letting the whole church participate. As you know, our Thank Offering will go for Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction. Many societies have given liberally for this cause, but it's the difference between what has been done and what must be done that counts and so "In His Name and for their sakes" our church pleads for action. May we fall in line working together to make this our greatest Thank Offering.

There are many ways to study and present our Mission themes—"America's Geographical Frontiers" and "China in the Asia of Today." An ideal way would be to pass the study books around for different members to read and later have some person (local or visitor) present the book at an afternoon meeting, all-day session or supper meeting. Of course, it can be given in sections at your regular monthly meetings. I would like to see more of our members actually study and read the books for themselves. That is the way we can really enjoy them.

As I said in a recent letter to you, we are asking that you make an extra effort to see that our Bible Course—"The Gospel Unlimited," written by Dr. Ferris Reynolds of Elon College, is really studied this year. Not only do we want every society member to have a copy and study it, but we are suggesting that it be made a study course for the whole Church. Perhaps your minister could present it at the Mid-week prayer service. Order copies from the Convention Office at three for $1.00.

On the last afternoon of our Workshop we had planned to open a box of questions and suggestions that concern larger societies. These would have been dropped in during the week. Some would have been problems that needed discussing, some would have been "good ideas" that have worked. Now, won't you make this "Church Women at Work" page a question and suggestion box? Send them in to Mrs. Andes and watch for your answers in later issues—right?

MRS. SIBLEY VISITS GERMANY.

Mrs. Harper Sibley, noted church laywoman and president of the United Council of Church Women, has been appointed by the War Department to serve for ninety days as an adviser to the U. S. Military Government in Germany. Along with other prominent educators and social workers, she left Washington, D. C., on July 14 for Germany, where she will serve as member of a team to aid in restoration of cultural, religious, and social institutions. While in Germany, Mrs. Sibley will consult with church groups, prominent churchwomen, and government officials with a view to developing discussion groups and religious and social activities in churches. One of Mrs. Sibley's assignments will be to help set up machinery through which German women can learn more about activities of American churchwomen, and American institutions. While in Europe, she will attend the first assembly of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam, Holland, in August, as an official observer for the United Council of Church Women.

In discussing her assignment by the War Department, Mrs. Sibley said: "There is growing recognition on the part of government officials that the major task of reconstruction in Germany must be borne by women." Declaring that women represent the most vital and important segment of the German population, Mrs. Sibley pointed out that there are 168 women in Germany, to 107 men. "When you consider that the great percentage of men are found in old and young groups, it is plain to see that women will play the decisive role in moulding the new Germany."

Christ had something to say about economics. He said, "Lay not up your treasures on earth, but lay them up in heaven." Today, because we have laid up no treasure in heaven, we are in danger of losing what we have laid up on earth. Unless we rebuild God in our hearts, we will never rebuild and reconstruct the world.—Beever.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Sunday School Boys & Girls:

When I went to Sunday school it was considered "proper" to memorize passages from the Bible. I belonged to Christian Endeavor and all good Junior Endeavorers were required to answer the roll call with a verse of scripture. We began with simple ones like, "Honor thy father and mother . . ." and kept on until we could say all of the Ten Commandments or the Beatitudes. Many were the Psalms that I and my fellow-members learned.

Today I am told a good teacher does not require her pupils to memorize long passages unless the scripture can be used for a project "or something." I must confess to being old-fashioned "or somethin'." Ideally, I am told, verses should be committed to memory in young adulthood and thus retained. But it just isn't so. No young adult will struggle with the 42nd Psalm containing the big word adversaries as I did and I won an award for it, too. In all seriousness I doubt the value of just learning the Ten Commandments but I do believe that every boy who intends to study law will want to know something about them.

The children whom I have taught have been asked to memorize certain passages of the Bible. I feel that they will remember these words, some of them anyway, and find great joy and comfort from them later in life. Sometimes I am far from home and not thinking about any particular thing when a verse like "Shall they not teach thee, and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart?" comes to mind. They are words from the book of Job and were committed to memory long ago and lay somewhere in the treasure trove and then behold: I thought of them!

If your teachers or parents insist on memory work, cooperate. The golden words from the King James version of our Bible will bring you pleasure many times. A great teacher and writer whom I know and admire recently said that he felt a coldness of writing in the present day because the youngest writers did not know the Bible or its splendid language. Learn its beautiful words in youth, in adulthood read it for solace and wisdom.

Some passages to learn are:

1. Selections from the Proverbs.

2. Psalms or selections from the Psalms.
3. Verses from Matthew or Luke concerning Jesus.
4. A good one to learn this week is I Peter 3:8-12.

WHY ANN TEASED SALLY.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.

(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Ann finished pasting the last picture in her geography notebook, then, leaning over, slyly pinched Sally, who was practicing. There was a shriek and a scuffle.

"Ann, you're always annoying Sally," scolded Mother.

Soon there was more trouble—Sally's music had disappeared. Mother, exasperated, sent Ann upstairs.

"You never punish Sally; she's your pet," muttered Ann, making a face at Sally as she passed.

"It's just a constant fuss," mother complained, after the girls were in bed. "I've ignored it, thinking the girls would outgrow this bickering, but I believe they are getting worse."

"Well, who's to blame?" inquired Father.

"Why, Ann, of course; she's always teasing Sally."

"She must have some reason. If we could get at the cause of the teasing, we might stop it."

"Cause of teasing? I have thought of that. I wonder if there really is a definite cause." Mother, meditating on this, slowly rolled up the darned stockings. "Last winter, the teacher suggested that we give Ann more attention, so she wouldn't think we were partial to Sally. I said, 'Ann isn't jealous,' but I could see the teacher was not convinced."

Mother went on turning the matter over in her mind. A little while later she looked up. "Alfred," she said, "I'm afraid I'm to blame. The teacher is right; Ann is jealous. Do you remember how Ann loved to carry her pink baby-blanket about and would never go to sleep without it? Well, one day I wrapped Sally in this blanket. I remember I didn't ask Ann to lend it to Sally; I just took it. Ann cried very hard and scorned the larger blue blanket I gave her. After that, I never could leave her alone with Sally, although up to that time she had delighted in her baby sister. Once I found Ann sitting on the baby; another time she was pounding her with her little fists. Sometimes she took the pink blanket away from the crib. Although she was only a baby herself, I punished her to keep her from doing such things again."

"Then you were busy with Sally and naturally turned Ann over to me," said Father. "She liked me but wanted you."

"Yes, I remember how she often came asking, 'Do you love me, Mama?' I would answer, 'Of course'—but in a casual way. She was so aggravating, pulling Sally's hair and snatching her toys, that I really didn't feel very loving."

"That wasn't a good way to improve her disposition, was it? I think I've heard you say that Sally was sweeter than Ann—right before the girls, too. You thought they didn't understand."

"But I'm afraid they did," their mother admitted. "Do you think Sally is selfish?"

"She can't help being a little selfish; we've been so partial to her. Suppose we try being partial to Ann for a while. It will do them both good."

Rushing downstairs the next morning, Sally shouted, "Ann mussed my curls!"

Mother, forgetting her new resolution, was angry and started for the stairway, but Father's eyes reminded her.

"Sally, you provoke Ann by making so much of your curls," she said. Then she added, "Try to stop running to us with everything."

The surprised Sally went meekly upstairs.

"See the sunshine on Ann's hair!" exclaimed Father at breakfast. "How it brings out the gold."

"Yes, your hair is lovely, Ann," said Mother, "and you've combed it nicely. Straight hair has so much style. How about a ribbon? What color suits Ann's hair? Sally, you say. Her dress is neutral, so her hair decides the choice."

Sally forgot herself in considering a headband for her sister's hair, while Ann beamed with happiness over the unusual attention.

"That was fine," said Mother after the girls had gone off happily to school.

"Yes, it worked like magic," Father agreed, "but there will have to be a lot more of this. We can watch the teasing. When it stops, we shall know that Ann is no longer jealous of Sally and that we are treating the two girls with equal fairness."

Youth at Work in the Church

ELIZABETH CHICOINE, Convention Field Worker, Elon College, N. C.

IMPRESSIONS OF DEFIANCE.

Defiance offered to the young people of our denomination an opportunity to again rededicate themselves to the work of the church of today and to the church of tomorrow. I believe the attendance this year was the largest of any council meeting thus far. Those who attended were representing many localities and several countries. Some were from well organized state youth organizations while others came to receive guidance for building a new framework for a youth organization within the state.

Memories of three such meetings are in my mind. My first was at Deering in New Hampshire in 1942. Then followed Doane in 1946. And now Defiance.

Varied reactions are felt by delegates attending a National Council meeting. Newcomers are sometimes overwhelmed by the fast-moving programs and on the other hand are inspired by the high quality of programs and leaders. Then there are those who are attending for the second or third meeting. They sense the vast potential of this gathering of young people and are equally inspired to greater tasks.

New emphases were adopted for the four areas of action. They represent the desires of the delegates for a forward-moving program. One of the important actions in the next few months is in the field of interdenominational action which will be guiding continued cooperation with the young people of the E. & R. Church. Strong approval was given to the merger by the youth of our churches.

Six delegates from the Southern Convention have the knowledge and inspiration which can make a difference in our own youth program. "We would be building temples still undone . . ." must be the continuing challenge to each young person in each of our churches.

NORTH CAROLINA REPRESENTED AT DEFIANCE.

Fleta Moffitt and the writer left Greensboro at the weird hour of 2:30 a. m., Thursday, June 24. In Richmond at 8:00 a. m. we met the three Virginia delegates (Sugah Moore, Baxter Twiddy, and Melvin Bunch) and continued our journey to Defiance College in Melvin Bunch's car.

Upon arriving at the college, we found ourselves a part of some two hundred young people from all over the United States—yes, even the entire world. Besides our delegates from the United States and Hawaii, we were happy to welcome our friends from Puerto Rico, England, Scotland, Holland, and China.

Our Southern Convention was represented by five young people and one adult adviser. The Southeast (South Carolina, Kentucky, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama) had seven delegates and one adult adviser. Since we "Southerners" were outnumbered and much in the limelight because of our accent, we banded together in our state demonstrations.

As you know, the National Pilgrim Fellowship Council is interracial and there were three Negro delegates from the Southeast who very helpfully took part in our demonstrations and activities. When young people are joined in their purpose of serving Christ, the color of skin or the difference in speech is forgotten.

One outstanding feature that I noticed about other groups was their unity and strength. Of course, I realize that our Convention Pilgrim Fellowship is fairly new in this organization. However, if we are to grow and be able to take our rightful place in the front ranks of Pilgrim Fellowship groups, we must really study and work for the progress of our Pilgrim Fellowship organization. I believe we can do it, but it will require determination, cooperation, up-to-date ideas, and hard work to make our Pilgrim Fellowship what we want it to be.

MELVA FOSTER, *Chairman,
Missionary Action, N. C.
Va. Pilgrim Fellowship.*

SIXTH NATIONAL COUNCIL OF PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

The sixth National Council of Pilgrim Fellowship met at Defiance, Ohio, July 25-30. There were delegates present from thirty-six of the forty-eight states, with representation from five foreign countries. Out of such a gathering should come an enriching experience of the ecumenicity of the Church of Christ; Defiance created such a mood of solidarity.

The National Council was in no sense an aftermath of the General Council. In many respects the youth meeting was of greater significance than the adult gathering with more apparent spirit of unity and dedication to the "oneness" of the Church of Christ. The brilliant oratory which sets forth pious platitudes and utopian idealism was noticeably absent from the proceedings. In place of oratory there were clear, concise statements concerning the task of Christian youth in a sinful world. The delegates who were present were not interested in publicity propaganda; they were serious-minded young people intent upon the task of world reconstruction.

In an attempt to find an answer to the problems of Christian living, the young people found the bed-rock of their conviction in the Bible. The report of the Commission on Personal Action recommended that Bible study become an integral part of the total program of Pilgrim Fellowship as a means of understanding our Christian faith. But study was not to be the sole means of achieving Christian personality. It was further recommended that personal discipline through the practice of Christian living become a second phase of the total program. This would include membership in cell groups and the inner fellowship of the "concerned." Finally, to round out a program of Christian commitment, the Commission recommended that young people witness for the Christian faith through a comprehensive program of evangelism.

Those of us who were present at Defiance felt the inner surge of the Holy Spirit working through young lives committed to the cause of Christ. Although the days ahead may be dark with unrest and indecision, God hath not left Himself without a witness. The spirit of Defiance is not a memorable experience to be stored away in the recesses of the mind but it is a dynamic, life-force emerging out of the present world situation, creating Christian world community.

ANDREW, THE MAN WHO BROUGHT OTHERS.

LESSON VIII—AUGUST 15, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: He brought him to Jesus.—John 1:42.

LESSON: Matthew 4:18; Mark 1:16-21, 29; 3:18; 13:3-7; Luke 6:14; John 1:37-42; 6:8-9; 12:20-22; Acts 1:12-14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 6:1-14.

A Fisherman and a Fisher of Men.

This man Andrew was a fisherman. He was a quiet, dependable sort of fellow. He never made the headlines. He did not make great speeches. But he had a genius for bringing people to Jesus—the most important, and the greatest work in the world. When Jesus first saw him and his brother beside the Sea of Galilee he told them that if they would come after Him, he would make the to become fishers of men. He did just that. Those words, by the way, are a parable of the elevating, dignifying power of the touch of Christ. Fishers—fishers of men. Even commonplace tasks have a new meaning and dignity when they are done for Christ.

Andrew's Formula for Personal Evangelism.

The simple story of how Andrew found his own brother, Simon Peter, and brought him to Jesus, as recorded in John 1:37-42, contains a simple and effective formula for the very important, and much neglected business of doing personal work. If the readers of these Notes would put these principles into practice there would result an amazing growth in church membership, a real revival, and a new glow in their own religious experience. There is nothing that gives such a lift to one's religious life as to win another to Christ. There is nothing that makes Christ more real than just this.

1. Andrew had had an experience with Christ. You will recall that as Jesus was walking along one day, two disciples of John the Baptist saw Him, and in response to His invitation to "Come and see" where He lived they went and abode with Him that day. We do not know what they talked about, but when they finally left Jesus, their hearts were burning within them. That young Galilean prophet had cast His spell upon them. They had found something which answered to the deep that was within them. They had had an experience with Christ that had changed their outlook and had given meaning and direction to their lives. To be sure they did not know all that it meant, or that it would mean, but the fact remains that Andrew had found a "great treasure" in Christ and he wanted to share it with others. He wanted others to share his experience. That is the natural impulse in the life of one who has found Christ. He wants to, or he ought to want to share this experience with Christ. One reason why more people do not do more personal work is because they have nothing, or little to share with others. If we discover a new hair tonic that gives good results we tell others. If we have good results with a certain medicine we want everybody to use that kind of medicine. But we keep silent about the treasures of Christ Jesus. There is of course the truth here that one cannot very well share with others what he does not have himself. Ministers and Sunday school teachers cannot get far in telling others about God and Christ unless they first of all have had an experience of God in Christ.

2. Andrew began where he was. "He first findeth his own brother, Simon Peter, and he brought him to Jesus." Andrew began right in his own home, with the man next to him. Philip began with Nathaniel, his fellow-townsmen. It is a sound method. Begin where you are, begin with the man next to you. Parents should begin with children and children should begin with parents. Take the man next to you at the desk or in the shop or on the farm or in the classroom or in your social group or your civic club. When Jesus sent His apostles out to make disciples of all the nations, He told them to begin at Jerusalem, to begin right where they were. We do not have to go far afield if we are in earnest about this business of winning people to Christ. Every day every one of us has the chance, generally speaking, to do personal work, if we begin with the man next to us, if we begin where we are.

3. Andrew let Christ make His own appeal. He brought Peter to Jesus. He did not engage in a long argument, he did not discuss theology, he did not try to argue Peter into the Kingdom of God—he simply brought him to Jesus and allowed Jesus to make His own appeal. It is sound strategy and method. The personal worker needs to know how to meet the excuses that are often given by those who try to evade Christ's challenge. But their main business is to present Christ, to introduce people to Christ, to bring people to Christ. Christ can hold His own. He needs no defender or apologist. We are not simply to try to get folks to join the church, we are to introduce them to Christ.

Andrew Had an Eye for a Boy in the Crowd.

When Philip was at his wit's ends as to how they were going to feed the great multitude that had gathered to hear Jesus, Andrew said, "There is a lad here with five barley loaves and two fishes." True he wondered what good this bit would do among so many. But Philip was the kind of man who could see a lad in the multitude, who could see the possibilities of even a boy in a situation like that. Thank God for the ministers and the Sunday school teachers who see the boys and girls in their towns and communities and classes and parishes, who see something of their finer possibilities.

Andrew Points the Gentiles to Jesus.

Near the close of the ministry of Jesus, certain Greeks came up to Jerusalem inquiring about Him. Perhaps they had heard about His miracles or more likely still they had heard about His teaching, its simplicity and its power. In any event they said, "Sirs, we would see Jesus." Philip hardly knew what to do, so he spoke to Andrew about the matter. Andrew knew what to do. He brought the Greeks to Jesus. He worked at this important business all the time.

The Romance of Personal Evangelism.

One never knows the outcome of a word spoken in an effort to win another to Christ. Little did Andrew dream of the significance of his simple but sincere effort to bring his brother, Peter, to Jesus. But when one begins to think about the place that Peter played in the life of the early Church and of his continuing influence even today, he begins to see something of the romance of personal evangelism. Or take the case of the Sunday school teacher who won Moody to Christ and thus started this flaming evangelist on his fruitful career in winning men to Christ!

Be so that thy conduct can become law universal.—Kant.

PASTORAL COUNSELLING.

The idea that the pastor listen does not carry with it the suggestion that he go to sleep, rather he must be actively awake to everything that is said. If it is apparent that a period of time will be needed for exploration of problems the wise pastoral counselor will make very careful notes of each conference trying as nearly as possible to record verbatim everything that is said both by the counselee and the counselor. By a careful study of these notes insight may be gained by the pastor. Medicine did not begin to progress until post mortems became the practice. It was through carefully analyzing his mistakes that the physician learned. All too many pastors are content to shrug off their mistakes and forget about them.

Questions do not necessarily have to be omitted from the listening ministry. As the surgeon uses the scalpel so the counselor can employ the proper questions to open up vast unexplored areas. But the questions must be handled with care. The physician could open a patient's abdomen with one deep cut—but he doesn't do that. Each stroke of the knife is made with considered care, cutting only where and when it is safe to do so. Each blood vessel must be ligatured or else the loss of blood might easily kill the patient. The skilled counselor will move very slowly, asking questions only when the counselee is ready to answer. The art of asking questions is the chief art of pastoral relations.

The pastor must ever be cautious of proceeding more quickly than the parishioner is ready to go. Because of his wide contacts the minister may be able to penetrate the needs and conflicts of his counselee but he must never betray this knowledge until the person whom he is trying to aid arrives at a point of acceptance. After the counselee has embraced a fact then the pastor can elaborate and interpret perhaps with some real advantage. A good adage to keep in mind is that "The longest way around is the shortest way home."

Interpretation is sometimes demanded—time may be short and this method resorted to in order to save others than the counselee from suffering more pain than necessary. Interpretation is an explaining of causes underlying particular behavior. This is related to the process of active listening and is used in conjunction with the listening ministry but it can also be a very dangerous method in the counseling procedure. The danger lies in the pastor not being able to give the correct interpretation. No matter how true a thing may be in his mind unless it is acknowledged as true by the counselee it has no validity. "A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still," has been the traditional way of stating this long recognized fact.

When the parishioner counselee has been given an opportunity by his minister to state his problem, tensions, and wrong doings and the like and the conference has come to a conclusion a simple statement to the effect: "I am sure that God understands and will help you," or "I know that with God's help we will be able to shed light upon this situation," will give confidence and strength.

There is a considerable difference between the statement of reassurance by the Protestant minister and the statement of absolution by the priest. The statement of absolution carries a tone of finality, suggesting that that which has been done is past and over with. The Protestant reassurance is far more wholesome in that it recognizes everything one does has a continuing effect upon one's life. The effect of any experience upon an individual cannot be eradicated but it can be minimized by proper knowledge and understanding.

Reassurance must be utilized with care by the pastor. He must not use it unless he is perfectly certain that what he says appears to him to be absolutely true. His word of reassurance will be embraced by his counselee and relied upon. Should however, this word of reassurance be given heedlessly and the problem not resolved, a greater conflict will in all probability result in the mind and personality of the counselee. It is beholding upon the parish minister-counselor to do no harm.

The particular personal crises which come most often to the attention of the parish minister may be classified under the headings of pain; fear; guilt feelings; and loneliness.

Pain is that emotional disturbance caused by severe distress of body or mind. It is the unpleasant sensation aroused by the excitation of nerves or nerve endings—it is the exact opposite of the sensation of pleasure. This experience may be brought on by hunger, thirst, physical injury or mental trauma.

This sensation is not without positive value. Without pain the individual would not have any warning of impending danger or harm. We should fall prey to all sorts of destructive forces and elements which because of pain can either be avoided, alleviated or controlled.

Pain of unknown origin makes man search for the cause—and when he cannot find the cause seek for palliatives. When the pain results from emotional or spiritual trauma the clergyman may help his parishioner recognize the cause and having diagnosed it assist in the building up or the rebuilding of spiritual resources. When it is the sequel of physical hurt through disease or accident, he can lead the sufferer to the living waters, to that place where he may find "the peace which passeth all understanding."

Fear is basic and primitive. This is an emotion we hold in common with all of the animal kingdom. It is the reaction of the being as a preparation for conflict. It is instinctive when we are confronted with uncertainty. It is the desire to escape from something that may possibly cause pain. It is an emotion characterized by dread or expectation of harm. It is a condition which the individual can be aware of in himself.

A second type of fear is a hidden or unrecognized emotion. In this one strives to escape from something—but does not realize it. It is apprehension which gnaws at one's poise and faith. This is the fear of failure which is without basis; the unaccountable fear of high places, close places, animals, the dark or any number of other things. This is the fear which destroys an individual's confidence and which seeks relief in a psychosis.

Fear can be a protective emotion if rightly understood but it can also be one of the most destructive forces known to man. The role of the minister counselor is to explore, with the counselee, fears and the reasons for his fears and help him to adjust his thinking along healthful lines. The clergyman can be a particularly valuable aid in cases of fear of death. He has a faith in a moral God and in the fact of the immortality of the soul. By conveying his own confidence he can assist his counselee to gain a firm grasp of truth and truth will banish fear.

Guilt feelings like fear are of two distinct types. The first is recognized; it is on the conscious level. The second is the hidden or the unconscious feelings of guilt caused by those things which we have forced into forgetfulness.

Often it is guilt feeling that brings the minister face to face with the question of God's punishment for wrong doing. It is here that the counselor will have to think through carefully the sources of suffering. He must be cognizant of the system of laws by which the world is held to-

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

It is great to be the head of a large family. I have reared ten children in my home, and they are all now grown. The youngest finished at State College, Raleigh, N. C., the first of June. They are all married except three, and out of the group I have one medical doctor, who is a first lieutenant in the army, one dentist, one lumber dealer, one salesman, one textile engineer, two teachers, one secretary, one insurance executive, and a daughter who keeps house for me. I have been able to rear all ten of them and have never lost a child—a big family. I don't know of anything that can bring more happiness to one than a little child. I have had lots of pleasure in rearing them all.

The Christian Orphanage is a big family, too. Since I have been in charge I have handled more than five hundred boys and girls. Most of them have made good average citizens. Of course, some have done better than others. We have sent out from this Institution quite a number of girls who are now private secretaries for some of the largest corporations in the country. We have sent out many nurses who are scattered from Atlanta, Georgia to New Hampshire. Some of them are the first girls we sent out as nurses years ago, and some of them are practicing their profession now.

Some years ago when Dr. L. E. Smith was president of the Southern Convention the writer had charge of THE SUN's subscription list. We considered each subscriber as a member of THE CHRISTIAN SUN's big family. We felt personally an interest in each subscriber. If a subscriber asked that his or her name be dropped it always made me feel as if I had lost a member from THE CHRISTIAN SUN family. We fell in love with each subscriber and it always gave me a heartache to lose one. If all the subscribers of THE SUN would consider themselves a member of a great big family of CHRISTIAN SUN readers and would take an interest in the big family, I hardly think it would be so hard to keep the subscription list up to standard all the time. Through the years we have learned to love each and every one.

Then we have another big family, the Sunday schools in our churches which are made up mostly of little children. We have worked with the Sunday schools so long that we feel that we are a part of them. Then too, they have contributed so beautifully all these years, and when they grew up they still contributed to help us in this work with the little children here. It makes us feel as if they were my own children.

President "Teddy" Roosevelt advocated large families. We have always believed in large families, and are glad we are the head of a large family of orphan children. We get lots of joy out of handling them. They are so kind and gentle that I love them all as if they were my own.

REVIVING THE REVIVAL.

ple—money. Each person present was given an opportunity to commit himself to either or both items of the statement, "Recognizing that all that I have has been entrusted to me as God's steward I propose for the following year to (1) pay ten per cent of my income to Christian work; (2) pay to the Shallow Ford Church each week (a) for current expenses, (b) for the parsonage fund, (c) for the work of our church beyond the Shallow Ford community" the amount checked after each category where spaces were given for amounts ranging from five dollars to twenty-five cents.

Thursday and Friday nights a fourth type of commitment was made available to all to whom it would apply: "Recognizing Jesus Christ as my Master and Guide and wishing to do the will of God, I desire to be enrolled as a member of the Shallow Ford Church. I promise to attend instruction classes conducted by the pastor to learn the aims of the Christian religion, the meaning of the sacraments, the principles of the Congregational Christian denomination, and the organization of the Shallow Ford Church. (One of the following items was to be checked): I am a member of the church at and as that a letter transferring my membership to the Shallow Ford Church be secured. I am a member of another church, but probably cannot secure a letter of transfer, so should like to join the Shallow Ford Church by renewing my confession of faith in Christ. I am not a full member of any church, and wish to join the Shallow Ford Church by confession of faith in Christ."

Despite the oppressive heat and the polio scare, interest and attendance ran high. Remembering that "where there is no vision the people perish" the Shallow Ford people have found a new vision of what Christianity can mean to the church and the individual. If there had been no signatures to this fourth paper the week's program would have been extremely worthwhile. However, we can also report that more adults are joining the Shallow Ford Church as a result of signing this fourth paper than have been received by the church after any revival for a great many years. A more intensive series of preparatory classes than that given adults will be held for junior high school and high school young people this fall after the polio epidemic is over.

Of course other churches in the Southern Convention have used a similar method of bringing new life to their communities. The writer would be glad to hear from them. Together we can improve, refine this method. The writer would likewise be glad to help where he can in using this method in other churches. The revival can be revived.

PASTORAL COUNSELLING.

gether; the laws which make a cosmos out of what would otherwise be a chaos. Protestant much become far more realistic concerning guilt feelings. The Roman Catholic confession is helpful in cases of conscious guilt feelings but of little value in deep rooted hidden emotions. If the Protestant can come to feel that he like the Roman Catholic has someone who will listen to him when he wants to talk—his spiritual and emotional health is bound to be improved.

Loneliness is an emotion commonly met by the pastor counselor for it underlies much of human behavior. It stimulates the love of one human being for another. It is responsible for the attachment between children and parents. It is that emotion which has caused men to gather in communities. Loneliness is almost as basic in human nature as fear.

Loneliness is a very strong factor in causing men to seek after the presence of God. It is man's feeling of aloneness which makes the presence of God such a necessary thing. It is doubtful if man would have sought God had not it been for this strong desire for the comforting feeling of a strength which he believes is in God.

A man's loneliness causes him to do one of two things or both: he becomes aggressive or deeply depressed. Like the other emotions described, loneliness can be either a blessing or a curse depending entirely upon how it is used.

Being a friend to a man and opening up the way to the presence of God are the two things the pastor-counselor can do to give comfort and help a person gain healthful stimulation from this universal sensation. Acute loneliness if prolonged over a protracted period of time may lead to disorientation and serious mental disturbances. It may bring about depression, intense worry, anxiety, drinking, sexual laxness and actual physical illness. Loneliness is a strange emotion. It has created some of the world's greatest sinners and some of her greatest saints.

Prayer—one of the most potent therapeutic media available to the counselor is used almost exclusively in pastoral work. Prayer makes the counselee vividly aware that he is not alone in his struggle and if he can be taught to relax, think about God, bathe himself in the spirit, he will gain comfort and fortitude.

God does not send unhappiness and pain because he wants men to suffer. Man causes pain for himself. God is not a malicious God, rather He is a God who stands ready to help man to control and correct. When one considers the things that cause man's discomfort: Self-pity, inferiority, lack of or fear for security, loss of prestige, loss of affection, old age, envy, anger, physical excesses, disease, hunger bereavement, and a whole host of other things, one realizes only too well that these do not come from God—they are man created. God has shown man and would show him further how to correct much of that which upsets his peace of mind. Prayer, communion with God, clarifies and removes obstacles to inner peace.

Frustration, most simply defined, is wanting something in vain. The mental pain aroused by frustration can be extremely intense. Prayer is one of the most effective instruments for relieving such pain. Through prayer the parishioner-counselee can face up to his desire—question if his wishes are valid. One of the most difficult tasks for everybody is to learn we cannot have everything. There are many limits to desire. One can cry a lifetime for the moon but one will never get it. Time, health, strength and any number of other factors determine these limits.

Prayer—meditation in the presence of God can assist in establishing these limits in the mind then redirect and sublimate one's spontaneous desires to chosen ends. In prayer one offers up one's desire to God and questions in His presence if what one desires is worthwhile or if it is what one should desire. If our desires are good for us then God will help us to fulfill them—if not He can give us comfort.

Experience reveals that many frustrated, defeated, thoroughly unhappy people have found guidance through prayer. What God does in prayer is to speak to our conscious mind through our subconscious and to make clear hidden sources of strength. Paul said "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." That is the sum and substance of the value of prayer in cases of a troubled mind for "If God be for us who can be against us."

Man can have peace of mind if he is willing to search for it. The search may sometimes be difficult. The pastor-counselor must be ready and willing to step in when the difficulties are recognized by the parishioner, to lead him to find the help of God. Jesus said:

"Let not your heart be troubled: believe in God, believe also in me . . . Peace I leave with you . . . Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid . . . In the world ye have tribulations: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

REPORT ON AFRICA.

Dr. Taylor has written for both the white and black daily press in South Africa. A born promoter he has raised thousands for good causes ranging from churches and hospitals to night schools, and including recreational programs to take boys off the streets, and others, including movies to bring light to the men and boys in the coal and gold mine compounds.

During World War II he organized the Finnish Mission Appeal when Finland was attacked by Russia and later was the sparkplug of the whole Orphan Missions Movement in South Africa. In 1937, to offset anti-Semitic propaganda, he organized a Jewish Christian Fellowship. Health Centers, Child Welfare Work, Red Cross, Cripples Care, Carnegie Non-European Library Committee, on and on runs the list of causes that have had his helping hand.

One associate in Johannesburg, writing just before the Taylors sailed for the U. A. A. said, "The Taylors have given many years of the most devoted and distinguished service to South Africa and the African people. They expect to leave Johannesburg about the end of March, if they survive the round of farewell functions being planned by the many organizations that owe them so much!"

The Sovereign God

By STANLEY U. NORTH, Chaplain

1948 Annual Meeting, Home Missions Council of North America

And the Lord God said: I will destroy man, whom I have created, from the face of the earth; both man and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them.

—Genesis 6:5-8; 8:20-22.

Of course the story is naive. God loses his patience and wipes out the race except for a favored few. The fact is, that disastrous floods were a phenomenon of early civilizations as they are of our own day and generation. The difference is that early man had no knowledge of the relationship between denuded hillsides and mountains, and swollen rivers, whereas we do. The attitude of our society, until very recent times, has been one of ruthless greed toward its natural resources. Nor is the current conduct of society what one might call completely enlightened. We know the techniques of flood control in contrast to early man who was totally ignorant of such matters. To the latter a flood was an act of an angry God. To him the remedy was simple; propitiate the God. The Tennessee Valley Authority is a demonstration of what we can do in the control of floods if we have a mind to.

Early man was far from a fool. He was wrong in his understanding of the relationship between cause and effect. But he was right in his conviction that sin carries an inescapable penalty. His concept of his God, who in anger deliberately destroys mothers and babies and dumb creatures along with sinners, is woefully immature. There is a ruthlessness about life. It is not that God, exercising his sovereign power, commands it, but rather that man so often prefers an immediate mess of pottage to his birthright.

It is of interest that, the waters of the Genesis flood having subsided, Noah built an altar and offered a burnt offering unto the Lord. The record has it that God smelled the sweet savor of the sacrifice and said in his heart: "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake . . . neither will I again smite any more every living thing, as I have done."

Of course what we have in the flood story is not a picture of God as God is, but of God as early man conceived him to be. Notwithstanding there are fine spiritual insights in the story. How often we ourselves place a major emphasis upon ritual, assuming that beyond that point God is responsible. Be it noted that floods have continued from Noah's time to our own, and as far as the individual who is drowned is concerned it makes no difference whether the earth is destroyed or just the Missouri Valley—he's dead. Let it be said that worship is of basic importance; it becomes deeply significant, however, only when its insights are implemented in terms of life.

And in this connection our story suggests a caution: we need to be very sure that the God we worship be truly God, rather than a creature of our limitations. A God who is unresponsive to the cries of terror of babies and children being drowned, as if they were so many rats, but who is moved by the sweet savor of a sacrifice, is something less than God.

And let it be added that the cries of terror on the part of children today are of a volume never before experienced by the race. The flood is not of water, but of destitution and misery. And by that token it behooves us not to be preoccupied with the rituals of sectarian denominationalism as if the sovereign God were more concerned with creedal correctness than he is in the physical and spiritual health of his children around the world.

The Oberlin Action on the Merger

By ALFRED GRANT WALTON

The Oberlin Council reached a decision. It approved a plan to unite the Congregational Christian Churches with the Evangelical and Reformed Church to form the United Church of Christ in America. The decision was reached by the democratic process which is characteristic of our Congregational tradition and in which we all earnestly believe. The outcome represents not only a parliamentary decision; it represents a spiritual achievement.

The plan involves the approval of the Basis of Union with certain interpretations which are intended to make more clear the true meaning of the Basis of Union.

The plan includes the following points:

While the name of the new denomination is to be the United Church of Christ, it is to be distinctly a fellowship of churches.

No church is asked to give up its own name. Any change of name is completely discretionary on the part of the church itself although many churches may wish to indicate in some way the larger fellowship with which they are associated.

The autonomy of the local church is acknowledged and it is clearly indicated that there shall be no invasion of the rights now enjoyed by local churches.

Churches, associations and conferences retain their present status maintaining the same relation to the United Church which they now hold to our own denomination. They do not unite with anyone except by their own volition and with their own consent.

The plan contemplates a real union of Christians in a deepening fellowship in which all will work together in the ecumenical spirit for a realization of the Christian goals to which all are dedicated.

While the Council has approved the Basis of Union it has agreed not to implement it until a 75 per cent vote of the churches has been secured, or if this percentage has not been obtained, to proceed to implementation only after a definite percentage, to be determined later by the Council, is deemed sufficient.

At least three persons who have been known to be definitely critical of the Basis of Union have been put on the Commission of Interchurch Relations and Christian Unity thus giving minority opinion due recognition.

The plan carries a pattern which may open the way for an even larger expansion of the United Church and calls upon the Commission to be alert to such possibilities.

As one who has opposed the Basis of Union, my objections are now withdrawn. It is my judgment that "no" voting churches may very properly reverse their decisions and churches that have not yet voted should support the present proposals. The will of the majority has a right to prevail. A desire is greater than a difference; a purpose is more important than a prejudice. Let us secure not only the 75 per cent approval of the churches but an even higher percentage that we may come into the United Church with full strength and let us make this action the first step toward even greater achievements in days that are to come.

News Flashes

The editor will preach at the First Church, Portsmouth on next Sunday, supplying for Rev. Stanley Carne who is on vacation in Maine.

Mrs. John G. Truitt, president of the Eastern Virginia Missionary Conference, announces that the conference will be held at Newport News on Thursday, October 7, instead of on Friday, October 1, as previously announced. This adjustment is made in order to secure Dr. Stanley U. North as the guest speaker.

Rev. R. A. Whitten of Winchester is the new president of the Valley Conference. He succeeds Mr. Roy A. Larrack who has served for ten years, a record for a layman. Other Conference officers are: Rev. R. E. Newton, vice-president; Rev. S. E. Madren, secretary; Mr. C. A. Phillips, assistant secretary; O. W. Andes, treasurer.

Thirty-two people—nineteen of them by profession of faith—were received into membership of the Shallow Ford Church last Sunday by the pastor, Dr. W. W. Sloan. This is but one result of the program described in the article, "Reviving the Revival," appearing in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN. Twenty-one of these new members are adults. Additional members are expected to be received on World Communion Sunday, October 3rd.

Thursday, August 19, will be observed as Congregational Christian-Evangelical and Reformed Church Day at Massanetta Springs Bible Conference. Dr. Althouse of Hickory, North Carolina, will be the special speaker for the day and Dr. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk will preside. It has been suggested that people from the Valley coming to the Conference for the day might bring picnic lunches.

Home-Coming Day will be held at Damascus Church near Chapel Hill, N. C., the fifth Sunday in August. This service will be held in connection with the customary Fifth Sunday Rally of Chapel Hill, Damascus, O'Kelly's Chapel, Martha's Chapel and Morrisville Churches. The Rev. Bernard V. Munger and the Chapel Hill choir will conduct the morning worship service. Rev. O. D. Poythress will preach at the morning service and Rev. J. E. McCauley in the afternoon. Both of these ministers who now serve in Eastern Virginia were reared in the Damascus community. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield announces that all former ministers and members are invited to spend the fifth Sunday at Damascus.

FRANKLIN SANCTUARY RENOVATED.

Approximately $7,500 has recently been spent to renovate the auditorium of the Franklin Congregational Christian Church. The pipe organ has been rebuilt and electrified and a new console purchased. Beautiful oak paneling, eight feet high, has been built into the wall at the back of the pulpit platform and extending across the church. The choir loft has been rearranged and enclosed in oak paneling four feet high. The walls of the Church were painted a light ivory.

The Church is also planning to install a stained-glass window of Christ in the Garden of Gethsemane on the wall back of the pulpit. The window is being presented to the Church by Messrs. J. Vaughan, Ernest L., Jr., and John M. Beale in memory of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest L. Beale.

The Men's Bible Class has presented to the Church a very attractive outdoor Bulletin Board.

CENTENNIAL SESSION OF THE VALLEY CONFERENCE.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference met in its one hundredth session at Antioch Church, near Harrisonburg, August 4-5. The sessions were well attended despite heavy rains. The spirit was excellent and the Conference made forward-looking plans. All the churches were represented by pastor and delegates, and all churches paid conference apportionments, most of them paying all or more than the apportionment for Convention causes, and all paid the "conference fund."

Mr. Roy A. Larrick, devout and capable layman, ended his ten-year tenure as president of the Conference. Mr. Larrick has zealously given of himself through the years in service to his church and conference. He is gracious in his presiding, and thorough in his preparation for the sessions. He has always had strong and progressive plans and programs to present. The recent session was characteristic of his good planning.

A more detailed report on the Conference session will be presented at a later date by the conference correspondent but this writer wishes to pay his personal tribute to Mr. Larrick and his co-laborers in the Valley Conference.

BIBLE STUDY DISCUSSION GROUPS PLANNED FOR CHRISTIAN YOUTH CONFERENCE.

Discussion of the Bible and its aid to living a Christian life today will have an important place on the program of 5,000 Protestant young people who will meet at Grand Rapids, Mich., August 31-September 5 for the third Christian Youth Conference of North America.

The delegates will meet in 160 groups for an hour each day from 11 A.M. to 12 noon with young people themselves presiding and adults leading the Bible study discussion, according to Rev. Dennis Savage, conference director.

The discussions will consider the themes for each day: "Why Are Things As They Are?" "What's the Answer? The Church," "What's the Answer? Personal Commitment," and the "The Answer Applied."

A Bible study discussion guide is being written by Dr. John C. Trever, director of the Department of English Bible, International Council of Religious Education. This guide will be included in the program booklet distributed to all conference delegates and visitors.

Included among the youth leaders are college and theological students, teachers, secretaries, and others, such as an assistant manager of a furniture shop, a physical education instructor, and a textile worker. Several delegates to the Second World Conference of Christian Youth held last year in Norway will preside. The youth leaders range in age from 16 to middle twenties.

Adult leaders include national and regional executives of denominational boards of Christian education and youth work, local church ministers and directors of religious education, editors of youth publications, and city, state, and national staff members of churches and religious education. They range in age from 24 years and on.

Many denominations will be represented among both youth and adult leaders.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

To attend the Virginia Valley Central Conference was a real inspiration. Roy A. Larriek, of Winchester presided over this one hundredth anniversary session with a combination of charm and courtesy seldom excelled. The host church, Antioch, and pastor, the Rev. R. E. Newton, were amply ready for this session, and the reports and attendance made one proud to be a part of such church people.

Three former presidents—the Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., the Rev. R. L. Williamson, and the Rev. B. J. Earp were presented and each presided for a part of this session. Even I was courteously asked, as President of the Southern Convention, to preside and present the Rev. Wm. T. Scott, D. D., Superintendent of the Convention, for his address. Dr. Scott made a great address stressing all phases of the Convention work with an understanding and zeal which showed real “care of the churches.”

I did not arrive in time to hear the Rev. Roy A. Coulter’s conference sermon, but I did hear addresses made by Revs. B. J. Earp, R. Lee House, W. T. Walters and W. T. Scott. They were all exceptionally well prepared and received.

There was a large attendance and I believe every church in the Conference was represented. And progress was indicated in all reports. This is the first Conference to hold a session since the meeting of the Southern Convention at Liberty (Vance), North Carolina, and they voted to accept the increased apportionate voted by the Convention. This was very commendable.

May I add a personal word of appreciation for the lovely home—E. A. Showalter, in which Mrs. Truitt and I were entertained. It was great, and their family circle made up an ideal Christian home.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

LIBERTY (WNC) CHURCH HAS MEMBERSHIP DRIVE.

Not long ago I received the following letter. The writer requested that I write the facts given in the letter as an article for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Instead of re-writing the facts, I would like to quote the letter direct. The thoughts in it are very good and credit should be given to the writer:

“Dear Betty:—

“Here’s the dope on our (church) membership drive.

“Emphasis was placed on securing as many new members as possible from our Sunday school, as well as our church attenders who were non-church members. Each member was asked to call on and enlist a given number of church members from the list he was given to visit. Parents were asked to talk to their children, telling them of the benefits derived from dedicating their lives to Christ and the blessings of being a church member, thus opening the way for the enlistment groups to secure these younger children as members.

“The minister was asked to open the doors of the church on Sunday, April 11. At that time twenty-two people joined the church. Out of this number, three were transfers from another church. The other nineteen joined on profession of faith.

“On the fourth Sunday night, April 25, the baptismal service was held. Again the church doors were opened. This time three more people joined—two on profession of faith and one by letter.

“This was a long awaited and prayed for event. I think every church member present was overjoyed and well blessed to see this fine group of various ages dedicate their lives to the work of God.

“Would appreciate it a lot if you would re-write this and send it in to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I know it will encourage other small churches to put on an enlistment program. Of course

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

ANTIOCH.

There are numerous churches by the name of Antioch and the reason is obvious: "The disciples were first called Christians at Antioch." Rural churches especially, of the various denominations, have employed the name. It is a good, usable, Biblical name, one which does not require explanation to those outside the community. Would that more church names were in this category!

We have five Antiochs in the Southern Convention—two in the Western North Carolina Conference, and one in every other except the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. Why doesn't someone organize an Antioch in that Conference? There is a community somewhere which would be blessed by an Antioch.

A name hallowed by antiquity, multiplied and perpetuated by wide usage, has current significance in many localities. Only the recording angel can compute the good wrought by these manifold Antiochs. Through lessons taught, sermons preached, weddings and funerals, revivals and anniversaries, pastoral ministry and lay leadership, these far-flung Antiochs have stood "as an hiding place from the wind a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

The Centennial of the Virginia Valley Central Conference was held at Antioch. The church antedates the Conference by fifteen years, being organized in 1833. Generations have looked to this church for spiritual guidance. A host of people have enjoyed its hospitality. May it flourish as the green bay tree during this second century!

A CENTURY OF SERVICE.

The Valley Conference celebrated its Centennial last week. It is neither the oldest nor the youngest conference in the Convention. The Eastern Virginia Conference is 127 years old, the Eastern North Carolina and the North Carolina and Virginia Conferences are each 122 while the Western North Carolina Conference is only 77 years old. Here is a grand total of 543 conference years.

The Centennial was appropriately observed, old friendships were renewed, and plans for the future were made. High spirits of the Conference leaders were not dampened by the inclement weather. Two former presidents, Rev. B. J. Earp and Dr. W. T. Walters were extended the courtesy of the chair by President Larrick. The varied program moved according to schedule under the watchful eye, thoughtful planning and presiding genius of Roy A. Larrick.

Considerable progress has been made during this first century. The Conference has been handicapped by numerous problems and disadvantages, but a new century beckons. Some valuable lessons have been learned and improvements made. Churches have been yoked for greater efficiency. The minimum salary scale assures competent leadership.

What are the lines of advance for the second century? An intensification and amplification of the present program, to be sure. Some churches need improvements and additions. Others may find it expedient to move to a more favorable location. The Conference should invade cities and new communities, as well as bless the countryside. The Valley of Virginia is prosperous and progressive. This should be a grand century for the Conference.

WORLD-WIDE EFFECT OF COMMUNISM IN CHINA.

Dr. Earle H. Ballou, a missionary statesman with nearly thirty years residence in China, from his own observations, especially in the past year and a half, stated:

"If the Communists win in North China, it will be a disastrous defeat for everything you and I can hope for in that country. Its consequence may eventually be disastrous for our own country as well. Communist control in China can only mean a vast expansion of the darkness and gloom already enshrouding so much of our world."

He said that "inefficient and corrupt as is the Nationalist Government at present there still lies in it possibilities of internal reform through a not inconsiderable mass of sober, intelligent public opinion." Doctor Ballou's opinion is that, while there is no easy, clean-cut choice between China's political factions, more progress can be made toward true democracy under the Nationalist Government than through Chinese Communists.

A Vermonter by birth, Dr. Ballou was graduated from Yale University and Hartford Theological Seminary, with a D.D. from Middlebury College. He first went to China as a Congregational Christian missionary under the American Board in 1916; has served as Secretary for the National Christian Council of China, the interdenominational organ of the Chinese Churches; on the Boards of Directors of Yenching University and the College of Chinese Studies in Peiping; as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Peiping American School and as Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Peiping Union Medical College.

In 1938, he was sent to Madras, India, as a member of the China delegation to the International Missionary Council Meeting.

In 1943, he returned to the United States on the repatriation ship, Gripsholm, after which he served for two years as Executive Secretary of the Associated Board for Christian Colleges in China, with headquarters in New York. In 1946, he returned to China, coming back to the United States from Peiping, North China, in 1948, to serve as Acting Secretary for China.

Doctor Ballou is the author of Dangerous Opportunity, of several articles about China, and co-author of Christians in Action. He was made a Thirty-third degree Scottish Rite Mason in Shanghai in 1947, being a member of Southern Jurisdiction, U.S.A.

Having spent so many years of his life in China, Doctor Ballou has seen China slowly awaken to nationhood. Having lived under Japanese military domination and in areas of Chinese guerrilla fighting, he has known China in periods of achievement and progress, as well as famine, civil war and floods. He feels that, if the Communists win in China, "it will be a tragic defeat for everything we hoped for in that country, and might eventually be disastrous to America as well."

He warns: "A house divided against itself cannot stand. Civilization is so divided today. 'The One World' we so joyously hailed a few years ago simply does not exist. There are forces at work too powerful and too determined that the sort of 'One World' you and I hope and pray for shall not exist. They want a very different sort of world, in China as well as elsewhere. And, until the question as to whether they are to have their way or are to change their attitude toward those who differ from them is settled, no other question can be settled finally or satisfactorily."—Scottish Rite News Bulletin.

I Took a Little Child to His Heavenly Father

A Parable for Teachers*

By THOMAS ALFRED TRIPP

I

I took a little child by the hand to lead him to the Heavenly Father. On the way we came upon the Great Garden of Flowers.

"Might I have some of these flowers?" asked the Little Child.

"No," I replied. "You cannot have them. If you took them you would crush them. They would wither and die and the Heavenly Father would be displeased. Beware of disturbing that which belongs to God."

The Little Child frowned as though he did not understand and looked back wistfully once or twice. He really needed flowers, he confided, and desired them above all else.

Soon, however, we came to the Great Out-of-Doors where are the busy bees, the beautiful butterflies and all the things that God hath made. The child seemed to come to life anew and was filled with many questions. What a thirst for knowledge! He asked about everything he saw but I hushed all his questions.

"You must not inquire into the things of God. Do not get your religion and your life mixed up like that," I commanded.

Furrows grew on his little brow and he seemed to be greatly puzzled. There were so many things he wanted to know and he could not understand why he should not ask about them.

We came to a tree where a bird was singing in the branches. "What does that bird say?" inquired the Little Child.

"Ssh! That is God's bird, I warned. It really is not any of our affair what it is saying. You must not inquire into the matters that belong to God."

Still more puzzled, he followed me until we came to the Little Stream.

"Could we take off our sandals and cool our feet? I am very warm?" said the Little Child.

"No," I replied. "You must not do that because this is God's stream and if you waded in it you would muddy it up. Thou shalt not disturb the things which belong to God. Beware of doing that!"

So over the stream we went and soon came to the Garden of the Lord. It was the heat of the day. It was not the season of the soul of a child. Finally, in the cool of the day, the Father walked in the garden. I would introduce the little child to the Heavenly Father but I could not. Trembling with fear, he hid behind me and clutched my cloak. He was afraid because I had said, "Beware of God."

Then I knew that I had failed. I had not led a little child to the Heavenly Father. I had only said, "Beware."

II

Again, I took a little child by the hand to lead him to the Heavenly Father.

"This time there shall be no mistakes," I cried.

I grasped him firmly by the hand and started down the way. My steps were long and his were short. Soon he was all out of breath.

"You are going too fast for me. Your steps are too long. Could we not slow down?" he begged.

But I hurried on without heeding his pleas because I did not want him to get the concerns of life mixed up with his religion. We dashed by the Great Garden of Flowers so fast that he did not see it. We hurried through the Great Out-of-Doors, where are the busy bees, the beautiful butterflies and all the things that God hath made, with such speed that he had no breath to ask his questions. We rushed past the tree where the bird was singing, leaped over the Little Stream without cooling our feet and came to the Garden of the Lord.

It was high noon. At last, in the cool of the day, the Father walked in the garden. Now I would introduce the little child to his Heavenly Father. But I could not because the child was fast asleep and could not be awakened. He was so tired because I had made him follow my way and take my speed. I had forced my life upon his.

I now knew that I had failed and could not lead a little child to his Heavenly Father. In humility, I fell upon my face before God and asked the road to Christian Nurture and sought, as best I could, the Way of Guiding that I might know how to lead a little child.

III

Once more I humbly took a little child by the hand to lead him to the Heavenly Father.

"Would you like to go to the Heavenly Father?" I inquired.

"I do not know; tell me about him." He spoke with a question in his voice.

I told him what I could and what I thought he would understand.

He said, "Yes, I think I would like to go. When do we start?"

"We can go now, if you are ready."

We started along the Way of Life. I adjusted my steps to his little steps; I conformed my thoughts to his. We came upon the Great Garden of Flowers.

"Might I have some of these flowers?" asked the Little Child.

"Surely," said I, for I had learned my lesson now. "These are your Heavenly Father's flowers. He has placed them here for you and for me and for others like us who need their fragrance and their brightness."

We took a bouquet, a great generous bouquet, filling our arms. Down the Way of Life we went, giving the flowers to the people whom we met. Some were sad on their way to grief

Youth at Work in the Church

ELIZABETH CHICOINE, Convention Field Worker, Elon College, N. C.

To My Friends in The Southern Convention:

Many times I have written to you through THE CHRISTIAN SUN—but I've never written a letter like this. I almost do not know what to say!

This may be the last time that I'll write to you as Field Director of The Southern Convention, for, as you know, I shall be leaving this position very soon this month.

Before I leave, though, there are some very important things I'd like to say!

I have enjoyed very much working with you—for we have worked together in the young people's work, in the Sunday schools, in the women's societies, in all the enterprises that make our churches living churches. And, for the help that you have given me, for the encouragement you have offered me, for the patient understanding you have shown me, I want to thank you. The little that I've tried to do in our Congregational Christian Churches here I couldn't have done, without you!

Perhaps you do not know of my plans for the near future. I'm planning to go back into teaching in the public school on September 8.

May I ask one more thing of you before I leave? If I give you my address, will you write to me, keeping me in touch with all that's going on in the Convention—and come to see me, too? Here is my address:

123 Church Street,
North Adams, Massachusetts.

Thank you all again—for everything that you have done for me, and with me, too. Truly, you have made me feel that we are all co-laborers with God, together, working for His Kingdom. Sincerely,

ELIZABETH CHICOINE.

WHAT A YOUNG PERSON LIKES IN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

By MARY E. BURTON.

[An address given at the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention.]

I think one of the first things we as young people should do is to realize the great importance of our Sunday schools and churches.

There are so many things our Sunday schools have to offer us if we will only open our minds and hearts, and take these various things in,

The most wonderful thing I find in Sunday school is the close fellowship with God. Sunday school puts religion before us in such a way that we not only worship God and turn to him on the Sabbath Day but we also make him a very definite part of our everyday lives. We turn to him for help, love and guidance when all of our earthly friends have forsaken us. In Sunday school we not only learn to love God and respect his name but we also learn to live our lives for him.

Another thing I like in Sunday school is the praising of God through hymns. People often find God through nature, many people find him through the lives of other people and some find God through music. To many people the singing of a service is the most enjoyable part. May be one reason the youth of today enjoy singing so much is because in this way they have a very definite part in the service.

I have found during my association with the leaders in the Sunday school that the young person taking an active part in the worship program gets more out of Sunday school than those who do not taken active part, and I have found that you get out of things just what you put into them.

Young people enjoy going to Sunday school because it acts as a meeting place for them. This is true, especially in the county, because sometimes the only times young people really get to see all of their friends is at Sunday school. At Sunday school you find out who Jane had a date with last night; you see Mary Brown's new hat and you find out if Bill can get the car this afternoon. And so not only does Sunday school bring us closer to God but also closer to our friends.

In every church, there are various youth organizations. For instance, in my church, the Suffolk Christian Church, we have a youth organization called our Youth Fellowship which meets every Sunday night. This is definitely a part of our Sunday school because it is made up chiefly of the young people attending our Sunday school. At these meetings we discuss current events. These discussions are always welcomed by the young people because they concern the young people directly. Some topics used at these meetings were, "What Should Boys and Girls Do on Dates?" "What's Wrong With Smoking and Drinking?" "What Should You Do on Sundays?" "How to Live Our Lives for Christ." These and many other topics which deal with the problems which face the youth today are discussed.

The leaders of the Sunday school are also very important, because they set the example that the young people will follow. Remember! the youth of the Sunday schools of today will be the leaders of the churches of tomorrow.

And now in closing, I'd like to read you a poem which sums up the every purpose of the Sunday school:

Hold high the torch!
You did not light its glow—
'Twas given you by other hands you know.
'Tis yours to keep it burning bright
Yours to pass on when you no more need light:
For these are other feet that we must guide:
And other forms go marching by our side;
Their eyes are watching every smile and tear
And efforts which we think are not worthwhile,
Are sometimes just the very helps they need,
Actions to which their souls would give most heed;
So that in turn they'll hold it high
And say, "I watched someone else carry it this way."
If brighter paths should beckon you to choose,
Would your small gain compare with all you'd lose?
Hold high the torch, you did not light
it's glow—
'Twas given you by other hands you know.
I think it started down its pathway bright,
The day the Maker said: "Let there be light."
And he once said, who hung on Calvary's tree,
"Ye are the light of the world . . . go!
shine for me.

And you and I should shine for Christ and we must remember that we may become his torch bearers to yet unborn generations.

FRANKLIN YOUNG PEOPLE ORGANIZE.

The first organized meeting of the Young People's Missionary Society of the Franklin Congregational Christian Church was held on Sunday morning, October 19, 1947, with 12 members enrolled. Using for our theme World Evangelism, we meet during Sunday school hour every third Sunday. As our devotional guide we use Thy Kingdom Come—Beginning in Me, and for our study book last fall That All May Know. We are now reviewing Why Church.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

FOUNDER'S DAY—ELON COLLEGE.

By vote of the Southern Convention and official action of the General Assembly of North Carolina, Elon College was chartered in March, 1889. Prior to World War II the College inaugurated the custom of observing Founder's Day with a special program honoring the memory of some great personality who had rendered the College a very significant service. The first to be so honored and properly so was the late Dr. William Samuel Long, founder and first president of the College. The second to be honored was the Rev. Dr. William Wesley Staley, the second president of the College. Dr. Long served as the president for four years and Dr. Staley served for eleven years.

The custom of observing Founder's Day after the lapse of several years is to be resumed this year. The date set is September 17.

Because of the unusual and great services rendered the College by Dr. William Allen Harper, the fourth president of the College, and the nature and urgency of the Expansion Program now in progress for the College, the committee has elected that the program for this special day in addition to memorializing the founders of the College shall be in honor of Dr. Harper.

Dr. Harper served the College as president for twenty years. Under his administration the College suffered its greatest material loss and also its greatest physical development. The whole administration building that housed all the activities of the College was destroyed by fire in the early hours of the morning of January 18, 1923. Under the inspiring leadership of Dr. Harper, five new buildings were erected to replace the old one. These buildings stand today as a memorial to the faith, the vision, the ability of Dr. Harper, the trustees, the officials of the Church, and the rank and file of its membership.

It is entirely fitting that in the midst of another great Expansion Program for the College, Dr. Harper's services should be recalled and his name honored. A special program for Founder's Day is being prepared and will be announced later. This advanced announcement is made that all interested may know of the program so that they may arrange to be present.

The trustees, the alumni (especially those who were in Elon College during Dr. Harper's administration), church officials, and the public in general are not only invited but urged to attend.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Elon College has certain sources from which it receives its financial support. The first organization to concern itself with the College was the Church, of course. The Southern Convention has always been the source of inspiration, of financial support, and of spiritual guidance for Elon College. The Church supports the College directly and indirectly. The local churches in the Convention assume certain definite responsibilities for the College and meet these obligations either monthly, quarterly or annually through the apportionment plan. Indirectly, it influences individual contributions from members and friends of the Church. The Church is still the College's main support.

The alumni are becoming increasingly interested in the welfare of the College and are increasing their financial support. They have undertaken to finance the new gymnasium and are making commendable progress under the enthusiastic leadership of Jimmy Darden, their secretary.

The Church, alumni, and friends of the College have built considerable endowment for the College. These funds are invested and income therefrom goes for the support of the College.

The students enrolled in Elon College through tuition and fees make a great contribution to the College and its financial support. The income from all of these sources has been sufficient in recent years. Today we face an entirely different situation. Everything required for the proper conduct of the College is becoming expensive, almost unbelievable so. The urgent need for considerable increase in faculty salaries is upon us with a force and a persuasion that cannot be ignored. All who are interested in Elon College and its welfare are aware of this fact. We are faced with the compulsion of increasing the financial income for Elon College as greatly and as quickly as possible. We are grateful for every contribution made to date and are confident that our friends will be glad to see that such support is increased in the immediate future.

DR. AND MRS. SMITH IN HOSPITAL.

Mrs. Leon Edgar Smith, wife of the president of Elon College, and Dr. Smith were both admitted to Alamance General Hospital, Burlington, N. C., last week. Mrs. Smith was admitted on August 5 and was operated on the next morning. She is getting along nicely but will have to remain in the hospital for ten days. Dr. Smith was ordered back to bed by the surgeon on August 4 and was sent to the hospital on August 6 for at least a week's stay. He was not recovering satisfactorily from a recent operation for varicose veins, and the surgeon ordered hospital confinement.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP REACHES HIGHEST MARK.

Church membership in the United States has climbed to its highest mark in history—53 per cent of the nation's population, it was recently announced by the Christian Herald.

The magazine said that the number of Americans belonging to churches increased to 77,386,186 in 1947, a gain of 3,713,006 over the previous year.

To obtain its annual report, the magazine said that it polled 223 Protestant and 30 non-Protestant denominations.

Of the total number of American church members listed, the report said, 60 per cent (or 46,149,676) are Protestants, 33 per cent (or 25,286,178) are Roman Catholics, 6 per cent (or 4,641,000) are Jewish, and the remaining 1 per cent belong to various non-Protestant groups.

In the past year the Roman Catholic Church reported an increase of 866,049 members—a gain of about 3.5. Protestant Churches reported adding 1,173,962 more members—an increase of about 2.6 per cent.

NEWS OF SHAOWU CHRISTIAN HOSPITAL.

Shaowu, Fukien, China,
July 10, 1948.

Dear Friends of the Southern Convention:

The large number of interesting things which have been happening here during the past three months and which have kept me too busy to write are the things which most urgently needed reporting; and I am very sorry that circumstances above kept me for so long from letting you about them. Now I must content myself with a brief summary of events which I would like to have taken several pages to report in detail. The best I can do now is at least to send you copies direct from here this time, instead of having them mimeographed in Boston as usual.

I believe that when I last wrote, spring was just arriving, and we in the hospital were waiting, from week to week, for the arrival of our new surgeon, who had promised to come last January, but was having trouble getting his wife out of an area of Communist fighting in the North. Finally the last of April, he arrived; and about the same time two new nurses joined the staff, so that we at last had enough nurses for any contingency—even that of our married nurses having to take a month off now and then to have a new baby! At any rate, the first of May found the hospital more adequately staffed than it had ever been before, and its prospects brighter for forward progress on its own. I had long been dreaming of the possibility of being able to spend more time away from the hospital itself, trying to do something to meet the medical and public health needs out in the country. So when, just before the first of May, I had a chance to go with Frances Whitaker down the river to a Church Synod Conference in Yangkou, one of our out-stations, at which would be discussed the possibility of a branch hospital or clinic there, I felt that it was safe to turn over my share of the work to the other doctors for a week or ten days, and make that as a preliminary excursion.

If I had written two months ago I would have described more in detail the adventures of our boat trip down the river, including our shipwreck when we ran into a rock in the rapids and punched a huge hole in the bottom of the boat. And I would have more to say about Yangkou and the fellowship there with other Chinese, and with Dick Jackson, whom we had not seen for two months because he had been country touring, and having a baby down in Foochow. He had also brought with him, as "guest attractions" for the Conference, two of the Foochow missionaries whom I had not seen for well over a year. However I have no time to tell of the Conference, or of our disappointment in not being able to make a side tour into the mountains behind Yangkou because of recent bandit activity. Suffice it to say that we decided at the last minute to go

FISCAL YEAR OF MISSION BOARD ENDS AUGUST 31.

The fiscal year of the Mission Board ends August 31. The need is great for funds with which to discharge our responsibility as ambassadors for Christ. Churches and individuals are urged to send their remittances for the Cent-A-Meal Plan, special offerings for Shaowu and regular apportionment or special contributions to the Convention Office, Elon College, N. C. The Board would greatly appreciate receiving your offerings before August 31, if possible.

MISSION BOARD TO MEET.

The Mission Board will hold its annual session at the Congregational Christian church, Asheboro, N. C., September 13-14. Any church or organization desiring to appear before the Board is requested to make known the request at an early date. The meeting will convene at 2:00 p. m., September 13, and will adjourn on the 14th.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

ECHOES FROM THE GENERAL COUNCIL.

I am eager that the Southern Convention women shall know about some of the things that happened at the General Council and get a glimpse into our busy week there at Oberlin.

The Women State Presidents were housed in Talcott Hall, on the college campus. We had many in-between sessions and conversations far into the night. As Berta McClintock writes, "What other group does as much work with so much fun?"

For the Council itself, there were three truly tremendous happenings:

1. The commitment, by each person, of life and possessions to God, thus making Stewardship the chief emphasis for this biennium.

2. The adoption of new goals for our Christian World Mission.

3. The almost unanimous approval of the Basis of Union for the merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church, with interpretations made by individuals and committees who worked long, hard hours and with infinite patience to find a common ground of understanding. All of us can help in the task of bringing the vote of the churches up to 75 per cent by January 1. As soon as that is achieved, plans for the actual Consummation of Union between the national bodies will go forward.

For the first time in the history of the General Council a woman was elected Moderator—Miss Helen Kenyon of New York. I want you to know her, a person full of ability, enthusiasm, and devotion. She has promised to come to our Convention.

In addition to all the business sessions, fellowshiping one with another, mingling with and coming to know groups from all parts of the United States and other countries of the world—I say in addition to all this, you get a tremendous lift from the spiritual side of the meetings. There were many, many inspiring worshipful moments. I would like to share a few of these with you.

There were the Morning Devotions in Fairchild Chapel immediately after breakfast, lasting only fifteen minutes, but long enough to put one's soul in tune for the day; then the Prayer Vigil, also in Fairchild Chapel

CHARTER MEMBER OF GREENSBORO CHURCH PASSES.

The First Church, Greensboro, N. C.; the Woman's Convention, and our Church at large lost one of its oldest and staunchest members in the death of Mrs. L. M. Clymer, who passed away at Wesley Long Hospital in Greensboro on July 12, 1948, after a severe illness of several days. Mrs. Clymer is survived by three daughters, Mrs. A. E. Pye of Greensboro, N. C.; Mrs. E. N. Z. Ellis of Winston-Salem, N. C., and Mrs. Robert Harden of Burlington, N. C.; one son, Hugh H. Clymer of Greensboro, six grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

MRS. L. M. CLYMER.

In the absence of her pastor, Dr. W. E. Wisseman, the funeral service was in charge of Rev. Millard Stevens of Burlington.

Mrs. Clymer came from a Christian home of long standing. She was a native of Alamance County, her father, the late Rev. Alfred E. Isley, being a long-time pastor in the Christian denomination. He served the Bethlehem Church perhaps longer than any other and resided in that neighborhood.

After her marriage to Ludwick M. Clymer, Mrs. Clymer became a resident of Greensboro and there she resided and labored for 52 long years. For many years she served as one of the directors of the Y. W. C. A. and was always interested in and pushing the things that help make a city great.

The door of her home was always open to those whom she might help. Nieces and nephews, many of them made her home theirs as they came to Greensboro to work or study.

One does not think of the Greensboro Church without thinking of the Clymers. Mrs. Clymer, along with her husband, was one of the charter members of that church. In those days it wasn't easy to build a church—small membership, scanty dollars—but Mrs. Clymer, with her zeal, enthusiasm, loyalty, and generosity, was an inspiration to all who knew her. The Clymer home was located near the Church lot, so Mr. and Mrs. Clymer not only lent every possible aid, but literally watched the Church go up brick by brick and with it grew their faith and loyalty—firm and substantial as the walls of that building. The Church became as much a part of their life as was the family which they reared to love, support, and revere the church. The Clymer home and the Church were one. In the early days when there was no parsonage, Mrs. Clymer's home was the minister's home—the door always open to welcome her pastor and his fellow ministers. It ever remained so and even in the last years of her life, with failing health and eye sight, her interest and love for her Church remained the same. She never failed, even to the very last, to help and support all worthy causes.

When illness made impossible her physical presence at church meetings, her spirit was there and felt. Those of us who knew and loved her best can now—every Sunday—visualize her there in the pew that the Clymer family has occupied for more than 40 years, singing out of the joy of her heart the good old hymns that she loved. One of those hymns, "How Firm a Foundation," sung by John R. Truitt at her funeral is symbolic of her faith and life as was that portion of the 31st Proverbs which the minister read. For truly "her price is far above rubies" and "her candle goeth not out by night."

Back of and giving meaning to all that she said and did was what she was—a Christian woman—gentle and and humble, friendly and sympathetic, patient and long suffering, kind and courageous, deeply spiritually minded with a simple but firm strong faith. And many besides her sons and daughters rise up to call her blessed because as a result of her life and labors they have come to be better men and women.

Mrs. Clymer's memory is a priceless heritage for her family, her friends, and her Church.

PATT PRESTON PARIS.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

How would you like to be a hundred years old? Last week I helped celebrate a hundred-year-old birthday. In this case it wasn't a person, but a conference, the Valley Central Conference. The Centennial as we call such an occasion was held at Antioch Church near Harrisonburg. I had a wonderful time for a number of reasons: seeing old friends, enjoying the food, looking at the collection of photographs for the celebration and mostly for the communion with the past and present at such a sacred time.

Among the friends were the Deavers with whom I had visited once before, many of the Antioch church-people, the ministers and their wives and their children. Because it is a small conference there are not a great number of ministers but the small number do a remarkable job for they must travel over wide areas in the valley and mountains. The ministers are: Whitten, Newton, Madren, Coulter and Koon. Two of the visiting ministers have influenced my life. One of them, Dr. W. T. Walters was the first minister of the Richmond Church and the parsonage in which we live was bought for his family. Because he had a large family, the house chosen was spacious and that's why I live in a ten-room home. The Rev Ben Joe Earp was the first minister at Newport News that I really knew very well and he had a daughter my age. Through the years I have thought of him as being my pastor.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill was there too. She is from North Carolina and now works in New York. She was a kind of pioneer S. S. S. (Student summer service) worker and I attended a Daily Vacation Bible School that she and Miss Lucy Eldridge were holding at Elon College and I have always remembered a few of the things they taught us.

The only unfortunate thing about the observance was the constant down-pour of rain the first day. The ladies of the church were handicapped in serving their dinner on the grounds. But they did a good job. They had a canopy put up and we crowded under and ate of the delicious and bountiful food. Supt. Scott was saying that the people (he meant the women) of the Shenandoah Valley were noted for their fruit salad and he agreed, and so do I, that it is truly good. It is at dinner time that people see each other and visit and recall past days of glory and on this occasion that were 100 past years to recapture. The rain did do one good thing—it forced all the people indoors for no one wanted to loiter on the doorstep in that rain!

Someone had carefully collected a number of pictures of the past and present ministers of the Conference and of their churches. Many of the churches have already passed their hundredth birthdays. I can't remember all of them, but I think Timber Ridge and Antioch are in that group. Among the ministers were the three Andes, father and sons, who have served and are serving, the Rev. J. F. Morgan, Rev. M. L. Bryant, Dr. W. T. Walters, Rev. R. L. Williamson, the present ministers of the Conference and many more.

Perhaps others will be writing in our paper about this great event but I especially wanted to write about it because I promised some of the boys and girls that I'd remember their celebration days.

LEARNING WITH YOUR CHILDREN.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarden Association.

The mother of eight-year-old Sherrill and I happened to be speaking of teddy bears.

"You know how they came by their name, don't you?" asked Sherrill, who sat near us looking at some pictures.

Both her mother and I hesitated, as adults often do when they dislike admitting lack of knowledge.

Apparently unconscious of the fact that we were unsure of ourselves, the child continued. "They first appeared in this country when Theodore Roosevelt was President. Our teacher told us that the President was on a hunting trip in Mississippi, when, one day, he refused to shoot a bear because it was so little. People began at once to associate the toy bears with the President's kindness to the baby bear, and soon everybody was calling the new toys 'Teddy bears.'"

I looked at Sherrill's mother, who smiled. "You can learn a good deal from children!" she said.

I agreed.

Horizons are broadened for parents, as well as for children, when the special interest of any one member of a family becomes the general interest of all.

It was my privilege to be one of the dinner guests recently of friends who had just returned from a trip to Mexico. After dinner their elder son, Bobby, showed us some pictures they had taken while they were away.

Commenting on a snapshot of a swimmer who has a country-wide reputation, the father remarked that the young celebrity was a friend the boys had made while staying at one of the hotels. The mother then related the story of the beginning of the friendship.

"At the hotel in Cuernavaca," she said, "was this young guest, Alphonso Sutter. We came into contact with him several times soon after arriving. One day Bobby asked him if he were related to John Sutter, the pioneer who had helped in the discovery of gold. The boy's face lighted as he replied, 'Oh yes. I am his great-grandson.' From that day the three boys were friends."

We all know that curiosity is as clear and definite in its purpose as any of our other urges. In children it usually leads to questioning; and when the questioning shows thoughtfulness, it should be rewarded with a satisfying response. Here is the opportunity for parents and teachers to lead the young child toward the delights of discovery and to widening horizons.

The young citizen-in-the-making whose questions are patiently discussed, with the sincerity and frankness of one friend talking with another, will not only gather a valuable fund of information but he will be greatly benefited by the broadening of his outlook and by the stimulation which he will derive from thinking for himself. When this ability to think for himself is brought to life, swer questions may stifle interest to it can never be taken from him.

On the other hand, refusal to answer the extent that information will no longer be sought, or, even worse, it may be secured through undesirable methods.

There are unlimited sources from which information on all subjects may be obtained. E. L. Thorndike's Century Junior Dictionary, published by Scott, Foresman & Company, and The Book of Knowledge, edited by the Grolier Society of New York, are among the best books of their kind for boys and girls. They are so simply written that any child able to on down the river to Nanping, and visit the Methodist Hospital and Public Health work there; and when we arrived there, Fran and I decided on still another detour on down to Foochow, to see the new Jackson baby and take care of some timely hospital business. We were not dressed or equipped to venture so far into civilization, but it would only be for a day or two, so we left all our camping equipment in Nanping and borrowed suitable clothing, and off we went.

The motor launch trip, down the Min River to Foochow, is unusually beautiful; and the scenery seemed unusually inspiring that fateful morning on the sixth of May, giving me the inspiration and courage to pop the question that had been in my mind for several weeks, and thus take the step that has so completely changed my whole life. I don't remember how much I have told you before about Frances Whitaker, the nurse who joined our group here in Shaowu last September. She was born in Peking, studied Nursing at the University of Oregon, and had special post-graduate training in midwifery in New York before coming back out to China. Her folks are now in Tientsin, North China, where her father is doing special work among the students of government and private universities in that city. During her six months in Shaowu, she has been organizing the Nursing School, pulling up the nursing standards on the wards, running the OB clinic and a home delivery service along the lines of the Maternity Center Association in New York where she studied. In baby clinic and school nursing service here in Shaowu; and in short leaving no doubt in our minds that she was an unusually capable girl. When the Jacksons went down to Foochow in February, we were thrown together more, and discovered a lot of medical and recreational interests in common, as well as a very similar background of missionary tradition in our families, etc. 'Nuff said—except that I was very, very lucky when she said Yes on that motor launch to Foochow, instead of throwing me into the river for my impertinence!

We decided right away that we would like her father to tie the knot, and that it would be worth planning for a trip to North China some time this year for the purpose. But we heard that the Chandlers, who had been planning the same sort of trip, had moved ahead their plans by months and had already arrived in Peiping by plane, because conditions there were fairly quiet now and there might never be another chance to travel freely in and out if the war situation continued to worsen. So we proposed, and the Foochow folk agreed with us, that we fly north right away and get it over with. We had already made the break from our work and had left Shaowu, and from the standpoint of difficulty of travel the hardest portion of our journey was already behind us. So we telegraphed back to the hospital, requesting a month's extension to our ten-day leave of absence, and after a few days were on our way!

We went from Foochow to Shanghai by boat, a comfortable three-day trip, and then after a minimum wait in Shanghai were able to get reservations north on a new Skymaster plane, which made the trip to Peiping in three and a half hours, in contrast to the only other feasible method of getting there these days—a week's trip by boat. We stayed in Peiping only long enough to arrange for Fran's wedding dress and other essentials, then on to her folk's home in Tientsin by train. The railroad between these two cities passes through Communist No-Man's-Land and used to be cut frequently by night raids, but was peaceful enough while we were there, as were the two cities themselves. But there is scarcely any place out in the country where foreigners are allowed these days or where Mission work can be carried on; and the missionary groups, although they are calm enough about it, know full well that they might have to evacuate suddenly and leave their work at any time.

The Great Event took place at the home in Tientsin on the morning of May 25, and immediately afterwards we headed back for Peiping for a week of honeymooning and sight seeing. Fran, as I said, was born there and had just spent several months there in Language School before coming to Shaowu; so she made an excellent guide to show me the beautiful historic wonders that make Peiping, like Paris, one of the most beautiful and individualistic cities in the world. Of course it was my first glimpse of North China, and of this cultural capital of the country, where the pure Mandarin is spoken even by the coolies on the street and all the traditions and ways of living and atmosphere are just as we had learned in school that they should be. Here again, I could take pages to describe my impressions of the Forbidden City, the Summer Palace, Yenching University, Peking Union Medical College and other hospitals, etc. But I can only pass over it all with the one statement that it was an unforgettable week. Then a second week relaxing at home with my new family, in Tientsin, before we had to head for Shaowu and our duties here again.

Going south, we again went by plane, but this time to Nanking, where we were able to spend a couple of days visiting the Cousin Charlie Riggs' family and seeing the sights of China's Capital and the famous Nanking University. Then through Shanghai again; and this time we elected to try going back by the overland route. Instead of through Foochow and up the river. This gave us a chance to pass through Han-how, said to be the most beautiful city in China, and from there southwest by train to Southern Chekiang, and finally across the beautiful Northern Fukien mountains in a series of one-day hops by bus. This last lap of the trip necessitated stopovers of two and three days here and there, waiting for busses, broken bridges, etc., and we did not finally arrive home until the 25th of June. But we found that the entire North Fukien area had just experienced unusually heavy rains, and that Foochow had been suffering its worst flood in history, so that by our route we were probably lucky to get through as promptly as we did, and if we had gone through Foochow we might still be waiting there.

As it was we got back here just in the nick of time. The anti-climax to this whole business was a siege of some unknown fever which caught me just after I arrived but before I had a chance to do anything toward tackling the pile of duties awaiting me here or writing letters. Fortunately I was very comfortable, and discovered the advantages of having a have been decidedly inconvenient if it had happened along the road somewhere. At any rate, that is the reason for this further delay in writing and my inability to give any idea yet of our future plans or hospital prospects. All that will come next time, and I will try to see to it that the next letter gets sent off more promptly.

Best regards to all.

ED RIGGS.

A short time ago a Salvation Army captain was preaching in Hyde Park, London, when a man in the crowd interrupted him. "We haven't anything agin Jesus of Nazareth," said the interrupter, "but we have something agin you Christians, because you ain't up to sample."—Sunday School Chronicle.

DORCAS, A WOMAN OF GOOD WORKS.

LESSON VIII—AUGUST 22, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: As ye did it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me.—Matthew 25:40.

LESSON Acts 9:36-42; Matthew 25:31-46

DEVOTIONAL READING: Proverbs 31:10-31

God's Strange Hall of Fame.

It seems strange that this woman Dorcas, should have a place in God's Hall of Fame, and should have such a comparatively long obituary notice. She was not an educated woman so far as we know. She did not hold any position in the local church unless she was a deaconess, much less the larger fellowship. There is no record of her doing any public work such as preaching or missionary work. To be sure she must have had a little means, even though she was not rich. And it was not because of her money that she got in this Hall of Fame. But there she is, one of God's chosen ones, her story embedded in the heart of the book of Acts which deals with the world outreach of the Church. An humble woman, without position and preferment, but one whose name was written high in "the Lamb's Book of Life." It was all because she was a woman of large heart, wide sympathies, good works, generous gifts, elemental kindness, and Christ-like spirit. The judgments of God are true and righteous altogether. Man looks at the outward appearance but God looks at the heart. And often with him the last are first and the first are last.

A Woman Full of Good Works and Alms-Deeds.

This woman Dorcas, like her Master, went about doing good. As has been stated above, she may have had some means, perhaps even much means. But she had a compassion on her fellowmen and a passion for service. She was handy with needle and thread. And day and night she sewed, not for profit or publicity, but in order to make garments for the poor and the needy and the underprivileged. Then having made them with her own hands, she delivered them personally, but we may be sure in a quiet and tactful way, without embarrassment to the recipient and perhaps without the knowledge of the general public.

In addition to her products of the needle, she also distributed of her personal means—"the almsdeed which she did," so the record runs. Many a poor person of the city had received help again and again when the wolf was at the door, and when it seemed as if he must come in and make way with everything therein. She was the kind of woman who did not let her right hand know what her left hand was doing. She has her modern representative in a great number of humble woman who are forever doing something for others, whose passion seems to be to do good unto all men, especially those that be of the faith.

A Big Empty Place in the Church.

When this woman fell sick and died there was a big empty place in the church. The folks suddenly realized what a big place she occupied in the life and work of the church. In some ways she was missed more than the leaders of the church. Often such humble, fruitful people are missed more than one would suspect. And this is the case of those whom they have befriended. It seems as if the ground had suddenly been cut from under such people when they realize that their friend has been taken.

Sending for the Preacher.

Instinctively the little group sent for the preacher. It is hardly likely that they dreamed for one moment that Peter could bring this woman back to life again. But they did believe that his presence would be a source of comfort and help to them. It is all so natural and so human. Many a man or woman, indifferent to religion, and rather scornful of the parson when things are going well, almost instinctively sends for him when death enters the home or the family circle. And who is there of us who cannot speak appreciatively of what the presence of the minister has meant in the sick room or in the death chamber when he has ministered comfort and solace to the stricken family circle. Here is one of the minister's finest opportunities to do good and to minister in the name of Christ. And of course the same principle applies to the friendly visit of friends in the time of bereavement.

They need not say much, indeed folks often say too much. But the warm handclasp, the friendly arm on the shoulder, the sympathetic look in the eyes often means more than words, and bring strength and courage to those who sometimes feel as if the world has fallen in on them. "Ask God to give thee skill in comfort's art."

A Happy Ending.

This story has a happy ending, and an unusual ending. Peter, conscious that he was the instrument of the Holy Spirit, and confident in the power of the Holy Spirit, went into the room alone where the body of the good woman lay and prayed earnestly in her behalf. Then in magnificent faith he turned to the body and said in a commanding tone "Tabitha, arise." Immediately the woman opened her eyes, and sat up. Thereupon he took her by the hand and raise her up, and calling the saints and widows, he presented her alive to them. We can readily imagine their inexpressible joy and their unspeakable gratitude. It does not happen this way now, but we can be assured that through Him who is the Resurrection and the Life, even those who are dead shall live again, and those that believe in Him shall never die.

The Big Things.

The "big things" in God's scale are really the little things—a cup of cold water, a piece of bread, a visit to the sick and the shut-in and the prisoner—these are the things that loom large when humanity stands before the Judgment Seat of Christ. Inasmuch as we do it unto the least of these, we do it even unto Christ himself.

When you are in the wrong place, your right place is empty.—Selected.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

—continuous throughout the Council, where people could come and go quietly without any direction save the direction of the Holy Spirit; the Chapel Service each day at noon by the Council Chaplain, Dr. Alfred G. Walton, was another high moment. The business sessions always adjourned in time to give us about eight minutes to get to this worship. As the crowds rushed across the campus in droves toward the First Church, they reminded me of sheep going into the fold. As soon as the church was filled (which was very quickly) the doors were closed and there for thirty minutes all else was shut out except the thought of communing with God.

Sunday morning at 8:30 there were two communion services—one for men in Finney Chapel and one for women in First Church. I shall never forget the wonderful experience of that hour there in the stillness of the morning—in that all-white New England style church, filled with women from all across our land and many from other countries. On the front seat sat twelve deaconesses robed, ready to pass the bread and wine. Among them were a Japanese, Chinese, Hawaiian, a Negro missionary from India. As the chimes of the organ pealed forth "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," we truly felt that "In Christ there is no east or west, in Him no north or south, but one great fellowship of love throughout the whole wide earth."

You women are most interested, of course, in the Sunday evening session of the General Council, which was our session. Mrs. Sarah Murdey of Washington State, our National Chairman, presided with all grace and dignity. Mrs. Fisher, Chairman of the World Day of Prayer Committee (for the whole world), was the speaker and stirred us all. Her address was filled with personal experiences from her recent visit in the Orient. She left a challenge as she showed how to be truly great one must put self in the background and the "larger unit" in the foreground. She showed how mothers do this, how Jesus did it, how all Christians work to this end in home, church, community, and the world. Then Mrs. Murdey gave a dedicatory message and prayer for the Woman's Gift, which for the biennium just closed, came to $144,000, plus. All this, of course, is over and above our regular apportionment giving. The women of the Southern Convention had a very definite part in that gift through our Thank Offerings and Life Membership and Memorial Fund. As the roll of states was called and I stood for the women of the Southern Convention, I felt proud to represent them.

To close the service, Mrs. Murdey and Mrs. Fisher brought light from the altar and lighted the candles of two of the presidents. The light was passed on either side from one president to another until the circle of light around the room was completed—and with this recognition of our world task the service closed.

I thank you for sending me as your representative to the General Council and although I am not able to share or pass on to you adequately the information, the inspiration, and the things that thrilled my soul, I want you to know that because of these experiences I am a better and a bigger person for the job that is mine.

Sincerely,

PATT P. PARIS, Pres.,
Woman's Convention.

NEWS FROM SECRETARIES. MT. CARMEL.

The Women's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Christian Church has had a very successful year in view of the small number enrolled.

We have had all study books reviewed, one public service with Mrs. Monroe (a returned missionary), as guest speaker; and The Sermon on the Mount given by our spiritual life leader.

We joined with the other churches of our community in the World Day of Prayer, and have sent gifts to Japan as our Friendly Service. Also sent a box of clothing to the Christian Orphanage for Easter.

Our society has helped to keep flowers in our church for all worship services; sent cards, flowers, and small gifts to the sick, and many other little deeds of kindness which could help to bring the Kingdom of God on earth.

We feel that our small share of mission work has not been done in vain. We are expecting to meet all requirements, and hoping to do even more in the Master's name next year.

MRS. JOSEPH CARR.

MONTICELLO.

It seems only a few months since Monticello Women's Missionary Society celebrated World Community Day and material is already coming for another.

The attendance at our last Community Day Program was small on account of inclement weather. We invited the Missionary Society of Friendship Methodist Church to join us in this program. After an approprate devotional, a movie, sent us by the New Windsor World Service Center showing conditions in war-torn countries, was shown. A generous collection of money and clothes was contributed by those present and sent to the World Service Center in the name of the two Societies.

Wishing to share our Thank Offering Program with the whole Church, we had it as an opening devotional for our Sunday school. It was an interesting program, and a good collection was contributed for our Superintendent's home.

When we were not able, on account of icy weather to have our World Day of Prayer Program at the appointed time, we asked our Sunday school superintendent to let us use the Sunday school hour for it. He was glad for us to do this. Having it at this time we were not able to join with other denominations, but we had more of our own church members present.

Our May Fellowship meeting was the climax to all of our "special programs. This was held in our Home Demonstration Clubhouse with members of Friendship Methodist Missionary Society and Hine's Chapel Society as our guests. We had a "covered dish" supper followed by a social hour, after which Miss Chicoine, very interestingly reviewed our mission study book.

In our monthly meetings we have followed the programs furnished by our Convention. Our attendance has been good and our members have been interested and cooperative. One thing that has added a great deal to the meetings has been the teaching of our book of devotions by Mrs. M. C. Faucette. She has given a lesson at each meetings.

As the year draws near to its end, we as a society and as individuals are thankful that we have been able to do a small part toward relieving the suffering of some of the victims of war and toward furthering the work of those who are carrying the gospel of Christ "to the uttermost parts of the earth."

read can use them with little difficulty.

The Book of Knowledge is a book to browse in, but is not, like the Century Junior Dictionary, a good reference book. It was originally published in magazine form and it lacks a comprehensive index. However, its pages teem with the interesting and unusual, and children delight in them.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

We have had such splendid rains from Sunday, August 1, to August 5, that it has made us more cheerful. Our corn and lespedeza had reached a stage where they were very much in need of rain. If nothing happens from now on, we are expecting to make the largest corn crop we have ever made on the orphanage farm. We have already cut three crops of alfalfa, and it is ready to cut again. If the seasons continue we hope to get at least five cuttings this year. Our crop of lespedeza is looking fine, too, and we ought to put up several thousand bales if we can have weather to cure it properly.

The two new cottages we are building are nearing completion. One is a five-room cottage and the other is a six-room cottage. They will be real nice homes for those who will live in them. One will be occupied by Mr. Hilliard, our dairyman.

We recently got a load of peaches from the sand hills near Candor, N. C., and canned 424 gallons. All these years we have been using a hand-sealer, and to turn the crank when sealing four or five hundred cans was a man's job. This year we bought an electric sealer, and it works like a charm. Now, you can believe it or not, but after the can is set in place and the top put on, it will seal the top on in four seconds. I tried it a number of times while we were canning. It does the work while you look on. What a labor saver! Our tomatoes are beginning to ripen and it will soon be tomato-canning time. But with the power sealer we do not look at the job as we once did.

All kinds of machinery cost money, even a first-class can opener. But it is necessary to have machinery to make work easier. The time has been when we could get all the help we needed for two dollars a day, and we could do our hard jobs the hard way. But not so now. It is hard to get help at all, and when you do get it, it comes high.

I noticed in reading Charity and Children today, the Baptist Orphanage paper, that up to July 30, the Baptist churches have sent their orphanage in North Carolina the sum of $177,143.98. Our churches have sent the Christian Orphanage the sum of $6,197.02.

We bought a car of stoker coal this week and it cost us $697.76 delivered here, and we unloaded the car and hailed it in. It takes three cars to run us through the winter. Everything we buy is just about as high. Don't forget our goal is $50,000 this year.

I TOOK A LITTLE CHILD.

and we made them glad with a flower. Some were gay on the way to joy and we made their mirth greater from our fragrant supply. We, too, were happy because we were making others happy.

By the time the flowers were gone, we had arrived at the Great Out-of-Doors, where are the busy bees, the beautiful butterflies and all the things that God hath made. The little child wanted to chase the butterflies and so we did. We could not hurt them; they had wings to keep out of our way. He asked questions about all that he saw. Ah, he was filled with questions!

I answered all of his queries that I could. To those for which I had not the answer I replied without shame, "I do not know but let us go forth and find the answer."

We inquired into all that we saw and together we found many new things. He learned much and I learned more.

There was the tree with the bird singing in its branches. "What does that bird say?" asked the Little Child.

"The bird is your Heavenly Father's bird," said I. "It sings a song of His great love."

We sat down in the shade of the tree, God's good tree, and I told him as best I could what God was saying to a little child in the voice of the bird.

Suddenly, as though he had almost forgotten where we were going, the Little Child said, "The Heavenly Father is good, isn't He?"

"Yes, He is good," I agreed.

"Could we go and see Him now?"

"Yes, if you are ready, we can go."

We started again but had to cross the Little Stream.

"Could we take off our sandals and cool our feet? I'm very warm," the Little Child exclaimed.

"Yes, if you like."

As we cooled our feet in the soothing stream he spoke again. "Whose stream is this, where does it come from and where does it go?"

"This is your Heavenly Father's stream," I explained. "It comes from the high places and goes to the low and joins hands with other streams which also belong to your Heavenly Father who forms of them the Great River which carries the burdens of men out to sea."

Then, as he reached for his sandals, he said again, "The Heavenly Father is good, isn't he? Can we go see Him now?"

"Yes, if you are ready."

Across the fields we went until we came to the Garden of the Lord. It was the cool of the day, the season of the soul of a little child. Already the Father walked in the Garden.

I would introduce the Little Child to his Heavenly Father but it was not necessary for the child had met Him as we had lived our lives in His world along the way.

A lady was being shown through a corn-mill, worked by a river which ran close by the walls. But all the wheels were in silent inaction. "Where is the power?" she asked. She was shown a handle, and told to press upon it. She did, and the mighty force was instantly turned on, the wheels moved, and the place was alive with activity. The power of God moves in upon us at the touch of faith.—Methodist Times.

In Memoriam

BRINKLEY

Miss Julia A. Brinkley, daughter of the late Joel H. and Mary Alice Darden Brinkley, died July 25, 1948, at her home in Suffolk, Va., after a sudden heart attack. Although she had not been quite up to her usual health and strength she was very actively engaged in her daily duties. She is survived by one sister, Mrs. Ralph Artman, 222 Cedar St., with whom she made her home; two nieces, Mrs. Wallace H. Walton and Miss Virginia Brinkley; two nephews, Jack Artman of Suffolk, and Col. R. Townsend Artman of Washington, D. C.; a great niece and four great nephews.

Miss Brinkley had served for a number of years on the music committee of the Suffolk Christian Church, and since Col. J. E. West's death had been chairman of the committee. This is one of the major committees of the church, which committee had just finished within the week the rebuilding of the church organ and as chairman of the committee she had just given it her approval. For many years she had been assistant teacher of the Philathea Class and held that position at the time of her death. She was actively engaged in several other organizations of the church in positions of leadership and responsibility. Everything she did well. She was connected with several organizations in the city, and had been employed as bookkeeper at Benthall Machine Company for many years.

Funeral services were conducted in the church which she had served faithfully and well. Appropriately a large church choir sang the hymns she loved, under the leadership of the choir director and organist employed by her committee. The services, conducted by the writer, were largely attended by people from all walks of life in the community; and the beautiful floral offerings were fitting symbols of the unselfishness of her service and the saintliness of her life. May God's blessing be upon her many friends and loved ones left behind.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

DARDEN.

Whereas, God has, in his infinite love, seen fit to call to his reward, our beloved sister and co-worker, Mrs. Lillian Edwards Darden, and we, as a church and individuals desire to record our appreciation and sorrow in our loss.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the Isle of Wight Christian Church, of which she was a member, has lost one for whom they mourn.

2. That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and earnest prayers, that God's blessing may fall upon their sad hearts and give them comfort.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent the bereaved family, a copy spread upon the church records, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

FRANKLIN YOUNG PEOPLE.

During the year we have sent cards and boxes to the sick people of our church. Also this spring we had a most enjoyable hay ride and weiner roast given to us by our leader, Mrs. T. Hayes Holland.

We were very much honored when we were asked to lead the devotionals at the Spring Eastern Virginia Conference of Pilgrim Fellowship, which was held in Suffolk, Va. It was a pleasure to us all in doing this. However, we would like to know where the young people of Eastern Virginia were.

We are now discussing, and hope some of our members can go to Camp Hanes. Those who went last year enjoyed it so much.

Although we meet only once a month, we have accomplished very much and are hoping that next year we will have as much success as we have had in this one.

Secretary.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS IN FORSYTH COUNTY.

Not many Congregational Christian Churches in Forsyth County, N. C., but all have been busy in Vacation Bible Schools. During June and July each church had one.

Summary Statistics are as follows:

School	Enrolled	Teachers &
		Helpers
Winston-Salem	18	6
Pfafftown	22	6
Belews Creek	26	6
Salem Chapel	63	10

The Salem Chapel school was held jointly with Fulp Moravian Church, one week at each church with faculty and students continuing throughout the time. The Moravians furnished one Provincial Worker, Walser Allen, Jr., and Helen Jackson was the Congregational Christian Board Worker. Both pastors worked cooperatively in the school. This was a fine example of denominations working together.

Helen Jackson of our Winston-Salem Church also worked in each of the other schools and did a very fine work. Many thanks to all of the teachers and leaders who have made these schools possible.

The Salem Chapel Church also had a revival along with the Bible School. Rev. Victor Murchison of the Friends Church in Winston-Salem did the preaching and some fine results were forthcoming.

Belew Creek also had their revival the same week of the Bible School. It was a great joy to be with these fine folk.

YOUNG ADULT SUMMER CAMP HAS BEEN CANCELLED.

We regret that we (the Evangelical and Reformed Camp Committee and the Congregational Christian Southern Convention Camp Committee) had to take this step, but with the polio situation as it is in North Carolina, we felt that it was best to cancel this joint camp, to have been held August 8-14, at Johns River Camp, North Carolina.

We are returning advance fees that you sent to us.

Will you please announce this in your churches and in your Sunday Schools?

we had a landslide due to the fact that the church doors hadn't been opened in about four years. Then, too, a number of our residents have returned from defense work and service in the armed forces, but the majority of these were people who were regular attenders of our church and Sunday school. . . ."

We are very glad to learn of projects that churches are sponsoring, such as this membership drive. We should have more news of this type in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, because we can help other churches by sharing our ideas that prove to be beneficial to our church. Let us hear from you if you have some news that you would like to share with other churches.

The God from Whom We Flee

By STANLEY U. NORTH, Chaplain

1948 Annual Meeting, Home Missions Council of North America

The classic example of flight from God is Jonah: "I fled unto Tarshish, for I knew that Thou art a gracious God and merciful, slow of anger and of great kindness, and repentest Thee of the evil." (Jonah 4:2b.)

One wonders why Jonah should have desired to flee from such a God. Here was a God who at long last was universal. Here was no tribal deity—petty, jealous, vindictive capricious. Here was a God who knew the meaning of mercy, whose heart encompassed all humanity, and who judged his children not on the basis of nationality or any other superficial distinguishing mark but on spirit and deportment. Here was a God who had a New Testament quality about Him. I can well imagine that Jesus read these words of Jonah over and over again and was influenced not a little by them.

Now, mark you, Jonah was a good man. He was respected by his neighbors and feared by his enemies. He believed in the worship of God. He was faithful in his religious practices. But Jonah was also a realist. Nineveh was a threat to national security. Furthermore, the people of Nineveh worshipped a god with a strange name and with rituals that were quite different from those of Hebrew usage. And after all the Hebrews were the chosen people. Theirs was the true church. Their form of worship was the correct ritual. Why bother with the Ninevites? If their ignorance had led them astray, then let them be destroyed and the sooner the better.

Jonah, however, had serious misgivings. In spite of himself he had acquired some significant insights. He knew that God was a gracious God and of great kindness. And such being the case he was convinced that should the people of Nineveh repent, although their form of church government was unscriptural, their creed, if they had one, had no authority of a council or an assembly, and their ritual had no canonical basis, God would forgive them and withhold his heavy hand of destruction. And so Jonah fled in the direction of Tarshish instead of proceeding to Nineveh as commanded by God.

How foolish Jonah was, as if one could escape from God. Let us take warning, for we, too, flee from a God who is gracious and merciful, slow of anger and of great kindness, who has a concern for all the races of the earth, and not for one above another, who delights not in our disunity, who abhors the degradation which we visit upon races of color; who finds our segregated worship uncongenial; who is saddened to the degree that we, who profess to be His spokesmen, remain silent midst the inequities and injustices of our society; who hates war, with its brutality, its slavery, its wanton waste, and who, despite of all our prayers, has not the least part in it.

Here we are in a world that faces destruction. We have no misgivings about the reality of God. We know in our hearts that God is good and loving and forgiving; but the God we worship is so often a tribal God, he's a national God; he's a white man's God; he's a sectarian God.

We even lack the Nineveh quality. For we don't put on sackcloth and ashes, and we don't repent. We remain separated. We remain segregated. We have a magnificent vocabulary: stewardship, survey, research, comity, cooperation, ecumenicity. We have no misgivings as to God's will. Our deficiency is in the realm of practice.

If we believe, as we so glibly declare, that the Bible is a sufficient rule both for faith and practice, we shall do well to ponder over the book of Jonah, lest we awaken to the fact that we, in spite of our piety, are lost, while Nineveh, having repented, is saved.

SANFORD FELLOWSHIP GIVES BULLETIN BOARD

Billy Watson, chairman of a young people's committee, is shown examining a bulletin board purchased by the Youth Fellowship and recently installed in front of the Congregational Christian Church, on McIver Street, Sanford, N. C. The fellowship, which has about twenty members, began work on the project last November. The board cost about $125.00. It is lighted at night by concealed electric bulbs and the fellowship plans to buy a time switch that will turn the lights on and off automatically at a certain hour.

News Flashes

Rev. J. Everett Neese is supplying for Dr. John G. Truitt this month.

Dr. W. L. Bristow of Norfolk will supply our Richmond pulpit Sunday.

Dr. and Mrs. W. B. O'Neill of Holland, Va., are spending their vacation in Canada.

Rev. D. P. Barrett of Chapel Hill worshipped with our Newport News congregation last Sunday.

Mr. M. A. Carson, lay preacher of Norfolk, will supply at Bay View this Sunday and at Richmond next Sunday.

Rosemont, Norfolk, observed its forty-sixth anniversary on Sunday by raising a substantial amount on its building fund.

Rev. Luther B. Grice preached his first sermon as pastor at the Holy Neck Christian Church on Sunday, August 15, and he and Mrs. Grice transferred their membership to the church at this time.

Dr. and Mrs. John G. Truitt were visitors at the office of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for a short while Monday morning of this week, enroute to the Bible Conference at Massanetta Springs, near Harrisonburg, Va.

The editor left on Wednesday of this week for the Massanetta Springs Bible Conference, to be present for Congregational Christian-Evangelical and Reformed Day. He expects to stay for the rest of the week.

Virginia's 54th Annual Christian Endeavor Convention will be held at Massanetta Springs, August 23-27. Plans have been completed for a convention that will "enhance the work of Christian Endeavor by a bigger and better array of leadership," according to an announcement in the latest issue of the Endeavorgram.

The editorial, "Miss Daisy Nurney," which is reprinted from the Suffolk News-Herald in this issue was sent in by Dr. John G. Truitt. While Miss Nurney may not have been well known in many parts of the Southern Convention, we feel that her many friends and acquaintances in the Eastern Virginia Conference will be glad to see this recognition of her worth. —Mg. HAPPY HOME CHURCH NEWS.

Happy Home has just closed a most successful revival under the forceful gospel messages of Rev. Thurman F. Bowers, pastor of the church. Seventeen persons united with the church—thirteen on confession and four by transfer of letter, making a total of twenty-one additions to the church for the year. The Daily Vacation Bible School had progressed into the second week with an enrollment of more than a hundred when it had to be closed by the County Health Board because of the serious poliomyelitis epidemic in the section. Miss Ruth Gunn is a patient at the Polio Hospital, Camp Sutton, Monroe, N. C. The new parsonage is nearly completed and will be occupied by the minister as soon as the painting is completed.

Church Secretary.

MINUTES OF THE EASTERN VIRGINIA S. S. CONVENTION.

The 79th annual session of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention met at the Holy Neck Church on Tuesday, July 20, 1948. The morning session was called to order by the president, Mr. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., and the song service was conducted by Mr. W. H. Baker, secretary of the convention.

Mr. Harry Lee Weaver, superintendent of the Holy Neck Sunday School gave the welcome address and Mr. Edward Johnson, superintendent of the Bethlehem Sunday school, gave the response.

The morning worship service was conducted by the young people of the Holy Neck Christian Church.

The annual report of the secretary was then given and in the absence of the treasurer her report was given by the secretary. A motion that the treasurer's report be turned over to the Finance Committee. Motion seconded and carried.

Dr. William T. Scott of Elon College then addressed the convention. His subject was: "Live Christ—Teach Christ." Miss Eloise Holland of the Holland Christian Church sang a solo. Miss Mary Elizabeth Burton of the Suffolk Church spoke on "What a Young Person Would Like in Sunday School." Mrs. W. T. Harrell of the Liberty Spring Church spoke on "What a Teacher Would Like in Sunday School" and Rev. Peter Young, pastor of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, spoke on "What a Minister Would Like in Sunday School."

The worship service was conducted by Rev. W. L. Wood, pastor of the Damascus Church.

The convention adjourned and was served a most delightful country dinner by the ladies of the Holy Neck Church.

The afternoon session was called to order by the president and song service was conducted by Mr. W. H. Baker. Invocation was given by Dr. I. W. Johnson.

A discussion session was conducted by Dr. H. S. Harcastle, pastor of the Newport News First Congregational Christian Church, on the subject: "Sunday School and Recreation."

Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor of the South Norfolk Church, sang a solo.

Dr. John L. Gwyn, pastor of the First Church, Norfolk, addressed the convention on the subject, "Your Sunday School and Its Future."

A motion was made by Dr. I. W. Johnson that the secretary have printed the minutes of the convention and that same be distributed to all schools in the convention. Seconded by Dr. N. G. Newman. The vote showed 22 for—24 against. The motion was lost. It was suggested that a copy of the minutes be sent to Editor Robert Lee House and that they be printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Rev. Robert Lee House, chairman of the Resolutions Committee, gave the following report:

In addition to the many achievements of the Holy Neck Church, spread across two centuries, be it hereby recorded that the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention was entertained here on Tuesday, July 20 in due and ancient form. We are pleased to report that hospitality is unabated and food is undiminished with the passing of the centuries. Indeed, we have been feted exceeding abundantly above all we could ask or think.

It is recorded that an ancient prophet went for 40 days on the strength of a meal. One is prompted to exclaim, What a prophet! What a meal! Furthermore, how far could he go were he to repast at Holy Neck on this occasion? Surely those of us who have been so generously favored should do more than go to sleep, we should cover many spiritual miles and creative hours in the strength of this day.

Be it resolved that we record our thanks to all who have provided the pedagogical, theological, and gustatorial delights of this Convention. We are particularly indebted to the officers and speakers, as well as to the host church. We suggest further that it would be appropriate for all who are able to stand, (after that dinner) to struggle to their feet and manifest our unanimous sentiments by a rising vote.

Ere long, we shall be returning to our respective Sunday schools. If we have been recreant to our duty, spasmodic in our efforts, dilatory in our attendance, let us bring forth works meet for repentance. A year of grace lies ahead. By God's grace we may help make it a year of worship, a year of study, a year of stewardship, a year of

In a Land of Tension

By REV. EDWARD J. VORBA, Minister
Congregational Church, Bradford, Vermont

Last January in Central Hall, Westminster, London, Dr. W. A. Visser t'Hooft, the Dutch executive secretary of the World Council of Churches, told the British Student Christian Movement that the Christian Church must not side with either Russia or the West but must be responsible for people on both sides of the Iron Curtain. It was in that spirit that I accepted the invitation of the Executive Council of the Czech Unity Church to be their guest this summer. A happy and sobering week was spent in early July in the land of my ancestors visiting our Congregational counterpart in the now mysterious Czechoslovakia.

Rarely have I seen such hospitality. They took me into their churches and homes as one of their own. The Council arranged a splendid itinerary under the leadership of the Rev. Franticek Zdychynec, pastor of Prague's Soukenicka Church and the Czech representative in our International Council. Mr. Alois Hodek, a layman, graciously acted as my guide and interpreter. In addition they showed me the historic sites in Prague, the Sokol Festival, the Masaryks, Yarny Castle, Lidice and other well known spots.

There was no restriction on my freedom. I spoke publicly and preached three times in Prague on Sunday. My only danger was the open discussion of politics which I avoided. The church leaders privately expressed their frank opinions.

In the Czech Unity Church I found a very alive, if somewhat pious, people. Founded in 1880 there are now 7,100 members in 39 churches which maintain 230 preaching stations. One half of these churches are self-supporting. There are 30 ministers with nine students in training. The churches were filed wherever I went. There are several new churches on the borders once occupied by the Germans.

Laymen are most active in our Czech churches. They care for the preaching stations, and those are often covered on foot. Street preaching is carried on entirely by them. This is done every Sunday afternoon in Prague.

One of the smaller groups, our churches have a real influence. For instance, eighty-year-old President Franticek Urbanek of the Executive Council was an adviser to President Thomas S. Masaryk of the Republic, and he officiated at the funerals of Masaryk's entire family, including that recently of Jan Masaryk.

The ministers are well educated, receiving their training at their own school or at the John Huss Theological Seminary in Prague. Each young man is urged to study a year where English is spoken although that is practically impossible now. Mr. Zdychynec studied at Edinburg. The Rev. Bohoslav Benes of Zizkov, our largest church in Prague, studied at Glasgow, and the pastor of the church in industrial Kladno spent time in Sweden.

Church membership is stringent. There are three classes—waiters, the preparatory stage and full members. It takes as much as a year or more to move through these classes, and one does so under exacting scrutiny. It means something to be a Congregationalist there!

Of course, these churches have suffered much. Their members are sincerely appreciative of the help from our own churches, and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and its early missionaries in Czechoslovakia are held in highest esteem. Congregationalism and the American Board are nearly synonymous to them!

The church funds come from the people themselves, and money is very scarce now. The average salary of a minister in Czech crowns is about $60 a month as compared with over $100 for workmen. Help has come from the World Council of Churches for bombed churches ruined or damaged by our own airmen. Yet those

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

ALTERNATIVE OR SUPPLEMENT TO BIBLE SCHOOL

Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of the results of their Bible Schools, it seemed good to me also to write, most excellent Theophilus, concerning our vacation school.

We called it a choir school, and it was designed for juniors and intermediates. There were two-hour periods daily with a half hour intermission during which two mothers assigned for the day served refreshments. The week afforded an opportunity for concentrated effort on the basic elements in church music.

The school was projected on the assumption that in order to create a vocally competent congregation people must be properly trained in music from childhood; that the church should recognize and utilize the elemental vocal ability which we find in the child, the child who is able to laugh, and cry and scream all day long—and often all night long—with no ill effect; that vocal tone refinement is as important as the refinement of manners; that music and song are the language of the spirit realm and are therefore the birthright of every child of God. Too many of our youngsters are entertained commercially. Their emotions are stirred by the detective story, the ganster radio play, the sex novel or movie. But to have been stirred by the mysterious potency of great compositions, to have known the joy of choral participation, to carry through life the memory of themes performed, to know the fellowship of a musical fraternity—surely we should desire and promote such experiences as these for all young people. This, it would seem, is a way to keep young people in the main stream of vital religion.

Instruction included admonitions for the boys to temper the intensity of their utterances at play and in conversation, the study of hymn writers and hymn tunes, vocal exercises, musical memory tests, directed listening to recordings of children's voices, the Biblical background for the great hymns of the church, facility in using the hymnal, ideals for church choirs, and guidance in the making of musical scrap books.

There is a great need for this kind of basic training throughout Protestantism. The vast musical heritage of the ages cannot rest on the Procrustean foundation of the average church. Many Christian people pass through life without the most elemental knowledge of music and hymnology. Through painstaking and persistent effort the melodic desert may be made to blossom as a rose.

The Junior Choir School may be offered as an alternative or supplement to the Bible School. Why not utilize and capitalize some of these precious weeks during the summer? Here is Protestantism's opportunity to approximate some of the benefits realized in parochial schools. Here is week-day religious education at its best, its uncontested best! There is no law against this type of instruction, except that of inertia. Claude E. Johnson in his "Training of Boys' Choirs" says that "Mastery of this training is easily attainable by any painstaking teacher who has a good musical ear, a ear knowledge of music and the necessary patience. The training of children's voices, however, constitutes a department of voice culture for which some special preparation is required."

Can Protestantism discharge its responsibility to its children by holding one or two weeks of Daily Vacation Bible School? Our churches should develop a series of schools or course in order to compensate for the inadequate training received in our regular Sunday schools. True, some children go away for the summer, but the number is usually balanced by those who are visiting in the community. This, it would seem, is in line with St. Paul's dictum: "Redeem the time; for the days are evil."

REPORT TO PROTESTANTS.

Decisions of the World Assembly of Churches in Amsterdam will lose meaning unless the spirit of unity filters down to the people in the pews, in the opinion of Dr. Marcus Bach, professor of religion in the State University of Iowa, and author of the forthcoming book, "Report to Protestants," published on August 16 by Bobbs-Merrill.

Dr. Bach believes responsibility for strengthening Protestantism is twofold. In "Report to Protestants" he writes: "At the top, ecumenical leaders must plan the strategy to conquer a growing secularism and to bring God's design into a disordered universe; on the parish level, the individual Protestant must embark on the high adventure of an unlimited personal faith."

The personal religious life must come first in any Protestant plan to meet these challenges, Dr. Bach believes. He writes: "If the leaders of the World Assembly fail to challenge the individual to demonstrate the great potential within himself, they will declare unity with their lips but retain plurality in their mission. The essential attribute of ecumenicalism rest with the man and woman in the pew."

DO ALL YOUR IN-LAWS READ THE SUN?

True, this is not Christmas, but one of our subscribers sent in a gift subscription last week. Now his brother-in-law in another state will be receiving our publication regularly for twelve months. No, it is not necessary for you to wait until Christmas to send a gift subscription or subscriptions. Brief reflection will suggest a number of relatives and friends who would enjoy the weekly visit of our church paper. Think what a host of in-laws we have! Some people criticize their in-laws, others do good to them.

Explore the possibilities in your own family circle, then let that be a point of departure for advancing the cause of Christian publication.

THIS LIFE ETERNAL.

A Sermon

By REV. W. W. SLOAN, Ph. D.
Elon College, N. C.

In sharp contrast to the indecision of the Christian message so often heard today the message of Jesus the Master Teacher rings out with clarion boldness. There was no vagueness, no indefiniteness regarding his mission, his life purpose in the mind of Jesus. From time to time he put this purpose into a concise statement: "I came that they may have life and may have it abundantly"—to bring richness, completeness, wholeness to life. "The Son of Man came to seek and save that which was lost"—to bring eternal spiritual health to mankind.

As Jesus was about to go out from the scene of his last supper with his closest friends to the Garden of Gethsemane, to his arrest, to his execution, we find him reiterating his purpose of bringing to others eternal life, and then in the third verse of the seventeenth chapter of John we have our Lord's own definition of eternal life, "This is life eternal that they should know thee the only true God and him whom thou didst send, even Jesus Christ."

What did Jesus mean by knowing God and knowing him? Did he mean knowing of their existence, having met them? We have not forgotten that great leader of India, Dr. M. K. Gandhi, known as the Mahatma. Pictures and stories about him continue to appear in our magazines. But we can scarcely say we know him, regardless of how many facts we know about him. A few years ago Mrs. Sloan and I had a rare privilege. Through the kindness of the general secretary of the Indian Christian Student Association we were invited to be guests of Dr. Gandhi. We visited him in the little one-room mud-brick house he called home. For some time we asked him questions, learned from his own lips of his work for which he found his inspiration in Jesus' Sermon on the Mount. Should we say we knew Mahatma Gandhi? I don't think so.

If to know about God and his divine son in this way is eternal life, then eternal life does not amount to much, for the scribes and Pharisees of Jesus' day knew about God—that was their profession. Yet their lives left much to be desired. They met Jesus and talked with him time and again. It was great sport to trip up the carpenter teacher—there was only one trouble—he always beat them at their own game; he had all the answers. Yes, they knew much about God, they had met Jesus, but if what the scribes and Pharisees had was the eternal, abundant, wholesome life Jesus sought for all men, then, no thank you, I'll take some other religion.

We have no trouble discovering many people today who consider themselves followers of the Christ who have never grasped Jesus' concept of eternal life—to them the term applies only to a state of bliss to be enjoyed by those who have got religion and after physical death will dwell in a very limited place with a small number of their fellow-fortunates, the elect of God.

One evening a number of years ago as I stood at the side of the building in which my church worshipped, a young stranger with a Bible under his arm accosted me with a query as to whether or not I was saved. I asked him what he meant by saved. It developed that his only concept of the word was escape from a hell of fire and brimstone. He assured me he was saved, but I soon found he had a small brother, a mother and an aged grandfather dependent upon him for support. All they had to eat was some cull potatoes and a few small discarded apples some one had given them. This was during the depression. When I told the young man I might be able to get him a job he was not interested, saying that God had saved him and God would see that he had something to eat. I tried to enable him to have a more Christ-like outlook, but I am not sure I succeeded, for as he left he yelled over his shoulder, "Call upon the name of the Lord and thou shalt be saved." He was trying to hitchhike his way to heaven and wanted me to thumb a ride with him.

I am not particularly interested in such a limited salvation. The one I call my Lord and Master has something far better, grander, more interesting to offer, something other leaders would like to give their followers, something which in a minor, unsatisfactory way other religious and even political leaders have secured for those who give them their allegiance. Mohammed gave his followers a larger concept of life. Buddha brought to millions in India and later in China and Japan a satisfaction in life they had never before experienced. Even dictators have brought some help to their people, but their aims are mediocre as compared with the aims of the Christ.

What was Jesus' aim? What did he mean when he said, "This is life eternal, that they should know thee the only true God and him whom thou didst send"?

Evidently we should know God in a way different from that in which the scribes and Pharisees knew him. Studying theology, reciting the historic creeds of the church, expounding the great doctrines regarding God that religion has held, do not assure our knowing God as Jesus would have us know him. It was not for these things that Jesus lived, suffered ignominy and allowed himself to be lynched on the cross. Jesus didn't teach theology. Rather he showed people by his own life what God is like. He helped people get acquainted with God. He introduced them to God, taught them how they might not only talk to God but talk with God. Jesus' long periods of prayer with his Heavenly Father were so influential in his life that one who knew him well, a man who doubtless had said prayers from his childhood up, came to the Master with the request, "Lord, teach us to pray."

Jesus so reflected his Heavenly Father in his own life that in many ways we have come to think of Jesus and his Father as synonymous. Yet an experience approaching his is not beyond our reach. In that prayer in the seventeenth chapter of John he said, "The glory which thou hast given me I have given unto them." We, too, can know God through intimate association with him. We can come to realize we are related to the eternal power which is behind and permeates the whole universe. Paul said, "We are co-workers with God." We get acquainted with those with whom we work. Two women working in the same kitchen, two men working together in a field, two students studying together learn to know one another. By working with God we come to know God. In really knowing him we discover we are in line with the motivating power of all life, we are going the direction God is going. To be out of step with God, to be out of accord with him, to be going a different way, to be separated from God is hell. Don't let any one persuade you there is no hell. There is. It's a bigger thing than many of our forefathers thought, for like the eternal life of which Jesus talked it exists not only

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Second Sunday morning in August I worshipped in the new church in Asheboro, North Carolina, where the Lesters and a loyal and devoted membership are doing a marvelous work. Their church building is much larger and much better than I thought possible, although not yet completed. It is located in a lovely section of the city where there are beautiful homes, and vacant lots for further growth, and yet close enough to the center of town. I was impressed with its location—a corner position on two nice streets—and I was greatly impressed with the comparative size of the congregation and the liberality of their offerings. With a membership of 62 they gave last year for conference apportionments $216, Shaowu $25.00, Church Extension $15.00, Woman's Missionary Conference $102.00, other Missions and Benevolences $137.00—a total of $495.00. Their Sunday school enrollment is nearly twice as large as their church membership. We heard such talk in the afternoon, "We cannot buy this or that which we badly need in our home until we get that church paid for." The church is a big and definite program in their homes. They are to be congratulated on their opportunity and their acceptance of same.

On our way to Asheboro Mrs. Truitt and I visited in the home of the Scotts at Elon, and I spent several hours in the Convention Office talking about Convention matters. Any house in which a lovely Christian family lives looks good because the idealism and sense of the rightness of things overcome many physical handicaps. Which goes for Dr. and Mrs. Scott, and Bill, Jr., and Lois, hence I almost forgot to take notice of the cramped quarters. Then besides I saw again the Rev. and Mrs. Victor A. Chicoine, who were there for the homeward trip of their daughter, Miss Elizabeth, who after two years of faithful work in the Southern Convention is returning to Massachusetts for a teaching position near home. We were delighted with the progress being made on the new home for the Superintendent and the prospects of their being in it sometime in the early autumn.

We were distressed to learn upon inquiry for the Smiths at Elon that Dr. and Mrs. Smith were both in the hospital, but were glad that they were reported improving. They have given and are giving their best for Elon College, and our entire constituency will be in earnest prayer for their speedy and complete recovery. Their devotion to their church and to the Christ is an inspiration to us all and may it be that their detention in hospital may serve to give them needed rest and renewed strength.

Also on this trip we visited again my old home. We saw the little white church. The old school house, the old roads, and many of the old homes had given place to the new day, but the song of the birds was as ever, and the hills and woods were as of yore, and the appreciation of a Christian home and industrious parents increases with the increasing years. It makes one wish one's own life might be some real blessing to others.

MISS DAISY NURNEY.

The inexorable toll of advancing years yesterday deprived our community of the services, judgment and inspiration of a woman who in forty years of indefatigable effort to her newspaper and city had become an institution. In the death of Miss Daisy Nurney, Suffolk, and the Tidewater area, which she knew so well, has lost a great friend and champion.

For thirty-six years Miss Nurney represented the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot in this area. She was giving Suffolk good news coverage years before this paper had entered into the daily field. She served exceedingly well, and no one knows it any better than we who follow the same profession.

Suffolk was fortunate that for more than a third of a century it benefitted through the unstinting service of Miss Nurney. She was a woman of remarkable talents, great energy, and zeal for her profession. Her talents and drive might have carried her to a high position on any newspaper in the United State. She chose to stay in a small city, in a branch office job, out of love for her community and its people. She stayed in Suffolk not through any paucity of ability, since she was clever enough to know that she could work on any newspaper in the country.

We often marvelled at her energy and untiring application to her work. From early in the morning until late at night she was on the job. Her news morning until late at night Miss Nurney was on the job. Her news coverage of the community was more than would normally be expected of any one person and in addition to that work she handled a sizeable volume of advertising. Officials of the Virginian-Pilot said yesterday that it would take at least two and possibly three people to do her work.

She was undoubtedly one of the most influential people in the community through her wide acquaintance and knowledge of people. Through her work she had been intimately familiar with city and county government and the economic and social growth of the area through four decades.

We held her in the highest esteem both professionally and personally. She was an extremely capable woman who applied herself to her work with such intelligence and vigor as to arouse admiration in anyone who has more than a cursory interest in newspaper work.

It is sad that she could not have spent the seven months of her last illness in the city she loved so well. Miss Nurney realized that her condition was growing worse and wanted to return to her home town.

In a letter written to this newspaper last Wednesday she said, "I wish I could tell you I was better and might soon be home. But such is not the case. I have gone steadily back for weeks now, and the heart ailment does not improve.

"I want to come home and go back to the Virginian Hospital when I can make the trip. I can at least look at Suffolk again." Such were her sentiments within a week of her death.

Suffolk should not allow the memory of Miss Daisy to fade and be forgotten. Perhaps in some fitting fashion it will be possible to memorialize the fine life of this admirable woman. —Editorial in Suffolk News-Herald.

NOTICE TO GREENSBORO AND WINCHESTER SUBSCRIBERS.

It will be greatly appreciated if subscribers in Greensboro, who do not regularly save their copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, will see that when they have finished with it their August 12 issue goes to Mrs. Thelma Clymer Pye, 303 Aberdeen Street. Mrs. Pye is quite anxious for some extra copies of this issue, which carries a write-up and the picture of her mother, the late Mrs. L. M. Clymer, and we are unable to supply them.

Mr. Roy A. Larriek of Winchester also desires several extra copies of the same issue, and we are asking Winchester subscribers if they will favor him. His address is 367 East Piccadilly Street.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FUND.

By vote of the conferences and official action of the Southern Convention the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund for Christian Education in Elon College was duly authorized and the College was directed to appeal to the churches for $100,000 with which to establish this memorial. Each church was given a definite quota amounting to ten times its conference apportionment for the College as of 1943. A great many of our churches responded and generously. To date, we have a total of $76,761.32 in this fund, leaving a balance of $23,238.68 to be raised before November.

The College has advanced the full amount of $100,000 necessary for completing the foundation and to make possible an enlarged curriculum which has been in operation since September, 1947. We now have two full-time professors and one part-time professor in the Department of Christian Education. They are good ones. Dr. Ferris Reynolds heads the department. Dr. Reynolds is a graduate of Butler University, Indianapolis, Indiana; Hartford Seminary, Connecticut; and the University of Edinburgh, Edinburgh, Scotland. While at Edinburgh he earned his Ph.D. degree in philosophy and religion. Dr. W. W. Sloan is professor of Christian Education in the department. Dr. Sloan is a graduate of Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois, where he earned his Ph.D. degree. Dr. D. J. Bowden is a graduate of Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Blacksburg, Virginia and of Yale Divinity School, New Haven, Connecticut. By the latter he was awarded his Ph.D. degree in philosophy and religion. Dr. Bowden teaches only part-time. He serves as dean of the College. Dr. Reynolds, in addition to teaching a regular schedule, serves as pastor of Old Providence Church, Graham, N. C. Dr. Sloan is pastor of Shallow Ford Christian Church, near the College. These additional responsibilities give the professors of the Christian Education Department rich, practical experiences and a wider sphere of influence.

The College has drawn on its undesignated funds to complete the Foundation for Christian Education that the curriculum and faculty for the department might be increased. We are now in need of funds very badly. The power house is about complete. Fires were built in the furnaces last Tuesday. The contractors are calling for final payment. Payments on local churches' pledges or quotas would be of real assistance and greatly appreciated.

At the recent session of the Southern Convention it was voted that the churches complete this campaign as quickly as possible that the College might have the money and that the campaign might be out of the way, making room for other causes. A dead-line was set. There are to be no other appeals for the fund after the fifth Sunday in October. Every church in the Convention not having its quota before that date is requested by the Convention to make a special effort on that date to secure in cash or pledges, or both the full amount of the quota assigned. Of course, all pledges to this fund not paid by the fifth of October will remain a bona fide obligation and expected to be paid as quickly as possible. The failure to pay before that date will not relieve any church of its obligation. The campaign, though drawn out a bit, has been a great success and in addition to establishing a fitting memorial to three of our great leaders will mean richer opportunities for our young people and will be a constant benediction to our entire church. Our churches are to be congratulated for their interest, efforts, and contributions in behalf of this worthy cause.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

If our churches and Sunday schools of the Convention think of the College as often and as seriously as the College thinks of them, there would be no difficulty about continuous, adequate financial support. Information and interest go a long ways toward determining financial contributions for the support of anything. It is the purpose of the College to see that our churches and Sunday schools have vital information concerning its program, service, and needs. They already know of the critical financial needs, but information may be lacking.

We would not give the impression that our only need is financial. The College sorely needs your interest and efforts in your local church. You have fine young people who are some day going to college. These young people belong to our church. The College belongs to our church. The College is prepared to meet their needs and is anxious for the opportunity. Speak to these young people about the College that they may understand something of the advantages it offers.

We also need your witness. Whenever you have opportunity to speak of the College, we hope you will speak well of it. In your devotions remember the College. It belongs to the church and it is endeavoring to serve the cause of Christ as earnestly and as efficiently as the churches themselves are. Together we should build an institution such as we would like and support it as it should be. The College is always grateful for the help and cooperation of its constituency.

of progress. Let us here and now resolve to make it so in our own Sunday school.

The Time and Place Committee gave its report. Oakland Christian Church invited the convention next year. The committee recommended that we accept the invitation. Seconded and carried. The convention to meet the Tuesday after the third Sunday in July, 1949, at the Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Va.

The Finance Committee gave its report. Found to be correct and reported that $834.95 had been collected so far. Motion that report be accepted with the amount to be given to the Board of Christian Education be $700.00 instead of $600.00. Seconded and carried.

The report of the Nomination Committee follows:

President—Mr. Mills E. Godwin, Jr.
Vice-President—Rev. W. L. Wood.
Secretary—Mr. W. H. Baker.
Treasurer—Miss Mary Lee Folk.

The closing worship service was conducted by Dr. Will B. O'Neill, pastor of the Holland Christian Church. The benediction was given by Dr. N. G. Newman. The convention adjourned to meet at its regular annual meeting, Tuesday, July 19, 1949, at the Oakland Christian Church.

CHRISTIAN AFRICA LOOKS AHEAD.
By REV. CARL R. DILLE.

Mr. Louis Fischer, writing of Mr. Gandhi and India, said, "The East is so hungry, ragged and unhappy that it thinks with its stomach, sees with its nakedness and feels with its misery." That could be said just as truly of vast areas of Africa today. But the hungry, ragged and unhappy Africans are divided into two different viewpoints.

One group, hungry, ragged and unhappy, are bitter. They see the whites well fed while they and their children are hungry; they see the whites well clothed while they, and especially their children, are naked; the whites have nice homes and ample medical care while they have to live in mud huts with little or no medical care, with no blankets to cover them on cold nights (and there are cold nights in the highlands), and often they are not even able to afford a little salt for their food even though it may cost only a penny a pound. So they are bitter.

They remember the old days before the white man came. There were no taxes to pay, no free work on the roads to be done, no forced labor. They say, "The land was ours before the white man came. He came, exploited us and the land, and became rich. Why should he be wealthy while we are hungry and naked?" They are saying, "Let's get ours back again." So in Africa there is a rising tide of bitter racial nationalism and hatred of the man of possessions by those who, in their hunger and unhappiness, think with their stomach, see with their nakedness and feel with their misery.

There is a danger in this rising tide of bitterness—danger to both the white race and the black race. Even as we recognize that danger we find ourselves sympathetic to those embittered people. This group is pagan Africa looking ahead.

There is a second group looking ahead, the Christian Africans. They, too, although usually to a lesser degree, are hungry, ragged and unhappy. They see the white man with plenty while they, even the most provident of them, are hungry for at least two months out of every year, when the last year's corn is all used up and the new isn't ready yet. But the Christian African doesn't say, "They have, we haven't, let's take." Rather, they are saying, "They have, we haven't, let's learn of them." It is significant that three years ago the native church leaders in our part of Africa asked the missionaries to provide them with more vocational education.

Two great motives dominate the African. The first is hunger. The answer is in modern agricultural practices. But we must begin where the people are. It is useless to talk modern farm machinery to a people who still practice a primitive hoe agriculture. First they must learn the fundamental principles of soil conservation and crop production. Lessons in seed selection and tillage experiments have played an important part in our teaching of agriculture to date, things the people must learn whether they farm with hoes or with the most modern machinery. No people in the world are more dependent on agriculture than the Africans. It is necessary, therefore, that agricultural instruction have an important place in all missionary efforts. Poor fields mean poor harvests, malnutrition, sickness and death. They mean also poverty, with neither the funds nor the energy to carry on an educational and religious program.

The second great motive dominating the African is fear. For centuries the African has lived in fear of evil spirits. All sickness and hardships were believed to be the result of evil spirits. Witchcraft was the only answer the African knew, and he was the prey of the witch-doctors. The pagan African is still the prey of the witch-doctors. They don't seem to realize that no witch doctor ever practices witchcraft when someone in his own family is ill. A Christian village elder who was formerly a well-known witch-doctor told us that not only does the witch-doctor not practice witchcraft when someone in his family is ill, but when he trains a new witch-doctor the final instructions are: "Go now, lie to the people."

The Christian African, likewise in fear of sickness and disease, looks not to witchcraft but to a time when there will be trained African nurses and doctors to care for the people. They are trying now to have one African nurse in each pastoral area. All this requires education. The pagan African looks to the day when he will be able to take from the whites the things he wants. The Christian African

NOTICE.

The Executive Board of the Woman's Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia will hold a meeting on Thursday, August 26, at 10:30, in the office of the Suffolk Christian Church.

MRS. JOHN G. TRUITT,
President.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

NEWPORT NEWS.

The Woman's Auxiliary of First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News, Va., comes to the close, we feel, of a very full and successful year. All circles of the organization have worked hard and all Friendly Service Projects have been well taken care of.

We had charge of the evening worship service in our church on November 16, which was our Thank Offering Service. We voted for our Thank Offering of $100.00 to be used to help build a parsonage for the Superintendent of the Southern Convention. We also had the entire evening services on May 9, when one of our members, Mrs. W. B. Williams, was speaker for the evening, and Mrs. Charles Heath gave special music.

Our mission study book, Committed Unto Us, was taught by Mrs. J. T. Gall. Following the book review, we had a covered-dish luncheon, which was enjoyed by all.

Our tenth birthday anniversary banquet, February 10, was a big success, in spite of the very severe weather we were having at the time. We had as our guest speaker for the occasion, Mr. H. H. Monroe, of Cape Charles, Va. Mrs. Monroe is a returned missionary from Japan.

One achievement we are especially proud of is the organizing and sponsoring of a high-school-age Christian Endeavor Society. Three of our members are regular workers in this society, and we feel that they are making a success of their work.

Our members enjoyed the film strip, "Go Ye Therefore," which was shown with accompanying sound, at our April meeting. We also had the pleasure of sponsoring the P.T.A. banquet which was held at our church.

Our circle, as part of their yearly project, always gives a banquet for the graduates from all schools that attend our church.

Besides our Friendly Service Projects, we have given four C.M.A. memberships, one Memorial and one Life Membership. We have given to the Daily Press Christmas Fund, our Library Fund, and to the summer camp for young people for religious leadership. We also gave an extra gift to the Shaowu Mission Fund.

OAK GROVE.

The Woman's Missionary Society and Young People's Group from Oak Grove Church held a vesper service on the church lawn August 3, at 6:30 o'clock under the leadership of Mrs. W. K. Parker, president of the Woman's Group. About 50 people were present for the service and all took a part in the group singing, which was led by Bertha Mallard, Home Demonstration Agent for Gates County.

The service was very impressive, as the theme that we used was, "The Beauty of God's Earth." Mrs. Elsie Eason told a story, "The Unsightly Rock," and illustrated the story so everyone could understand and enjoy it. The moral was, even though our lives have been clouded by sin, and seem ugly, the ugliness can vanish, and beauty radiate by living our religion every day so that others may know we walk in the light.

A weiner roast was enjoyed immediately following this program, and at 8:00 o'clock the Young People's Group presented a "Womanless Wedding," which was enjoyed by all.

We have fulfilled all requirements to the best of our ability, and have enjoyed another year's work under the leadership of our faithful president, Mrs. W. K. Parker.

Committed Unto Us was reviewed by two women from a sister church and all enjoyed this wonderful book.

Our records have been completed and reports sent to the treasurer.

With our theme before us, "Behold I have set before you an open door which no one is able to shut," may we continue to open doors for ourselves as well as for others. May the new year be filled with workers who are willing to go into the vineyard and work, for truly the harvest is great.

MRS. I. R. ELLIS,
Reporter.

HOLY NECK.

The Holy Neck Missionary Aid Society had another successful year under the leadership of our new president, Mrs. H. L. Worrell.

On January 16, the society entertained members and guests at a banquet in celebration of its 32nd anniversary.

The churches of the Holland Community united in the observance of the "World Day of Prayer" on February 13 at the Holland Christian Church. The Holy Neck Missionary Society observed the May Fellowship Day by entertaining the Holland Society with a supper in the church hall.

Committed Unto Us, our mission study book, was reviewed by members of our society, after which the Holland Society invited us to hear it reviewed again by Mrs. Robert Kimball of Franklin, Virginia.

Holy Neck Society was represented at the Spring Rally, as well as the Waverly Conference.

Our Bible Study, the book of Matthew, was taught by our Spiritual Life Superintendent, Mrs. John Norfleet.

A covered-dish luncheon was served in January and calendar bags were opened. Dollar Day was observed once each quarter. Our mission money was raised through this channel—individual giving by members of our society.

The Ladies' Aid has raised a substantial sum to be turned over to the building fund of our church. We have also solicited money sufficient to purchase new silverware needed by our group.

An organized program has been presented at each meeting and was led by some member of our society.

The Holy Neck Missionary Society expects to attain the goals of a Superior Society.

MRS. JOHN R. ELLIS,
Secretary.

REVEALING THINGS OF CHRIST.

As the page may bear upon its surface writings traced in viewless ink, which are there, and yet are as if they were not, until the nearness of the fire shall call them out into a new distinctness, so may all the truth be written on the mind of man, and yet be dead and meaningless, until called into power and being by the falling on it of those rays of the heavenly fire; and then every word of Scripture, every voice of God in His Church, every sacrament, comes forth into shape and completeness, as Christ is seen by the soul to be there.—Bishop S. Wilberforce.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

ON READING AND WRITING.

There are just a few more weeks before school begins and now is the time to enjoy what reading that can be done before "assigned" reading is begun. Different things appeal to different people—boys are supposed to like westerns—and girls romances, but sometimes it gets all mixed up and turned about. You who are beginning your careers of reading are very lucky for never have there been better books for children or more available. In the city there are libraries and in the rural areas, there are traveling libraries. Of course, it is nice to have a library of one's own and to collect books throughout one's lifetime. We have so many books in our family that it is getting to be a problem—who shall take up the most space—books or family? One of the answers to that is to give away books that have served our needs and then, too, we loan our books to friends and neighbors. Every time someone else reads a book its value increases. Some of our books are as far as 80 miles away now but they will be making the trip back in exchange for others.

The dime stores carry a good selection of books and we have especially enjoyed owning and reading the Golden Series. Do you know some of them? Now they have a new series, the Little Golden Library which costs a dollar and is in an attractive box with the tiniest little books so colorfully arranged. One of them is about animals and is as much fun as a trip to the circus and less smelly.

Reading aloud seems to be a lost art. It is still a good thing to do. Reading aloud from the Bible to the whole family helps one appreciate the words and their meanings. It is a good weekly (if it can't be daily) habit. You can enjoy reading from the Children's Bible. Poetry is more fun read aloud too if it doesn't get to be sing-song.

Writing is a lost art, too. No longer do boys and girls (that is, not very many) write to thank their aunts and uncles for presents—such as new books—they telephone or send a printed card that says thanks. While that is better than no thank you at all, I do believe that aunts and uncles had rather have a sticky letter written up hill and down that says in your own words that you like their gift.

One of my neighbors is a school teacher. She is a very special kind of teacher who helps boys and girls to read and write that had a bad start. Some of her pupils are seven and eight but many of them are in junior high school. There are many reasons why they have reading difficulties—poor teacher, unhappy home life, impatience with the books to be read and on and on. She tells me that nearly all of these children are interested in learning to read but that no one told them it can be interesting. So I am writing to tell you that it can be—it is a necessity—how can one do business, get married, have a family without reading and writing? Some of the pupils that are helped with their reading suddenly see how easy it is and make a year's progress in a few months.

If you like reading, keep on liking it, if you don't, try to learn when school days begin.

Read this Psalm to your family—Psalm 122. It is so lovely and sounds comforting and joyful when read aloud. All of you read it aloud.

THE FLOWER OF THE FLOCK.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.

(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I was talking with a club member, a woman well-known for her wide experience and broad sympathies, when we overheard a passer-by say, "She's the flower of the flock." My companion smiled. "That is what Uncle John always called Clara," she remarked. "'The Flower of the Flock.'" Then she explained, "Clara is my sister. She was a beautiful child—round and rosy, brown curls, lovely blue eyes, and pink-and-white complexion. I, on the other hand, was thin, dark and sallow, and I had stringy hair."

The club member apologized for digressing from our conversation, but I was interested and begged her to tell me more about her childhood.

"Most of my childhood days were unhappy," she answered. "When Mother or Auntie took me out without my sister those we met were friendly and kind to me; but when Clara was one of the party, no attention at all came my way. People would look at Clara and say, 'What a lovely child!' They seemed not to know that I was present. I used to go home feeling very miserable, and soon

I began to make constant effort to avoid any trip—short or long—if Clara was to go. This jealousy lasted many years.

"Mother, however, was more understanding than other people. She never made thoughtless comparisons; and whenever any reference to my plainness reached her ears she would say, 'worthwhile achievements are better than good looks.' When I first heard her say this I didn't know what 'achievements' were, but I was sure Mother was taking my part. The meaning being later unfolded to me, I applied myself with great diligence to my studies and it was not long before I noticeably surpassed Clara. Some commendation was then directed toward me, and this helped to bring about a more peaceful frame of mind."

Sad, was it not, that this woman's most vivid recollection of her childhood was of the unhappiness that she had known as a result of jealousy.

As she related her experience I recalled that of a friend who had suffered similarly. She once told me the members of her family did not seem to understand how deeply she was hurt by the contrast in the attention paid her and that paid to her beautiful sister. The bitter feeling that developed in her toward this sister because of being so much ignored, she said, was most deplorable.

Parents should be alert to detect signs of jealousy. However, if they appear, the child ought not to be accused of this fault. Instead, the cause of it should be searched out, and when found it should speedily be removed. Unequal distribution of attention is most often to blame.

The following incident, related by a study-group leader, suggests a happy and intelligent way of treating "the flower of the flock" situation.

"We had guests the other evening," said the group leader, "our young niece with her husband and three little girls—Peggy, five; Joan, three and a half; and Ruth, a baby of seven months.

"Having heard a great deal from relatives about the precocious and lively Joan, we had eyes only for her when the family arrived. She lived up to her reputation, and we thought her a wonderful child. But we soon began to interest in what the father and mother were saying about Peggy.

"We might have been late, if Peggy had not remembered where I left my glasses," said my niece.

"She has always had an unusually good memory," added her husband. "When she was only two she remembered putting her mother's diamond

Youth at Work in the Church

ELIZABETH CHICOINE, Convention Field Worker, Elon College, N. C.

UNITED! COMMITTED! IN CHRIST!

The above striking phrase is the theme for the Christian Youth Conference of North America, to be held at Grand Rapids, Michigan, August 31-September 5, 1948. The purpose of this Conference is: "To demonstrate the power and faith appearing in the young Christians of North America."

At the National Pilgrim Fellowship Council Meeting in June, our past P. F. president, Don Berry, urged all Pilgrim Fellowship members who possibly could to attend this great interdenominational meeting. At the meeting, only a few members said they were planning to go. We hope that some of the Congregational Christian representatives will be from the Southern Convention. Would you like to be one of them?

Write to Oliver Powell, Secretary of Young People's Work, 19 South LaSalle Street, Chicago, Illinois, for registration blank and full descriptions of Conference activities.

1. What is the CYNCA?—It is the Christian Youth Conference of North America, held every four years. This will be the third one in the history of Christian youth work.

2. Who is sponsoring it?—The Christian Youth Conference of North America is sponsored by the United Christian Youth Movement, composed of 40 major national denominations, 16 national youth serving agencies, and 35 state youth councils. It was organized in 1934, after eight years of pioneering, to be the coordinating movement for Protestant youth work.

3. Where will the CYNCA be held? It will convene in Grand Rapids, Michigan, in the Civic Auditorium, local churches, YMCA, YWCA, and other convenient places.

4. When?—The CYNCA will have its opening session Tuesday evening, August 31. It will close at noon, Sunday, September 5.

5. What is its purpose?—To demonstrate the power of Christ and His Church in the lives of young Christians of North America.

6. What is the theme?—United! Committed! In Christ. The committee selecting this theme wants young people to realize that the Church must be the Church, or fail to function in a muddled world. To do this, Christian youth must be United! Committed! In Christ.

7. How many will attend?—Five thousand young people. Yes, 5,000 Christian youth from Montreal to Monterey and from Seattle to Miami, are planning to participate in this great conference. Puerto Rico, Africa, China, and other countries will be represented. This large gathering of Christian Youth is an important "follow-up" of the World Conference for Christian Youth held in Oslo last summer. Oslo made us aware—Grand Rapids must make us achieve!

8. How can you attend?—Five thousand is a big number of delegates to a conference, but when you realize that there are 10 million Christian youth in the United Christian Youth Movement, then it seems comparatively small. Quotas have been assigned to all national denominational youth groups, youth agencies, and state youth councils. Most of these groups have designated quotas to their state, district, and local organizations. For further information write state or national headquarters, or Christian Youth Conference of North America, 203 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago 1, Illinois.

9. What are some of the highlights?—It is impossible to describe all the high points, but it will be a thrilling moment when 5,000 Christian youth gather for the opening session. Can't you just imagine the long colorful procession of the 250-voice choir, the presidents, or representatives of the 40 national denominational youth groups, the 35 state youth councils, the 16 national youth serving agencies, the 320 leaders of the conference, and representatives from foreign countries in their native dress?

Can't you hear the 5,000 delegates stand and sing the great opening hymn and then bow their heads in humble prayer of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God?

The 160 Bible Study discussion groups, all giving serious consideration of the six areas of study, will be an experience of lasting value.

The sacred concert, "The Church Comes Singing," will present the history of church music from early times down to the present day. The choir will be under the direction of Gerhard Schroth, the newly appointed conductor of the St. Louis Philharmonic Orchestra and director of the Civic Chorus. If you are interested in singing in this conference choir, just drop a postcard to the CYNCA office. Rehearsals will be held each day of the conference. Rose Page Welch, well known mezzo-soprano, will be the featured soloist.

The deep joy and inspiration of worshipping and playing with 5,000 other Christian youth will not soon be forgotten.

10. What are some of the Areas of Study?—Here are some of the subjects that will be studied: "Who are we Christians?" "Why are 'Things' as They are?" "What is the Answer? The Church!" "What's the Answer? Personal Commitment!" "The Answer Applied," "Whence Comes the Power?"

11. What do leaders hope will happen?—"The Christian Youth Conference of North America is dedicated toward the rediscovery by youth of the miracle that is the church." On the other hand, we must realize the limitations of such a conference. No great rebirth of Christian faith in the Church of Christ can come from a five-day conference alone.

But—if it can only raise the issues; if it can only start a movement among North American youth toward a re-examination of the Church and their place in it; if it can point the way to greater faith and leadership in the Church; if it can only bring the consciousness that Christ himself lives in the fellowship that is his Church; and send 5,000 young Christians back to their communities with new vision and new dedication; then it will have served its purpose.

12. How can those not attending participate?—(1) through the rich fellowship of prayer; (2) through an increased amount of Bible study; (3) by studying the Youth Consultation Manual (secure from UCYM office, 10c); (4) by reading the advance Conference Program Booklet (order from UCYM office); (5) through sincere discussions with delegates so they may share your thinking; (6) by listening to the Town Meeting of the Air when it broadcasts nationally from the opening session of the CYNCA, August 31. Get the youth groups in your town, or area to listen to the broadcast, have your own Town Meeting and broadcast from your local ABC radio station after the national program (for further help and information write the UCYM office); (7) by telling others about the CYNCA, its purpose, and its aim.

ANANIAS, DISCIPLE AT DAMACUS.

LESSON IX—AUGUST 29, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: I delight to do thy will, O my God; Yea thy law is within my heart.—Psalm 40:8.

LESSON: ACTS 9:1-22.

DEVOTIONAL READINGS Luke 10:25-37

A Chosen Vessel.

When the Lord appeared unto Ananias in a vision and told him to go to Paul, He said among other things "For he is a chosen vessel unto me." He was indeed a chosen vessel. He was undoubtedly the one man in the world of that day who could do what God wanted done. He was, in a sense, the absolutely indispensable man. Here was Christianity a struggling faith, without organization or literature or recognition. And here was a man of exploring energy, indomitable spirit, gigantic mind, imperial outlook, and burning heart. Here was the man who was to give the Christian Church about half of its New Testament, who was to formulate its theology and its philosophy, who was to organize its churches, who was to give it recognition, and who was to set in motion its world-wide missionary program. Next to Jesus, this man, Paul, was the most strategic figure in Christianity. God needed this man, He just had to have him.

A Glorious Conversion.

This lesson is not concerned primarily with Paul; it is concerned with Ananias. But of course the central figure and the central fact are Paul and his conversion. In that vivid and vital experience on the road to Damascus, Christ got His man. There is an element of mystery and miracle in it, but the central fact is that Paul was a changed man, a new creature in Christ Jesus. Paul the deputy of persecution became Paul the apostle of love. The cold, calculating Pharisee became the proclaimer of grace. There were unique features in his conversion, but as has been said Paul had a unique place in Christianity. From the moment he met Christ on the Damascus road he never had occasion to doubt the validity of his experience or the vitality of Christ's spirit. Everybody does not need to have, and everybody cannot have the exact experience which Paul had—the blinding light, the voice from heaven, etc. But everybody should covet for himself the experience of meeting Christ and of having Christ create within him a new heart and renew a right spirit within him—to be a new creation in Christ Jesus.

A Startling Commission

"Arise and go to the street called Straight, and inquire . . . for one named Saul, a man of Tarsus. . . ." It was a strange and a startling commission which came to Ananias. Here was a man who had set out deliberately to persecute Christ's followers, and perhaps Ananias himself was high on the preferred list, and he (Ananias) was commissioned to go to this very man Saul as a friendly ambassador. No wonder Ananias demurred and argued with the Lord—it was almost like putting one's hand into a buzz saw. But Ananias was obedient to the command, and as usual got the reward. God often asks us to do unpleasant things, and sometimes dangerous and costly things. But obedience always brings His blessing and His reward.

The Divine and the Human.

It would seem as if God had given man a large place in His plans and His program. God could of course have taken care of the whole matter in the case of Saul. He could have handled it quite well. But he gave men a large place in that pivotal and crucial experience in Saul's life and in the history of Christianity. Men could not convert Saul, they could not speak peace to his troubled conscience, they could not give him a new heart or a new spirit—only God in Christ could do that. But men could lead him into Damascus. Judas could give him lodging during the days that he was thinking and praying through things, and Ananias could come with warm heart and friendly counsel and lead him to the light and baptize him. This is no isolated or unique experience. Back of, and entering into every conversion there is both the human and the divine element. God has ordained it thus.

Three-Way Communication.

Saul evidently had been thinking about Ananias, for the Lord said, "And he hath seen a man named Ananias coming in and laying hands on him." In his darkness and bewilderment he probably thought of this man, a marked man on his list because he was "a devout man and having a good report of all the Jews that dwelt there" and felt that perhaps he could help him in his hour of need. And perhaps Ananias was praying, or at least his mind was open to the impulses of the spirit for the Lord told him that Saul was expecting him. Thus does God use three-way communication to bring to pass many of his wondrous works.

A Friendly Hand Upon the Shoulder A Friendly Word.

"And laying his hands on him, said, 'Brother Saul.'" Can you imagine what that friendly hand on Saul's shoulder, and that friendly greeting, "Brother Saul," must have meant to this man? Well, anyway immediately there fell from his eyes as if it were scales, and he received his sight. That friendly hand on the shoulder and those friendly words did the thing, they were the climax to the life-changing experience. Many a man has made a new start in life because of a friendly hand on the shoulder and a word of friendship and good cheer.

Another Honored Unknown.

It is interesting to note that Saul evidently was baptized by this unknown disciple Ananias. For he immediately arose and was baptized. Who else but Ananias could have done it then and there? Yet, how many are there who could tell you who baptized Paul, or for that matter anything about Ananias. He is another of that great host which no man can number who are unknown although they were God's chosen men and women.

There can be no peace when God is not in the hearts of men. When you drive the devil out of the human heart the stream of life will be sweet, happy and peaceful.—Chas. C. Peale, D. D.

THIS LIFE ETERNAL.

after the grave, but in this life as well.

In aligning ourselves with God we discover his greatness. The scribes and Pharisees didn't get this at all. They had just emerged from a concept of God as a little Jewish deity not concerned with other people of our world. Despite their theology, their idea of God was still narrow, limited. Our present concept of time and space over which God rules would have appalled them. What an exhilaration to realize one can be a friend, a son, a fellow-worker with a personality who has been creating and directing a limitless universe of millions of suns for countless ages!

By knowing God we can have the thrill of discovering what love is, that "God is love" and that "Love never faileth." Then we come to a realization of Jesus' assurance, "Let not your heart be troubled neither let it be afraid." By true association with God we absorb that love into our own lives. One of the New Testament writers knew this and desired his friends to be "rooted and grounded in love" that they might "be filled unto all the fullness of God." That love can keep us going despite our troubles. It can keep us growing, too. That love can make our lives healthy. It can make us truly big. But, if we are to have that bigness, that richness of life, that abundance we must be well rooted in the love of God, the source of love in our lives.

Each time I have been in Japan I have become interested in the dwarf trees, little miniature trees. I learned that in order to stunt its growth the gardeners had cut the tap-root of each tree, allowing it to gain sustenance only from its surface roots. The trees were rather pretty, dainty—cute would be a good word to describe them—but we could scarcely call them trees. When we think of the majesty and strength, the shade and protection of a tree we think of something strong and virile, a real tree. We who wish strong and virile lives cannot afford to have the tap-roots of our lives cut, the roots that go down, down into the love of God and bring that love up into our own lives. The fine, big, wholesome life gets its strength from love, "love that casts out all fear" and envy and hatred.

By truly knowing God we can not only learn his greatness and his love. We also can discover his will. To do the will of God is the greatest happiness there is. Much of the will of God we have learned to call the laws of God's universe, the laws of nature. To observe them brings the best of life. If we eat the correct foods at the right time and in proper quantity, not too many green apples or too much candy, we can ordinarily expect a healthy digestive system. In the same way attitudes, relationships, acts in accordance with the highest in the universe bring us a healthy, wholesome life. Jesus patterned his life in accordance with the will of the Father. He said, "I can of myself do nothing. . . . I seek not mine own will but the will of him that sent me." Knowing what richness that brought to his life, he desired that all men should have the same joy. On another occasion he said, "Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father."

The only way we can really get acquainted with God, know his greatness, his love, his will is through him whom he sent, through him who has proved to be the Christ. In him we see God. How true that statement attributed to him, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." And yet as he said to Philip so he might well say to us, "Have I been so long time with you and dost thou not know me?" Perhaps that vivid Christian poet, Dante, is the greatest Italian who ever lived. Next to him in intellectual power probably stands Michelangelo. On the two hundredth anniversary of Dante's death Angelo acclaimed him with these words:

Escorted by great thoughts, . . .
This star of virtue by his shining showed
To us blind men the hid eternities.

That is what made Dante great. But how much more appropriate those words are to Jesus of Nazareth—the star of virtue who showed us blind men the hid eternities. Through knowing him we can know the eternal verities of life, we can know that which turns darkness into light, giving "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." Through him we can have the secret of happiness, the abundant life which is life eternal. Through him we can find that "peace which passeth all understanding." What more can we ask of life?

But how often we fail to find this! Is our religion the joy of knowing the only true God and him whom he has sent? How often it is theological disputes, uncharitable dogmas, a list of negations! These were not a part of the life of our Master. To seek for them, to depend upon them is blasphemy, is to miss the point of Christianity entirely.

Do you recall the nursery rhyme we learned as children?

Pussy Cat, Pussy Cat, Where have you been?
I've been to London to see the Queen.
Pussy Cat, Pussy Cat, what did you there?
I frightened a little mouse under a chair.

How futile! Going to London to see the Queen and only frightening a little mouse! But how much like that we are! We join the church, we call ourselves Christian, we think we want to see the King of the universe. But we miss seeing God altogether; we miss the great joy of life, because we are busy frightening little mice, quarreling about theology, insisting upon our own pet dogmas, bickering, being petty, little, mean, instead of finding life eternal which is really to know the only true God, his greatness, his love, his will, and him whom he has sent, even Jesus Christ.

Littleness, pettiness are absent from the life of one who really knows God through his divine son. Through that knowledge our lives can be characterized by an eternal richness, a wealth of music.

Paganini the great violinist once invited to his home a small group of his closest friends. To them he played while the evening shadows lengthened, and as they listened the spell of his playing deepened. In a pause they heard the twang of a broken string, followed by another and yet another. Out of the gloom of the twilight there came to them the sound of music played by Paganini on a single string. The wonder deepened as the flood of music, mysteriously beautiful, rose and fell. Then in the quiet which followed the last pulsating note the master spoke, "One string—and Paganini." Yes, each one of us—and God—can make of a small one-stringed life beautiful music.

HYPOCRITES.

I can stand anything better than I can a hypocrite. The students at Princeton, I believe it was, played a joke on one of the professors. He was one of those old bugologists, and I reckon he had specimens of all the bugs in the world in his frames and boxes. The mischievous boys got the legs of one bug and the body of another and the head and wings of others, and put them together as if nature had so formed them, and then they laid it on the old professor's table and walked in, and asked him what kind of a bug that was; and he said: "Gentlemen, that is a humbug." When a fellow gets a little of everything in him and is made up of a hundred different sorts of things, then he is a first-class humbug in every sense of the word.—Sam Jones.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The graded school will open September 3. Then it will be books, pencils and notebook paper galore. Pupils no longer use a cheap five-cent tablet as we used fifty years ago. Now, it must be a ten-cent tablet and nice slick paper for notebooks, and then they waste half of it. The writer well remembers when he first started to school years ago everybody used a slate and a slate pencil. Many of you elderly readers know how we rubbed the marks off the slate when we wanted to work a new example in arithmetic, or anything else that we wanted to write on a slate. Now it's unsanitary. Tablets were unheard of in that day. We had one water bucket, one dipper, and all who wanted a drink used the same dipper. We have come a long way during the last fifty years in sanitation. Now, the children have sanitary water fountains to use. Back in those days we had never heard of a modern school desk. Our seats were made of slabs from the saw mill with holes bored in them and long pegs stuck in them for legs. Some were longer than others for different ages of children. There were no backs to rest against. The writer well remembers how some of us boys would get on a bench back of the first seat and see how high we could swing our feet. Sometimes we got away with it and sometimes the teacher would catch up with us, and he would take all the fun we had out of it.

Now, we have modern school desks for our children, and how happy I am that we have. I would regret to see any child have to go to school under the conditions which I had to go when I was a small boy in the grades.

But out of all our inconveniences, we did learn how to spell. We memorized Webster's old blue back spelling book from back to back; learned lots of words I have never used since that day. But it trained us to memorize. Then later on a new speller was adopted by the State of North Carolina, which was much better.

Rains continue, and corn and lespedeza are growing rapidly.

Our goal for the year is $50,000. Will you help us reach it?

IN A LAND OF TENSION.

churches maintain a home for the aged, and I visited an orphanage operated by the Zizkov Church. Their social action is complete except for the area of politics.

In our brethren in Czechoslovakia I found a Christian faith our American churches could take a lesson from. It has arisen out of centuries of suffering climaxed now in the snatching away of their freedom which we must remember the West is responsible for as well as the Russians.

What can our American churches do for these friends across the sea? I see our task in two areas.

First of all, we must not let our Czech Congregationalists feel they are alone in the world. We have written Czechoslovakia off too soon—at least the Christians of Czechoslovakia. What hurts them most is that letters have stopped coming since the coup in February. We must let them be assured of our fellowship. They need it now as never before.

This means keeping alive personal contacts such as my visit and that of the Swedish Congregationalists a year ago. Government restrictions keep them at home, so it will be a one way road for us. Yet we must make them feel a part of our world Congregationalism and of the World

Church. In a sense, it is their real salvation now.

Material help in the way of food and clothing must continue to go out from our churches to Czechoslovakia. Those articles do reach them. We Christians must go beyond Marshall Aid. How much those people do appreciate our gifts and the love behind them. Numerous people after the services took hold of the suit or dress they were wearing and with smiles said in a broken way, "American!" This is the "cup of cold water" Christ was talking about.

Secondly, we must help the churches there to see their task today. They are set in a land of tension. There is little hope of recovery on the European Continent for a long time. Days as hard as the war are ahead. In such a time the Czech Church must understand its task as never before. Our friends in Czechoslovakia are handicapped in doing this. Nearly fifteen years of war conditions do not help physically, mentally or spiritually. They have been and are cut off from real contact with other Christians. The piety must be matched by an intelligence just as deep. Here is a real task for our American churches and for our International Council.

I have returned to these United States after a year in Europe with a keener gratitude and admiration for numerous peoples in our world. One of the finest is our Czech Unity Church. The spirit of John Huss flames anew in the darkness of that land today. May we here in America match that spirit with one of our own. May we keep faith with our gallant brethren who have suffered so much and need us now.

ring under the table cover—several weeks after she had put it there."

"When our guests had departed, and I sat enjoying a quiet review of the visit, I found myself thinking more about the diffident Peggy than of the vivacious Joan; in fact, I recalled that very little had been said about Joan. It really seemed that these parents had learned how to apportion the attention given to the two children. Certain it was that much of our attention and admiration had been redirected by them—thus preventing the younger child from becoming too forward and her elder sister from feeling neglected and jealous."

In Memoriam

CLEMENTS.

We, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of Antioch Christian Church, find it our duty to record the death on May 30, 1948, of our beloved member, Mrs. Clara Snipes Clements, a noble Christian woman, with a most genial disposition and keen sense of humor, in spite of years of semi-invalidism.

Be it resolved:

First. That this Society has lost a faithful member, one whose memory we will always cherish.

Second. To her family we extend our deepest sympathy, realizing our loss is her eternal gain and bow in humble submission to God's will.

Third. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy published in The Christian Sun and a copy placed on the records of the Society.

Mrs. BROWNELL HARRISON,
Mrs. E. ROLAND NELMS.

Committee.

SMITH.

We, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of Elon College Community Church submit the following in memory of our beloved member, Mrs. Walter L. Smith who passed to her reward March 17, 1948. Mrs. Smith was a faithful member of the Church, Sunday School and the Missionary Society for many years. In her going our society, the church and the community have sustained a great loss.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we are grateful for what her life has meant to us as individuals and as a society for the peaceful, kind and happy life that seemed to be hers.

2. That we shall miss her in the sweet fellowship of our work together. We shall always cherish the memory of her friendship and faithful service.

3. That we extend to her family our deepest sympathy.

Mrs. RUTH W. ROGERS,
Mrs. LILLIAN KIMREY,
Mrs. G. O. LANKFORD,
Committee.

JOHNSON.

Whereas, Mrs. George Johnson who was the devoted mother of Mrs. J. B. Long, a highly esteemed resident of our community for several years, a noble Christian woman, and a faithful member of Circle Number One of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Elon College Community Church, passed away on March 3, 1948.

Whereas, we the members of this Missionary Society wish to make recognition of the most worthy life she lived, of the unselfish interest she manifested in her family and others, and of her entrance into the life of eternal joy, peace and rest.

Be it resolved:

1. That we express our sincere sense of loss that Mrs. Johnson has gone from us.

2. That we extend our prayerful sympathy to the members or her family in the loss they have sustained and in the sorrow through which they are passing.

Mrs. RUTH W. ROGERS,
Mrs. G. O. LANKFORD,
Mrs. LILLIAN KIMREY,
Committee.

AFRICA LOOKS AHEAD.

looks forward to the day when he will be educationally and spiritually equipped to take his place in the modern world, to the time when he will not only be able to lift himself but also his people.

In our mission villages there has come in recent years a great hunger for education. In 1940, when we went to the Chilesso Mission Station there were only 16 village schools. In 1946 there were 111, with 5,600 boys and girls enrolled. There were also 1,700 women enrolled in 70 adult schools in the villages. All that came as the result of the African's increased interest in education, for those schools were almost entirely self-supported schools. But the African leaders realize that just education is not enough, that the education the African needs must be Christian education.

The pagan African, looking ahead, wants material things. The Christian African also wants material things. But he wants more. He realizes that disease is often the result of malnutrition, so he wants to learn better agricultural practices. He wants material things—comfortable homes, a kerosene light, blankets, mosquito nets, furniture and clothing. So he wants vocational education that he may improve his economic standard and level. More, he wants books to feed his mind. When we left Africa on furlough a New Testament cost five days wages of a day laborer. We received a shipment of 800 New Testaments. We had to ration them by pastoral districts so that those far away would get the news and be able to come and buy before they were all gone. In less than a month the entire supply was gone. Many people walked five or six days journey to buy a New Testament for themselves and some of their neighbors.

Most of all the African wants the religion of Jesus Christ. The most rapidly growing field our Congregational Christian Churches have is in Angola, Africa. The Chilesso Station Church had 14 original members. In 1943, at the 50th anniversary of the beginning of the Chilesso work there were over 4,000 members. In 1946, when we left on furlough, the number was over 5,000, a 25 per cent increase in three years. Time magazine, about a year ago, contained an article which said that the 43 largest Protestant denominations between 1926 and 1941-42 showed a combined rate of growth of 24 per cent, the Roman Catholic Church during the same period, a 23.3 per cent gain. The gain in America was the same, but it took 16 years, not three.

The Christian African realizes the spiritual poverty of his people. Most of them were reared in non-Christian homes. They realize that it is the results of the missionary program that makes the Africans "more than conquerors" of the many problems that beset them. So the Christian African looking ahead, wants material things, as does his pagan brother, but he wants much more, he wants education in order to be able to help himself, and above all he wants the religion of Jesus Christ.

Hungry, ragged, unhappy, the pagan African has growing within him a bitter racial nationalism that is dangerous to both himself and to the white population, yes, dangerous even to the peace of the world. The Christian African, likewise hungry, ragged and unhappy, has a great yearning for education, for civilization and for the Christian faith that he may prepare himself and his people to take their place in this modern world. The Christian African, looking ahead brings to us the hope that out of Africa will come not bitterness and strife, but peace. Long ago the Lord said, "Out of Egypt have I called my Son." Today, from many parts of Africa God is calling true sons and daughters.

Christian Africa is on the march. It is a long, hard journey. The Africans have a proverb which says, "Iso esumba, okulu onoi," or, freely translated, "The eye is a coward, the leg a hero." The eye, seeing the long journey ahead, says "It can't be done," but the leg is a hero and goes steadily ahead, step by step. The Christian Africans are facing the future with great courage, and step by slow step are going forward on the long, hard journey that lies before them. Will the Christians in America face the future with their Christian brethren in Africa and in step, shoulder to shoulder, go with them in the long march toward building a Christian world? Will you sing with them, "Lead on, O King Eternal, the day of march has come?"

NOTE: Mr. Dille comes from the Christian Church part of our united Church. He formerly served in Ohio and in Pennsylvania. He visited the Southern Convention in the fall of 1947 and inspired our conference sessions with his message. He and Mrs. Dille are now missionaries under the American Board in Portuguese, West Africa. His address is: Missao de Elende, Cuma, Angola, Portuguese, West Africa.

The Requiring God

By STANLEY U. NORTH, Chaplain

1948 Annual Meeting, Home Missions Council of North America

We of the Home Missions Council have a very special responsibility to the world at our door. That is true because of our concern for minority and underprivileged people in our midst. Our architecture can be of the best. Our worship can have dignity and beauty. Our sermons can be literary gems. Our anthems can be musically perfect. Great congregations can crowd our sanctuaries. But if our wards, the Indians, are the victims of neglect, economically, educationally, spiritually; if the Eskimos, illiterate and unskilled in the ways of our competitive society, are defrauded of their birthright; if the migrant farm laborers have no meaning other than the volume of their production . . . if within our own land the fruits of democracy are so barren in these particulars; then people of color and nationality, not our own, will accept our charity because of their necessity but will hate us for hypocrisy. They will envy our wealth but they will despise our spiritual paucity.

Micah in his day and generation faced a problems not unlike our own. His people put great store on form and ritual. They offered gifts of great value unto God, thousands of rams and ten thousands of rivers of oil. Nor did they withhold their first-born children, the fruit of their bodies for the sins of their souls.

A new emphasis on beauty of worship has arisen among us, vast sums of money are being spent to erect cathedral-like places of worship. Nor have we withheld our first-born sons whom we have sent forth to lay down their lives upon the altars of our pagan society. We pay a terrific price for our economic greed and our racial bigotry.

And yet the record is clear and unmistakable. That which God requires of us is not creedal correctness, nor ritualistic rightness. These at best are but aids in the life of the spirit, and have value only in terms of the spirit. "For what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly with Thy God?"

Mercy—We cannot close our doors to a destitute world and have communion with the living God, be our worship ever so colorful, ever so beautiful and ever so ritualistically correct.

Justice—We cannot withhold justice from those within our midst or from those remote, or indeed, from those who have lately been our enemies, if we hope to be heard as we call upon the name of God.

Humility—Who are we that we should presume to speak for God and to judge for God. Our need is for confession and for forgiveness.

A world in need stands at our door. God help us if we should be provincial and smallminded in this hour of our great responsibility.

God bless us to the end that our churches shall be worthy of their noblest traditions, tireless seekers after God's will, possessing high courage in the face of insurmountable difficulties, ministers of mercy, servants of our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave us a new commandment, that we should have love one for another—even as he has loved us, that we should love one another.

Church Builder and Home Maker

THE LATE REV. W. G. CLEMENTS

Rev. W. G. Clements was born on December 1, 1840, near Fletcher's Chapel, and died on February 24, 1924, at his home in Morrisville, N. C. He organized and built the church at Morrisville in 1872 and served as its pastor many years. He also organized and raised money for the erection of churches at Raleigh, Chapel Hill, Mebane, Amelia, Six Forks and Franklinton, and no doubt for others. He was the pastor of twenty-five or more churches during his long ministry. Mr. Clements served in the Confederate Army and was wounded three times, the last time losing his left arm. His early opportunities for education were very limited, but after the war he educated himself with some help from Hon. John M. Moring, Major R. W. York and Prof. Brantley York. He organized and taught in the Morrisville school and was superintendent of the public schools of Wake County for thirteen years. He was at one time editor of The Christian Sun and was a trustee of Elon College during most of its first thirty-four years of history. He was married to Annie E. Moring, daughter of James Moring, a descendent of Rev. James O'Kelly. They were the parents of seven children all of whom lived to see their parents celebrate their golden wedding anniversary. Of this union there are still living five children, twenty-seven grandchildren and thirty-five great grandchildren.

News Flashes

Rev. J. Frank Morgan has begun his ministry at Waverly pastorate.

Dr. Frank Lewis was the speaker last Sunday evening at union services at Park View, Portsmouth.

Miss Caroline Gort of the First Church, Portsmouth, Va., is dean of girls at Massanetta Springs this week.

Rev. R. L. House is assisting Rev. Joseph E. McCauley this week in revival services at Centerville, near Wakefield, Va.

Approximately twenty young people from the South Norfolk Church are attending the Christian Endeavor Convention which is convening at Massanetta Springs. Several other churches of Eastern Virginia also are represented.

The sketch of Rev. W. G. Clements, given on the front page of this issue was written by his daughter, Mrs. G. J. Green for a Fifth Sunday Rally Service at Morrisville, N. C., May 30, 1948. The sketch was sent in by Rev. G. C. Crutchfield.

Rev. Carl Dollar of Sanford, N. C., preached last week for Rev. R. E. Brittle at Cypress Chapel, and this week he will fill the pulpit at Bethlehem, Nansemond. Mr. Brittle has announced his resignation at Cypress Chapel that he may give his full time to the work at Bethlehem.

President L. E. Smith is still confined to Alamance General Hospital, Burlington, N. C. at the time this issue goes to press. He writes us: "I hope to get home next week—certainly by September 1, or when school opens." It is good to know that Dr. Smith is recovering, though much too slowly to suit one of his energetic temperament.

Home-coming services will be held at Berea, Norfolk, Church on Sunday, August 29, at 11:00 a. m. and at 2:00 in the afternoon. The Sunday school building has been cleared of debt and the notes will be burned on this occasion. The new Hammond organ will also be dedicated. Following these special services, Rev. Raymond Grissom of Jonesboro, N. C., will assist the pastor, Rev. Ellis N. Clark, in a week of revival services.

HAS YOUR CHURCH PAID ITS CONTRIBUTION APPORTIONMENTS?

I have just finished preparing a deposit for the Farmers Bank of Nansemond, Suffolk, Va., which in this instance was a check from Shelton Memorial in Portsmouth for "apportionment in full" to the conference treasurer of the Eastern Virginia Conference. This check had to be broken down for deposit to four different accounts, namely, Conference Fund, Ministerial Scholarship Fund, Conference Home Missions and Virginia Council of Churches and Prison Work. (This information is not news to you, but it does require some detail work that takes time.)

After I had finished preparing the deposit, I decided I would check up to see how many of the forty-four churches of the conference I have heard from this year and found that only eight have responded at all and only six have paid their apportionments in full.

The fact just related occasions this letter which I suppose I should address to the treasurers of the other thirty-six churches of the conference with the question: "Why delay in sending your church's apportionment in full to the conference treasurer until the last day before conference meets?" I am writing in hopes that those treasurers who have "been put'n it off" will decide to have a little mercy on the conference treasurer and get busy with the necessary collection of conference apportionments and send them on to him in order that he will not have all of his work to do at the last minute. I know what it means, for I am that man!

MISSIONARIES TO DEPART.

One hundred and fourteen missionaries, who are scheduled to leave for twenty-nine foreign countries this year, have completed an orientation conference at the Hartford Seminary Foundation.

The group representing fifteen Protestant denominations is composed of fifty-one teachers and educators, twenty-four evangelists, ten nurses, four student workers, three business executives, three rural counselors, three radio technicians, and one dentist, public health specialist, social worker, and laboratory technician.

The missionaries will be sent to Africa, Burma, China, Poland, India, Japan, Korea, Latin America the Near East and the Philippines.

Miss Glora M. Wysner, secretary of the Personnel Committee of the that inclusion of three radio technicians in the mission group represented the first time mission personnel have been abroad exclusively for this type of work.

Nineteen of the missionaries being sent to China will enroll this summer and fall at Yale and the University of California in the Departments of Chinese studies.

At the orientation conference, missionaries, nationals and executive secretaries of foreign mission boards briefed the group on the countries to which they are being sent, and conducted workshops and classes in rural missions, evangelism, audio-visual aids, religious education, literacy techniques and other specialized mission subjects.

JAPAN REPRESENTED AT AMSTERDAM.

Dr. Michio Kozaki, moderator of the United Church of Christ in Japan, is attending the First Assembly of the World Council of Churches. He spent several weeks in this country enroute to Amsterdam, being one of the first Japanese Christians to visit the United States since before the war.

Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, Associate General Secretary of the World Council, described Dr. Kozaki as "one of the most eminent Christian leaders in the Far East." A graduate of Oberlin College in Ohio, Dr. Kozaki has long been familiar to American churchmen and speaks English fluently.

Dr. Kozaki will represent the United Church of Christ in Japan (the Kyodan) of which he was elected Moderator in 1946. The Kyodan was formed in 1941 at the insistence of Japanese civil authorities and included all Christian denominations except the Roman Catholic. Since the end of the war Lutheran and Anglican bodies have been withdrawn from the United Church, but according to a statement by General MacArthur's headquarters in Tokyo, "many Protestant leaders (in Japan) still feel that in some form or other, the United Church will continue as the strongest Protestant church in Japan."

Noted for his opposition to Japanese participation in World War II, Dr. Kozaki founded and was president of the Yuwaki, Japanese section of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation, a peace organization, and presided over underground wartime meetings of the Fellowship in Tokyo.

Dr. Kozaki spent three weeks traveling in America before sailing for the Amsterdam Assembly from New York City on August 13 aboard the Nieuw Amsterdam.

An Advertisement and an Editorial

By BISHOP EDWIN HOLT HUGHES.

The summer season often produces varying products. Wholesale grains for food may grow in soil near poison plants. The oak may be compelled to be neighbor to the upas tree.

In the recent month of June we had in the journalistic field a curious illustration of this form of contrast. An advertisement appeared in one newspaper; an editorial appeared in another. Usually the two publications would be regarded as having a close resemblance, if not a distinct moral likeness. The one was the Chicago Tribune, which still boldly proclaims its own excellence; a boast which may possibly be justified by its news values if not by other characteristics; the other was the Milwaukee Sentinel, which would evidently seek for its city a better repute than that typified by the stein and beer keg.

Even the names of the two papers become suggestive in the contrast which we mention. The Chicago organ become a "tribune" for a well-nigh sacrilegious promotion of the output of the House of Seagram; whereas the Milwaukee paper becomes a "sentinel" on guard against Public Enemy No. One, namely, the flood of alcohol which the cohorts of Seagram send against the dykes of life.

I

The Advertisement

The advertisement is found in the Chicago Tribune for June 16, three days before Father's Day. It is illustrated by a picture of a father and a son. The father has a baseball mit on one hand, the other holds a baseball bat with fond tightness. The youth looks like a child about twelve years of age; his smiling face a symbol of joy and hope. The slogan beneath the picture asks the appealing question: "Are You Really Playing Ball With Your Son?" The discriminating reader soon discovers that the real question relates not to a wholesome sport but rather to an unwholesome appeal which may be stated thus in slightly changed form: "Are You Playing High-ball With Your Son?"

For the several paragraphs lead to the statement that the proper father must observe "the code of moderation," and this "must mean, among other things, wise and sensible drinking." It is at this point that the motive of sales slips into artificial and sincere preachment. The intent of the advertisement is to get people to drink liquor. This means the increase of the only class from which regular drinkers can be recruited, namely, the so-called moderates. The excesses in liquor consumption never come from the ranks of total abstainers. No teetotaler ever becomes an alcoholic. The shocking counsel ends with a neatly italicized line: "Fine Whiskies since 1857."

In nine years more, the House of Seagram will have been promoting the sale of liquors and helping to fill up the ranks of staggering inebriates for a full century.

This full page, picturesque plea for actual drinking illustrates a frequent moral obliquity on the part of the liquor sellers. Other sacred anniversaries have been degraded to this unethical and vulgar purpose. The Fourth of July, Mother's Day, the Easter glory of the resurrection, and the holy Christmas mood, have all been dragged down toward the vats and kegs and bottles of distillers and brewers. If alcohol is classed as a narcotic, there is in normal living no possible moderation in its use. Misnamed temperance is really intemperance. Evil is not made good by a false vocabulary. The scientific argument against intoxicating beverages is not banished by an appeal to a dying lexicon. The scriptural figure of speech which declares that the devil, as the father of lies, may appear as an angel of light, may well be applied to this perversion of parental and filial traits as an advertisement for that which has destroyed hundreds of good fathers, and has sent many thousands of sons into the most assured swine-fields. As for Father's Day, the Saviour himself declared to certain men that their real parentage

THE WORLD COUNCIL.

Sunday, August 22, will be remembered as a great day in church history. The first international assembly of the World Council of Churches is no longer prophecy, but history. We should fervently thank God that we have lived to witness this memorable day. Some despair of progress in God's kingdom, while others realize that his will is constantly being realized "in the fulness of time."

Long and arduous preparation was made for this assembly. Previous conferences on Faith and Order, Life and Work, paved the way for this great milestone in the ecumenical movement. One church official said the historical importance of the World Council lies in the fact that it "symbolizes the longing of the Christian world for a movement in the tradition of the great apostle of love, John."

This assembly made the headlines in many of our daily papers. The Associated Press reported the declaration of Dr. John R. Mott, one of the five presidents of the World Council, that it was "conceived at one of the most fateful moments in the life of our world." It is fateful, he said, because of the unexampled sufferings in recent years throughout the world that still haunt us, because of the price which has been paid in the realm of disaster and sacrifice. He added, "My vivid contacts with pain and tragedy of recent years have flooded with vivid meaning the Cross of Christ, I recognize as never before why Christ found it necessary to go to the cross."

Pray God that this initial and memorable assembly may be followed by many more and that they may be set for the healing of the nations.

OBSERVATIONS.

Approximately twenty-five Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed ministers were present on our denominational day at the Massanetta Springs Bible Conference. Many of our lay members from the Valley Conference also were present. The sermon for the occasion by Dr. H. D. Althouse will be published later. Dr. I. W. Johnson presided and declared that our two denominations had courted and that they are now engaged. He suggested that the consummated union would not be considered polygamous!

Two churches of Eastern Virginia have recently spent generous amounts by adding shrubbery to their lawns. More people see the outside of our churches than the inside. Forbidding walls shut in the beauty of our sanctuaries to countless passers by. But the lawn is a part of the church, the only part some people pay any attention to. Why not make it attractive, inviting? The condition of the church lawn is one index to the character of a congregation.

Individual United States income zoomed to a record-shattering total of $190,000,000,000 during 1947, according to an announcement by the Department of Commerce. More than one-third of the nation's income was in the Eastern States, centers of population and production. A total of $67,000,000,000 was reported from this region. Here, then, is the broad financial basis for an expanding program of Christian stewardship which should be variously reflected in additional church buildings, increased pastoral salaries, enlarged budgets, and an expanding program of home and foreign missions. What is the status of your church budget compared with recent years?

Real potential interest in the ecumenical movement, as expressed in the World Council of Churches, exists among the churches of Asia, it is reported by the Rt. Rev. Stephen Neill, Anglican Bishop, following a trip through the East for the World Council. Bishop Neill said when he placed the ecumenical movement before the churches they showed "a real response and desire to be linked to the world-wide Christian fellowship." Another conviction with which he returned was that "never in history has Asia been so open to the gospel as it is at present." In China, he said, the Christian Church is facing strengthened opposition—"mainly from Communism," which is spreading rapidly in rural areas, isolating large cities still held by the Nationalist Government. A sharp division exists among the Chinese Christians in their attitude towards Communism, the Bishop declared. Practically every Christian under 30 tends to have a favorable attitude, regarding Communism as agrarian reform. Older Chinese Christian leaders look upon Communism as a terrible menace, under which organized church life becomes impossible. Bishop Neill said himself that "if China goes Communist, it will mean the dark ages for the Christian Church there." As for the leadership of the young churches in Asia, Bishop Neill found it not equal to the task. The churches are exhausted after long years of oppression and war, he said. Missionary staffing is wholly inadequate to cope with the task in Asia the Bishop asserted. "The only church taking its opportunities seriously is the Roman Catholic Church," he said. Protestant missionaries in the Orient are generally outnumbered three to one by Roman Catholics, he explained. The missionary churches in East Asia feel the need of integration, and plans made at the Manila conference, sponsored by the International Missionary Council and the World Council, are progress toward this end, he said. Bishop Neill visited China, Korea, Formosa, Singapore, Hong-kong, Siam, Burma and Indonesia.

The American Business Men's Research Foundation says that the people of the United States have spent $60,579,029,908 for intoxicating beverages since the repeal of prohibition.—Dept. of Commerce figures.

THE DREAM AND THE DEED.*

By REV. ROBERT LEE HOUSE.

The Bible is a dream book. It contains the record of inspired dreamers, some of whom were separated by a thousand years, but united in their vision of God's eternal reign. Abraham, already eligible for retirement, moves out of his idolatrous surroundings and continues his long trek across the desert, fascinated by the dream of a community habitable not only by man but also by God, "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

Jacob is one of the celebrated dreamers. He dreamed an unusual dream in an unusual place. Some have remarked that a stone pillow would punctuate anyone's sleep with dreams. One must, of course, learn to determine the difference between the nightmare of dyspepsia or indigestion and the dream of inspiration. But notice this, at the place where he did not expect anything he saw heaven, he had a vision of celestial plenitude and personnel. Here is the zenith of spiritual education: "When God has wrought in us all the mystery of his grace, and reared us to the last fruition of wisdom possible below the skies, we shall know that there is no market place, no school, no city, but one vast church filled with God's presence and glory."

"Behold, the dreamer cometh," is the taunt of Joseph's brethren. But there is more to this young man's dreams than that of self-elevation or personal superiority. He had a dream of colossal proportions. He dreamed of an era of economic abundance, a program of conservation, of relief and rehabilitation. And, strange though it may seem, the dream became an unprecedented reality. Thank God for the dreamer.

Moses, a most practical dreamer, was haunted by a vision of a Promised Land. And in order to actualize that dream he "refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." His was a dream with vast social consequences, the realization of which changed the destiny of a people.

In one of the most inconspicuous books of the Bible, Joel, there is this arresting prophecy: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, and your young men shall see visions." Here is a dream of universal prophecy which has found fulfillment times innumerable and may find fulfillment in this Conference, this Church, this Pilgrim Fellowship. God grant it! These visitations come through all the years. They come in childhood in youth. No boy or girl but is by the "vision splendid" attended. Of every youth it may be said, "Behold, the dreamer cometh."

Dreams do more than reveal, they compel. Men, strong men, are driven by dreams. Weightless as the fragrance of a flower, a dream may lay as a great weight upon the conscience. Composed of quickly dissolving images, sifting slowly through closed eyelids, they have yet the power to haunt and goad till the long, last sleep.

One of the most potent dreamers of all time was St. Paul. He was blinded by a vision on the road to Damascus, was instructed to seek out one Ananias in Damascus who would tell him what to do. Now, knowing Saul of Tarsus as we do, it is surprising that he did that. Saul wasn't in the habit of consulting other people. Like many of us North Carolinians, he did not like to be told what to do. You know, they say you can always tell a North Carolinian, but you can't tell him much! But Saul took his medicine. He found Ananias, took his advice, and was established in the way of righteousness.

We need to remember that God speaks to us directly at times, while at others he speaks indirectly through a third party.

St. Paul did not feel that dreaming was a childish or reprehensible affair. He was a continental dreamer. He dreamed, and behold, the moral need of Europe stood up like the figure of a beckoning man, calling across the water: "Come over into Macedonia and help us with your Gospel." I do not know if St. Paul told his dream before or after breakfast, but ere long he was off on his journey. The next day he landed on the coast of Europe and went straight to Philippi, and before the sun went down the next day, he was actually preaching the Gospel in Europe. Here was a dream which came true in three days. I agree with Dean Brown that St. Paul was not lying down when he had that dream, but standing up straight that he might see farther.

Consider the stupendous results of that continental dream. Of course, there is a temptation here to remark that many of our dreams are not worth a continental. As a result of a dream Christianity was carried from Asia, where it was born, into Europe where it achieved so many of its mightiest victories. How much it has meant for the higher life of the world of thought, that the culture and the influence of Europe has not been pagan! It has not been Hindu, nor Buddhist, nor Moslem, but predominantly Christian.

This being true, realizing our spiritual indebtedness to Europe, it is difficult to understand the indifference of some of our people to the call of our Committee on War Victims and Reconstruction. A letter and an appeal has gone out to all our churches within the Southern Convention. Would St. Paul turn a deaf ear to such a call? Why should we?

Here is our common mistake. We have a vision of a ladder, angels ascending and descending. We have visions of a bleeding Macedonia, crying to us for help. We have visions of a parting sky and a finger pointing toward Damascus where we may learn what God would have us do. We have visions of a city of God come down to earth. And then instead of doing some climbing for ourselves up golden-runged ladders; instead of setting forth on the very next day for Macedonia; instead of laying the foundations, granite strong, on which may rest God's golden-walled city, we do what? We fall asleep and dream about our dreams.

Go to many a person with a proposal for action—that he confess Christ and unite with the church, that he write for his church letter, that he begin tithing, that he assist in initiating a program of visitation evangelism, that he lead a group in painting the church or landscaping the lawn, and nine out of ten will say, "Yes, I've thought of that. Yes, I have had it in mind for some time." He's thought about it, he's had it in mind, but he has never done anything about it.

To rob a house of its loveliness and usefulness we do not need to under-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

This week I had planned to spend at the home of Mrs. Brock D. Jones, Holland, Va., but my plans were changed by circumstances. Many pleasant weeks have I spent there at vacation time. For twenty years this week I have been an in-law of that lovely home. A good many who read these lines know that the late Mr. Brock D. Jones was one of the church's most loyal laymen. On every Sunday, at every annual session of his conference, at every opportunity he had, he in various ways and places—besides living his religion faithfully—sought to bring honor upon his church. To put it plainly and emphatically he loved his church. For several years before his death he was afflicted with a slow paralysis and yet he looked forward from one Sunday to the next to the joyous privilege of being carried by his faithful family to his church. There he reverently thanked God for all his blessings, and sought spiritual wisdom in the use of the same. To him Christ was real. And while he was one of the community's hardest workers and most successful farmers he considered his fields and his crops a part of God's own garden. In one line let me say Mrs. Jones was his inspiration and his blessing in all things. Their eight children—each of them good representatives of such a home—rise up and call them blessed.

Instead of adding another happy week to many I have spent there I have tried to be of service as I was needed here in Suffolk. On Wednesday I conducted the funeral of one of our members, Harry M. MacLeary, visiting in his home on Tuesday and arranging for the services. At the same time I was attending another family whose son, Mills Edward Duke, was killed in action in Europe and whose body was to be laid to rest in the family lot in the Suffolk Cemetery on Thursday. On Thursday I was called to another home to arrange for a similar service for their son's body on Sunday afternoon, James Boothe. To be some comfort and service to these three homes is a real privilege as anyone with a pastor's heart knows. As it happens in the same week I was thrice called to one of our local hospitals to give a pastor's welcome to three babies. How happy each of these couples was! It was the first baby in two instances, and in the other it was a baby girl to go along with their son. On Friday afternoon I attended the funeral of one of my own best friends and one of Suffolk's most honored and useful citizens, Miss Daisy Nurney, for 36 years representative of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot in Suffolk. She was herself a member of the Presbyterian Church but her near relatives were members of our church. She was such a good friend of mine and my heart went out to all members of the family.

There are a good many sick folks in my pastorate so I have made 32 calls since arriving here Monday night besides attending to other matters relative to the church. And today—Saturday—I have married two couples so it has been a rather full week after all.

FRIENDSHIP TRAILS.

The work of a minister and his wife is like a series of Friendship Trails. The way may be rough and rocky in some places but it is forever bordered with the love and the loyalty of dear friends.

We observed a beautiful part of this trail on Thursday night, August 19, when the members of Second Church, Norfolk, led by the Deacons, gave a supper in honor of their pastor and his wife.

Following the supper a large crowd gathered in the church where short talks were made by six Deacons, followed by brief remarks from the pastor and his wife.

Mr. Walter Starnes then presented a "Streamliner Pressure Cooker" from the church and Sunday school. Mrs. Mary Lovelace in behalf of the Friendship Bible Class, presented Mrs. Morgan, who teaches that class, with a sterling silver vase, inscribed with the words, "Friendship Bible Class, 1948." Surely this beautiful vase, a token of love and esteem, is a monument on Friendship Trail.

As we pass further along this trail we pray God's richest blessings on this church and her every member. New friendships and new experiences await us. Another venture of faith under God's leadership. May the glory and beauty of past experiences enlighten this new way.

The Editorial

The title is "Public Enemy No. One." It appeared on Saturday, June 26, 1948, and its very heading indicates that we abused prohibitionists, covered hitherto with labels, proclaiming insincerity and fanaticism, have been right in our contention that the liquor traffic is a foe of high ideals and worthy practices. The Milwaukee Sentinel uses a plentitude of phrases from the verbiage of outraged life. What indictments from the dry camp can surpass the editorial arraignment that hurls such bombshells into liquor circles as the following:

"Police records" disclose that "since 1933" the facts of disaster are "at best shameful and at worst appalling."

Unless "something is done about unrestrained and excessive drinking, America will soon become a nation of alcoholics."

"The daily toll of traffic deaths is heavily marked on police blotters with the letters HBD, 'had been drinking.'"

"Women and minors" are "creeping up in numbers to the total of male sots."

"Drunkenness is today the most serious and dangerous of our public problems."

"If the trend toward general and unbridled drinking is not stopped, the very fiber of our national intelligence, the basis of our social stability and the spiritual foundations of our conscience, will be dissipated in alcoholic fog."

There are other charges, in words such as "drunken wave;" "noisome flood;" "evil habit;" "fashionable frailty."

All these charges sound like what abstainers and prohibitionists have been declaring for decades. If one-half of what this editorial declares to be true, is true, then we people who are apologetic and listless in the presence of our land's chief peril can scarcely be classified with the leaders of the great anti-liquor movement. Their partiotism falls under a black shadow. If the liquor business, in the current expression, is "Public Enemy No. One," then the comrade

ELON COLLEGE FACULTY ORIENTATION PERIOD.

The fifty-eighth annual session of Elon College will begin Tuesday, September 7, at 8:00 a. m. For the past seventeen years Elon College has opened Tuesday after the first Sunday in September with the exception of one year when the date of opening was a week late on account of polio. The question of postponing the opening date this year for a week or more on account of the present epidemic has been considered but it has been decided that this would be inadvisable. As a rule, our students prefer early openings and early closings.

We have had an excellent summer school—the best in the history of the College. The attendance has been larger; the curriculum more extensive; and the mechanics have worked more smoothly. We trust that the results have been more satisfactory. Summer school closed Saturday, August 21. The fall term opens within seventeen days. Prospects for the opening are good, though there are two contingencies that raise questions. No one can tell what effect the draft will have. Some have withdrawn to volunteer for army training. Others are preparing to enter so as to make sure of a year's training, before entering the army. The enrollment of veterans is tapering off while applications from civilians are increasing. Present indications are that the number of young men students in Elon College 1948-49 will be the largest in its history. With the girls it is another story. Many girls are marrying before going to college or are going to business college in an effort to get a job and begin earning more quickly. What effect these practices will have on our homes and ultimately on civilization time will tell. On the whole the enrollment in the College this year as compared with last year will be larger.

In addition to replacements two new members have been added to our faculty—one in psychology and the other in English. The new English professor will teach journalism and give part of his time in keeping the College, its work, and achievements before the public. The poorest thing about Elon College has been its publicity. We shall endeavor to improve this feature of our program.

The Elon College faculty has been called to meet Friday, September 3, at 10:00 a. m.—four days before the students arrive. This is to be an orientation period for the faculty. Elon College has grown more rapidly than the most of us realize. A larger faculty is required. We are unacquainted with each other's responsibilities and the requirements of the several departments. As faculty members we are parts of the whole and must be intelligently and sympathetically cooperative.

Mr. W. E. Butler, Jr., business manager for the College, is on leave this year and is studying at the University of North Carolina to better prepare himself for his responsibilities. Mr. James Hayes, a former student at the College and a war veteran of considerable experience, is taking Mr. Butler's place.

Increased efforts are being made to see that all buildings are repaired and put in good condition for the new college year. This has been a most expensive undertaking but we feel that it will prove a good investment.

Don't forget the date of opening: Tuesday, September 7, at 8:00 a.m.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The apportionment plan for the support of Elon College has proven satisfactory and most beneficial. Each church knows at the beginning of the conference year what it is expected to contribute to the College for current requirements. The local church may raise its apportionments through the Sunday school during the year, may pay it out of its current budget monthly or quarterly, as is most convenient.

The expenses of the College are daily and as often as the churches send their contributions, the more help they are to the College. Whenever a contribution comes, the College is most grateful.

personal enemies of our republic are numbered by several millions.

But if the Sentinel writer looks somewhat in the right direction, his preachment still offers no real goal. Its last paragraph reads like a pitiful anti-climax. "The State" must "step in" and save its weaklings from the consequences of indiscriminate drinking." Tell us how, O brother campaigner! We prohibitionists do have a program, in two respects utterly definite:

1. Let the individual let liquor alone! Every abstainer is a gain for American sobriety.

2. Let the voters of precinct, ward, county, town, state and nation follow Jack London's advice and make liquor less and less available until its absence from false advertisements in print, and from the poetic lures of the radio, and from the glistening glasses and bottles of store windows, shall become an aid to the sober life.

This two-fold program would cancel the dreadful misleading of the House of Seagram under the father-son sacrilege; would produce more editorials that would be partners with the Sentinel pronouncement, and would move beyond the helplessness of its final paragraph, out into the area of the Rechabites, where millions of the sons of Jonadab dwell under God's shadow in the land of peace and sobriety.—The Voice.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Young People's Rally for the Western North Carolina Conference, which was to have been held at the Albemarle Church on August 29, has been postponed until a date to be announced later.

YOUNGER CHURCHES IN THE WORLD COUNCIL.

By REV. D. T. NILES, Ceylon, India.

The many nations of the earth now labor to make their one world a world of peace. God's time has come for the churches to build out of their disunity the Church of God.

The "Younger Christian Churches" of Asia and Africa see the World Council of Churches as a reservoir from which the Christian stream will flow—fertilizing the Church in every land—linking the churches of all lands—witnessing to the Church throughout the world.

The Church in Every Land.

"That there be a church in every land"—that is the call of missions. Out of various churches and congregations must come the Church. Co-operation between churches, such as the National Christian Councils stand for and promote, is essential and urgent. But cooperation is no substitute for the unity that Christ willed for His Church. The World Council of Churches can be of tremendous help to the younger churches in this search for unity, providing a common meeting ground for discussion and study of the issues of Christian truth.

But the churches of the West must be cautioned against imposing the patterns of their thought on the younger churches. The divisions and controversies of the Western churches have their roots deep in history; and to ask the younger churches, daughters though they are, to define where they stand with respect to those controversies is to ask them to speak from a context that is not theirs. It is also the World Council's task to help to safeguard the younger churches against that international confessionalism which would seek to impose on the younger churches hindrances to finding their unity in the lands to which they belong—to which Christ calls them.

Unity for the younger churches is a fundamental necessity. Discussions on church unity cannot be theoretical as they affect the younger churches.

They must remind their parent churches that matters of faith and order are most urgent.

But by far the greatest contribution which the younger churches can make to the Council is maintaining witness to the evangelical task of the church. Evangelism is the very life of the International Missionary Council; but among members of the World Council evangelism is still to become a burning flame. The missionary church must have its faith and practice by other minds and within other cultures. The ecumenical has no meaning when it is also simply national.

The Church in All Lands.

The calling of the Church in every land is to "bring the treasures of the nations unto Zion." But each church must bring its treasures first to its sister churches. Through the World Council, these treasures of experience can be shared in ecumenical study that each church may be fertilized with the experience of the others. To this common sharing, the younger churches can bring a growing liturgical movement which draws not only from the heritage of the Christian past and present, but also from the general heritage of worship of these lands.

No emphasis on the contribution of the younger churches to the process of study and sharing can be made without at the same time emphasizing also a related fact, that of the necessity of bringing youth into this sharing process. As there is a Youth Department of the World Council of Churches the way is open for the training of the youth of the younger churches in the ecumenical movement. This is important, since it is the youth who can be taught more easily to think outside the purely denominational pattern, and it is also youth who most need to be saved from being caught by the purely national ideal. The surest way of pulling together the Christian youth forces in a country is to fill their leaders with a common concern and to win them to a common loyalty; organizational relationship can then be worked out with less hesitation.

The Church Throughout the World.

"The task of theology," Walter Horton once said, "is to relate the truths of God to the torments of the world." It is the function of the World Council to relate the One Holy Catholic Apostolic Church to the churches of the nations. One way in which the World Council is doing this already is by linking up all the churches in the task of making the body of Christ relevant to the problems of today. Beginning with the immediate tasks, the World Council during and after the war years, has assisted in the whole work of reconstruction, relief and rehabilitation of a stricken world. Younger churches must be kept informed about what the churches in the West are doing in this field, for nowhere more than here can be discerned the relevance and the Christianity of the churches of the West.

Every younger church, however, is awakening to a new task, to be the church of a nation—in that nation—and for that nation. Simple evangelism is not enough. The church has to proclaim the will of God to the people of the land in all their manifold affairs. It has to work to make a non-Christian State act, as far as possible, as if it were a State whose subjects were Christians. The younger churches need help in understanding the full implications of, and the method of performing, this task.

But the insistent problem of the World Council will be that of intercommunion. Here the younger churches are most concerned. It is enough, for the purpose of this statement, to say just one thing: that the younger churches would expect the World Council to impress upon its constituent churches the necessity of clarifying their attitude to intercommunion in relation to the ecumenical movement.

We have labored all night and caught nothing. Now we hug the shore. The time has come to put out into the deep that we may find. It is the Lord's bidding.

"It will be another six or seven years before I will be putting any more dimes into the Boston and New York subways!" announced Dr. Walter F. Hume, M.D., of the American Board on the eve of sailing back to India, August 11, from New York on the SS Mauretania.

ACTIVITIES IN PUERTO RICO.

By ELIZABETH CHICOINE.

Part of our Home Mission Study for 1948-49 is Puerto Rico. Here are some interesting facts taken from a bulletin issued by the Missions Council, 287 Fourth Ave., New York City.

The Home Mission Study Books can be ordered from The Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C. Write for a list of books available.

Churches Working Against Odds.

Since the United States took possession, large business companies have gradually taken the island, mostly for plantations. The people are crowded onto the little land left, huddled on top of one another. There is not nearly enough tillable land. (The area of the island of Puerto Rico is 3,435 square miles—100 miles x 35 miles. The population is over 2,000,000. It has increased 50 per cent every 50 years for 150 years. There are more Spanish people than Americans and there are many Negroes. A surprising fact is that the Puerto Ricans have no racial problems.) Many fathers of families have work for only a few weeks or months of the year. Thousands of the children have never in their lives had enough milk. Eighty per cent of the people are infected with an intestinal parasite called hookworm. The diet of the majority of the Puerto Ricans is made up of rice, beans, codfish, and bread and black coffee. Very sparingly is there fresh fruit or vegetables.

The death rate from poor nourishment and from tuberculosis is very high. More than 50 per cent of the people are illiterate. Only 54 per cent of the school-age children attend school. Over 95 per cent of the people attend, or are connected with, the Roman Catholic Church. But among the intelligentsia only about 5 per cent are good, church-going Catholics.

Government Activities for Better Living.

Our government has set up the Land Authority Commission to provide land on which people living in slums can build decent houses; to urge large sugar companies to get rid of all land over 500 acres. Four district hospitals have been set up. The island government is starting some new industries to give work to more people. A few housing projects have been started. All this is helping. But its progress is very slow. The work of the churches must augment this effort.

Protestant Activities on the Island.

Membership—50,000. By a comity arrangement, work has been divided among Protestant groups and to the Congregational Christian Churches has been allocated territory in the southeast section of the island, with a part of the city of San Juan and the neighborhood of Ponce.

Congregational Christian Churches.

Twenty-three organized churches and a goodly number of little country chapels make up our denominational fellowship on the island, with a total membership of about 3,000. All the church services are in Spanish, but a visitor from the mainland can worship happily with these groups, for they have enthusiasm and sincerity, there is joyous singing of many hymns we know, they gather their children into church schools and preach the gospel in which we believe.

Joining in All-Protestant Efforts.

To train pastors for our churches, and for other Protestant groups on the island, an interdenominational three-year theological training is offered at the United Evangelical Seminary in Rio Piedras. In this our own fellowship joins with others in preparing young men to work with the Spanish-speaking people of the island who belong or will belong to our own groups. Students attend from Puerto Rico, Cuba, South America, and San Domingo. We also cooperate in the united work at the University of Puerto Rico, the United Press, and the United Association of all Protestant Churches in Puerto Rico.

Ministry of Healing.

In 1911 the American Missionary Association set up an itinerant clinic near Humacao. Two wards of six beds each were built, to meet growing demands for help. In 1918, Ryder Memorial Hospital was built, with 52 beds—a model hospital for its size. The last annual report showed: 415 surgical operations, 22,000 laboratory examinations, 15,000 consultations in the clinics, 1,200 patients helped through the use of the X-ray and training given to mid-wives, to decrease infant and maternity mortality.

Needs are acute for: a training school for nurses, social workers, and religious education leaders, expansion of the hospital, more supplies and equipment to provide the most up-to-date treatment.

Every child saved, every mother given back her health, every family given health instruction—means hope and cheer and comfort—at the hands of the church.

Continuing the work of the American Friends' Service Committee, having purchased the service farm and social center of the Civilian Public Service project, cooperating with the Insular agencies and with the people in solving their many problems, our Board of Home Missions, through the American Missionary Association, have begun at Yuquiyu a thrilling experiment in Christian cooperative living. It adds up to this:

1. Three young couples going from the States to live among the Island folk, teaching them better methods of farming, crafts, health laws, and how to do for themselves.

2. Helping individuals to find their own skills and set up small industries to make a living. A pottery shop is already meaning new life to a number of young men.

3. Parent education and mothers' study groups.

4. Pastors of local churches working with people and Yuquiyu leaders to get everyone interested in helping themselves.

5. Urging the people to cooperate with the government plan for small farms and gardens, and to plan and build their own homes.

6. Community recreation—badly needed—in which people of all ages can actually have good times.

7. Two leaders helping men of the community to put up a really good school, the first the children have ever had.

From these facts, we can easily see the great need for the church to take a strong part in helping the people of Puerto Rico. In order to better understand the needs of these people, we can acquaint ourselves and others in our groups with them by studying the Mission Study Books and engaging in the suggested projects.

GOD'S LITTLE THINGS.

On a lazy summer day many of us like to lie on the grass in a field, sit on a park lawn or lie in the warm, coarse beach sand. It was doing things like these that made me find many of God's little things—the smaller creatures.

A yard or field may reveal a katydid shell. If you are very fortunate you may find it peeling off the old and drying the new green shell. Snails—large or small, gray or brown. Some people think they are very slimy and “not nice” but they are quiet and do no harm. A large garden spider of yellow and black. Of course the spider should be admired and its web is such lovely lace, but neither it or the spinner should be touched. Then there are the grasses and the clover. Careful, or you'll cut your finger on that slim grass blade! Ruby throat humming birds often come just before night falls. Tiny and colorful they often look like moths or butterflies—it is wonderful to watch one of these natural “helicopters” busy gathering nectar. These are just a few of the things to be seen and found. Your own list will include many more I know.

In the fields there is opportunity to watch birds, larger insects and smaller animals. Squirrels, a chipmunk, baby rabbit, dragon flies and several kinds of birds were seen in one afternoon. Many people have watched birds and their habits. Field glasses are good for spying on these feathered friends who like their privacy. In the open country there are apt to be toad stools with wonderful shapes and many wildflowers. Perhaps the loveliest of which is the lacy Queen Anne's lace.

A single hour of a beach brought before our eyes: a sandfiddler, a sea turtle, a conch shell, bivalve shells and thousands of little ones, seaweed, a fearful stinging nettle and the grains of sand themselves. And the ocean and its many, many countless droplets of water.

All that has been mentioned and so much more are the little or small things of our world which God the Father has created for life. To watch them may be to improve our own ways or to see the greatness of God's creation. We are vast, they are small.

The ant, the tree, the bee
God made them all and me.

The sand, the shells, the sky,
God made, and birds to fly.
Thank God for all things
Great and small.

There are words in the Bible which say:

There are three things which are too wonderful for me . . .

The way of an eagle in the air;
The way of a snake on a rock;
The way of a ship in the midst of the sea.
There are four things which are little upon the earth,

But they are exceeding wise:
The ants are a people not strong,
Yet they provide their food in the summer;
The e nies (little furred animals) are but a feeble folk,

Yet make their houses in the rocks;
The locusts have no king,
Yet go forth all of them by bands;
The lizard holdeth with her claws,
Yet is she in kings' palaces?

—From the Proverbs.

THE “RUBBISH GANG.”

By HILDA RICHMOND.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Everything was hurry-scurry on the big side-lawn of Billy Temple's house. Little children and bigger children were busily piling garments, food supplies, bedding and other household articles that the grownups and youngsters had carried from the houses on Fourth Street.

“Here is my best doll,” said Polly Parker. “It's hard to give her up, but the letter said nothing was saved when the flood swept away the homes in Clifton.”

However when the hustling, perspiring man who was in charge of the collection arrangements saw the dolls and toys, he said, “Well, well! Your children must belong to the rubbish gang. Those poor people need clothes and food, not toys! Sorry—food and clothing only!”

At this some of the younger girls began to cry, but Danny Cope had a plan. He pointed to the long rack on which, waiting to be packed, were hung coats, suits, dresses, pairs of shoes, and bed linen. “I am going to put my jackknife and ball into this coat pocket,” said he, touching one of the hanging coats.

“That's a man's coat,” protested Nellie Harper. “A man doesn't want a ball!”

“He can give it to his little boy—or any little boy,” answered Danny.

While the big man, whom everybody called the “Chairman,” was occupied elsewhere, the children worked as industriously as honeybees. Dolls, balls, puzzles, pencils, handkerchiefs, picture books, paintboxes, and other things that children like were neatly tucked into large pockets—all in a very short time!

Just before the “Chairman” came back every toy had been expertly disposed of, and not a child divulged the secret. The vans that were to carry the supplies to the people who had been made homeless by the flood looked as if they could not hold another thing.

The children had made sacrifices—they had given up possessions that they really prized—but no one wished to withdraw any of them. “I hope some little girl will take good care of my dolly and love her,” said Betty Carson. “She has on her prettiest dress.”

Even the boys felt serious, too. “I'm glad that my dog couldn't be sent,” said Johnny Dawes. “I really could not part with Rover.”

When the letter of thanks for the heavy boxes of gifts came from the flood sufferers, the “Chairman” read it aloud in the Sunday school. All the boys and girls eagerly listened to what it said.

“I don't quite understand the latter part of this letter,” commented the man, “for it says, ‘The lovely toys and dolls that you sent our children will be always loved and cherished.’ They must have been confusing the contents of a box received from some other town with the things in our boxes!”

But the young listeners just giggled.

JUNIOR MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF HOLLAND CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Junior Missionary Society of the Holland Christian Church has been under the leadership of Mrs. L. C. Johnston and Mrs. J. R. Darden, with meetings held during the Sunday school period every third Sunday.

The older children enjoyed a circulating library of books selected from the suggested list and supplemented by all of the old books formerly used by like groups as study books.

Three packages, designated for children of the same age group, were sent through the World Church Service. During the Daily Vacation Bible School we mounted pictures to send to China and Japan. Recently we sent Miss Angie Crew a box containing puddings, needles, laces, thread and school supplies.

ELIZABETH CHICOINE, Convention Field Worker, Elon College, N. C.

Dear Young People of The Southern Convention—

The following letter and ballot are self-explanatory. I just wanted to call your attention, through THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the importance that your groups vote on the new Council Officers and return the ballots to The Convention Office just as soon as possible—we request that they be returned by September 1.

I am sure that all of you realize that since Betty Chicoine is no longer with us, that we are going to have to take a greater responsibility in carrying on the work of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship. The first thing that we can do to achieve this goal is to elect our new officers. So, be sure to return the ballot that your president or adviser has received. In some cases, we did not have a name of a president or adviser of some young people's groups. In those cases, we sent the letter and ballot to one of your church officers who will probably turn it over to the proper young person to handle the voting.

Won't you help us in this matter of voting, so that we can help you to have a stronger Pilgrim Fellowship?

THE PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

Elon College, N. C.,
August 20, 1948.

To All Young People's Presidents—
Dear P. F.'rs:

As you all know, Betty Chicoine is no longer with us to help in our work. Therefore, it will be most urgent that our new P. F. Council meet just as soon as possible to plan for our work during the coming year. However, the new officers must be elected before such a Council Meeting can be held. A tentative meeting has been planned for September 24-25, pending the election of the officers. We are sure that all of you will realize the great importance of having this meeting to plan so that our work may proceed as we want it to.

Because of the polio epidemic, the meetings at which we might have elected our new officers for 1948-1950 were cancelled. Therefore, we find it necessary to change our usual procedure of election of officers and handle it by mail.

Your Nominating Committee has worked long and hard, preparing the enclosed list of suggested officers. If your group has any suggestions of people they would like for officers, we will be glad to have you write them in on the ballot. At your next meeting will you please ask your group to vote on these nominations, write the votes on the enclosed postal card and send it to the Southern Convention Office by September 1, or earlier, if possible. This request is made in order that our leaders may proceed with plans for the Council Meeting in September.

We feel that we are very fortunate in having Dr. W. T. Scott and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill to work with the Council in planning the work for this year. They already have some plans for activities that will be of great benefit to all of us.

Again we wish to stress the urgency of this matter and we ask that you take the vote of your group and send us the returns just as soon as possible.

We must have your votes in by the first of September so that the new officers may be notified of this most important meeting. Thank you.

"TOWN MEETING OF THE AIR" SCHEDULED TO OPEN CHRISTIAN YOUTH CONFERENCE.

Holding an international convention by radio will be one of the major features of the Christian Youth Conference of North America to be held at Grand Rapids, Michigan, August 31-September 1, according to Rev.

Dennis Savage, conference director.

"Town Meeting of the Air," with George Denny Presiding, will come to this meeting of 5,000 young people of many churches on Tuesday evening, August 31.

Outstanding youth and other leaders will participate in the famous radio forum on a subject in the field of churchmanship, which is the general area for discussion during the six-day conference.

Not only will members of the immediate audience be able to offer questions but also young people across the country will be meeting in their home churches and cities and will be able in some instances to telephone their questions to Town Meeting at Grand Rapids through the courtesy of the American Broadcasting Corporation, which carries the program.

"This is probably the first time in radio history that a nationwide audience has been able to participate directly in the discussions of an international convention," Mr. Savage stated.

Also scheduled for the opening night of the conference at Grand Rapids will be a processional including presidents or their representatives of the forty national denominational and thirty-four state council youth groups which make up the United Christian Youth Movement, which is sponsoring the conference. Foreign delegates in their native dress and leaders of the conference will also be in the processional. A pageant presenting the highlights of the U.C.Y.M. program will be presented, and greetings offered by U.C.Y.M. officers. A choir of 250-300 voices will sing.

Dr. Walter G. Muelder, dean of the Boston University School of Theology, will speak at the first morning session of the conference on the question, "What Are Things As They Are?" Dr. Muelder will discuss the root cause of our dilemma today, Mr. Savage stated. "We want young people to realize that religion is the basis for most of our culture, especially in Europe and America. Too few of them understand the basic function that Christianity has in our culture. This secularism will be discussed by the speaker." Dr. Muelder has taught Bible, ethics, philosophy, and theology at Berea College and University of Southern California in addition to his present work at Boston.

Governor Luther Youngdahl, chief executive of the state of Minnesota, heads the list of lay speakers that will address the Christian Youth Conference. Gov. Youngdahl, who is an

"And he found a certain Jew named Aquila, a man of Pontus by race, come from Italy lately, with his wife Priscilla, because Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome." Seutonius the Roman historian refers to "a tumult instigated by Chrestus" which scholars believe is a reference to a disturbance which the Jews of Rome at that early date in the history of Christianity made against those who were teaching and preaching Christ in the synagogues. And like so many of his successors in places of authority and power, Claudius made the Jews the "goat." Without investigating the matter, he issued a royal command that all the Jews should "depart from Rome." It was only one of many cruel acts of prejudiced men against the Jews as such, culminating in perhaps the worst of them all, Hitler's treatment of the Jews. The blood of the Jews will be upon the heads of many cruel leaders. And although there is prejudice against the Jews in America, they ought to be among the most grateful and useful citizens of this country, for here they enjoy rights and privileges, rich and priceless, and freedom from persecution and harm. Aquila and Priscilla were "refugees" and "D. P.'s" who found refuge in another land. Our country might well open its doors in a wider sense to the people of other lands as they still suffer from the ravages of World War II.

Fellow Tradesmen.

"And because he was of the same trade, he abode with them, and they wrought; for by trade they were tent-makers." Like every Jewish boy, Paul was taught a trade—that of a tent-maker. It was good practice and discipline. When he came to Corinth he met this man and woman, perhaps at the synagogue service. They, too, were tent-makers, and the three fellow tradesmen formed what was a long and inspiring friendship, and one that meant much to Christianity. Paul worked with his hands. He did not want to be chargeable to any man. He was not preaching for money. He found in this husband and wife kindred spirits and they worked together. We may be sure that Paul was a good tent-maker. He was in this as in other things a workman that needed not to be ashamed. And it must have meant a great deal to the little Christian community to see this spiritual genius working at humble tasks with his hands. The servant is not above his Master and Lord. Our Lord Jesus Christ was a Carpenter.

The Home With the Open Door.

The home of Aquila and Priscilla was open to Paul and he lived with them. Like many another person, they found that in entertaining strangers they had entertained an angel, or at least a spiritual giant and great soul, unaware. They evidently had some means for we learn later that they used their home as a meeting place for the Christians of Corinth. We must not lose the fine art of hospitality.

The One Next to You.

Were these two Jews Christians when they met Paul? The evidence is not absolutely clear, but students think that they were merely devout Jews, but not followers of Christ. But although Paul thought in terms of the world for Christ, he began with the man next to him. It is quite likely that as they worked Paul talked with them of Christ, and in their leisure hours constrained them to become His disciples. If they were already Christians, we may be sure that more than once their hearts burned within them as they caught something of the fire and enthusiasm of this man. What open doors of opportunity lie around us in those with whom we work. What chances to make richer the Christian experience of others we have in the ordinary contacts of life. Win the one next to you.

Multiplying One's Self.

"And they came to Ephesus and he left them there." He could not be everywhere at once, and there was much to do. But in Aquila and Priscilla, Paul had competent fellow-workers, folks who could carry on the work even in his absence. It is better to train ten people to work than to do the work of ten people. Ministers and teachers should be training boys and girls and young people for leadership tomorrow. Paul was wise in this strategic thing.

A Daring Thing Done in a Gracious Way.

One of the gems of the New Testament, in my thinking, is the simple story of how Aquila and Priscilla initiated Apollos into the deeper and richer meaning of the Christian faith. Here was a man, a brilliant man and a great preacher. An Alexandrian Jew, he was "eloquent" in speech, mighty in Scripture, well informed about the way of the Lord, and although intelligent and superior in many ways, he still retained an enthusiasm and zeal that is all too often lacking in many eloquent men. He was "fervent in spirit." Furthermore he was courageous, for he began to speak boldly in the synagogue as he had occasion to do so. But when Aquila and Priscilla heard him, they detected a sad and somewhat tragic lack in the man's preparation—he knew only the "baptism of John," he did not know the richer, fuller meaning of the gospel of Christ. Their hearts yearned for the man. Here was a man of great power and great promise if only he knew the richer aspects of the Christian life. But how could they, humble work-a-day folks, do anything about it? It was a ticklish situation. But this man and woman had gumption as well as grace. Instead of criticizing Apollos openly "they took him unto them" and expounded unto him the way of God more accurately." In the warm, friendly fellowship of their home, in the spirit of humility and with the grace of Christ in their hearts, they helped him into a fuller experience of the things of the Spirit. Here indeed are two of God's choice saints, practically unknown, whose names are written high in the Lamb's Book of Life. It might be remarked in passing that there is significance in the statement that although Apollos had so many gifts, he lacked the thing that was needed to make his ministry vital and fruitful. And he received it at the hands of humble folks. He, too, showed a great spirit by the way in which he took criticism.

Tried and True Friends.

"Who for my life laid down their own necks." We do not know what this noble pair did in Paul's behalf, but one on occasion they actually risked their lives in his behalf. They stood by him even at the risk of losing their own lives. No wonder there was a strong and warm friendship between these three.

The Church in Their House.

"And salute the church that is in their house." We must keep in mind that in those days there were no churches in the sense in which we think of churches, that is church buildings. The Christians usually met in a home. And the home of Aquila and Priscilla was open to the members of the church as it had been open to Paul and to Apollos. They may have been people of means, for their house must have been rather large to accommodate the congregation even if it was not large, but they maintained their interest in the church, and were good stewards of their possessions.

Friends to the Last.

"Salute Priscilla and Aquila"—it is a farewell message. The aged apostle is in prison and the time of his departure is at hand. But his heart is strengthened not only by the assurance of divine grace, but by the thought of his friends. So—perhaps with tear-stained eyes—he writes a fond farewell to his tried and true friends of the years. Paul had a genius for friendship and he used it for the Kingdom of God. And Paul had a host of friends whom he kept not only in mind but in his heart, by far the better thing.

THE DREAM AND THE DEED.

mine its foundations with a pick, shatter its windows with a hammer, break down its doors with a crowbar, or weaken its sills with an axe. We have only to neglect it, to let it go unpainted, leave it to the ants and termites. The same thing is true of our fondest dreams.

Late in life St. Paul cried out exultingly, "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." Paul secured enduringness for his vision by plucking it out of the sky and enshrining it in his own soul. "Christ in me," as he referred to it. Leave the vision in the skies of memory and it will fade. Get it within the bloodstream, in the center of thinking and living, and it will endure. Our fidelities must become our finalities. The discarnate dream must become incarnate.

Some time ago I began my daily devotions with a hymn. It was new to me. I haven't been able to escape its message since. Here are the poignant words of the anonymous author:

Dear Master, in whose life I see
All that I long, but fail to be;
Let thy clear light forever shine
To shame and guide this life of mine.

Tho' what I dream and what I do
In all my days are often two;
Help me, oppressed by things undone
O Thou, whose deeds and dreams were one.

That's it, "oppressed by things undone." My sins of overt commission are relatively few—I do break the speed limit occasionally—but my sins of omission are like the sands of the sea. I think of the duties, privileges, opportunities left undone this day, this week, this year, then all the years of my life—I'll not say how many—and all my pride goes melting away. Take stock of your life. Estimate the average number of sins of omission per life then multiply by the number of people in this congregation, this conference, this world. Do you begin to realize how God is grieved by the sins of his people? Do you see how his Kingdom is hurt?

This conference has been penalized by neglected dreams. Think of the converts which might have been made, the churches which might have been established, contributions which might have been secured, the CHRISTIAN SUN subscriptions and renewals which you failed to get, the leaders which might have been developed, the church buildings which might have been built, enlarged, beautified, improved, the young people who might have been led into full time Christian service, missionaries which might have been sent out, the units of Pilgrim Fellowship which might have been organized and nurtured into maturity, etc!

Well, it is not enough to confess our sins, we must bring forth works meet for repentance. No man gets well by simply saying, "I am a sick man, I confess it." A confession isn't a reformation. The sick must seek the physician and follow his prescription. Our solution is found in Him "whose dreams and deeds were one." Our dreams and deeds must be welded, welded, galvanized, actualized.

God who gives us great dreams, visions, revelations, is committed to helping us in the realization of those dreams. I have found this to be true. As a boy on the farm I dreamed of driving a truck, and ere long I became one of the first school bus drivers in Franklin County, North Carolina. I dreamed of getting married and lo, I am married—very much married! I dreamed of being a minister and God has given me a glorious ministry.

A man was committed to a sanatorium for drink and drug addicts. The physician said he was hopeless. His friends and family conceded that he was a derelict soul. Then he began to have vague dreams of a sober, rehabilitated, respectable life. That man has never taken a drink since. He founded Alcoholics Anonymous.

Twenty-five years ago Frank C. Goodman was a gambler. He was converted during a Billy Sunday meeting. He had a vision of the religious uses of the radio, forsook his gambling career which netted him an average of $25,000 a year and began working for the New York Federation of Churches for $25 per week. He arranged with Dr. S. Parkes Cadman for the first religious broadcast over station WEAJ in 1922. Since that time millions of people have listened to preaching of high order by Dr. Cadman and his successors.

The Church began as a dream. This conference originated as a dream. Many of your dreams have been realized. This very occasion might be called "A Century of Dreams."

Many great dreams of the centuries are just now coming into fulfillment. Many of our church fathers were weary of schism and dreamed of church union. We have witnessed and participated in the consummation of one major Protestant union. Of course there are those who remind us that there has not been complete harmony and cooperation in the Congregational Christian union. No, just as there never was complete harmony and cooperation in the Christian Church. We do well to remember that the central word in the New Testament is "abide," not "divide." We desire to be more than a fracture or a splinter. We desire to be a sturdy branch of the Christian vine, a strong, dependable limb of the virile body of Christ. Two major unions in our fellowship are assured during our generation!

On the 22 day of this month the first assembly of the World Council of Churches will be convened in Amsterdam. There will be 450 delegates from 42 countries representing 148 denominations or church bodies, with 350 alternates, 100 youth delegates, and 500 consultants, observers and reporters. This year of our Lord becomes, therefore, a unique date in history, the realization of great and enduring dreams.

You may thank God and take courage as you begin your second century, a greater century of greater dreams and greater achievements. I cheerfully commend you—individuals, churches and Conference—"Unto him that is able to do exceeding, abundantly above all that we ask or think, unto him be glory in the church by Jesus Christ through all ages. Amen."

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The entire orphanage family is very much excited for one of our girls who will be eighteen years old in a few days has decided to marry before leaving the orphanage. This is the first time that a marriage has occurred in the institution and I thought the people in the church would be interested in an article that the Burlington News printed about it in Monday's paper, which they gave me permission to use in my letter this week to THE SUN. It is as follows:

"Burlington, Aug. 8.

"When pretty, petite, brown-eyed Margaret Baliff of the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, is married to Stencil Seymour of Rocky Mount, on Saturday, at 4:00 p. m., in the living room of the Baby Home building, it will be the first time in the history of the home that a marriage has occurred in the institution.

"Margaret, who came to the orphanage six years ago, is the daughter of the late Levi and Daisy Lee Bailiff of Burlington. To the twelve younger girls in her building, Margaret has really been a 'little mother.' It is she who sees that they are bathed, dressed, looked after and at the end of the day are put to bed.

"Seymour has never lived at the orphanage but he has had three brothers reared there. The visits to his brothers started his romance with Margaret. He is employed by the Royal Baking Company of Raleigh, a position he has held since his discharge from the army, having served in the European theatre during the recent World War. At the time of his discharge he held the rank of sergeant.

"Like all brides-to-be, Margaret dreamed of being married in a white satin dress but she knew that the budget of the orphanage didn't allow for such things. However, Charles David Johnston, superintendent, decided to price the white material and when he went to Morton-Miller in Burlington and told Wayne Morton what he wanted, Morton immediately donated satin for the dress. With the help of one of the matrons at the orphanage, Margaret has made her own wedding gown.

"When Miss Eleanor Fix's Sunday school class of the First Christian Church of Burlington heard of the wedding, the class offered to furnish the decorations for the event as well as lingerie for the bride-elect.

"Music for the wedding will be presented by Mrs. James Lee Foster, pianist, whose husband was first superintendent of the orphanage; and Mrs. James Lee Foster, Jr., soloist, whose husband was the first boy to live at the orphanage.

"Margaret will have as her maid of honor, her room-mate, Miss Jean Simmons. Miss Faye Russell, who also lives at the orphanage, will be a bridesmaid.

"For his best man Seymour will have his brother-in-law, Woodrow Chambers of Raleigh, and his ushers will include Robert Earl Seymour, a brother who grew up at the orphanage, and John Floyd Simmons, who now lives at the orphanage.

"Superintendent Johnston will give Margaret in marriage and Dr. G. O. Langford, former pastor of the Burlington Christian Church, will perform the ceremony."

RETURNS TO INDIA.

India missionary family, Dr. Hume, accompanied by Mrs. Hume, is returning following furlough to his post as head of the Willis S. Pierce Memorial Hospital in Wai, India. He will trans-ship in England to SS Strathaird bound for Bombay.

"Independent India welcomes American missionary doctors returning as colleagues to help carry the tremendous work of Public Health and Curative Medicine," says Dr. Hume. "The Wai Hospital gives internships to Indian men and women doctors. Its Nurses' Training School, now registered by the Bombay Government, will train for the Government certificate."

Dr. and Mrs. Hume are anxious to get back to the medical service where their Indian colleagues and patients eagerly await them. An Indian doctor friend wrote Dr. Hume recently: "Why don't you come back to Wai right away? You must have seen all your relatives and friends in America by now?"

At Dr. Hume's hospital in Wai no caste system is observed. An Indian-American staff work harmoniously to care for patients coming from the Moslems, Hindus, Jains, Parsees and Christians who stream in from miles away to the Christian hospital located in the Orthodox Hindu city on the banks of the sacred Krishna River.

Although born in Ahmednagar, India, Dr. Hume was educated in America. He entered Sheffield Scientific School at Yale University, after graduation from Springfield Technical High in Massachusetts, with the idea of studying forestry. The pull back to India and Christian service was too great and he soon decided to be a medical missionary.

He graduated from Yale University and Columbia University (MD) and holds a DTM (Doctor of Tropical Medicine) from London. During World War I he was a medical officer with the AEF in France but three days after his honorable discharge in 1919 he had offered his service to the American Board and sailed that same year for India.

Dr. and Mrs. Hume leave two daughters in America—Mrs. William Waters, 429 Prospect Avenue, E., Mt. Vernon, New York and Katherine E. Hume, a graduate of Mt. Holyoke College (BA, 1947), Vassar (1947, Nursery School); who has a Fellowship at the University of Iowa in the Child Psychology Department this fall. Their son, Andrew M. Hume (Yale, 1948, BA) will be doing graduate work at the YMCA at George Williams College in Chicago.

The following churches share in the support of the Humes and their work: State Street Congregational Church, Portland, Maine; Pilgrim Congregational Church, Cambridge, Mass.; South Congregational Church Springfield, Mass.; First Congregational Church, Fairfield, Conn.; Chestnut Street Congregational Church, Worcester, Mass., and the First Congregational Church East Orange, N. J.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

"No group in Asia or Europe has suffered more—physically and spiritually—than the young people. Stabilizing influences of home, community, church and school have been denied them. Yet, in their hearts is the same zest for life, the same love of fun and gaiety, the same dreams for tomorrow, that we know in our own youth. So U.C.C.W. proposed that we should each send a gift to one of these boys or girls. A gift to pep up their youthful spirits and let them know that the Christian women in America appreciate their dreams and problems, and that we love them."

Order programs and project sheets early (right now), so you may begin planning. Project sheets should be distributed well in advance, so the packages may be brought to the service on World Community Day.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

INGRAM.

The Woman's Association of Ingram Congregational Christian Church met on August 8 at 5:00 o'clock, when Mrs. Fletcher Whitlow taught the mission study book, Committed Unto Us. After this, a picnic supper was enjoyed by the members and their families.

These women will have their Bible study, which will be based on the Sermon on the Mount, on August 22.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

We are happy to report a very interesting year from the Congregational Christian Church of Lynchburg.

We have held eleven monthly meetings. Our programs have been interesting and attendance good. The Bible study has been taught each month by our Spiritual Life Superintendent, Mrs. S. R. Gay. We feel that this has been most inspiring to us all.

The book, Committed Unto Us, was presented by our minister, Rev. J. B. Allan, and enjoyed by all.

In November we had our Thank Offering program as a public service. Mrs. W. T. Dunn was in charge.

Rev. and Mrs. Allan sang folk songs as a special high light for our World Community Day program.

We observed May Fellowship Day with a Mother-Daughter banquet, which was held at the church.

The Cradle Roll party was a real joy to the children and was also enjoyed by the mothers.

A Father-Son banquet was sponsored by the Missionary Society in June. We also sponsored a religious survey in our community with every effort to get new members into our church.

Three film strips have been used: "Morning Star No. 6," "Is Your Home Fun?" and "Star Over India."

For our Friendly Service we gave to Franklinton Center and sent a box to Miss Angie Crew in Japan.

We have increased our apportionment and ordered a Memorial for one of our beloved members who has passed away.

We were represented at the World Day of Prayer service, which was city-wide here.

We are hoping to be a Superior Society this year.

TURNER'S CHAPEL.

In just a short while Turners' Chapel Missionary Society will have completed a successful year's work under the leadership of Mrs. C. C. Spivey.

The Society has almost completed the work as outlined in the year book. We hope to reach the goals set for us. Our main aim in carrying on our work is not mainly to reach these goals, but to help further the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Turners' Chapel Society is very proud of its younger groups, namely: Young People's Society, Willing Workers and Cradle Roll. These three groups were organized many years ago by faithful leaders of Turners' Chapel Missionary Society.

The Young People's Society is under the leadership of Mrs. R. L. Ross and this fine group of young boys and girls have done good work.

The Willing Workers are supervised by Miss Blennie Dawson and under her directions this group presented a beautiful Easter program on Easter Sunday morning at Sunday school during the worship service. The program was inspiring.

The Cradle Roll is under the direction of Mrs. Carl Dawson. At the June meeting of the Missionary Society, Mrs. Dawson gave a very interesting program with the Cradle Roll members. The program was well presented and attended by a large number.

Members of Turners' Chapel Society found the study of the foreign missionaries especially interesting. The study was conducted by one of the members of the society at one of the regular monthly meetings. At the close of the study a circle of prayers was offered for each missionary.

The Society was grieved at the beginning of the new year at the loss of a member, Mrs. E. J. Gunter, who passed away. She is greatly missed.

Now, as we near the end of our year's work together, we look back and realize that, with the new year's work almost at hand, we must work harder that we can help make Christ known to the whole wide world—that His heralds will proclaim salvation to men everywhere in Jesus' blessed name. We who cannot go far away to bear His tidings will pray for those who take the word—and witness where we are.

DURHAM.

The Durham women feel that they have had a very successful year.

All regular meetings were held except one when the weather prevented. All societies despite the weather and polio are meeting their goals and conducting their book reviews.

The adult book was reviewed by Mrs. Robert S. Smith at a joint meeting on Wednesday evening after which a delightful social hour was enjoyed with Mrs. R. J. Kernodle and Mrs. S. C. Harrell as hostesses.

The most outstanding accomplishment, we feel, is the organization of a new society in our Junior Philathea group of young ladies. This group, although small, has assumed the responsibility of raising $25.00 over and above their regular monthly offering. They are also having their own book review by different members of the group at their regular monthly meetings. We are proud of them and their work.

The Friendly Service projects have been completed by all the groups.

We are thankful for such a successful year, and pray that next year we might be even more useful.

TO OPEN YOUTH CONFERENCE.

active churchman and youth leader, will speak Wednesday evening, September 1, on a topic in the area of the church and the layman. Early in his administration of the Minnesota government, Gov. Youngdahl led in a reorganization of the public school system of the state. Among many other significant acts he also created a Youth Conservation Commission to attack the causes of delinquency and to provide specialized treatment for youthful offenders.

WORSHIP AT THE AMSTERDAM ASSEMBLY

By Rev. OLIVER S. TOMKINS, Assistant General Secretary World Council of Churches

The worship of an international conference is both its highest and its most difficult activity: the highest because man is never of greater stature, whether corporately or individually, than when he is at prayer; the hardest because it reveals most clearly our weakness and failures.

Worship at the Assembly is first and foremost the approach of Christians to their God and Saviour, but in its human aspect it will have three facets—the showing forth of our unity, the illustration of our variety and the confession of our sin.

The moment when our unity will be most clearly illustrated will surely lie in the great opening and closing services. The whole Assembly began with an act of worship on the afternoon of Sunday, August 22 in the ancient cathedral of Amsterdam, which is known as the New Church. The service began with a procession of all the delegates, arrayed in their appropriate ecclesiastical dress, which ranged from the unfamiliar flowing black robes of the Orthodox prelates to those whose appropriate ecclesiastical dress may be a grey flannel lounge suit.

All five presidents of the World Council took various parts in the service, the Archbishop of Canterbury leading in prayer, Dr. Boegner and Archbishop Eidem reading the lessons, Dr. Mott giving one of the two addresses, the other being given by D. T. Niles of Ceylon, and the closing prayer and blessing by the Orthodox Archbishop Germanos. The closing service on Saturday, September 4, will consist of three short addresses, and hymns and prayers of thanksgiving, but those who are to lead it are yet to be chosen by the Assembly.

Our variety is illustrated in the daily act of worship, from 9:00-9:30 a. m., with which each conference day begins, for those who have been invited to lead this act of worship have been asked to do so out of the fulness of the tradition which they inherit. So we are able to share in such diverse church and racial traditions as American Methodism, Hungarian Reformed, South Indian Mar Thoma, the Society of Friends, together with Christians from Indonesia, Africa and Japan. Of course, at this morning worship we do not lack expression of our unity either, for it is astonishing to what extent certain great hymns are the common property at least of all Protestant Christendom.

The short act of worship at the end of each conference day again primarily stresses unity and quietness. For this a simple liturgical structure has been prepared, largely based upon the Anglican service of evening prayer, since it has been found by experience at international Christian conferences that tired minds most easily find peace and unity by joining together in an act of worship with the broad outlines of which they become more familiar each day.

Although in all acts of worship we shall certainly be called to repentance and reminded of the divine forgiveness, we shall probably realize most acutely that we need it when we come to the central Sunday of the Assembly. This will bring us face to face with the harsh facts of divided Christendom. It is impossible for a conference representing so wide a range of Christians to express their unity by receiving the Lord's Supper together. Deplorable as it is, it is a fact, and one from which we must not run away.

In order that every single individual in the Assembly may be a communicant at some service without infringing the discipline of some Christian church it is necessary to hold four services of Holy Communion. The biggest service will undoubtedly be that to which our host church, the Reformed Church of Holland, has invited all baptized and communicant members of other churches to participate, in the cathedral on Sunday morning. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, services of Holy Communion are scheduled according to the church usage of the Anglicans, the Eastern Orthodox and the Lutherans. But even in this spectacle of division there is an opportunity for unity. On the Saturday night there will be a service of preparation for Holy Communion, at which those who must still be divided at the Lord's Table will unite in penitence and in preparation to receive, though according to diverse forms, the Body and Blood of the One Lord in whom lies the only hope of unity.

There will of course be opportunity for many other occasions of private and corporate prayer and sacramental worship according to the traditions of the various Christians who will be present. But these are not so much activities of the Assembly at worship as opportunities for the individuals who compose the Assembly to practice the life of devotion to which they are accustomed.

The Assembly only lasts for fourteen days, and has much business to get through. Inevitably it will be a time of rush and strain. But the times of worship may well be real oases of refreshment, lest those who are met together on God's business should be tempted to forget the God who called them.

Church Building Financial Notes

By CURTIS R. SCHUMACHER

Church Financial Adviser

"Beware! This truck is driven by a blind man." I read it again to convince myself. I was right—that was what was printed there in large letters on the back of a truck parked along the curb of a street in Jacksonville, Florida. Curiously, I approached, intending to question the driver. Then, on the side of the truck I saw, blazing forth brightly and gayly, "The Ajax Blind and Sash Company." With mingled feelings of chagrin and amusement I thought how much depended upon the angle from which we viewed things.

Seen from one angle, a church building program may consist only of the erection of a pile of stone, brick or wood, the expense of which must be financed painfully, and with much effort. Viewed from a different approach, the project is one of developing and enriching lives. Instead of merely "a pile of stone," we have a fellowship of consecrated men and women, carrying Christian privileges into all phases of daily life. We see the results of the church in civic reforms, improved economic conditions and in many other services that can never be paid for in money.

In approaching a financial project many churches do so with fear and doubt. They see a difficult task of raising money. They wonder if people will live. They plan how to pry gifts from their members. They see only the rear end of the truck. When we bring the entire project into focus according to the teachings of the Scriptures, we find the problem to be one of education in the obligations of Christian Stewardship. If we stress that what we have is due to the grace of God, and that we should give Him His share first, and not from the "left-overs," financial goals would not be difficult to achieve.

Training should show that it makes a difference how we look at that so often regarded as "possessions." Entirely too many are so blinded by the urge to "own" material things and to accumulate wealth that they miss their obligations to life itself. It should be shown that when the view is blocked by the dollar, proportionate giving is neglected. Excuses that with the high cost of living such giving is impossible should be exploded.

News Flashes

Rev. J. Everette Neese supplied for Dr. John G. Truitt at Suffolk during August.

The Editor is assisting Rev. R. E. Newton this week in revival services at Leaksville.

Rev. Joseph E. McCauley assisted Rev. J. M. Roberts in the annual revival services at Isle of Wight Church.

Results of the Amsterdam Assembly will be given by Dr. Walter W. Vanirk over NBC, Sunday, September 12, at 12:30 p. m. A round-table discussion will follow at 1:30.

The North Carolina Council of Churches will hold its twelfth annual meeting, Tuesday, September 21, at St. Mary's School, Raleigh. Following closely as it does the first convocation of the World Council of churches, the program of the meeting is planned in continuation of the spirit of Amsterdam. Business of the day will include the election of new officers and recognition of the Rev. Carl R. Key as new executive secretary of the Council. A pre-session of the Council in the form of an all-day conference of the North Carolina Council of Church Women will be held September 20 at the United Church, Raleigh.

CHURCH FINANCIAL ADVISER.

The Board of Home Missions has recently appointed Mr. Curtis R. Schumacher of Williamsport, Penna., to the position of Church Financial Adviser in the Church Building Department. This position has been created because of the great number of churches now engaged in raising funds for the erection of new edifices, as well as for remodeling and repairing of present buildings. The tremendous increase in building enterprises created by new war-born communities, shifting populations and the restrictions imposed on building projects throughout the period of the war, make this position of Church Financial Adviser an extremely important one. Millions of dollars are expected to be spent in church building projects over the next few years, and it will be Mr. Schumacher's problem to advise and work directly with the Congregational and Christian Churches throughout the United States in raising funds for this purpose. Mr. Schumacher will also assist churches in raising funds to liquidate indebtedness already incurred for church building purposes. The projected merger of the Congregational and Christian Churches with the Evangelical and Reformed Churches of the United States will lead to an even larger field of endeavor for him.

Mr. Schumacher's years of active experience and thorough knowledge of church life, banking and civic activities will stand him in good stead as he undertakes this new work. He has spent most of his life in Williamsport. Since leaving the Bank of South Williamsport in 1942, he has been Area Rent Director of the Williamsport Defense Rental Area covering eleven counties and 68,000 housing accommodations. Both Mr. and Mrs. Schumacher have been active members of the Immanuel Evangelical and Reformed Church of Williamsport. He has served as a member of the Church Council, taught Sunday school for many years, has been Sunday school superintendent and is president of the Men's Brotherhood of the church with a membership of over 100. He has been a team captain in every member canvass of the church, assisted in putting on the church's drive for funds to build the parish house, and has been a representative of the church on the Council of Churches in Williamsport, and president of the Williamsport Council of Religious Education. Mrs. Schumacher has been president of the Evangelical and Reformed Women's Work in the area.

Mr. Schumacher's headquarters is at 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Churches desiring his assistance should write him at this address.

"GREATEST STORY" BROADCASTS TO BE RESUMED.

Resuming its broadcasts for the third year after a brief summer vacation period, "The Greatest Story Ever Told" will be heard again, beginning Sunday, September 12, at 6:30 p. m., EDT, over the American Broadcasting Company network, with the Biblical drama, "Of Such Is the Kingdom."

The program will be based on the quotation from Mark, 10:14, 15: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein." The second program, on Sunday, September 19, will be "Men With the Mark," based on Luke 6:38, and the parable, "The seed is the word of God."

The dramatic impact of these programs, the outstanding radio creation of our time, will be continued along the same themes and patterns used previously in the broadcast. Each Sunday's program will be based on an important teaching of Christ, dramatically illustrated for the radio audience. A symphony orchestra, and a choir, will furnish the background music and incidental choruses. The opening and closing musical selections so well liked will continue to be emphasized.

"The Greatest Story Ever Told" will be directed by Henry Denker, who also writes the script. William Steoess is the musical director. Fulton Oursler is the creator and originator of the program.

All broadcasts of "The Greatest Story Ever Told" are heard all over the world, being beamed by short-wave to 57 countries on all the continents.

Recordings of the programs are also available for schools, churches, and similar groups and institutions for use on public address systems or for class study. List of available programs can be secured from Recording Division, American Broadcasting Company, New York, N. Y.

OVERSEAS RELIEF REPORT.

Gifts of clothing, shoes, bedding and other necessities from North Carolina people for overseas relief have totaled more than 523,000 pounds so far in 1948, according to the latest report of the Church World Service at New Windsor, Maryland. This represents the material which was sent through the New Windsor Center alone. Privately sent packages, gifts through other agencies or centers and denominational relief donations are not included in this figure which places North Carolina second in the United States in giving of this kind.

As this is written, continuing distress abroad calls for continuing generosity at home. The approach of winter makes the lack of heavy coats, woolen garments, warm underwear and socks, shoes and overshoes almost a matter of life and death in many places. Now is the time to prevent further suffering! Check your closets, dressers and trunks for good, used clothing. Write Box 6637, College Station, Durham, N. C., for a "Clothing Bag" to send your gifts to the Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Md.

Things We Have Learned About Alcohol

Excerpts from an Address by DR. HAVEN EMERSON, Professor of Public Health Administration, Columbia University.

The medical sciences have learned enough concerning the effects of alcohol to teach the truth simply without equivocation and complication. The same things are being taught now that were taught a while back, but they were often repudiated, contradicted, and mistrusted because of the lack of agreement among scientists as to the truth. We have come so far that we can now teach the truth simply.

The assured truth is not difficult to teach.

We have learned that misinformation developed by advertising, and ignorance resulting from off-balance common school education, are largely responsible for the social habits of many who become drinkers of alcohol. I count that nation derelict in its duty in education if it teaches a child about milk and fails to teach him about alcohol. The child has milk as part of his diet until he leaves school. When he leaves school he has to face a choice about alcohol, and he has no information with which to meet the situation.

We have learned that the taste for alcohol is not a hereditarily or genetically acquired condition. We have learned that, whether congenital or acquired, a state of mental irresponsibility is fertile soil for problem drinking, and that such people can never take a drink of alcohol without being at the mercy of the drink.

We have learned that alcohol, as commonly used today, causes more disease, disability and death than any other cause of ill health which is wholly in the power of the individual to prevent and avoid.

Since the end of the war in the theatre of European operations, there have been more deaths among American troops in Europe from alcohol than from all communicable diseases combined, according to the chief of preventive services. Men in the army in the last stages of the European offensive died in larger numbers from use of alcohol to the point of self-destruction than were lost by all the communicable diseases put together.

We have learned that alcohol as commonly used today is the largest cause of disease and disability of any condition that is within the entire control of the individual to prevent.

Medical sciences have learned and found that alcohol is not a food, a stimulant, or harmful only in drunkenness. That was the former belief. The liver, stomach and heart were supposed to suffer only from drunkenness. Those are the least of the damages alcohol causes. Deaths from alcoholism are the least of the harm that alcohol causes. It is the constant and severe interference with human relations, the disturbance of the conduct of people to each other, that is the major damage that alcohol does in our society today.

Alcohol is a depressant, narcotic drug, and not a stimulant. That cannot be too often repeated, and has manysocial implications.

The effects of alcohol are almost entirely, not wholly, to be explained by its toxic damage to the central nervous system, the brain and spinal cord. It is upon those tissues that the action of alcohol shows most strikingly. The other effects are so minor as to have little, if any, part. It depreciates the divinity of man. The only thing that distinguishes man from the brute is his power of self-direction, self-control, judgement, discretion. Those things are the first qualities of man that are destroyed by alcohol, long before there is any obvious interference with the muscles and motor functions of the body. It is the influence of alcohol on the brain and spinal cord that is most damaging.

Alcohol is not describable as a food which forms any part of a wholesome diet.

In recent times, it has been observed that the life-saving reflexes of the body are all slowed from 5 to 10 per cent by amounts of alcohol too small to be socially appreciable, and (Continued on page 11.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

FULL TIME PASTORATES

More churches are answering the roll call of full time pastorates. The advantages are many and obvious: a greater concentration of pastoral activity, regular weekly services, multiplied activities with pastoral oversight, stewardship gauged to a weekly rather than a monthly schedule, immediacy and availability of pastoral service for any emergency, etc. It is surprising that more churches are not willing to avail themselves of these advantages.

A larger parish may begin as a forward step and eventuate in a disadvantage. Rather than going on to individual maturity and self-sufficiency, the churches may become resigned to fractional or part-time leadership.

Churches as well as individuals should be examples of the faith they preach. No church becomes a full-time preaching station without a leap of faith. Some hug the shore of mutual assistance while others launch out into the deep of a self-supporting program. The time has come for churches to rise, take up their beds and walk.

Churches should beware of two great temptations. The city church is tempted to lean on the mission board while the rural church is tempted to lean on a sister church. While the mission board may refuse to be a perpetual crutch, the sister church may evidence mutual and uninterrupted complacency. The result is that the majority of our town and city churches are full time pastorates while many of their numerically superior rural churches remain yoked.

We have numbers of city churches with less than 200 members which maintain a full-time program and pay generous conference apportionments while some rural churches with two and three times that number of members remain yoked. The yoked church almost invariably pays the smaller per capita apportionment.

Time was when the majority of rural people were poor and therefore unable to sustain a program comparable to the city church. This condition is rapidly changing. Better prices, diversified farming, improved machinery, convenient marketing, industrial jobs for one or more members of the family, electrification with its attendant blessings—these prevalent factors bring a new day to the rural community. These new economic advantages should be reflected speedily in the church program. There is no reason now to maintain a pastoral relationship designed for a condition which no longer exists in many of our favored communities.

The difficulties of making a transition from part to full time pastorate are psychological as well as economic. It is not easy to change the status quo. People are apt to magnify the difficulties and dangers rather than the advantages of such a transition. It is far easier to follow the line of least resistance.

Every church and community should be developed to their highest religious potential. The latent resources for Christian education, worship and stewardship in the average church merit the undivided attention of a pastor.

The time has come when every rural church of more than two hundred members should seriously consider the prospect of inaugurating a full time program of pastoral service. Comparative studies may be helpful. The following churches in the Convention have made or are making this important transition: Timber Ridge, Berea (Norfolk), Bethlehem (Nansemond), Happy Home, Union (N. C.) and Union (Southampton).

New and challenging examples of churchmanship should emerge in the immediate future. Example is contagious. One church, by the exercise of faith, vision and initiative may set a timely example for sister churches. "Where there's a will, there's a way." The Christian Missionary Association and the Mission Board have helped churches make the transition successfully. Plans should be made now for the new conference year.

The unprecedented is happening on every hand. If the church is to serve the present age it must not be content with a program designed generations ago. Let the church lead rather than follow. New patterns for the new day will pay spiritual dividends tomorrow.

CHRISTIANS IN ECONOMIC LIFE.

Stating that "vast numbers of church people are confused and hesitant about what is required of them as Christians in economic life," the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has called for an annual church-wide educational emphasis on the church and economic life, to take place each year during the week of the third Sunday in January. The first observance, in 1949, will be held the week of Sunday, January 16.

In presenting the recommendation to the Executive Committee, Arthur S. Flemming, Chairman of the Council's Department of the Church and Economic Life, said: "The members of the department fully recognize the importance of Labor Sunday because of its connection with the observance of Labor Day by the nation and in communities. But because it comes in a holiday week-end, Labor Sunday itself affords a limited opportunity for a program in local church groups and among church people. It is this program which the department has in view in recommending an annual church-wide educational emphasis on the church and economic life in January."

The department stated, in its recommendation, that the purpose of the annual emphasis will be to help church people:

"1. To understand how they are all a part of economic life, daily making decisions that affect what happens to other people.

"2. To recognize that ultimately they are responsible under God for what they do as buyers and sellers, consumers and producers. (Please turn to page 11)

"THE PLACE OF TROUBLE IN THIS WORLD."

A Sermon

By BERNARD V. MUNGER, Minister
Chapel Hill Congregational Christian Church.

There are very few days that go by that you and I don't make some sharp criticism of life. We'd like to get our hands on things and shape things so that we could eliminate trouble from our experience. By the way we live, by the things we say, and by the cares that fret us, we reveal that we would like to shake things up until risk, danger, uncertainty, delayed and unequal justice, pain and suffering, unanswered prayer, and the way love gets abused—all these—were cast out of this world, because they are the things that make for trouble! We don't like trouble and we'd like to be able to take things in our hands and create a world in which trouble didn't exist!

However, that's something we can't do! Only God can create a universe and set it spinning on its law-abiding way through the ages. Only God can make a world. And, when God had the chance, he didn't create a world in which there could be no trouble! Only God could create a world without trouble—and He refused! So, unless we want to list God as a bungler at His job, we'd better come to grips with this strange mystery of trouble in God's world!

First off I would remind you that at our best we'd just be bored stiff in a world without risk, danger, uncertainty, pain, suffering, unanswered prayer, and the rest of those things we said brought trouble. We would not like it at all if there were no opportunity to adventure in the face of risk, to bravely dare in the face of danger, to proclaim and act on faith in the face of uncertainty, to do good just for the sheer joy of doing good and not for the certainty of a neat little wage-cheek paid out on the basis of how much good we had done! We wouldn't like to be without the opportunity to stand up valiantly under pain, or to take suffering and turn it into a thing of beauty and power, or to keep right on loving in spite of the ingratitude of those who are loved! A world in which those experiences were denied us would be a world we wouldn't like!

But, that doesn't answer our real question because we know God didn't refuse to make a trouble-less world just because He knew we wouldn't like it. Yet, from the fact that we wouldn't like it comes a clue to the whole thing: we wouldn't like it because there's something in us that simply rebels at an unchallenging, Dead-sea kind of life. And, God put that something in us! There is the secret. We wouldn't like a world without trouble because the best that is in us rebels at such a world, and the best that is in us God put there! What God put in us He wants to grow, and get strong, and come to fulfillment! Think, will you, of an imaginary world without trouble. Can you imagine the staunch stuff of which the human spirit is made thriving in that kind of a world? Can you see a chance for courage in it, or faith in it, or sacrificial love in it? Can you imagine tenderness where there is no pain in the life of a loved one? Can you imagine sympathy and compassion in a world where none face hardship? Can you imagine hope where there is no doubt or trial? Can you even imagine anything in that world which makes a man a man? Without trouble in the world, there could be no occasion for the display of life's greatest virtues! Verily, men need trouble or they will never really get to be men!

So—this is the best of all possible worlds for the growth of a human soul! That's what God wants—that human souls should grow here, human spirits are to flower here. God put us in this kind of a world just because this is the kind of a world that will afford us the greatest opportunity for growing a strong, healthy spirit! That's what the New Testament has to say about trouble. And, the New Testament is no stranger to trouble, as you can tell from even a casual reading. The New Testament message about the place of trouble in this world is summed up best in Paul's potent phrase: "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together, for the expectation of the creation is the revealing of the sons of God." There it is as Paul said it, and as Dr. Fosdick's sermon challenged my kind with it some years ago. The whole universe in which we live was created in order that you and I—and others like us, might turn out to be spirits akin to God Himself. And, by God's grace, and with His help, every one of us in this troubled world can find the purpose of life in this world working itself out to fruition in us!

"With God's help"—that brings us to another truth about trouble. God set us loose in such a world as this because without trouble we'd be too likely to try to get on without Him! Trouble leads men to God. Look at the 71st verse of the 119th Psalm: "It is good for me that I have been afflicted. Before I was afflicted, I went astray, but in mine affliction, I learned Thy way!" That has been illustrated time and time again throughout the centuries, and is shall ever be so, because that's what God wants to come out of our suffering. Affliction may seem to some to be a heavy price to pay for knowledge of God and His way; but, it is the testimony of those who have paid the price, that it is worthy it—for, to know God and His Way is the most precious of human experiences! Trouble leads men to God, to an experience of His grace which nothing else can give. All the suffering saints from Job to George Matheson, from Paul to Adolphe Monod, have testified that trouble, suffering, all the sharp edges of life, under God's guidance and through companionship with Him, bears fruits too valuable, too precious, to be given up! That is why Paul could say "we triumph in our trouble." and why he could relate a string of troubles and trails and sufferings and hardship so long that it seems almost unbearable, and conclude it with the startling affirmation: "thus has God made my whole life a pageant of triumph!" "A pageant of triumph"—what a phrase! It is understandable though, when we, like Paul, grasp the essential reason behind trouble: it is here to help us grow a God-like spirit, and under God's guidance and with His help, it can do just that!

This being true, we who live in a world where trouble abounds have something to do! We have to learn to meet trouble in such a way that, come what will, we will grow a finer spirit!

The first step in that direction is to

*The point of view of this sermon is that set forth throughout the book of sermons by Paul Scheerer, "The Place Where Thou Standest" (Harpers, 1942), and the sermon, "The Strange Mystery of Trouble in God's World," which Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick preached on the Sunday following the death of President Roosevelt.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Many interesting things have been happening in these parts recently. Holy Neck Christian Church is moving right along with their additional educational unit, the Oakland Church is building quite an addition including all modern equipment, Bethlehem has its greatly enlarged Sunday school, social and kitchen unit well under way, the Liberty Spring Church has recently added completely modern rest rooms at a cost of more than $2,000, and Berea (Nansemond) has installed a new organ with chimes, as has Liberty Spring.

The Rev. W. L. Wood has accepted the Wakefield pastorate made up of Wakefield, Burton's Grove and Barrett's Churches, leaving the Sunbury pastorate without a pastor. The Rev. R. E. Brittle will soon be giving full time to Bethlehem thus leaving one of our finest and oldest rural churches—Cypress Chapel—without a pastor. Dr. I. W. Johnson's recent announcement—having served Oakland for fifty years and his other two churches for almost as long—has set Liberty Spring, Oakland, and Berea (Nansemond) looking for his successor. The Rev. J. F. Morgan's acceptance of the Windsor-Antioch-Isle of Wight-Mt. Carmel pastorate has left Second Congregational Christian Church of Norfolk without a pastor. Thus it would seem we are in need of a number of ministers in our conference.

This week the Rev. Victor Murchison, pastor of the Friends Meeting in Winston-Salem and formerly assistant pastor of the Suffolk Church, is assisting the Rev. Dr. Will B. O'Neill in a revival meeting at Holland. I had the great pleasure of assisting Dr. Johnson in such a meeting at Liberty Spring this past week, which I can assure you was a most delightful week. Dr. and Mrs. Johnson led the way both in the church and in the community where they are greatly beloved. The people were very generous to the visiting minister—most of whom I know for they are my neighbors. In spite of the fact that some twenty-five already had been received into the church this summer there were three other additions.

This past week the Executive Board of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference met in the Suffolk Church making final plans for their fall meeting which will meet with the Newport News Church, October 7. Also, the Executive Committee of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship meet in the Suffolk Church this week making final plans for their annual meeting in Newport News next Sunday afternoon at 3:00 (Sept. 5), and so, although the weather has been very hot work has been going on just the same.

This afternoon I attended in Den-dron, Va., the funeral of one of Eastern Virginia's most faithful laymen—Waverly S. Barrett. The services were conducted by the Rev. Jesse M. Roberts, pastor, assisted by Rev. A. M. Jones, a neighboring pastor. There was an unusually large number of people at the funeral giving expression to the fact that his life had been nobly lived, and that he was greatly beloved.

A VISIT TO THE GRAVE OF JAMES O'KELLY.

At the 1947 session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference a committee of four was appointed to investigate the condition of the cemetery in Chatham County, North Carolina, in which Rev. James O'Kelly is buried, and report to the 1948 session.

On June 3, this committee met at the grave of Mr. O'Kelly, which is on the farm that he deeded to his son, William, in 1824. We found the rock wall about fifteen yards square, surrounding the family burying ground, fallen down in some places and much growth of bushes on the outside of the wall. The present owner of the farm has had the enclosure within the walls put in a fair condition. The monument at the grave of Mr. O'Kelly is very imposing. It rests on a two-foot base of gray granite and is six feet high. The lettering after ninety-four years is as legible as when chiseled. Since about 1884 no grave has been made in the family cemetery, but in the last sixty years many of the O'Kelly descendants were buried at O'Kelly's Chapel, one-half mile away.

It is the opinion of the writer that the entire church should cooperate with the descendants of Mr. O'Kelly that can be contacted, in improving this sacred place as a shrine for future generations to visit.

C. E. NEWMAN.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The problem of the national debt keeps bobbing up every so often. The president of a mid-west bank, in making his annual report, points out that his bank now has deposits of nearly two million dollars, and that almost a million dollars of war bonds are held by the people in the area his bank serves, and that these amounts are almost five times what they were in 1928—the increase being due to the spending by the Federal Government in the 1930's for relief and pump priming, its vast expenditures for war and lend-lease, plus the present large appropriations for grants and subsidies.

In 1928 the per capita debt was $146 with a national debt of 17 billions in round numbers, while today the national debt is 143¼ times that, or 251 billions, with a per capita debt of $1,800.

A breakdown of these figures shows, however, that, while the national debt has increased almost 15 times over that of 1928, the per capita indebtedness has increased only 12 times over that of 1928. This raises the question as to how big can the national debt safely be? Economists seem to agree that the national debt can safely go from two or three times the national income. In 1940 the national income was 70 billions and there were between nine and ten million unemployed. By 1943 the national income had risen to 145 billions and no able-bodied man who wanted a job was out of employment. The national income for 1947 was around 150 billions, and the latest figures in the press of the country show that there are at present close to 61,000,000 persons gainfully employed—an all-time high.

It is a tragic fact, but a fact nevertheless, that up to now in every nation, except possibly Russia, full employment occurs only when there is war. This is so because in wartime most of the goods manufactured are destroyed in combat, thus making a continuing market for wartime goods. But in peacetime, the situation is changed. When 10 or 20 million homes have been built, and a similar number of radios, autos, typewriters, adding machines, washing machines, and scores of other devices and gadgets, the demand for replacements slows down. Right now heavy industry is busy on government work, while persons with cash are rushing to buy the things they wanted during the war years and could not get. These conditions are said to account for the present all-time high employment record, which means that the national income will continue to rise—some predicting that by 1952, if not UNEXPECTED EXPERIENCES.

Since childhood I have been plagued with varicose veins in my legs. I have worn bandages, rubber stockings, and at times gone without any protection. My physician advised an operation. The operation was performed in July. I was in the hospital and confined to my bed at home for two weeks. I began going and working as if I had had no operation. There were so many things to do and so few to do them. I allowed myself, I presume, to be driven too fast and too furious. At any rate, after ten days of such activities the incision above my angle began seeping. A trip to the hospital and an examination revealed infection of rather serious nature.

Three weeks ago I returned to the hospital and remained there until August 23 when I was released on the condition that I remain in bed until Friday afternoon, August 27, and then return for another examination and treatment. This means that I will spend at least six weeks of this terribly hot weather in bed flat on my back. It has not been a very pleasant experience, in fact, a very unpleasant experience but for certain things that have proven to be blessings.

I was in the hands of a very fine physician and surgeon, Dr. George Carrington, Alamance General Hospital, Burlington, N. C. Anyone needing surgical treatment may count himself fortunate to be in his care. I was in a good hospital and in a good room with plenty of trained nurses willing to give any needed service, ready to be of help, and to meet any emergency that might arise. No one could wish for better treatment. True, the lines have fallen to me in pleasant places.

I was more or less shut out from the world to a certain extent; away from the responsibilities of the college and its exacting demands. This gave me an opportunity to do some reading and meditating which I have been wanting to do for many moons. I spent the greater part of the time with my Bible trying to find anew the sources of strength and the fountains of inspiration that the experiences of recent years have had a tendency to hinder. "God is gracious and plentiful in mercy to all who will believe Him and trust Him."

If you have doubts and questions, try reading the New Testament. Begin with Matthew and read through to the end of Revelation. Read carefully and thoughtfully and see if doubts aren't swept away and questions answered satisfactorily. We make such a mistake to allow the cares of the day, business or other matters rob us of the joy of fellowship with God through His precious Word.

Then, too, Mrs. Smith was admitted to the hospital two days before I was admitted the second time and was in the room just across the hall. It is never a pleasure to have your wife go to the hospital, but if she has to go and you have to go and you are the only two at home, it is good that you can both be there together. Fortunately, we are both at home now. Mrs. Smith is up and about the house but I am still "chained" to the bed.

Such experiences as these always bring your friends to your bedside, either in person or through communications of some kind. Many of our friends came in person; others sent flowers. They were many and beautiful. Others wrote letters or sent cards expressing interest and good wishes. I want to take this this opportunity to express Mrs. Smith's and my own personal gratitude for such expressed interest and friendship. Kind thoughts and prayerful good wishes do help you along the way when the going gets hard.

We could not appreciate the day without the night, and the stars never shine save through the darkness.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It is the same appeal expressed with the same words and for the same purpose. Week after week. Month in and month out. But it is also interesting that debts for material things are the same. And the money, the substance for which you appeal is about the only satisfactory thing that you can pay debts with. When you don't have the money for your personal needs you may set yourself to work and earn it, but when the college is unable to pay its debts it can't go out and earn money with which to pay. Its only recourse is with its friends. With the case of Elon College and in this particular instance, its friend is the church and its friends are in the church. This appeal comes earnestly for its needs are great.

Everything of a material nature necessary for the life and efficiency of the college has increased in price. The income for the college through contributions, gifts and otherwise has by no means kept pace with the prices in their upward strides.

by 1950, it will reach the 200 billion mark.

The late Wendell L. Willkie, in one of his campaign speeches, predicted that, if the national income reached 100 billions there would be full employment and that by prudent management the national income might reach 125 billions with prosperity for all—and that was as recently as 1940.

While the increase in the per capita indebtedness looks, on the surface, to be frightening in all its ramifications, yet, when considered with reference to the national income and the peak number of persons now employed, plus the increase in population, the cause for fright is after all not justified. America is a big country, with a large and intelligent population who like to move in the grand manner, and, as a distinguished entrepreneur was credited with remarking, "Don't sell America short."

Some economists state that, if the national debt were to be wiped out today, then tomorrow there would be a lobby in Washington bigger and more powerful than the combined lobbies of our history to put back the national debt, for it gives a government guaranteed income to the rich. What many persons do not seem to realize is that government debt and personal debt are not identical in principle. The individual cannot refund his indebtedness or tax his fellow citizens for his expenses, but the Government can and does. Government indebtedness is backed by the combined earning power of its citizens, and, in the case of the U.S.A., that is, not small change. However, there are those who are optimistic about the national debt, and what they say may or may not be correct as no one can tell what is going to happen ten years from now.—S. W.

CHRISTIAN GROUPS IN INDIA SEEK UNITY.

By ROBERT ROOT.

When fighting between the religious communities of India broke out last year, Christians everywhere rushed to help. In Pakistan, Hindus started to leave, Muslims began to flood in. A little group of doctors and nurses commenced to give medical aid to these refugees in the Pakistan city, Lahore. They were of different denominations, as the sick were of different faiths, but that did not bother them. They worked as a team.

This spring that group opened a new United Christian Hospital at Lahore. It will serve the general community, and the administration is planning a school of nursing. Two American denominations, the Presbyterians (USA) and the United Presbyterians, as well as missions organizations of two British churches, are supporting the new work. In addition, the interdenominational agency, Church World Service, has given it the boost of an initial grant.

All over India, old and new examples of interdenominational co-operation like that impress a visitor. There doesn't seem to be too much worry whether a particular Christian is a Baptist or a Presbyterian or a Methodist or something else. In fact, during the last year, Christian groups with five different denominational backgrounds have joined forces to found the Church of South India.

All along the length of what Decan Airways calls "the Backbone of India," interdenominational mission projects testify to the mood for unity.

At New Delhi, E. C. Bhatti, relief director of the National Christian Council, told me that all Christian groups except the Roman Catholic, "from Salvation Army to Lutherans," had co-operated in the council's interdenominational emergency effort.

Over 400 volunteers, a fifth of them Americans of various denominations, took part in distributing relief supplies to refugees, doing medical work in camps and providing recreation and assistance to the uprooted.

Not far from the Indian capital and from Agra, home of the famed Taj Mahal, Methodist and Presbyterian mission fields adjoin. On the borderland between the two, a new interdenominational work has gone far enough that the beginnings of success can be seen.

This is the "Indian Village Service," sponsored by American Methodists and Presbyterians and British Baptists. Its head is an expert rural sociologist and Presbyterian missionary, William H. Wiser. Working with Dr. Wiser, I saw an Indian Methodist, R. N. Solomon, trying to remake one of several villages in the project, by helping the inhabitants learn how to help themselves.

Instead of merely passing out assistance and winning weak dependence, these village workers try during three years to get village leadership on the job, then move on. For example, Mr. Solomon, in one village, had got local people who could read

A LETTER FROM MISS MEEBOLD.

American Board Mission.
Fenyang, Shansi, China.
June 11, 1948.

DEAR FRIENDS IN AMERICA:

Well, dear friends, after six eventful months in Fenyang, I am still glad to be here! I know that my fellow-workers and I are growing in grace and in the knowledge of God's leading in these troubled times. I am sure your prayers for us are being answered. A very modest young evangelist has accepted responsibility for pastoring our big church this year; he struggled against this burden but the church and, I believe, God laid hands on him. His friend, the primary school principal, was to have had a year of study away from Fenyang beginning this summer, but voluntarily postponed his privilege for a year, a real self-sacrifice; because his "other" and unpaid job is Station Secretary, and in that capacity he is the chief supporter of the pastor. This is the stuff of which our Christian fellowship is made.

Our Pastor Kao and his family left Fenyang a few days ago in a farm cart (the bus doesn't run any more) on the first lap of his journey to the Nanking Theological Seminary, where he is to have a year of study. I know it was very hard for him to leave. With him went a lot of other people, and more getting ready now to leave as soon as school is out. We have been saying for a long time that our leaders needed to get away for rest and refreshment, but now when we really see them packed up and going, we wonder how we shall ever get along without them.

My new job since Mr. Heininger left on furlough was to become Acting Principal of the Bible School, and on the day I took over, the whole school and evangelistic staff was put under "political instruction" which lasted about a week. A few days after that we were assigned our quota of moat-digging and brick-carrying, which took about twenty more days, and when it looked as though we might resume regular class work, the students petitioned to go gleaning in the early wheat harvest. So we are rushing examinations, graduating exercises, and closing the school early. We decided the women needed the food more than book-learning right now.

Emma Noreen and the hospital staff are working overtime as usual; this time because the doctor has gone on vacation. Of course, he had hardly gone when they had a series of hand-grenade wounds and a case of premature twins!

The high school was hardest hit on the moat-digging, their assignment being very heavy, and quotas of the really sick and not-so-sick have to be finished by the faithful, so the student body is not in a good temper. Besides, the price of grain has jumped so that students' board money would not stretch to the end of the term; they therefore took matters into their own hands, dismissed the cook, and are making their own meals after they get back from the day's digging. They have hardly had a week of class work in two months.

"Life is real, life is earnest," but it is also filled with lovely spots; five eggs from the mother of a student I am helping; a plateful of pudding made to celebrate someone's birthday; a sleeveless coat Mrs. Lee is making for me, just like her own, so we can dress like sisters; the young man who stopped me on the road to say "Thank you for calling on my mother, she is becoming interested in the gospel"; and my young secretary having her first baby. (How can I omit the wonderful boxes from Illinois!) "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Sincerely,

LOUISE MEEBOLD.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

VIRGILINA SOCIETIES.

Most of the activities of the Missionary-Aid Societies of the Virgilina Congregational Christian Church have already been reported through THE SUN, but there are other achievements worthy of mention. Under the able leadership of Mrs. Arthur Tuck, president for the past two years, the societies have grown in interest and membership. Attendance has been good, and cooperation splendid.

The program committee, Mrs. T. W. Chandler, chairman, used the suggested theme for the year, "Opening Doors," and an interesting and instructive program was presented at each meeting, with a well-planned devotional. One afternoon was devoted to a special program on our missionaries, with a devotional meditation prepared by Miss Virginia Brinkley. Much interest was shown in the Coin-A-Meal campaign for the Shaowu Mission, and a most gratifying sum was realized.

One of the outstanding highlights of the year's work, was a review of the mission study book, Committed Unto Us. This was a public meeting held at the church Thursday morning, August 28. The service was opened with the lovely missionary hymn, "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," with the invocation by Mrs. C. E. Newman. The president then presented Mrs. Mark Andes, wife of our pastor, who gave the report in a charming and most interesting manner.

As we women listened in rapt attention, we experienced an awakening of our individual responsibility in world evangelism, and a resolve to greater activity.

We plan to give one or more memberships to the Jackson family in Shaowu, China, the money to be used to help defray the expense of Timothy Chang, a Chinese ministerial student at Duke University.

The Aid Society has made substantial contributions to church improvement, and in providing flowers for the church and the sick.

We have had a successful year, and feel assured of attaining the Standard of Excellence.

MRS. W. S. DANIEL,
Secretary.

DAMASCUS.

After one more meeting Damascus Missionary Society will close a very successful year under the splendid leadership of Mrs. A. V. Hoffer president.

Our efficient secretary and treasurer, Mrs. E. S. Johnson and Miss Annie Lassiter, have done much to make our society a superior one.

The Bible Study has been taught each month by our Spiritual Life superintendent Mrs. Isaac Pierce and assisted by Mrs. O. L. Corbitt.

The book, "Committed Unto Us," was interestingly taught by Mrs. Emmitt Parker and Mrs. Isaac Pierce.

We also observed World Day of Prayer with other churches of our community.

In November we had our Thank Offering program as a public service.

The Pilgrim Fellowship is under the leadership of Mrs. Walton Nixon.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Recently I was visiting a home and while walking in the yard, I admired some yellow four-o'clocks. The young son in the family laughed and said he had brought the seeds home from Sunday school about ten years before and that after the one planting they continued re-seeding themselves and reminded him of the teacher who suggested that his class plant seeds. This is not a new idea for that was quite some time ago and I have known Sunday schools to give away seeds very often. Has your class done that? Many times the teacher will suggest that when the flowers have blossomed, if they are suitable for cutting that some be brought to adorn the classroom. After this visit, I began to think about boys and girls and church flowers.

It is the custom of churches to place flowers in their sanctuaries and in other parts of the building. My own church nearly always has an arrangement or a plant on the table in the vestibule to make a cheery note for all comers. Usually the selecting and arranging of flowers is left to older people, mostly women. I have known a few men who artistically arranged flowers and were given that responsibility. Why not have a few younger people to assist the flower committee? Both in town and country there are boys and girls who plant their own gardens and I think it would be a wonderful thing for them to share with others and to beautify God's house with their treasures.

A great many people never think very much about the flowers they see in church—they are just there. The Church of England and the Episcopal Church have flower books which give the proper colors and type of flowers for use on different Sundays. These books make interesting reading and it is remarkable to find how the colors selected through years of usage for the church year so wonderfully blend with the seasons. Although we do not think of our decorations to that extent there are a few simple rules to follow and I will give them to you and hope that some of you will become flower assistants.

The container for the flowers is of main importance. Many churches have a collection of vases and some have a pair of unusual beauty. Suffolk Church has a pair of brass vases that are beautiful without any adornment. The holders should be plain as too much ornamentation detracts. After all, flowers are used to add to worship not to take away from it. Glass vases are not very good because the stems show through and rare is the arranger who can make stems look lovely. Neither are baskets very good. I know how popular they are, but in shape and construction they are not best suited for church use. White or dark blue or green pottery, brass and silver are the best kind to have. Park Church in Grand Rapids, Michigan, had copper boxes or troughs made to fit their pulpit and the results were lovely!

There shouldn't be too many flowers. The only exception would be a memorial service or flower festival when the whole church might be filled. Just a few, maybe two containers are enough. The flowers in them should be of suitable size. Lovely as violets are, they do not look well in church.

The flowers should be placed in the sanctuary—that is the proper name for the place of our services and I hope you will use it—before church has begun. Haven't you seen someone come in, often times backing through the door to manage, with a huge bouquet after people have come to worship? There might be times of emergency, but in general, the flowers should be in place before time.

As a minister's wife I want to say a word of caution about placing flowers on the pulpit or too near the minister. It is a hazard! Then, too, his view may be obscured by tall flowers. So he plays peek-a-boo. It is all right to put them on the communion table if they are in a dignified holder.

I don't need to say they should be placed in the vase as beautifully as possible. I don't believe they need be arranged as for an exhibit but neither should masses of flowers be stuck into a vase. Natural groupings, loose and flowing are very pretty.

The possibilities of children and flowers grow. A vacant lot might be converted into a garden to furnish the church with flowers. Maybe your class would like that for a project. If you need to raise money, an herb garden would be nice. That wouldn't decorate the church but would smell good and herbs are much in favor now. You can think of other things to do I am sure.

WHERE THERE'S A WALL A-BUILDING.

by HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarden Association.

A friend of mine, Gertrude Jellop, was quite disturbed. It seemed to her that her children's paternal grandparents, who had come to live in her home for a few months, were doing less than nothing to help build a lasting friendship between themselves and their grandchildren, seven-year-old Throck and four-year-old Janey. It appeared, rather, that a wall was being built between them. I mentioned this to a child-psychologist, who is a neighbor of ours.

"Probably, this apparent lack of which you speak," he replied, "is not intentional on the part of the grandparents. It is likely that they desire this companionship but are at a loss to know how to go about establishing it. They may have very little imagination, or perhaps, mentally they have been traveling in a rut and find it difficult to start new ways of thinking. There are any number of possible explanations for their behavior—besides indifference."

"What would you suggest?" I asked. Then I continued, "Gertrude spoke of her mother, saying she is always doing something to win the children's devotion, respect, admiration, and friendship. This grandmother, however, has had an unusually broad experience. Before her marriage she was a teacher, and, after having been left a widow, she not only reared a fine family of seven children, but she followed successfully a career as secretary and interpreter to a South American consul in Washington. Now, she has more than a dozen grandchildren, and she always seems to know what to do for each of them. The paternal grandparents, on the other hand, have no other grandchildren. They have lived in California for years, away from their relatives, and they do not seem to understand boys and girls. As I told you, Gertrude is troubled. What can be done about it?"

My neighbor looked at me searchingly. "You know the family better than I do," he said. "Think the situation over; jot down your suggestions and come back to me."

That night I wrote the following:

1. Tell the grandparents that both youngsters enjoy hearing stories about "when Daddy was a little boy"
2. Plan to have Grandma and Grandpa "in the limelight." For EASTERN VIRGINIA FELLOWSHIP TO MEET.

The Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship Rally will be held on Sunday, September 5, at 3:30 o'clock, with our church in Newport News. Routine business including the election of officers will be transacted. There will also be reports of the National Fellowship Council which was held this summer in Dayton, Ohio.

Supper will be served by the women of the church. Afterwards, there will be a bit of fellowship led by the pastor, Dr. Hardcastle, followed by the installation of the newly elected officers.

MELVIN BUNCH,
President.

NATIONAL LEADERS TO ATTEND AUDIO-VISUAL WORKSHOP.

National and regional leaders in religious education will attend the Fifth International Workshop in Audio-Visual Education to be held at Green Lake, Misc., September 6-11.

Sponsored by the International Council of Religious Education, the workshop will bring together some 200 persons for work and discussion in five aspects of audio-visual education:

1. Program planning and production.
2. Evaluation and guidance for using audio-visual materials.
3. Distribution.
4. Leadership development.
5. Planning and conducting audio-visual institutes and conferences for local church leaders.

The conference will be open primarily to staff and committee members of national, state, provincial, county and city, denominational and interdenominational agencies. A limited number of film librarians and local church leaders will also attend.

Rev. Howard E. Tower, director of department of audio-visual education, Board of Education, The Methodist Church, Nashville, Tenn., will be chairman of the workshop. Miss Pearl Rosser, director of audio-visual and radio education for the International Council, will direct the workshop.

Among 36 other leaders listed in the program are Paul F. Heard, executive secretary of Protestant Film Commission; Prof. Harris Moore, department of cinema, University of Southern California; Prof. Lewis V. Peterson, director of visual aid service, University of Illinois; Prof. W. A. Wittich, director of bureau of visual instruction, University of Wisconsin; Dr. Eric F. Voehringer, associate secretary of the World Council of Christian Education; Rev. William L. Rogers, executive secretary of Religious Film Association; and Rev. Everett C. Parker, director of Joint Religious Radio Committee.

A daily morning assembly will be devoted to discussions of new developments in the field. An evening assembly each day will feature reviews of various types of audio-visual material related to such topics as the Bible, missions, leadership, education, home and family, and evangelism.

THINGS WE HAVE LEARNED ABOUT ALCOHOL.

in amounts far smaller than can ever be registered under the law or by the police as indicating intoxication. In the beginning states, in amounts too small to be appreciated, alcohol slows the reflexes of the body, which we are endowed with to protect ourselves from destruction—the nervous reflex action of the eye, the ear, the muscles which we depend on for safety in this world of speed and power and uncontrolled human association.

The evidence shows that there is no form of human activity so far tested which does not show inferiority of performance as the invariable sequel of the absorption of alcohol. I do not care what you try—adding machines, typewriting, taking dictation—there is no small or large accomplishment that does not show an inferiority of performance after the use of alcohol in amounts smaller than would be recognized as of toxic significance.

Perhaps the most important of all is the positive statement that no evidence of improvement in human health has so far been found to result from the use of alcohol in the normal human being.

Alcohol, as used, causes many times more deaths than the infectious diseases.

Civil authority is limited to reducing opportunities for exploitation by alcohol. Responsibility for correcting conditions rest with the public school system, also on the family physician, the health officer, the visiting nurse, the ministry, the libraries, the press, and the broadcasting stations. No health department, local or state, is to be considered adequate in its program of public service if it fails to use its authority to deal with alcohol as a cause of preventable disease for which it should have a policy and a program.

instance—as there is opportunity in making such comments as: "Grandma made this delicious cake!" "Grandpa caught the largest fish!"

3. Suggest that Grandma and Grandpa play games with the children.

4. Give helpful hints, such as: Throck's favorite candy is marshmallows; Janey likes homemade story books full of babies' pictures—Grandma can easily make one of these.

5. Encourage grandparents and grandchildren to go with each other on short trips and to "do things" together.

6. Talk over with grandparents any grandchild relationship that bothers you or them.

7. Of course, Mother and Dad must remember that the children are small mirrors of themselves. If they treat their parents with consideration and admiration they will be likely to see the same kind of courtesy reflected in the manners of their boys and girls.

I took the list to my neighbor, who, after reading it, said, "It would be better for these suggestions to come from you rather than from me. Emphasize number seven and add an eighth, but put this last one first: 'Encourage the children to do nice things for their grandparents.'"

BARNABAS, A GOOD MAN.

LESSON XI—SEPTEMBER 12, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: He was a good man, full of the Holy Spirit and faith.—Acts 11:24.

SCRIPTURE LESSON: Acts 4:32-37; 11:22-30; 12:25-13:7, 43-52, 14:1-20; 15:1-39; I Corin. 9:6; Gala. 2:1-13; Colos. 4:10.

DEVOTIONAL READINGS Psalm 1:1-6

Bearing one another's Burdens.

Brotherhood in the Early Christian Church meant something more than idle words—it meant bearing one another's burdens. It was Christian Communism, or perhaps a better word is, Christian Communism at its best. Here was this struggling church in Jerusalem in which many of the members did not have much, and many of them did not have enough. So in a glorious sense of brotherhood, those who had shared with the have nots. "Neither was there any among them that lacked." This spirit of brotherhood and burden-bearing went so far that some of the people sold lands and houses and laid the proceeds at the apostles' feet, and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need. It is all a glorious example of the spirit of Christ finding expression among Christ's followers. The church ought to look after its own. In our modern, complex life, it is perhaps inevitable that the State has to administer help to the needy. But the Church cannot thus lightly dismiss its obligation to its needy members.

"Meet Mr. Barnabas."

"And Barnabas—the son of consolation. . . having land, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet." This is our introduction to this man Barnabas. He seems to be well named, the "son of consolation" or "son of encouragement." He evidently had some means, but his possessions had not possessed him, and when he found that he did not have enough ready cash to meet the needs of his fellow-Christians, he forthwith sold a plot of land and gave the money to the "benevolent fund" of the church. All too few of us give out of our current earnings what we ought to give. But how many of us cash our bonds or sell our property to give the proceeds to charity or philanthropy? If first impressions are lasting impressions, we ought to like this fellow Barnabas—he was a grand guy.

"A Son of Encouragement."

As we suggested above this is one interpretation of Barnabas' name. The name was fittingly bestowed and worn. For when we next see Barnabas, he is giving encouragement to a man recently converted to Christianity, who had a bad name to live down, and who was not getting a very good start in living it down. For Paul, recently converted, had come to Jerusalem where he had been give the cold shoulder. Quite naturally in a way, they were afraid of him, and did not believe that he was a disciple. But this great-hearted man vouches for Paul, and spoke in complimentary terms of him and his work. And thus helped Paul over a rough spot. To be sure Paul was not the kind of man to be easily daunted or turned aside from his purpose. But one suspects that if he had been asked late in life concerning the factors which had helped him to "keep the faith" he would have said that it really helped when Barnabas had stood by him in the hour of the skepticism of the leaders of the church. Happy is that young man, or any man, who has some one who believes in him, and who will go to the bat for him.

A Good Man and a Good Name.

When word reached the church at Jerusalem about the work at Antioch, they thought it was wise to send a man down there to look things over. There was none among them who seemed better qualified for the mission than this man Barnabas. "He was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith." His heart rejoiced when he saw evidences of the grace of God in the new church. He could rejoice in another's success, and he himself added his contribution. He soon learned that the work was too big for him, so he set forth to seek a helper. He turned perhaps instinctively to Paul whom he found in Tarsus, and he brought him back to Antioch, where for a year or more this great team preached and taught the people. Barnabas had gumption as well as grace, a combination which is not always possessed by men.

Mission to Jerusalem.

Barnabas was a versatile person. He was undoubtedly a man of good judgment as well as of good character. When there was a difficult and delicate mission, such as the one necessitating the reference of the problem of Gentile Christians and Jewish Christians in the local church, the folks at Antioch sent Paul and Barnabas as their representatives. Barnabas evidently brought to such vexing and vital questions wisdom, sympathy, and a fine spirit. The man was genuine, good, godly.

Foreign Missions Begin to Go Places.

"The Holy Spirit said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work where unto I have called them." Here was a new day in the history of foreign missions. It is significant that when God wanted to launch the things in a larger way, that the Holy Spirit selected Barnabas as one of the team who should launch out into the deep. Until I studied this lesson today I had thought of Barnabas as a laymen, but Acts 13:1 states that there were in the church at Antioch, prophets and teachers, Barnabas and . . . To be sure Barnabas may have been simply a teacher, a lay teacher. But he could have been a prophet also. In any event he was one of the team chosen by God through the Holy spirit operating on the minds and hearts of the church at Antioch, to launch the mission movement on an ambitious plan. What a team these were—Barnabas and Saul. It is significant that in the beginning of the movement, Barnabas is mentioned first. Later the accounts always read, Saul or Paul and Barnabas. Barnabas was a man who could take second place and still play the game. That was another quality of this man's splendid character.

New Meaning to the Word Good.

"For he was a good man." The word good takes on new meaning when it is clothed in flesh and blood in Barnabas. As one reads the story of this man's life, given in such a fragmentary way to be sure, he sees that goodness shades over into godliness. In Barnabas life at least goodness meant sharing even sacrificially, mutual burden-bearing, befriending the needy, dependability, magnanimity, fidelity to trust, and glad and full response to the revealed will of God.

As bad news travels fast and hasty words cause offence, so does a rash act haunt and torment the doer thereof.—Selected.

THE PLACE OF TROUBLE IN THE WORLD.

take the message of this sermon to heart until when trouble comes, you'll meet it with body, mind, and spirit bristling with the question: "What does God want to happen in my life and the lives of others through this?" There is no trouble that can beset you but that it is capable of being turned into something finer in your character and bringing you closer to God. That's the testimony of the Bible, the saints of the Church, and some of your neighbors and fellow-church members. Thus, it is the only to those who know not God that trouble is an awful thing! Trouble is awful to those who will not learn anything through it, who will not turn to God in the midst of it, or who will rebel and harden their heart against God because of it! But, to them that know God, trouble is too full of opportunities to be called "awful!" So, when you tell the story of some fine Christian to whom trouble came, don't let the story stop there! Tell what happened then! Did that Christian turn to God and find His grace sufficient in every need? Did his character take on a more sympathetic, more understanding, and more saintly quality because he had learned through suffering? That is what is important! That is what we should be looking for in the lives of others, and in our own life! If the writer of the letter to the Hebrew was bold enough to declare that even Jesus Christ our Lord learned perfection through suffering, then we should not expect to learn it any other way!

Secondly, if you would triumph through your troubles, live very close to those who have, and are, triumphing! Let their spirit help you! Was your prayer unanswered? Then, get close to Moses and David, both of whom prayed all their lives for the fulfilment of one ambition, and God denied them both. Catch some of the enduring spirit of those men, for they perserved and triumphed in trouble. Or, catch the spirit of that man Paul. He'll help you triumph in your troubles. Furthermore, that is one of the functions of the Christian Church; to be to you, and to others, a fellowship of men and women who come closer to God in trouble, and who thereby make of their troubles for new triumphs of the spirit! In such company, you'll find it easier for you.

But, above all, trust in and companionship with God Himself is the real answer. This God who put you in this world of troubles knows what He's about. You see, if the Christian faith means anything, it means that in Christ God came into the midst of our troubled world and picked up worse scars than we ever pick up! Look long and sensitively at Calvary and see if it isn't the greatest comfort God has to give to a man when it seems as if trouble is throwing its full weight against that man! God, you see, never tried to avoid the troubles of this world either! He's in it with—and for—us! He understands. Listen to this incident in the life of Charles W. Eliot, for 40 years president of Harvard. He suffered in his life-time because his face was disfigured by a birthmark in days when people were more cruel about things than now. One day he was walking down a street when he came across some boys teasing one of their companions because he had a birthmark on his face. Dr. Elliot drove the teasers away, put his arm around the lad, and said: "Look, son. My face is marked too!"

That is what God did at Calvary. He put out nail-pierced arms and a thorn-crowned bloody head, saying: "Look, son. I suffered too!" God refused to make a world in which there was no trouble, because He wanted such men as you and I are to have every possible opportunity for the growing of Christlike spirits. He refused—and, Calvary is what it cost Him! He thought it was worth it! How about you! Have you learned to treasure trouble as a way, by God's grace, to grow up into a spirit like that? My Christian friends, never let a trouble pass without letting God help you drain it of its richest blessing! Thank God that He refused to deny you the opportunity of growing up into perfect manhood—even the manhood of Christ Jesus. Who through suffering was made perfect!

to start little classes to teach others. Foreign missionaries could doubtless teach better, but enthusiasts of this experiment feel that change in the village will be more permanent under the new system.

Since last November, the famed Allahabad Agricultural Institute, the only all-India agricultural college, has been interdenominational. The Presbyterians started this school early in the century, but now the Disciples, Evangelical and Reformed and Methodists, as well as an Anglican society, are represented on the board, under a Disciple chairman.

Traditionally, the Allahabad school down the Ganges Basin from Agra, has tried to promote better agricultural methods so that small peasants, who make up most of India's vast population, will have a better life and be free of the threat of starvation. Now the new principal, Dr. Arthur T. Mosher, 37-year-old Presbyterian with an interdenominational background, and a British Anglican chaplain are experimenting with schemes for linking better Christianity and better farming, in the belief the two go together.

Southwest of Allahabad, on a main railway, is Jubbulpore, where the American Methodists started a theological seminary 25 years ago. During the thirties, the United Church of North India (Presbyterian and Congregational), Mennonites, Disciples, Evangelicals and the United Church of Canada, began official cooperation in running it.

Now, this school, too, is falling into step with the march to union. A constitution has been drawn up to make it a Union Theological College, and enough of the various supporting groups have already given approval to indicated that the change-over will be made within a year.

Steps toward interdenominational support of another college are being made on to the south, at Guntur, in a Lutheran mission area. This is the United Lutheran board's Andhra Christian College, with 1,300 students.

Here are the varied groups which have joined in its support: An Anglican society, 1937; American Baptists, 1946; British, who since have become part of the new Church of South India, 1947. Now the American Lutheran Church is expected to come in, too. Lutheran President H. H. Sipes calls these moves toward "a union college."

Down towards the southern tip of India, at Vellore, is a famous medical work in what has traditionally been a field of the Reformed Church in America. The hospital here was founded by Dr. Ida Scudder, who became so famous that a letter addressed simply, "Dr. Ida, India," reached her.

At the hospital, the doctors and nurses I talked with included representatives of the Baptist, Lutheran, Presbyterian and Anglican Churches and the Church of South India. A medical college has also grown during the last 30 years here, to train Indian women (and now men) to be doctors for various mission hospitals. Thirty-

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

I wish each of you could have been at the orphanage last Saturday to see the wedding of Margaret Bayliff and Stancil Seymour of Rocky Mount, N. C. It was, indeed, the culmination of a week of courtesies extended her by friends of the orphanage and members of the First Christian Church of Burlington, N. C.

Immediately after the write-up in the Burlington Daily News that I quoted in my letter last week, a photographer from the News office came up on Tuesday and took a picture of Margaret and her two attendants, and one of her and me standing in front of the fireplace where the ceremony took place.

Later in the week, Mrs. Vitus Holt, the wife of our Chairman, and Miss Eleanor Fix came up and took Margaret to Burlington and bought her clothes with fifty dollars that their Sunday school class had made up for her. Lucille's Beauty Shop of Burlington gave Margaret a free shampoo and wave. Several people in Burlington sent Margaret money. In addition to the money, Margaret received many nice and useful gifts from various people.

The night of the rehearsal all the children in the Baby Home spent the night at the other buildings. However, they, as well as all the other orphanage children, came in for their share of the cake-cutting refreshments. Mrs. W. W. Sellers of Burlington not only furnished punch for the cake-cutting, but enough for all the children. Mr. Harry Cobb of Burlington furnished individual wedding cakes to go with the punch and at six o'clock on the lawn of the Baby Home, all the children had their "own cake-cutting reception." The wedding cake was made by sisters of two of our matrons in Hillsboro, N. C.

The wedding took place at four o'clock on Saturday afternoon. The two attendants had on simple afternoon frocks of pink and yellow organdy. The two girls had taken natural flowers and made their head-dress from them. Margaret's dress was made from white satin that Wayne Morton of Burlington had given her for a wedding present. It had a fitted bodice, and long sleeves ending in points, trimmed in seeded pearls, over the hands. On her head to hold the finger-tip veil of illusion, Margaret wore a small crown of corded white satin ribbon which was made and presented to her by several little boys of the orphanage. She carried a white orchid on a white Bible. Trolingers Florist of Burlington furnished flowers and decorations for the occasion.

Five minutes before the wedding, all the orphanage children came in body and stood in a space reserved for them. Besides the orphanage personnel, there were at least seventy-five relatives and friends present. It was a very impressive ceremony and one could not help but feel the sacredness of the occasion.

Following the wedding Margaret and Stancil left for a trip to Florida after which they will be at home in Rocky Mount, N. C.

The best wishes of the entire orphanage go with both of you, Margaret and Stancil, for a long and happily married life!

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

This fine group of boys and girls have done good work.

The Friendly Service projects have been completed.

We have given two life membership certificates for Mrs. J. H. Laster and Mrs. J. E. Corbit, charter members.

The cradle roll party was a real joy to the children with a nice collection. We have supported a boy of The Christian Orphanage. Mrs. J. M. Byrum is chairman of this fund.

Mrs. L. E. McCoy has secured a number of subscriptions for the CHRISTIAN SUN through the Society.

We are thankful for such a successful year.

eight different church bodies now support that work.

Then finally, at the port of Madras, there is another work that has blossomed since the war. In charge is an American Episcopalian woman, Dr. E. D. Mason. With her is Miss Dorothy M. Pearson, a nutritionist contributed by the United Church of Canada. Supporting their project is $10,000 from the American churches through Church World Service. Fittingly, the project is carried on at Women's Christian College, the first school in India to be started by several denominations in cooperation.

In Dr. Mason's phase of the project, caged rats are fed various foods to discover how the predominantly rice diet of India should be improved. Already a menu which is much better than rice, but just as cheap, has been developed. Miss Pearson's job is to teach Indian housewives the importance of better nutrition and then how to prepare healthful new dishes that their families will eat. Not only does this mitigate present famine conditions but it lays a road to better living by forming better eating habits.

All down the line, in short, cooperation among the different churches is bringing results in India. Doubtless there are many other examples which I did not see. What I saw, whether it was village welfare work or education, or medicine or ministerial training or relief or health, demonstrated that the churches are learning that by teamwork they can get things done!

The basis of intemperance is the effort to secure through drugs the feeling of happiness when happiness does not exist. Men destroy their nervous system for the tingling pleasures they feel as its structures are torn apart.—President David Starr Jordan of Leland Stanford, Jr., University.

Correction—Rev. J. F. Morgan is the new minister at Windsor, rather than Waverly.

In Memoriam

CHAPMAN.

On August 17, 1948, Mrs. Ollie Chapman, wife of E. D. Chapman, Harrisonburg, Va., died at Rockingham Memorial Hospital, where she had been a patient for only a few days. Her sudden death was a shock to her family and friends.

She was a daughter of Mrs. Mary and the late C. D. Maphis. She is survived by her husband and aged mother.

Mrs. Chapman was a lifelong and faithful member of the Congregational Christian Church at Linville, which she loved and served faithfully to the end. She was a woman of kindly personality and can be commended for her devotion to her invalid mother.

Funeral services were conducted from her late home in Harrisonburg. Services were in charge of Rev. S. E. Madren, a former pastor.

Mrs. MARY DAVIS,
Mrs. EVA HOSAFLOOK,
Committee.

SMITH.

On June 5, 1948, God in His infinite wisdom saw fit to remove from our midst our beloved brother and deacon, Mr. William Joseph Smith.

Mr. Smith has been a loyal member of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church since moving from North Carolina in 1916. He took an active interest in all phases of his church's work until his health failed.

He served on the Board of Deacons for many years. He was quiet, sincere and devoted to his church and community.

Therefore, the Board of Deacons of Holy Neck Church resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will, who doeth all things well.
2. While we mourn the loss of one who meant so much to us, we keep in remembrance his high ideals of Christian service.
3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to family in their hour of sadness, commending them to the Comforter who doeth all things well.

COMMUNISM IN THE U. S. A.

The Communist movement in the United States began to manifest itself in 1919. Since then it has changed its name and its party line whenever expedient. But always it comes back to fundamentals and bills itself as a party of Marxism-Leninism." As such, it stands for the destruction of our American form of government; it stands for the destruction of American democracy; it stands for the destruction of free enterprise; and it stands for the creation of a "Soviet of the United States" and ultimate world revolution.

The preamble of the latest constitution of the Communist Party of the United States proclaims that the party ... "educates the working class, in the course of its day-to-day struggles, for its historic mission, the establishment of socialism."

The phrase "historic mission" means to the Communist, using his own words, "achieving the dictatorship of the proletariat; . . . to raise these revolutionary forces to the surface and hurl them like a devastating avalanche upon the united forces of bourgeois reaction, frenzied at the presentment of their rapidly approaching doom."

In recent years the Communists have been very cautious about using such phrases as "force and violence." Nevertheless, it is the subject of much discussion in their schools and in party caucus, where they readily admit that the only way in which they can defeat the present ruling class is by world revolution.

The Communist realizes that he can create his order in the United States only by "bloody revolution." The History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union is used as a basis for planning their revolution. Their tactics require that to be successful they must have:

1. The will and sympathy of the people.
2. Military aid and assistance.
3. Plenty of guns and ammunition.
4. A program of extermination of the police, as they are the most important enemy and are termed trained Fascists.
5. Seizure of all communications, including radio stations, buses, railroads, and other forms of transportation.

They evade the question of force and violence publicly. They hold that when Marxists speak of force and violence, they will not be responsible—that force and violence will be the responsibility of their enemies. They adopt the novel premise that they do not advocate force and violence publicly, but that, when their class resists to defend themselves, then they are thus accused of using force and violence.

Any who opposes the American Communist, the Communist Party of the United States, is branded as a "disrupter," a "Fascist," a "Red baiter," or a "Hitlerite," and becomes the object of a systematic campaign of character assassination. This is easily understood because the basic tactics of the Communist Party are deceit and trickery.

The great god of the American Communists, Comrade Lenin, in various speeches and writings urged the use of deceit and trickery, and his converts live by this injunction. . . . "The strictest loyalty to the ideas of Communism must be combined with the ability to make all necessary practical compromises, to maneuver, to make agreements, zigzags, retreats and so on, so as to accelerate the coming power.

The march of Red fascism is a cause for concern in America. But the deceit, the trickery, and the lies of the American Communists are catching up with them. Whenever the spotlight of truth is focused upon them, they cry, "Red-baiting."

The numerical strength of the party's enrolled membership is insignificant. But it is well known that there are many actual members who, because of their position, are not carried on party rolls. . . .

One who accepts the aims, principles, and program of the party, who attends meetings, who reads the party press and literature, who pays dues, and who is active on behalf of the party "shall be considered a member." The open, avowed Communist who carries a card and pays dues is no different from a security standpoint than the person who does the party's work but pays no dues, carries no card, and is not on the party rolls. In fact, the latter is a greater menace because of his opportunity to work in stealth.

The burden of proof should be placed upon those who consistently follow the ever-changing party line. Fellow travelers and sympathizers can deny party membership, but they can never escape the fact that they have played into the Communist hands, thus furthering the Communist cause by playing the role of innocent, gullible, or wilful allies. . . .

What can we do? And what should be our course of action? The best antidote to Communism is vigorous, intelligent, old-fashioned Americanism with eternal vigilance. I do not favor any course of action which would give the Communist cause to portray themselves as martyrs. I do favor unrelenting prosecution wherever they are found to be violating our country's laws.

As American's, our most effective defense is a workable democracy that guarantees and preserves our cherished freedoms. . . .—Excerpts from an address by J. Edgar Hoover, Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation, released by the George Washington University.

Power always establishes itself through service and perishes through abuse.—Duruy.

1948--LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE--1948

This is a call to Christian thought and action.

On Labor Sunday Christians should give special emphasis to the practical decisions that economic life daily forces men to make. Christian principles are involved in these decisions. It is the responsibility of churches to help men to discover what these principles are and what they mean for men as producers and consumers, as investors and citizens. The Church is under a divine imperative to call all men—but first its own members—to recognize God's lordship over individual souls and the whole of life—the home, the farm, the factory, the market place, the banking house, and every form of associated activity in the community, nation and world. It is his will that his kingdom come on earth among men.

All the resources of the earth are gifts of God to all nations and peoples. Under the laws of men they become property, but God remains the absolute owner of "the earth and the fullness thereof." This means that every form of human ownership or control or use of property is a trust with responsibility to God and one's fellow men. It must be kept under the most severe scrutiny in the light of the purpose of God's creation.

According to the Christian faith each person is made in the image of God, and hence has dignity and worth whatever his work or status. Hence, the worker must never be treated as a commodity but always as a person, whose well-being depends in large part upon the rewards and conditions of his labor.

No economic system fully serves the common good. No such system fully expresses the will of God. Improvement of economic arrangements is, therefore, the obligation of all Christians. It is their duty to see that economic arrangements serve human welfare and that the welfare of society is not sacrificed for the sake of the economic system. All systems must be tested by the extent to which they conform to God's will as revealed in Christ.

What then are principles and objectives which should guide Christians in their judgment upon economic institutions and in the personal decisions which they make in their various occupations?

1. There should be a minimum standard of living to which every person has access. Such a minimum should be sufficient for health, cultural growth, and protection against hardships beyond one's control. It must be recognized that such a minimum standard will be conditioned by the relation of production to population.

2. All persons have the moral right to equal opportunities to develop their capacities. To make equal opportunities available to all children and youth is therefore a special responsibility of the Christian community.

3. Every able-bodied man and woman has the moral right and duty to serve the community in the home, through work under conditions that assure fair compensation, and in voluntary community service.

4. Economic decisions are in large measure group decisions for which both political and economic forms of organization are necessary. The Christian's responsibility includes his taking a vigorous part in those political and economic activities which hold the greatest promise for the realization of Christian objectives. All persons have a moral right to such participation regardless of race, creed, color, or sex.

5. The churches have been right in giving encouragement to the development of the labor movement, both as an instrument for the securing of greater economic justice and as source of both dignity and morale for workers. Yet, in specific issues that may today separate labor and management, the Church should not prejudge the rightness of either group. While making judgments in particular cases, it should concentrate on the encouragement of all those processes which are in harmony with its ministry of reconciliation.

6. Every national policy must be judged by its consequences for the lives of people in all lands and by its effect upon the economic basis for a peaceful world. There should be tolerance toward the economic experiments and institutions of other peoples, though these must be judged by the same moral principles as our own.

Labor Sunday presents a clear call to every Christian to consider earnestly the possibility and the means of attaining a more Christian economic life than now exists. It summons him to re-examine his own relationships as employer or employee, as buyer or seller. It requires each Christian to reevaluate his position on the grave economic issues that have emerged upon the field of political action. Labor Sunday calls him to ask of himself and to give answer—after rigid self-analysis—concerning his economic activities: Am I right or wrong? Am I selfish or generous? Am I loving my neighbor as myself, or am I taking an unfair advantage over him? How truly Christian am I in my part of the economic life of this nation and of the world?

Religious Radio Credo

By DR. ROSS SNYDER

Delivered over CBS's "Church of the Air" on Sunday, August 22

We are devoted to the use of radio . . . that the greatness that is within every man, shall be awakened: that those who have experienced life deeply may speak of "life as they see it": that each citizens be offered the best that man has been able to discover of that which is real and can be trusted . . . the faiths by which men live.

We are devoted to the use of radio that man shall be linked to man in justice and forbearance: that people shall speak to peoples . . . the walls dividing groups of men be crumpled and overlapped: that no longer we evade fellow man, nor strike terror to his heart, nor darken his understanding: that in this day of awakening of new peoples, and the downfall of others, men shall find membership in the "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

We are devoted to the use of radio that a right spirit be renewed within us: that the erosion of spirit within all men everywhere be overcome and the floods of fear mastered: that the voice of religious conscience may speak to each citizen as we face together the issues and problems which determine our common fate.

We are devoted to the use of radio that good thinking take place in a climate of freedom: that men shall speak fearlessly the truth as they see it, transmit to each other the words and images which give trustworthy meaning to our life together: that we understand the life story of every man: how he rises with hope, seeking the Promised Land: is misled and misleads others into a wilderness, suffers from his own and others' evil: and seeks a redemption.

We are devoted to the use of radio that the communication of glad tidings and the proclamation of the gospel of peace shall be carried to the ends of the world: and the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the air waves cover the earth.

News Flashes

Congratulations to Rev. and Mrs. S. E. Madren of Elkton, Va., on the birth of a daughter, Elizabeth Anne.

Rev. and Mrs. Kenneth D. Register announce the birth of a son, John Kenneth, on Sunday, July 25, 1948.

Dr. F. C. Lester is assisting Rev. R. E. Newton in the second week of revival services at Leaksville.

Dr. I. W. Johnson was assisted in a revival meeting last week at Oakland by the Rev. R. E. Brittle. There were many reconsecrations and thirty-four new members received. This brings Dr. Johnson's total thus far this year to eighty-eight.

Conference and Convention representatives will gather at Henderson, N. C., Thursday, September 16, to make plans for the carrying out of the mandates of the Southern Convention with special study of the "Plan of Advance" and of the increased Conference Apportionments.

Dr. Wm. H. Morgan of Ashville and Boone, N. C., was licensed September 2 at Elon College to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. Dr. S. C. Harrell, chairman of the Committee on the Ministry of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, performed the licensing with Rev. W. J. Andes leading the prayer. Those present for the service were: Rev. Kenneth Register, president of the Conference, Rev. W. W. Stevens, Dr. D. J. Bowden and Mrs. W. H. Morgan. Dr. Morgan is a teacher at Appalachian State Teachers College at Boone and is a member of our Church in Asheville. We welcome him to the ministry.

DR. STANLEY HARRELL RESIGNS.

The following rather surprising piece of news was part of a letter just received from Dr. Stanley C. Harrell by the Editor:

"At the morning service yesterday (September 6), I tendered my resignation as pastor of the Durham Church. According to the church constitution a 90-day notice must be given if either church or pastor contemplates a severance of the pastoral relationship.

"We have had a very pleasant and peaceable relations for twenty-nine years come next November, and no untoward event is responsible for my resignation. I just 'sorter' have a feeling that churches may deserve a change every twenty-five or thirty years, lest things get into a rut."

CONVOCATION ON RURAL CHURCH.

The fifth annual National Convocation on the Church in Town and Country will be held in San Jose, California, November 9-11.

More than 1,000 rural clergymen, religious educators, rural community leaders and government officials from the United States and Canada are expected to attend the gathering.

The Convocation is sponsored by the Committee on Town and Country of the Home Missions Council of North America, the Federal Council of Churches, and the International Council of Religious Education; Dr. Landis is secretary of the Committee.

The conference is held each year to afford opportunity for exchange of new ideas on new techniques for the rural church and for discussion of current issues affecting agriculture. During the Convocation twenty commissions are assigned to discuss such topics as migrant farm labor, agricultural colleges, women in rural life, and urban-rural relations, etc.

One of the highlights of this year's program will be a forum on "The 160-Acre Water Limitation of the Federal Reclamation Law." A bill to repeal this law has been before Congress since 1944.

Prominent speakers at the Convocation will include Dr. Paul Landis, Dean of Washington State College, Pullman, Wash.; Dr. Mark A. Dawber, Executive Secretary of the Home Missions Council of North America, New York; Dr. Elliott L. Fisher, Director of Town and Country Work, The Methodist Church, N. Y.; The Rev. John B. Ketchum, Director of Field Administration, International Council of Religious Education, Chicago, Ill.; and Dr. Paul S. Taylor, Professor of Economics, University of California, Berkeley, Calif.

NEED HELP OF RELIGION TO COMBAT DRINK HABIT.

Liquor has a way of drowning timidity and loosening a halting tongue so that an ordinarily bashful individual thinks he has become the life of the party.

Drinking habits do not grow out of a taste for liquor so much as a feeling of inferiority or loneliness. The only time some men or women feel able to meet the world bravely is after their troubles have been dulled by the narcotic influence of alcoholic drink. The fact that happiness based on a state of intoxication is artificial and aggravates the very condition which the drinker is seeking to avoid, does not relieve the situation. It merely serves to underscore the truth that a permanent solution to the alcohol problem must take account of psychological and psychopathic issues along with the well known moral and social questions.

Liquor laws are necessary to restrain those who cannot control themselves, but the liquor problem will not be solved until men's minds and hearts have been so changed that the desire for drink is completely removed. Psychiatry is meeting with some success in curing the drink habit, but it does not go far enough. Only a true religious experience can do what is needed to transform the alcohol craver into one who no longer desires to compensate for some defect of personality by taking to strong drink.

Basically the liquor problem is caused by lack of religious motivation in life, and the solution is a strong and active religion. Every minister and Sunday school teacher who is helping to build strong character and develop well-balanced personality is a strong opponent of the liquor traffic. The Church by strengthening men's lives is powerfully combatting the organized forces of alcohol. These things being so, let us work and pray that the Church and all its leaders and workers will rise to their full responsibility and mission as the world's greatest agency for temperance and abolition of intoxicating liquor.—Editorial in The Otterbein Teacher, Sunday School Quarterly of the Evangelical United Brethren Church.

When the old Spanish mariners, in their explorations, touched any new land, the first thing they did was to run up the flag of Ferdinand and Isabella to the masthead on the highest point that they could reach on the new land. Every new shore was claimed for Spain. The sovereigns that encouraged the explorations of these Spanish mariners were acknowledged when the first foot touched the new shore. Ah, man! when you get your new situation, when you set up your new home, when new circumstances arrive in your life, it is grand to run up the flag of God's Son, and say: "This new situation—this new era in my life—will be acknowledgment of God in the person of His Son."—John Robertson.

“Bought With a Price”

By JAMES E. CHESSOR

“Ye are not your own; for ye were bought.” (I Cor. 6:19, 20.) No saint is his own; he was bought. Nor is any man lawfully his own. He may boast of “unalienable rights,” but there is a “higher law” than the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. No “Bill of Rights” can make a man his own. His Creator and Supreme Governor holds over him the supreme right and prerogative.

“Ye are not your own.” Is that not a strange statement? As if a man did not possess himself—his soul, his body, his mind, his house and lands, his time and talents. Man, the paragon of animals, yet in his own right possessing less than any animal, any fowl of the air, any denizen of the earth. Apart from Christ, we are nothing, we possess nothing. In Christ we may be poor as the world counts riches, but rich with him, rich toward God, possessing boundless wealth. “The foxes hath holes (dens), and the birds of the heaven have nests (lodging places); but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.” (Matt. 8:20.) If Jesus, having made all things and having redeemed his own, possessed in his earthly ministry less than the fowls and the foxes, we need not count on great riches nor much ease in this life. Often we may be poorer than the sorrowing Man of Galilee because of our sins, willfulness, greed, and wrong ways. We may have less, and suffer more ills and ill treatment, not without cause. “He was in the world, and the world was made through him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own (Greek, “his own things”), and they that were his own received him not.” (John 1:10, 11.) Hence, “the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.” We hold nothing in our own right; we cannot do as we will with “our own things.” We can possess no more of goods and prerogative than Jesus, by virtue of his own conquest, wills to bestow upon us. We are not our own; we possess nothing in our own right—neither life, nor death, nor things present, nor things to come.

I shall now quote all of my text: “Know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have from God? and ye are not your own; for ye were bought with a price: glorify therefore in your body.” Here are grand truths, profound revelations: (1) we are the temple of the Holy Spirit; (2) we are not our own, having been bought with a price; (3) therefore, we should glorify God in our bodies and spirits. Christ owns us by two indisputable claims—he made us; he bought us. How ungrateful if we do not allow him to possess us, to live in us, to control us, to glorify us with his own glory! “Ye are not your own,” but members of Christ, God’s building, the dwelling place of the Holy Spirit. “Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ?” (Verse 15.) Poor as we are in and of ourselves, in Christ we are exceeding rich. We are his temple, the temple of the Spirit, our glorious, abiding Guest, the representative of God, of Christ. And this Guest maketh intercession for us (as Christ doth also) “with groanings which cannot be uttered.” Herein are we rich. As the Shekinah dwelt in the temple of Israel, so the Holy Spirit dwells in Christ’s temple, which we are. But, mark you, he will not dwell in a defiled or polluted temple. Once, and twice, Jesus cleansed the temple of his Father—later that temple, the pride of Jerusalem and all Jewry, was destroyed! Our Savior hath cleansed his temple, the church, and each one of us; but it takes some effort on our part as individual members of Christ to keep ourselves pure and clean. If we fail, we shall be destroyed! As members of Christ, his holy temple, we have no right to use our bodies and minds according to our own pleasure.

“Ye are not your own; for ye were bought with a price.” And that price, beyond all computation! It is the price of millions of souls, of millions of lives. Each soul is worth more

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.
Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

VACATION.

Albert E. Day once remarked that he had been dissipating homiletically. That is the best kind of ministerial dissipation. St. Paul indulged in this variety.

The editor spent the major part of this year's vacation preaching. He supplied three Sundays at First Christian Church, Portsmouth, his former pulpit. There he renewed old acquaintances, formed new ones and observed the fine work which is progressing under the leadership of Rev. W. Stanley Carne.

A week was spent with Rev. Joseph McCauley at the Centerville Church. Many trips had been made up and down the highway from Petersburg to Suffolk without realizing the fine homes, excellent farms, and loyal church members living nearby. Centerville is not a large church, but it ministers to the spiritual needs of some of God's elect. The happy relationship which exists between pastor and people is indicative of a healthy church. It was a grand experience to visit this church and become personally acquainted with the members.

Another week was spent with the Rev. R. E. Newton at Leaksville. Visits were made at all of Pastor Newton's churches and many points of interest throughout the Valley of Virginia. It is refreshing to see these energetic, consecrated people at work and worship. We may be justly proud of Leaksville and the surrounding churches of the Valley Conference.

Suggestions have been made at various intervals about the possibility of establishing churches in Elkton, Luray and elsewhere in the Valley. It is regrettable that we have not done so already. Perhaps it is not too late. Here are prosperous and growing cities, flanked or surrounded by rural churches. Churchmanship for our day demands a new vision and a new strategy. We need to heed the call of God to "go forward."

Pastors Newton and McCauley are typical of the faithful men who serve throughout our Convention. They have their problems, but they also have their promises. Patient and unassuming, they follow in the footsteps of the Good Shepherd. Thank God for our consecrated pastors.

ACROSS THE EDITOR'S DESK.

Here is an unusual card. The writer offers a plan, states that he "would be pleased to learn your results, exchange ideas and answer questions. No charge. Nothing to sell." Unique.

What is the plan? It is an economical way to air-condition your church and increase attendance in hot weather. Mr. E. R. Tibbets, a retired engineer, offers this plan: "Your building may easily be made comfortable for Sunday mid-day service by filling it with cool night air. Open all doors and windows, especially highest windows, before mid-night Saturday. High ceiling permits abundant storage from which cool air descends to replace warm air exhaled by the people. At sunrise the temperature is up to 20 per cent cooler than at noon. Close all openings one hour after sunrise Sunday and keep closed during mid-day service. Run circulating fans if available during service. Also if you have suction fans in ceiling or gables, run to draw warm air from area above windows and replace with cool night air. Shut off one-half hour after sunrise. Never run suction fans when air is warmer outside than inside."

Correspondence will reach Mr. Tibbets at Moore Building, San Antonio 5, Texas. Why not try his plan?

GENERATOR NEEDED AT SHAOWU HOSPITAL.

Rev. James E. Walter, Project Secretary for the American Board, has forwarded this paragraph from a letter by Dr. Edward C. Riggs:

"As for the question of future projects, at present there is one matter on my mind. When we secured an X-ray machine for the hospital through UNRRA, and then discovered that Dick Jackson's portable generators were not powerful enough to supply the necessary current for it, I authorized the X-ray specialist for the International Relief Committee of China to go ahead and purchase for us a larger generator, which will cost about $1,000, and will be ready for delivery some time this fall, and told him that I would guarantee payment for same out of my own personal funds. We need the X-ray and the generator desperately, and I am still willing to pay for it myself. But now that my personal status is changed, and I have family financial responsibilities to look forward to, such as education of children, etc., I am less reluctant than I was before to appeal for help in meeting that bill. If you should happen to run across any person or group who would like to help us share the load, we would certainly appreciate it."

Mr. Walter states: "The generator is not in the regular budget of the American Board, but unbudgeted apportionment credit will be received for gifts to this project. . . . The spirit of Dr. Riggs is such that all of us are eager to have a part in whatever project he thinks of as significant and important." Pray that the way may be found to supply this essential need.

It is not at all likely that any one ever had a totally original idea. He may put together old ideas into a new combination, but the elements which made up the new combination were mostly acquired from other people. Without many borrowed ideas there would be no inventions, new movements or anything else that is classed as new.—Dr. George Grier.

HUMANITY'S NEED—THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

A Sermon

By J. EVERETTE NEESE,
Bay View Church,
Norfolk, Va.

"I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine."—John 10:14.

Our prehistoric forefathers who lived in caves and fought with clubs had little and expected little but still were not without their needs. Our forefathers of the centuries before and the centuries following Christ lived a pastoral or agricultural or industrial life which, too, was not void of its needs. Thus it seems to have been from the very beginning of man unto this hour that humanity—with all its abilities for acquisition, its powers of reasoning and its surplus of supplies—has always and eternally been in need.

These needs may be catalogued under the headings unimportant (things of lesser value), important (things of great value) and super-important (whereunder is classified the needs of the soul). Herein is where man's lethargy is centered. Herein is where the sin of procrastination takes its greatest toll. Herein is where lies the spiritual anemia that brings death to untold numbers regularly throughout the ranks of Christendom.

We have not yet taken the Gospel seriously. We have spent little or no time in a study of how to relate our lives to God and His purpose for us. If there is one truth we need to learn it is "that an A-1 Gospel cannot arise from a C-3 theology. Our creed should not determine the Christ, but our Christ should fashion our creed."

Today we stand as one great human family in the throes of need and there is one in whom the solution to our need can be found. One, who, with reverence approached the temple but with indignation drove therefrom those who were capitalizing on the worshippers who came to offer sacrifice for their sins. One who has gone before us to prepare the way and calls back to you and me in words unmistakably clear, "Follow me." It is the Good Shepherd.

The one problem to be faced in introducing God's Word to the modern mind is that there are many who find it difficult to understand the metaphors of the Scripture. As you well know, a metaphor is "a figure of speech in which one object is likened to another by speaking of it as if it were the other."

Thus it is rather difficult for those born and reared away from the quiet of the country to understand the relationship between a shepherd and his sheep. And, too, not only do we rarely see sheep, but at present they are treated somewhat differently than did our Palestinian forefathers.

However, even though twenty centuries exist between us and the shepherds of Palestine in the first century, today as then, the caretaker of the sheep still calls to them.

I. The Palestinian Shepherd.

If it were possible for you and me to project ourselves into the centuries around the beginning of the Christian era we would then be able to thoroughly understand the relationship existent between the shepherd and his sheep.

Around the hills of Palestine we would see the shepherd going ahead of his flock. At times he would be carrying a lamb or an injured sheep across his shoulders. His dress would be traditional to that the shepherds have always worn—a flowing Bedouin head-veil held in place by two black twisted chords; perhaps a sheepskin coat with the fleece inside and sandals of leather tied with straps. The darkness of his skin would be the result of long hours and days exposed to the heat of the sun's rays.

He would not be driving his sheep as one would drive cattle, but walking ahead of them as their leader; directing them into new pastures and beside cool streams of water. When he would call to them we would not understand the language, but the sheep would and they would follow him.

The story is told of two shepherds who, one stormy night, took refuge with their flocks in a cave. During the night the sheep were herded together and one would readily expect all of them to be of one flock. But next morning when the time of departure came the shepherds emerged from the cave and stood some distance from each other and from the sheep. Each then began to call his own. One after another went to each shepherd until, when the count was made, each had the correct number of his flock.

How metaphorically applicable indeed are the words of John, "He that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep . . . and he calleth his own sheep by name and leadeth them out. And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him for they know his voice. . . . This parable spake Jesus unto them. . . . I am the good shepherd, and I know my sheep, and am known of mine. . . . And I lay down my life for the sheep." (John 10:2, 3, 4, 6, 14, 16.)

What more can be said?

II. Your Shepherd and Mine.

As in the tone of the first century metaphor Jesus still calls his sheep to him for he is, as says the writer of Hebrews, "The great shepherd of the sheep" (13:20) who loves, cares for and protects those under his care.

Here we can note a contrast.

There is indeed a difference between the shepherd and one who is hired to look after the sheep. In the face of impending danger the hireling thinks of his own welfare and leaves the sheep to cope with the danger alone while he seeks safe refuge. What happens to the sheep is of little concern to him for his interests are self-centered.

Note the contrast!

The shepherd, the real shepherd thinks not of his own welfare but the welfare of his flock. He cares for them because they want someone to care for them. He protects them because they are his own and look to him for protection.

Is our position unlike that of the sheep? Is humanity without the need of someone to care for it? Are we sufficient within ourselves? Have we need of nothing? What is your answer?

As for me I take my stand with the sheep in need of a shepherd. Someone whose love and care bridges time and space and meets my need. Someone whose protection spans the chasm of my coldness and ingratitude and sustains me in my hours of need. Someone whose redemptive arms reach down to reclaim me from the cesspool of evil into which I fall and stand in need.

Many times in life we wander away from the fold of protection and loving care. Isaiah has so aptly characterized us in the words, "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned everyone to his own way" (53:6). This is so very true. Mankind has gotten far off the beaten track to the Father's house. But we

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Our Southern Convention is made up of a goodly people, and we have at times set some inspiring records. We have 201 churches with 33,539 members, and there are about 80 active pastors. We publish THE CHRISTIAN SUN; promote Missions at home and abroad; provide for aged ministers, their widows and orphans; maintain a central Convention Office; operate an A-grade college—Elon; support the Christian Orphanage; carry forth a program of Christian education; have Convention and Conference organizations for men, for women, for youth. We raised last year for Convention and Conference Apportionments $67,784. Our churches raised last year for their local expenses $550,368. We raised a total for Benevolences and Missions for others through our Conferences $134,165.

We are a team. A great team. We belong to each other in our work for the Kingdom, in our fellowship with one another and in our combined efforts to serve our Lord as a constituent part of His Church. We need to work together, think together, act together. We need to pray for wisdom to know, and inspiration to do the will of God. There is much real cross-bearing to be done, much unseen and unsung tedium that has to go on in order that root and trunk and branch may be in position to do their part in fruit bearing. Let us love one another, and work together, and not be weary in well-doing. God will give rich and gracious increase—more abundant that we realize if we do faithfully, prayerfully and joyously our part.

Every individual in the local church, committees of larger and lesser organizations in the local church, all have their essential place. Each one who does a little, first-hand task well abets the larger body and helps to win the final success. Everyone counts and is counted, and is counted upon. Let no one feel his is too little a contribution, nor his position too inconspicuous. God lifts the hand that lifts the "cup of water."

For instance, on Thursday, September 16, at the Henderson Congregational Christian Church, at 10:30 a. m., representatives of all boards, institutions, convention committees, each of our five conferences, and each of our three women's conferences, our laymen's council and our Pilgrim Fellowship will meet for a day to plan how we may carry out the Convention's request for "a plan of advance." It is not a formidable task for if we learn the road and follow it faithfully and steadily we shall arrive. There is to be no dictation, simply a representative study of plans that may serve to answer the question of how we may best be a team and work together. Freedom without plan is freedom without much purpose, and often little fruit. One is your Master—even Christ—who commands us to love one another and to bear one another's burdens. New people need to be interested in the Christian faith, new churches need to be built, new fields need to be fortified in the homeland, and in homes far from us but near to the heart of God.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

"GET THEM AND GET THEM YOUNG."

English brewers advised the "trade." Isn't that the gist of this diabolical scheme Brewers Digest in May, 1941, sent out, from which I quote. "Here is the chance (our chance it might truthfully have read) for brewers to cultivate a taste for beer in millions of young men who will be the largest beer consuming portion of our population."

Who would even have dreamed as they read the humane promises if repeal carried, that in a few years (1934-1941) the traffic would have felt safe to give that message to the general public?

Where were the moral and Christian forces of the United States when that plan was made public and went by almost without notice? Drugged. The drug? Money. Yes, money. The traffic would pay the license, and the license would pay the taxes. See? Now see how well their plans worked out.

No more unemployment. Boston added 300 police to the force. Women and girls found employment as bar maids. Employment for millions we were told. True. Thousands in a year have been killed in auto accidents since repeal. In fact, 378,094 met death in auto accidents between 1933 and 1941. (National Safety Council.)

Every death gave employment to doctors, nurses, hospitals, undertakers. Every death meant a coffin, grave diggers, funeral homes, police to investigate the accident, employment even for lawyers and ministers. Millions found employment caring for the millions who have been injured in auto accidents by drunken drivers. What an army of employees. Great! But does America expect to thrive with this kind of employment?

Repeal was to bring the end of crime. Let's not forget that. Our daily papers report, however, no shrinkage in that line.

Are we any better off under repeal mentally, physically, morally or financially? Just when or how are we to emerge from this dense moral fog? It certainly will take courage, self-sacrifice, loss of popularity so dear to many, even greater for many than love of our native land.

What did America give in exchange for the ease repeal was to give? The respect of the nations of the world as our drunken soldiers staggered and caroused in foreign lands.

"I have heard more profanity, vulgar and lewd language, God's name blasphemed by American soldiers in India in two months than I have heard in India in eighteen years of missionary service," said Rev. August A. Berg, Baptist Missionary, of Jarg Jur, India.

I have lived the life of the temperance movement in America since 1873. I was eleven years old then. Conditions were no better then than they are today. Then a few brave souls, five women, my mother was one of them, invaded the saloons of Decatur, Michigan, holding prayer meetings. Easy then? Seventy-five years ago Women's Rights "had not won the day" and women were not the leaders, free to enter any door closed to them. Seventy-five years ago for a woman to "speak in meeting" took supreme courage, but that same spirit of resistance spread and the saloon had to go. In 1947 a state committee at a cost of $5,000 found repeal had cost Massachusetts $61,000,000 to care for the wreckage—1,500 children wards of Boston from homes wrecked by alcohol—a part of the wreckage—and received from licenses $13,439,266.79. Paid for by taxes and "tax on beer will pay the taxes."

I remember enough of my geometry to know that parallel lines never meet. At this rate will license money and the cost of the wreckage caused by alcohol ever meet in prosperity?

Christ has furnished the church with all that is needful for her support and growth in grace.—D. L. Moody.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

FOUNDER'S DAY POSTPONEMENT.

Prior to the war Elon College began the practice of observing Founder's Day. On this day some outstanding friend who had been of great service to the college was honored with a special program of recognition. At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees in May it was voted to resume this practice and on recommendation of the President, the Trustees directed that the program of celebration should be in honor of the late Dr. W. A. Harper, fourth president of the college.

Dr. Harper served the college as president for twenty years. Prior to his election as president he served the college as Professor of Latin for a number of years.

In light of the above facts it seemed good and proper that the college should recognize the services of Dr. Harper and honor his name. Dr. O. C. Carmichael, a former president of Vanderbilt University, under whom Dr. Harper served after his resignation as president of Elon College was asked to deliver the principal address. Dr. Carmichael is now associated with the Carnegie Foundation in New York City. At the time of the invitation Dr. Carmichael was in Europe and could not give an answer until his return around the first of August. Previous engagements prevented his acceptance. In the meantime, the writer was in the hospital for an operation which kept him in bed for two weeks and partially incapacitated for another week. On July 28, on the advice of his doctor he went to bed and to the hospital for treatment. The surgeon promises that he may attend faculty meeting on Friday morning, September 3. This unexpected, protracted illness and Dr. Carmichael's inability to accept the invitation to deliver the principal address made it necessary to postpone this important occasion until a more convenient date.

Founder's Day observance will in all probability be observed in connection with our Christian Workers Conference in February, 1949. The Christian Workers Conference is in honor of another great churchman and true friend of the college, the late Colonel Edward Everett Holland. Colonel Holland was a member of the original Board of Trustees and served the college in that capacity during the remainder of his life. The Christian Workers Conference at Elon College was established by Mrs. E. E. Holland, the widow of Colonel Holland. Mrs. Holland is giving $10,000 to establish this conference. The funds are to constitute a part of the permanent funds of the college. They will be invested and the income therefrom will be used to defray the expenses of the conference so as to assure its continuance. The purpose of the Christian Workers Conference is to bring together church and Sunday school officials, with other key workers in our local churches, for a series of lectures and discussions on pending church problems and future programs by outstanding churchmen and eminent educators. Work has already begun on the program. Due announcements will be made from time to time concerning this conference as the program progresses.

The first Christian Workers Conference was held two years ago in which the Southern Convention through its Superintendent, then Dr. F. C. Lester, and the President of the Woman's Missionary Board, then Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, cooperated in building its program and in all the details of the conference. They also shared in the expense of the undertaking. These two organizations of the church have not only been invited but are earnestly requested to share in every phase of the approaching conference.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

When the church proposed the building of a college, it knew that considerable money would be required. Grounds had to be secured, buildings erected, faculty employed, and salary provided for the first year. It also knew that the college could not and would not be self-supporting; that the church would be required to provide additional funds annually. Yet, in spite of what might seem to be financial burdens, the church went right ahead. They founded, built the college, and proceeded with its support. The apportionment plan, later adopted by the Convention and passed on to the conferences, has proven most effective. For a number of years, there were some churches which did not pay their apportionment, but now, practically all churches in the Convention support the college, and all with but few exceptions, pay their apportionments in full. The college is greatly indebted to the church, not only for its founding, but for its continued support through the years.

THE DRUNKEN DRIVER GETS OFF EASY.

Morally, there is no difference between the criminal who will deliberately shoot a man down in cold blood and the automobile owner who, while driving under the influence of liquor, runs a man down and kills him. The latter has deliberately dulled his senses to where he can no longer delineate between right and wrong.

Each is equally guilty of homicide. It is comparatively easy to convict the man who uses the gun, but police officers find it very difficult to press charges and convict a man (or woman) for drunken driving. It is hard to prove that a person is under the influence of liquor. Witnesses won't testify for fear of making enemies. The police, who investigate traffic accidents immediately, can see the offending driver staggering around drunk; they can smell alcohol on his breath; they can see him taken home in a blind stupor; yet when they testify in court, their evidence is often disregarded.

About the only thing that will stand up in court in these cases is a medical laboratory report proving that alcohol was present in the offender's blood at the time of the accident, and such a test is usually impossible.

Therefore, your drunken driver, cold, sober, penitent, and the image of upstanding good citizenship when he finally is brought into court, takes a $10 fine for reckless driving or disorderly conduct and leaves the court room little worse for the experience, ready to again go about his business of endangering lives and property.

Take a sledge hammer while cold sober and cave in the hood of someone's car for just plain maliciousness and you will probably get the book thrown at you in court. But get plastered and do the same thing by driving your car into another and chances are you will get off easy.

It just doesn't add up.—Exchange.

REPORT FROM CHINA.

By REV. RICHARD L. JACKSON.

It has been several months since I have written to our Southern Convention friends and much has happened in the meantime. I will attempt to summarize realizing that, of necessity, much will be left unsaid.

The Situation in China.

We continue to hear from North China that the military situation is rapidly deteriorating. There is more and more talk of missionaries and church workers moving South. Four American Board women, including Miss Louise Meebold who visited the Southern Convention in 1946, are in Communist captured territory. They hope they will be permitted to continue their work. No word can come out and we hope for the best. It is generally known that to work and live in Communist occupied territory is no easy thing to do.

The situation in the South is reflected in the tremendous rise in prices and in the corresponding devaluation of the currency. One U. S. dollar will buy $10,000,000 in Chinese currency. As I write this letter, I am on a small rice boat going back up to Shaowu (it takes seven days to go 250 miles) carrying one billion dollars with me—all in $40,000 notes. By the time I reach Foochow the value of the currency will have further depreciated. The price of rice has tripled in a month which is a pretty serious thing for the Chinese who have difficulty making ends meet. No wonder many resort to banditry and communism to get enough to eat.

Our Family.

I (Dick) will soon be back in Shaowu after a restful vacation on Kuliang mountain, a vacation spot for missionaries just outside of Foochow. Our young son began to thrive the minute he got out of the intense Foochow heat. He is doing fine now and is a real joy to his parents. The baby foods and clothing many of you sent will take care of his needs for some time to come. We are surely grateful to you for them as they are unobtainable here. Dorothy and Lewis will remain on Kuliang until fall. I will return to Foochow to bring them back up when Miss Burr Arrives in September. We will come back together in the new Ford truck given us by CNRRA, if the roads are repaired by that time.

Han Mei School.

The Han Mei (Chinese-American) Primary, Junior and Senior High School will open its doors again this fall after having been closed for seventeen years. A fine young man, Mr. Silas Chang (brother of Timothy Chang) has been secured to serve as principal. He is an enthusiastic and earnest worker and a devoted Christian. About 200 students are enrolled for the fall term. We expect great things from the school and trust it will provide leadership in the years to come for our Christian work. Just as in the Southern Convention, most of the leaders are Elon graduates, the present leadership in our churches, schools and other institutions here are all former Han Mei graduates.

The Shaowu Christian Hospital.

This fall the hospital carries on as usual its ministry of healing. Frances Riggs is busy delivering babies and conducting baby clinics in addition to her work as superintendent of nurses—and being Mrs. Riggs. Unfortunately these inflationary times cause many baffling financial problems to arise but we hope a way will be found to meet them.

The Churches.

After a week in Shaowu I, together with Dr. Ed and Nurse Frances, will attend the last of our four district laymen training conferences in Kienning (four days' walk from Shaowu). The conferences have been well attended and should have an influence for good in the work of the church.

I have been much encouraged by the apparent return to life of the Yankou church. A year ago, the 80-year-old minister (who spent most of his time working for the Seventh Day Adventist Church) and one other member had a strange hold on the church. The young people were told they were not needed or wanted. Mr. Lin Chang Liang, who graduated from the Foochow Union Seminary in the spring, became very much discouraged at first, but now signs of progress are evident. Last Sunday morning I preached there to an almost full church (about 70 people). That afternoon an election of officers was held and in a democratic fashion, a new group of people was elected including several young people. It was a thrill to me to see these Chinese Christians, to whom the democratic process is a relatively new thing, go about using this method which is now second nature in America. It is well known that American democracy was greatly influenced and made possible by the practice of democracy in the local churches. Can it be that the Chinese churches will provide a training ground for political democracy so that one day China may become also a "grass roots" democracy.

The Yankou Church has organized an Evangelism Team which goes out three times a week into the streets to conduct preaching. I was glad to be able to go with them one day. Afterwards we went to call on a farmer family, the members of which had recently embraced Christianity. They had recently lost a baby daughter (because of unsanitary delivery methods). Our Christians were afraid the experience would shake their newly acquired faith so they went to encourage them to be steadfast as well as to comfort them. The family was also advised to get our Yankou Dr. Yu to deliver the next baby.

Timothy Chang.

Timothy sailed for America on the S. S. General Gordon on August 4. His going has left me with a real sense of joy and also a sense of personal loss. I rejoice in his opportunity to study for the Christian ministry at Duke University as a guest of the Southern Convention women through the Life Membership and Memorial Fund. He is anticipating so much. I hope my native country lives up to his expectations. I shall miss him greatly as he has been of inestimable help to me. I hope all of you will get to know him. You will find him a bit reserved at first, but as you get to know him better, you will find a refined, sensitive Christian character and a heart of gold.

Conclusion.

As we launch our fall work of evangelism, healing and education, we are more conscious than ever of how much China needs Christ and the Christian witness. The problem of China is the problem of changing the hearts of men. Until personal integrity on the one hand and compassion on the other

THANKSGIVING—1948.

Even in the midst of a heat wave our thoughts are beginning to turn toward fall and Thanksgiving time. A time when we begin to check up and gather in the fruits of the harvest and although some of us have had disappointments and sorrow, it has been a bountiful year. God has surrounded us with many blessings. He has provided us with the necessities and luxuries of life and now comes harvest time—time for us to count our blessings one by one and in turn give thanks to our Heavenly Father.

It is also a time to face our responsibility. There are promises to be met. Our church faces a deficit in its Post-War Emergency Program. We have until January 1 to help keep faith with those who look to us and with God who counts on us.

I like to feel that the women of the Southern Convention stand united, ready to help meet any emergency that arises within our church's program. The Woman's Board voted that our 1948 Thank Offering should go toward this emergency—to C. W. V. R.

Begin planning now for your Thank Offering service which we hope you will have on or around November 7. We are asking that you make it a public service this year with the whole church participating.

Some of you may think or feel that you have done your share for C. W. V. R. and perhaps you are a little weary of hearing about it, but with gratitude for all you have done, won't you just go the second mile in response to the love of God and the needs of his children! There can be no better way to give thanks to the Lord than by hearing and heeding the cries of His needy children.

Watch for your Thank Offering material, the program and suggestions will be sent to you by our Thank Offering committee: Mrs. W. B. Williams, chairman; Mrs. Robert Kimball and Mrs. M. T. Garren.

My prayer is that "In His Name and for Their Sake" we will make this our largest Thank Offering.

"Expect great things from God, Attempt great things for God."

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

CONCORD.

The Missionary Society has almost completed this year's work as outlined in the year book. We are happy to report a very successful year. We have had all of our regular meetings. Our programs have been very interesting and attendance good.

Bethel and Mt. Zion Societies met with us in a special meeting at which time the Bible study was taught by our minister, Rev. W. W. Snyder. This study was very inspiring. After the meeting a picnic supper was served.

At one of our regular meetings foreign missionaries were reported on. This was a very interesting program. At the close of the program a special prayer was offered for the missionaries.

We have especially remembered the orphans and sick with our prayers, gifts and flowers.

Our donation to the new church building fund was doubled for this year.

The society was grieved at the loss of one of our most beloved and faithful members, Mrs. Sallie Tate, who passed away. She is greatly missed.

We are thankful for such a successful year and we hope that it has helped to further the Gospel of Jesus Christ; and pray that next year we might be even more useful for the kingdom of God.

MRS. H. P. TERRELL,
Reporter.

ROSEMONT.

The ladies of the Woman's Missionary Society of Rosemont have had very inspirational meetings under the leadership of one of our younger members, Mrs. Charles L. Richardson.

We had our study book, Committed Unto Us, taught by four ladies at an all-day meeting in the home of Mrs. H. R. Morrison. At each meeting we have had an outstanding program which has included a Christmas story by the teacher of religious education and color slides, "Ever As Christ Commanded."

At our March meeting a talk was given by Mrs. J. F. Morgan on "World Evangelism" and at the next meeting we had a message by Mrs.

Cameron Keene, who is a worker in one of our Methodist churches.

Rev. Ray Hulan of Illinois gave us a talk on our attitude towards missions—which should be world-wide, and later Miss Frances Newman told us of the scarcity of workers in the mission fields.

While we feel that our meetings are very worthwhile, we are concerned with the lack of attendance, especially among the younger memberships of our church.

We are hoping to fill all the requirements so that we can remain a banner society.

RUTH L. HASSELL,
Secretary.

CYPRESS CHAPEL.

Cypress Chapel Woman's Missionary Society has had a very good year for 1948. We gave our public program in July with a good crowd present. The Agnes Brittle Circle helping us, we gave a T. B. Bond, sent two large packages to Europe, package to the Orphanage, $2.00 to Franklin Institute. In fact, all social service projects were taken care of.

On the second Sunday in July the Cradle Roll Superintendent, Mrs. Jas. Lewter, gave a nice program with most of the children taking part.

We observed the World Day of Prayer with the Bethlehem Christian Church and had a nice meeting over there. Our mission study book was reviewed at Bethlehem by Miss Francis Harris. Our Bible study from the Book of Matthew was taught by Mrs. Grady Brown, Spiritual Life Superintendent.

We think we have had a most successful year. We have sent get well and sympathy cards to lots of sick and bereaved folks this year.

The Agnes Brittle Circle has done very good work this year. Also the Juniors, with Mrs. Roy Brinkley as leader, have had a good year with a lot of work done. We hope all the societies can do more in 1949.

WILLING WORKERS, WINDSOR, VA.

The Willing Workers of our church have accomplished a great deal during the past year.

There are fourteen members and the meetings are held on the third Sunday of each month. Everyone likes to take part in the discussion concerning the mission study book, Around the World With the Bible.

The Willing Workers also took part in the Children's Day program held by the Sunday school on June 27.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Did you read last week about the wedding that took place at the orphanage? "Uncle Charlie," as Superintendent Johnston is affectionately called, described it very well. It put me to thinking about marriage and the family. This summer I recalled my own wedding day as I stood in the same church and held my little daughter in my arms as she was christened. I still believe that we should be dedicated to the Lord, married and buried from the church.

I have seen a great many weddings (not as many as Mrs. I. W. Johnson or Mrs. Robert Whitten though, for their husbands are famous as "marrying parsons") at church and in my home. Occasionally I have played the organ for weddings and then I was more excited than the bride! It is thrilling to see the bride, always lovely and the groom, usually very nervous, and the friends and family. I make it a rule that all confetti—in place of rice, these days—throwing be on the doorstep, otherwise, I do all I can to make the day pleasant and enjoyable.

In our family circle we recall little mishaps or accidents at weddings that were nearly tragic to the couple but not ever really very bad! But all of these things that I have been writing about are on the surface. I want to say to boys and girls, but especially girls, that the time to begin your marriage is now. Prepare yourself! There are the essential things like learning to be a cook, housekeeper, nurse, and related things such as sewing. Although we do not work as hard as grandmother did, we still need these domestic arts.

Learn to think of others before yourself. Be interested in older people, see how your parents do and your friends' parents. If you attend Sunday school regularly you will probably learn a great deal about other people in other lands, and how people long ago were married.

Begin now to think about being married one time and one time only. Now, there are exceptions, but I believe that Christian young people should think of one marriage. A new husband isn't like a piece of clothing, to be changed with cool or hot weather! Think of the people you know that have been married for years and years. Twenty-fifth and fiftieth wedding anniversaries are celebrated with enthusiasm and rejoicing. There are times when a person cannot stay married, but too often young people think that if their marriage isn't successful they will get a divorce and try again. It is a strange thing but the girls I went to school with and who went to Sunday school have married and stayed married. The girls that went sometimes or not at all have been divorced.

Think also of marrying a person of your own faith. Here again there are people who love others than of their own belief and are happy, but that is not usually the case. I know several young women now who wish they had listened to the advice of their families. Usually the girl is expected to give over and to make the sacrifices. If she marries into a Roman Catholic family she must promise that her children will be Catholic. That is unfair! I know a family in which there is a Protestant father and a Catholic mother and two children who attend mass and services on the same Sunday. Do you think you have to go to church too often? This little boy and girl have done that ever since they were old enough to go and they are happy in their relationship, but it is not usually like that. Try to find someone who is alike with you in religious thought.

Grow up! As one approaches marriage age, one should think of being a man or woman, not a boy or a girl. Love is important and yet, companionship is better. I know a little boy who loves a married couple because as he describes it, "They are friendly together."

Live now for your wedding day!

A CASE OF SODA POP.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.

(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Charlie Carr, his mother, and baby sister had just taken the train for home, after having enjoyed a week's visit with Grandmother and Grandfather.

While putting the living room in order following the departure of her guest, Grandmother found a sheet of paper on which was printed, across the top in large capitals, "CHARLIE" and underneath in list form, "pop, ice, straws."

Grandmother then remembered that

Charlie had been deeply interested in everything connected with a pop stand that Jimmy, one of the neighborhood boys, had been conducting. Charlie had talked of little else and had planned to have a pop stand of his own as soon as he reached home. No other boy living in his section of the town had ever attempted anything of the kind.

He had shown this sheet of paper to Grandfather and had told him about playing "store" the year before when in kindergarten, and he had explained that the boys had nailed orange crates together—two standing on end and one placed lengthwise between those two—making a counter with cupboards beneath. Charlie already had two crates in the basement at home, and his mother had promised to ask their grocer for another. Recalling all this Grandmother indulged in a smile of mingled affection and admiration.

Several days later, while she and a neighbor were sitting on the porch doing some mending, the postman brought a letter.

"Oh, it's from Clara! Please excuse me," said Grandmother. She hastily scanned the pages and then read the following aloud:

"Charlie has just finished selling his case of pop. He started his business yesterday noon, and he did very well—both in managing his stand and in managing the boys and girls who gathered around him. He took great pride in his decorations—shelf covers and festoons of red and white crepe paper. When the bright-colored pop bottles were set out the stand looked quite gay. I wasn't sure he would carry his project through, being so shy, but he did, and it has given him new self-confidence.

"He planned his procedure carefully. 'They must give me their money before I give them the pop!'" he exclaimed, when we were chilling the first bottles. In a small book he printed all the things he had to pay for and their cost. Some of the big boys helped him to keep track of the sales. Of course, I had to add and subtract his final account for him, but he understood my explanations and was pleased with the small profit he had made."

"Clara deserves credit for her promptness in ordering that case of pop," said the neighbor. "With the extra duties of the homecoming, and the baby to care for, she might pardonably have delayed it."

"That would have been unfortunate," was the quick answer. "All of Charlie's fresh enthusiasm and in-

Book Reviews

JOHNNY BLOSSOM. Dikken Zwiilmeyer, translated by Emilie Poulson. Pilgrim Press. $2.50.

It is hard to believe that a book could be so charming—both in story and illustration. Johnny Blossom is an old Norwegian favorite newly translated by Emilie Poulson and illustrated by Ingri and Edgar Parin d'Aulaire.

Johnny is a remarkable little boy with high loyalties and an unending ability for falling into trouble. Like most childhood troubles, Johnny's are not too serious, and soon resolved. Mothers, fathers and children alike will be pleased with Johnny Blossom's Christmas gifts, his unhappiness over Bob the horse. And then, there is the red buoy—the jacket cover shows Johnny astride the buoy. He seems very much a real little boy.

The jacket describes the book as being suitable for ages 8-12, but it can be enjoyed by mothers who are a bit older and may be appreciated by some children a bit younger. It is ideal for birthday or holiday giving.

MINGO OF THE MERRY-GO-ROUND. Alice Geer Kelsey. Friendship Press. $1.50.

Mingo of the Merry-Go-Round is designed for teaching purposes but it is a delightful story book within itself. Missionary stories for children have greatly improved in the past years. This one was written by Alice Geer Kelsey who has an enormous interest in missions and children.

It is the story of a little boy named Mingo who left his family near a sugar can plantation and travels with a carnival. Mingo's job is to help collect the fares for rides on the merry-go-round. He does other little jobs, too. In his travels about Puerto Rico he meets with Christian brotherhood represented by a Neighborhood House, is a patient in a hospital and the final results bring good to Mingo and his family.

In addition to being interesting reading, this book is excellent for junior leaders' source material.

THE BELL RINGERS. Vern Swartsfager. The Macmillan Co. New York. $3.

The Bell Ringers is the story of what one man did with a group of boys and girls who were headed for the rocks. Since he remembered his own boyhood, Vern Swartsfager was able to help in a real sense these young people who had great needs. The story behind the title is fascinating and is interwoven throughout the story.

Padre Swartsfager is Curate of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, Tex., and prior to that had served as the national field secretary for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. At present he is collecting money for a project to be known as "Kids' World" which he plans to build. His career with the bell ringers is to be made into a movie and Padre Swartsfager is broadcasting his message regularly over KRLD in Dallas.

In the earlier years of his life, the writer was a newspaper man who specialized in sports writing, particularly golf. The Bell Ringers tells how he left that field for the ministry and how his early experiences peculiarly fitted him for work with youngsters already delinquent or bordering on crime. The book is interesting reading within itself, but it also points to the possible sources of help for needy youngsters. One reading it, may or may not agree with the author's plans, but he will get insight for his own plans.

His methods were good, but his tough talk is boring. There are entirely too many "lugs" in the book and other expressions that seem so worn as to be ridiculous. Perhaps tough guys have to hear a lot of worn-out talk! The Padre has a saying though, that is well worth remembering. It is his motto: "I'd fight for any kid! He's worth it!"

WOMEN AT PRAYER. Arranged by Hazel T. Wilson. Pilgrim Press. $1.25.

This little book of prayers is not of the ordinary variety. It is small, compact and well arranged, and has the extra advantage of blank pages for the reader's prayers, thoughts or paste in collected material.

Muriel Lester and Frank Laubach, great mystics of our time, write the introductory statements. Then the collection of prayers by sainted churchmen of the past and modern churchmen follow.

Hazel Thorne Wilson has devoted herself to a twofold task that envelops the majority of American women: church and home. She is the mother of five children, one of whom is a minister.

In our time, we too often neglect private devotions. This book, well planned and designed with the belief that praying women can change the world, is a real spiritual aid.

If your class or society remembers its teacher or leader with a Christmas or birthday gift, think of this book, Women at Prayer. It will be a last-gift, a churchly gift.

WEBOSSET BRIDGE. Arthur E. Wilson. The Pilgrim Press. Boston. $3.50.

Webosset Bridge is church history in its most delightful form. "The concern of the story-teller for live human interest is brilliantly combined with the historian's regard for accuracy to produce an important and enthralling book."

The author's thesis is that "Webosset Bridge, which had served as the crossing from the bank of freedom to the bank of unity, appropriately played a dramatic part in selling the idea of federal unity to the populace of the state." He adds that "the vantage point of the survey has been that Weybosset Hill on which Beneficent Congregational Church has stood for two centuries and where the forces of freedom and unity began to be re-enclosed."

Dr. Wilson has given his readers a sociological study of Congregationalism. For example: "Beneficent endured as a Congregational Church, due to the Massachusetts churchmanship of the Snows, the liberality of the Providence Tradition, and the real-estate boom which it started."

Incidentally, the story of the man who slept in church which Dr. Wilson attributes to Moody has been attributed repeatedly to Wesley (page 49).

Those who have some knowledge of Providence, Rhode Island, and Roger Williams will read Dr. Wilson's narrative with added interest, understanding and appreciation.

Some years ago I had occasion to send a parcel to an honest, hardworking bricklayer, who lived in the country. It contained, besides sundry little presents for his wife and children, a trowel for his own use, made in a superior way, with a mahogany handle; and often did I fancy that I saw him hard at work with the trowel in his hand. Last summer, being in the neighborhood, I called at the cottage of the honest bricklayer, when to my surprise I saw the trowel which I had sent him exhibited over the chimney-piece, as a curiosity. It had been considered too good to use, and consequently had never been of the slightest use to its owner.—George Mogridge.

Christianity and Business.

The events at Ephesus are a parallel of what always happens when Christianity or religion begins to interfere with business. As long as the minister and the church deal in sweet generalities, as long as they concern themselves with personal morals and good works, people approve Christianity and even applaud it. And people usually give enthusiastic approval when Christianity slaps the sins of others. But as soon as the church begins to become concerned with social justice, as soon as the preacher begins to declare the social gospel, and especially when the gospel begins to affect profits, business begins to howl. And then it begins to tell the church to mind its own business and to stick to preaching the gospel. And eventually it begins to fight the church, and to resort sometimes to high-handed methods against the church. That is the way it was at Ephesus, is now, and evermore shall be, world without end.

The gospel had been preached in Ephesus, many people had been converted to Christianity, and had given up the worship of Diana or Artemis of the Ephesians. Demetrius a silversmith who did a big business in the manufacture of idols clearly saw what was coming. It meant that his profits would be cut down. What he failed to see or saw and did not care about, was the fact that even as he suffered a loss of money, others were finding a richer, fuller life. But like many modern businesses like the liquor traffic or prostitution or gambling or the tobacco business or what have you, profits counted more than persons, material possessions were put above manhood. Demetrius was doing what folks naturally do—he was looking out for Number One. Christ was crucified among other things by the spirit of greed. He got along all right until he began to interfere with the vested money interests and privileges of the temple crowd. Make no mistake about it, Christianity faces a great adversary in many realms of business life. And this is no indictment of business as such. It is simply a cold, hard fact of life in our modern world.

A Red Herring.

Demetrius was a clever fellow. To be sure he told his fellow-craftsmen frankly that this new religion was interfering with their carry-home pay. But like many a fellow since then, he emphasized the fact that his concern really was religious—it didn't make much difference of course about a cut in income, but the real issue was the fact that the cause of religion would suffer so much . . . the temple of the great goddess, Diana, should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed; then he piled it on thick for he added, "Whom all Asia and the world worshippeth." It was clever. But one suspects that like many a modern business man he was not so much concerned after all about religion. That was just a red herring drawn across the trail. But it worked.

Mob Psychology.

Folks haven't changed much. Mobs then were like mobs now, unthinking, volatile, fickle, impulsive, suggestible and dangerous. This Ephesian mob had to explode on somebody so they laid hold of two of Paul's companions and took them into the theatre, the open-air stadium-like structure which among other things was the place of general assembly. When a Jew named Alexander tried to speak to them, and they learned that he was a Jew, they shouted him down. With a persistence that would be the envy of a Southern Democratic filibuster, for two solid hours this mob repeated wildly, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." The record also says that previous to this "some cried one thing, and some another; for the assembly was confused; and the more part did not know wherefore they were come together." That is the mob mind. Emotion, prejudice, passion, and not reason and judgment prevail. And that wild emotion can be dangerous. Men under the spell of the mob spirit will do things they would never think of doing in their saner moments. Indeed many of the members of a mob are too big cowards to think of doing what the spirit of a mob leads them to do or to have a part in doing.

A Man of Wisdom and Courage.

"And when the town clerk had appeased the people. . . ." There appears in the midst of this howling, half-wild mob a man of poise and wisdom and courage. He was the town clerk—not an ordinary secretary of the City Council, but a man appointed by Rome as the head of the city, secretary of state—but that is a rather free translation. The fact of the matter is that the town clerk held a responsible position and exercised large powers. Evidently selecting an opportune time, he soon got the attention of the crowd and quickly restored quiet and order. Then in simple and persuasive words he appealed to their reason and common sense, as well as to their natures. He also cleverly suggested that their own hides were at stake—they were in danger of being called into questions for this day's uproar—and Rome dealt sternly with all such displays. Then with a word of authority, born of his authority and his skill, he dismissed the assembly. Here was a public official of wisdom and courage, a man who looked upon public office as a public trust, a man who loved his city and even its unruly people. There was something about him as he stood before that howling mob that commanded attention. And it is quite likely that as many of the people who made up that mob turned away they looked sheepishly at one another, and had the air of a whipped dog about them.

Great Was Diana of the Ephesians.

Diana of the Ephesians undoubtedly was great, that is so far as an idol, supposed to have fallen from heaven could be great. (It is likely that the image was made from a fallen meteor which fell in that vicinity.) At any rate worship of her held many in bondage and created big business for the makers of the tiny images of her. Yes, great was Diana of the Ephesians. But there was one who really came down from heaven, the Only Begotten Son of God, the Lord Jesus Christ. He became flesh and dwelt among men, and men saw the glory of God in the face of this Jesus Christ. Gone into the limbo of the lost is the worship of Diana. But of the increase of His kingdom there shall be no end. Mighty Ephesus is gone also. A reedy marsh, a squalid Turkey village and a mass of ruins now occupy the large expanse of what was

HUMANITY'S NEED—THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

have not gotten beyond the reach of the good shepherd. He still calls unto his own by name and leads the way to complete redemption.

Jesus, as the good Shepherd, does not drive men to do his will nor drive them into the Kingdom of God. He realized the futility of this procedure. In this role we see Jesus going out among the men of his day and stopping by the seaside, saying unto Peter and Andrew, "Follow me and I will make you to become fishers of men. And straightway they left their nets and followed him." (Matthew 4:19, 20.) Again we see him passing the receipt of custom, turning to a certain tax collector and saying, "follow me. And he (Matthew) arose, and followed him." (Matthew 9:9.) On another occasion, speaking to his disciples and the people with them, He said, "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." (Mark 8:34.)

In his dealings with men he decided that they follow him. He would pave the way. He would lead them into the fulfilment of their soul's need. What was true then is true now of your shepherd and mine. He not only sends us out to work in his vineyard for the salvation of men, but he goes before us and leads us in this high service.

Yes, I take my stand as one in need of the good shepherd.

III. Following the Shepherd.

If humanity's need is the Good Shepherd—and is there one who would question it?—then the next move is up to you and me. He forever and eternally stands ready to meet humanity's soul-needs. The latch for his admission is on our side of the door.

In his day he walked the dusty highways of Galilee calling men unto himself. Remaking them as a potter remakes a vessel. Changing their selfish desires into self-sacrificial work in His Kingdom. Changing their horizons of aspirations from material to spiritual. Changing a cold or lukewarm heart into a burning passion for the souls of men. Then, when men would no longer come to him, to taste of the water of life, to be filled to overflowing by his spirit, he tread the rough, rugged road to Golgotha's hill and gave his life for the sheep.

And in some spiritually unaccountable way this great sacrifice to meet the need for humanity's redemption spans the centuries and comes to be your possession and mine, today. That is, your possession and mine if we follow him.

The 23rd Psalm still stands out in Old Testament literature as the great metaphor of the Eternal as Shepherd.

In this sanctuary you have often heard the story of the Good Shepherd. As you have heard it again today may you find in it the solution to your need. And to you who have never known the security of His fold, I repeat again for Him, "I am the good shepherd. Come, follow me."

Yes, humanity's need is the Good Shepherd.

once the proud city of Ephesus. Gone of course is the Temple of Diana, one of the Seven Wonders of the World, built as it was of white marble with its jasper columns on Parian bases, one hundred and twenty of them. But the Church of Jesus Christ has gone from strength to strength, and even as these Notes are being written, the World Council of Churches has been brought into being. Christ shall be King of kings and Lord of lords, and He shall rule forever and forever.

replace the corruption, moral decay and the lack of any feeling of responsibility for others so characteristic of Chinese society, there is no hope for internal peace; and without China, I believe, there is little hope for world peace. We who are Christians, therefore, it seems to me, must double our efforts to win the hearts of men and women to the new way of life at the center of which there is a cross—the emblem not of personal gain, but of sacrifice.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

A total of $25.98 has been sent to the treasurer, Mrs. W. B. Williams, during the past year. This is made up of dues paid by the members and a collection taken from the congregation. This offering will go to various missions.

We are looking forward to another successful year.

HOLLAND.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Holland Congregational Christian Church is happy to report at the close of another successful year under the leadership of Mrs. W. B. O'Neill that we have met all of the achievement goals.

In February we joined with other churches of our community in observance of the World Day of Prayer. Mrs. H. T. Jones taught the Bible study, the book of Matthew. Our study book, Committed Unto Us, was reviewed by Mrs. Robert Kimball of Franklin. The Holy Neck Missionary Aid Society entertained us at a delightful dinner meeting in observance of "Fellowship Day." Our society presented the program for this occasion.

We voted to honor the older members of our group by the purchase of Life Memberships. A box of puddings was sent to Miss Angie Crew in Japan, as a part of our Friendly Service project.

We are looking forward to the beginning of another church year with Mrs. W. E. Norfleet as our new president.

DENDRON.

We are rapidly approaching the close of a successful year in our society the efficient leadership of Mrs. Garland Spratley as president.

We have held meetings each month; the devotionals presented each meeting by the Spiritual Life Superintendent, Mrs. Owen Whitmore, have been a great inspiration.

A public Thank Offering Service was held on the fifth Sunday in November and a nice offering was received for work in Shaowu. The World Day of Prayer was observed, all three churches of the town participating jointly.

We also observed the Week of Prayer in March. A public service was held on Mother's Day consisting of a program including both young people and adults.

We have filled two bags with clothing for overseas relief—sent a box of needed articles to Japan and used cards to Collier School for boys in Florida. Also contributed to the milk fund for overseas children. One of the outstanding things of the year was the May Fellowship Supper held with the societies of the Baptist and Methodist Churches participating. The speaker of the evening was Mrs. T. E. Reese of Wakefield, Va., who is chairman of the Fine Arts Department of the Woman's Club of Virginia, using as her topic, "Every Child, My Child."

We have completed the study books; also purchased two Life Memberships, one for Mrs. W. S. Barrett, the other

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

So far the polio has not visited the orphanage, for which we are very thankful. It has been all around us, and two cases in the outskirts of our town. We have not let the children go to the picture shows or anywhere else where they would be in a crowd. We have no Sunday school or church for children under fifteen years of age and are doing everything in our power to take care of our little folks by keeping them on our own campus.

Our farmer boys have been quite busy for the past fifteen days. Last week was spent in the hay field, and oh, how hot the weather was. I really was sorry for them it was so terribly hot. But none fell out. This week, the last days of August, and the first four days of September they have been filling the silo, which is another hard job; but the weather has been more favorable and much cooler. On the morning of September 1, it was sixty-two degrees, and the next morning it was fifty-two degrees—pretty chilly for the time of year. Had it been in the winter time we probably would have pulled on an overcoat.

Our monthly offerings from the churches continue small. So far this year the income from the churches has reached the pitiful sum of $6,556.20 for eight months. At the present prices with nearly one hundred children to care for, how far do you think you could get on $6,556.20 for eight months in the year? Coal is $11 per ton delivered here to the railroad station, and we have to haul it out to the buildings. It takes three cars a year to heat the buildings to keep them warm and comfortable for the children. Will the Congregational Christian Churches raise $25,000 this year and meet the challenge to raise $25,000 from outside our churches?

Winter will soon be here; shoes and winter clothes to buy, and I guess you know something of the prices we have to pay.

for Mrs. E. T. Atkinson. We have received two new members into our society—Mrs. Garland Morris and Mrs. Herman Burgess. Our efficient treasurer, Mrs. E. T. Atkinson, informs us we will raise our apportionment by the required time.

We thank God for a successful year and for the loyal cooperation of our members who have made our success possible, and our work a pleasure.

MRS. LUTHER WILLIAMS,
Secretary.

MT. CARMEL JUNIOR SOCIETY.

The Junior Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church has had a very successful year. We meet each second Sunday during the Sunday school hour. By meeting at this time we can have better attendance and reach more of our children.

We have twenty-three members on roll. Three more were added last month from the Cradle Roll.

The Juniors will almost double their apportionment this year.

In July we sent $11.50 to the Shao-wu Mission. The offering was received at our public meeting held at our church on the second Sunday in July. Our members remember the children when sick with cards and gifts.

We have had our study book for the year, Around the World With the Bible. Also part of the book, Missionary Stories to Tell.

We are hoping to do a greater work next year in training these boys and girls to grow up to be better Christians. Also sharing with the children across the oceans who are less fortunate. We do this because we are told to train up a child in the way it should go and when he is old he will not depart from it.

MRS. LONNIE CARR.

JUNIORS, WINDSOR, VA.

The Junior Missionary Society of Windsor Christian Church has been under the leadership of Mrs. Mary Andrews PeJers and Mrs. Hattie Fitten, with meetings held every first Monday night of the month.

We have books circulating through our society and reports made on them at the meeting.

We fed the American Legion to help send in our quota.

initiative would have been lost." Grandmother spoke with conviction.

"We have a regrettable illustration of that in John Dexter," agreed the neighbor. "His family used to live in the house next to ours, you will remember. As a little boy he was always planning some undertaking. Once he wanted to buy seeds and grow vegetables; at another time he wanted to raise chickens and sell eggs. After that he had a chance to carry papers and, later, to work on a farm during the summer. But, as each venture was proposed, his parents told him he would not make a success of it. Apparently, they found it too much trouble to help him with the arrangements or too inconvenient to advance the necessary funds."

"And when he grew up we all considered him lacking in ambition," added Grandmother. "What's he doing now?"

"He finally drifted into the real-estate business, but he says he will never make a successful salesman because he isn't the right type. However, he doesn't know in what occupation he could excel, so he remains where he is—following the line of least resistance. Having had his plans frustrated so often during childhood, he now has little purposefulness and even less self-assurance.

"Well," and the neighbor rose briskly, "little Charlie has had a real business venture, and he must have gained not only self-assurance but long-lasting satisfaction; he knows that he made out."

In Memoriam

DUKE.

Pfc. Mills E. Duke was killed in action in France, November 1, 1944, and his body was sent back to this country for burial in the family lot in Cedar Hill Cemetery, Suffolk, Va., August 12, 1948. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Duke, Suffolk, Va.; two sisters, Mrs. Francis Stratton and Miss Elizabeth Duke; one brother, Joseph H. Duke, all of Suffolk, Va.

While in the service he received the Purple Heart, and received a citation from the President of the United States for bravery. He was a member of the Sunday school of the Suffolk Christian Church. God's blessings be upon his bereft loved ones.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

BALLARD.

Mrs. Annie Norfleet Ballard, 88, widow of Walter W. Ballard, and a member of an old and prominent Suffolk family died at her home in Suffolk, Va., August 31, 1948. She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. John E. Wirkler, Oberlin, Ohio; a granddaughter, Mrs. Ralph Wolf, Travers City, Michigan; two grandsons, Richard B. Wirkler, Newark, New Jersey, and John E. Wirkler, Jr., Tucson, Arizona; a brother, John B. Norfleet, Suffolk, and several nephews and nieces.

Funeral services were conducted by her pastor, the writer, at the Baker Funeral Home, and interment was made in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Mrs. Ballard was one of the oldest members of the Suffolk Christian Church, and with her husband, the late W. W. Ballard, helped to make it a well-beloved and strong church. Her life was a good expression of true Christian culture and character. May her labors in the Lord be blessed in her loved ones.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

RITCHIE.

Mrs. Bruce Ritchie, wife of Robert F. Ritchie, and daughter of the late J. A. and Mrs. Mary Messerley, died at her home in Linville, Va., on August 12, 1948.

She is survived by her husband, two daughters and one son. A son preceded her in death two years ago. She is also survived by three sisters and two brothers.

She was a member of Linville Congregational Christian Church since early girlhood. In the passing of Mrs. Ritchie the church has lost a sincere and faithful worker.

In the three years of Mrs. Ritchie's illness she bore her pain with Christian fortitude.

Funeral service was conducted by Rev. S. E. Madren, a former pastor, from the Linville Church.

than all the world in its combined wealth and glory—and millions of souls are worth millions of worlds and universes. If he redeemed one soul from hell, he redeemed one hundred million, and more! The price is the agony of millions of eternal deaths, though Jesus died but once. "He is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the whole world." (I John 2:2; John 3:16.)

Peter tells us that that price was "precious blood." "Ye were redeemed . . . with the precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, even the blood of Christ." (I Peter 1:18, 19.) He says, again, we are a purchased possession: "But ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession, that ye may show forth the excellencies of him who called you out of darkness into his marvellous light: who in time past were no people, but now are the people of God: who had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy." (I Peter 2:9-10.) Thus are we "the people of God," a peculiar people," in that we have been redeemed by precious blood. God hath bought us in the sacrifice of his own Son on the cross. There was no mercy for us before Christ paid the price of our redemption, no peace for us toward God until Jesus purchased our peace; but now we have mercy—streams of mercy, rivers of mercy, flowing from Calvary—sufficient to save the purchased possession—all the ransomed church of God.

"Therefore Glorify God in Your Body."

"Ye were bought with a price: glorify God therefore in your body." Since both body and spirit are God's, having been purchased by the precious blood of his Son, both should be consecrated to God's service and used to glorify God in Christ. The fact that we are God's and Christ's—the purchased possession, parts of Christ's spiritual temple—obligates us with solemn duty to consecrate body and spirit to this divine service. Paul is telling the saints at Corinth that they shall not defile that temple on peril of death. Idolatries and the enormities of licentiousness are ruled out. Habitual sins are anathema. The saints are "sanctified," which means "set apart," implying holy living. Christians must live above habitual sins.

"For All Things Are Yours."

Poor, and yet possessing "all things." How can this be? Simply that, becoming poor with Christ (Matthew 5:3; 6:33; Luke 18:22), we inherit his boundless riches. If we are rich toward God, we are exceeding rich in Christ.

In a former passage Paul had warned the Corinthian saints if they defiled the temple of God, God would destroy them. They should not be saved "so as through fire" (I Cor. 3:12-15), but would be destroyed in fire—in "the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." "Know ye not that ye are a temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man destroyeth the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, and such are ye." (Verses 16, 17.)

But if we keep that temple clean, so that the Spirit of God dwelleth therein, how blessed are we, how exceeding great is our reward! "For all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours: and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." (Verses 21-23.)

What a climax! Christ has procured for us "all things," but we are not our own! We own all else, but we do not own ourselves! We must glorify God in all things, or lose all things—even Christ, our Redeemer!—Gospel Advocate.

JUST WHAT CAN WE DO?

- "I cannot usher."
- "I cannot lead in prayer."
- "I cannot sing."
- "I cannot preach."
- "I cannot teach a Bible lesson."
- "I cannot come for Sunday school."
- "I cannot go—see, we have no car."
- "I cannot drive our car—my nerves."
- "I cannot come to midweek services."
- "I cannot help out in the Lord's Supper."
- "I cannot give—just have no surplus money."
- "I cannot come for Sunday night worship, either."
- "I cannot speak to visitors—I'm so timid."
- "I cannot visit where a Christian is needed."
- "I cannot—uh—er—sorry—call on George."

Question: Just what can you do?

Answer: Make a pile of excuses.

WHAT A DIFFERENCE, ONE DOCTOR

By BETTY STREICH

It was a bright sunny day, much like most days in northern Ecuador during the dry season. There was nothing to mark it different in the history of the people of Picalqui. But it was the beginning of medical service to a community of more than five thousand Indians, most of whom had never seen a doctor before.

We had wondered what steps we could take toward health education among our Indian friends, who had had no medical training. Rather hopelessly we felt that we should have to wait until the arrival of a mission doctor. But it seemed such a pity to watch illness and disease stalk unmercifully among our people. Two children, less than a year old, had died during the spring months and early in the summer a young mother had succumbed after a lingering illness. Those three in a tiny community of fewer than fifty inhabitants.

Then one day we went to see a Quito doctor for our anti-typhoid shots. He had heard about our agricultural mission at Picalqui and volunteered to come out for a week-end visit to get our health program under way. He offered to give free diagnosis and treatment if our mission would supply the medicines. We were really taken by surprise that a busy doctor, and one of the best in Ecuador, should be willing to give up his day of rest, take the tiresome, bumpy four-hour trip to Picalqui, and render a generous service to the lowly and outcast from whom he could expect no material recompense. We could scarcely restrain our enthusiasm as we arranged a date.

At last the great day came. We wondered if more than a half dozen patients would appear, for we were still relative newcomers of a different nationality and a different religion. We knew, too, from anthropological readings that the Andean Indians held certain medical superstitions (so-called educated North Americans have them, too!) but we did not know to what extent our own Indian group followed the general pattern. But people came—twenty-six in all—Indians from little communities near and far and non-Indians as well.

We are thankful that the doctor had such a real concern for the Indians and a realistic vision of their possibilities. There are so many among the upper classes who want only to "keep the Indian in his place," an attitude which, to us, seems both anti-democratic and anti-Christian. But our doctor friend gave each visitor a careful examination, medication when necessary, and sincere counsel about the all-important follow-up treatment.

My husband and I had our first taste of what it means to be a doctor's assistant. And what an experience it was! Although I often speak with pride of my mother's work as a nurse, I thought I could never find courage to dress infected sores. And little did I imagine that the doctor would ask me to give the second injection of the day. But I bit my lips, applied bandages, jabbed an arm here and there—and the patients are still living!

What ills these people have! We found that the majority who came had goiter, parasites, or tuberculosis, or all three. Many have bad teeth and need extractions. There are some with watery eyes, a result of the fierce, sandy winds of the dry season. One Indian woman came meekly into the clinic and slid down to the floor in one corner, awed in the presence of the great doctor from the capital. Her eyes were causing her immense suffering. In one eye a cataract had formed and in the other eye a cataract was beginning. There is nothing that we can do now to prevent blindness, for an expensive operation is out of the question. But we still do whatever is possible to relieve her. If only our mission had been begun long ago!

How much this friendly doctor meant to these people! How greatly he has served the United Andean Indian Mission! Even the day after, there were people who came, saying, "Is it true that there is a doctor here?" And we had to answer, regretfully, "There was a doctor here, but he has gone back to Quito. Some day, though, a doctor is coming to live here and to work here." Children, young men and women, adults, all need not only a doctor's care, but also counsel in preventive medicine.

Now with the aid of the doctor's notes, we administer medicines and take care of minor cuts and bruises. But this is so little and so inadequate compared with the work our mission doctor will be able to do when he comes. All of Picalqui awaits him. There is new hope in the face of the Indian.—From "The Messenger," Evangelical and Reformed Church.

NOTE: The Rev. and Mrs. Paul H. Streich are the first full-term missionaries in the new United Andean Indian Mission.

Is the Church Failing Our Youth?

From an address by DR. LUTHER WESLEY SMITH, Chairman, Board of Trustees, International Council of Religious Education on "America's Town Meeting of the Air" at the Christian Youth Conference of North America

The fact is, the churches of our land have served America and her youth more fully and effectively than most people realize.

Two million Sunday school teachers devote their labor, love and learning each week to the task of teaching America's boys and girls concerning the essentials of the Christian faith. The character and integrity which Christian faith nurtures in a person is the very foundation of our democracy and institutions of soul liberty. Nurturing character in growing persons through teaching them the knowledge and love of Christ is what the church is doing for millions of our American youth. All across our land there are many new evidences of the renewed and deepening earnestness with which the churches and this great army of volunteer Sunday school teachers are facing their responsibility through a ministry of Christian teaching to the youth of America.

Consider the millions of our youth who are in summer camps and assemblies under Christian agencies being trained for Christian leadership in our land. Or, consider the many great student conferences and convocations sponsored by the churches throughout the course of a year. From the hundreds of conferences like this one in spirit and purpose, if not in size, our youth catch their vision of what Christ would have them do and be.

The United Christian Youth Movement of America, in which participate the youth of the major Protestant bodies, illustrates the fact that in facing their common tasks and responsibilities the Protestant churches in our country are virtually united—effective!

Let it be said again and again that these churches are not perfect. They are not as earnest, not as Christ-like as we would wish and pray they might be, because there are so many frail human beings in them like you and me! But how can one know the extent to which the church is ministering in vital and redemptive ways to the youth of America and through them to the world, and still maintain that she is failing our youth?

News Flashes

The Holland, Va., Church has reversed its former vote which opposed the E. and R. merger.

The Eastern Virginia Ministerial Association will resume its schedule of monthly meetings Monday at Suffolk. Rev. R. L. House is program chairman.

Timothy Chang from Shaowu, has arrived in America and entered Duke Divinity School, September 15. Mr. Chang comes to us as a result of the good work of Richard Jackson in Shaowu.

Rev. Clyde L. Fields has been serving as pastor of the Ingram Church and is greatly beloved by them. They reluctantly give us Mr. Fields but he has insisted that he would serve them only until the two churches could find a pastor to serve both churches.

Rev. Robert T. Woodruff, Jr., a student at Duke Divinity School, has been called to Ingram and Pleasant Grove Churches. Mr. Woodruff will move his family into the new parsonage recently built by these two good churches. His address will be Route 1, Vernon Hill, Va.

MEETING FOR LAYMEN.

We are having a meeting of the laymen of the Western North Carolina Conference at the Asheboro Congregational Christian Church, September 18. The program is as follows:

7:00 P. M.—Meeting called to order by S. H. Pell; Devotional by Geo. T. Gunter.

7:20—Reading of Constitution and By-Laws; Organizing districts and election of officers; Financial plans for promoting and operating Laymen's Fellowship in Western N. C. Conference.

7:50—Intermission.

8:00—Address: "The Laymen's Opportunity in the Church of Today," by George D. Colclough, chairman of Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention.

The laymen of our churches are urged to attend this meeting. It is your meeting, and we think you will gain benefit if you attend.

SUPERINTENDENT'S HOME ALMOST COMPLETED.

The pastors have asked me this week when we expected to start the home for the Convention Superintendent. I was surprised, for I felt that the committee had not done a good job of telling the constituency what was going on. We had wanted everyone to know the whole story.

I am glad to report for the committee that the house is almost ready. It will be completed by September 15. That, of course, brings us face to face with the financing of the project. Letters have gone to each pastor of the Convention, and to each Sunday school superintendent and church clerk—and some individuals. Each church and Sunday school, as well as other organizations, were invited to share in this project by sending a contribution.

Pastors have been on vacation, but we are happy to report that this week we have had responses from a number of our churches, and each one has enclosed a check.

This note has a two-fold mission: We want all the people to know of the progress made on the erection of the house. Then, we want to encourage every pastor, if he has not already done so, to present the opportunity to his congregation. We want Sunday schools and organized classes to have a part in providing this nice house—and remember that it is already deeded to the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches.

The immediate favorable response of our pastors and churches will avoid any delay in the completion and will make it possible for us to pay the contractor when he is finished. Unless your response is both immediate and generous, that will surely be impossible. May we have your response at the earliest moment, please!

Gratefully,

JESSE H. DOLLAR,
For the Committee.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK ANNOUNCED.

"Christ and the Community" will be the theme of the 18th annual observance of Religious Education Week, which will be held September 26-October 3. Celebrated by forty denominations, thousands of communities, and tens of thousands of churches Religious Education Week is the period when Protestants of the United States and Canada begin their religious education activities for the fall and winter months.

"The event offers Christian educators and church leaders a splendid opportunity to demonstrate to all Americans and Canadians by a united observance the great importance of Christian teaching," Dr. Roy G. Ross announced.

Themes and emphases for each day of the week are as follows:

Sunday, September 26—"The Community Needs Christian Teaching," featuring Rally Day or Promotion Day.

Monday, September 27—"The Community Requires Christian Leaders," featuring church school leaders' conferences.

Tuesday, September 28—"The Community Depends on Christian Homes," featuring family night at church.

Wednesday, September 30—"The Church, Example for the Community," featuring parish or interchurch meetings.

Thursday, September 30—"Church Cooperation for Community Service," featuring interchurch conferences, especially dinners for all Sunday school superintendents.

Friday, October 1—"Youth United for a Christian Community," featuring interchurch youth rallies.

Saturday, October 2—"The Community Needs Christ," featuring spiritual retreats and completion of home visitations.

Sunday, October 3—"Christ and the World Community," featuring World-Wide Communion Sunday.

Plans for observing the week have been worked out by the denominations and councils of churches for use in local churches and communities.

FACTS ON MIGRANT WORKERS IN VIRGINIA.

Annually approximately 20,000 agricultural workers come to Virginia for five or six months to help harvest fruits and vegetables on the Eastern Shore, Princess Anne County and upper valley around Winchester.

These "homeless" migrants constitute a mass of men and women who travel along the Eastern Seaboard of the nation to make a livelihood while helping to put fresh fruits and vegetables on the tables of American homes—and create wealth and prosperity for communities.

Some 20,000 migrants registered for work at camps in Mappsville, Melfa, Nassawadox and Cheriton on the Eastern Shore; another 1,500 came to camps at London Bridge and Back Bay in Princess Anne County; and a third group of approximately 1,000 are picking peaches and apples

GODLESSNESS CHARGED IN CITIES IS NOT EXISTENT IN TINY GOD-FEARING HAMLET OF ISLE OF WIGHT.

By DOROTHY ROBBINS.

Those fanatical ponderers of the great imponderables, who maintain that godlessness is the most salient characteristic of modern man, are probably all city dwellers, and, at any rate, have never heard of a tiny hamlet called Isle of Wight. The story of a little band of the Christian denomination who struggled to establish and maintain a church in this hamlet throughout the years, is a lesson in simplicity and faith.

Not long ago, visitors to the county seat noticed that the modest frame church opposite the Isle of Wight County Court House was having its face rather thoroughly lifted. Workmen were hammering busily, and it was obvious that extensive improvements were being made. When the remodeling had been completed, the church glistened in a glossy new coat of white paint, and sun rays filtered through its beautiful memorial windows of stained glass. The members swelled with pride whenever they looked at the little church which meant so much to them, and at the annual home-coming services in July, they listened attentively to a recital of the past achievements of the church given by a fellow member, S. Ray Turner. It was only a little church, to be sure, but its achievements were distinguished and its members had always been loyal in attendance, and faithful in works.

Humble Beginning.

The history of Isle of Wight Christian Church began humbly over half a century ago, when several farmers, who wanted to worship God according to their own beliefs, and in the company of others who shared their convictions, organized a small group of Christians. They had no meeting house and no funds, but they were undaunted, and finally arranged to conduct services in an old storehouse belonging to W. A. Womble. This storehouse, which stood on the site now occupied by H. M. Wilson, merchant, was used only for a brief time, and the next meeting place was outdoors under a bush shelter, on land now belonging to the church.

Services were conducted by the superintendent, Harvey Munford, and the faithful few began to flock there in all kinds of weather. Others inspired by their loyalty, started coming, too, and the membership slowly increased, until the congregation was finally invited to worship in the court house, which could be comfortably heated against chill winter winds. A pastor, the Rev. J. T. Kitchens, was now conducting the services, and the Isle of Wight Christian Church was mentioned for the first time in the conference records of the year 1889. (Mr. Kitchens continued to serve as pastor until 1895, several years after the present church was completed.) The congregation began to accumulate funds for the erection of a church building, and in 1890, W. A. Womble deeded about half an acre of land to the trustees of the church for the purpose of establishing a church building.

The following year, Womble donated another piece of land, about three-quarters of an acre in area, to the church, for the purpose, as the grant stated, "of promoting the cause of Christianity." However, the said Mr. Womble was apparently a man who did not believe in confusing business with religion, and in order that Caesar might be rendered his due, Mr. Womble inserted the following clause in the deed: "The said trustees, nor their successors in office, shall not at any time or in any manner take any steps or become parties to any proceedings looking to the object of which shall be to stop the sale of 'ardent spirits' on the lands of the said W. A. Womble or prevent the granting of a license by the county court of this county to the said Womble or his heirs." If this were done, land was to revert to the estate of W. A. Womble, but the recipients or their successors were to have the privilege of removing any buildings or property placed thereon.

The slightly embarrassed churchmen decided that the end justified the means and the trustees, W. L. Turner, W. N. Pierce, L. H. Whitley, L. P.

THE WORLD WITHIN.

Through the courtesy of Rev. R. E. Newton and Mr. C. C. Logan the writer enjoyed a trip through the beautiful Luray Caverns. These caverns are formed under a great hill in the Shenandoah Valley long known as Cave Hill. Although the caverns have been in formation for centuries or millennia, they were not discovered until 1878. Recognizing the inestimable value of the caverns, the management has provided every convenience so that the manifold beauties and wonders may be enjoyed in the most comfortable manner. Cement walks, stairways, bridges and railings have been placed where necessary, and the entire route illuminated by indirect electric lighting.

Generations crossed and passed this hill without suspecting the indescribable beauty of the region below. The surface of the earth, we are reminded, has no monopoly on God's beauty. "In my Father's house (above and below) are many mansions," spacious and exquisite.

The world is filled with people who are content with the surface view of life, who remain almost wholly indifferent to impinging realities of the inner world. For them, introspection is taboo and reflection a bore. They never explore the deeper recesses of human personality. Absorbed in the outer world with its engaging claims and transient opportunities, these one-dimensional beings remain strangers to the deeper things of life. "Deep calleth unto deep" was not written of them.

The labyrinthian depths of the soul await our attention and acquaintance. Just as "full many a gem of purest ray serene the dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear," even so the oceanic depths of selfhood have their treasures of thought and character. We should learn this from the psychological hounds of the unconscious if not from the Bible. The saints learned this secret early. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." "O may I love thy precious Word; may I explore the mine." "Out of the depths have I cried unto Thee."

ACROSS THE EDITOR'S DESK . . .

We Christian people get so busy talking about religion we neglect its practice. How often we are amazed and humiliated to find some great example of Christian faith, stewardship or sacrifice quite outside the organized ranks of religion!

Sunday's papers carried a story which came out of the recent war. Robert Johnstone of Dowlington, Pa., died in the Philippines and bequeathed his $10,000 G. I. Insurance for the American education of one of the Japanese enemy.

Robert Nishiyami, a Japanese pilot who had pledged his life to his country in a suicide dive on an American warship will enroll this week at Pennsylvania's Lafayette College. He plans to return to Japan as a teacher after graduation, for "I want to share my opportunity with others. I believe that is what he would have wanted."

Haven't we read and talked about such things as these: "Love your enemies" . . . "he being dead, yet speaketh" . . . "go ye into all the world and make disciples." The world awaits more striking and convincing evidence of our faith.

PROTEST MISSIONARY ADVANCE.

One hundred and eight foreign mission boards, representing every major Protestant denomination, have approved a joint campaign this fall for a vast five- to ten-year expansion program in overseas work, says Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference. This marks the first time Protestantism has made a joint appeal for church and public support of foreign missions.

While the exact figure which American and Canadian churches will be called on to contribute has not been announced, Dr. Fairfield states that the goal of participating boards is expected to total approximately $150,000,000 for the first five years of the cooperative Protestant undertaking. This goal represents a doubling of present contributions to Protestant foreign missions.

Designed to inject fresh techniques into Protestant missions efforts, the overseas program is the result of two and a half years of joint planning by foreign mission societies in the United States, Canada, and Protestant missions abroad.

In anticipation of the expansion program, twenty-three mission boards already have set a goal of about $60,000,000 as their overseas expenditure for the first five years, Dr. Fairfield said. The new goals represent substantial increases, he said, since the entire group of boards associated with the Foreign Missions Conference last year spent less than $35,000,000.

The new mission program will be conducted in ten geographic areas, including Latin America, Africa, Europe, the Near East, India and Pakistan, Southeast Asia and the Pacific Islands, the Philippines, China, Korea and Japan.

In each of these areas, Dr. Fairfield said, foreign mission boards have set tentative goals for personnel, schools, colleges, theological seminaries, mass communications and radio work, rural rehabilitation, programs for industrial communities, and evangelism campaigns.

In China, for example, during the next five years plans call for the sending of 2,000 new missionaries, including 425 medical missionaries, 200 agricultural experts, 420 educational missionaries, and 675 missionaries for general church work. Approximately $2,000,000 is called for on rural reconstruction and $20,000 for a mass communications project, as well as substantial sums for standard types of missionary enterprises.

Mission leaders charting Protestant work in Japan plan to recruit at least 300 missionaries in the next five years, while close to 1,000 agricultural missionaries will be needed in the countries of the Far East. In addition, mission leaders expect to step up the enlistment of doctors, journalists, teachers, ministers, chemists and radio technicians.

In discussing some of the new features of the proposed missionary program, Dr. Fairfield revealed that a cooperative radio and mass communications committee is being established under auspices of the Foreign Mission Conference. This committee will train foreign students in this country for radio work. Strategically located recording stations and radio programs will be developed abroad, and production of films, slides, charts and graphs will be accelerated. Dr. Fairfield estimated that the initial cost of the project will be close to $100,000.

A mass literacy campaign under the direction of Dr. Frank C. Laubach, pioneer missionary educator and literacy expert, is also planned, and will aim at the education of approximately 100,000,000 illiterates in the next ten years. Dr. Laubach, who recently helped establish an adult education program for Emperor Haile Selassie, will assist in establishing literacy committees in each of the foreign countries. He said the initial cost of the project will be $212,000.

Other mission projects earmarked for expansion, include special health programs, such as mass chest X-ray units, traveling high-power insect eradication equipment, and sanitary construction units.

Latest available figures show that Protestant foreign missions conduct 55,395 churches, and 61,869 Sunday schools, with a staff of 239,045, including 27,577 missionaries. In the principal missionary countries, the mission societies associated with the Foreign Missions Conference, have contributed since 1943 annual amounts of approximately $250,000 to Korea, $5,000,000 to China, and $4,750,000 to India. Financial goals now being considered by foreign mission leaders will greatly increase these amounts in the next five years.

LEARNING FROM THE METHODIST WOMEN.

By REV. B. V. MUNGER.

"I know more about the Methodist students entering this college than I do about the students entering from our own Congregational Christian homes." That is a statement made by a college chaplain serving one of our Congregational Christian colleges.

It is unfortunate that he should have to make such a statement. However, it is easy to understand why the facts are as they are. The Women's Circle of Christian Service in the Methodist Church makes it a yearly practice to be informed concerning the students in their churches who are entering colleges or universities. Then they take it as their responsibility to inform the college chaplain and the Methodist minister nearest to the college or university. Because they faithfully discharge this responsibility each year, these women make it possible for the college chaplain or the Methodist minister nearest to the college or university to begin to plan for the student's welcome even before the student has arrived. This is most helpful. However, those who serve on campuses for the Congregational Christians have no such good fortune. For the good of our students to whom the ministry of the Church should be carried, it should be different this year. We should have at least as much interest in the welfare of our students as do our Methodist friends. Therefore, this suggestion is made to all of you who know a student entering one of the following colleges or universities. Please take the time and effort to write that information to the minister listed in conjunction with that school in the list below:

N. C. COUNCIL NEWS.

A spirit of Ecumenical Christian Fellowship echoing from Amsterdam will be the special mark of the 1948 annual meeting of the North Carolina Council of Churches. The Council will hold its general session on September 21, at St. Mary's School, Raleigh, beginning at 10:30 a. m. Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, president, will preside.

A special session of the N. C. Council of Church Women will convene at 9:30 a. m. on the preceding day, Monday, the 20th, at the United Church, Raleigh, to consider the work of the Women's Department of the Council.

Highlights of the program of the Council's general session will be the recognition of the Rev. Carl R. Key as new director of the Council and addresses by Mrs. M. E. Tilly of Atlanta, Ga., and Dr. George D. Heaton of Charlotte. Dr. Heaton, one of North Carolina's representatives at the World Council of Churches Assembly, will speak in the morning on "Echoes from Amsterdam." Mrs. Tilly, secretary of the Department of Christian Social Relations of the Southeastern Jurisdiction of the Methodist Church, will deliver the afternoon address. Dr. Harold Trigg, who is president of St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, will conduct a morning ecumenical service of worship.

Reports on the work of the Council during 1947-48 will be given by Miss Frances C. Query, former executive secretary, Dr. H. Shelton Smith, chairman of the Board of Christian Activities, Bishop Edwin A. Penick, chairman of the Board of Finance, and Bishop J. Kenneth Pfohl, chairman of the Constitutional Committee. Election of officers for the coming year and a panel presentation of plans for 1948-49 will be part of the afternoon's program. Adjournment is set for 4:00 p. m.

With the program theme, "His Way Together," the meeting of the Council of Church Women on the 20th will feature a report on the Amsterdam Assembly, "His Way Together Around the World." Reports by the officers and the standing committees will be on the morning's program. The afternoon session will include news from the Biennial Assembly of the United Council of Church Women, by Mrs. David D. Jones of Greensboro, a forum led by Mrs. L. C. Larkin of Burlington and other local and denominational leaders, and in conclusion, "A Future Look," by Mrs. R. W. Barnwell of Burlington, program chairman for the special session.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Preaching is important. "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." Anything that "pleased God" should be given the best of which one is capable. Paul says, "For Christ sent me . . . to preach the gospel." To know what God wants one to do is in itself a great blessing. To know that God wants one to preach is a very great blessing, especially if one does it.

One of the important parts of an hour of worship is the preaching. Perhaps the most important part is that which must be done by all those present, namely, the realizing, or creating the atmosphere of worship—the feeling that God's Spirit is present, and blessing all within the house. To come into that sort of atmosphere and yield to it is to go forth renewed, re-vitalized, and given spiritual discernment. For that all hands should do their best. It is in that background of thinking I say preaching is one of the important parts of the hour of worship.

Now where does one begin to achieve that atmosphere of true worship? For one thing the sanctuary itself must not be unworthy. The place of worship may range from no building at all through the very humblest to grand cathedral, but whether it be a little place beneath the trees or the beautiful sanctuary of the Duke University campus, it must be clean, appointed, prepared. It must be such that whoever seeks to worship there will find it a hallowed spot.

Quiet, whether it be under the trees and the open sky, or in a great church, as we come together there should be felt quietude. And I do not mean any sort of silence that is ordered from without, but a quietness that comes sweeping over one from within. One feels it in the movement of ushers, choir members, minister, people. It is a great feeling, too. Much has been accomplished if one feels that spirit of quietness in His holy presence. It is with that sort of background that I feel that preaching is one of the important parts of the hour of worship.

Music that answers that quietness with genuine expression of praise is an important part of the hour of worship. Many congregations rejoice in having a big share in such expression of praise. Many have been led to true worship by the privilege of participation in such singing. Well prepared anthems and prayerfully sung solos like words fitly spoken to many a worshipper. For that worshipper it may be that for him God has been thanked, or petitioned, or blessed in just the way in which he would like to have done it. The singer has a great mission.

Another time we may speak of the prayers as such and the offerings—space limits me. What I want to say is: Every one present can have a real share in that important business of preaching. Your presence itself greatly helps it. Your prayer for the preacher and your love for one another; your participation in every movement of the worship process; and your attention, these are contributions that bless the minister's heart. Having such help he will probably resolve then and there to begin very early to make his next sermon real preaching—"the power of God unto salvation." JOHN G. TRUITT.

VALLEY CHURCH REVIVAL.

Another challenging message comes from the Shenrock pastorate, Rev. Clyde O. Koon, pastor. We rejoice with the people of Wissler's Chapel in the success of the revival services of two weeks. The attendance reached a peak of one hundred forty-seven one night and well over one hundred on other nights during the series of services. It is reported by the pastor, Mr. Koon, who did the preaching for the meetings that he and the members of the church rejoice greatly in witnessing the conversion of twenty-two young people who responded to the call of the gospel, dedicating their lives for Christian service. Nineteen of those who have professed faith in this number have been received into membership of the church and others are expected to unite with the church in the near future. As we read the report of Pastor Koon and recall that only recently this church was in such condition that it was believed by some that it would have to close its doors, we are made happy in the blessings which have been so abundantly poured out upon them. Mr. Koon states that at the closing service of the revival ninety-six people stood for the reconsecration of their lives to the Christian way of life. Twenty-four candidates presented themselves for the observance of that rite on the next Sunday evening.

For this signal victory for Christ and His Kingdom we take courage and give thanks to God for His manifold mercy and blessings upon His people.

ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

W. S. BARRETT OF DENDRON PASSES ON.

Waverly S. Barrett, 77, of Dendron, died in Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Thursday morning, August 26, after a lingering illness.

Mr. Barrett, son of John Berwell and Nancy Barnes Barrett, was born in Southampton County on February 3, 1871. He had been a resident of Dendron for over 60 years and had served as postmaster for nearly 40 years. He served as executive secretary of the Virginia Postmasters' Association and also was appointed to many committees representing the Virginia postmasters. He was mayor of Dendron since September 1, 1940, and was recently re-elected for another term.

He was a charter member of the Dendron Christian Church and teacher for many years of the Men's Bible Class. He belonged to the Wakefield Masonic Lodge, Woodmen of the World, Odd Fellows, and the Surry Ruritan Club. He had been a member of the Virginia State Executive Committee of the Republican Party for a number of years and participated actively in all civic and religious affairs.

When our Dendron Church was organized, he was made secretary and filled that position until death.

His church loyalty was great. He left three grandsons and to each he left a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He was a truly great example for all of us to follow.

Mr. Barrett is survived by his wife, May Higgins Barrett; six daughters: Mrs. Garland Spratley and Mrs. Harry Spratley of Dendron; Mrs. W. E. Harward of Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Roy Wilkins of Colonial Beach; Major Elizabeth Barrett of San Francisco, Calif.; Mrs. Charles Gutridge of Colonial Beach; two sons, Waverly S. Barrett, Jr., of Dendron and Alphine Higgins Barrett of Suffolk; three brothers: John S. Barrett of Colonial Heights; Hugh Barrett of Alexandria and Philip H. Barrett of Colonial Heights; three sisters: Mrs. P. A. Hines of Ivor, Mrs. R. H. Hargrave of Colonial Heights, Mrs. A. W. Barrett of Sedley; and twelve grandchildren and one great-grandson.

Funeral services were held in the Dendron Christian Church with the officiating. Interment was in Spring Hill Cemetery. J. M. ROBERTS.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

WELCOME ADDRESS.

Welcome! It gives me great pleasure to have you select Elon College as your college, the college where you are to live, work, play, move, and have your being for the next four years. No more, no less, we hope. We were expecting you. We have been planning and making preparation for your coming for the last 58 years. We purchased a parcel of land, laid off the campus, erected the buildings, employed a faculty, assembled a student body, especially the sophomore class, all in honor of your coming. I tell you, this class of 1952 is some class. At least, we think so. We welcome you.

I am reminded of what an old colored man said to his master, "We's gonna git us a new preacher." "You are?" said the boss man. "Yas, suh, and I's on de welcomin committee." "Well," his bossman said, "your new preacher hasn't come yet, has he?" "Nah, suh, but the old preacher is gwine away and we's gwine to welcome him away."

I trust that it will not be necessary to welcome you away from the college. At least before you complete your requirements for graduation.

We welcome you to our campus. To its beauty, its grounds, its lawns, its shrubbery, its trees, and its buildings. We have done our best to get ready for your coming. We have put forth a lot of effort and gone to considerable expense. The grass has been cut, the shrubbery trimmed, all buildings have been swept and dusted and put in order. We are sure that you will appreciate all these efforts in your behalf, and that you will cooperate to see that everything is kept in order, that you will walk on the sidewalks and not on the grass, that you will put your ice cream cups, your candy wrappers, and the letters which you thought would be love letters, in the trash cans instead of by the sidewalks.

We welcome you to our athletic fields—the places where you get your training, where you participate in intra-mural sports, where we hold our field events, and enter into our inter-collegiate athletic contests.

We welcome you to our gymnasium. To be sure, we must admit, our present gym is not any too good. The plans for a new gym have been drawn and are in the hands of the contractors for bids. We hope to have the new gym ready before the year is over. We are anxious to have you see our new gymnasium.

We welcome you to our library. The library building is conveniently located, easily accessible. It has nearly 3,500 books on its shelves and scores of magazines and daily papers. These represent the products of the best minds of all ages, a veritable store house of knowledge, a reservoir of intellectual strength. In these books we have assembled the leading scholars of the world from time immemorial to the present: Homer, Virgil, Pliny, Spinoza, Descartes, Socrates, Demosthenes, Shakespeare, Burns, Browning, Keats, Shelley, Woodrow Wilson, Roosevelt, Dewey and Truman. These great personalities, great minds, are all there. They are waiting. They are anxious to meet you and speak to you, from the past and the present, words of wisdom, of counsel, of warning, and of guidance. Go over and meet them. You will have a good time. You will find there in the library trained librarians and student assistants to introduce you, guide you, and make sure that you may find the proper books and meet the proper individuals. Take advantage of the library. Don't fail to use it.

We welcome you to our classrooms. In these classrooms you will find professors and instructors. We have selected our faculty with care from the standpoint of training, experience, and religious conscience. They are your instructors. They are waiting for you. Go to them for help. They will be glad to give any assistance possible. While they are your instructors, they are also your friends. They want to know you. You want to know them. Confide in them. Trust them. They will help you with your problems.

We welcome you to a program of hard work. It will be necessary for you to turn your minds over and see what you have on your intellectual shelves. Discover your talents and develop them to the greatest degree of efficiency for your own personal satisfaction, for the joy of those who love you and the blessings of society itself. College work won't do itself.

You must do it. You want good grades. You must earn them. They won't earn themselves, nor will they be given to you. You want to graduate with your class. You must earn your degree. That is the only way you will be able to have it.

Youth is an important factor in our present world. Youth will be given more and more recognition as the days pass. When we were compelled to fight a war, a mechanized war, we turned to the youth of our country to fight it. We had to have young men, with their alertness and daring, who would go into battle without thought of themselves, but with a determination to reach their objectives and gain their ends. But even so, these young men had to be trained for their tasks. Now when we come to rebuild a torn world we shall have to turn to the young men and young women of our day. Their alertness, their boldness, their daring, will be required, but you must be prepared. You must get yourselves ready. That is what this college is here for and that is why you are here. Don't waste your time. Don't throw your opportunities to the wind. Begin now. Now is the time. Open your books. Face your tasks and get down to work. You will never regret it.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

At the beginning of the conference year, our churches as a rule accept their apportionments for the support of the church and her institutions without question. Some of them may feel that the amount asked for is rather large but they have twelve months in which to raise the apportionment and they feel that it can and will be done. Some of our churches may be a little slow about getting started and before they realize it the conference year is coming to a close. They have raised but little of the entire amount expected. Double efforts and some sacrificial giving may be required to raise the total amount apportioned.

The convention, in ascertaining the needs of the convention itself and its various departments apportioned only the minimum required. It is therefore essential that each church raise its apportionment in full if the various causes of the convention are to receive minimum support. Since the apportionments were made the cost of living and the cost of everything that it takes to run a college decently and efficiently has increased from fifteen to twenty-six per cent. These are government figures. Our churches should

COLUMBUS CAVALCADE.

[Ed. Note: This is the first of a series of vignettes on outstanding Christian personalities, who will participate in the Foreign Missions Assembly at Columbus, Ohio, October 6-8. Each of these articles will contain at least four personality sketches.]

MODERN GEORGE WASHINGTON

The Rt. Rev. James H. Cockburn, Former Moderator, Church of Scotland.

The eyes of the pretty hat-check girl bulged. Her customer at the Town Hall Club in New York City was handing her a three-cornered hat. He stood six feet four inches tall, wore a Prince Albert coat, knee pants and silk stockings. There were silver buckles on his shoes.

"Gee," breathed the girl, "George Washington, no less."

"George Washington" was none other than the Right Rev. James H. Cockburn, D. D., Moderator of the Church of Scotland and Director of the World Council of Churches' Department of Reconstruction and Inter-Church Aid.

Dr. Cockburn's garb may very well have startled the hat-check girl, but his very presence here in 1942 was also occasion for comment. It was the first time a Moderator of the Church of Scotland had ever visited any foreign country.

Dr. Cockburn's visit to the United States this fall will be an equally significant occasion. He will be among the notable religious, civic and government leaders to take part in the Foreign Missions Assembly at Columbus, Ohio, October 6-8.

The Assembly, planned by 108 mission boards in this country and Canada will be a land-mark. For the first time in the history of Protestantism, mission societies will present to the public a program for Christian work overseas which is the result of years of planning and discussion together. Their theme will be, "One World in Christ."

The Scottish high churchman will present to the Assembly the outlook for Christianity on the continent of Europe. He is a leading authority on this subject and has written extensively about it,

Since war's end, Dr. Cockburn has been the outstanding thinker on re-consecration, continually reminding Christians that "the restoration of normal physical conditions avails nothing if there is no spiritual healing of the nations."

Although a member of the famous "Committee of 35" which drafted, at Utrecht, the constitution of the World Council of Churches, Dr. Cockburn has repeatedly warned that reconstruction "does not consist in the superimposing of great organizational schemes, but in mutual sharing as between members of a family."

DESERT DOCTOR

Dr. Paul W. Harrison, Medical Missionary in Arabia.

Why should a promising young doctor with a brilliant future choose to spend his life on the sun-scorched plains of Arabia?

Delegates to the Assembly will hear the answer to that question from Dr. Paul W. Harrison, missionary doctor of Bahrain, Kuwait and Matrah, Arabia.

A graduate of John Hopkins, Fellow in the American College of Surgeons, holder of an honorary degree of Master of Arts from Yale, Dr. Harrison is a recognized authority on hernia and spinal anesthesia.

Dr. Harrison began his missionary career when he turned down a job with Dr. Harvey Cushing, world-famous Boston brain surgeon. Instead, he sailed for Arabia.

"I wanted to pit the Christian way of life against the worst types of human trouble and sin," he explains.

Dr. Harrison found plenty of both. He performed operations on mud floors, learned how to set legs with pins and other make-shift devices.

On one of his endless desert treks in a dilapidated jalopy, his Arab driver once stopped a leaky tire by using a wad of dates snatched from the hands of a fellow passenger. He has seen men steal children and trap youths and young girls to sell as work servants.

The Doctor has never charged more than $15.00 for an operation. For a delicate cataract operation which might bring $1,000 to a New York specialist, he charges $1.85. For lesser operations, he collects 37c and uses the money to help maintain the hospital at Bahrain.

Smiles of confidence from sick Arab children, invitations to Arab homes because "the doctor is pure in heart," the friendship of the great potentate Shaikh Bin Saoud, simple morning devotions in the clinic before work—these are the doctor's rewards.

Though depressed by Arab demoralization, Dr. Harrison has great faith in his adopted people. He believes that the Arab, in the intensity of his religious faith, is a more promising subject than the Westerner.

However, he warns that the purpose of the modern missionary enterprise is not to westernize the Arab, but to make him a better Oriental, to help the Arab develop Christianity along indigenous lines.

The choice of Dr. Harrison as the main speaker at the Assembly to present the need for more missionaries is more than appropriate. The world needs many with his skill and devotion.

SOCIALLY-MINDED BISHOP

Rev. Dr. G. Bromley Oxnam, Methodist Bishop of New York.

Clergymen who speak authoritatively and aggressively on social issues are rare. That's why the presence at the Assembly of the Rev. Dr. G. Bromley Oxnam, Methodist Bishop of New York, is important. He is one of the outstanding socially-minded Bishops in the United States.

His leadership in Methodism was recently recognized when he was selected to present the episcopal address at the Methodist General Conference in Boston. He occupies an important place as interdenominational spokesman with his reputation solidly based on his singularly rigorous application of Christian principles to world affairs. He has been selected to address the Assembly on this subject.

Bishop Oxnam has repeatedly set forth what he considers to be the Christian and democratic approach to Communism, insisting that "Communism cannot be conquered by force of arms," but can be overcome only "by establishing democracy at home."

He has waged a tireless fight against racial discrimination, once persuading the late William Cardinal O'Connell, Archbishop of Bos-

STATE COUNCIL OF CHURCH WOMEN TO MEET.

The first annual session of the North Carolina Council of Church women will be held in the United Church, Hillsboro Street, Raleigh, on September 20. Mrs. C. C. Todd of Rocky Mount, president, will preside at the session, which begins at 10:30 a. m. Lunch will be served for a nominal charge by the women of the United Church. Adjournment is set for 4:00 p. m. The theme will be "His Way Together."

Highlight of the session will be a report on the World Council of Churches, recently held in Amsterdam, Holland, given by one of the women delegates.

The devotional period will be conducted by Miss Lucy Steele, Bible teacher in Peace College, Raleigh.

Rev. Carl R. Key, who assumed his duties as the new executive secretary of the North Carolina Council of Churches on September 1, will be presented. The Council of Church Women functions as a department of the State Council of Churches.

Mrs. L. C. Larkin of Burlington, president of the Wesleyan Guild of the Women's Society of Christian Service of the Methodist Church, will lead a discussion on Council work. A report of the biennial Assembly of the United Council of Church Women to be held in Milwaukee this fall will also be presented.

All church women are cordially invited to attend this important gathering in Raleigh on September 20. Every denomination and local council of church women has official representation in the state Council. But in addition to these officers, it is hoped that many interested women will avail themselves of the opportunity to share in this cooperative Christian effort. On September 21, the State Council of Churches meets in Raleigh and the women are invited to attend that session, also.

Our denomination is well represented in the State Councils. The North Carolina Council of Church Women has as its treasurer, Miss Susie Allen. Mrs. O. H. Paris and Mrs. F. C. Lester are the representatives from our denomination, and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman is chairman of the Church Woman Committee. The president of the North Carolina Council of Churches is our Dr. S. C. Harrell, and, of course, the New Executive Secretary of the Council is Carl Key from our own denomination.

NEWS FROM LOCAL SOCIETIES.

WINDSOR, VA.

The Missionary Society of the Windsor Congregational Christian Church observed World Community Day in cooperation with other denominations in our community.

In February three of the churches on this charge met together for observance of the World Day of Prayer.

A very interesting review of our study book, Committed Unto Us, was given by Rev. H. E. Crutchfield.

Our society was represented at the Spring Rally as well as the Waverly Conference.

Mrs. J. M. Raby, our spiritual life leader, has presented well-prepared programs at each meeting. Programs were taken from our Bible study book Thy Kingdom Come.

As our Friendly Service project this year, we sent a box to Miss Angie Crew in Japan.

We are looking forward next year to having Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Morgan with us and hope for a more successful year.

MRS. C. E. FULGHAM.

PORTSMOUTH, VA.

The Missionary Society of Shelton Memorial Congregational Christian Church of Portsmouth, Va., held its regular monthly meetings this year. They were well attended and we have had most interesting programs, following the schedule outlined in our Year Book.

Our Missionary Society has for a number of years held joint meetings with the Woman's Guild, and we have found it to be most satisfactory. The Missionary Society meeting is held in the morning at 11:00 o'clock, opening with a devotional program, followed by a study program and business meeting. We then have lunch, each woman bringing her own sandwiches and the co-hostesses furnishing beverages and dessert. After this social hour, the Guild holds its regular business meeting.

We took an active part in the World Day of Prayer and in May joined with the First Christian Church in the May Fellowship Day program.

In April we had the pleasure of entertaining Rev. and Mrs. Frank Morgan, at which time we had an open meeting and Mrs. Morgan reviewed the book, Committed Unto Us, in a most delightful manner.

Mrs. Lewis, our pastor's wife, is our devotional leader, and we can always depend upon her for an inspiring and interesting talk.

We take great pleasure in sending boxes of clothing and toys at Christmas, Easter, and at other times during the year to our little adopted girl at Elon Christian Orphanage. A number of our members have made numerous articles of clothing for her, and we always bring her a complete outfit each season.

Our society appoints a committee each year from the Junior Guild to help with the Cradle Roll Party.

A Council of Church Women has been recently organized in Portsmouth and our church Missionary Society was represented at the organization meeting. Our minister's wife will be on the governing board of the Council.

We have met all of our obligations, followed the study plan in the Plan Book and we sincerely hope we have attained the standard that has been outlined for us.

MRS. H. W. SHAFER,

President.

UNION (SOUTHAMPTON).

The women's Missionary Society of Union (South.) Christian Church having completed a successful year's work for 1947-48 sends prayers of thanks to Him who has given us strength to carry on. For each of our twelve meetings this year we have enjoyed a well-planned devotional. We conducted our Bible study and met the the standard which was set for us.

Besides our mission work at home and abroad, the women of our church have contributed much to the support of our church as a whole.

We wish to enlist the aid of Christians everywhere through their prayers and through the guidance of God and our much loved pastor and his wife. We are looking forward to a new year of richer Christian fellowship.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

From my window, I can see a vast and lovely space. The window by my desk faces north and gives me a partial view of our yard and my neighbor's which is filled with lovely flowers. Since I have three special "plants" that I'm raising, I haven't been able to cultivate many flowers myself, but I can enjoy others and especially my neighbors'. A rustic fence divides our yards and since early spring a baby squirrel has been coming along the fence, hopping into our elm tree and running on the limb where our swing is fastened. At first he wasn't much bigger than a rat, but now he is sleek and quite grown up and is proud of his beautiful tail. This little squirrel sits on our fence and swings his tail back and forth and chases up one side and down the other. There aren't many mornings when he isn't there and I hope he will stay with us all winter.

One of the things that attracts this bushy friend is my neighbor's birds. They have an outdoors aviary which is a place to keep birds. It holds a dozen or so canaries of lovely yellow and brownish hues and has a shelter in case of rain. The squirrel seems to know them all and sits by watching them and running around and amusing them with his antics. The canaries have other visitors, too, birds of many kinds and, of course, cats! One morning a young tomcat almost killed himself by running into the big cage. Bump would go his head, the aviary still stood; he would back off, and bump again! Finally he went away.

The birds seem very lovely in their yard with the gentians blooming and the Chinese everflowering blossoms, and late roses. Soon the purple michelmas daises will bloom and there are golden marigolds and tough (but pretty!) zennias. All this from my window!

On the other side, the windows face the street, and I hear cries and laughter. It is the early morning sound made by boys and girls going to school. They laugh and push and play hopscotch and shove and then shove some more. Some of them are carrying flowers to their teachers and there are lunch bags and book bags. The earth and its flowers, the birds and animals and the children are all God's gift to us. How can we be unhappy or bad or sad when we think of these gifts?

Father in heaven we come to worship thee.
We think of thy gifts great and small
Father in heaven we thank thee, thank thee.

WHEN PARENTS ARE UNDER- STANDING.

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Tommy seems determined to keep running out of the yard into the street. He is only three-and-a-half years old, and it is not a safe thing to allow him to do. His mother wonders if it is punishment he needs, and then she thinks, "Maybe he needs to see the world outside of our yard. I'll try the experiment of showing it to him."

So she does her usual tasks more quickly than she has been doing them and begins to take daily walks with Tommy—rain or shine. She draws his attention to the birds and the flowers, and he draws her attention to the automobiles, the electric cars, and the busses that go by. He enjoys crossing the street and watching the policeman at work—directing traffic. The experiment proves successful; there is no more trouble in keeping Tommy from running out of the yard.

Alice's mother loses patience because Alice dillydallies about picking up her toys. "I am not going to help you, I am too busy," says Mother, but she stands in the doorway "policing" Alice to work faster—wasting her own time which she considers so precious! How much better it would be were she to help now and then. Alice may not be tired, but she needs encouragement. Possibly she needs prodding a little, too, but that can be done with praise much more satisfactorily than with policing.

Susy's mother is annoyed because Susy keeps opening the little closet doors in the new model kitchen. These doors are just about Susy's height and it is fun for her to open them. Once she crawled into one of the closets and played with the pans, and everybody laughed and said, "How cute!" Now she is constantly wanting to do this again. But Mother does not like to have her opening these doors, and there is one "don't" after another. Then Mother has a bright idea. "You may have this one closet door for your very own," she says. And here are some nice new pans to play with and a spoon. The other closets are mine, so you are not to keep opening the doors." Susy opens her door, walks right through her closet doorway, and sits down! She is quite satisfied and does not wish to open any of the other doors.

Susy also has a "busy drawer." It is in the den, and she has pictures and crayons and pads of paper there. Every so often somebody slips in something new for her to find. That "busy drawer" gives a wonderful lot of pleasure. Susy sits in front of it and plays happily for a long time.

Most mothers are so understanding—some of the time!

The mother of Mary and Harry has just had her kitchen redecorated—white. As she looks at it, she mentally sees the children coming in with muddy overshoes, and she wonders what she can do about it. She has often heard mothers scold because the children came home covered with mud, and she has no intention of following their example. The first day it rains, after this, she goes down into the cellar and finds a wooden box. She makes partitions for it, and by the time the children come home it is ready and standing in the vestibule with a little stool from the playroom beside it.

"Sit on your stool and take off your overshoes; you can each have two sections for them," she says.

"Why, it's just like kindergarten!" exclaims Mary. "What fun it will be to have a place for our overshoes right in our own home!"

The understanding mother or father is always looking for happy ways to overcome difficulties. Sometimes we forget that the reason there is friction or the reason that the children do things the wrong way, is because we have not had the initiative to provide or explain the right way. Now Jack's father makes clear just where Jack may dig in the garden and where he must not walk! He permits him to help with the gardening.

It was said by a celebrated orator in the House of Lords a century ago, that an Englishman's house is his castle, that the winds of heaven might enter by every window, that the rains might penetrate through every cranny, but that not even the sovereign of the land dare enter into it, however humble, without its owner's permission. God treats you in the same way. He says: "Willingly open your heart to Me, and I will give you every blessing; but I must be made welcome."

Youth at Work in the Church

ELIZABETH CHICOINE, Convention Field Worker, Elon College, N. C.

IS THE CHURCH FAILING OUR YOUTH.

[Abstract of address by Edward Hawley, former national president of Pilgrim Fellowship, on "America's Town Meeting of the Air" at the Christian Youth Conference of North America, August 31, Grand Rapids, Mich.]

I was a member of America's delegation (to the second World Conference of Christian Youth in Norway last summer). There thirteen hundred of us from seventy-one different countries met to proclaim Christ's Lordship and to try to understand each other and our job as Christians. I wish I had time to tell of the meetings between these many groups which helped us to understand that we held a common loyalty that transcended our differences. The fact that such a meeting could be held at all in these times indicates to me that the church is not failing completely to meet the needs of youth. The young person today who wants to find international fellowship will find in the Christian church the most widespread organization that he as an ordinary citizen may join.

The church is changing the lives of young people through effectively presenting the gospel. Though this happens in many ways, most important, I think, is the summer conferences or church camp. Here youth are learning the church's message for all of life, as they live twenty-four hours a day as Christians sharing work and play as well as worship, learning standards that can carry over into every aspect of daily life. In classes they become aware of the relation of the gospel to social and economic problems. Often around a campfire on the last evening I have heard halting but powerful testimonies about the power that had come into young lives that week. These young people join literally millions of others who look back to some summer camp or conference in the past thirty years at which they accepted the faith that has since been the framework of meaning for their lives. These conferences, and denominational youth fellowships which sponsor them, are to me living proof that the church is not failing youth. Through such organizations young people are daily being built into the world fellowship represented by the Oslo Conference, and, more important, into the invisible fellowship of the everlasting church of Christ.

YOUTH OF TODAY—LEADERS OF TOMORROW.

[Address by Imogene Young, Methodist national winner of 1948 Parshad Youth Week Award at the Christian Youth Conference of North America, September 1, Grand Rapids, Mich.]

"Youth of today—leaders of tomorrow" is the cry we hear with indifference and shallow thinking. "Youth of today—leaders of tomorrow!" Again, we hear the cry and turn our heads away. A third time we hear it, "Youth of today—leaders of tomorrow," and go heedlessly on.

Look at the youth of today—that boy loafing on the street corner with nothing to do; the crowd which believes it smart to drink; the girl who doesn't believe in God.

"Stop looking," you say. But wait! Look again! This time at the boy studying for the ministry; the couple striving to set up a Christian home; hundreds of lives dedicated to full time Christian service; the boy and girl working toward social equality; thousands having "mountain-top" experiences in summer camps—we look again and have faith once more.

Perhaps we could ask ourselves to which group do I belong? What purpose do I have in life? Or do I have one? Perhaps we're like the little kindergarten girl who lost her birth certificate on the way to school and ran up to her teacher and cried, "I've lost my excuse for being born!" What excuse is ours? What use are we making of our lives? The time is short. We should be working, striving now. There could be no better place than a conference like this to rededicate our lives and take up the cross. Our responsibilities are large, opportunities are many, if we will only see them. I say, "Let's get to work. It's up to us!"

REPORT FROM OAK GROVE.

The Young People's Society of Oak Grove Congregational Christian Church has nearly completed another successful year under the leadership of our faith leader, Mrs. Elsie Eason.

We have our meetings once a month in the homes of the different members.

In this way we have a chance to meet in all members' homes and have a very enjoyable time. Our programs are used every month and seem to be very impressive.

The study book, That All May Know, was reviewed by each of the members and enjoyed by all.

All of our members attended the Spring Eastern Virginia Conference of Pilgrim Fellowship held in Suffolk, Va., and learned much from it.

On August 3, we held a joint vesper service with the Woman's Society at church. The meeting was led by the president of the women, Mrs. W. K. Parker, and the singing by our Home Demonstration Agent, Miss Bertha Mallard. After the service a weiner roast was enjoyed by all and then for entertainment the young people gave a "Womanless Wedding."

For fun in our group we have chosen "Bluebirds."

We also ordered The New World Ahead book and have reported on all the chapters in it. We take Pilgrim Youth, which all of us enjoy greatly.

Thus, we are nearing the end of another year. We have accomplished much and hope in the coming year to do even more than we have in this one.

DAN GREEN,
Secretary.

FROM THE SUFFOLK BULLETIN.

To the Sunday School Folks—Congratulations on your fine large Sunday school classes, and congratulations on the fine lessons you have, your songs, your prayers, and all the good fellowship you have together.

Please help further by carrying this good work over into the morning church service. The morning church worship at 11:00 o'clock would be so much more inspiration and help to all if those who attended Sunday school could arrange to remain for the morning worship.

Teach your children to attend church. The worth of the church in your community is gauged by its influence and strength. This in turn is gauged by the attendance. You and your family receive a blessing and in turn confer a blessing by attending the main worship service of your church.

There are some hungers which alcoholic drink can never satisfy: their hunger for companionship, for love, for recognition, for understanding, for security, for contact with God. All that drink can do is to reduce us to a lower level of consciousness and blunt the fine edge of our perceptions.—The Voice.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

EUNICE, LOIS AND TIMOTHY, A RELIGIOUS FAMILY.

LESSON XIII—SEPTEMBER 26, 1948.

LESSON: Acts 16:1-5; 17:13-15; I Corinthians 4:14-21; 16:10-11; Philippians 2:19-20; I Thessalonians 3:10; II Timothy 1:3-14; 3:14-15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 119: 129-136.

In the Days of Youth.

Timothy was won to the Christian faith when he was a young man. He undoubtedly was a convert of Paul, won on Paul's first Missionary Journey, when he visited Lystra. Paul referred to him as his "beloved son" or as his "son" in the sense that Paul was his spiritual father. Timothy evidently heard Paul preach, he undoubtedly talked with Paul about the Christian life, and he yielded his life to Christ at Paul's earnest and impassioned plea. It is good for a young person to confess Christ "in the days of youth." As a matter of fact, very few persons are ever converted after they are twenty-five years of age. The most fertile field of evangelism is the teen age.

A Goodly Heritage.

This young man, Timothy, had a goodly heritage, at least on his mother's side. His grandmother, Lois, and his mother, Eunice, were of fine character and sturdy faith. Writing to Timothy later in life Paul refers to the unfeigned faith, the sincere, genuine, the honest-to-goodness faith, that dwelt in Timothy, but which dwelt both in his grandmother and in his mother. Under the influence and the training of these women of God this young man had come into a vital, personal faith of his own. The lines had fallen to him in pleasant places, yea, he had a goodly heritage. Happy indeed is that young man or young woman who comes from a home which has a background and an atmosphere of Christian faith. These women, both of them Jews, probably became Christians also under the appeal and persuasiveness of Paul's preaching, but before that their inner lives were nourished and sustained by faith in God. This matter of home influence and atmosphere cannot be too strongly emphasized in its relation to the religious life of children in the home and the family. Our modern world needs a revival of religion in the home. There are a lot of modern mothers and fathers who need to be converted if they are to be worthy stewards of their high privileges and sacred responsibilities.

A Good Name.

Timothy had a good name in the community. "The same was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium." The home folks had been impressed by this quiet, dependable, upright lad in their midst. They thought well of him; he had a good name. They were glad to give him an unqualified recommendation. Familiarity. Familiarity had bred admiration instead of contempt. He had a good name which is rather to be chosen than great riches—the Bible itself is authority for that word. Some young folks do not seem to care what folks think of them. They cynically ask, "What's in a name anyway?" Well, there's a great deal in a name. One had better be careful about his reputation. One had better take pains to earn a good name. And one had better take pains to keep a good name. Character is, of course, more important than reputation. But reputation, or a good name is very important.

A Grand Background.

Timothy had an intimate knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. Paul refers to the fact that "from a babe thou hast known the sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Jesus Christ." This young man was thrice blessed. From early childhood, perhaps even before he knew what she was reading, his mother had read to him, or told him about the Word of God. From her lips, and on her knee, he heard the thrilling stories of the founders of the nation and the heroes of the faith. Under her loving guidance he had learned the great passages of the great literature of the Bible, which is a literature of power. His mind and heart were steeped in the spirit and content of this great Book. How much it all meant to the young man grown to manhood. Far more than he was conscious of, the spirit of this Book was woven into the very texture of his life and character. It gave ruggedness and strength and beauty to his character. And it was the road down which he walked and the light which he followed, that led him straight to Jesus Christ. Paul's words did not fall on stony ground—the Scriptures had made him wise unto salvation which is in Christ Jesus. Modern mothers will do well to learn of this mother of that far-off land and that far-off day. There are many excellent Bible story books available and adaptable. And there is the Bible itself. Familiarity with it will make available a great mass of material in itself appropriate for use with growing children. And even if they cannot understand it all, it will still have its effect. Its words are spirit and life and beyond what folks can understand there are things that they can experience. Fortunate indeed is that child whose mother, from babyhood, shares with him the treasures of the Bible.

A Volunteer for the Foreign Field.

"Him Paul would have to go forth with him." This likely young man would make a splendid assistant on the mission field. Paul wanted him to go with him. It is likely that like many another young man or woman, Timothy had to go through a heart-searching experience, as he faced the question of his life's work. But he evidently had given himself wholly to Christ, and when he became sure of the call, he said, "Here am I; send me." Thus perhaps the greatest missionary team of all time was formed—Paul and Timothy. And what a privilege Timothy had in being associated with Paul! That was better than a course in seminary! There are many calls for volunteers today, urgent calls from a world that is in the process of being rebuilt. Ministers, teachers, doctors, nurses, musicians, technicians, craftsmen, agricultural experts—there are calls for almost every kind of professional service, and practical help coming from lands around the world. Every young person, facing his life's work ought to face this question before making a final decision: "What would Christ have me to do?"

A Faithful Friend.

This friendship between Paul and Timothy was a beautiful thing. They shared each other's lives intimately and worked together admirably. There was a strong and deep and tender affection between them. Again and again Timothy's friendship and his presence meant so much to Paul. And when at long last it became evident that the end had come, that "the time of his departure was at hand" Paul sent for his younger friend. It was the kind of time when one wants only his loved ones and his closest friends by his side, and Paul instinctively turned to Timothy. He could have paid him no greater tribute, ton, to join him in condemning anti-Semitism.

Born the son of a California industrialist, Bishop Oxnam has maintained a life-long interest in labor. He has constantly deplored "an anti-labor attitude" and has been active in promoting social and economic reforms.

Bishop Oxnam is a man of remarkably wide interests. Since leaving college, he has progressed upward through roles as teacher, professor, preacher, lecturer, author, college president and bishop. He is widely traveled, having visited Russia three times, and covered extensively the Orient and Europe.

Bishop Oxnam will aid in a very concrete way the assembly's efforts to provide a realistic answer to the world's problems.

FUND RAISER

Rev. Setareki Tuilovoni, Minister from Fiji.

No one at the Assembly will command more attention than the Rev. Setareki Tuilovoni, Methodist minister from the Fiji Islands, a region virtually unknown to Americans prior to World War II.

While attending the International Council at Whitby, Ontario, last year, Mr. Tuilovoni regaled his audience with an account of perhaps the world's most unique method of fund raising for missions work.

During a speaking engagement before a women's group in Australia, he overheard one of the women whisper that she would like to touch his hair, which like that of most Fijians is 13 inches long and very bushy. Mr. Tuilovoni spoke up: "Anyone present may feel my hair if she gives one shilling to missions work."

Mr. Tuilovoni met the resulting rush towards the platform by announcing his rates. "For a slight press of the fingers, one shilling; for a heavy push, five shillings." He raised 50 pounds, or more than $200 on the spot.

Mr. Tuilovoni's long hair notwithstanding, the Fiji Islands do not make up the "heathen land" most Americans think. The Fiji's are considered one of the most thoroughly Christianized spots on earth. One century ago the natives were cruel savages, today, their descendants are 99 per cent Christian, free from the influence of liquor, prostitution and radio.

The fact that Mr. Tuilovoni's homeland is almost completely evangelized has resulted in a unique situation. A great number of young people are ready for Christian service, only to find few positions available. It might not be surprising to hear the young Fiji Islander tell the Assembly that his own people are better equipped than any other to evangelize the remainder of the South Seas.

Mr. Tuilovoni was originally educated for teaching. Following a stint as instructor at Teacher's College, Davuikvu, he turned to the ministry. He occupies the leading pulpit at Suva, capital of Fiji, although at present he is on leave to study at Drew Theological Seminary, where he startles fellow students by playing tennis barefoot.

A tall and striking figure, fluent in English, Mr. Tuilovoni is a colorful personality who has won a tremendous following wherever he travels and speaks.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

We have had our regular meetings each month. At this time our spiritual life leader had charge of worship services and has given us some very interesting thoughts.

After our business meeting the program committee took charge and rendered a very good program, using a different theme each month.

We had our public program and met with the other churches and observed the World Day of Prayer.

We also sent flowers and cards to the sick, and sent a box to Japan.

Our delegates attended both conference and rally.

We are looking forward with great anticipation to the coming year hoping to do more in the service of our Lord.

MRS. J. H. GODWIN,
Secretary.

ISLE OF WIGHT CHURCH.

Roberts and John T. Turner signed the deed. However, by deed dated August 10, 1903, O. L. Batten and wife, having become owners of the land previously owned by W. A. Womble, gave the trustees a clear title to the land. Then, by another deed dated August 16, 1910, the same O. L. Batten and wife sold to the church, for the sum of $40, a small piece of land in the rear of the present edifice.

Congregation Did Work.

Two leaders in the church-building drive, John T. Turner and William Pierce, attended the convention at Holy Neck in an attempt to secure financial aid. They succeeded in obtaining some aid, but most of the material, money, and work was donated by members of the congregation itself. L. P. Roberts was in charge of the construction, and the cornerstone of the church was laid in September, 1891, by June 23, 1894, the full amount for the erection of the church had been paid.

Charter members of this church were W. H. Pierce, L. H. Whirley, J. C. Thomas, Cornelius Chapman, John T. Turner, Harvey Munford, John Bland, Mac Parkerson, William S. Turner and the families of each.

Now that the church was built at last, the members commenced formulating church resolutions. Some of the more interesting are the following:

"Resolved, that any member who fails to attend two quarterly conferences in succession, without sending a written excuse or message to the church, shall stand suspended. Resolved, that if such member does not appear or send in a satisfactory excuse at the next quarterly conference without further action."

"Regarding the giddy dance: Resolved, that we as a church do positively object to any member encouraging dancing by participating in it or allowing it in his home."

"Regarding liquor: Resolved, that we as a church do positively object to any member using liquor to intoxication. Resolved, that if any member refuse to give up this evil we will not expel him, but withdraw church fellowship from him according to instructions given in the Bible."

Ladies' Aid Expansion.

These resolutions were adopted and set down in the early records of the church, and the members sat back and viewed their accomplishments with pride. However, improvements remained stationary for only a short time. Under the ministry of the Rev. R. H. Peele, 1909-1911, new Sunday school rooms were added at the rear of the church, and while the Rev. Stanley C. Harrell served from 1911-1917, an eight-foot vestibule was added at the front of the church, and other repairs and improvements representing $1,462.66 were made. The Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society played an important role in paying this debt.

During the ministry of the pastors who served between 1918 and 1948, namely, E. T. Cotton, J. M. Roberts, T. E. White, W. D. Harvard, D. M. Spence, G. A. Pearce, E. B. White, C. E. Geringer, H. E. Crutchfield, Fred Wright and C. S. Morgan,

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Board of Trustees of the Christian Orphanage met in its semi-annual meeting on Wednesday, September 8, with eleven members present. It was the best attended meeting we have had in a good long time and was a very pleasant meeting. Everyone was in a good humor and humorous. The new members elected at the Southern Convention were present and took an active part.

The Orphanage Board has always been composed of men and women who have worked together, and during the years they have really done things worthwhile. From time to time they have built needed buildings. They have bought land, until the Christian Orphanage has a very attractive plant. From time to time the orphanage has trained and sent out some fine girls and boys of whom we are all proud.

The orphanage has always run on a pretty sound financial basis and kept out of debt, although it is very much in need of funds now. Prices of everything we have to buy have been so extremely high, and our income has been so small from the churches that we cannot make ends meet. We only have a small amount for running capital. The rest we have on hand is restricted, and we are not allowed to use it only for the things for which it was specified when it was given. We hope and pray that the churches will come to our rescue and increase their offerings to help us in this expensive season of the year when shoes and winter clothing are to be bought.

We have already gotten in our supply of coal for the winter and paid for it. Coal comes high now; the highest we have ever had to pay. It takes three cars to run us through the winter to keep the buildings warm and comfortable. It is some relief to know that we do have our coal supply on hand.

We are having pretty weather now, and the orphanage farmer is very busy cutting hay and plowing land to sow oats. It will be a busy time on the farm from now until the wheat is sowed.

MIGRANT WORKERS OF VIRGINIA.

at Winchester, Crozet, Washington and Catawba.

The migrants help with local harvest and contribute toward the communities' wealth. Yet these men and women are not a part of the local community. Very little has been done for their religious, recreational or child welfare.

An initial program was begun by the Virginia Council of Churches in cooperation with the Home Missions Council of North America this summer to provide religious and recreational ministry to the migrants at the four Eastern Shore Camps.

Rev. Edward E. Holmes, Negro minister of Berlin, Md., reported for work among the migrants at the four camps on the Eastern Shore in June. He found the men and women receptive to the idea of bettering their religious and recreational status. Introducing preaching, Sunday school classes, movies, sports, this minister discovered that the migrants preferred wholesome recreation to gambling, attending worship services to idling.

Rev. Edwin M. Alcorn, of Trinity Reformed Church, Timberville, is doing volunteer work among the peach and apple picking migrants in the upper valley of Virginia.

The Church Council is now projecting a plan to employ two or three full-time religious workers among the migrants during the 1949 harvesting season in Virginia. A child welfare program is also being organized.

Prayers, aid and cooperation is sought of every Christian to institute a successful migrant program among Virginia "visitors" next year when the harvest season opens early in May. Practically every State along the Eastern Seaboard already has an operating migrant program providing religious and recreational activities for adults and a child care program for the youth. Can Virginia Christians do less?

A clock may have an excellent machinery, its wheels may revolve with regularity, but it is of no service unless it has a face and hands to profess the hours of the day. Thus it is necessary that the inward life of the believer should be made manifest in his profession. One says he lets his example tell his own life. True; but why not your words and public acts as well tell the story of Jesus?—H. O. Rowlands.

RELIGIOUS PICTURE AWARDED OSCAR.

Presentation of the annual award—a bronze Oscar—of the Cleveland Film Council for the best motion picture with a religious theme produced during the past year was made by Miss Virginia Beard of Cleveland, president of the Council and head of the Film Bureau of the Cleveland Public Library, to Paul F. Heard, Executive Secretary of the Protestant Film Commission, at Nassour Studios in Hollywood on August 20. The Commission's prize-winning film, "My Name Is Han," was filmed entirely in China with an all-Chinese cast. It tells the story of the rehabilitation of a Chinese family after the war, as a result of Christian Missions.

The Protestant Film Commission is at present engaged in another production on Christian Missions—in the Orient—a feature-length picture telling the story of a Japanese family in the post-war era. It is being directed by William James, from a script by Charles Schwep, both of whom are now in Japan making the production under supervision of Heard as Executive Producer.

RELIGION AND POLITICAL ACTION.

"He that loveth not, knoweth not God." Love never changes. But the forms of its expression often changes so radically that we are in danger of failing to recognize them. In modern society for instance there are many economic, social, racial and international relations which, in addition to other remedies, demand legislation in order to prevent suffering, provide opportunities for human freedom, and promote peace. If, therefore, we really love those who are in need, our love must often find expression by urging legislatures to act for or against specific bills. This may seem a strange substitute for the personal kindness of the good Samaritan. But true love will find its insistent way even though it must bear the postmark of a communication to one's representative in local, national or world government.

"Is it not also the clear duty of a Christian to participate as an active member of whatever political party not only assures honesty and efficiency in government, but comes nearest to expressing Christian principles in social, economic and world relations? After careful study of the history, platforms and purposes of all political parties, each individual must decide for himself before God which one most truly stands for social justice, brotherhood, goodness and mercy in human affairs." — (From "Meditations Personal and Social" by James Myers, published by the Commission on Worship, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.)

ISLE OF WIGHT CHURCH.

church membership grew rapidly and its good works progressed proportionately. However, repairs were constantly needed, and in 1945, during the ministry of Rev. Fred Wright, the Isle of Wight Christians started a building fund in anticipation of the time when the church should be financially able to make badly needed repairs, improvements and additions to the Sunday school rooms. For several years the church workers solicited, worked and collected funds for this purpose, but the money was not enough in view of the high price of labor and materials. So the church waited—waited for prices to come down within sight of its bank account. But one fine Sunday morning, members of the Men's Bible Class glanced upward to find that their eyes traveled right through a hole in the room's plastering, on through the sheathing, from thence through the shingles to catch a glimpse of a big patch of bright blue sky overhead. They decided that they had waited long enough. Many generously donated more money, until actual work on the church began in November, 1947. The improvements, amounting to $18,000, include Sunday school rooms, new roof, new floors, plastering, and windows, plus a heating system and numerous small repairs. While the edifice was in the period of reconstruction, services were held in the Isle of Wight school. The Rev. J. M. Roberts, a former minister, is now serving the church as supply pastor until such time as the new minister, Rev. Frank Morgan, can assume his duties.

Godlessness may be rampant in the land, but this little church is keeping faith with its heritage.—Norfolk Virginian-Pilot.

WHAT IS THE ANSWER? THE CHURCH

Abstract of address by DR. ISAAC K. BECKES, at the Christian Youth Conference of North America

I believe in the Church of the Living Christ. I believe it is the answer to man's need. I believe that in it man has the answer to the disaster and the despair and the fear and the antagonism this world has heaped upon him. I do not believe the world has taken the church seriously. But, that is not strange because Christians themselves, even those of us who are clergymen, have not taken it seriously.

I believe that the church is the answer only in the degree in which it becomes a God possessed community. As God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, so he must be in the church if it is the answer to the world's need. It was Paul's thought that the church is the body of the living Christ, and Paul's is a valid concept.

The church is not a mere gathering together of men to undertake a worthy project. It is more than the aggregate, the sum total of all Christian believers. It is a continuation of the life and work of Jesus Christ, the nucleus of a new humanity here to persuade the world unto God, here as God's beach-head of love, mercy and compassion, in a world of hate, revenge, and destruction. The church of the living Christ is here for one purpose, to make God apparent to men.

And, I know full well what some of us are asking: How can the church as we know it, ineffectual, petty, divided, arrogant, make God apparent? Do you mean the organized church, or the church spiritual? Surely the organized church with all the problems of ecclesiastical machinery, of clerical foolishness, cannot make God apparent today?

The answer is, of course, the church is guilty of all the sins human beings commit. It is a fallible fellowship because it is human. It is not a company of people whose lives perfectly express God's will, but a company of folks who believe that God is at work in the lives of his people. It has many sins to confess. Not always has it stood with Divine compassion to aid the starving, the persecuted, with whom Christ has been concerned. I know it has itself been guilty of sharing in these very evils. Not always has it been humble of spirit, and often it has in arrogance been wrong. Sometimes it has mistaken ceremony for true devotion. Often it has been more greedy than charitable. For generations it has had a divisive rather than a healing influence among the peoples of the world. But, if men were Godly, Christ need never have come.

Weak and faltering individuals that we are, bound together by time and energy-consuming church organizations, together we still make up the church of Christ entrusted with the job of reconciling the world unto God. I have a feeling that most of our Protestant congregations today never truly face up to this primary job of reconciliation. It is our task as young Christians to begin in our own parishes, give the full measure of our leadership to make them the answer to men's need.

We must take our places in this community of God intelligently. We must confess its sins. We must work to make it a pure and effective instrument of God, relevant to our time, truly the Body of the Living Christ. Our labors must begin in our local congregations, in national and world denominational and ecumenical bodies. Our leadership and our efforts must not be unthinking. Our churches have problems which we must face, patiently, persistently. We can consider only a few:

1. We must work to help our churches, both as local parishes and national organizations realize their destinies as the Fellowship of Christ reconciling the world unto God.
2. We must strive for unity in the fellowship of Christ.

The ecumenical movement is the wave of the future. God wills it. But a world-wide ecumenical movement must bring its compulsion of love into our local communities. It must respect the integrity and sincere viewpoint of the smallest group and the least individual, but must also be a mighty fellowship of love to be effective in reconciling the world unto God.

We must re-interpret the place of the church on the national and world scene. The growing Christian church cannot forever merely be against evil, against the uprooting of peoples from their homes, against persecution of the Jews, against segregation of the Negroes. There must be a more positive way than we yet have found for cooperating with governments to achieve justice among men; to build the atmosphere of reconciliation.

So long as the spirit of God chooses to incarnate itself in human life that men may find salvation, problems will continue; but despite its weakness, its human fallibility, that community of people in whose souls God in Christ dwells will continue to be the hope of the world, the answer to men's need.

THE CALL TO ADVANCE

By WILLIAM E. MCCORMACK,
President of The Board of Home Missions

WE CALL OUR FELLOWSHIP into a dynamic resistance against the rampant evils which beset us.

WE CALL UPON OUR FELLOWSHIP to face its own fears and futilities with a robust faith in God's grace to bring order and dispatch to his Church through Jesus Christ.

WE CALL UPON OUR CHURCHES to examine their purposes and programs in the light of the Divine insistence that we commit our ways unto him and bring our wills into his all-embracing design.

WE CALL UPON OUR FELLOWSHIP to confront the world with the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ and with the evidence of our belief in the power of that Evangel to save from futility and despair.

WE CALL UPON OUR FELLOWSHIP to bestir itself in recruitment for Christ, in the enlistment of its members for the contest against the powers of darkness, and in the creation of an inescapable and conclusive witness.

WE CALL UPON OUR LEADERS, PASTORS AND PEOPLE to give earnest heed to what the Spirit is saying unto the churches in our hours of testing, that we may advance with unfaltering hope toward the unity of the Church Universal.

WE CALL UPON OUR FELLOWSHIP to forsake its absorption with the routine and conventional patterns of churchmanship, and to seek earnestly a fresh and joyful participation in the life of God through Jesus Christ along ways appropriate to his blessed ministry of reconciliation and redemption.

WE CALL UPON OUR FELLOW MEMBERS to return again and again to the inexhaustible resources of power and inspiration in the words of Sacred Scripture; to join in fervent prayer for the forgiving, cleansing and renewing love of God, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the sense of community through the Holy Spirit.

WE CALL OUR FELLOWSHIP to a renewed emphasis upon evangelism to be known during this biennium as "OUR CHRISTIAN WORLD MISSION," to permeate every board and committee, every conference and association, every church and society, until every task is seen in its relation to the duty "committed unto us" in the fellowship of redemption.

LAYMAN'S SUNDAY—OCTOBER 17.

Mr. George D. Colclough, chairman of the Layman's Fellowship of the Southern Convention, has just announced that Sunday, October 17, is to be observed as Layman's Sunday throughout the Convention. Mr. Colclough says: "We are hoping that every pulpit in the Convention will have a layman participating in the services on this date." Every minister in the Southern Convention has been sent a letter setting forth the fact that the Layman's Council has gone on record as favoring the setting aside of this date as a special day for laymen's participation. Each minister is asked if he will cooperate, will one of his own laymen be the speaker, and if he will give the names of other laymen in his church who will be willing to speak in other churches if needed. Ministers are asked to reply to Mr. Colclough's letter at the earliest opportunity.

JAMES O'KELLY'S MONUMENT.

It seems that for sometime there was no slab or shaft erected to mark the place where his mortal remains were laid. In the year 1850 at the Conference at Union (Alamance County), North Carolina, Revs. George G. Walker, A. Turner and Dr. E. F. Watson were appointed a committee to have a suitable monument erected at the grave of Mr. O'Kelly, but the work of the committee was not completed until 1854, when the monument was formally unveiled.

In this year the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, embracing the churches in Central Virginia and North Carolina, met at O'Kelly's Chapel in Chatham County, North

Rev. W. B. Wellons, who was a recognized leader in the denomination at that time, was at this meeting, having recently returned from the American Christian Convention at Cincinnati, Ohio, where the division between the Northern and Southern Christians over the much vexed question of slavery, took place.

It was not long after this conference before all the preliminaries were completed, and in November, 1854, the formal unveiling took place. The order of exercises at the unveiling was as follows:

1. An Ode (said to have been written by Miss R. F. Scott of Ohio, and read by Rev. John Ellis. These lines were beautiful and much admired).
2. Prayer by Rev. W. B. Wellons.
3. An address by Rev. Isaac N. Walter of Springfield, Ohio.

BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS HAS NEW PRESIDENT.

Rev. William Elbert McCormack, D. D., minister of historic Old First Church of Christ, Congregational, of Springfield, Massachusetts, has been elected president of the Board of Home Missions. He succeeds Dr. Alfred Grant Walton.

Dr. McCormack, who was born in Farmington, Missouri, is the fifteenth minister of Old First Church of Christ, which was founded over 300 years ago. The church has recently completed a rebuilding program costing about $200,000 to provide one of the best equipped educational and social buildings in the Congregational Christian denomination. It has a total membership of over 2,000 of which 1,500 are actively engaged in some phase of church work, showing the effectiveness of Dr. McCormack's belief that "churchmen who are inactive are not worth their salt. Christianity is not a creed to be agreed to, but a life to be lived."

Educated in the schools of Kansas City, Missouri, and Springfield, Missouri, Dr. McCormack is a graduate of the Southwest Missouri State College, Garrett Biblical Institute, and holds an honorary D. D. from Defiance College. He has taken graduate work at Boston University and Northwestern University.

Active in the YMCA, Boy Scouts, Community Chest and the Council of Social Agencies, Dr. McCormack is well known in civic circles in Springfield. He is a member of the directorates of Hard of Hearing League, Safety Council, National Conference of Christians and Jews, and the Board of Home Missions.

Dr. McCormack, writer of our front page article, will be remembered as one of the speakers at the Institute on Evangelism held last year at the United Church, Raleigh. Miss Virginia Webber, who served for a number of years at Newport News, is now on Dr. McCormack's staff.

VIRGINIA COUNCIL OF CHURCH WOMEN.

With the theme, "His Way — Together," the third annual meeting of the Virginia Council of Church Women will be held at Monument Methodist Church, 1801 Park Avenue, Richmond, Va., September 30 and October 1. The Council is a department of the Virginia Council of Churches.

Featured speakers will be Miss Margaret T. Applegarth of the American Committee of the World Council of Churches; the Rev. Dr. John H. Marion, director of Christian social relations, Presbyterian Church, U. S., and chairman of the Virginia Council's department of Social Education and Action, and the Rev. Henry Lee Robison, Jr., executive secretary of the Virginia Council.

Miss Applegarth is on the staff of the American Committee of the World Council of Churches, as its traveling speaker on Christian Unity and Ecumenical Education. For ten months she has been traveling around the rim of the United States, speaking in colleges, churches, clubs and conferences. For nine years she was national chairman of the World Day of Prayer, observed in 68 countries on the first Friday in Lent.

Miss Applegarth is the daughter of a Baptist minister. She was graduated from the University of Rochester, Phi Beta Kappa, and holds the honorary degree of L.H.D. from Denison University.

Led by Mrs. Donald W. Richardson of Richmond, president, the Council of Church Women will open their main sessions Thursday, September 30, at 7:30 p. m.

Mrs. F. R. Crawford, Presbyterian representative of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, will speak on "His Way—Together . . . Through the World Mission of the Church." There will be a film strip on World Day of Prayer projects, Mrs. A. R. Ware telling of the observance in Virginia.

Migrant work in Virginia will be described by the Rev. Mr. Robison, and the main address of the evening will be given by Miss Applegarth.

Dr. Marion will speak Friday morning, October 1, on Moral Issues in Civil Rights. Under the general topic, "His Way — Together . . . Through Christian Social Relations," Mrs. P. E. Faw will also speak on May Fellowship Day in Virginia, and Mrs. A. T. Gray on the Church Woman.

At the closing afternoon session, Mrs. J. Earl Moreland will be heard on "His Way—Together . . . Through Christian World Relations," followed by Mrs. R. H. Davis on World Community Day in Virginia, and a closing meditation by Miss Applegarth.

WAVERLY, SPRING HILL AND CENTERVILLE PLAN HOME-COMING.

Waverly, Spring Hill and Centerville Churches are planning a Home-Coming Service at Waverly Christian Church, Sunday, October 10. All former pastors, members and friends of these churches are invited back home to worship with us that day. The morning program will begin at 11:15, after which dinner will be served in the religious educational building. The afternoon program will follow the dinner and social hour.

JOSEPH E. McCAULEY.

REMEMBER THESE DATES!

September 26 - October 3 will be the 18th annual observance of Religious Education Week, with the theme: "Christ and the Community."

World-Wide Communion comes this year on Sunday, October 3.

The Virginia Council of Church Women will hold their annual meeting at Monument Methodist Church, Richmond, Va., on Friday, October 1, beginning at ten o'clock. The Board of Directors will meet on Thursday, September 30, at 2:00 p. m. Those desiring overnight entertainment must write to Mrs. E. R. Broadbuss, 1717 Laburnum Avenue, Richmond.

Laymen's Sunday, October 17, offers an excellent opportunity for your laymen to give expression to the workability of their Christian faith. Through participating in the service on this Sunday they will encourage their fellow laymen in a more conscientious use of Christian principles

THURSDAY AT HENDERSON.

The Editor and Managing Editor drove to Henderson yesterday (yesterday means last Thursday when this appears in print), attended a miniature Southern Convention, visited the Editor's mother at Franklinton, and were back in Richmond at bedtime. A grand day!

North Carolina and Virginia have linked through many years in the Southern Convention. While this relationship has had the difficulties of rather great distances for travel, it offers unmistakable advantages. The two states are equally yoked and make a good "team" (to use Dr. Truitt's appropriate phrase); they provide diversified fields for the exchange of ministers and wholesome fellowship in Christian service. There is an occasional flair of friendly rivalry.

Approximately thirty lay and ministerial Convention officials assembled at Henderson in response to the call of President Truitt: "To make plans for carrying out the mandates of the Southern Convention, with special study of the Plan of Advance and of the increased Conference Apportionments." One minister left home at 4 a. m. in order to attend the meeting on time! Who said all ministers sleep late?

The detailed results of this meeting will be published later, but it may be stated here that the day was profitably spent in study, prayer and planning. We examined our hearts and confessed our sins. We tried to establish our spiritual bearings. We took stock of our material and spiritual resources. We examined some of the areas of our responsibility and dedicated ourselves to the unfinished tasks of the Kingdom at home and abroad.

WE SALUTE ASHEBORO.

Churches, like individuals, should set a good example for others. Example is contagious. Churches tend to follow patterns of work set by other churches. "Old Timers" tell of the days when churches demanded cuspidors because one church set this thoughtful and fashionable precedent for its tobacco chewing, expectorating parishioners. Now and again we hear of churches building parsonages in rapid succession, spurred by the example of another church.

Asheboro, one of our youngest churches, recently completed its new structure, is maintaining a full-time program with an annual budget of $7,500, and asked no aid this year from the Mission Board. The church and its pastor, Dr. F. C. Lester, are cited for their prompt graduation or emancipation from the Mission Board. The undivided services of a capable minister, a challenging program and the will to work all facilitate the progress of the local church toward maturity. Godspeed to Asheboro!

Here is an example for other aspiring churches in the Western North Carolina Conference and elsewhere. Asheboro, long neglected by our denomination, has now become an important center of our fellowship in this conference. The church has come rapidly to maturity and self-support. Where else will one find a congregation of just seventy-five members sustaining a budget of $7,500?

We think immediately of other equally important but neglected towns and cities with adjacent or surrounding churches of our denomination. Delay is costly. The Asheboro story could and should be duplicated without delay in a half-dozen areas. Why halt we longer between two opinions?

ACROSS THE EDITOR'S DESK.

Research studies have shown a higher average of stability and happiness in homes where religion is given an important place, Dr. L. Foster Wood, chairman of the Intercouncil Committee on Christian Family Life, points out in announcing the seventh observance of Family Week, May 1-8, 1949.

"Christian family living not only furnishes the pattern of approach to human problems," he states, "but it also creates a supporting climate which aids in producing leaders able to meet world problems in a family spirit."

The theme for the 1949 observance will be "Home Builders are World Builders." The Intercouncil Committee is under the joint sponsorship of the United Council of Church Women, the International Council of Religious Education and the Federal Council of Churches. The committee's program is a part of the annual interfaith observance of Family Week.

In making the announcement, Dr. Wood states, "When so much of civilization has been destroyed, both materially and spiritually, family members cannot merely sit by and expect it to be rebuilt by statesmen and governments. The world of world statesmen must be undergirded by sound living and thinking in the smallest units."

"While there are world forces which grip all families with giant power," he adds, "families are not merely victims of world conditions. Each home can make itself the beginning of a world of mutual confidence and dependable relationships and every family group which accomplishes this purpose aids in the rebuilding of civilization."

Neither patents, processes nor secrets are any longer assurance of success. The men responsible for the financing of industry have come to recognize that scientific methods have largely leveled down the advantages between one product and another. There are no longer any secrets in business, at least not in the most successful business.—Bruce Barton.

FAILURE AND SUCCESS.

A Sermon

By REV. ROY D. COULTER.

"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—I Jn. 1:9.

We must not hide our sin and seek to salve it over with excuses, or to push it out of our memory by the lapse of time. We must do as the children of Israel did, rise up "early in the morning," and "run" to the place where the evil thing is hidden, and take it out of its hiding-place, and lay it "out before the Lord." We must confess our sin.

Moreover, we must forget our sin as soon as it is thus confessed and forgiven. We must not dwell on it, and examine it, and indulge in a luxury of distress and remorse. We must not put it on a pedestal, and then walk around it and view it on every side, and so magnify it into a mountain that hides our God from our eyes. We must follow the example of Paul, and "forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before," we must "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

I would like to bring up two contrasting illustrations of these things. One was an earnest Christian man, an active worker in the church, who had been living for several months in the enjoyment of full salvation as he understood it. He was suddenly overcome by a temptation to treat a brother unkindly. Not having supposed it possible that he could thus sin, he was at once plunged into the deepest discouragement, and concluded he had been altogether mistaken, and had never been forgiven that he might enter into the life of full trust at all. Day by day his discouragement increased until it became despair, and he concluded there was no use in trying to be born again, and gave himself up for lost. He spent three years of utter misery, going further and further away from God, and being gradually drawn off into one sin after another until his life was a curse. His health failed him under the burden, and fears were entertained for his reason. At the end of three years he met a fine Christian lady, who understood the truth about sin that I have been trying to explain. She at once said, "You sinned in that act, there is no doubt about it, and I do not want to try and excuse it. But have you confessed it to the Lord and asked Him to forgive you?" "Confessed it!" he exclaimed, "why it seems to me I have done nothing but confess it, and entreated God to forgive me night and day for all these three years." "And you have never believed He did forgive you?" asked the lady. "No," said the poor man, "how could I, for I never felt as if He did?" "But suppose He had said He forgave you, would not that have done as well as for you to feel it?" "Oh, yes," replied the man, "if God said it, of course I would believe it." "Very well, He does say so," was the lady's answer, and she turned to the verse we have taken for a text and read it aloud. "Now," she continued, "you have been all these years confessing your sin, and all the while God's record has been declaring that He was faithful and just to forgive it and to cleanse you, and yet you have never once believed it. You have been 'making God a liar' all this while by refusing to believe His record."

The poor man saw the whole thing, and was dumb with amazement and consternation; and when the lady proposed they kneel in prayer and that he confess his past unbelief, the result was wonderful deliverance. In five minutes he had traversed back by faith the whole long weary journey that he had been three years in making.

The other illustration is the case of a Christian lady who had been living in the land of promise about three weeks, and who had had a very bright and victorious experience. At the end of that time she was suddenly overcome by a violent burst of temper which grew into anger. For a moment a flood of discouragement swept over her soul. Satan said, "There now, that shows it was all a mistake. You have been deceived about the whole thing, and have never entered into the life of full trust at all. You may as well give up altogether, for you never can trust fully again; so it is very plain this kind of life is not for you!" These thoughts flashed through her mind in a moment, but she was well taught in the ways of God, and she said at once, "Yes, I have sinned, and it is sad indeed. But the Bible says that if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, and I believe He will do it."

She did not delay a moment, but while still boiling over with anger, she ran—she could not walk—into a room where she could be alone, and kneeling down beside the bed poured her heart out to God. She prayed out loud, for the inward turmoil was too great for it to be said inside. As the words "thou didst forgive and thou dost cleanse" passed her lips the deliverance came. The Lord said, "Peace, be still," and there was a great calm. A flood of light and joy burst on her soul, the enemy fled, and she was more than conqueror through Him that loved her.

The whole thing—the sin and the recovery from it—had occupied not much more than five minutes, and her feet trod on more firmly than ever in the blessed highway of righteousness.

The truth is, the only remedy after all in every emergency is to trust in the Lord. If this is all we ought to do, and all we can do, is it not better to do it at once?

A little girl once expressed her feeling with a child's outspoken candour. She asked whether the Lord always forgave us our sins as soon as we asked Him, and I said, "Yes, of course." "Just as soon?" she repeated, doubtingly. "Yes," I replied. "Well," she said deliberately, "I cannot believe it. I should think He would make us feel sorry for two or three days first. And then I should think He would make us ask Him a great many times, and in a very pretty way, too—not just in common talk. I think that is the way He does, and that He does not forgive right at once."

She not only said what many Christians think, but what most Christians act on, making their discouragement separate them infinitely further off from God than their sin would have done. A good mother grieves when a naughty child goes off alone to sulk and experience despair—doubting the mother's willingness to forgive; but on the other hand, her whole heart goes out in welcoming love to the darling who runs to her at once and begs her forgiveness. Surely our God knew this yearning love when He said to us, "Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings."

When I was a boy of fourteen, my father was so ignorant that I could hardly stand to have him around. When I got to be 21, I was astonished by how much the old man had learned in seven years.—Mark Twain.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It was a good meeting in Henderson, North Carolina, Thursday of last week. More than thirty leaders in our Convention and Conferences met there as a large committee to plan a program of Christian advance for the biennium of 1948-49. The meeting was well attended, which shows that we are eager and interested to do the best we can with the program of our church.

Opening with a prayer for guidance there followed a period of discussion and spoken determination to move forward in keeping with the vote of the Convention at Liberty (Vance).

Some of the things our Convention asked us to do are: (1) Reach the goal of $8,917.49 for the Committee on War Victims and Reconstruction; (2) Cooperate with the Board of Trustees of Elon College in completing the Staley - Atkinson - Newman Fund this fall, and in enlarging the overall Elon Campaign to $2,000,000; (3) "Adopt some plan which would adequately and regularly underwrite the Shaowu project," and plan church extension at home; (4) Train our people in stewardship and lead them to consecration both of their lives and their substance to the Kingdom of God; (5) Make a "noticeable increase" in the enrollment in our Sunday schools; (6) Develop a plan to be used in our local churches whereby young men and women may seriously consider full-time Christian service; (7) Organize and foster the Laymen's Council in our Convention; (8) Increase the subscription list of THE CHRISTIAN SUN; (9) Increase the apportionment to the Conferences from $54,041 to $85,041; (10) Emphasize spiritual life and evangelism, accepting an evangelistic goal of one new member each month for every hundred members in the church; (11) Increase our support of the Orphanage; and, (12) Go ahead with the building of a superintendent's home. The Convention voted other recommendations but in the main the above summarizes the task.

It is a big order. Much work has already been done, and plans were developed whereby much more is to be done toward reaching these goals. This planning meeting, after the period of looking at the Convention requests, divided itself into six subcommittees out of which definite lines of procedure were planned. These will be laid before our people in the available avenues and ways. And the results will be good. We shall not see everything planned brought to completion. If we do then we have not planned with sufficient vision. God has greater things for us to do and be than we have yet realized.

The entire program calls for the help—the constructive goodwill and help—of everyone. If we catch the spirit of earnest desire and divine fellowship that prevailed in the Henderson committee—a committee authorized by the recent session of the Convention—we shall go far toward achieving these goals. May God richly reward the men and women who gave time and thought so graciously to this end in the Henderson meeting.

HOW ABOUT MOVING PICTURES?

The moving picture is, in many respects, the most powerful educational force in America today. Seventy-seven million people every week crowd into movie theatres to see what? A little checking up will reveal. (What follows in this article is gathered from sources that cannot be questioned.)

Moving picture producers are in the business for one purpose and one only—to make money. The effect of what they throw on the silver screen does not enter into the consideration. Censorship means little. We must give the people what they want, they say. Besides, box office receipts is what counts. Mothers take their daughters and fathers their sons without realizing what they are doing. A well known playwright said recently that he refused to allow his own daughter to see his play when it was produced—advised mothers to do the same. Sometime ago, while in a government hospital, I saw forty pictures—two shows a week. I made notes. Less than half a dozen of those pictures could be classified as thoroughly wholesome. Some that might have been first class were ruined by a drinking scene somewhere that could have been easily left out. Moving picture producers and the liquor interests play into each others hands. There's something about bringing out the bottles, mixing the drinks, passing the glasses and drinking that seems to give a finished touch to the dialog. Is it any wonder that young people of today grow up to think that drinking is not only all right but necessary to a perfect social evening. Then, too, the darkened theater fits into what the picture on the screen suggests. From the place itself there goes out every suggestion of immorality. Theater managers admit that the rottenest pictures draw the largest crowds. The merchant whose only purpose is to make money without regard to what he gives his customers, not only finds himself out of business but possibly in the hands of the law. The butcher can't sell spoiled meat. If he insists, he goes to prison. The moving picture producer can throw anything he pleases and no questions are asked. The unsavory, suggestive pictures and advertising on bulletin boards and in the newspapers violates the proprieties of common decency, giving unvarnished appeal to the baser passions. Scenes of sex display and violence, shooting and killings seem to catch the eye of the passerby. Is it any wonder that we as a nation, are being held up to shame and ridicule by the Russian press and radio? "If that's Christian democracy," they say, "we don't want any of it."

A few years ago the Catholic church came out strongly against the villainess of the screen. They organized the "Legion for Decency." Members of the church were allowed to see only pictures approved by a special committee. For a long time the effects were felt at the box office. Then the censors began to lose their powers of discrimination and critical judgment. Today anything goes. Isn't it about time for the Protestant church to step in and assert itself? The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the various denominations, parent-teacher associations, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A. and the local church faces an opportunity and a responsibility.

Who goes to see moving pictures anyway? Be it said first: Practically no movies theatre could keep its doors open if all church people stayed away. Patrons for matinee performances are largely women and children. The loose, sporty element of so-called society, the non-church goer constitute the stand-bys. They are the chronic patrons. They seldom miss if the wherewith is available. They demand something "rich, rare and racey." The management sees that they get it.

A certain church which this writer attended recently, gives a paragraph each week to "The Movies." Current pictures are criticized, condemned or recommended. To combat this moving picture menace many churches have

CHAPEL TALK AT THE FIRST RELIGIOUS CHAPEL SERVICE OF THE YEAR.

The ones of you who are upperclassmen know and the ones of you who are freshmen will soon know that we have three chapel periods a week, Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at this hour and you are expected to attend all three. Failure to do so may possibly be reflected in your permanent record. Monday chapel is student chapel. The program is yours. Wednesday and Friday, we call religious chapel. The services are religious. Efforts are made to acquaint you with the great truths of the Bible, the fundamental principles of Christianity, with the hope that you may find God. Not the God of mammon, not the God of pleasure, not the God of materialism, but the God of heaven and of earth, the one true and living God who is God above all.

God has sought through the years to make himself known to man. First, He spoke to His prophets and through His prophets to the masses. Then He came in the person of His son, God manifested in the flesh, and today He comes to us in His Spirit, the Spirit of wisdom, of power and of mercy. The purpose of these approaches to man is that man might know Him and knowing Him might worship Him. The Lord, thy God, is a jealous God. Him shalt thou worship and Him only shalt thou serve.

You are in college now in an entirely different situation. You are largely on your own. You will be confronted with choices that you must make. Work and play, diligence and loafing, good and evil, will all be set before you. You will be compelled to decide which. Work, diligence and good will make no serious contention. You take them or leave them. Play, loafing, and evil will be alert, persistent and demanding. You will have to decide which. Christ had to make the same decision.

After the baptism of Christ by John in the River Jordan, the Spirit leadeth Him into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil and after he had fasted forty days and forty nights, the devil came to Him and said, "You are worn and weary. You are languid and emaciated. You are hungry. You are literally starving. This is nonsense. There is no need of it. You are the Son of God. All authority, all power is given unto you. The very stones at your feet would be bread in your hands. They shall be delicious morsels in your mouth. Turn them into bread. Eat and be satisfied." Jesus said to the devil, "You do not know. You do not understand. The strength that makes me strong does not come from bread alone. It comes from God. I live on the Words of God. The Words of God make me unconquerable. You cannot even tempt me."

The ambitions of your parents, the ambitions of your hearts, the Spirit of God has brought you to this campus, a place of high privilege, of high purpose, of high culture, and of high learning. They are all here. They are yours for the taking, but at the very beginning the devil comes to tempt you and he says, "This is your day, the day that you have been waiting for. For all these years you have been hemmed in, you have been tied down at home. You have been under authority, held in restriction, but now for once you are free. You may do as you please. You want to indulge in social sins that have been forbidden in your home. You want to know, perhaps, how beer tastes. You want to know how it feels to be under the influence of liquor. You want to run the whole gauntlet of sin and wrong. Now is your time to begin to live."

But God's spirit cries out, "These are the things by which you live that give you life. You live by the Words of God. They are light. They are life. They are power. Listen to them. Lay hold of them. Hide them in your hearts. They will make you victorious in every struggle. By them you will conquer the devil himself."

"Then the devil taketh the Christ up into the Holy City and sitteth Him on the pinnacle of the temple and saith unto Him, Cast thyself down for it is written He shall give His angels charge concerning thee and in their hands shall they bear thee up."

Jesus saith unto him, "You quote the scripture but you do not understand the scriptures. The scriptures are spiritual. You do not understand the spiritual, yet you are attempting to cross out of the natural into the Spiritual and you are attempting to bring me out of the Spirit into nature. I am supreme in both nature and the Spirit, but for me to use the power of the Spirit to make the power of nature of none effect is impossible. You cannot even tempt me."

Likewise, the devil comes to you in college. He says, "Why be so strict? Why feel that you must keep all of the rules, obey all laws? Why feel that you must be true to all the conventions of society and regard all precedents of the college and of the campus. Throw them all overboard. Have a new idea. Break every one of them just so you don't get caught and you are smart enough for that. Don't," says the devil, "allow yourselves to be hemmed in by the past or your freedom curbed by the opinions of others. You are a free man. Do as you please."

But I warn you. You cannot disregard the conventions of society. You cannot throw social standards and moral restraints to the wind. You cannot break the laws of the school

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Only one more month and our annual conferences will begin to meet. This is good news. We are always glad to go to conference, enjoy reports, addresses, and good fellowship, but if our reports are satisfactory we shall have to do a lot of getting ready. The payments on conference apportionments for the college from all churches and Sunday schools in the Convention total only $5,349.27 including this report. You will observe that we have not yet reached the halfway mark. We know that our churches are interested in the college and that every church in the Convention will put forth its best efforts to see that its apportionment is raised in full.

There is no need to speak of the needs of the college, of the high cost of living, and of the great increase in the cost of operating the school. These facts are fully known to everyone. The college greatly appreciates the helpful cooperation on the part of our churches.

COLUMBUS CAVALCADE.

[Ed. Note: This is another in a series of vignettes on outstanding Christian leaders, who will take part in the Foreign Missions Assembly at Columbus, Ohio, October 6-8.]

HIGH CASTE MAN

Rev. Paul Ramaseshan, Principal of the South India Training Institution.

The unexpected always seems to happen in India. The Rev. Paul Ramaseshan, one of the principal key-noters at the Foreign Missions Assembly at Columbus, Ohio, this fall is no exception to this rule. Although he grew up in a Brahmin family, he became an early convert to Christianity. That's comparable to a Republican becoming a member of the Communist party, for Brahmins are high-caste, and any change in status is a slip down the social ladder.

As a youngster in the village of Pathamada, South India, he was the leader of a village gang which delighted in tormenting an itinerant preacher who visited village untouchables. Caught once by a member of the missionary party, young Ramaseshan expected to be cuffed soundly over the head. Instead, he was treated kindly. The incident marked the beginning of his conversion to Christianity.

When fellow Brahmins learned of Ramaseshan's switch to a foreign religion they heartily despised, they immediately dealt him the identical treatment he had once heaped on the itinerant preacher. He was kidnapped twice, and beaten on several occasions.

"Life has not been easy," he says. "I had to give up all notion of a legal career, and I have made other sacrifices. But in return I have found Christ as Lord."

PURCHASING AGENT

Mr. Mateo F. Occena, Chief Purchasing Agent, the Philippine Government.

It's a long way from a lonely hide-away on a tropical hillside to a shiny desk in New York City. But Mr. Mateo F. Occena has taken it in stride. He will be one of the principal speakers to address the Assembly at Columbus. The 4,000 delegates assembled for the occasion probably will not hear reference to either the shiny desk or the mountain hide-out. They are more likely to hear an impassioned speech for Protestant church unity and, perhaps, a few words in behalf of a girl's school built by G. I. donations.

But the shiny desk, and the mountain hide-out are important. The desk is where Mr. Occena, Chief Purchasing Agent for the Philippine Government, transacts his business. The hide-out is where he, his wife, and two children sweated out four years of Japanese occupation.

Thinking back on the spot now, he

C. W. V. R.—A CHALLENGE.

I wish every women of the Southern Convention could have been at the General Council meeting at Oberlin this past June! Then, there would have been no doubt in any woman's mind of the necessity of the success of the Thank Offering program for 1948. Many times during the session of that great Council meeting the dire need of the people of the war-torn countries was greatly stressed.

This is the last year the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction will be in existence, and they still need approximately $900,000 in order to reach their quota and fulfill their obligations to those who are in desperate need of help.

When Rev. Fred B. Eutsler, chairman of the CWVR for the Southern Convention, made his report at Henderson last spring he said, "The appalling hunger, homelessness, destitution, disease and suffering which have followed in the wake of World War II continue unabated in the war-desolated areas of the earth. . . . We cannot 'pass by on the other side' without yielding to chilling callousness and without losing our integrity as Christians."

Some of the churches in our Southern Convention have been receiving monthly offerings for the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction for some time, but in many instances the offerings have been very small. Now as November 7 (or some date set by your society) approaches let us not shirk our duty and "pass by on the other side" just because we live on the other side of the ocean and cannot see the needs that exist. But let each woman's society sponsor a public meeting and invite every member of the church to share from their bounty with those who have so little—or nothing.

Dr. Albert Buckner Coe, National Chairman of the C. W. V. R., writing from Munich, Germany, under the date line of August 20, tells how in Europe he was thoroughly depressed by the hunger of the people. He states that three years after the war is over people are still living in the torn walls of houses, and worship in the debris of bombed churches; there are many orphans and homeless old people.

What a challenge to our women! Could we have voted for our Thank Offering to go to a more worthy cause?

NEWS FROM LOCAL SOCIETIES.

WAKEFIELD.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Wakefield Congregational Christian Church is happy to report a very interesting year in our missionary work.

We held eleven monthly meetings with very good attendance. Our programs have been well planned by different members of the society acting as program leaders each month.

We have used the packet for our program, and find it very helpful. The devotional booklet and two study books have been used in the society.

World Community Day was observed by collecting a box of clothing for the war victims.

In November our Thank Offering program was given in a public program. We also observed World Day of Prayer and May Fellowship Day with other churches of the community. For our Friendly Service we sent a box to Miss Angie Crew in Japan.

Now as we near the end of our year's work, may we realize that we are just beginning to work and be of service. May we be able to work harder as His co-workers in the work of the Kingdom in the future than we have in the past. May we let our lights shine brightly where we are in the coming days.

LIBERTY SPRING.

As we, the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Liberty Spring Christian Church, near the end of another year, and take "inventory" of our activities, we feel that our May Fellowship Day program, on Wednesday, May 5, was probably the most outstanding.

The meeting began at 6:30 p. m. at the church. A very colorful printed program, using John 3:16 on its front-piece, was given each one present. The program theme was "God's Design for Children." Welcome address was made by the president, Mrs. L. W. Wilkins, and the invocation by Mrs. I. W. Johnson.

Devotionals were led by Mrs. E. F. O'Berry, who used for her worship center the Bible, a globe and lighted candles. Hymn, "For the Beauty of the Earth," was sung by all. Mrs.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

A few weeks ago I was talking with some friends about reading and one of them asked me if I had ever read Sigrid Undset's Kristin Lavransdatter? I did read it about ten years ago and my friend said she had the book, that she had been told to read it in college but that she skimmed through it and that she was now reading it for pleasure. When she had finished, she brought the book to me to re-read and I have just now finished this Norse saga of long ago. I heartily recommend re-reading good books and this book is good for it won a great prize. So often when we read books that are "assigned reading" we feel resentful about it, or hurry through like my friend did, but when we read on "our own" it seems better.

But it was not about reading that I intended to tell you, but about Kristin Lavransdatter. She lived in the fourteenth century, which means she was born about 1310. She was the first daughter in her family and a very comely maiden. Her given name was Krisin and her last name Lavransdatter because her father was named Lavrans. When she married, she married a man named Erland Nikulausson because his father was named Niklaus. Can you think of names today that follow the pattern? I can Thompson, Pederson, Nicholson and many more.

One of the reasons this book would be interesting to younger people, is because it tells how boys and girls lived in the Viking period. Kristin's home and church duties were clearly shown and she had to follow the pattern. It tells of the food she ate, the toys with which she played and the many feast days that were celebrated including St. Lucia's Eve on December 13 which is one of my favorite holidays.

It further describes the wedding and burial customs and tells how the people dressed, spoke and conducted their home affairs. The manors were built in several sections to avoid total loss in case of fire. Usually there was a central great room or "great hall" with a fireplace, board for eating and an elevated chair for the master of the house. Many times there was a box bed there for the master and his wife. Children and guests slept upstairs in a "loft room."

Much was expected of children in those days. Their manners and dress were carefully watched. Both boys and girls usually wore a cross and chain of lovely design. The Norse people were very religious and very kind to the priests who served them. One of the words often mentioned in the book is "kurtesi" which I think you will recognize as our courtesy.

The woman who wrote this book, Sigrid Undset, is the daughter of Dr. Ingvald Undset who was a famous archaeologist. That is a person who digs in the earth to find the remains of old cultures and studies about them. Through his conversations with his daughter, she became very much aware of the people of Norway, Denmark and Sweden who lived long ago. Some of these people came to England you know, and became our ancestors. Sigrid Undset lives in our country now for she fled from the German Nazis during the war and she came to our shores bringing one of her young sons with her.

BUDDY IS NO LONGER A DIFFICULT CHILD.

By JANETTE SEVENSON MURRAY.
(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"I'm at my wit's end on a rainy day like this! Buddy is a hard child to take care of in the house—he's so vigorous and difficult to control," complained Mrs. Clarkson as she handed her friend a cup of tea.

"Here, Buddy! What are you doing with that?" she demanded, and she tried to take from her small son a big grapefruit that he had brought from the kitchen. But the curly-headed two-year-old eluded her and, dancing with glee, tossed his yellow prize onto the low table, overturning the cream pitcher and breaking a cup.

This was very trying.

"Oh, you naughty boy! You did that on purpose," his mother cried angrily.

"No, Buddy didn't do that mischief on purpose," her friend said. "It's just that he's full of life; he's excited because there is company, and he wants to show off."

After the cream had been wiped from the rug and the women were again settled with fresh cups of tea, the friend said, "Perhaps Buddy doesn't have sufficient outlet for his energy. What is he interested in?"

"Oh, he wants to use tools all the time—especially the hammer." By this time Mrs. Clarkson had recovered her composure somewhat, and her face lighted as she continued, "Do you know, he can drive a nail straight in to the head and can pry it out again with a screw driver. But the trouble is, he doesn't stay in any one place with his little tools. He hammers the piano and the window sills and drives nails into the floor."

"Why don't you get a very large drygoods box for him to play in and call it 'Buddy's shop'?"

Mrs. Clarkson followed this suggestion. The box was lined with cretonne, as a protection from splinters, and hooks were fastened on the inside for tools. Buddy soon learned to hang the tools up before being lifted from the box. Sometimes a low chair and a table were put in. Occasionally the hammer was changed, and often the boards and blocks were replaced by others. A large cake of soap was found to bring special delight because of the ease with which the nails could be removed. His mother was surprised to find that Buddy would stay in the box quietly for a long time, working intently, and that he even would come to her and ask to be put into his shop. He regarded it as something of a privilege to stay there, because he generally found new and interesting things with which to work. As he never was given any of his tools when outside of his shop, he soon associated the one with the other and was quite content.

Any active toddler becomes happier and easier to manage if there is a safe place where he can be by himself and do some of the things he likes to do. Mother cannot have Buddy underfoot all the time, and she must have peace of mind to enable her to attend to her household duties satisfactorily.

Then, too, if Mother has a little time to herself, when Buddy is safe in the box, she can be more patient with him when he is out of it and has to be watched all the time. This box does much to keep Buddy from being constantly nagged and punished.

For this generation, brought up on movie thrillers and silly comics, I covet a childhood nurtured on the Word of God. It might seem the depth of boredom to a modern youngster fed up on trash and jaded from worn out excitements, but life was happier before the Amen Age gave way to the era of So What.—Vance Havner in "Journey to Faith (Revel).

Youth at Work in the Church

HOLLAND PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

"Be still and know that I am God" was the theme of a nature vesper service held at Holland, Sunday, September 12, by the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Church. The service was held on the picturesque and quiet lawn at the home of our new sponsor, Mrs. J. D. Rawles.

As this was the last meeting of the current year, plans were discussed for next year's work. We were asked to be thinking of good leaders, as we would devote part of the program next month to the election of officers. The outgoing officers are: Ann Johnson, president; Betty Lou Tennison, vice-president; G. G. Holland, Jr., secretary; Hugh White, Jr., treasurer.

The impressive program which followed, consisted of: Call to Worship—Betty Lou Tennison; Hymn—"This Is My Father's World"; Scripture—Psalm 19—Nancy Rawles; Prayer—Nancy Rawles; Poem—"I Saw God Wash the World"—Jimmy Luke; "Trees"—Ann Johnson; "The Legend of the Dogwood Tree"—Betty Lou Tennison; Hymn—"Day Is Dying in the West."

We were led in a closing prayer by Dr. Will B. O'Neill, our pastor.

BETTY LOU TENNISON,
Vice-President.

LIBERTY SPRING YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

We, the Young People's Missionary Society of Liberty Spring, had a very successful year under the leadership of Mrs. Wesley Harrell.

We held our regular monthly meetings at church the second Tuesday in each month.

We entertained at a Valentine Party as guest of the Woman's Missionary Society of our church.

We raised our money by sponsoring lawn parties and selling flavoring which was very successful to our treasurer.

We united with Cypress and Bethlehem Young People to hear our mission study books taught. We were host in April to the two groups with Mrs. Alfred Ellis as guest speaker and in return we went to Bethlehem with V. E. Harrell, Jr., as guest speaker. Both books were enjoyed by the three societies.

We had two main public programs. At Christmas a recital was enjoyed by David Brown Harrell, organist; Anne Bradshaw at the piano and J. E. Baines as soloist. A sunrise service was held on Easter Sunday morning with V. E. Harrell, Jr., as guest speaker.

As our Friendly Service project gifts were sent to the Japan Institute.

To urge attendance we had an attendance contest with the losing side entertaining the winner, which proved to help our attendance and bring in new members.

A Life Membership was given to Miss Louise Rawles.

We have met all of our requirements and feel assured of attaining the Standard of Excellence.

HOW ABOUT MOVIES?

their own machines and have at least one show a week, paying the expense by a silver offering, using only educational and religious films.

Back to the matter of who attends the average theatre. Dr. Edgar Dale through the facilities of the Payne Fund has gathered some interesting, and at the same time, startling figures. I quote, "Of this movie audience, 37 per cent are between the ages of five and twenty years." All those who sit through the show see and hear the same thing, think through the same plot and are influenced by the low moral tone one way or another. The titles of pictures today mean little or nothing. Often one goes away disappointed and disgusted.

Dr. Dole's discoveries revealed another fact: That many children are not accompanied by their parents. It's interesting to watch the reaction of children, especially teen-age boys and girls, to the different changes of scenes. The sum-total of what they gather as they sit there is reflected in the alarming increase in juvenile delinquency, which today comes near being our nation's number one problem.

Now about the people who appear on the screen—the players themselves: We only need to scan the newspapers to know what goes on in the social life of Hollywood. The divorcees, immoralities, re-marriages and wild escapades of the film colony are revolting and a disgrace to the nation. Many actors and actresses, mediocre in their early career, became famous when they began playing shady parts. One such was Greta Garbo. Another, according to Dr. Hale, was Norma Shearer. She reached her zenith in "Divoree." In all too many of the pictures we see today there is suggestion of the double-standard of living, which culminates in the life of such characters as Charlie Chaplain. Human nature is human nature wherever we find it. A married actress plays the part of an unfaithful wife with a handsome man who was assigned as her partner. In time she and her screen lover were found in seclusion acting out the part.

The president of a large producing company said some time ago: "Under no circumstances would I ever consent for a son or daughter of mine to ever get into pictures and have to associate with that Hollywood crowd—I'd rather see them dead."

Movie stars are teachers. Young people who listen to and watch them on the screen are their pupils. Teachers in our schools and colleges would not be tolerated any time if their language and habits indicated corrupt living. Through the facilities of the Payne Fund and the work of Dr. Dole, these facts are now available. We quote: "In 115 pictures 406 crimes were committed, and 43 more attempted, or a total of 449; 2,115 scenes of assault with guns, knives and other weapons with intent to kill; 123 scenes of hanging; 173 scenes of horror; 757 of attacks on women; 929 scenes of nudity; 31 scenes of jail breaking." Out of all these 788 pictures there were 423 eliminations by censorship boards. A local theater manager, friend of mine, said to me some time ago: "Yes, but if you follow closely there is always a moral at the close." That may be true but before the end is reached too often the damage has been done.

That's all for now. More later.
S. M. SMITH.

A little boy was flying a kite, which had soared so high as to be almost out of sight. Seeing him looking so intensely upward, a gentleman asked him what he had there. "A kite, Sir," was the boy's reply. "A kite!" said the gentleman. "How can that be? I don't see it." "Ah, I feel it pulling, Sir," was the boy's unanswerable reply. This should be our evidence that our Saviour is above—we should feel Him pulling.—T. De Witt Talmage.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

A LIBRARY OF RELIGIOUS LITERATURE.

LESSON I—OCTOBER 3, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: The word of our God shall stand forever.—Isa. 40:8.

LESSON: Psalm 119:97-105; Luke 1:1-4; John 20:30-31; II Timothy 3:14-17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 119:137-144.

A Look Ahead.

The lessons for this quarter have as their general theme, "The Literature of the Bible." They will give a bird's eye view of the various and vital contents of the Bible as literature: Biography, Law, History, Wisdom Literature, Drama, Prophecy, Poetry, Parables or Stories, Letters and the strange form of literature, Apocalyptic Literature. This series of lessons offers us a feast of good things. Those who teach and those who are taught will be the better furnished for good works, if they read and study the great words in this library of the world's greatest literature. There are splendid possibilities in this quarter's lessons. And there is nothing that is needed more than that members of the Sunday and the church become better acquainted with the Bible. As a nation, we are highly illiterate concerning this Life-Giving and Life-Transforming Word of God. Let us enter upon these lessons with the Psalmists prayer in our hearts as well as on our lips: "That which I see not, teach thou me."

A Good Testimonial.

People in our day are greatly influenced by testimonials. The advertisers know that, and they pay great sums to well-known people for testimonials to their products, even if as is sometimes the case the people do not use the product at all. Because a certain movie star pays a glowing tribute to a certain brand of cigarettes, thousands begin to smoke that brand. Because some great athlete—for a substantial sum of money, of course—says that he uses a certain breakfast cereal, thousands of boys will pester their mothers until they buy that kind of cereal. And so on ad infinitum. A great deal of this testimonial business is plain hokum and baloney, and much of it is unethical and dishonest.

But testimonials do have value when they are honest, when they are vindicated by experience and the test of time. And today's lesson contains such a testimonial. Here was a man who gave glad, and unpurchased and unpurchasable testimony, to the value and the place which the word of God had in his life. He did it in a comprehensive and convincing way in the 119th Psalm. He took the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet and wrote eight verses under each letter, each verse beginning with that letter, that is the first eight verses in the Psalm begin with the first letter of the alphabet, the second group of eight verses begins with the second letter letter, and so on through the entire alphabet, twenty-two sections, one hundred seventy-six verses. And in every verse, except one as I recall it, there is some reference to the word of God. Out of a life-time of reading and observation and experience, this man had found that the word of God had ministered faithfully and fruitfully to his character and life. It is a glowing and grand testimonial and tribute to the word of God.

To Be Trusted.

In the preface to his gospel Luke emphasizes the fact that his record was trustworthy. He wanted his friend, Theophilus to know the "certainty of those things," wherein he had been instructed. His gospel is the sober record of a careful and honest historian with a passion for truth. Peter also wrote a letter to his Christian friends in which he stated that he was not dealing with "cunningly devised fables" but with things that men had seen and had experienced. To be sure the Bible cannot be taken literally in all its Oriental imagery, but the Bible is true, it can be depended upon, it is to be trusted. Men of God wrote as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. The Bible is not made up of the wild speculations of men. It is not the result of men concocting some "cock and bull story." Those cynical and critical people who go to great pains to point out what they call the contradictions and the inconsistencies of the Bible reveal only the pettiness of their spirit and the ignorance of their darkened minds. The word of God is sure. It is safe. And even as the anvil wears out many hammers, so does the Bible wear out the blows of criticism that men direct at it.

Information—and Salvation

The Bible is of course a mine of information, a great treasure house of rich nuggets of truth. If a man read nothing but the Bible, if he knew it well, he would be a well-educated man. And it might well be asked if a man is really educated if he does not know at least something about the Bible. In any event he is not educated in the best sense of the word. The Bible should be read for the information it contains about God and man and life here and hereafter.

But John emphasizes the fact that the Bible is not primarily a book of information, or rather that the information it contains is a means to an end. Thus it was that he wrote in the conclusion of his gospel that he had written what he had written "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life in his name." He wanted people to know, but he wanted them to know that they might believe, and that through believing they might live in the fullest, more abundant sense. Paul in writing to his young friend, Timothy, also states that the Scriptures "are able to make thee wise in the salvation that is in Jesus Christ." The Bible can be a vital factor in a man's salvation. It can bring him to God through Jesus Christ. Its words are spirit and they are life. Faith comes by hearing and hearing by the word of God. As a great man once said there is a literature of power, and the Bible belongs to that kind of literature. It has power to transform life by the transforming of the mind.

Completely Furnished Unto Every Good Work.

"Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." It is the Book whereby we check our course to see if we are still on the right course, it reproves us in our wrong-doing, it furnishes the best text-book for teaching the great facts of life, it instructs us in the way of righteousness. And it gives impulse, strong and steady to service to others in the Master's name.

A Neglected Book.

In spite of the fact that the Bible is the "world's best seller" it is the world's most neglected book. The sober and serious fact is that people—even church people—just do not read the Bible. Are you one of them who doesn't?

says: "It was an Eden-like place, It was quiet and restful, high on a forest-covered mountain overlooking the blue Pacific." Just prior to his assignment here, Mr. Occena returned to his war-time retreat, carting back 30 gallons of ice cream, a portable phonograph, and clothing for the jungle tribesmen with whom he had lived.

As a Christian leader and former Chairman of the Commission for Church Union, Mr. Occena has been an aggressive champion of Protestant church unity. "When it comes to the observance of our differing rituals and practices we can be as separate as the fingers of the hand," he has said, "but we should be as united and forceful as the fist in the drive for the attainment of our fundamental and ultimate goal."

Mr. Occena believes the Church, above all, should be practical. Shortly after his return from the jungle retreat, he teamed up with Missionary Francis Bush, and helped raise money for an all-girl school in Manila. The major contributions came from American G. I.'s and officers. "All-girl schools are essential," he explains, "because Filipinos don't like to send their daughters to co-educational institutions."

ORGANIZER

Dr. Ralph E. Diffendorfer, General Secretary, Division of Foreign Missions, Methodist Church.

As Chairman of the Committee of Public Presentation for the Foreign Missions Conference, Dr. Diffendorfer has spent two years shaping up main features of the program which will be presented at Columbus, and later in the thirty-six regional conferences throughout the United States and Canada.

Working at the head of a thirty-five foot table in a conference room on Fifth Avenue in New York City, Dr. Diffendorfer has piloted his colleagues through a maze of reports and statistics.

He is a man convinced of the need for bold policies of Christian strategy. Impatient with fence-sitters, he calls repeatedly for rapid-fire decisions.

"You know," Dr. Diffendorfer once remarked dryly to a committee-man who claimed his group was still deep in study of Communism, "we don't have forever to study this problem. Let's decide what we're going to do, and do it!"

For the past twenty years, Dr. Diffendorfer has sparked the world's largest Protestant mission enterprise. The success of Methodist missions overseas is credited in no small degree to his ability to make quick and sound decisions.

For example, while in Japan in 1940 he decided that war was imminent. He promptly ordered the evacuation of Methodist missionaries, saving hundreds of men, women and children from the tragedy of concentration camps.

Dr. Diffendorfer is a man who believes that Christianity can supply a solution to every major world problem. At the recent Methodist General Conference, he revealed plans for training 200 missionaries in Marxist doctrines before sending them abroad.

"The first step toward combatting Communism is to understand it," he declared. "I want our missionaries to be well-versed in Communist doctrines."

Dr. Diffendorfer is an active interdenominational leader. In addition to his work with the Foreign Missions Conference, he has served in important capacities on the International Missionary Council, the Federal Council of Churches, and on the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America. He was an American delegate to the International Missionary Council meeting at Jerusalem in 1928, and at Madras ten years after; he was a delegate to the Inter-Church Conference at Oxford in 1937.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

William T. Harrell, our District Superintendent, brought us a message: "Every Child Is My Child—In the Fabric of Fellowship," followed by a prayer by Mrs. N. H. Bradshaw and a solo by Mrs. E. C. Skinner.

We adjourned for food, fun and fellowship, and enjoyed a delicious cold plate supper, which was admirably served by girls of the Young People's Missionary Society.

To the beautiful strains of music, we again assembled in the church and were given the Call to Worship: John 3:16 and 17, by Mrs. E. F. O'Berry. A solo, "Down from His Glory," was sung by Mr. William T. Harrell. Our guest speaker, Mrs. Robert Kimball of Franklin, Va., reviewed the Mission Study Book, Committed Unto Us, in a very interesting and impressive manner. After singing the hymn, "Take My Life and Let It Be," the closing prayer was made by Mrs. S. H. Rawles.

Our members have been faithful workers together and have enjoyed sponsoring the Young People's Missionary Society; participating in Friendly Service project of aiding Miss Angie Crew's school in Japan; inaugurating an evangelistic campaign wherein twenty new members were added to the church roll; and in presenting two Life Memberships, respectively: Mrs. I. T. Byrd, a shut-in member, and little Lewis Byers Jackson, the infant son of Missionaries Dorothy and Dick Jackson of Shaowu, China.

SOUTH NORFOLK.

Our society has accomplished many things during the past year. We have met our quota in every way for Honor Society. Five new memberships and one memorial were secured. Four circles organized with Mrs. Grace Farmer, Mrs. Gladys Doss, Mrs. R. L. Linton and Mrs. Doris Parker, leaders.

Honoring two of our outstanding members and two mission workers in foreign fields we have the Dorothy Jackson, Angie Crew, Wilmer Hanbury and Gertrude Bunch Circles. Mrs. Dorothy Todd taught our study book, Committed Unto Us. We are fortunate in having Mrs. Todd in our group. We are indeed grateful to Mrs. Andrew Smith for her untiring efforts in all circles. Without her leadership we would not have the good report to send our secretary, Mrs. W. B. Williams.

Officers were installed Thursday, September 16, with Mrs. Margie Humphreys in charge of installation. We are hoping that even greater things will happen during the coming year.

Hope to see a large group of our leaders in Newport News, October 7.

MRS. O. D. POYTHRESS,
President.

ROANOKE, ALA.

Again we come to the close of another year in our missionary work. We have had a good year. Our programs have been well planned and interesting. We especially enjoyed our study books, Committed Unto Us and A New World Ahead.

For our public meeting we had a picnic lunch in the basement of the church and our pastor, Rev. S. M. Penn, gave us a most helpful talk on Stewardship.

We are looking forward to attending the conference at Alex City, September 26, and to a better year ahead.

MRS. TOM L. HEAD, Sec'y.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

In the work as Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage we come in touch with many pathetic cases of human suffering. Of course, our church at large cannot come in touch with them as I do. If they did we would not have any trouble in financing this institution. Everybody would be happy to contribute to help.

Some time last year a widow whose husband had died and left her with three small children, lived in a rented house. She went to visit a neighbor one day and locked the children in the house. While she was away the house burned. It happened that a little colored boy came that way. He saw the house wrapped in flames and rushed to the door but it was locked. He broke it open and grabbed a little boy three years old in one hand a little girl of four in the other hand and carried them to safety. The fire was so hot he could not get back for the baby in the cradle, and it burned. The little boy is especially a pretty child. His eye was crossed, but a few weeks ago I took him to a specialist and had his eye straightened. He was in the hospital six days. All the doctors and nurses fell in love with him. I carried him back last week so he could have a check-up, and the doctors and nurses all had something to say to him. They had no home. It was swept away by fire. The minister called the writer on long distance and said they would have to come to the Orphanage as they had nowhere to go other than the Orphanage.

One day last week a mother came to see me and said: "I am a widow and have to work in the mill on night time to make a living. I have a little girl that I have to leave alone in my apartment during the night. Last night she called me in the dead hours of the night and said, 'Mother, I am afraid to stay here alone—I am scared.' She is just twelve years of age. I could not leave my work to go to her and had to wait until the end of my shift. I want you to take her here where I know she will be safe, and I will be willing to contribute each month for her expense."

Sometime ago a lady came to the Orphanage and made an appeal in behalf of her two little boys. Her husband had run away and gone to a distant state and re-married, and left her stranded. The pastor and his people of one of our leading churches insisted that we take the two little boys.

Nearly all the children here are recommended by our churches unless it is some special case. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father in this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."—James 1:27.

Do you ever give the little helpless child a thought? Do you ever pray for the little children here?

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

without paying a penalty and that penalty is severe. The laws of God, of decency, and of right are inexorable. You cannot change them.

Then the devil taketh Him up into a high mountain and showeth Him the kingdoms of the world, the glory of Heaven and saith unto Him, "All these will I give you if you will fall down and worship me."

Jesus said, "Ah, so that is it. You are Satan. You are the devil himself in person. You would bribe me. You want me to be your servant. You want me to worship you. Don't you know that you should not attempt to tempt the Lord thy God? Get thee out of here, Satan, you old deceiver.

You don't own the world. This is my Father's world. He made it. He preserves it. He replenishes it. He beautifies it. He will not turn it over to you or to anyone else."

At the beginning of your college career the devil tells you that money is the big thing in life, that money is the true end in life, and that with all your getting, get an understanding of how to get money. Get money and you get power. Get power and you get the world.

Christ says, "You are mistaken. Money is not all. In fact, it is a small part of it. You are here to seek truth." God is truth. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." All things are yours. Ye are Christ's and Christ is God's.

My Father is rich in houses and lands, He holdeth the wealth of the world in His hands. Of rubies and diamonds, and silver and gold, His coffers are full, He has riches untold.

In Memoriam

PARKER.

We, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Cypress Chapel Congregational Christian Church, wish to pay tribute to the memory of our beloved member, Mrs. Alexina Parker, who departed this life June 21, 1948.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our heavenly Father.

2. That we hold in loving remembrance her loyalty and love for her home, church and community; and her patience and quiet endurance of her long illness.

3. That we extend our love and sympathy to her family and pray God's blessings may comfort them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be placed on our records, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. ROY BRINKLEY,
Mrs. F. E. HARRELL,
Mrs. W. N. BEALE,
Committee.

HANBURY.

In loving memory of my dear husband, Cary Edward Hanbury, who died September 17, 1945.

Over the river to a fairer land, my dear one clasped my Saviour's outstretched hand.

It was hard to see him go; I see at the table his empty chair, his smile so sweet, I miss him there.

How I miss you; but I know it was our loving Saviour's will. You are gone but not forgotten, never will your memory fade, loving thoughts will ever linger where sweet flowers bloom where you are laid.

Dearest one up in heaven, in that mansion bright and fair, safe in the arms of Jesus you are free from toil and care.

Heaven now retaineth my sweetheart, earth the lonely casket keepeth, and the sunbeams linger where my darling now is laid.

I can think of nothing sweeter than our meeting up in heaven in the sweet by and by.

His devoted wife,
IDA T. HANBURY.

CAN WE TAKE IT EASY NOW?

With the huge government program of foreign aid, how many conscientious supporters of private overseas relief programs feel that a burden has been lifted from their shoulders, that now "We can take it easy. They won't starve." Beside the size of government aid, the record of Church World Service, largest private relief agency, looks small—six million pounds of clothing and nineteen million pounds of food in 1948. Should we go on?

An affirmative answer comes from the special congressional investigating committee on the value of voluntary foreign aid: "American voluntary relief is an essential counterpart to foreign relief and recovery programs conducted by this government. The voluntary effort distinctly is worthy of encouragement by the public and by the government. . . .

"Private relief ventures abroad have adapted their resources to the meeting of particular needs in the local areas. They have shown a capacity for immediate response to emergency situations, demonstrating a speed of action not obtainable in the carefully planned and meticulously controlled program based upon legislative grants. . . .

"Private relief programs, furthermore, are a means of bringing Americans into personal contact with the needs of other countries. They present an opportunity for the individual to do something on his own initiative, and to know the precise purposes for which his particular dollars are spent in relieving needs around the world. The obverse of this is that the recipient abroad knows that the assistance he receives is based upon the personal response of some individual American to his needs. The result is a harvest of good will to the American people."

Among other reasons for the continuation of giving through private relief agencies is that they reach into many countries where government aid does not go at all. Through churches in many lands, aid from Church World Service has been sent in the past two years to 42 countries.

Yet, thinking even in terms of the millions of pounds sent by Church World Service is almost too big for the imagination. What does it mean that thousands of bales of donated clothing have left New York docks in the past year to be delivered overseas? What does the purchase of vitamins and foods mean in terms of human life? Here are a few answers from Europe and from Asia.

In Marburg, Germany, the old university town on the Lahn, a home has been set up for boys discharged from captivity. Unlike young men in other countries returning home, many a German youth cannot go back to his own town, does not even know what has happened to his family. In the Marburg home, 44 boys, once alone and friendless, have found a measure of security. In a primitive one-room barracks they have built themselves small rooms where two boys live together. A spirit of fellowship prevails, and the director works untiringly. Through Hilfswerk has come some aid, but without food supplies from America, this experiment in rehabilitation could not go on.

Famine in China has called church relief agencies to save the lives of thousands. In Tsingtao, a coordinated program has been set up to feed 65,000. Yet, this touches only a small part of the population. Out of a total of 700,000 inhabitants, 300,000 are refugees. The feeding program gives one meal daily to 65,000; 235,000 are not fed at all.

Even in the interior of the Philippines help comes from the American churches. In one mountainous region supplies of milk and vitamins are dropped by parachute. Aid goes daily to nearly 10,000 individuals through churches, schools and hospitals.

Thus, in their regular work, the churches not only supplement government relief, but reach areas where government help never penetrates, areas where urgent needs still remain to be met. As winter approaches, the lack of clothing will become more critical. At present production rates in Germany, for example, each adult man and woman would receive a new dress or suit every 20 years. Americans can still help. Christians, if they are to heed the teachings of their Master, must help, not carelessly, but thoughtfully, thankful that it is within their power to give, not selfishly seeking recognition, but generously, in the name of Christ.

As in the past months, gifts of clothing, shoes and bedding, in good condition, may be sent to the Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland, for prompt packing for overseas shipment. Cash gifts may, as always, be given through the individual's church or may be sent directly to the Center at New Windsor. Ten cents a pound given with a donation of clothing will take care of packing, shipping and insurance costs.

HELP IS NEEDED NOW

Munich, Germany,
August 20, 1948.

Dear Friend:

I am writing to you while still under the shock of what I have seen and heard in much of Europe. When I left America I felt that, with the war three years over, I would find everything looking up. Now that I have seen and heard I am thoroughly depressed by the hunger of the people and the deadness of the life.

In Poland where I, with others, visited Warsaw and a little of the country outside of Warsaw, we found the city, as reported, ninety-five per cent bombed. There has been some rebuilding but very little. Many people live in the torn walls of houses. They worship in the debris of bombed churches. Money is scarce. There is food to buy but little money for buying. There are many orphans and homeless old people. Men work for small wages if and when they can find work.

In Czechoslovakia everything is heavily rationed. Even in the country there is not sufficient food due in part to the famine of last year. The political situation in Czechoslovakia and Poland is tense. The people speak in whispers if they speak at all.

In Germany, where cities are thoroughly bombed, there has been little or no rebuilding. We visited Hamburg, Bremen, Frankfurt, Nurnburg and Munich. We drove many miles in the country. There are thousands of refugees and displaced persons. Most of them will never get the chance to go. And babies are born every day. The currency reform which gives value to the money and will be of advantage in the future does not now at this time help the masses of people who are poor.

Our church agencies have done a wonderful work. Where hunger has existed, they fed the people. Where there has been no clothing, they have supplied clothing. Where there has been discouragement and despair, they have brought an encouraging word. They have done this in the name of Christ, our Lord.

Our Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction will, by vote of the denomination, go out of existence in January, 1949. Please help us. The $4,000,000 we obligated ourselves to raise is not yet raised. We lack $900,000 to complete our promise. We must raise that amount by January 1 next. In these desperate times, we must not fail.

We are grateful for your past contributions. Please help us the remainder of the year by increasing your gifts. Your help in generous amounts will make it possible for us to complete our work and, more important, bring love and care to poverty stricken people.

May our Heavenly Father bless you.

Sincerely,

ALBERT BUCKNER COE,
Chairman, C. W. V. R.

Introducing Dr. McKeith

Rev. David McKeith, Jr., D.D., of Hartford, Connecticut, for the past sixteen years minister of historic Asylum Hill Congregational Church in Hartford, has been elected Executive Vice-President of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Dr. McKeith succeeds Dr. Fred Field Goodsell who retired on August 31, after nineteen years as Executive Vice-President. Dr. McKeith will begin acquainting himself with the duties of his new post November 1, leaving for a tour of part of the foreign field in January and spending around six months in Africa, India and the Near East.

In the post of Executive Vice-President of the American Board, Dr. McKeith will supervise all of the activities of the Board and act as liaison officer between the American Board and sister Congregational Christian groups, as well as those of other communions, and as an interpreter of modern Christian missionary work to the churches and to the public. An article on this theme by Dr. McKeith is published in this issue.

Although born in Crieff, Scotland, Dr. McKeith was brought to the United States when only a year old and lived in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, during his grammar and high school years. Before going on to college he worked for three years in a newspaper advertising department. In 1918 he served as an officer in the United States Army and after the war was Boys' Work Secretary in the Larrabee Y.M.C.A. in Chicago.

Educated at George Williams College and the University of Chicago (with an honorary D. D. from Yankton College and an LL.D. from Defiance College), Dr. McKeith planned to go into administrative or business work in some religious education institution rather than the pastorate. Following graduation from Chicago Theological Seminary in 1926 he joined its staff as Registrar and Assistant Business Manager. In 1929 "in order to get the minister's point of view" he took a pastorate at the South Shore Community Church, Chicago, Illinois, and three years later was called to the Asylum Hill Congregational Church, Hartford, Connecticut, where he has served up to the present.

News Flashes

Dr. Robert Merrill Bartlett, who reports on the Amsterdam Assembly in this issue is the minister of Plymouth Church, Lansing, Michigan.

The Editor and Dr. F. C. Lester of Asheboro, N. C., will attend the meeting of the World Foreign Mission Conference at Columbus, Ohio, October 6-8.

At the meeting of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention at Asheboro, N. C., the first of this month, Dr. F. C. Lester was elected president of the board, succeeding Dr. H. S. Hardeastle.

MRS. CLAUD E. ELEY.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN was distressed to learn of the death, early Monday morning of this week of Mrs. Claud E. Eley of Suffolk, Virginia. Mrs. Eley was at one time a member of the Board of Publications of the Southern Convention and it was our pleasure to work with one who so conscientiously entered into the work of the board. She was active in the work of the church women of the Convention and in her local church, and at the time of her death she was president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs. We extend our sympathy to her loved ones.

SPECIAL NOTICE!

Some of our churches and Sunday schools have received a letter from Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, stating that said church or Sunday school has failed to make a contribution to the orphanage "this year." Mr. Johnston is referring to the calendar year which also happens to be the fiscal year for the orphanage, and not to the conference fiscal year. Some of these churches and Sunday schools have made contributions to the orphanage during the conference fiscal year and such churches and Sunday schools have received the proper credit in the Convention Office. Such contributions, however, were credited by the orphanage on its "last year's" quota, but were credited by the Convention Office on "this year's" apportionment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

PARIS MEMORANDUM No. 1.

[Prepared by Walter W. Van Kirk, Secretary of the Department of International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Dr. Van Kirk is attending the General Assembly as the accredited observer of the Federal Council of Churches.]

The eyes of the world are fixed upon the Palais de Chaillot, in Paris, where the General Assembly of the United Nations is in session. History will be made here. It will presently be determined whether the tensions which currently threaten the peace are to be relaxed, or whether the "cold war" is to be continued for an indefinite period.

The General Assembly got under way in an atmosphere of hope mingled with concern. There was hope that world public opinion would be able to crash through "iron curtains" and make articulate the desire of millions that a way be found to establish an enduring peace. At the same time, there was concern that the forces making for international disorder might get out of hand. The situation was admittedly critical. Count Bernadotte, United Nations Mediator for Palestine had been assassinated. The UN flag flew at half mast over the Palais de Chaillot. Negotiations in Moscow appeared to be stalemated. The "Battle of Berlin" was still in progress. Even as the Assembly met there was violence in Paris precipitated by communists and the followers of General Charles de Gaulle.

As I sat in the Assembly of the United Nations my mind went back to Amsterdam, where another and different kind of assembly had met a month earlier. It was there affirmed that God is Sovereign, that each state "must accept its responsibility under the governance of God, and its subordination to law within the Society of Nations." That Section of the Amsterdam Assembly which dealt with world problems declared that the churches "should support every effort to deal on a universal basis with the many specific questions of international concern which face mankind today, such as the use of atomic power, the multilateral reduction of armaments, and the provision of health services and food for all men. They should endeavor to secure that the United Nations be further developed to serve such purposes. They should insist that the domestic laws of each country conform to the principles of progressive international law, and they gratefully recognize that recent demands to formulate principles of human rights reflect a new sense of international responsibility for the rights and freedom of all men."

Here, at Paris, it will be seen to what extent the United Nations is able to fulfill the expectations of the churches represented at Amsterdam.

Nearly one hundred items are on the agenda of the Paris Assembly. The Russians are reported as having declined to present a single question for the Assembly's discussions. This may or may not reflect a policy of gradual withdrawal from the United Nations. There is some speculation here as to the action of the Soviet Union if, in this as in past Assemblies, that Government is voted down on all important issues. I do not myself believe that Russia will take so drastic a step. But this is an unpredictable world.

The Christian community will be particularly interested in the Assembly's action with respect to the proposed Declaration of Human Rights; the partition of Palestine and the problems raised by the murder of Count Bernadotte; the disposition of the Italian colonies and questions related to the on-going work of the Trusteeship Council; the Veto; the Korean and Balkan disputes; the so-called "Little Assembly," the control of atomic energy; the Draft Convention on Genocide; the alleged mistreatment of Indians in the Union of South Africa; and refugees.

This is no time to despair of the United Nations. It is needful to be realistic but realism need not yield to pessimism. It is reassuring to know that as the Assembly meets here in Paris, Christians the world over are fervently praying that divine guidance may be given the statesmen as they come to grips with issues of crucial importance to the peoples of every land.

CONSCIENCE-HARDENING.

It is a very terrible thing to let conscience begin to grow hard, for it soon chills into northern iron and steel. It is like the freezing of a pond. The first film of ice is scarcely perceptible; keep the water stirring and you will prevent the frost from hardening it; but once let it film over and remain quiet, the glaze thickens still, and at last it is so firm that a wagon might be drawn over the solid ice. So with conscience, it films over gradually, until at last it becomes hard and unfeeling, and it is not crushed even with ponderous loads of iniquity.

—C. H. Spurgeon.

Achievement at Amsterdam

By ROBERT MERRILL BARTLETT

The first assembly of the World Council of Churches was fortunately held in a recently liberated country, close to areas of international tension. Coronation Week impressed delegates with the unity and vitality of the Dutch people, who proved generous and gracious hosts. Motor boats loaded with foreign visitors sailed through the canals of Amsterdam that were illuminated for the first time since pre-war days. The thousands who crowded bridges and canal-walks rejoiced to see the lights come on again in Europe. All through the Assembly Amsterdam was alive with citizens of the Netherlands who made the retirement of Queen Wilhelmena and the crowning of Princess Julianna an occasion for thanksgiving over their liberation and for rededication to traditions of democracy.

The World Council of Churches, launched in 1937, was destined to undergo the testings of war before consummation this past August. Unquestionably spiritual values and Christian fellowship were deepened by the vicissitudes of the tragic struggle. Some 1,500 representatives of 150 Christian groups and 42 nations assembled with the determination to strengthen ties of brotherhood and to create a more united church. Three languages were used officially in public gatherings: French, German and English. Ear phones made it possible for listeners to hear simultaneous translations in their chosen language.

One noteworthy characteristic feature of the assmby was the sense of judgment visited upon the enemies of the church, upon our civilization and upon so-called Christians. Most of us in attendance had come from visits among the bombed ruins of England, France, Italy, Germany and Poland with a new realization of the failure of brotherhood and the punishment that had fallen upon the nations. As Rienhold Niebuhr said, "It is our opportunity to bring the truth of the Word of God to bear upon the secular roots of our present predicament because our current history is actually a remarkable illustration of the way Nemesis overtakes the pride of man and how divine judgment is visited upon men and nations who exalt themselves above measure."

A sense of urgency pervaded the conference. All Christians were solemn before impending cataclysm, determined to develop some way to avert the threat of war. Early in the Assembly John Foster Dulles spoke of "this fateful hour, for, in the world, division is assuming an ominous character. Tension mounts, means of mass destruction are being feverishly developed and there is conceded risk that mankind may be plunged into an awful abyss. So, Christians and non-Christians alike are anxiously looking to what we do here. They hope that we may perhaps show the way of deliverance from the terrible fate that impends."

With this most diverse and cosmopolitan Christian group ever assembled the theological curtain was in evidence. Some interpreters took refuge behind outmoded traditional phrases, emphasizing passive dependence upon Almighty God and tending to discount concrete programs of action. Much in the Barthian theology appeared as a natural reaction to the chaos of our time, but also an escapist avoidance of specific action on critical issues like nationalism, the necessity for world government, and the threat of communism. The much beloved Karl Barth reiterated his view that by God's design "is not meant the existence of the Church in the world, its task in relation to the world's disorder." "It is not a Christian Marshall Plan." "The final root of all human disorder is the dreadful, godless, ridiculous opinion that man is the Atlas who is destined to bear the dome of heaven on his shoulders."

Martin Niemoeller, dynamic president of the Evangelical Church in Hessen-Nassau, stepped behind the theological curtain when he said, "In face of the disorder of the world, we have no suggestions of our own to make for overcoming the prevailing (Continued on page 6.)

Our Principles.

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
- 5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

ATTENTION: FINANCE COMMITTEES!

The United States Commerce Department reports that national income rose to a new all-time high rate of $221,400,000,000 per year in the quarter ending June 30. The income rate for the three months was $6,300,000,000 above that for the first quarter of 1948 and $18,900,000,000 more than the rate of income for the full year of 1947.

Contrary to many confident predictions of a slump, the departments' office of business economics said August business development showed little indication of any letup in the high rate of economic activity.

Does this have any significance for our churches? Should it have any significance for the Finance Committee? Should these facts not be taken into consideration in the formulation of a budget for the new conference year? Does the budget in your church reflect this financial uptrend? Should any church feel that it cannot raise its modest conference apportionment?

Just suppose a tenth of this huge national income became a tithe. Think what could be done for the cause of Christ! Within one year every church debt could be removed, needed improvements made, pastors' salaries raised to professional level, our Christian colleges, hospitals and orphanage endowed, and our handicapped missionaries could be given ample resources to actualize the world mission of Christ.

On individual incomes 15 per cent deduction is allowed for contributions to religious, charitable, educational and scientific purposes. It is estimated that there has never been claimed more than three per cent by the total income tax payers, and about two per cent for specifically religious purposes. Does so-called Christian America fall eight per cent short of tithing? Obviously we do not begin to touch the financial potentialities of our Christian churches.

The conclusion is obvious and inescapable: stewardship begins in the local church; it rests upon individual Christians. Laymen must take the lead. Current giving must be in proportion to current income. Our Christian world mission depends upon the number of Christian Church members who are good stewards of the Lord Jesus Christ.

GIVE ME vs. MAKE ME.

These two contrasting requests of the Prodigal Son, there at close proximity in Jesus' matchless parable but reflecting infinite polarity from gross selfishness to penitence and aspiration, have formed the homiletic basis for many a sermon. It provides one of the basic and indispensable modes of presenting religious truth. The Psalmist presented spiritual truth by contrast: "The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the ungodly shall perish." An occasional shift from the usual triple to the dual point sermon may be refreshing for minister and congregation.

One wonders if the two attitudes manifested by the prodigal are not found in a modified form at least among our churches. There is the "give me" type of church which is willing to be perennially on the receiving end. The Conference, the Mission Board or a generous benefactor may be the great provider who unduly pauperizes the ecclesiastical prodigal. Or, lacking this kind of indulgent parent, it may form a kind of triple entente in order to receive aid from other churches and thereby minimize its own financial responsibility. It will forfeit its right to a resident minister, accept occasional and odd-hour services in order to get financial assistance. Its actual if unconfessed motto is, "Give me."

Over against this selfish, indolent, undeveloped, pauperized church, is the one whose motto and prayer is "Make me." Here is the unmistakable evidence of approaching maturity. "Make me a servant." The Church, like its founder and savior, should be a servant. It seeks opportunities to serve others rather than be served. It seeks to be a servant of the community, the conference, the convention, the denomination and the world.

"Make me an example"—to other churches. This church throws away every financial crutch and praises God. It no longer depends on another for help. Its example of stewardship, progress and achievement becomes an example and a powerful incentive to other churches.

WEEK-DAY RELIGIOUS CLASSES TO BE CONTINUED.

Week-day religious education classes are beginning again this month throughout the nation, according to Dr. Erwin L. Shaver, Director of Week-Day Religious Education for the International Council of Religious Education.

"Public school educators and church leaders have interpreted the Supreme Court decision of last March to forbid only sectarian classes in public school buildings and other uses of 'public school machinery,'" Dr. Shaver said. "Therefore, schools are continuing to release pupils for classes in churches and other buildings or to dismiss school grades early for these classes. In a few communities the classes are being held after school hours."

In most states which have laws legalizing release of children from school, state attorneys-general or other officials have ruled that this practice can continue. This is true in California, New York, Minnesota, Indiana, Maine, West Virginia, Oregon and Pennsylvania. Favorable rulings have also been made in South Carolina, Iowa and Virginia.

In other states where there has been no formal ruling since the Supreme Court decision, the classes also continue—Ohio, New Jersey, Nebraska, North Carolina and Massachusetts are among these states.

Christianity Faces "One World"

By DAVID MCKEITH, JR.

It is a fact—a tragic fact—that at a time when many people are hopefully speaking of "one world," men are increasingly becoming more interested in only the segment of that world in which they are involved. We speak idealistically of wider horizons but too often we are afraid to lift our eyes beyond the immediate present or take our thoughts from the interests and people surrounding us. To be sure, we do live in "one world" which in time and space is becoming smaller day by day.

Chief Albert Luthuli, head of a Zulu tribe in Africa, left Johannesburg one Friday evening last June and arrived in New York the following Sunday evening, less than forty-eight hours later. A few months ago Raymond Dudley, India Secretary of the American Board, left Bombay on Friday and was in his home in Auburndale, Massachusetts, on Monday evening and at his Boston office on Tuesday morning. Recently a member of the Hill Church parish in Hartford, Connecticut, died on a Tuesday morning. His two sons were in Ireland, one of them with Pan-American Airlines. Pan-American was notified and immediately got in touch with the son. The boys were flown across the Atlantic reaching Hartford, Wednesday noon.

Illustrations of this kind could be given beyond number showing how definitely this earth has become "one world" in time and space. What happens in China today will be published in our papers tonight or in the morning. What happens here is known almost immediately in all parts of the world. The world is becoming a community in which the affairs of one are the knowledge of all. However, we have not achieved the spiritual oneness necessary to community living. The fact that we are immediately informed of events which occur in other parts of the world presents real problems.

Formerly, when an international incident occurred, a reasonable amount of time elapsed before the people of the other countries knew about it and explanations were presented and accepted by the rulers of the nations involved. Now an incident is immediately known and magnified with the resultant tensions, and hatreds are more quickly engendered. If we did not live in "one world" in time and space we probably would not have the strained situations which exist today between nations. However, we cannot turn time backward and few of us would wish to do so. We must learn to use the scientific advances we have made for good rather than for ill.

This earth is "one world" in time and space but is divided in spirit into races and nations; economic groups and cultural groups; religious bodies and non-religious societies. In recent years we have witnessed a growing cleavage between racial groups and nations. We have noted the growing difference between economic groups; even religious bodies seem to quarrel more readily one with the other.

In spite of all this, we recognize a sincerity in the spirit of those who speak of "one world." Men and women do realize that the statement, "We will have one world or none," is not merely dramatic speech but a fact. We want one world and yet we face a divided world. We desire peace but we face war. We long for harmony between nations and groups and we face disunity. Are there basic answers to this dilemma? To say that Christianity is the answer is all too simple. To be sure, Christianity is the answer but unfortunately men and women do not live as though they really believed it to be the answer.

The first answer then lies in quickening the active Christian spirit in individuals. It has been well said, "Christianity must begin with you or it does not begin. If it ends with you it ends."

The basic need of our civilization today is for individuals thoroughly committed to the Christian way of life. It is not enough to profess a belief or accept Jesus Christ as Savior. It is necessary for an individual to act upon that commitment in order that his daily life shows forth his inner spiritual convictions. How often we read statements from leaders in our corporate life today to the effect that the answer to the world's need is to follow the Sermon on the Mount. If those who pay lip service to the Master would practice in their daily relationships with their fellow men the principles and ideals He presented, the first step would be taken toward solving many of the problems of our time. If all those who profess to be Christian truly followed the teachings of Jesus Christ the problems of this world could be solved. There is a great need for a deeper consecration on the part of each and every Christian. Let every follower of the Master be greatly concerned about the spiritual quality of his own actions.

A second answer to the dilemma is contained in that old phrase already quoted, "If Christianity ends with you, it ends." In the course of the heated arguments over the granting of the Charter of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions by the Massachusetts legislature, objection was made that the Board would provide "means of exporting religion, whereas the country had none to spare." To this remark Jude White of Newburyport replied, "Religion is a commodity of which the more we export the more we have remaining."

We certainly should have learned by now that we cannot raise the level of one area of the world and ignore the spiritual level of others. In the past we have tried to raise the spiritual, the economic, and the moral tone of our own country and have to a large extent ignored the situation in other lands. Where we have been interested in other peoples it has been merely an "overflow interest." If we had time and money to give to people of less favored nations we did so. We now realize that if the moral and spiritual as well as the economic standard of life in our land is to be kept high, we must, at the same time, raise the level in other lands. If we live together in one world we will have only divisiveness until all lands are reached with the Spirit of Jesus Christ. We are a divided world today because this spirit has not permeated all nations and peoples, yea, has not permeated our own. As long as people think and act on different level the world will remain divided. Only as we bring people to the same spiritual understanding can this world become a Christian community of the Kingdom of God.

Basic in our thought here should be the statement of Jesus: "Man cannot live by bread alone." Now, to be sure, man cannot live without bread. The economic necessities of life must be met. We must fulfill His command to feed the hungry and clothe the naked, but satisfying these material needs will not wholly meet the problem. Life must have a spiritual quality. "Man cannot live by bread alone." What then is the final answer to man's dilemma?

Is it the gospel actively preached and lived? This, of course, is now being done by our Christian World Movement. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, for example, carries on work in Ja-

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The fourth Sunday in September brought out a large attendance at Sunday school and church as it was promotion Sunday in the Sunday school and the last Sunday in the church year. At the morning service of worship a couple of young parents transferred their membership to our church, and at the evening service a young married couple came to the altar, confessed their faith in Jesus Christ and were received into church and baptized. The day's work was done, so I thought.

But when I got home after a few minutes the telephone rang telling me of the death of one of our very faithful members, a regular attendant upon the church's service, a regular contributor, a reader of her church paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Miss Beuna Griggs, had just died at one of our local hospitals. She had suffered much for more than a year. Hardly had I left the telephone when another call came in telling me that I was wanted at the home of Mrs. Claud E. Eley, who was not expected to live through the night. At just after midnight she quietly passed away. Her son, Claud, Jr., a sophomore at VMI, had arrived in the afternoon and he and his father were at her bedside before she lapsed into unconsciousness.

Mrs. Eley had, until her illness, been a long time teacher in the Junior department of our Sunday school, and for a few years was superintendent of the department. She had served on many committees of the church, and in official capacity in several organizations both in her local church and in her local community. She was for several years an official in the Southern Convention, being on its Board of Publications, she was vice-president of the Woman's Convention and served on important committees thereof. For several years she was editor of the Virginia Club Woman, and was at the time of her death president of the Virginia Federation of Woman's Clubs.

The church lost two most excellent members, and many people lost warm, personal friends. They served their Lord, their community, and their loved ones in such a manner as shall not soon be forgotten and the full fruitage of their lives will not be known in this present world. It means more than we can tell here to live our lives beautifully and well, and only the Lord of life Himself can know the final results.

How happy so many people will be if the two young couples who united with our church yesterday but keep glowing in their hearts the divine faith which they felt as they made this church theirs. They will be able to do this if they join right into the work of the church, and go daily to their Lord for their guidance and fellowship. I had preached in the morning on "What Is Right With the Church." Before the day was over it exemplified some of the things I had been saying.

ACHIEVEMENT AT AMSTERDAM.

chaos. We have only to bear witness that God will not let us perish. That is why, even while He judges us, He calls us to faith through the cross of Christ. That is why He brings together His church in the midst of the declining world, so that His salvation may be proclaimed and offered to all."

In spite of theological difference, however, there was in all addresses and discussions a resolution to face reality, to agree to differ but resolve to cooperate, and to apply the Christian principles in new ways to humanity's problems. German delegates met with Frenchmen, the Dutch with East Indians. In conference rooms, halls, cafes and over tea cups in the Concetrgevrouw international groups were everywhere in evidence. The boundaries of nationality, race and dogma were transcended through a higher loyalty.

The leadership of the "younger churches" was more in evidence at Amsterdam than in any previous conclave; indicating that a world church is really evolving and that the Christian world program has become greater than Western civilization. Dr. T. C. Chao, creative interpreter of Chinese Christianity, was wisely chosen as one of the six presidents. Miss Sarah Chakko of India and Dr. C. K. Davlo of Africa and many other representatives on non-Western churches made outstanding contributions. Among the most authoritative voices were Berggrav, Borrot, Niemoeller, Dibelius and Chao, all of whom were imprisoned because of their Christian principles.

The war relief and reconstruction work of the church proved to be far more widespread and significant than most of us realize. Food, clothing, medicine, raw material, church equipment and innumerable items have been distributed in the spirit of goodwill in unparalleled quantities. The continued and unsolved tragedy of the refugees was emphasized. Under the Nazis there were seven to eight million uprooted peoples. Today there are twelve million. The Potsdam Agreement and post-war upheavals have cast these sufferers adrift. Our humanitarian work is far from being completed. America's policy toward these displaced persons is utterly inadequate.

Shadowed by the somber problems of the world, the Assembly made a determined search for an answer to communism. Josef Hromadka of Czechoslovakia said, "The Western nations have ceased to be the exclusive masters and architects of the world. The era of the Western man is approaching its end under a terrific storm which is sweeping through all humanity. . . . It is our task to understand our own failures and selfish motives, to acknowledge the right of the new barbarians to become the co-builders and heirs of the treasures that were accumulated through the centuries and enjoyed only by some few nations of Europe and America. . . . The Church of Christ has got to go beyond the present national, political and block divisions. She summons all her members to make a new beginning, to start from the bottom and to work for a new society."

Analyzing the trend toward totalitarianism and communism, Emil Brunner concluded: "Above all the church has to take seriously her own, immediate task: to create brotherly community, life community between her own members, such community in which every individual is valued as a person and in which mutual personal encounter takes place incessantly."

Said Philippe Maury of France: "Culture, politics, social service can and should be a means of witnessing to the God of hope. A refusal to believe in the inevitability of war, to resign ourselves to injustice, to be content with easy skepticism, those are some of the ways of telling of our hope as in preaching Jesus Christ in so many words."

In addition to public meetings significant action was taken by the numerous committees and commissions. Amsterdam was a working, as well as

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

ELON COLLEGE 1948.

Elon College has made satisfactory advancement along all lines during the past sixteen years. The growth has not been spasmodic or spectacular but gradual and substantial. The administration has sought each year to determine its weak points and to add strength where strength is needed. It has been found that when you strengthen one point in the administration, personnel, or curriculum, the whole college structure is made stronger and more effective. When you seek to repair the losses and consolidate the gains during one year, advancement during the ensuing year is the natural result.

On opening day, 1932, we enrolled 86 students. By the end of September the enrollment had reached a total—including special students—of one hundred and thirty-six. On opening day, 1948, we enrolled more than six hundred college students and to date we have enrolled, not including special students, seven hundred and ninety-one. This is a great student body, the largest enrollment in the history of the school. (On September 13, we were compelled to declare registration closed.)

An increased student body necessarily means an increased faculty. We were able to retain all members of our 1947-48 faculty with but one exception. Vacancies have been filled and two new members have been added. Our teaching force for the present is effective and complete.

An increased student body and faculty necessarily means increased facilities and equipment. Every available classroom has been brought into service. This has required additional equipment such as desks, chairs, and other materials. Every available room for dormitory purposes in college property, on or off the campus, has been furnished and is occupied.

The faculty has had numerous meetings before and since the opening of school in studious and careful endeavor to build and enrich our curriculum so as to meet the demands of our students and the requirements of a progressive, modern institution of higher learning.

This all adds up an appreciable increase in our current budget. The teaching budget alone amounts to $122,900.00, not including administrative salaries, which is far beyond our total budget fifteen years ago. There will, of course, be increased funds from the student body but not sufficient to equal the increased cost of operation. The college is compelled to depend on an increase from invested funds, from generous persons who are interested in Christian education, and from the church to which the college belongs. By cooperation in efforts and contributions we shall be able to meet the demands of this year and go forward to the complete satisfaction of the church, the alumni, and friends of Elon College.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Elon College is encouraged by the action of the Convention during its recent session providing for an increase in apportionments for the college in the amount of $2,500 a year, making a total of $15,000.00, apportioned to the several conferences constituting the Convention which will in turn pass the apportionments on to local churches. It should be noted that this is the first increase in apportionments for the college within the last 17 years at least. It is assumed, of course, that the churches will not undertake this increased apportionment until 1948-49. In the meantime, it is hoped and may be urged that every local church make sure to raise its 1947-48 apportionment in full. The college greatly appreciates the cooperation and support of our local churches.

pan, Micronesian Islands, and Mexico; has stations in China; great work in the three fields of India; an outreach into the Near East through its schools and hospitals and stations in Turkey, Greece, Lebanon, and Syria; and increasingly important work in three great fields of Africa. Today the gospel is being preached and people throughout the world are catching more of the Spirit of Jesus Christ! The spiritual lives of people are being deepened! The Gospel is being preached not alone in churches and evangelistic centers, but through the work of our schools from kindergarten through college; it is being lived and preached daily in the hospitals and dispensaries; people are being reached through imparting agricultural knowledge; Christian industrial relations are being fostered.

Our missionaries know that Christianity is "caught" and they, though they be teachers, doctors, nurses, social workers or preachers, are imparting this spirit to the people with whom they come in contact.

These are great days for the fellowship of Christ because we know that the Christian Church holds the key to the solution of the problems of our modern world. If we as individual Christians become more consecrated and thereby actively fulfill our place in the world's life we will help meet some of the needs of our day. As we lift our eyes to wider horizons and strive to bring the Gospel to other nations that the spiritual life of the world may be lifted, we shall further the coming of the Kingdom of God. As our representatives go abroad into all the lands of the earth preaching the Gospel, through education or medicine, agriculture or industry, there shall come a quickening of the spiritual life. How thrilling it is to feel ourselves a part of this great ongoing task.

Possibly you have the training and ability for service in this great cause; or it may be you can influence others to give their service. All can through prayer, consecrated active service, and through gifts forward the great work of making our earth "one world" in the Spirit of Jesus Christ.

Love never looks for faults, and whenever it discovers them in others it throws over them the mantle of charity and performs the two-fold miracle of making itself more beautiful and the one in whom the fault is found more happy.—Ed. H. Emmett.

OUR 1948 THANK OFFERING.

At the General Council held at Oberlin College in June, it was recommended that this year our entire denomination unite in a nation-wide Thank Offering, and that all the money be used for our Post-War Emergency Program.

We are glad that even before this suggestion was made, our own Executive Committee had recommended that the women of the Southern Convention designate their Thank Offering for this cause. It is good to know that we are united with Congregational Christians all over our land, and that we are planning to contribute our money to the cause which the leaders of our denomination feel is most vital at this time. Somehow, this adds significance to the Thank Offering service this year.

You may be glad to know that in addition to the Thank Offering program material which will be printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, you can secure the following free helps from the Missions Council, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.:

1. Together We Can Do It—A Thanksgiving Offering article by Albert D. Stauffacher, 4 pages, pre-printed from Missionary Herald. (You might order enough copies of this leaflet to distribute to all your members several weeks prior to your service, or your leader might prefer to use it as a basis for her talk at the Thank Offering service.)

2. A Thanksgiving Offering Service, 4 pages, attractively printed. (This is an excellent service for the entire church.)

3. A Phonograph Record of Thanksgiving Talks by Helen Kenyon, Moderator of the General Council and Ronald Bridges, a Past Moderator. (The record can be played in 8 minutes and will be very good to use as advance publicity for your service.)

4. Thank Offering Envelopes. (The envelope is so attractive that it really should stimulate giving.)

Every minister has been sent sample copies of these materials together with an order blank, so ask your minister about them, and avail yourself of the opportunity of securing these excellent free helps.

As we plan for our Thank Offering this year, let us remember the words of Grace Noll Crowell:

*Because I have been given much,
I, too, must give.
Because of Thy great bounty, Lord,
Each day I live
I shall divide my gifts from Thee
With every brother that I see
Who has the need of help from me.*

NEWS FROM LOCAL SOCIETIES.

LIBERTY VANCE (N. C.)

The J. O. Atkinson Woman's Missionary Society of Liberty (Vance) Congregational Christian Church progressed along all lines during the past year under the efficient leadership of Mrs. B. M. Newman. The society has exceeded its quota of $110.00 by $15.00. The society has raised during the year $535.10, and sent to our conference treasurer $235.60—Thank Offering, $50.00; World Day of Prayer Offering, $15.60; Life Memberships, $20.00; War Relief, $25.00; and for conference apportionment, $125.00. We also gave to local work such as flowers, gifts, boxes and other things around $150.00. We also sent through our Friendly Service a box to our work in Japan and a box to the Franklinton Negro College.

Our society gained several new members during the year and we now have a membership of 50.

We observed the Thank Offering service and the World Day of Prayer service as public services. Our society sponsored the entertainment of the Southern Convention in April in a splendid way. We helped with the ladies' class in several suppers for different organizations.

We held our mission study jointly with the Mt. Auburn society at the home of its president, Mrs. J. L. Read. This study was conducted by Mrs. Robert Kimball, wife of the pastor of the Franklin, Va., church and was most interesting and instructive.

At the last meeting Mrs. Newman resigned as president. She has served so efficiently for the last several years that we regret very much her resignation, but we are very fortunate to have Mrs. H. F. Mitchell as our president for the coming year with the following officers: Mrs. Brooks Beckhorn, vice president; Mrs. George W. Macon, secretary; Mrs. Tollie G. Foster, treasurer.

The church has a right to be proud of this splendid band of women and it has also progressed along all lines under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. T. Fred Wright, and his wife. They are an asset to the community.

TIMOTHY CHANG ARRIVES AT DUKE UNIVERSITY.

Timothy Chang, Chinese ministerial student from Shaowu, China, who is being sponsored by the women of the Southern Convention, arrived at Duke University School of Religion for seminary work the middle of this month. Timothy writes:

"I came here last Wednesday, September 15, and started my classes on September 20. We have one other Chinese student here, a Methodist. I heard Dr. Stanley C. Harrell preach last Sunday. The weather in North Carolina is like that of my province in China. My greetings to all of our church friends. Timothy Chang."

The American Board has more than 400 missionary representatives around the world; some 7,000 National Christian leaders; 33 universities, colleges and theological seminaries; 18 training schools; 57 secondary schools; 1,072 primary schools; 21 hospitals; 34 clinics; and 24 social centers. The budget of the American Board for the current year is $1,477,379.97. It holds in invested funds about $9,000,000 and the value of properties in the foreign field used for the work of the Board is approximately $6,000,000.

ary projects, but also to honor one of the most sacred ordinances given to man in the Garden of Eden, that of Holy Matrimony—truly one could not choose a more peaceful surrounding for an occasion such as this.

The honorees were Miss Frances Gunter, pianist for the Jennie L. Gunter Circle, and Mrs. Leola Mickell, a recent bride who will be leaving us to make her home in Columbia, S. C.

Miss Emma Hart gave a survey of the mission needs in various places, reminding us of the bountiful blessings that we are constantly enjoying in this land of liberty. Can we as Christians turn a deaf ear to the cry of the suffering? Did not Christ say, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

I am happy to report that the societies pledged their loyal support to the over and above gift.

man of Life Memberships and Memorials Committee of the Southern Convention, reminding us of our educational project, Timothy Chang, who is at present attending Duke Divinity School in Durham.

The society voted unanimously to give a Life Membership to Lewis Byers, the newest addition to the Jackson family.

Mrs. Porter gave an acknowledging report from the May Fellowship program and the business session was closed.

Mrs. George Griffin, our able devotional leader, turned our minds heavenward as she talked on the subject of love. Truly, love is the fundamental element of true Christianity, for love ever gives, forgives, and outlives.

During the social hour, the honorees were showered with many lovely and useful gifts and to crown the evening's gathering delectable refreshments were served by the hostess.

PLEASANT RIDGE.

The Pleasant Ridge Missionary Society has almost completed another year's work, during which time we have strived to reach the goal set for a Superior Society.

At the beginning of the year, a Cradle Roll was organized under the leadership of Mrs. Marie Hicks, our secretary, and Cradle Roll superintendent. Through their mite boxes, these children have contributed much to the mission work. At Christmas the society gave each child a gift and

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

Did you ever have to take any medicine? Or do you ever wonder about the many pills and colored preparations in the bottles on the shelves of the drug store? I have done both, taken and wondered! I was surprised to learn that many of the herbs and drugs used come from plants grown in Virginia and North Carolina. There are people living near the Dismal Swamp of Virginia and in the mountains of Carolina who spend their lives raising and gathering herbs and plants for medicine.

What are some of them? Well, blue flag which is a wild iris, contains in its roots an ingredient used to stimulate hearts. Also used are catnip, wild ginger, jimson weed and lady slipper.

In the late spring I have enjoyed popping the maypops but they are quite valuable, for its fruit is used to make salves to treat burns and skin diseases. Dried poke berries are used, too, and at this season there are poke berries all through the State in full ripeness. All in all there are over three hundred different kinds of plants, flowers and herbs which can be used to heal or treat the sick and injured.

Isn't it wonderful that God has provided these things for us and that we have learned about them and their uses? The next time you take some medicine it may contain something that had been gathered from your own neighborhood.

Many of my readers live near or in the vicinity of the Dismal Swamp and they probably know its beauties and mysteries very well. It is so vast and so deep and so lovely. Many great people have written about the swamp and its creatures. When I was younger I used to visit on the edge of the swampland and I liked to hear the tales about the wildcats and bears and fish to be found there. I dreaded the mosquitoes though and disliked the smell of the burning peat. Once I fell into its quicksand and my mother must have despaired of ever cleaning me up for I was really bogged in mud!

Do you feel the wonder of God's out-of-doors? The beauty of each creation—be it skunk cabbage or tall firs? All around us are His gifts. Think on them.

TANTRUM ABOARD.

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

What a little mother she was to be obliged to have so much of a struggle with her two sturdy boys! The younger—a plump infant of about a year—she held in her arms, and his weight threatened to capsize one of such slender build. She staggered into the women's cabin on the evening ferry dragging the older boy, who screamed, raged, and almost wrenched himself from her grasp. Patiently—too patiently it seemed to the onlookers—she reasoned with this young disturber of the peace. Didn't he like the ferry? The ride would not be long. What would he like to have when he reached home? But the calmer she remained, the worse grew the tantrum. The boy flung his cap across the floor, tore at his coat, threw himself against his mother nearly upsetting her, screamed, and vigorously kicked his long-suffering parent.

At length he stood still for a moment, and his head nodded—his eyes blinked—it seemed as though he would fall asleep right there on his feet. The mother placed the baby on the seat and attempted to lift the two-and-a-half-year-old to her lap, but he pulled away in a frenzy of yelling, thumping, and kicking. When this spell was over his head again nodded and his eyes blinked. Finally the mother took her two babies and left the cabin. A sigh of relief arose from the other passengers.

"A good paddling is what that youngster needs!" one stout middle-aged woman asserted, and she voiced the feelings of many in that cabin. "I can't understand mothers!" She puffed on a cigarette, displaying fingers full of rings—no wedding ring was among them.

Would a punishment have benefited the child? Most of us had been aching to administer one, and, too, we were annoyed by the mother's patience.

Now for the lad's side of the story.

Tommy had started out early that morning. There had been so much preparation and excitement that he could not eat his breakfast—it just would not go down, in spite of his mother's urging and scolding.

The long journey by streetcar and ferry, with all the unusual sights and sounds, had taken toll of baby nerves.

To make up for the lack of the morning meal, his mother had bought him a bag of popcorn which the child had devoured.

He was wearied even before he reached the house of their friends. Here a big boy of six ruled. Tommy didn't understand his teasing ways. The boy would offer him a ride on his tricycle, then, just when Tommy was getting on, he would snatch away the machine, mount, and ride off down the street. Then Tommy started to construct a house with some blocks. Carefully he placed them one on another. The building was becoming interesting. But the big boy appeared and, with a kick, sent the blocks flying.

At lunch Tommy ate food unsuitable for his age; his afternoon nap he missed entirely.

When we saw him it was long past his bedtime, and he was traveling home on a crowded ferryboat.

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE TO MEET.

The annual fall meeting of the Eastern Virginia Young People's Missionary Conference will be held at the Suffolk Christian Church on Sunday, October 24.

Most of you young people will recall that the above date is much later than the time we usually have our fall meetings. This is due to the fact that this was the only time we could secure Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and her team of national and international leaders to speak to us in connection with Foreign Missions.

We feel very fortunate and are looking forward to having Miss Coghill and her team. Included in this team will be Dr. Hiroshi Hatanaka, President of Kobe College, Japan; Dr. Alan B. Taylor, Medical Missionary to Durban, South Africa; Rev. Harold W. Case of Fort Berthold, Indian Reservation, Elbowoods, North Dakota; and Rev. Stanley U. North of New York City, Director of City Work under the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches.

In the next issue of our CHRISTIAN SUN I shall tell you more about the team.

Please bear the date, October 24, in mind, young people, and give Miss Coghill and her excellent team your best support.

MRS. MELVIN P. BRINKLEY,
Supt., E. Va. Y. P.'s Missionary Conference.

LIBERTY SPRING JUNIORS.

The Junior Missionary Society of Liberty Spring will come to the close of another year's work at our meeting on Sunday. When glancing back over the past year and thinking of all the events which have taken place, we feel it has been a successful year.

We hold our regular monthly meeting during Sunday school period on the second Sunday in every month. The children conduct their meetings just like grown-ups. The mission study book, Around the World With the Bible was, reviewed by the leader.

We sent a special offering of $5.00 to Shaowu.

At Christmas we held a white gift service. Each child brought a gift and at the close of the service we packed them in a large box and sent them to the Christian Orphanage.

For our Friendly Service the children brought school supplies and shoes, and we packed two boxes to send to New Windsor, Md.

We held our public program at Easter. The Cradle Roll group joined with us and we had a real children's program which was enjoyed by all.

We held our August meeting on August 4. At this time, we invited the mothers to our meeting and after the meeting we had a "party" for all.

We held a lawn party on the church lawn to raise money for our society. It was not only a way of raising money, but a real fellowship meeting that was enjoyed by all.

Although we are small, we feel we have had a year of progress toward bigger and better things in our work for the Kingdom of the Lord.

ACHIEVEMENT AT AMSTERDAM.

a speaking, assembly. Addresses and reports will be published in book form and will be read and discussed around the world. Unity of the church is long overdue. Progress was made in that direction. The American representation, after hearing of united efforts on other continents, came back with the feeling that we Americans might begin in a nation that prides itself on efficiency but presents the most divided church in Christendom.

Dr. Sidney Berry, who is serving as Provisional Secretary of the International Congregational Union, presided at an informal gathering of Congregationalists from ten nations. Plans for the International Council to be held in Wellesley next June were discussed. It is hoped that a number of new groups from nations not represented before will attend. Dr. Kley, Secretary of the Remonstrant Church, welcomed the Congregationalists to Holland and we were all conscious of our close affinity with these lovers of human freedom. A number of us visited the seventeenth century Remonstrant Church in Amsterdam and were impressed with the liberal and progressive spirit of these fellow Christians.

Dr. Douglas Horton gave able leadership as head of the entire American delegation. Dr. Henry Leiper, who kept in the background of the Assembly, deserves more credit than any one individual in the World Council for the success of this first meeting.

The spirit of unity was in evidence from the opening service in the New Church, where Princess Julianna was crowned a few days later, to the closing moments in the Western Church, where Rembrandt is buried.

The realistic but hopeful words of Eivind Berggrav sum up the Assembly: "Solidarity is God's plan and will and the way toward victory. Solidarity is the principle of God for men to live together. Our task is to create schemes according to this main line. One such scheme seems to be true democracy, but the consequence of it in international order then must be a federal order between nations. The future of international order depends on how far mutuality becomes organized in the world. Man's disorder is due to misuse of power. God's order is realized by the recognition of mutual respects, mutual rights and mutual responsibilities. This is the solidarity that fills the vacuum, revealing the view of victory in front of us. But so remote? How remote was victory in 1940? Nobody knew. But then we all said: However far it may be—never let it out of sight, always think of it, always work for it. Solidarity was felt as already anticipating victory. How much more is this the case now, if we bow under God's solidarity with men and direct all our enthusiasm to the achievement of a future."

Those who were privileged to attend Amsterdam have seen an actual demonstration of cooperative Christian effort. And all of us join in the concluding prayer of the Assembly that this leaven may continue to revitalize the Church: "We pray that through patience and humility Christians of each several communions may be led to a deeper understanding of those truths of the Gospel to which they have borne witness; into a wider understanding of those truths for which other communions have stood; and finally into an apprehension of the truth in its fulness, wherein all our partial apprehension shall be brought into unity. Amen."

"I would have become an atheist," said John Randolph, "but for the memory of the time when my departed mother used to take my little hand in hers and cause me on my knees to say: 'Our Father who—'"

BIOGRAPHY IN THE BIBLE.

LESSON II—OCTOBER 10, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths.—Prov. 3:6.

LESSON: Genesis 11:25-25:11.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Hebrews 11:1-10.

*Biography in the Bible—
And in Literature.*

Biography literally means "the writing of a life," "the written history of a person's life." It is an important form of literature. A well-written biography is a good source not only of information about the person himself, but of the times in which he lived, and is also a source of inspiration. People, and especially young people, miss a great deal if they do not read biographies of men and women, and not only great men and women, but of men and women, sometimes comparatively unknown, who have lived nobly and served faithfully. Modern secular literature has many splendid biographies.

The Bible as "a book of life" also has many biographies in it. To be sure they are not, as a rule, full-length biographies. In some cases as in the case of Moses, Abraham, Joseph, Jacob, David, Daniel and others, there are somewhat extended sections of the Bible devoted to their life stories. But sometimes, as in the case of the lesson on Barnabas a few weeks ago, even in a few scattered verses, there are biographical references which give us a clear insight into a person's life. And of course the "greatest story ever told" is nothing less than a biographical sketch of our Lord Jesus Christ. A good rule for young and old alike is "give attendance to reading" and in reading "give attendance to biography."

The lesson on Biography in the Bible for today uses the life of Abraham as its theme or subject. It does well, for not only is this story told quite at length—fifteen chapters are allotted to it—but it is replete with interesting and inspiring incidents. Readers of the Bible ought to be familiar with the life of this great man.

The Biography of Abraham.

The lesson for today covers far too much to be covered in detail in these Notes or in a Sunday school lesson, for that matter—there are nearly fifteen chapters devoted to the story of Abraham. But as one reads these chapters there emerges a figure of heroic proportions, and of spiritual genius. This man Abraham stands high in God's Hall of Fame. If "there were giants in those days" Abraham was one of them. He was a great man and a grand character.

He came of pioneer stock. His father, Terah, felt the urge to migrate. With the spirit of faith and courage and adventure characteristic of so many pioneers, he set out from his home in Ur of Chaldee and started to the land of Canaan. It was a long and hard and dangerous journey, and only a man of courage and faith would have undertaken it. For some reason, unknown or unstated by the biblical writer, Terah stopped at Haran, and died there—he never reached the land of his dreams. We can only speculate as to the motives that led Terah to undertake his migration. Even he might have felt the pall of idolatry, and the pull of true worship. Or again it might have been practical or economic reasons. We do not know.

But Abriham undoubtedly was moved by a religious motive. He interpreted that inner feeling as the voice of Jehovah himself. He wanted to find a place where he could worship "God according to the dictates of his own conscience." The voice of the Most High God had spoken unto him, and with characteristic obedience, he obeyed, even though he went out not knowing whither he went. He went out by faith. But because he followed the light he had, he came into the light. Taking his family, and his brother's son with him, he started out for the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan he came. There in a pagan land and among idolaters, this man, "nailed his flag to the mast," he "stood up and was counted." For every step of his itinerary in Canaan was easily traced—it was marked by an altar. He bore his witness to his faith in Jehovah, even though he had to bear it alone. This marked him as a man of moral and spiritual courage, as well as of simple faith.

Abraham had the spirit of magnanimity, too. He was large of heart and generous in spirit. When friction arose between his men and Lot's men he did a practical and unusual thing. Taking his nephew up to a commanding hill overlooking the country, he said to Lot, "Take your choice, I'll take what's left." It is such a unusual thing that the cynic or skeptic would hardly believe it. It was the mark of a generous spirit and a great soul.

And, of course, there is the imitable story of the attempted offering up of Isaac. How account for this strange incident? Here was the son, the only son, and the child of promise, and the old man was willing to offer him up as a burnt offering unto Jehovah. It was an illustration of supreme faith and equally as supreme love and the spirit of sacrifice. He was living among people who on occasion would offer up their children to their heathen gods. Did he love the living God less than did his neighbors? One gets a lump in his throat as he reads this story and enters sympathetically into it. The man's unwavering faith and his willing obedience are the marks of great character.

Again and again his faith is strengthened by a fresh experience with the Most High. Again and again as he came to a crossroads, God pointed out the way in which he should go. And always there was that obedience by faith that has earned for this man, Abraham, the name "father of the faithful." And this quality of his character was singled out by the writer in the New Testament who stated that his faith was accounted unto him for righteousness.

Read again, then, the story of this man of God. He embodied in his life the marks of a man. His unquestioned integrity of character, his care and concern for his dependents, his moral and spiritual courage, his determination to live at peace with his fellowmen, his chivalry, his spirit of hospitality, his sublime faith entitle him to a place high up on God's Honor Roll, and a sure place in God's Hall of Fame.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE TO MEET.

ALCOHOL'S WAY WITH MAN.By HAROLD C. MILLER, M. D.

Men drink it for its effects. The first of these is a feeling of stimulation. This sense of exhilaration is so real that those who have experienced it will assert that alcohol is surely a stimulant. And for this purpose it has been recommended for almost every imaginable ailment from fainting to snake-bite. This idea of its stimulating properties is so firmly fixed in the minds of most people, that when they are told it is not a stimulant but a narcotic, that it does not build up but tears down, and that it does not revive but deadens, they demand an explanation.

Let us see how this apparent contradiction may be explained. Alcohol produces most of its effects in and through the nervous system. This system is made of millions of tiny nerve cells and fibers. Chemically these contain relatively large amounts of fat-like substances known as lipoids. The function of these lipoids seems to be very much the same as the insulation in an electrical system. Alcohol, like some other narcotics such as ether and chloroform, is a fat solvent. When taken into the body, the fat dissolving narcotics act very similarly in that they make this insulating material more permeable and thus produce a sort of short-circuit of the nervous system.*

Short circuits are sufficiently familiar in this automobile age. We all know how a short in a horn circuit will cause the motor to miss or stop; and in the lighting circuit will cause the lights to flicker or go out. A somewhat similar course of events occurs when a man imbibes alcohol. You have probably observed the progress of such a case from the time the horn begins to blow until the lights go out!

High Circuits Cut Out.

For the effects of alcohol begin at the top and work down. If you drop your watch and it stops running, you look for the trouble with the delicate balance wheel and hairspring. A fire in a forest will kill the younger trees before the older ones. In like manner, alcohol in a brain deadens first the finer sensibilities, the more recently acquired attainments of culture and civilization. When alcohol goes into a man, judgment and self-control go out. Sturdier and more primitive instincts and passions rise in that man to rule him so that he slides rapidly down the scale of civilization. The high circuits which make of him a man in the modern sense have been cut out.

Being Disorganized.

This man is a dangerous man, as the cave man was dangerous. And for very much the same reason in that he does not know enough not to be dangerous. The disordered tumult within him gives him the feeling of bravado and freedom from all restraint. But he is not being stimulated, he is being disorganized. He does not care. It is more fun to be hilarious than sensible. And if he continues to drink, as he probably will if he can get it, one after another of the layers of his nervous system are short-circuited until he can neither move nor know at all. He is dead drunk and unable to drink more. But if the process should continue, the function of breathing and heartbeat will be next to go. He has been completely and permanently short-circuited.

The increase in commotion when a teacher steps out should not be misinterpreted as an increase in the work of the school. But if it were not for this false sense of stimulation, men would not drink alcohol, and I should have nothing further to say.

Temporary Insanity.

As it is, I might go ahead and tell you of the physical effects with which the worshipper at the shrine of Bacchus is rewarded. He is decorated with a red nose and bleary eyes. He is ballasted with a hobnailed liver and swollen kidneys. He craves more wine for his stomach's ache. Tremor betrays him and prevents his doing delicate or accurate tasks. And finally he may be inducted into the Order of Delirium Tremens. One of the queer things about people is that although they have more horror of insanity than any other disease, so many of them will deliberately take alcohol, which will make them temporarily and sometimes permanently insane.

Or I might tell of how these effects handicap your living. If you drink, that fact will not recommend you as an athlete, an aeronaut, an engineer, a chauffer, marksman, a draftsman, not even a bartender. Nor can your being debarred from these vocations be blamed on the zeal of the W.C.T.U. Furthermore, if you would be convinced as to the practical effects of alcohol upon your life, try this test. Apply for life insurance and answer in the affirmative those three or four questions regarding your drinking habits. The agent will want to sell you the policy and the office would like to have your premium. But if you can persuade the medical examiner to accept your risk as a drinking man it will be because he has forgotten some of the things he should have learned in Sunday school. The lesson I refer to was not concerning alcohol, but honesty. For the facts about the effects of alcohol are not guessed at by the insurance companies and they turn down drinkers for practical rather than sentimental reasons.

Always Calls for More.

But I must leave these matters of life and death to remind you of a more important effect of alcohol. I refer to the fact that a man remembers, and having once found a short cut to a heavenly feeling he would fain return by that path to his fool's paradise again and again. Thus, alcohol forms a habit. And unwittingly this man's body in trying to protect itself delivers him into the hands of his adversary. When the short-circuiting of the nervous system is repeated, it strengthens its insulation. More of the narcotic must then be used to get results. Give a man beer and your market for whisky should be assured. This is a most important point for those who would profit by it.

Guarantees Repeat Orders.

Nor have those who would profit overlooked it. Alcohol seems to have been made to order for their purpose. They have found it to be the perfect instrument for the exploitation of the people. For that purpose how could it be improved? Here is a commodity which does most of its own advertising and when once sold guarantees repeat orders. Once a customer always a customer unless the drinker realizes his peril and has recourse to a higher power. Moreover he will buy it in increasing quantities as long as he lives. And he will pay for it even if his family must go without bread, even if his wife must earn the money for it over the wash tub.

Complete Enslavement.

The habituated drinker will give not only his shirt but also his vote. Which means that in a democracy such as ours the men who furnish the liquor will elect the government.

Exploitation is a big word. Once upon a time they called that kind of control slavery. But slavery had certain drawbacks and could not survive in the face of competition. Slaves had to be bought and sold and fed and cared for. To fix it so that the slave will give all of his money and all of his rights without asking any obligation from his master is a great improvement—for the master.

*The nature of the inter-section of cells has given rise to various theories as to the effect of alcohol upon their activity. It is thought that alcohol acts as a non-conductor or interference with nerve impulses of an electrical type. Another theory is that alcohol interferes with the transmission of nerve impulses at the junction of the nerve cells. Still another is the "Lipoid" theory which Dr. Miller states so well.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

I want to tell you something I think you ought to know. All this year our income has been below normal and I could not account for it. This week I made an investigation and what do you think I found the cause to be?

In the Eastern Virginia Conference we have nineteen churches that have not sent an offering this year to the orphanage. In the Eastern North Carolina Conference we have twenty-four churches that have not sent an offering this year to the orphanage. In our Western North Carolina Conference we have fifteen churches that have not contributed a penny to the orphanage. In our North Carolina and Virginia Conference we have twenty-five churches that have made no offering this year to the orphanage. And in our Valley of Virginia Conference we have six churches that have failed us so far this year.

I think the record shows we have one hundred seventy-three churches in the Southern Convention, and more than half of them have not contributed a penny this year to help us. In other words, eighty-four churches have made contributions and eighty-nine have made no contribution at all for the orphanage this year. I am wondering if it is not so in regard to the college, too. No wonder the orphanage has only received the pitiful sum of $6,852.45 to help support the little children here. Most of these churches not contributing are country churches. Farmers are getting the highest prices for their products that they have ever received. God has richly blessed them and has said in His word, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." (James 1:27.) Have these churches forgotten the little orphan child? I hope not.

I really wish you could have seen the little fellows march off to school on the fifteenth, with a happy smile on their faces and anxious to go. Then it was a prettier sight on Sunday morning, September 19, when they all marched off to church and Sunday school after being quarantined for six weeks during the polio epidemic, when children under fifteen were not allowed to go to Sunday school or church or any gathering. I think if your church could have seen this beautiful sight you would be happy to contribute to help these children who make their home at the Christian Orphanage.

My friends, it takes money to run an orphanage. It takes money to pay workers. It takes money to buy food, shoes and clothes. We are dependent on you to help us in our time of need. Will you come to our rescue? We have drawn on our bank account until it is at a very low ebb because we had to. You have not sent in money to care for the running expenses and we had no other resources.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

NOTE: It should be understood that Mr. Johnston is referring to the calendar year, not the conference year. We earnestly hope that before the calendar year ends he will find the orphanage amply cared for. Mg. Ed.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

then in the summer a party, which was well attended.

We held our Thank Offering service at eleven o'clock one Sunday, making it a public service. All the members participated in the program.

Under the guidance of our Friendly Service Committee, we placed copies of daily devotionals in every home represented in our Sunday school, sent gifts of linens to Franklinton Institute, a package to Miss Crew, made Easter dresses for children at Elon Orphanage, and continued to a county-wide clothing drive for overseas relief.

The Junior boys and girls have done great work under the direction of the superintendent, Mrs. Colbert Allen. Each one has read all the study books and periodically during the year, they have contributed through their mite boxes. In addition to this, they have sent a box of groceries to Miss Crew and 50 Gospels of Luke to Mexico. We wish to commend them for this work and especially to commend Mrs. Allen for her wonderful leadership.

We observed World Day of Prayer in spite of the bad weather. At each meeting our Bible study has been very inspiring under the direction of our Spiritual Life Chairman, Mrs. Ollie Mae Stewart. We reviewed Great Is the Company at our monthly meetings. In August Dr. Wiseman gave a review on Committed Unto Us, at which time the ladies of the Ashboro society met with us. An offering was taken and it was agreed that a Life Membership be bought for the Jacksons.

Our society suffered a great loss this year in the death of one of our faithful and beloved members, Mrs. W. E. Beane, and we purchased a Life Memorial in her honor.

Doors have truly been opened this year, and this report only highlights a few of them, for the wonderful opportunities and blessings we have received are too numerous to mention.

President.

In Memoriam

GRIGGS.

Whereas, God in His infinite love, has seen fit to call to his reward one of our members, Mr. Eddie Lee Griggs, we, as a church and individuals, desire to record our appreciation of his life and sorrow in our loss.

- Therefore, be it resolved:
1. That the Bethlehem Christian Church, Nansemond County, of which he was a member, has lost one for whom they mourn.
 2. That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and earnest prayers.
 3. That God's blessings may fall upon their sad hearts and give them comfort.
 4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread upon the church records and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. ANNIE SMITH,
Mrs. TOM POOLE,
Mrs. J. E. HARRIS,
Committee.

HOOPER.

Mrs. Thelma Miles Hooper, a member of Bethleh Christian Church, departed this life on June 18. She was a life-long resident of the Anderson Community of Caswell County. She was an active member in both the church and missionary society. Her death was a great loss both to our church and community. Where God has seen fit in His infinite love, to call to his reward our beloved sister and co-worker, we as a Missionary Society and individuals wish to record the following:

1. That the Bethel Christian Church has lost a beloved member.
2. That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and earnest prayers, that God's blessings may always be about them and give them comfort.
3. That we realize that God doeth all things well. While we mourn the loss of one who meant so much to us, and to others as well, we bow in humble submission to His divine will.

Today among our midst,
We look into an empty chair
For one of our beloved members
Has answered a call to come up there.

Though her presence is afar,
Her spirit is very near
For she represented things so pure and good
And precious things so dear.

As a mother, a wife, and community worker,
She had passed her test
And God saw fit to take her
To become an angel of rest.

Her husband and children will miss her
As will loved ones and friends,
But God giveth thee and taketh
For it was his will in the end.

She has left an example
For all of us to follow through.
An example of trust and faith in God
And our chance of being an angel, too.

Kansas Church Observes Anniversary

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
Tonganoxie, Kansas

The Eightieth Anniversary will be observed on October 3. A new Reuter pipe organ will be dedicated and Superintendent L. M. Rymph will give the anniversary message. The day will also be observed as Home-Coming Day.

The church was organized in 1868, with sixteen members—six males and ten females. It was composed largely of New England stock. Kansas was still young when the church began and the memories of Quantrell's raid at Lawrence, fifteen miles distant, were still fresh. The first pastor was Rev. Harry Edwin Woodcock, who served as minister from 1868 to 1882. He was born in New Hampshire, November 6, 1816. His death occurred in Kansas City, Missouri, in 1911. At the time of his death he was the senior graduate of Oberlin College, senior member of the Old Folks' Association of Kansas City and charter member of the Tonganoxie church and also of the Tabernacle church of Kansas City.

The Tonganoxie church under other leaders has carried on faithfully. It has never been a large church, but from its membership have gone forth scores of young men and women to enrich the churches of larger cities. On their home visits they speak appreciatively of what this church has meant in their lives. Located as the church is near Lawrence, Leavenworth and Kansas City, it was natural that for business reasons these places would receive many of them. The present membership is 155, more than 100 of whom are resident.

The pastor, Rev. Archie Toothaker, began his ministry here, April 9, 1939. During his pastorate ninety-four members have been received, also during this time church building has been rebuilt, and modernized. The Rededication Services were held April 19, 1942. The chancel arrangement has received much praise from people competent to judge as to its artistic effect. The cross and pulpit were made by a member of the church, and the sterling silver candlesticks were the gift of an Episcopalian friend.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1948.

NUMBER 40.

A Message from the World Council

We bless God our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ Who gathers together in one the children of God that are scattered abroad. He has brought us here together at Amsterdam. We are one in acknowledging Him as our God and Saviour. We are divided from one another not only in matters of faith, order and tradition, but also by pride of nation, class and race. But Christ has made us His own, and He is not divided. In seeking Him we find one another.

When we look to Christ, we see the world as it is—His world, to which He came and for which He died. It is filled both with great hopes and also with disillusionment and despair. Some nations are rejoicing in new freedom and power, some are bitter because freedom is denied them, some are paralyzed by division, and everywhere there is an undertone of fear. There are millions who are hungry, millions who have no home, no country and no hope. Over all mankind hangs the peril of total war. We have to accept God's judgment upon us for our share in the world's guilt. Often we have tried to serve God and mammon, put other loyalties before loyalty to Christ, confused the Gospel with our own economic or national or racial interests and feared war more than we have hated it. As we have talked with each other here, we have begun to understand how our separation has prevented us from receiving correction from one another in Christ. And because we lacked this correction, the world has often heard from us not the Word of God but the words of God.

But there is a word of God for our world. It is that the world is in the hands of the living God, Whose will for it is wholly good; that in Christ Jesus, His incarnate Word, Who lived and died and rose from the dead, God has broken the power of evil once for all, and opened for everyone the gate into freedom and joy in the Holy Spirit; that the final judgment on all human history and on every human deed is the judgment of the merciful Christ; and that the end of history will be the triumph of His Kingdom, where alone we shall understand how much God has loved the World. This is God's unchanging word to the world. Millions of our fellow-men have never heard of it. As we are met here from many lands, we pray God to stir up His whole Church to make this Gospel known to the whole world, and to call on all men to believe in Christ, to live in His love and to hope for His coming.

Our coming together to form a World Council will be vain, unless Christians and Christian congregations everywhere commit themselves to the Lord of the Church in a new effort to seek together, where they live, to be His witnesses and servants among their neighbors. We have to remind ourselves and all men that God has put down the mighty from their seats and exalted the humble and meek. We have to learn afresh together to speak boldly in Christ's name both to those in power and to the people, to oppose terror, cruelty and rare discrimination, to stand by the outcast, the prisoner and the refugee. We have to make of the Church in every place a voice for those who have no voice, and a home. We have to learn afresh together what is the duty of the Christian man or woman in industry, in agriculture, in politics, in the professions and in the home. We have to ask God to teach us together to say No and to say Yes in truth. No to all that flouts the love of Christ, to every system, every program and every person that treats any man as though he were an irresponsible thing or a means of profit, to the defenders of injustice in the name of order, to those who sow the seeds of war, or urge war as inevitable; Yes, to all that conforms to the love of Christ, to all who seek for justice, to the peace-makers, to all who hope, fight and suffer for the cause of man, to all who—even without knowing it—look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Observe Laymen's Sunday in your church on October 17. Give the laymen a chance! Give your minister a rest!

Dr. John G. Truitt, president of the Southern Convention, announces the regular semi-annual meeting of the Executive Board to be held at Elon College, October 12 and 13.

Did you know? Rev. Thomas Blue Eyes died June 1, 1948, at eighty years of age. Mr. Blue Eyes served our Indian churches in South Dakota for forty-eight years. He was an Indian Scout, and military rites were observed at his funeral.

Rev. J. Everette Neese writes: "Sunday morning, October 3, I read my resignation to the Bay View Congregation to become effective November 1. Needless to say, my association with the Mission Board, the Christian Missionary Association and the people here has been most pleasant and spiritually rewarding. This action severs a tie of cooperation and unity which has existed for seven and one-half years. I have accepted a call to the Second Congregational Christian Church, Norfolk, Va."

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Griffin of Route 4, Reidsville, N. C., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Arie Anne to Bland Allan Leebrick, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Leebrick of Lynchburg, Va. Miss Griffin was graduated from Elon College last spring, where she majored in French and English. She is a member of the faculty of Ruffin High School. Mr. Leebrick is a student at Elon where he is studying for the ministry. He is very active in church work, and is now pastor of Carolina Christian Church, Route 3, Burlington, N. C. The wedding is planned for Christmas Day at New Lebanon Church, Route 4, Reidsville, N. C.

WESTERN N. C. REPORTING.

By F. C. LESTER.

Dr. Frank H. Lewis of Portsmouth, Va., assisted Rev. Weldon T. Madren in special services at Pleasant Ridge Church near Ramseur during the week of September 26.

Union Grove Church, Rev. B. H. Lowdermilk, pastor, has recently put on new siding and ceiling and made other improvements to the building. Plans call for new pews in the near future. The improvements are being paid for as they are made.

Plans are well under way for the Western North Carolina Conference session to be held at Pleasant Union Christian Church, November 10-11, 1948. Committee reports are to be mimeographed and presented the first day so they can be studied by the delegates before a vote is required. A good two-day program is in the making.

Under the leadership of Rev. W. T. Madren the Flint Hill and Sophia Churches are building a parsonage at Sophia, N. C. The framing is now up, and it is hoped that within the next few months the building will be completed, the Madren family moved in, and the churches ready for constructive work with a minister living in the community he serves.

On October 1, 1947, ground was broken for a new church in Asheboro, N. C. On October 5, 1948, a completely departmentalized Sunday school moved into the last of the rooms to be completed. It took just a year to build this modern $50,000 church. Our Asheboro Church is now ready to serve by religious education, recreation and worship. On Sunday of this week Rally Day and World-Wide Communion were observed and several members received. On Tuesday the church entertained the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference.

The Western N. C. ministers held their monthly session at the Asheboro Church on Monday of last week. They favored increasing apportionments to include all the Convention is requesting of the Conference, and the chairman of the Apportionment Committee of the Conference, Rev. B. J. Earp, had the table ready for the ministers to discuss. Dr. F. H. Lewis of Portsmouth, Va., lifted the men into the presence of the Eternal and gave them a new appreciation of the sacred Scriptures by an address that will not be forgotten.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE TO MEET.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will meet with First Congregational Christian Church, Henderson, N. C., October 19-20, 1948. It is requested that those who wish entertainment overnight will notify at once Mrs. Lula Paynter, 214 Turner Ave., Henderson, N. C. Phone 1104JX.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

PARIS MEMORANDUM No. II.

[Prepared by Walter W. Van Kirk, Secretary of the Department of International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Dr. Van Kirk is attending the General Assembly as the accredited observer of the Federal Council of Churches.]

The question of international control of atomic energy will come before the General Assembly when that body receives and acts upon the three reports of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America was among the first of the American non-governmental organizations to recommend that atomic energy be placed under strict international control. Many of the Council's constituent communions have taken similar action. During the past two years the churches have followed with keen interest the deliberations of the Atomic Energy Commission, instituted by the General Assembly in January, 1946.

The Commission, during this period, has sought to make clear the essentials of an acceptable and fool-proof plan for the control of atomic energy. The control plan acceptable to the majority of the Commission includes the ownership and licensing by an International Authority of all mines in any country containing deposits of thorium or uranium, the ownership and operation of all chemical and metallurgical plants for treating key substances, and all facilities capable of producing nuclear fuel as well as wide powers of inspection.

The proposals recommended by the majority of the Commission have been rejected by the Soviet Union as an unwarranted infringement of national sovereignty. It has been the contention of the Soviet Union that a convention outlawing atomic weapons and providing for the destruction of existing weapons must precede any control arrangement. This point of view, in turn, has been rejected by the majority of the Commission.

In its third report to the Security Council (May 17, 1948) the Atomic Energy Commission summarizes its prior efforts to discover ways and means to eliminate the dangers of diversion, clandestine activities and the seizure of atomic materials and facilities. The Security Council had been advised, in earliest reports, that the establishment of an international system of control "require that atomic energy must not be developed on the BREAK GROUND FOR NEW CHURCH.

Saturday afternoon, September 25, 1948, the Ground Breaking Service for a new church, Zion Congregational Christian Church, RFD No. 4, Burlington, N. C., was held. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield is the pastor of Zion Church which was organized April 11, 1948, and plans are under way for beginning construction on the first unit of the church at an early date. The service was presided over by Mr. Crutchfield. The scripture lesson, Psalm 24, was read by Rev. Weldon T. Madren. Presentation of the deed to the property was made to the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, Rev. Kenneth D. Register, president, received the deed with appropriate remarks. Dr. L. E. Smith led the prayer of consecration, Superintendent Wm. T. Scott made a brief address on "Building With Christ," and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Frank H. Lewis of Portsmouth, Va., president of the Eastern Virginia Conference.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

FROM COLUMBUS TO RICHMOND.

The World Mission Assembly is in session this week at Memorial Hall, Columbus, Ohio, Ohio. "One World in Christ" is the theme of the Assembly which brings to Columbus some 3,500 delegates from 66 Protestant denominations. At this meeting, and following it, the Protestant churches of America will present a united front in an appeal for church and public support of a more dynamic Christian program. The blue prints for a more effective witness to Christ's way of life in the world's present chaos and desperation are being formulated.

The plans for this "Advance" in all the denominations grew out of the big concern of the mission boards that their present funds are totally inadequate to meet the tragic needs confronting them in every country in the world. These plans include not only those things best done by separate denominations, each with its own responsibilities, but the strengthening of cooperative programs in such fields as higher education, Christian literature, literacy, wider distribution of the Scriptures, public health, rural service centers and audio-visual work.

The program for Columbus is divided up something like this: The World Community, with speakers like Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, and Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin; The World in Revolution, with vital messages from nationals like Mateo F. Occena, Purchasing Agent in the U. S. A. for the Philippine Republic; Michio Kozaki, Moderator of the Church of Christ in Japan; Kyung Chik Han, Vice-Chairman of the National Christian Council, South Korea; Paul Ramaseshan, Principal of the Church of South India Bible School; John E. Badeau, President of the American University at Cairo; Baez Camargo of Latin-America; Yoshio Higa of Okinawa and Setareki Tuilovoni of Suva, Fiji, in the South Seas.

Other sub-divisions include United Strategy, Partners in Obedience, The Christian Faith and Today's Headlines with such distinguished speakers as Walter H. Judd, Congressman from Minnesota, and former American Board Medical Missionary in China; Dr. Henry Pitney VanDusen, President of Union Theological Seminary; C. W. Ranson, General Secretary of the International Missionary Council; Hilda M. Lazarus, Principal of Vellore Christian Medical College; Paul Harrison, distinguished medical missionary; our own Chief Albert J. Luthuli, Zulu layman and Administrator from South Africa; Kermit Eby of the CIO, discussing Communism; Harold E. Stassen, speaking as a layman and President of the International Council of Religious Education, and others.

The Columbus Assembly will be a springboard for 36 interdenominational meetings in large cities across the country, beginning October 19. Around these will be held denominational meetings. They are an effort to arouse the church membership of all denominations to a sense of urgency and to greater participation in the ongoing world mission of the church. While Columbus will feature the foreign field our Congregational Christian Fellowship is including both home and foreign work under the title, "Our Christian World Mission." Four star-studded teams of speakers will appear in 26 cities to address Congregational Christian meetings. In each city the one big interdenominational rally will have speakers of the first magnitude. In each city Congregational Christian representatives are working on both interdenominational and denominational committees.

Richmond, Virginia, has been designated as one of the 36 key cities where regional interdenominational conferences will be held. Interested people throughout the Southern Convention are invited to meet at our Richmond Church, 3000 Grove Avenue, for our denominational meeting October 21 at 10:30 a. m. There will be a report on the Columbus Assembly at this meeting. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has arranged to have the following speakers: Mr. Hiroshi Hatanka, Dr. Alan Taylor, Rev. Harold Case and Dr. Charles Keith. This great day of missionary emphasis will conclude with the interdenominational mass meeting in First Baptist Church at 8:00 p. m.

AMSTERDAM WITNESSING.

The reading of the documents released by the First Assembly of the World Council of Churches causes a quickening of the spiritual pulse. Here is solid material for prolonged study, meditation, and action. These messages should give new meaning, new horizons and new wings to prayer. Moreover, once our stewardship is geared to the larger vision and program it will have new significance for each of us and will result in a larger impact upon the world. Evangelism and world missions are synonymous in the following paragraphs which seem to be the burden of the Amsterdam message.

"Each Christian group must be conscious of the world-wide fellowship of which it is a part. Each Sunday must remind it as it comes, of the innumerable company throughout the world, who on that day are worshipping the same Lord in the same faith. It can attain to fulness of Christian life only as it accepts its place in the great purpose of God that all men shall be saved, and takes up the responsibility for prayer, service and sacrificial missionary enterprise involved in that acceptance.

"There are parts of the world where the Church is held on under great difficulties, and where its liberty of action is restricted or denied. Its witness is carried out more by suffering than by preaching. Such churches rightly claim that within the fellowship of faith they shall be supported by the prayers and succor of every member of the world-wide Church.

"In other areas, God has set new opportunities before the Church. Millions of people are ready to listen to the Gospel, and are already considering whether it is their only hope. Such areas should be considered the responsibility of the whole Church and not only of those at present engaged in work in them; adequate resources in personnel and money should be made immediately available to the local churches, so that what needs to be done can be done effectively and without delay. The younger churches are crying out for the help of Christian colleagues from the West. Churches older and younger alike call urgently for the dedication of lives to the ordained ministry, and other full-time vocations of service to Christ in His Church.

"As we have studied evangelism in its ecumenical setting we have been burdened by a sense of urgency. We have recaptured something of the spirit of the apostolic age, when the believers 'went everywhere preaching the word.' If the Gospel really is a matter of life and death, it seems intolerable that any human being now in the world should live out his life without ever having the chance to hear or receive it.

"It is not within the power of men to create a new evangelistic movement. But the Holy Spirit is at work. In the past He has from time to time quickened the Church with power from on High. It is our earnest hope and prayer that He will do a mighty work in our day, giving the Church again wisdom and power rightly to proclaim the good news of Jesus Christ to men. We rejoice that the World Council of Churches has included evangelism in its program of development. Already we are seeing signs of renewal and fresh life.

"Now, not tomorrow, is the time to act. God does not wait for us to be perfect; He is willing to use very imperfect instruments. What matters is that the instruments should be available for His use. The results of our efforts are not in our hands, but His. But He has given us the assurance that 'it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful' and where there is faithfulness, He is able 'to do exceedingly abundantly, above all that we ask or think.'"

YOUTH MESSAGE.

"Man's Disorder and God's Design." During the last few months the Study Department has furnished us, not only with the preparatory volumes, but also with summaries of these volumes and brief statements on the four principal subjects—for all of which we are very thankful. Certain significant emphasis emerged from our discussions.

Throughout we kept before our minds the centrality of God's Design, already mightily accomplished in Jesus Christ and appropriated by faith in Him and through the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. So that, although we were brought face to face with the grim disorder of mankind and the immense difficulty of making Christ known to men and accepted by them, we were all the time aware that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. Just because, too, Jesus Christ was the center of our thought we were able to hear His insistent call to be His witnesses in all the world. This sense of assurance in the ultimate victory of God's purposes and of urgency to make them known by life and witness, took far away from us the prevailing despair and apathy of men, whose faith is dim or who are without Christ.

But along with the emphasis on Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour, went our conviction that the Church, which is the agent of His redemptive purpose in the world, was in very urgent need of renewal both in life and thought. We cannot express too strongly how pained we are by the divisions of the churches. At every point in our discussions, whether on the Universal Church, the Church's Witness to God's Design, the Church and the disorder of society or international affairs, we were brought up against the inability of the churches to be clear and authoritative in these matters because of their disunity on the basic issue of the nature of the Church. This was particularly so because we have, in these days, realized together as never before our oneness in Christ. The involvement of the churches in the disorder of society has come to us with a more sharpened sense of penitence than hitherto. We are convinced that the time has come when the churches must speak to each other in love of the stumblingblocks which mar our fellowship and which drive men and women, and especially youth, away from us.

We are also concerned about the general lack of Biblical preaching and teaching in the churches. There was never a time when people were in greater need of God's Word as now, and yet today few people read, let alone listen to, God's message. Nothing but a rediscovery of the Biblical view of life will enable a disordered world to learn and follow God's design.

However, we are sure that men cannot be persuaded to obey God's will unless they see in the churches that that will is for them in their condition and is being gloriously worked out there. The churches must be the center of the living community of persons. This imperative task involves the continued loving witness of Christians in their daily work and intercourse with people. It is here that we young people feel that our vocation lies, and we urge the churches to a far more determined effort to encourage every Christian man and woman to pursue his and her evangelistic task.

We feel strongly that the way to finding new means of coming together as churches is not only through Faith and Order conversations, but most emphatically through corporate evangelistic endeavors. We need, not so much ecumenical understanding as ecumenical obedience. It is not without significance that when some of our Lord's disciples would argue about their place in the Kingdom, He said, "The Son of man has not come to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for man." As we, too, give ourselves utterly to the impelling task of proclaiming the Savior to men, we shall be drawn together by a new unity which will not be of our making, but the gift of our pardoning God. In this respect, as in others, we fear that the Assembly has made too little stress on the constructive experiences of what are called the "younger churches," and we hope that in any future Assembly both the representation and contribution of these churches will be larger and more effectively recognized.

We gave particular attention to the plight of youth in the present disorder of the world. We were forced to lay far more emphasis than the Assembly Commissions thought fit on the breakdown of family life. For we believe that the family is the first training ground in mutual responsibility and understanding, and for the transcendent values of life. Anyhow, the Communists in Russia are at present recognizing the primary place of proper family life for the stability of the classless society. A generation of youth is growing up today with a scanty sense of loyalty and responsibility. Moreover, we are persuaded that the present educational method with its preoccupation with objective research and efficiency has failed to teach standards of values and to encourage responsible thought. The group which discussed "The Church's Witness to God's Design" was very deeply concerned that the evangeliza-

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

You know I have come to thinking that goodwill is one of the greatest things in the world. It is one of the best tonics I know of. To express it, or have it expressed toward me, either way it walks it brightens the path. Since I know that so well from experience I am trying to do more about it.

Some of the happiest moments of anyone's life are those in which one tried to show goodwill in some form of kindly service to another. Goodwill is a commodity one can express to both the rich and the poor, the high and the low, the like and the unlike, and it has a good effect on the one expressing it. In that way it is bigger than charity, because one can not express charity, in the sense of helping with material goods, to the rich—but goodwill shines with just as bright a luster toward the rich as toward the poor and toward poor as toward the rich. Those who seem to need so little often need so much. Goodwill greatly helps to supply that need. And those who seem to need so much if they have goodwill have that which will eventually supply their need.

Goodwill adorns the art of conversation and tills the good soil of friendship before the grass and weeds of common criticism can germinate. To have goodwill toward others—yes, all others—and express it in timely places is “like apples of gold in pictures of silver.” “He is a really fine fellow” has saved the day many times and left no room for regret. “You can count on her doing a good job” are words I have heard many times in many places and they always make me feel good.

The lack of goodwill toward others is the lack of understanding both of that which is best for one's own self and of the good qualities and characteristic of the other person. To have faith in the other fellow's goodwill toward one is to double one's efficiency, and increase one's own happiness. To have goodwill toward others is to build foundations for expanding friendships and it helps to show the door to insomnia. If you know you have goodwill toward everybody else you can trust them to have very little if any ill will toward you. Forget that you have ever suspected ill will in another. He probably has no idea of what you are thinking about. You are wasting your time, increasing your “nerves,” and shortening your breath, if you allow ill will rather than goodwill to find lodging in your soul.

At least once the heavens opened and the angelic host sang for mortal men. Their song had to do with goodwill . . . and peace!

JOHN G. TRUITT.

A LETTER FROM ALABAMA.

DEAR EDITOR:

I desire to speak to the people of the Christian Church just a very short message. I have been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN since my boyhood. It has been to me a great “Rock in a Weary Land.” I still cherish it and am always glad when it arrives. May God bless the editorial staff of the paper and may the subscribers be filled with the spirit of the Lord.

I have been in the ministry for 62 years, and have never been without a field of labor in my church. A few years ago I retired from the active pastorate, but have been preaching regularly since. I have only one regular church and have been very busy preaching funerals and doing other work as I have had opportunity. This is the delight of my heart.

I trust every enterprise of our dear old Church will still go forward in the great work of saving souls and building the Kingdom of our Lord.

God bless the president of Elon College and give him many more years of activity for the work of the institution.

The Christian Orphanage lies very close to my heart. I am always looking to see what C. D. Johnston will do next. God bless him and fill him full of the Holy Spirit in meeting the demands of the needy children of our Church.

Conference will meet soon, and I am anxiously waiting for the time to come—I look with a great deal of faith to everything my Church is trying to do. I am praying that God may give unto us a great annual meeting at Mt. Zion Church in October. May all our reports be a real inspiration to His Holy Church.

Brethren, please pray for me. I am now 79 years old, but still happy in the service of God.

Yours in His Name,

GEORGE D. HUNT.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

basis of national interests and needs, means and resources, but that its planning and operation (must) be made a common enterprise in all its phases.”

It is pointed out in the third report that “the majority of the Commission is fully aware of the impact of its plan on traditional prerogatives of national sovereignty. But in the face of the realities of the problem it sees no alternative to the voluntary sharing by nations of their sovereignty in this field to the extent required by its proposals. It finds no other solution which will meet the facts, prevent international rivalries in this most dangerous field, and fulfill the Commission's terms of reference.”

It was further held that “secrecy in the field of atomic energy is not compatible with lasting international security. Cooperative development and complete dissemination of information alone promise to remove fears and suspicions that nations are conducting secret activities.”

The conclusion is then reached that “The failure to achieve agreement on the international control of atomic energy arises from a situation that is beyond the competence of this Commission. In this situation, the Commission concludes that no useful purpose can be served by carrying on negotiations at the commission level.” Accordingly, the Atomic Energy Commission recommended “that until such time as the General Assembly finds that this situation no longer exists, or until such time as the sponsors of the General Assembly resolution of January, 1946, who are the permanent members of the Atomic Energy Commission, find, through prior consultation, that there exists a basis for agreement on the international control of atomic energy, negotiation in the Atomic Energy Commission be suspended.” It was further recommended that the successive reports of the Commission be transmitted to the Assembly now in session “as a matter of special concern.”

Obviously, the “situation” to which the Commission refers is the lack of a political accord between the Western Powers and the U.S.S.R.

What now? One of two actions, presumably, can be taken by the General Assembly. It can approve the recommendation of the Commission that further negotiations in the Atomic Energy Commission be suspended. On the other hand, the Gen-

ADULT EDUCATION.

Elon College is arranging a curriculum and planning classes for adult people who may be living near the college and are desirous of improving themselves or better fitting themselves for their present positions. What we mean by adult education is to offer the facilities of the college to people who are advanced in years beyond the usual college age. The curriculum will include any of the regular college courses and courses not listed where there is interest and sufficient demand. For instance, courses will be offered in English, Dramatics, Journalism, History, Modern Languages, Bible, Business Administration, Interior Decorating, etc. This project has been duly authorized by the Board of Trustees of the College and the faculty has given its approval. Classes will be held in the afternoon or evening as desired by those enrolled.

At present, we plan to begin this school for adults at the beginning of the second semester which will be the last of January, 1949. In the meantime complete surveys will be made of the surrounding communities to determine who and how many will enter for class work. Courses will be offered with and without college credit. This will afford fine opportunities for in service public school teachers who may want to improve their certificates or advance their rating.

Where possible and advisable the members of our present faculty will be used. No one will be permitted to teach more than one three-hour course beyond his normal teaching load. Charges will be comparable to charges made for courses in the regular college curriculum.

In such a program as outlined, we of the college community feel that we can at least offer the facilities of the college to our neighbors living in nearby communities and thereby extend our field of service and increase our usefulness. There is much interest manifested in this undertaking and we are expecting worthwhile results.

At present we have a very full school. Every classroom is used to capacity and every faculty member has a full load. This is for our regular college courses. These adult classes will come after regular college hours, in late afternoon or in the evening. This will mean that the facilities of the college will be used to capacity from eight o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night. The administration and faculty are committed to this program and are glad to put forth these extra efforts if we may extend the usefulness of our college to the homes of our community and surrounding communities located in Alamance and Guilford Counties. Ample opportunity for information and enrollment will be given.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Usually October is considered the close of the conference year in the majority of our local churches. The Eastern North Carolina Conference meets during October. Payments on conference apportionments for the college will doubtless be made during the month of October. If not, balances will likely be sent to the annual meeting of the conference to which the local church belongs. We had hoped that advanced payments would exceed contributions for the college of any previous year. By reference, however, we discover that we are $216.54 short of total contributions for 1947-48. That is, we have received a total from the churches through the Convention Office on conference apportionments for the college including this report of $6,070.78, just a little under half way of the total.

This is an expression of appreciation of the continued interest and support of the college on the part of our local churches and to urge everyone to raise his conference apportionments in full. In view of the increased cost of living which means the increased cost of administering the college, and in view of the fact that the Convention, at its biennial session in May, this year, voted to increase the apportionments for the college from $12,500 to $15,000, may we appeal to all churches to receive an extra offering for the college before your local church year closes. The college is greatly in need of your cooperation and help.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

eral Asseblly can express its judgment for or against the principles embodied in the majority report of the Commission, and recommend that negotiations be continued either within the Commission itself or at a higher diplomatic level.

It is the unanimous feeling of those representatives of the many American non-governmental organizations with whom I have talked that it would be a fatal blunder for the General Assembly to take the first of those two possible lines of action. Were the Assembly to do this, all efforts to achieve international control of atomic energy would be terminated for the foreseeable future. Such action, in turn, would carry ominous, if not fatal, implications for the control of conventional armaments.

It would be far better for the Assembly to take the second of these proposed actions. Such action could function as a leverage in the further development of world public opinion in support of continued negotiations along such lines as would be recommended by the Assembly.

The latter of these two possible actions is likely to be supported by the United States delegation. Otherwise, the United States would be put in the position of advocating the termination of negotiations in this important field. For the United States to do this would be politically unwise and morally indefensible.

In their consideration of this crucial issue the churches will do well to ponder the words of Trygve Lie, United Nations Secretary-General. Mr. Lie characterized the abortive efforts of the Atomic Energy Commission as "one of the most discouraging aspects of the United Nations during the year under review." He then turned to a phase of the problem too

THE MISSION BOARD MEETING.

The annual meeting of The Mission Board of the Southern Convention, Incorporated, meeting as The Mission Board of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, was held in the new church at Asheboro, North Carolina, September 13, 1948. The setting itself was a rewarding experience to the Board members in that they saw the evidence of a good job well done. For many years there has been a felt need for a thriving church in Asheboro which is the center of nearly a score of Congregational Christian Churches of the Western North Carolina Conference. Through the gifts of our churches and the women of the Convention, and by the sacrificial labors of the Asheboro congregation, this hope has been realized. Today we have a congregation of nearly 100 members, a thriving Sunday school, and a completed church sanctuary which is adequate and lovely. The church and pastor are ministering to the city of Asheboro as well as to the churches of the Western North Carolina Conference.

The members of the Board saw real evidence of the good investment made in building and salary aid at Asheboro, and they were further encouraged by the announcement from the church that the congregation was not requesting salary aid during the coming year but the members of the church would endeavor to carry their own financial responsibilities. The church expressed deep gratitude to the Mission Board and to our national Building Society for the help given them during the past three years.

This experience in Asheboro made the members of the Mission Board realize as never before that the job done at Asheboro could be reproduced in at least a half dozen other places in the Convention if funds and pastors were available. Dr. F. C. Lester and his devoted congregation are to be commended for their great work.

Under the inspiration of "evidence of things seen" the members of the Board gave themselves to prayer and courageous planning for the future. A budget for 1948-49 totaling $62,664.00 was adopted as follows: Home Mission Salary Aid—$14,050; Home Mission Building Aid—$9,950; National Board of Home Missions—$2,500; Operation and Promotion—$5,300; Repayment of Loan and Interest—$5,200; Overseas Service through the American Board (including Shaowu)—$25,664; total—$62,644.

The Home Mission salary aid voted was appropriated to assist Bay View, Carroll County, Chapel Hill, the Dendron (Va.) Pastorate as soon as a full time pastor can be obtained in cooperation with the Eastern Virginia Conference and C.M.A., Elon Community Church, Lynchburg, Sunbury Pastorate, Union (Southampton), twenty churches in the Valley Conference, and Winston-Salem.

The Board also provided salary aid appropriations to the Western and Eastern North Carolina Conferences in the effort of these conferences to form more full time pastorates; appropriations were made for aiding substantially in salary and building in a new work in Burlington (N. C.). Building aid grants were continued in appropriation for Bay View for 1948-49 and will be available when the church is prepared to enter its building program. A parsonage aid grant was made to the High Point (N. C.) Church, and small building grants were made to Asheville and Graham, where renovation and redecorating of the sanctuaries are now under way.

To meet these needs and opportunities, and believing that the churches and the women of the Convention will support this expanded program, the Board voted to borrow, if necessary, up to $10,000 that the work may go forward. Hope was expressed, however, that increased income to missions during the year would make borrowing unnecessary. The Board was one of the strong conviction that we must establish new churches. The reports of organization of a new church (Zion Church) near Glen Raven (N. C.), plans for the new work in Burlington, and hopes for a new work in Eastern Virginia, were received with joy and encouragement.

The members of the Board rejoiced in the generous response our churches made to the relief of our suffering world through C.W.V.R. and urged our churches to give generously in 1948 that the Convention goal of $8,917.49 may be reached for C.W.V.R. by January 15, 1949, when C.W.V.R. completes its work as a special agency of the denomination. The work of C.W.V.R. after that time will continue through the channels of our Home and Foreign Mission Boards.

The gross receipts of the Board for the year closing August 31, 1948, were $51,521.04 but after deducting the balance of $6,265.37 on hand at the end of the 1947 fiscal year and the receipt of a loan of $5,000 during 1947-48, the actual income was $40,255.67. The sources of income were as follows: Churches—$20,306.94 (including $4,064.00 from Reidsville for foreign missions); Sunday schools—$4,866.13; Woman's Missionary Convention—$12,229.17; Young People (most of which came through the Woman's Convention)—$1,127.25; Miscellaneous and Individuals (including balance from 1947)—$7,991.55; Loan for Church Building Aid to Asheboro—$5,000.00. Total—$51,521.04.

The summary of disbursements for 1947-48 is as follows: Home Mission Salary Aid—$8,455.80; Building Aid—$10,050.00; National Board of Home Missions—$1,200.00; Administration and Promotion—$4,818.17; Regular Foreign Missions through the American Board—$9,089.17; Shaowu Mission—$8,770.83; Young People's projects—$688.52; Reidsville project (full support of Rev. and Mrs. Mueller of India and Miss Summer-ville in West Africa)—$4,064.00; Burlington project in India—$315.93; Miscellaneous and specials—$182.58; Balance on hand Aug. 31, 1948—$3,886.01. Total—$51,521.04. Outstanding obligation to be paid in 1948-49 is a loan of $5,000.00 in the Home Mission account.

Dr. H. S. Hardecastle, President of the Board since the death of Col. J. E. West who gave over thirty years in distinguished service to the Board, at his insistence retired as President. Dr. F. C. Lester was elected as his successor. Other officers elected were Vice-President Dr. Will B. O'Neill; Recording Secretary Rev. Joe A. French; Treasurer Miss Dorothy A. Scott; Executive Secretary Rev. Wm. T. Scott.

The Board heard with interest news of the arrival of Timothy Chang of Shaowu, who is now a student at Duke Divinity School preparing himself to return to Shaowu that he may take up his work as a Pastor with Rev. Richard L. Jackson. Timothy's

THANKSGIVING AND THANK OFFERINGS.

By MRS. M. T. GARREN.

As the Thanksgiving season approaches, we naturally think of the Pilgrims who were first to celebrate this occasion in our country. They paused after their first harvest and gave thanks to God for His bountiful blessings. Since that time life in the United States has changed so much that many of us fail to realize how much we have to be thankful for. Sometimes we take for granted such things as the food we eat, the houses in which we live and the churches in which we worship. We go to well-stocked stores to buy our food; our houses are safe and warm; our churches, in many instances, were built through the sacrifices of other people.

There are people in the world today who realize fully what it means to do without many things even as our Pilgrim fathers knew such. The war has changed the lives of millions of people in areas where actual fighting took place; and its effect is far greater and more devastating than on us in the United States. Those who live in the war-ravaged areas do not know where they will get their next meals; their houses, if they have any at all, are cold and dreary; many of their churches are only the ruined walls of what were formerly beautiful places of worship.

When the Pilgrim Fathers prepared their Thanksgiving feast, their feeling of gratitude caused them to think of others. They invited the Indians to participate in their Thanksgiving festivities.

Cannot we, who have so much, do as much as the Pilgrim Fathers did? It is impossible for us to invite the unfortunate people in other countries to come across the oceans to share our food and our material blessings with us; but we can share with them in another way. This opportunity is offered the women of the Southern Convention through our Thank Offering which this year goes to the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction.

The people in the war-torn areas are in desperate need. Our church has already obligated itself to help them. We women make up a large part of the membership of the church. We have fallen short of our obligation thus far. We have only until the end of this year to fulfill our promises. Unless we give generously and sacrificially, we will fail in the task that we have set for ourselves. Let us exert every possible effort to insure the fulfillment of our C.W.V.R. goal. Let us show our willingness to strive for the successful accomplishment of our task by our wholehearted participation in this year's Thank Offering program.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

This time I am writing to the mothers and fathers. The excellent article from the National Kindergarten Association which follows is about story telling. I hope that you parents always read these helpful articles.

For a long time I have been interested in story telling. First as a child who enjoyed stories, then as a teacher who needed to tell stories, and now with a family who listen and say, "Tell it again."

A young mother told me recently that her son's school teacher advised her to read stories aloud to him so that he might become better prepared for reading. This past week there was a syndicated article in the newspapers by a speech teacher who advised parents to improve their speaking and reading ability.

We in the Southland are especially slovenly in our speech, slurring and dropping parts of words. No child can enjoy a story if he can't understand it. Practice speaking correctly to enable your children to speak well. Read stories and poems aloud. Tell stories, write stories. Have your children tell and write stories. Then plan-act your story. Nursery tales and Bible stories are easy to enact. We like the "Three Billy Goats Gruff" with the trip-trap on the troll's bridge and from the Bible we like the one described in the next article—that of the Baby Moses.

Children who are taught to listen soon acquire a large vocabulary. Children who are read to regularly improve in their language ability. All children have imaginations and their little stories (wild though they be) have significance. If the tale is too tall (provided the child is over 5) one may say, "That is an interesting make-believe story, now let me tell you a true one."

Biography and history furnish endless material for stories. Heroes of the Bible and of our country are suitable for 8- to 12-year-olds. Stories of your own early life and neighborhood appeal to them also.

Be a story teller and you will be popular with children. Be a story teller and you will teach your children and win their love and interest.

Method is like peacking things in a box; a good packer will get in half as much again as a bad one.—Cecil.

STORY-TELLING.

By ANNIE L. GAETZ.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Having been a school teacher, I had some ability as a story-teller; but when my children grew old enough to repeat the time-worn request, "Tell me a story," I came to appreciate, as I had not in the past, the character value of a good story well told.

So I searched diligently for stories that were worth telling. I wanted only those that would be thoroughly enjoyed and which, at the same time, would illustrate some helpful truth. I knew that if a story was not interesting, or if it were poorly told, it would not be of much value. A good story is a work of art and exists primarily to be enjoyed. One must love to hear it, not because he seeks from it some special benefit but because it fires his imagination and stirs his feelings. Like a beautiful landscape or a great picture, it must make a strong, personal appeal.

I studied, therefore, to cultivate the story-teller's art. I learned that to tell a story you must really act it out—in change of voice, inflection, in expression of eyes and features, in quiet gestures. By applying myself to the task, I learned also that I must first possess the story in imagination, making it a part of myself. I must possess it logically—grasping its point and holding its details in right relation. I must possess it in feeling, putting my very being into the situation which I want to describe. I found that it was worse than useless to attempt to tell a story that I myself did not appreciate and enjoy.

The story, I discovered, must be reduced to its simplest form and must maintain logical unity and movement. Nothing spoils a story as does the failure to get a particular point in at its rightful place and then going back to supply it. No story-teller should ever be obliged to stop and say, "Oh, I forgot to tell you that—"

The success of the story is not all in the telling; the story itself must be a good one and worth telling. Although the market offers many books of stories for children, it was difficult for me to find stories of the sort I wanted. An occasional fairy tale I considered of value, but I found that most of them did not measure up to what I thought a story ought to convey.

One day I chanced to think back to the stories my mother used to tell and, strange to relate, the only ones which remained in my memory were those from that old-time Book, the Bible. Who can measure the moral value of impressions received through those Bible stories? I came to regard the Bible as a book to be enjoyed. Thinking back over the years, the beauty of those stories appealed to me as no others had, and I began to realize that while I was searching far and wide for appropriate stories to tell my children, I was overlooking the very choicest ones—and they lay near at hand. What story could be more absorbing to the small child than that of the baby Moses! Children naturally love babies, and the part of the sister, Miriam, can be made very appealing. The story provides excellent scope for the imagination, and its character-building values are all that could be desired.

We picture the mother's grief because her babe is to be destroyed by the cruel king. With many tears, the basket is woven and made waterproof. When all is prepared, and the mother dare keep her babe no longer, she takes it to the water's edge, and with one last, loving look she pushes the basket out into the reeds and entrusts its precious burden to the tender care of the Heavenly Father. Not daring to remain near, she leaves her small daughter, Miriam, to keep watch over the basket. When the princess and her escorts come near, how breathlessly the little sister must be watching to learn the fate of Moses. As the princess takes the babe in her arms, the child is overcome with curiosity and draws near. When she sees that the princess looks kindly on the baby, with real diplomacy she suggests that she could go and call a Hebrew woman to be the baby's nurse. Over all, and above all, we picture God's watchfulness over Moses—the same loving care which He has for all His children.

Many other Bible stories are equally appealing to children, afford equal scope for the imagination, and bestow life-long values.

Unfortunately the chief task of those who build churches is to keep down the cost. This is a sardonic commentary on the Old Adam in us, and his unwillingness to give the Lord the best rather than the cheapest. However, it is a condition that we all have to face, much as one may deplore it.

AN INVITATION TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE OF EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA P. F. CON- FERENCE.

Wake Chapel Church will be host for a conference meeting of all young people of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, on Sunday, October 17, 1948. We are very happy to have you come to our church and to be able to have an outstanding event as a part of the Conference. I refer to the team of persons which is touring the South and visiting such meetings. Briefly, the team is composed of Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Secretary of the Missions Council; Dr. Hatanaka, President of Kobe College in Japan; Dr. Alan Taylor, missionary from South Africa; Rev. Stanley U. North, Director of City Work under the Board of Home Missions, and Rev. Harold Case, Director of our Indian Mission in North Dakota. Four of these persons will be presented to the group in the afternoon. This should be an inspiring time of fellowship.

Then, I am glad to report that several newly elected officers of the Pilgrim Fellowship Council will be presenting the adopted program for the young people of the Convention. They were in session at Elon College during the week-end of September 24-25, and many important plans were made which could bring about progress by the youth of the church. Following their panel discussion, a short business session will be held for the purpose of electing Conference officers.

Treats of the evening program will be the excellent missionary film, "Letter from China," and a talk by Dr. Hatanaka.

Here is the program as it is presently planned:

- 2:30 Registration.
- 3:00 Opening Worship.
- 3:15 Panel — Discussing the plans adopted by the P. F. Council.
- Announcements.
- Business Session—Election of officers, etc.
- Panel—Team headed by Pattie Lee Coghill.
- 5:00 Adjournment.
- 5:30 Supper (bring your sandwiches; the church will furnish the drink).
- 6:30 Movie: "Letter from China." Talk by Dr. Hatanaka.
- Closing Worship.

More information will be sent to you from the Convention Office about the completed program. We shall be looking forward to seeing you and the young people from your church at this conference.

YOUTH MESSAGE.

tion of youth was being made extremely difficult for the spiritual demands of life are treated as merely optional. The churches must display even greater vigilance and seek the cooperation of all Christian professors and teachers in this matter. We note, in this connection, the excellent work being done by the World Student Christian Federation.

There can be no doubt that the task of the churches in the evangelization of the young people of this generation is an immense one. We are sure, therefore, that it cannot be attempted by the senior members of the churches without the young people or vice versa. The times demand a forward movement of the whole Church, knowing that the vanguard of the attack must be Christian youth, who, at any rate, are in closest contact with other young people. The vanguard indeed, for we know that behind us are the prayers and guidance of our elders.

When the constitution of the Youth Department was in process of debate here someone stated that youth could be the explosive element in the church. Very true. But we are reminded of the words of a sage Bishop who, when called a "back number," retorted, "Yes, I am a back number. But, remember, you take back numbers to light the fire." In the wintry cold of the present day unfaith, the Pentecostal fire for which the Church is expectant can only come when we actively recognize each other as fellow-witnesses in God's design.

What, then, is the place of youth in the ecumenical movement? Of course, we have already taken an active part in the movement in one form or another, whether in the W.S.C.F., Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A. and other interdenominational societies. And of such leaders of them as Drs. John R. Mott and Visser't Hooft, in the formation of this Council is well known, and we are humbly proud to be inheritors of such a crusading tradition. It is this same spirit of crusade that we are endeavoring to bring to the ecumenical movement. Many of us were delegates to the Second World Conference of Christian Youth at Oslo last year. Some of us have been among the more than 300 young people from many lands who have been in the first eight work camps to be organized by the World Council of Churches through the Youth Department. We value very highly this vital experience of living and working with so many others in common projects of service in distressed areas of various countries, and are making plans for more widespread work of this kind in the coming years.

We are looking forward to planning and holding national, regional and local conferences at which we can convey the reality and the challenge of the Universal Church to ordinary young people in the churches and in other Christian organizations. Then already, we are beginning to organize along with the Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., W.S.C.F., and others, the Third World Conference of Christian Youth in 1952 somewhere, perhaps, in Asia. We sincerely hope that every facility will be afforded the Youth Department to help young Christians throughout the world to a clearer and moving understanding of the World Church. In this respect, we cannot resist the hope that at the next Assembly not only will there be a larger representation of laymen and laywomen, but that young people will be included as delegates as well as guests.

But, in the end, we are brought back to the fact that Pentecost was not only a time of vision. It also brought power to those who had seen God's design. Power—its nature, its use, its manifestation in peace and war, has forced itself upon our thoughts during these days. And if we realized our own impotence, we knew also in penitence that this was caused by our imperfect obedience to the will of God. With you, therefore, we resolve to go forth from here with the vision of the compelling and consuming task before us, and yet with the firm assurance that our sufficiency is of God.

A man may fight fiercely to hold his own in business; but he does not need to fight to get ahead of someone in the elevator, or up the car steps, or at the postoffice window. And no matter how strong competition is, business and personal courtesy make it easier and pleasant for everybody. —William H. Hamby.

LAW IN THE BIBLE.

LESSON III—OCTOBER 17, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind. This is the great and first commandment. And a second is like unto it, You shall love your neighbor as yourself.—Matthew 22:37-39.

LESSON: Leviticus 19:1-18; Deuteronomy 5-6; Matthew 22:34-40.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 19:7-14.

The Law of God.

"I am the Lord your God"—these words appear again and again at the end of the commandments as embodied in today's lesson from Leviticus. There is a divine law. Men did not originate it, men simply discovered it, and announced it. It is written both in the structure of the universe, and in the nature of man himself. But when we speak of law, we do not mean some external thing, or something unrelated to life itself. The law of gravitation, for instance, is simply a known and observed way in which God works through Nature. It is the uniform and predictable way in which natural forces operate. So it is with any and all laws. There are laws in Nature and laws in man. The mind and spirit of man are subject to laws, in this sense. When we speak of the laws of God as recorded in the Bible we mean the observed and known ways in which God works, we mean the results of man's observation and discovery of God's way of working. We usually say that a man breaks God's law, when as a matter of fact a man breaks himself against God's laws. A great poet once said "the Ten Commandments will not budge an inch."

The Law of God Without and Within.

The ideal for man is that God's laws shall be written within the heart. The inner life is to be brought into conformity with the divine will. Obedience is to be based on love and the desire to please, and not upon fear and the hope of reward. And man finds life only as he thus brings his inner as well as his outer life into harmony with the law of God.

Liberty and Law.

Many people, and they are not always the young and immature, think that law interferes with liberty. As a matter of fact there can be no true liberty apart from law. If a man defies the law of gravitation he will fall broken and blasted to the earth. But a man can use the law of gravitation and fly like a bird through the air. Man comes increasingly into liberty as he discovers and works with law. Liberty is not to be confused with license. "Liberty under law" is the ideal of secular government as it is the ideal of spiritual law.

Levitical Laws.

The book of Leviticus is a strange medley of laws and statutes that do not make easy reading or much sense by and large. The major portion of the book is taken up with what scholars call the "Law of Holiness" and is concerned with the details of the priesthood and the law of sacrifice and the ritual and liturgy of the Jewish people. It was a necessary part of the training of that people in the early stages of its history. Much of it, of course, has become outmoded in many ways, especially for Christians for whom Christ is the eternal and final sacrifice for sins. But scattered here and there in Leviticus are laws, gems, real gems of truth that are just as binding and just as mandatory today as ever. In one sense they may seem somewhat elementary to us. But they mark a long advance in the moral and spiritual history of the race. They mark the dawning of the social conscience of man and its gradual development toward the mind that was in Christ Jesus himself. Only a summary can be given here—they should be read in the original.

"Ye shall fear every man, his mother and his father—fear in the sense of honor and respect, how much that means to a happy home and a sane society." And keep my sabbath—modern people have well nigh forgotten the Sabbath Day to keep it holy. "Turn ye not to idols, nor make to yourselves molten gods"—it all seems so out of date. But after all modern man with all his knowledge and sophistication has his idols and he bows down and worships them, the gods of pleasure and money and power and social approval, and self-indulgence, and secularism and materialism, and what have you, to say nothing of style and appetite and passion.

And there was the law of the gleanings of the harvest—something should be left in the corners of the field, and over the field, both as a means of feeding the poor, and also as an antidote against selfishness and covetousness on the part of the owner. Here was the dawn and the development of a concern for others, of what is now known as charity and social service.

"Ye shall not steal, nor deal falsely, neither lie to one another, nor defraud thy neighbor, nor curse the deaf, nor put a stumbling block in the way of the blind, or show favoritism in judgment"—here is a recognition even in that early day, that men do not live to themselves, that social life to be safe and sound must be built upon personal integrity and a sense of social responsibility, that persons count, that property and person are sacred, that those who are strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak, that power constitutes a sacred responsibility, that men are supposed to be equal both before God and before the law. There it is, written deep into the heart of the universe, the divine way of doing things and the only way in which life ultimately will work.

"Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among the people." Of all things, even in that far off day, in the dawn of the moral consciousness of the race in a way, the inspired man of God saw the blasting blighting effects of gossip and tale-telling, and saw that it was a violation of the divine will. That law is still on the books, it has not been repealed. But its violation ruins life and breaks homes and causes untold misery and even disaster.

Teaching Children High Traditions.

"And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." A man of inspired insight said that, but it does not take a man of inspired insight to see the wisdom of, and need for, that. The moral and spiritual traditions and discoveries and laws of God and of life need to be taught to every new generation. The secret of the resiliency of the Jewish race as a race is to be found in large part in the care which they have taken to teach their children "these things." The Protestant Church is neglecting the teaching of religion in the home and somewhere else, at its peril. Children need to be taught the great truths by which men live at their best and without which they cannot live in any satisfying way.

And Explaining Them.

"What mean the testimonies, and the statutes and the ordinances, etc.?" Can you as a parent explain to your children the great heritage of the Christian faith? Can you make clear to the members of your Sunday school class the meaning of the things most surely believed among us? The new day may demand a new language. Old truths must be put into new words. But they must be kept in the heart of the race through the teaching of every new generation.

THE MISSION BOARD MEETING.

training in this country is made possible by the Life Membership and Memorials funds of the Woman's Missionary Convention. Timothy is a fine Christian young man and our people will like him. As soon as he gets himself adjusted in his studies it is our hope that he may visit many of our churches. He will be available for extensive visits and service during the summer of 1949. If the readers of THE SUN and friends of the Mission Board would like to write him he would be pleased to hear from them. He should be addressed: Mr. Timothy Chang, Box 5027, Duke Station, Durham, North Carolina.

Your Mission Board earnestly solicits your prayers and gifts that the great cause of Christian Missions at home and abroad may go forward through our Convention.

The members of the Board present for the meeting in Asheboro were: Dr. H. S. Hardcastle, Dr. Will B. O'Neill, Mrs. O. H. Paris, Mr. A. H. McIver, Rev. W. J. Andes, Rev. Joe A. French, Mr. Roy A. Larrick, Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Executive Secretary, and Dr. F. C. Lester. The members of the Board enjoyed the delicious supper and fellowship hour provided by members of the Asheboro Church in the church dining room.

NEWS FROM LOCAL SOCIETIES.
HENDERSON.
In bringing to an end the year's work the Missionary Society of Henderson feels that it is closing one of its most successful years. In starting the year the Society was divided into three circles instead of two. In doing this the circles worked harder to get more women of the church working in the Society.

During the past year the Society had charge of two Sunday night services. The thank offering service being held during the winter. Then in the early summer a service was held to turn in the cent-a-meal boxes. The best response was given to this than has ever been given.

The June general meeting was in the form of a covered dish supper. At this meeting we had a large number of honorary members present. After supper Mrs. John Mundy, a friend of the Society, gave a very interesting review of our study books.

All of our circles completed the Bible study and our study books. Each member has received a lot of good and pleasure in working up our friendly service boxes. For Christmas we sent a box to the Johnsons. Then at Easter we fixed a box for the Orphanage. Our box for Japan was worked in our Sunday school through the children. All the little tots got a great thrill out of bringing something for "a child across the sea." In our church we have a lovely German war bride, so each circle has worked up a box of things to send to her family and friends in her home town.

Each of us feels that in our small way we have done much good.

BETHLEHEM.
The ladies of the Bethlehem Christian Church Home and Foreign Missionary Society, wish to submit the following report for the past year's work.

First, we are very happy to have accomplished all of the achievement goals to be a Superior Society, under the capable leadership of Mrs. T. H. Dilday as president.

The World Community Day and World Day of Prayer were both observed in cooperation with Cypress Chapel Christian, Providence Methodist and Western Branch Baptist churches.

Our Thanksgiving program was presented under the leadership of Mrs. R. O. Luter, with all three of our circles and young people juniors having a part. There has been a splendid feeling of cooperation as shown in these various meetings when they have a chance to meet together for one purpose.

For our Thank Offering, it was unanimously voted to send the money to Rev. and Mrs. R. L. Jackson in Shaowu, China, which amounted to

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

It seems that some did not understand the letter I wrote to the Superintendents of Sunday schools that had made no contribution to the orphanage this year, 1948.

The orphanage year runs with the calendar year, January 1 to December 31. When we make up our annual report to the Board of Trustees it includes all offerings from January 1 to December 31. We do not run with the conference year. All offerings from January 1 to December 31 will be included in my annual report for this year, 1948. In making this statement in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of last week I meant it for the calendar year, beginning January 1 up to the present day which was September 15, 1948. I hope this will clear up the misunderstanding if there has been any.

In the financial report to the Convention which was held at Liberty (Vance) Church, on pages 46-47 of the "Proceedings" the following extracts are found:

- 5. A special offering for Missions at Easter, a special Thanksgiving offering for the Orphanage, a special Christmas offering for Superannuation, a special offering for Elon College during the college period.
- 6. We recommend the continuance of the present plan of regular monthly offerings for Missions and the Orphanage, and the Fifth Sunday Offering for Elon College to be taken by the Sunday schools; said funds to be forwarded through the designated channels credited on the respective Conference Apportionments.
- 7. We recommend that the Orphanage, the Mission Board and Elon College be authorized to make appeals for contributions, each during the period herein designated as follows: Elon College—January, February and September; Missions—March, April, May and June; Orphanage—October, November and December; that Communion Offerings may be received for Superannuation; and that at Christmas a special offering may be taken for the "Christmas Fund for the Veterans of the Cross."

I quote you these items to make you more familiar with the resolutions of the Convention.

October is the first month of the orphanage period. Our goal for the year is fifty thousand dollars, twenty-five thousand from the churches and twenty-five thousand from special gifts.

North Carolina has twenty-seven orphanages that are taking care of something like four thousand orphans and dependent children. They are all doing a fine job. Their people support them well. I happened to get hold of an orphanage paper in which the annual report of the superintendent appeared for the year ending August, 1948. This is a small denomination, the orphanage the same size of the Christian Orphanage and has about the same number of children as the Christian Orphanage. But I notice his people sent him last year the sum of $88,890.56 to care for his group of children. They love their superintendent and show it by their gifts to support it.

The late Mr. J. M. Darden paid the writer a very fine compliment in a Board meeting on one occasion. After I had read my annual report as to the income and expenses he looked at me and said: "You can stretch a dollar farther than any one I know." But friends, with my thirty-two years in stretching dollars, and I have always had to do it, I have not yet learned to stretch $7,248.67 far enough to care for eighty children for nine months. I have come to the conclusion that it just can't be done. If you love your orphanage show it by your gifts during the orphanage period.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

little understood by the churches. "The prolonged debate on the control of atomic energy," said Mr. Lie, "and the demonstrations of the tremendously destructive power of atomic weapons that the United States has given to the world have distracted attention from developments in the field of bacteriological and lethal-chemical weapons. Whatever the situation regarding atomic weapons may have been or still may be, there has never been any effective monopoly of bacteriological and chemical weapons. Some of these weapons are probably potentially as destructive of human life as atomic weapons but not a single proposal has been made by any of the member nations for any system of preventing or controlling their manufacture, nor has there been any discussion or study of the problem by the United Nations. Meanwhile, it is not too much to assume that, as in the case of atomic bombs, stocks of these weapons are piling up and that new discoveries are constantly being made that render them more deadly.

"Nevertheless, all members of the United Nations, including the Great Powers, remain bound by their solemn pledge, made at the first session of the General Assembly almost two years ago, to eliminate all weapons of mass destruction and to reduce and regulate other armaments and, as an essential step to this end, to establish effective systems of international control, which will provide practical and effective safeguards, by way of inspection and other means, against the hazards of violations and evasions."

We frankly admit that when we are offered some work that will increase our personal income, we make a quick calculation of the tax involved.

In Memoriam

BYRD.

On June 19, 1948, Mrs. Texanna Wright Byrd passed away. In her life and character, Mrs. Byrd illustrated the highest Christian virtues of the old school. Quiet, unassuming, humble, yet firm and steadfast in her devotion to Christian principles and practices at all time. Mrs. Byrd pursued the even tenor of her way throughout her long life in such a way that her influence for good will go on for many generations to come. Mrs. Byrd was the oldest member of Bethlehem Christian Church. If she had lived until July 22, 1948, she would have been ninety years of age.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in her death the church and its members suffer the loss of a sincere friend and member who was faithful and zealous in the work of her church.

2. That the members tender their sincere sympathy to the family in the passing of their mother.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the church records and that copies be sent to "The Christian Sun" and the family of the late Mrs. Texanna Wright Byrd.

Mrs. ANNIE SMITH,
Mrs. TOM POOLE,
Mrs. J. E. HARRIS,
Committee.

$55.00. Five dollars was sent to Japan and $20.00 to Franklinton Institute; $20.00 to Religious Education Fund; $10.00 to Cancer Drive; $10.00 to T. B. Drive and $5.00 to Red Cross Drive. Several gift packages and $10.00 were sent to the Rev. and Mrs. R. L. Jackson, in addition to the Thank Offering money. Packages of clothing were also sent to Elon Orphanage; 28 packages were sent to Europe for relief. The W. W. Staley Circle donated $53.65 to the building fund of the church. A sum of $177.00 has been paid as our apportionment for the year.

A large percentage of our members have been subscribers and leaders of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Several take the Missionary Herald, The Church Woman and Advance.

We have always had a good representation from our church to attend the Rallies and Conferences, besides delegates that are elected.

Our Woman's Missionary Society has gained 13 new members this year, making a total of 81 on roll.

Two Memorials were given this year, one of them in memory of our eldest member, who was a charter member, Mrs. W. H. Byrd. The other Memorial was given in memory of William Thomas Tadlock, who gave his life in the services of his country in the Pacific Theatre. Six Life Memberships were given this year to the following members: Mrs. L. E. Whitehead, Mrs. Ernest Oliver, Mrs. C. F. Savage, Mrs. Claude Eure, Mrs. H. L. Joyner and Mrs. Harry F. Schadel.

Our church is greatly interested in securing a visual aid outfit, especially after having seen the picture, "The Missing Christian," shown by Rev. John W. Baggett in our church during the summer. The most outstanding event during the year has already had a write-up in this column, after we had our "Family Life Night," which was observed for the first time this year, and we're looking forward to another one under the leadership of Mrs. R. E. Brittle for next year.

Our study book, Committed Unto Us, was reviewed by Miss Evelyn Moore in a most delightful manner. We were very happy to have one of our own young people who is so capable. Miss Moore is an Elon student. We were also happy to have the Cypress Chapel ladies to meet with us for this occasion.

Besides all the things mentioned, we have not neglected sending flowers, gifts and cards to the sick and shut-in in the community.

We feel very grateful to our members and all parties interested in promoting missionary work who have helped in any way to make this year's work the most successful year, and last but not least—we thank our Master, who has given us the strength and courage and wisdom and the opportunity to help carry on the work that Christ left for us to do.

Mrs. HARRY F. SCHADEL,
Secretary.

RICHMOND FELLOWSHIP.

The women of the Richmond Church have come to the close of the year's work, having met all of our stated obligations to the conference, and having had a considerable share in meeting a number of local needs.

We have had regular and well-planned meetings, using the excellent material in the packet. The study book was reviewed rather comprehensively in two sessions. Its vital message was also dispensed in smaller doses at meetings of various other groups. So we feel that the tremendous need of evangelism was brought to the attention of a good portion of our people.

Perhaps the outstanding event on our calendar was the Spring Rally which was held at our church. We were happy to have all that came. Mrs. Brown, of our church, was elected the superintendent of our district. We are looking forward to the fall meeting and hope to be well represented.

We are very proud of Mrs. House's election as president of the Richmond Council of Church Women, to serve during the next two years.

As we begin a new year's work we are conscious of the critical days in which we live. We call upon our women to come and renew themselves in an intelligent study of the task ahead.

Mrs. L. L. BOND,
Reporter.

WINSTON-SALEM.

Officers of the Winston-Salem Woman's Association were installed at the Sunday morning church service on September 26. A very effective service, written by Mrs. W. E. Wiseman, and published in Guide Posts (May-June, 1948) was used.

The following officers were installed by Rev. W. J. Andes, pastor of the church: Miss Ruth Willis, president; Mrs. W. L. Padgett, vice-president; Mrs. George Clancy, secretary; Mrs. Coy J. Nelson, assistant secretary; Miss Bobbie Jean Kimball, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Arabelle Kimball, treasurer; Miss Agnese Willis, friendly service; Mrs. E. M. Whitman and Mrs. W. J. Andes, co-chairmen of program.

These new officers will take up their duties at the first meeting in October. Meetings are held in homes of the members on the first Monday evening in the month. All women members of the church are counted as members of the Woman's Association, and are expected to attending the meetings.

Hold yourself responsible for a higher standard than anybody else expects of you. Never excuse yourself. Never pity yourself. Be a hard master to yourself—and be lenient to everybody else.—Beecher.

Youth and the Amsterdam Assembly

We, the Youth Delegation, welcome warmly this opportunity of expressing our deep gratitude for the privilege given us to take an active part in the First Assembly of the World Council of Churches. We represent many thousands of young people who are seeking in loyalty to Christ to serve the Church in the world, and who, during the last year or two, have been giving much prayer and thought to the Assembly. Indeed, we can claim to be a really representative group. There are 100 of us who come from 48 different countries and who belong to a very wide variety of confessions. Further, there is a fair balance of sexes and callings among us which indicates more nearly the actual situation in the churches from which we come. We have lived and eaten together in the same place during these days and have realized the depth of our fellowship in Christ and with each other.

The Youth Delegation has been in session since August 20, and has spent much time, under the guidance of our Chairmen and Secretaries, in discussing the place of the Youth Department within the World Council of Churches. But, in the main, the work of the Assembly has engaged our keen attention.

One of our first acts, on assembling together, was to read again the story of the first Pentecost. There we were reminded of the prophecy of Joel: "In the last days, saith the Lord, I shall pour forth my Spirit upon all flesh; your son and daughters shall prophecy; your young men shall see visions and your old men dream dreams." In these words we read the promise of God to us all even as we waited upon Him in prayer and listened to His challenge to proclaim salvation to mankind. God has called us to another Pentecost here, not as spectacular perhaps as the first outpouring of His Spirit, but no less real and powerful. We young people have, throughout this Assembly, been waiting upon God and have not ceased to make intercession on your behalf that God may use both you and us in His great design for His Church in His world.

We want, therefore, to assure you that even though we have been aware of the rather considerable difference in years and experience between you, the fathers, and ourselves, we have nevertheless felt our oneness with you in the same Lord and in the same task. Your dreams and our visions find their source and centre in the one Holy Spirit who unites us in our diversities and who gives to us that humble love and obedience, which was the very character of Jesus Christ, our God and Saviour.

May I say, in passing, how much we deplore the statement which appeared in the "New York Tribute" of September 1, in the name of one of our delegates to the effect that the Council was "getting too much bogged down in theory instead of practically promoting the Ecumenical Christian movement. . . ." That statement was never made in that way. We are very distressed by the unfortunate impression left by the Press in this matter. Again, we desire to state very clearly that we are not here to raise the old bogey of youth and age. We are called here, young and old together, to listen to God's Word and do it.

But besides the refreshing experience of living with each other, we have found a new vision of thought and understanding. Like you, we have had some sessions on the main theme of the Assembly, (Continued on page 5.)

VOLUME C.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1948.

"Christian Education FIRST and ALWAYS at Elon College"

VISION

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

"Where there is vision the people live"

MORE THAN a half century ago our church fathers had a vision. Their church was young, small, and lacking in trained leadership. They saw the scriptural cause for its existence. The freedom in Christ, the liberty of conscience, and the unity of God's people added brilliancy to their vision and multiplied their passion for their church and the coming of God's Kingdom through their church. But even vision, however clear and convincing, was dependent upon more than mere personality for translation into reality. Personality, however winsome, great in ability, or rich in talents, must be conversant with the past, familiar with the present, and able to discern something of the requirements of the future if it is to make its contribution to the present and the future.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING

Our church fathers saw not only the opportunity and how to take advantage of that opportunity but they also saw the necessary means for achievement. A trained leadership for pulpit and pew would be required. The principles upon which they founded their church were different—new for their day. It was to be a free church with no restrictions save those determined by the word of God. It was to have liberty within the spirit. To make sure of a leadership for the new church, the church must have a share in its training. They had no college, no institutions of higher learning. Under the inspiring leadership of W. B. Wellons, W. S. Long, W. W. Staley, and many others, Elon College was founded. A faculty was employed and the training of young men and young women of the church, by the church, and for the church was begun.

For more than a half century a continuous program of training under moral and religious influence with the Christian emphasis has been and is being conducted on the campus of Elon College. The church founded the college and the church has been its mainstay and support through the years. The going has been hard at times but it has always managed to keep its doors open and its faculty on duty.

The college has grown and today it is fully accredited and known widely in educational circles. Its buildings, equipment, faculty, and student body are superior to any previous year. We compare favorably with the average small church college, but we have come to a day of unprecedented advancement in the field of higher education. Other colleges are expanding more rapidly, are receiving more money for buildings, equipment, and endowment than ever before. If Elon College, our college, is to keep pace and hold its position in this advancing program of education, its facilities must be increased. The Southern Convention was aware of this fact when it authorized the establishment of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education at Elon College and called upon the church to provide $100,000 for this purpose.

News Flashes

Representative J. Vaughan Gary will be the guest speaker at our Richmond Church on Laymen's Sunday.

Rev. Wayne Womer, executive director of the Virginia Temperance Council, will be the speaker at the Eastern Virginia Ministers Meeting in Suffolk on Monday of next week.

Since this issue is devoted largely to Elon College and the observance of Laymen's Sunday, a fuller report on the Foreign Missions Assembly at Columbus will be given in our next issue.

THE EDITOR AT COLUMBUS.

These lines are written at 805 Berkeley Road, Columbus, Ohio, the home of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Jackson, the home which gave a minister to the Southern Convention and a missionary to China. Sometimes we forget that missionaries have parents. We sing the hymn, "Give of thy sons to bear the message glorious," but we have never been called upon to make the supreme gift. We simply give a few dollars "to speed them on their way." The parents of missionaries are indirectly if not directly responsible for the great company of expendable Christians. God bless them all!

One cannot but reflect on the way God is able to extend the blessed influence of one home half around the world, of the spiritual chain reaction which is set in motion, of the ever-widening circle of friends who now share the vision and the responsibility for Shaowu. How true are the ancient words, "Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord."

It is a great joy to be in this home, to share its spirit and hospitality, to get the latest news and see the many pictures of our Shaowu friends. The editor is grateful for the privilege of staying in this missionary home as well as that of representing the Mission Board of the Southern Convention at this great missionary meeting in Columbus. Incidentally, if all the three thousand delegates at this vast Assembly could stay in Christian homes rather than in hotels, the Assembly would make a greater spiritual impact on the city of Columbus and thousands of dollars would be saved for missions.

DR. HATANAKA TO SPEAK AT MISSIONS CONFERENCE IN RICHMOND.

CONFERENCE ON MISSIONS TO BE HELD IN RICHMOND.

On October 21, people throughout the Convention are invited to the First Congregational Christian Church in Richmond for a one-day conference on Missions. Reports will be heard of the Foreign Missions Conference at Columbus, Ohio. The Foreign Mission Program of Advance for our denomination will be explained. The meeting begins at 10:30.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill is in charge of speakers and secured the cream of our denominational talent: President Hatanaka of Kobe College; Dr. Alan B. Taylor of Africa (M.D.); Harold Case, Congregational missionary to the Indians; and Charles Keith of Boston. Richmond was selected as one of 36 key cities where regional meetings will be held. Bring along sandwiches, and coffee will be served. A great mass meeting of all denominations will be held at 8:00 p. m. on the same day at First Baptist Church.

REV. HAROLD W. CASE IS MISSIONS CONFERENCE SPEAKER.

Rev. Harold W. Case of Fort Berthold, Indian Reservation, Elbowoods, North Dakota, went 21 years ago to stay a year with the Gros Ventre, Ree and Mandan Indians. He is still there. Why he stayed and what has been done in the intervening years is a fascinating story which Mr. Case will tell when he speaks at the Richmond Mission Conference, October 21.

A firm friend and advocate of the rights of the Indians, Mr. Case is equally concerned about teaching them their civic responsibilities as well as their rights. His duties demand that he be not only a bit of a sociologist, teacher, farmer and civic adviser but an itinerant pastor-at-large. He uses a saddle horse to cover some of the wide open spaces which he must travel in the line of duty.

Working to create harmonious relations between the three tribes, seeking to bridge the gap between the old and new in parent-child relationships, Mr. Case daily finds a multitude of problems facing himself and his associates. They try to reach the youth of the area and to conserve the spiritual values of the old Indian religion while cleansing it of detrimental pagan customs.

The Mission Farm teaches through its own example. As a matter of fact, Mr. Case affirms, it is not much better equipped than the Indian farms but by the use of scientific information and industry, it surpasses the aver-

The Department of Christian Education at Elon College

By DR. FERRIS E. REYNOLDS.

What does the term Christian education suggest? When the term is mentioned one naturally thinks of the Bible. For certainly the Bible, with its wealth of religious insights and teachings, its power to inspire and to lift, its unforgettable personalities and portraits of Jesus, constitutes the basic material for Christian education. In that sense, Christian education must always be Bible-centered. Yet, those who have observed something of the teaching genius of our Lord have become aware that there is far more to effective Christian teaching than simply the reciting of textual material. The scribes and pharisees taught the letter of the Law in this impersonal fashion. In contrast to their manner, Jesus taught with the special authority of one who knew how to plant the seeds of truth in such a way that they would grow and bring forth fruit. He related the truth of God to life and experience in a personal way. His words pulsed with the heart-beat of living creatures. By bringing His message within the province of personal motivation, His teaching wrought changes in the whole manner of men's living.

Those seeking to lead in Christian education have always this ideal of the Teacher of Galilee to guide and inspire them. His excellence as a Sower of Seeds contrives both to encourage and to humble all who dare to give themselves to that exciting vocation. His manner of teaching makes clear the general objectives of Christian education in all of its departments. It is the task of those who would teach the Christian religion to bring the content of the Bible into the focus at the growing edge of personal experience in such a way that its truth will beget newness of life. To such a program the Department of Christian Education at Elon College has been and is now committed.

Who would be willing to assert that the ideal of the Master Teacher has been realized in our college or in our churches? The largest conceivable room is the room for improvement. Within this large room for improvement it is necessary to maintain a kind of laboratory for the purpose of testing and developing the best methods of Christian teaching for our college and for our churches. What are the best ways of planting and nurturing the seeds of God's Word in the lives of young people? Where is the growing edge of personal experience in each of the phases of a young person's development? How can the supreme values of the Kingdom of God be made the values by which our people live? And how can the content of the Bible be focused so as to produce the fruits of Christian living? Questions like these can be relied upon to save us from the pitfalls of shallow pharisaism. They will guard us against presumption and complacency. By building a bridge between theory and practice, the very presence of such questions help us to keep Christian teaching in terms of the issues of life.

For more than a half a century, Elon College has been out in front in this work of Christian education. There is reason to be proud of the pioneering that has been carried on by faculty and students in this important field. Is there any reason why this position of leadership in Christian education can not be maintained and even extended? The opportunities are greater than they have ever been and the needs are more urgent. With continued support from the churches, in prayers, interests and substance, this historic role as Leader in Christian Education can be carried on. To this high purpose the members of the Department of Christian Education at Elon College dedicate themselves.

THE DEPARTMENT OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AND THE STUDENT BODY.

By DEAN D. J. BOWDEN.

With an enrollment of 800 students, the Department of Christian Education has many responsibilities. All students are required to have a course in Bible before graduation and it is customary for them to take it during their freshman year. This means that we have at present a total of more than 250 students in freshman Bible classes. In addition to this, the Department offers advanced courses in Bible, Principles of Christian Education, Philosophy of Religion, and Greek, making a total of more than 425 students taking courses in the Department of Religion.

Aside from the academic work of the Department, the College offers regular chapel services during the week which are under the supervision of Dr. F. E. Reynolds, Chairman of the Department. Sunday school and church attendance is required of all dormitory students. In addition to

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

ELON AND CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

The world needs Christian education. Imperiled by secularism and communism, a tottering world needs the stabilizing influence of an intelligent faith. Civilization stands as long as it is buttressed by a living faith. The unanimous testimony of the missionaries in every land is that we need more and better Christian education.

The Church needs Christian education. No one person can do all the preaching and teaching required in the modern church. The high potential church will never be realized by the mere erection of buildings or growth in membership. More pupils and better equipment are desirable, but better teaching is imperative. A number of our churches have looked far and wide for professional leadership in this field, but they have looked in vain. Other churches are capable of adding assistants, but may not be conscious of the need. It has been stated that the Evangelical and Reformed Church has made rapid progress in the training and placing of young men and women for full time Christian service; that a church with 500 members is considered able to maintain a minister and a director of religious education. This idea or ideal should permeate more of our churches.

The successful completion of the campaign to establish the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation will greatly strengthen the weak knees of Christian education in our ranks. The field for full time Christian service must be greatly expanded. Churches must have capable assistance in the realization of their latent possibilities. Elon is our principal fulcrum to lift the standard of Christian education throughout the Convention.

Let every church have a part in bringing this campaign to a happy and successful conclusion. Visualize the results of our united efforts now and in the years to come. We rejoice in the fine program of religious training now in operation at Elon. The needs of the Church and the world are such that we dare not default in our high task of Christian education.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION BEGINS AT HOME.

The game of baseball has been called the "national pastime" in America. As a means of releasing pent-up energy baseball has few equals. Anyone who has observed the fan-reaction to an umpire's error or a grand-slam home run knows to what extent audience participation is an integral part of the game of the diamond.

However, there is another "national pastime" of men and women both within the church as well as without, which is less than desirable. It is the criticism leveled at the church especially in the field of religious education. To the critic, the Church has failed to educate the young people of our society through improper teaching materials and methods. A survey of the results of religious education upon the thinking of young people seems to bear out the criticism.

In a spirit of Christian humility the Church stands ready to admit her shortcomings. In the past the content of religious education has failed to take into consideration the changing needs of the growing child. Likewise, at times the materials have lacked the unity and continuity necessary to keep the attention of the pupils.

The Church recognizes her fallibility and she is endeavoring, in the light of the criticism, to revise the material so that it will meet the needs of both pupils and teacher. The "Pilgrim Series" is the first answer to the critics. The Division of Christian Education of the Congregational Christian Churches is busily engaged in developing new and better film-strips, slides and other visual aids to enable the teachers in our Church Schools to teach more effectively the great truths of the Christian faith. The Department of Radio has produced many fine recordings suitable for use in our Church Schools, dealing with the Bible and with religion in life situations. "The Radio Edition of the Bible" and "All Aboard for Adventure" are but two of the many products in the field of audio education. If the Church fails in her task of religious education it will not be from the lack of materials and aids available.

The Church has suffered silently under the blows of criticism but now the Church would confront the critics with another failure which lies within the homes of those who criticize. To what extent has the home accepted its responsibility for the religious education of young people? Religious education begins at home!

The forces that play upon the lives of young people are many and varied. In terms of hours, during the growing years of childhood the school commands a major portion of the day. The institution of the home is next in importance. In the life of the child during the waking hours, the home assumes responsibility for that time when the child returns from school till he retires in the evening. On Sunday morning, for an hour or less, the Church is responsible for the religious instruction of the child. It cannot undertake to provide adequate religious instruction in one brief hour each week. Cooperation must come from the home.

The shift of responsibility for religious instruction from the home to the church is of recent origin. The Sunday School was never intended to be a substitute for the home in the field of religious instruction. It was organized as a supplement to the home, whereby the child could receive additional instruction. That original intention must be restored if the situation in the field of religious education is to be improved.

The Church does not delight in criticism. Her concern is above that of petty bickering. She is aware that only in the spirit of unity and cooperation between the Church and the home can religion meet the onslaughts of a secular culture, and a Godless society. The Church stands ready to do her part. Will the home answer the challenge?

WILLIAM WESLEY STALEY

I KNEW DR. W. W. STALEY.

By DR. I. W. JOHNSON.

My first close acquaintance with Dr. Staley began in December, 1898. At that time I moved to Suffolk and had room and board at the "Beale House" where he and I ate at the same table for two and one-half years. He invited me to use his library, at my own convenience, and this brought us together as students of the Bible, and gave us opportunity to talk much about sermons and other duties of a minister. After my marriage, my wife and I invited him to occupy a room in our home. He accepted this offer for a period of about three years. We spent much time together in his study. I attended his Wednesday night prayer meetings for twenty years or more, and frequently heard him preach on Sunday night.

From 1898 until his death in 1932 I shared his fellowship and friendship. At the time of his death I probably knew more about his personal affairs than any living member of his family. Forty years of close association with him greatly enriched my life, in a personal way, and influenced my work as a minister. We compared sketches of sermons and freely made suggestions as to ways of improving them. He was the best ministerial friend I have ever known. No minister in the Southern Convention, during my lifetime, has surpassed him in spiritual insight, profound thinking, unaffected friendship, denominational loyalty, unselfish objectives, diligent study, financial sagacity, progressive planning and sacrificial service.

My intimate knowledge of this man of God should make it possible for me to suggest some reasons why the proposal to raise a $100,000.00 Memorial Fund in honor of Drs. Staley, Atkinson and Newman should be speedily completed. These three men deserve

JAMES OSCAR ATKINSON

I KNEW DR. ATKINSON.

By MRS. W. E. WISSEMAN.

I knew Dr. Atkinson first when I was a child. I remember him coming on special occasions to the church of which my father was the pastor. And I remember that even if it were not a special occasion, still his very presence would make it so. For even as a child I realized that Dr. Atkinson was very special. His gracious manner, his kindly interest, his pleasing personality won the hearts of the children as well as the adults of the church. They recognized in him a friend.

I think I realized too, when I was still a child, that Dr. Atkinson was one of the spiritual leaders of our church. The occasion which I remember best was the time of the dedication of our new church. He was the one chosen to come and speak. And although I do not remember anything he said and I have remembered all these years that he spoke for one hour and five minutes (!), in spite of my restlessness until he was through, I was impressed with his spiritual zeal and his religious fervor.

I knew Dr. Atkinson, too, while I was a student at Elon. I can see him now in my imagination walking across the campus to his office. Always smiling, always interested in the students. His gift of oratory caught the imagination of the students. I can remember how he inspired me to want to go forth to serve—at home or abroad. His interest in missions appealed to me, too, and I felt there was a common bond between us. When I went to Arizona to spend a year working with the Indians, he it was who came the Sunday before I left to lead in the commissioning service.

I knew Dr. Atkinson, too, in the evening of his life. No longer did he travel so extensively to the churches which he loved. But like Paul of

JOHN URQUHART NEWMAN

I KNEW DR. NEWMAN.

By DR. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

During my four years at Elon College I had many contacts with Dr. Newman, both in and out of the classroom, both in formal and informal ways. I had classes under him every term or semester during my four years of college life. I spent much time with him in informal conversation and in conferences on personal problems. I came to know him, to know him well, to know him in what might be fairly called, an intimate way. And whenever I returned to the College after my graduation, I always called upon him to express to him my appreciation of his contribution to my life, and to find new inspiration for my work. It is out of this long friendship and this intimate knowledge that I write this all too inadequate tribute to him.

Dr. Newman was a gentleman. He was one of God's choice gentlemen. The word, gentleman, was clothed in flesh and blood, "it became flesh and dwelt among us" in Dr. Newman, and we beheld something of the dignity and the glory of manhood at its best. He was a gentle man, refined, chivalrous, genuine and sincere, gracious, generous, sympathetic, unselfish. He was modest and unassuming. He was pure in mind and in heart—one would not have thought of telling a questionable story or using coarse language in his presence. He was frail in body, but strong in spirit, and his life-long fight against physical handicaps stamped him as a man of courage and high purpose. He was democratic in spirit—there was no respect of persons with him. His life was all of one piece. There was no hypocrisy in him. In public or in private, in secret or in the open, he was one and the same man, a gentleman of unquestioned integrity of character, and a real man. There was a man sent from God whose

FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE CONVENTION.

We are loyal enough and noble enough to oversubscribe the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Fund if we take just a bit of time to consider the matter a part of our own affair as members of the churches of our constituency. In every local church in our Convention there are enough men and women who if they look on it as their own business to complete this Fund right away, and have it over with. Many churches have done their quota, others are paying on theirs, and still a goodly number have not yet undertaken to make donations toward this Fund.

I wish to appeal to those churches which have completed their quotas to give more if they will, those who are working on their quotas to seek to complete them right away, and those who have yet to do something to do it now.

If you are an official, a pastor, or a member of one of our churches ask yourself and your church what has been done in your church about the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Fund. Start your inquiry with a sum of money from your own pocket, and if you do not get any more send that sum in to the College. But if you ask that question kindly and sincerely you will get more.

The fact that many persons and several churches have given to this Fund has already done much. For one thing the additional endowment—remember, this money is not being spent but placed to the credit of the College's permanent endowment—as I was saying, the amount already contributed has brought our Church's College into the A-Grade status, has lifted the morale of the whole institution greatly, and broadened its usefulness immeasurably. And the money is still there—yours and ours to keep on doing good and never to be spent. It is a way of saving funds for the future as well as using them now.

We need to complete that Fund. To finish it and get on with the program. Ask yourself today, and your fellow member in your local church, how much more you can give to it before sundown of October 31. That date is the fifth Sunday in October. It is a special vote in the Southern Convention to make that a triumphant day of completing the Staley-

Atkinson-Newman Fund. We are well on the way — $84,000.00 and need $16,000.00. By the last day of October we should pay or definitely subscribe every cent of that. We are too near to keep letting it lapse.

A member of my church said I have no children to educate at college, for my children are already out in life, and I had no college education myself, but I believe in educating our youth, and I know of no one I had rather see undertake the job than the church of Jesus Christ; and besides you have shown enough interest yourself to ask me for $25.00 to that end and here it is. There is something for each of us to do: First, make a contribution ourself and then ask what has our church done about it.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THOSE WHO HAVE PAID THEIR QUOTAS.

Heartily congratulations and sincere appreciation to all the churches in the Southern Convention which have accepted and paid their quotas on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation. You are winning teams.

Everybody likes a winning team and all of us like to be on a team that can and does win. This is as true with churches as it is with any other organization. We delight rightly in seeing our "church team" win against sin or win in a challenge to raise a specific sum of money for a worthy and needed enterprise.

Some months ago our churches in the Southern Convention were challenged to raise $100,000.00 to establish the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation at Elon College which would support a professorship in Christian Education. Each church was given a suggested quota in this to raise. Each church was asked to be a team to raise their suggested quota. Many of our churches have scored the necessary points (dollars) to win. Many of them have done more. In behalf of the College and the Convention, I offer to these churches congratulations and express sincere appreciation. Hail to the victors! You won and your church has made our College stronger and our Church greater.

These churches have paid their quotas in full, and in many cases more: Eastern North Carolina—Henderson, Mt. Auburn, Oak Level, Wake Chapel; Eastern Virginia—Berea (Nans.), Bethlehem (Disp.), Holy Neck, Johnson's Grove, Liberty Spring, Little Creek-Norfolk, Oak Grove, Oakland, Shelton Memorial, Rosemont; North Carolina and Virginia—Burlington, Greensboro, First, Ingram, Winston-Salem; Western North Carolina—Albemarle, Asheville, Flint Hill (R), High Point, Liberty, Pleasant Ridge, Seagrove; Virginia Valley—Winchester. We appreciate the efforts put forth by the members of these churches to make them winning teams. We are proud of every member of each church.

While we express appreciation to the winning teams, we should remind the other churches that the game is not over yet. We are in the last quarter and have a few more minutes to play, until October 31, 1948. Your church can be a winner, too, if you will get your team together and raise your quota. A good "line buck" will do it. Let us all be members of a winning team on October 31, next.

Our thanks to the winners. We are proud of you. Courage to those who have not yet reached the goal, we are expecting you to be a winner, too!

W. MILLARD STEVENS.

CHURCHES THAT HAVE ACCEPTED AND PAID A PORTION OF THEIR QUOTAS.

It is a pleasure to join Dr. Smith and others in an effort to encourage all our churches to pay our Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation quotas.

The church of which I am pastor is one of those which has accepted and paid a part of its quota. There are 61 other churches in the Convention which have done likewise. On behalf of those who are anxious that this transaction shall be completed immediately and to the last dollar, I wish to express appreciation to churches which are in the category of these 62. We have expressed a desire by accepting our quotas. We have expressed an intention in paying in part. Let us now express determination by paying as much as possible, and indeed all if we can, of the unpaid balance between now and the end of the year. Thus, we will be fulfilling a memorable intention to those whom we honor and provide for those whom we would educate. Thus we may keep alive the noble contributions of those named in the Foundation. The college needs the money it has advanced to put this Fund into operation. The fulfilling of our vows will balance the books and bring to a happy conclusion this noble endeavor.

JESSE H. DOLLAR.

Observe Laymen's Sunday--October 17

THE LAYMAN AND HIS JOB.

I believe we are all proud that we live in a nation that calls itself "Christian." We are happy that our children have the privilege of growing up in a neighborhood under the influence of a church. Yet, we are reluctant to give our time in the work of the church. Many of us give more freely of our money than we do of our time to promoting Christianity.

The majority of our pastors are college and seminary graduates, and their thinking in religious matters are often in advance of the thinking of their congregation. The training of the majority of our church members, in the field of religion, has been through the attendance of Sunday school and church services. Some of our denominational colleges require that their students take some work in religious education or the Bible. If our churches are to grow, and to keep the loyalty of those who are already members, and to win others to our faith, we must do a better job during the next twenty-five years than has been done during the past quarter of a century. There is still a job for laymen to do, and the Laymen Fellowship of the Southern Convention is anxious to see each "Layman in his place in his own church."

For a church to grow, it is necessary that a happy and pleasant relationship prevail between the pastor and the church members. If the pastor can develop a church loyalty, he need not spend his time preaching concerning the matter of sufficient money to support the church program. Money will follow when the interest has been aroused. It is the duty of the layman to know about his church budget and to see that money is provided to take care of local needs as well as the need of his conference and Convention. A church with a loyal membership is an inspiration to its pastor and a challenge to other churches in its area.

GEORGE D. COLCLOUGH,
Elon College, N. C.

WHAT CHRISTIAN LAYMEN SHOULD DO.

The first thing they should do is to wake up and become disturbed about world conditions. The next step should be to re-enlist in the service of the church. Christianity is the most effective weapon with which to wage war on the evils that now threaten our civilization. The third step should be a strong resolution to make our lives a living example of passionate devotion to Christ, lives that will find expression in steady consistent service which will attract the attention and compel the enlistment of those on the outside of the church.

Christianity is of no avail unless it is represented and promoted by consecrated men of strong wills, courageous hearts, and willing hands; men who are eager to accept every challenge of the church.

Christian laymen should make a daily practical and common sense use of their religion, applying it liberally in all the transactions of their daily lives. When this is done Christianity will become a sizable object to be dealt with in the pathway of evil forces which now are a real and immediate threat to the forces of righteousness.

A. H. McIVER,
Sanford, N. C.

OUR THREE STEPS.

The laymen of Western North Carolina Conference have made two great steps since its beginning in 1947. Our first step was a rally and banquet held at Asheboro with Walter A. Graham as guest speaker. Our churches were well represented.

The second step came on September 18, 1948, at Asheboro when the conference organized and elected the following officers: A. G. Plyler of Albemarle, vice-chairman; Hubert Beane of Asheboro, secretary; Jack Sheffner of Liberty, treasurer. The address of inspiration was given by George D. Colclough on "The Laymen's Opportunity in the Church of Today."

Our third step will come October 17 when many of our churches will observe—many for the first time—Laymen's Sunday. Men, this is your chance to do something for your Master. Let's cooperate! I am looking forward to Laymen's Sunday as a great day in our denomination.

S. H. PELL, Chairman,
Western N. C. Laymen.

AN ADVERTISING FORCE.

In the practical everyday life, advertising plays a most important part. Products are bought on the basis of the names under which they are manufactured. Advertising has made the multitudes of people feel that life without such and such a product would be empty indeed.

To a large degree, the churches in our various communities are recognized as being strong or weak to the extent that the individuals, both clergy and laity, are apparently strong or weak. It is much easier for the people outside the churches to point the criticizing finger than it is for them to offer their praise.

Let's assume that the ministers have found their place in the Christian life. Because of this, they serve as spiritual guides and teachers to the ones who come under their influence. The body of the people—the laity—are followers and seekers. Some of these people are earnestly seeking the better way of life—they actually want to put into daily practice what they learn in church. Others are in the church for other reasons.

To the extent that we laymen earnestly seek to understand Christ's Way and then, with His help, apply what we have gotten, to our home, business, and social life, we help to strengthen the church in the eyes of the world. It must begin with me—not very potent to the world—but, when there are thousands of "me's," then the church has its powerful advertising force—Christian manpower.

CHAS. E. HEATH, JR.,
Newport News, Va.

LAY-MEN.

The men of the Congregational Christian Churches must realize that there is not only the need of the giving of their money but the need of giving of their time, thought, effort and talents. Too long have we been willing for the women of our church to carry on our missionary program and to keep local churches in the going group. Willing for the ministers to carry on the business of our denomination and the affairs of the local churches. Of course there are some exceptions, but as a whole, we the laymen must assume some of these tasks, we must be willing to accept more responsibility and put the same enthusiasm in our church work that we do in our business. Then, and only then, will we have growing and going churches.

W. H. BAKER,
Newport News, Va.

NOW.

Laymen should be praying, planning and preparing for Laymen's Sunday, and to make the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World, Inc., a vital working force. They should be putting into practice now the slogan, "Let's Try Christianity."

ACTIONS TAKEN BY THE CONVENTION.

The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches has taken two actions in connection with Elon College. First, authorized the institution of the Staley - Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education at Elon College. The purpose of this foundation is to increase available funds for the Department of Christian Education thus assuring increased offerings in this department and a broader foundation for those who are trained. To establish this foundation it was estimated that $100,000 would be required. The Convention, through the several conferences constituting the Southern Convention, called on the local churches to raise this amount. Each local church was asked to raise a definite sum within one, two, three, or five years. A little more than three years have passed since the campaign was authorized. A number of our churches have accepted their quotas and paid the same in full. Others have accepted and paid according to pledges, but unfortunately, some of our churches have not accepted their quotas nor have they contributed notwithstanding the fact that they have been urged repeatedly to do so.

The second action taken by the Convention was to terminate all solicitations within the churches for this foundation. October 31 was set as the deadline. All solicitations within the churches for new funds must cease on or before that date.

Churches and individuals having unpaid pledges on that date are expected to pay and may be solicited. If all of our churches would do their best there would be no question about the results. The entire $100,000 would be secured and the church be blessed.

The Convention has authorized the foundation and directed that the $100,000 be raised. Let every church and individual assume his share, take this responsibility seriously, and see that the job is done well.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The churches within our Convention, at this particular season of the year, are doubtlessly thinking of finances. They are approaching the end of the conference year to which they hope to come with all bills paid and all apportionments raised in full. Our churches that have raised their money, by the month or the quarter, all through the year are not troubled with the question of finances. They have only the last months or the last quarter, as the case may be, to think about and that will be easy, but those churches that have let the question of outside financial obligations go until toward the end of the year are facing some difficulty. As a rule, other interests of the year, such as missions and the orphanage, fare better throughout the year than the college does.

Money does not seem to be as free this year as here-to-fore. Yet Elon College is only $194.96 short of the amount receive from Sunday schools and churches last year. Last year, however, the college did not receive its full apportionment. It is hoped that every church will raise its apportionment in full and that many of our friends will go the second mile and pay beyond their apportionment. The college certainly needs the generous support of the church and we are sincerely grateful for the assistance given.

A WILL AND A WAY.

I am writing as a pastor of a church that has succeeded in raising its quota of the Staley - Atkinson - Newman Endowment Fund. When we were assigned our quota it seemed an impossible undertaking. As we look back now we are amazed how easy it was to raise this sum for the endowment.

The secret of it all was that there was a will to do it. It has been said that "where there is a will there is a way." I am convinced that this is true. Our church made up its mind to do, it and that was more than half of the battle.

I know that what is true of Greensboro, is true of every other church in our Convention. It can be done, if the will to do it grips the hearts of the people. So often we are defeated be-

TO THE CHURCHES WHICH HAVE ACCEPTED THEIR QUOTAS TO THE S-A-N FOUNDATION.

By SUPT. WM. T. SCOTT.

This article is addressed primarily to the churches of the Convention which have accepted their quotas to the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education but which have not as yet found it possible to pay these quotas.

Three great men—servants of God and beloved by the people of the Southern Convention—Dr. W. W. Staley, preacher and pastor for more than fifty years, president of the Convention and of Elon College, counsellor to thousands; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary and servant of the church; Dr. J. U. Newman, teacher at Elon College for more than fifty years, perhaps more than any other man the greatest single influence upon the training of our pastors of today. Staley-Atkinson-Newman! These three names have meaning for us of the Convention. They call to our mind the deep things of life. They give significance to the things for which our church has stood through the years. They call to our mind the foundation of our faith. They stand for the things which Jesus preached and lived.

It was natural, therefore, for our churches to set about to find a perpetual memorial by which we might honor the faith of these three Christians. Since their lives were lived in faithfulness in the moulding of life after the fashion of Jesus Christ, it was altogether fitting that the memorial set up by our church should be at Elon College, the center of training of our young men and women. Out of this purpose our Convention established the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education at Elon College in the amount of $100,000.

The memory of these men of God is sacred. We must not be little in our response to this memorial designed to honor them and the Christ whom they loved and served! The full amount must be raised if we would provide funds properly to honor these servants of the church.

The Convention at its session last April designated the fifth Sunday of October, 1948, as the time when we would make a special effort to complete this campaign to raise the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Foundation for $100,000.

If your church is among those listed which have accepted their quotas but as yet have paid nothing, will you

THE DEPARTMENT OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AS I SEE IT TODAY.

By REV. FRED REGISTER.

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish." The parable continues to tell of the coming of the bridegroom at midnight and how the foolish went away to get oil and the wise men went in and the door was shut.

Today, the door of opportunity stands open. One-half our children and young people and a large number of our adults here in America receive no religious instruction at all. Let him enter who is prepared to serve.

Elon College is not only a servant to her church, but is also a prophet. A prophet sees the present needs of the people as well as the future needs, and acts as he is prompted by God. Even so, our college, burdened by the need of Christian Education in our world and more specifically in our churches, erected several years ago a building wholly dedicated to Christian Education. This was one of the first buildings of its kind erected in our nation.

The Department of Christian Education was thoroughly equipped and placed in use. Here, today, students learn to do by doing. The students are not only instructed what to teach but how to teach. The third floor of the Mooney Building (Christian Education Building) provides proper facilities for teaching children from the kindergarten age through the Junior group. Sunday school is held here every week, and the students have an opportunity to their hand at putting into practice what they obtained in the classroom. Of course, they have the able assistance of their instructors.

Elon College has obtained some of the best teachers available in the field of Christian Education. Their method is to secure, over and above their regular highly competent faculty, some outstanding leader in the field to come and teach for one semester or one year. Among those who have taught under this arrangement are Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and Miss Mildred Widber.

There is within our churches today, widespread effects from lack of religious instruction. Many of our churches have received from six to twenty-four members annually for two generations, yet out of this large group have come very few if any

ELON'S DEPARTMENT OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AND THE LOCAL CHURCH.

By DR. W. W. SLOANE.

College, even the Department of Christian Education, and the church in our own community often seem so far apart. And well they may, for often the teacher of religion knows nothing about the problems and attitudes of people in the average church. Of course the teacher came out of some church—often a small country one. But that was years ago and the teacher has become too busy to have anything to do with local churches other than attending occasionally or "filling a pulpit" from time to time.

But this ordinary picture of the college teacher of religion does not apply at Elon, where each teacher of religion is well acquainted with the problems of local churches, for he has been pastor of churches small and large and continues doing pastoral work so as to keep in touch with the needs of people in the Southern Convention.

This makes the courses in religion all Elon students are expected to take more practical, down to earth. It proves especially helpful in courses dealing with religious education and pastoral problems, and in counseling with ministerial students in which each of three teachers in the department gives considerable time.

This enables the Department of Christian Education to help certain local churches indirectly. However, aid to the local church does not stop here. Deputation teams of students have been formed to visit churches which invite them. One such group conducts worship services. Another helps churches analyze and find solutions for their religious education problems. Other teams can give assistance with music or recreation. Arrangements made by churches to have these groups of students visit them not only helps the churches but enables students to get practical experience.

While most of their time on Sundays is required by their own churches the teachers of religion are always glad to help other churches, speaking to youth fellowships or men's brotherhoods, teaching in leadership training schools conducted by a group of churches, holding conferences with Sunday school leaders or deacons, assisting in preaching missions or wherever their training and varied experience can be used.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMEN MEET AT ASHEBORO CHURCH.

Those members of the North Carolina Woman's Conference (that includes all women in North Carolina who attend meetings of the Women's Societies in local churches) who did not attend the recent annual session of the Woman's Conference held on October 5 at the Asheboro Church really missed a great deal. It was all very fine—from meeting Dr. F. C. Lester, pastor of the church, at the front door, to telling the ladies of the Asheboro Church good-bye when we left. It was an inspiration to see what a fine building the Asheboro people have erected and to realize how hard they have worked.

Presiding was Mrs. F. C. Lester, president of the North Carolina Woman's Board, who certainly worked hard on the plans for the day. Mrs. W. W. Hall presented the opening worship program, assisted by Mrs. S. A. Pell, in charge of music for the day. The president then introduced guests, ministers and ministers' wives. Miss Susie Allen, Conference Treasurer, made her report, which she stated is the "best ever." A recognition of Superior Societies was conducted by Mrs. O. H. Paris, Convention President. Presidents of the following Superior Societies were asked to stand: Bethel, Burlington, Elon College, Union Ridge, Chapel Hill, Durham, Greensboro (First), Monticello Reidsville Albemarle, Pleasant Ridge (R) and Asheboro.

"Between the Book Ends," a skit, was presented by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, members of the Greensboro Auxiliary and others. Study books and packets for adults, young people and children were presented, each woman representing a particular book or packet. Plans for the various age-groups were presented by the Department Superintendents: Cradle Roll—Mrs. Kenneth Register; Children—Mrs. W. E. Wisseman; Young People—Miss Pattie Lee Coghill (pinch hitter). Each had literature for sale during the noon hour.

Our Thank Offering was presented by Mrs. M. T. Garren, chairman of the Thank Offering Committee. She presented such a forceful appeal for our project, the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction, that our offering (for C.W.V.R.) was the largest it has ever been—$103.00. The offering was dedicated by Rev. F. B. Eutsler, Convention Chairman for C.W.V.R.

The speaker of the day was Dr. Stanley U. North of the Home Boards in New York, who spoke on "Horizons Unlimited in the Hawaiian Islands." His address was very interesting and well received, as he told of his recent visit to the Hawaiian Islands and brought in much of the work of our Home Boards and the task of our church as a whole. He mentioned the fact that some group of women in the South might like to furnish a layette for a Japanese family expecting a baby in one of the trailer camps of a University, where the father is in school.

The morning session was closed with a Memorial Service for our deceased members, led by Mrs. Joe A. French. A white gardenia was presented to a representative of each society having a deceased member, and Mrs. Pell sang an appropriate solo.

A delicious lunch was served by the ladies of the Asheboro Church, at no charge. However, many people dropped in an offering to help pay for the new church at Asheboro.

The afternoon session was opened by the Asheboro Society, which presented a play-reading written by Mrs. F. C. Lester, telling about our "Missionary Friends Around the World." This was an interesting way to present our missionaries for special study.

Dr. W. T. Scott presented some of the plans of the Convention, and told of the completion of our superintendent's home, where he and family are now living. Dr. Jesse Dollar appealed to the churches to pay their part in helping to cancel the debt on this home.

Mrs. Lester presented the Friendly Service for this year, in the absence of the chairman, Mrs. B. M. Newman. For this year, our Friendly Service gifts go to Japan, Fort Berthold Indian Mission and Ryder Memorial Hospital in Puerto Rico. (See Year Book for details.)

Rev. Carl R. Key, director of the North Carolina Council of Churches, presented some of the work of the Council, emphasizing the three days which the women observe: World Community Day, World Day of Prayer, and May Fellowship Day. (Materials, programs and so forth, may be ordered now from the Convention Office at Elon.) Mr. Key mentioned also plans for Seminars for Ministers on "Counseling" to be held in various cities.

The business session included reports of the committees. The District Superintendents reported the number of societies represented and number of people from each district present. The Recommendations Committee included three suggestions: (1) That we use Pattie Lee Coghill in our missionary promotion with various age-groups, as she will be here in the Convention during the winter months; (2) That we invite Timothy Chang (pronounced Jang) to our churches, our homes, and group meetings; (3) That we increase society goals so that we may reach the total goal set for the State. The Place Committee reported that our conference will meet next year at Long's Chapel, and the following year at Ingram.

The following officers were nominated and elected: President—Mrs. F. C. Lester, Asheboro; Vice-President—Mrs. W. J. Andes, Winston-Salem; Secretary—Mrs. W. W. Tate, Greensboro; Treasurer—Miss Susie Allen, Raleigh; Departmental Superintendents: Young People—Mrs. Mark Andes, Virgilina, Va.; Children—Mrs. Carl R. Key, Durham; Cradle Roll—Mrs. Kenneth Register, Union. District Superintendents are: Alamance District—Mrs. W. W. Snyder; Chatham-Lee-Moore—Mrs. S. E. Kennedy; Durham - Wake—Mrs. Mamie Leonard; Guilford-Rockingham-Forsyth—Mrs. William G. Davis; Halifax—Mrs. H. B. Satterfield; Randolph—Mrs. E. P. Borroughs; Vance-Warren—Mrs. E. M. Carter. A very effective installation service was led by Mrs. W. W. Sloan of Elon College, each officer being charged individually with her responsibilities, and the audience making commitment, as well as the officers. All went home with a good word for the Lesters and the Asheboro Church, who did such a fine job of entertaining.

A WILL AND A WAY.

fore the battle begins; before we take stock of our abilities and resources.

Let me say to you that it can be done in your church. My prayer is that the churches of our Convention may rise up and settle this matter now.

If the will is there, the way will open.

HISTORY IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON IV—OCTOBER 24, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord.—Psalm 33:12.

LESSON: I Kings 4:21-11:13.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 33:12-22.

History or His-Story.

Broadly speaking, there are two kinds of history, secular history and sacred history. The former is concerned with a recital of events and movements, and also an interpretation of these events and movements, and their meaning for nations and civilization. But the writers of secular history do not bring God into the picture or the process. To read their history one would think that history is simply a chain of events, more or less related to each other, a giant cause and effect thing, without any purpose or meaning.

But sacred history is of a different kind. To be sure it deals with events and movements. It lists things that happened, and the people who had a part in making them happen or were present when they happened. And like the secular historian they also interpret these events and movements. But they believe that history has meaning because it is divinely ordered. They believe that there is order and purpose in human life, that there is a pattern in the fabric of social life, that history is really His-Story, the unfolding of the divine purpose toward which the whole creation moves. This is the unique characteristic of Biblical history. God not only sustains His world, He orders or overrules events. Secular historians write history; sacred historians write His-Story. The former write about events and movements and give their interpretations thereof. The latter write about events and movements and give their interpretation thereof, but in the light of the divine processes and as an unfolding of the divine purpose.

The History of a Kingdom.

For some reason, the Lesson Committee selected the life of Solomon as the basis of today's lesson. It is thus in large part the history of a kingdom. And in this case it is the story of a king who was great in many ways. It covers what might be called the "Golden Age" of Israel's history. There was a glitter and a glamour about it that was never reached by any other period. And the central figure in it was this man, Solomon.

The Greatness of Solomon and His Kingdom.

This man Solomon was a fellow who did things on a big scale. He lived in a regal way in royal surroundings. His house was something out of this world—it took a large army of workers thirteen years to build it. And it was built out of the best lumber and other materials obtainable, and furnished most luxuriously. He maintained a small army as his personal attendants, and the supplies for this vast retinue reads like a list of supplies for a whole regiment, and more. He dressed as richly as he lived lavishly. When Jesus wanted to make a point on one occasion, he used Solomon as the best clothed man he could think of. Solomon loved horses—he had forty thousand stalls for the horses he kept. (Chronicles puts the number at four thousand, but that is still a lot of horses.)

His domains were extensive—he ruled from the River, the Euphrates River to the land of the Philistines, and from Dan to Beersheba. And he exacted tribute from many peoples and nations. He carried on an extensive commerce, and under his astute leadership his nation was at peace. He shrewdly contracted a marriage with the daughter of the Pharaoh of Egypt, and thus won a potential enemy into a friend.

Solomon was smart. In fact he is reputed to be the wisest man that ever lived. He was especially adept at coining proverbs, glorified "wise cracks" that said much in little. On one occasion a queen traveled hundreds of miles to visit him, and when she saw the splendor of the king's house, the glory of the Temple he had built, and when she talked with him and heard his wisdom, it took her breath. She said "the half had not been told."

The king was versatile. He could not only coin proverbs, he composed songs, a thousand and five of them the record says. And he was a naturalist of the first order. He knew all the trees by name and he could classify the beasts and the fowls, and the creeping things and the fishes. There is no denying the fact that, making allowance for all enchantment which time and distance lend, this man Solomon was a great man in many ways.

And Solomon was a good man in his way. He built a magnificent temple for his God and dedicated it with impressive ceremonies. His prayer at the dedication is an eloquent and moving thing, it is one of the great prayers in the Bible (I Kings 8:22-53). He began his reign with a prayer for guidance and the spirit of wisdom, and he followed the principles of established religion to a large extent. But he did not go "fully after the Lord as did David his father" and in his latter days his wealth and his women led to his downfall.

Solomon's Sin and Its Consequences.

"And Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord." And like many another man, the cause of his fall from grace, was the wrong kind of woman. He had many wives who clung to their heathen customs and prevailed upon him to maintain places of worship for their gods. "And his wives turned away his heart"—these few words sum up a stark tragedy in the man's life. Later one wiser than Solomon said that a man's foes shall be those of his own household. Ah, the tragedy of an unbelieving wife, the handicap of a home in which either of the spouses go "after other gods." It is about as bad, one suspects, as if either of the two "go after other" men or women. And perhaps all unconsciously Solomon was weaned away from his loyalty to Jehovah, and gradually he himself came to worship the false gods of his heathen wives. He even built a high place for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, on a hill beside Jerusalem, and also one for Moloch, which was even worse, if possible.

Disobedient Unto Heavenly Vision.

"And the Lord was angry with Solomon, because his heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel, which has appeared unto him twice, and had commanded him concerning this thing that he should not go after other gods; but he kept not that which the Lord commanded." He had been weighed in the balances and found wanting. And the kingdom was to be taken from him. It was not pettiness or petulance on the part of God. It was simply the inevitable fruitage of wrong-doing and sin. As men fail to obey the divine purpose, as they get outside the divine purpose, disaster sooner or later falls. Nations, like men, ultimately sit down to a banquet of consequences. And the life which started out with such high the honor and recognition to be given by the raising of this Memorial Fund. As for Dr. Staley's place, in this trio of great men, he should have full recognition on a level with the others. The other two freely acknowledged their debt to him and his ministry. In evaluating his work we should begin with the thing dearest to his heart—his ministry as a pastor. His major work was in Suffolk. He accepted a call to that church in the fall of 1882. The church was small, the salary was inadequate for luxurious living, and the general conditions were not very encouraging. But he accepted with a deep conviction that it was the place for him to spend his life. The lamented Dr. W. B. Wellons had not been dead many years. His constructive work in the little town and surrounding counties was greatly appreciated. Suffolk was still divided and disturbed by the Wellons-Starr controversy. The work of building a strong church of our denomination, under the prevailing conditions, seemed impossible to many people. Dr. Staley became a peacemaker among the people. He refused to be drawn into a controversy over dead people and dying issues. During his ministry the Suffolk Christian Church became the largest and most influential church in the Southern Convention.

His work in the Southern Convention was as equally successful. He never sought office in the general meetings of the church. But people who recognized his ability sought him as a leader and guide. He was called to be president of the Convention when it was poorly supplied with leadership and not well organized for aggressive work. Dr. Wellons had laid a substantial foundation for progress, but he died in the prime of life, before his ideal could be realized. Dr. Staley worked out financial plans for the Convention and organized the leaders, in the various conferences, for united effort in building the kingdom of God in the sphere of activity, represented by the Christian denomination. He clearly defined the functions of the Convention and the constituent conferences. In his opinion the Convention should deal with conferences, and the conferences should work through the churches. In other words there was to be no overlapping of functions as far as the Convention and the conferences were concerned.

In recent years the Convention has become the dominant organization and the conferences have been reduced to minor importance. This change was anticipated as Dr. Staley saw the trend, in that direction, after his retirement from active service as Convention president. The major methods of his administration were discarded when the revolutionary movement, in the Convention, led to a complete reorganization in 1944, '46 and '48. It remains to be seen whether the present form of administration can hold the various sections of the Convention, and its institutions, in a unified spirit of progress and constructive plans. Dr. Staley made a great contribution to the building of the Southern Convention, as it existed, in his day and generation.

Elon College owes its existence today in part to Dr. Staley's foresight and financial ability as a leader. He was called to be president of that institution when it was bankrupt, financially, and appeared to be on the verge of being sold for its debts. He worked for eleven years without salary, paid his own travel expenses, while seeking to put the institution upon a sound financial basis. He raised sufficient funds to pay off the debts, borrowing money, in his own name, and upon his personal credit, to create a better feeling on the part of the creditors. When he paid off many bills, already past due, the creditors were surprised and astonished. He turned the institution over to his successor, free from debts, and with good credit, and gave himself again to the full work of the pastorate, which he had kept up while dividing time with the college. In addition to giving his time freely, without salary, he made large personal contributions to the college, from time to time, and continued his financial support until his death.

Yes, I knew Dr. Staley. The churches which have not paid their part on the Memorial Fund should do so very promptly and freely. The churches of my charge paid their quota freely and gladly. This fund should be speedily raised in full.

old, he reached them through his pen—with editorials in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and personal letters to churches and to individuals. He was as facile with his pen as he was with his tongue and people who, through the years, had loved to listen to him speak, now read his messages with the same eagerness.

How many lives he touched! How many hearts he stirred to nobler living! How many people in our Convention could rise up and say, "I knew Dr. Atkinson. He helped me to become the person I am." A great man he was, whose memory is a benediction.

I KNEW DR. NEWMAN.

name was John—John U. Newman.

Dr. Newman was a student and a scholar. He was an industrious and indefatigable student. He read widely and thought deeply. After years of teaching, he prepared for his classes diligently and eagerly. He brought to his students out of his treasure house of mind and heart, things both old and new. He was master of his field and its subjects. Thus, the student became the scholar, and the scholar became the student. It was because of this fact that he "spoke as one who had authority." Those of us who know him best regret the fact that he never put the results of his unremitting study, and the fruits of scholarly mind into book form and thus preserve them for future generations. Perhaps it was the innate modesty of the man. Or perhaps, like the Master, he was content to write upon the minds and hearts of men, instead of on paper. There was a man sent from God whose name was John—John U. Newman.

Dr. Newman was a teacher. Certainly he had innate ability, natural talent as a teacher. In one sense he was a "born teacher." But one suspects that "with great price" he developed into the great teacher that he was. And what a teacher he was. Who is there that ever sat under this man who can forget his teaching? He was a genius at getting at the gist of a thing. His ability to keep the proper proportion between the whole and its parts was uncanny. He could take a chapter or a whole book of the Bible, and with a few bold strokes, give the central theme, or the main outline of the thing. His analytical outlines were simple, sound, scriptural. At the same time he could take a Greek word and give the finer shades of meaning that were a revelation and an inspiration to his students. He had no pet theories. He had but one passion—a passion to find the truth. He was not afraid of truth. Nor was he afraid for truth. He was concerned with discovering and dispensing the truth, not with defending the truth. He believed that the truth alone would set men free. There was a freshness and a spontaneity about his teaching, born of acknowledge of books, and a knowledge of God in Christ, that made many of the sessions

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The orphanage family had a real treat one evening last week. Two men in Gibsonville asked permission to give the children a weiner roast with all the fixings that go with it. Of course, we did not object. One of them runs a cafe, and he being closed on Wednesday afternoon, brought his helper with him. We turned the large kitchen at the orphanage building over to them, where they had use of the cook stove, tables, etc., and plenty of room. After they got started and everything ready we lined the children up in the dining room and had them march by the table and get their weiners; as they passed on out a man handed them a bottle of Pepsi-Cola—then the fun began. They were invited back after they ate the first one to get another and another bottle of Pepsi-Cola, if they wanted it. If there is any sort of food the children really like it is weiners and Pepsi-Cola. The men brought a full supply of weiners, Pepsi-Cola, candy, ice cream and pencils. It was fun to see the little fellows hide the weiners. Every child was given all he or she could eat, and they had a lot left over. I do not remember how many crates of drinks they drank, but it was a plenty. These good men got more fun over putting this weiner roast on than anyone would imagine. I think they thoroughly enjoyed seeing the children eat to their heart's content.

We have had a splendid season, and if it will clear up our farmer will put in good time gathering corn and sowing wheat and oats. After a month of very dry hot weather the rain comes in good time to make the turnips and tender greens grow.

Thanksgiving is creeping up on us and it will soon be here. We are expecting a large Thanksgiving offering to make up for the short income during the year 1948 since January 1. We need money to pay our bills. Everybody we buy from want and expect their money on the first of the month. All the people who work for us expect their monthly wage on or about the first of the month. It is very embarrassing if we do not have the money with which to pay these bills. We are dependent on you to send enough to run the orphanage. We do all we can to assist in the expenses. We run a farm to grow vegetables. We run a dairy to supply milk and butter. We run a poultry lot to supply eggs for the orphanage family. We do all this to help. Our experience in the poultry business is that hens won't lay when eggs are high, but they eat a lot of high priced food.

Prices are so high. Shoes for our little folks are from $4.98 to $6.98 per pair, and we have many to buy.

I KNEW DR. NEWMAN.

sions of his class a mountain-top experience. Many of us who studied under him can say, "There was a man sent from God whose name was John"—John U. Newman, for no man could teach as this man taught, "except God be with him."

Dr. Newman was a Christian. He was a Christlike man. And he was Christ's man. Religion was a real and radiant thing in his life. He knew what he believed, and he knew Whom he had believed. The inner springs of his life were renewed by meditation and prayer. And by a study of God's Word. For the Bible was always for him, God's Word, and those words were spirit and life unto his mind and heart and soul. He did not live or teach for, or by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. And the teaching of his life was the life of his teaching. If those of us who knew him ever become so skeptical as to wonder whether there is such a thing as a genuine Christian after all, we have only to think of Dr. Newman, for he was a man sent from God named John—John U. Newman, full of grace and truth, and we beheld much of the glory of God in the character and conduct of this Christian gentleman, student, scholar, and teacher. And a great host which no man can number rise up and call him blessed, because although he be dead, he yet speaketh through his blessed memory and his beneficent influence. Thanks be unto God for His gift to us of Dr. John U. Newman.

hopes and great promise came to a rather dull and drab end, and already the seeds of discontent had begun to germinate, and they came to fruition when the Kingdom was divided at his death.

God Is In History.

This is the basic assumption of Biblical history. History is the working out of the purposes of Almighty God. It is not just one thing after another. It is the fulfilment of the will of God. Always in Biblical history we see the hand and hear the voice of God.

and early manhood. Miss Wainwright saw to it that he was educated both in Japan and America. Thanks to his American education and his familiarity with the language, literature and life of both peoples, Dr. Hatanaka is truly bi-lingual using English and Japanese with equal facility.

Writing of Hiroshi Hatanaka in 1931 an American missionary said: "The world needs more men like Hatanaka who can think and feel and speak in more than one tongue. Ignorance and fear go together. . . . If two peoples are ever to understand each other there must be more consecrated interpreters like Hatanaka."

In 1906 Mr. Hatanaka came to America to continue his education and studied at Tabor and Oberlin Colleges, graduating in 1910 from Oberlin and two years later from Oberlin Divinity School. In 1912 he was called to be Boys' Work Secretary at the Pittsburgh YMCA. At first some opposed him because of his race but soon he had won their full friendship.

In 1914 Dr. Hatanaka decided to return to Japan as Religious Work Secretary at the Osaka YMCA. He left "George Wainwright" in the U.S.A. and settled down to become thoroughly Japanese in order to better serve his own people. He took back his Japanese name and for a time cut himself off from his Western friends in order to soak in the language, culture and customs of his own countrymen.

Although an excellent college president and educator, Dr. Hatanaka is still a pastor at heart and for 19 years has held a pulpit, first in the Kyoto Congregational Church and later in Kobe. This period was broken by a two-year appointment as dean of the College Department of Kobe College.

In 1934 Dr. Hatanaka was called to the vice-presidency of Kobe College with the specific job of raising a big endowment. Six years later when the rising tide of nationalism was engulfing Japan and when Dr. Charlotte B. DeForest, then president of Kobe, was obliged to come to America because of illness, Mr. Hatanaka was made vice-president, then acting president and in 1940 full president.

During the war, when the Government demanded that the college buildings be used for small war industries, he agreed on the condition that the students remain under his care. In this way he carried on Bible classes, chapel assemblies and a minimum amount of classroom work. Kobe College dedicated several new buildings in 1934 and during the war escaped with only a few hits from bombs. There are now more than 1,700 girl students. Miss Angie Crew is one of the teachers.

age Indian gardens and spurs them on to improve both their produce and their stock. More and more the Indians are getting their own milch cows, pigs and chickens.

The Fort Berthold Mission began in 1876. From its inception its purpose was to lift the Indian community not alone spiritually but economically and socially. It starts projects and then turns them over to the Indians as soon as local leadership can be developed. "We came in with the first school and through the years we developed the Public School which took ours over and later the Indian Bureau accepted this responsibility," says Mr. Case. In similar fashion they started Scouts, 4-H Cubs, Homemakers groups, Civic Clubs—all of which have grown up into husky, independent children.

leaders. The churches are hampered and held back, because the younger, more efficient minds are not finding expression in the church. This mass of inactive membership has not become very well acquainted with our Lord Jesus Christ, for to know Him is to desire to serve Him.

Christian Education is the vital need of every Christian and every church. It endeavors to win young and old for our Lord Jesus Christ and to continuously instruct the communicant in simple yet victorious Christian living.

Elon College is aware of the opportunity that is ours. She is doing all in her power to prepare us to fill the need. The demand is still greater than the supply. Can we sit quietly in the face of unequalled opportunity to witness for our Lord, or shall we rise to the occasion.

The Significance of the Laity in the Church

Report of Assembly Committee IV, Sub-Committee C, of the World Council of Churches

There are obvious reasons why the churches should awaken to the importance of their lay members, both men and women, for every aspect of their life and work, in a way which they have not done hitherto.

The laity constitutes more than ninety-nine per cent of the Church.

In the customary work of the Church (preaching, evangelising, teaching and social work) the latent spiritual resources of the rank and file are urgently needed. It is commonly assumed that this need is widely and sufficiently recognized, but in fact it is not.

There is, however, another aspect of this problem of the laity of even greater import for the Church in its relation to the world. Lay men and women spend the greater part of their lives in their homes, their occupation, and the public life of the community. It is essential that the churches should take note of this. For it is through the laity that the Church has the greatest and most natural opportunity to show in and to the world that the message of the Bible, and all that the Church is committed to by obedience to its Lord, are relevant to the real problems and needs of man in every age, and not least in our own. Only by the witness of a spiritually intelligent and active laity can the Church meet the modern world in its actual perplexities and life situations.

The laity requires strengthening through biblical and theological study and discussion with special reference to the bearing of Christian faith upon daily life. This will include the study of "Christian stewardship," which means nothing less than faith in action. Without such a theological understanding of stewardship it may easily degenerate into a well-meant activism.

We need to rethink what it means to speak of the Church as "a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people" (I Peter 2:9), and as the "Body of Christ" (Ephesian 4:16) to which every member contributes in his measure.

Laymen's retreats have proved of especial benefit, for it is not simply a question of more adequate training, or even of a new approach. It implies the age-old necessity of a complete personal commitment on the part of every member to Christ and His Church.

We are thinking of the lay member of the Church not as a worker in the congregation, but as one living and working in the wider community. The question to be faced here is this: how can members of the Church be enabled to see the bearing of their Christian faith on their life in their occupation? How can men and women who stand in the stress and problems of life be helped to see how they can obey just there the will of God? The fact is that in their occupations, whether they are doctors, lawyers, industrialists, farmers, steel workers, etc., they live in an increasingly secularized world. How to live and work there as Christians, as members of the Church; how to give witness to their faith; how to think about the bearing of the Christian faith on the economic, social, political and cultural realities and backgrounds, is for most of them a mystery. They are left to their own wits, which means that they largely live a life divided into two separate compartments, resulting in frustration and the weakening of spiritual vitality. The Church is for them not their source of strength and light, but a place for the satisfaction of a religious need isolated from the everyday realities of a modern world. This is the more disquieting from the Christian point of view because it is in flat contradiction of the fact that the Lord Jesus Christ claims the whole of life and, therefore, the Christian faith necessarily demands expression in all realms of life.

In the laity the Church has a body of men and women in which the real daily meeting of the Church and the world on its own ground takes place. This implies that the Church must see the great significance of giving guidance to her laity, trying to understand where exactly the intellectual, morale and religious issues lie which they have to face, and so giving them by these efforts the certainty that they are not isolated individuals, but are sustained by the experience of living and working as members of the living Body.

Especially in the field of missions unparalleled opportunities are open for the participation of the laity. It would be of great importance if this vision of the laity as part of the militant and living Church could receive adequate attention.

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME C.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1948.

NUMBER 42.

Associate Minister Elect of General Council

Dr. Douglas Horton, Minister of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches, announces the election of Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, Minister of the Mt. Pleasant Church, Washington, D. C., to be Associate Minister of the General Council, as successor to Dr. Frederick L. Fagley when he retires December 31, 1948.

DR. BUSCHMEYER

After an explanation of the compelling nature of the call to serve the larger fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches, Dr. Buschmeyer read his resignation from the ministry of the local church to take effect December 31, 1948.

It is an interesting fact that this election and resignation will bring together in official relationship two men who served in a similar relationship as Minister and Associate Minister at the Leyden Congregational Church, Brookline, Massachusetts, twenty-five years ago.

Since 1942 Dr. Buschmeyer has served as a member, and more recently as Chairman, of the Executive Committee of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches, and will bring to his new position a thorough knowledge of the problems and opportunities of the total fellowship of churches throughout the country. As Chairman of a European Study Mission to Europe in 1947 and as a Delegate to the recent Amsterdam Assembly of the World Council of Churches Dr. Buschmeyer has had further opportunity to become familiar with the larger relationships of Protestant Churchmanship in the present day.

As minister of the local church since 1939 Dr. Buschmeyer has led his congregation in its plans for a new church home on Westmoreland Circle, Washington, D. C., and it is expected that a new minister will be called in time to lead the local fellowship into its new home by Easter time.

As the new Associate Minister of the General Council Dr. Buschmeyer's principal service will be rendered in the cultivation of the ministerial relationship of the men serving the six thousand churches of the Fellowship, with special attention to men still in training in the seminaries or in the early years of their parish ministry.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE TO MEET.

The Eastern Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches will meet with the South Norfolk Congregational Christian Church on Wednesday and Thursday, November 3-4, 1948. Will those desiring overnight entertainment, kindly notify Mrs. O. D. Poythress, 1214 Guerriere Street, South Norfolk 6, Va.

VALLEY CONFERENCE NEWS.

Our best wishes to Rev. and Mrs. R. E. Newton and daughter Margaret (Mrs. J. L. Mendelsohn) for a happy vacation as they visit with friends and relatives in North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Florida. They expect to be away for three weeks on this extended trip. Mr. Newton plans to attend the Executive Board meeting at Elon College, October 12-13, on the way South. He reports three new members received and baptized October 3 in the Mount Lebanon Church and one member received by letter into the fellowship of the Leaksville Church. Mr. Newton is a faithful worker and well deserves this needed period of rest and relaxation from the strenuous duties of his pastorate.

LAYMEN'S SUNDAY AT ROSEMONT.

Laymen's Sunday was appropriately observed at Rosemont Christian Church, Portlock, Norfolk County, Va., last Sunday morning at the 11:00 o'clock service. The general theme for the service was, "That Christ May Reign." Five of the church's leading laymen spoke on the various phases of the program for the coming year—Mr. H. R. Morrison, Mr. W. H. Farrow, Mr. T. F. Liverman, Mr. C. L. Richardson, Mr. O. S. Mills. Following the speaker, Mr. M. K. Hassell, Chairman of the Official Board for the new year, 1948-49, came forward and presented the official board and the committees to the church. This was followed by an Installation Service for all church officers and workers conducted by the pastor, Rev. Herbert G. Council, Jr. After a brief service of recognition for the deacons, the service was brought to a very impressive close with the congregation singing that beloved old hymn, "O Jesus I Have Promised."

GREETINGS FROM SPRING HILL, THE MOTHER CHURCH.

By G. CHAPMAN WHITE.

To Waverly Congregational Christian Church on Home Coming Day, October 10, 1948:

I bring you greetings from Spring Hill, the Mother Church, on this Home Coming occasion. We are happy to visit you and to enjoy your hospitality and fellowship and pray God's blessings upon each of us as we have come together today to worship as one big family.

Many years have passed since your mother church was organized at Spring Hill. As a matter of record, Spring Hill Meeting House is mentioned as being in existence as early as, or before, 1826, and was located on the same acre of land upon which the present church house, built in 1868, now stands. In 1897 an additional

Institutional Ministry

By REV. EMMET M. FRAZER*

Twenty-eight years ago, a bill was introduced in the State Legislature to provide a salary for a chaplain at the State Penitentiary. At this time a group of churchmen expressed the conviction that this field of Institutional Ministry was a missionary opportunity of the Church rather than an obligation of the State. A committee was formed to unite the efforts of the various denominations and the work was begun under the direction of this committee. The Interdenominational Religious Work Foundation is supported and controlled by eleven Protestant denominations. The program of the Foundation has increased from year to year and religious work is now carried on in the industrial schools, the road camps, the T. B. sanatoria, prison farms and the mental hospitals.

There is continuous need for expansion because many institutions are yet without services and others are being inadequately served. It is the hope of the Foundation that increased appropriations will make it possible to expand our program in keeping with the command of the Master, "I was sick and in prison . . . and ye came unto me."

It is not unusual to have people say to me, "Of course, you are busy on Sunday, but what do you do the rest of the week?" The work of Institutional Ministry embraces a great deal more than services of worship and Sunday school classes. These services are important but so, also, are the day by day contacts, many of which seem unrelated to the program of ministry. In order that you may understand some of the activities in contacts other than formal religious services I want to tell you a few stories.

I remember a man who came to my office for an initial interview and protested vigorously that he was innocent of the charge on which he had been sentenced to serve fifteen years in the penitentiary. I let him talk and finally he came around to this statement, which he made with a sly grin on his face: "Of course, I've done lots of things that I didn't get caught for. I was thinking about that in my cell last night and I added up the time I would have gotten if I had been caught and it would have been just about fifteen years. I guess it all balances out after all."

One of my earliest contacts, when I first became associated with this work, was with a sixty-five-year-old Negro who, although he claimed to be quite innocent, was cheerful and said, "God is mighty good to me." I found it difficult to understand how a man who for sixty-five years had lived a Christian life, working every day, attending church every Sunday and had never been arrested for anything could be sentenced for five years for a crime which he did not commit and still say "God is mighty good to me." The old man explained, "I have needed an operation for a long time. It would have cost me over $200.00 and I couldn't afford it. Now they tell me that I can have the operation free while I am here. And, another thing, I have been saving my money to get some false teeth. They were going to cost me $85.00. They tell me that they will make me a set of teeth in here if I will pay for the materials which will cost $13.00, and I've got $13.00. God is mighty good to me." Because of the age of this prisoner I was fearful that the operation might be fatal and I asked the surgeon to let me know before he was operated upon. The morning of the operation I arrived early and read from the Psalms some passages which I thought might be quieting and comforting. After a while I asked him if he had any special portion of the Bible that he would like for me to read. He quickly said, "Read me the story of Nicodemus." I read the story and when I came to "ye must be born again," the old man broke in with, "That's it, preacher, that's it." Then

REV. EMMET M. FRAZER.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

I knew the secret of a man who could thank God for a prison sentence for something he did not do.

One of my most interesting experiences was at the Blue Ridge Sanatorium where I met a young girl who had been a patient there for several years. I was attracted to her by her wonderful smile and cheerful disposition. She had been sick for a long time but her attitude was one of confidence—looking forward, not backward. She was getting well and she was happy about it. I found myself visiting her ward last that I might leave the institution under the cheerful influence of a radiant personality. The time came when I learned that she

RELIGIOUS WORK IN STATE INSTITUTIONS.

The Rev. Emmet Frazer gives a thrilling story of our interdenominational ministry in state institutions. His message which appears in this issue was given before the Eastern Virginia Ministers' Association. As you read his message you will want to share his work. You may. Individuals and churches as well as conferences may share in the support of this Religious Work Foundation. Our contributions are meager indeed compared with that of other denominations. Sunday school classes and other organizations could greatly augment this amount and relieve the conferences of additional responsibility. The work goes on, thank God. It is worthy. Prisoners should not be deprived of the Gospel. "The Word of God is not bound." Greater support will result in better and wider service. Support the Foundation.

NEW ERA FOR MISSIONS.

Missions is the great business of our generation. The need is crucial and the opportunity unprecedented. Our best thought and most sacrificial gifts are the price we must pay for a statesmanlike job on the mission field. We of this generation have the privilege of witnessing and participating in a new order of missionary activities. Religious zeal scholarly achievements, technical skill, plus efforts, have lifted missions into new dimensions of efficiency and achievement. Never before have our dollars produced so many miracles. Never before have so many people matched our dollars with theirs. Yes, missions is the great business of our generation. Don't miss the thrill of intelligent and constant participation in this redemptive enterprise.

COLUMBUS — ABBREVIATED.

The Editor came away from Columbus with a deep conviction which crystalized in the preceding statement. The Columbus Assembly issued a Program of Advance in Foreign Missions entitled, "One World in Christ." Few of our subscribers have access to this 40-page document, and it is not feasible to publish it in its entirety. Some of you may be interested in reading a digest of this proposed program of united missionary advance. Since this presumably is one of the duties of an editor, the following condensed statement is submitted for your convenience. The full text is available at the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y., for 35c. Here is the answer to your question: "What is missions?"

It is the conviction of the Foreign Missions Conference that making disciples of all nations includes the doing of "good works" as well as persuasion through the spoken and written word. Both are parts of the process of conveying the good message about God and from God, the process which has come to be called Evangelism: witnessing by word and deed. Therefore we must advance primarily by continuing to aid in the winning of men to Christ and Church, by continuing to strengthen and increase the number, the vitality and the witness of his followers everywhere:

- a. By deepening the spiritual life of the church.
- b. By aiding in evangelistic campaigns among the unreached.
- c. By strengthening the training centers for ministerial and lay leaders.
- d. By providing for advanced training on the fields and abroad.
- e. By the exchange of dynamic leadership between the field and home bases.
- f. By strengthening National Christian Councils for initiative and direction.
- g. By cooperation in research; sharing our best.
- h. By increased missionary personnel, specially chosen and trained for new conditions overseas.

The Latin American Countries are our nearest neighbors and our destiny is closely linked with theirs. An advance in every phase of evangelistic activity is called for in the immediate future and the responsibility of the North American churches in strengthening Protestant work is plainly evident. Recent investigations of demographers have revealed that the population of Latin America is growing faster than that of any major region on the world. At present its population is larger than that of the United States and in fifty years will probably be twice as large. New forces are contending for the souls of the people. The ideological battle which began during the war has intensified since. Latin America needs above everything else to know the transforming power of Jesus Christ. It is estimated that there are three million Protestants in Latin America. This small minority group is exercising a steadily growing influence. The need for cooperation among Protestants in Latin America is greater than anywhere in the world. We must use all the following opportunities that are now open to us to proclaim the Gospel in Latin America: United evangelistic campaigns. Crusades for increased Bible distribution. Additional evangelists are needed with special gifts and the necessary approach to the intelligentsia, to students and to industrial workers. Exchange of outstanding preachers, student leaders and Christian labor leaders. Radio Evangelism—with recording studios and a full-time Secretary to stimulate and advise local groups in the preparation and improvement of programs, subsidies for local groups and provision for adequate follow-up with counsel and literature. Christian literature and newspaper evangelism.

The Christian Church must make a comprehensive approach to rural people and demonstrate that Christianity is relevant to the whole of life. An integrated program must be built around the needs of the people, which usually arise from ignorance, ill-health, malnutrition, poor housing, primitive and wasteful agriculture and lack of industrial skills. National workers and missionaries with the necessary skills to build such a program should be prepared.

The Protestant Church has been a powerful pioneer for four generations in the whole of Africa south of the Sahara. No other force in Africa has lifted more eyes, opened more minds, raised more hopes and fulfilled more desires than Christianity in action there. And yet in Africa ignorance, disease, fear, frustration, bitterness and despair are more evident, more communicative, more recognized as a problem to Africans and the world than ever. Our consultation with related agencies in Europe and Africa have been quite unprecedented in geographical breadth and functional scope. Members of Christian communities must be trained and encouraged in working together for literacy, adult education, better housing and sanitation, consumers and other co-operatives. Throughout the whole of Africa literacy is the need which, unmet, will hold unmet a score of other basic needs. The divine message must be set forth in the languages of the people and published so that all may possess it. Only as the people themselves come into personal use of the Scriptures can the foundations of Church and community life be sound. The multiplicity of languages and the low cash income of the people require long labor and heavy subsidy if this essential is to be supplied. When people learn to read, they must read. That means literature in a quantity and with a range never yet achieved. It is clear that the time is here when the further development of additional educational institutions of seminary, college and university standard should be undertaken by Christian bodies in strategic places. This is essential to prepare and enable trained Americans as clergy and laity to carry forward the task of evangelism, literacy and literature, education, agriculture, home building, etc. The solution of health problems can be solved only through training of fully equipped medical personnel of Africans. Well-trained technicians are in great demand in mission service in Africa in the fundamental problems of food, housing, health and education. For this, and all other multiple proposals made herein, would be Christianity in action.

The war struck a shattering blow at the Christianity of Europe, and the days since fighting ceased have done disappointingly little to repair the damage. Churches have been destroyed, large populations shifted, communications are difficult, there is a shortage of ministers, and furthermore the fall in value of money, the increased cost of living, and the breakdown of industry have had dire effects on the finances of the churches and all their work. It is imperative to assist the seminaries to train more adequately the rising ministry for the new day which is already here. Churches must be repaired and rebuilt. The re-equipment of orphanages, old age and convalescent homes, infirmaries, deaconesses houses, and centers connected with the charitable and social work of the churches, destroyed by the war, looted or seriously damaged, is urgent. Because of loss and destruction during the war and the fact that there was little or no printing during that time, the need for Bibles, hymnals and books is very great. It can hardly be realized by those who live in the midst of plentiful paper how the whole work of the church is impaired, delayed and frustrated by the lack of paper for printing.

The prominent role which India and Pakistan are destined to play in the arena of nations becomes more apparent every day. These two nations house four hundred million people, one-fifth of the human race. Challenging problems face these countries along political, educational, medical and industrial-economic lines. There are primitive tribes untouched. Far larger numbers of trained leaders both national and missionary are needed. There is great urgency in the call: the ministry, the teaching profession, industry, agriculture, literacy and journalism—in far greater number and far better equipment.

Those directly concerned with mission work in Southeast Asia believe that the Christian work in this territory should be studied as a unit. The areas of Burma, Siam, Malaya, Indonesia, Sarawak, Philippines and Micronesia are lying within the same general part of the world as have a common tropical climate. There is a great body of about 4,500,000 Christians with a common heritage, conscious of their common lot and eager for an interchange of experience and Christian culture.

China makes apparent the need for prompt and statemanlike action, and the undergirding of a church which has come through a ten-year war, exhausted and depleted but triumphant. The outstanding needs are personnel, equipment and finance. The very number and size of the obstacles to recovery, not to say any appreciable advance, create the need for unusual effort. Displacement, civil war, inefficiency of government, the threat and actual control of communism and the deadly paralysis of inflation, all tend to nullify effort. Only Christian compassion, Christian standards of life and action, can turn the scale internally and only the united efforts of World Christianity can supply these. The new missionary goes to a place of rare privilege—that is, association with competent colleagues who will have much to give as well as to receive from their western associates. Humility must be coupled with initiative, and willingness to take second place must rank with ability to take first place.

In Korea the first priority for any advance in Christian work is personnel. For missionaries, the numbers and types needed have been carefully studied. In addition to Christian character and deep consecration, the new missionary should have creative ability in some special field. The Boards should consider immediately the sending of a number of short-term missionaries as soon as clearance can be obtained. "Youth making contact with youth" should be our watchword.

A land of eighty million people, Japan is awakening from the long nightmare which has held her in its grip since she chose the way of war. With defeat have come hunger and stark want for her citizens: homeless children run in packs in her ruined cities, disease is rampant. A major convulsion has rent her social patterns; a social earthquake has left her dazed and groping. At such an hour as this, it is the high privilege of North American Christians to help bring to a sobered Japan the claims of a resurrected Christ in whom alone is salvation for the individual and hope for the nation. Work largely centered in the cities, has in the villages potential seed-beds, which, if well cultivated, can mightily increase its strength.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Eastern Virginia pastors were thrilled last Thursday at Newport News over the excellent meeting of the annual Woman's Missionary Conference. The Christian women of our constituency bring honor upon their Lord, their church, and their conference. More than three hundred of them crossed the five-mile span over the James River to gather in the beautiful church in Newport News. There is an enthusiasm in their greetings, their numbers, their well-prepared program, and their excellent reports which is most inspiring. The very atmosphere seems electric. Their prayers and their song are so real because one senses the fact that the Lord is there.

I have attended, in time, the North Carolina Woman's Conference and the same spirit and enthusiasm, the same spiritual realism prevails there. What would the churches do with these faithful women? Every pastor who has been so greatly helped in his local church by their unceasing work and service should certainly accept from their hands one more really great blessing, namely, the inspiration of their annual conferences.

The Woman's Conference voted to set their goal for next year at $10,000.00. This is $850.27 more than they raised the past year, but it is a good and proper goal, and they will in all probability go beyond it. Their total figure this year—including their balance of $264.37 in bank when the year began—was $9,414.10.

Although this is a goodly sum of money it is perhaps the smaller, by a good bit, of their contributions. Their contribution of missionary education and missionary spirit in their local churches must be a much larger gift than the money. Here is something about the study of missions, the study of the Bible as a missionary textbook, and the praying for missions as well as the giving to missions which makes for a live, growing church at home.

Mrs. Robert Lee House was elected along with an excellent corps of others to carry the responsibility of leadership for the coming year. Mrs. House comes to the presidency of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference with ample training and understanding of the work, as well as vision and consecration. May we all—pastors, churches, and especially leaders of the missionary so-

Dr. Stanley U. North made a fine contribution to the recent session by his enlivening and enlightening address. And I feel sure that many of the thirty-three women from the Suffolk Church will be hearing much of Mrs. O. H. Paris' address again in a sermon. Dr. W. T. Scott helped to bring us to greater desire to go forward. And the reports from district and departmental superintendents made one feel that the Master had captured the hearts of many of the most talented women in this section.

GREETINGS FROM SPRING HILL CHURCH.

two and one-half acres of land were deeded to the original one acre by our late beloved friend and brother, Mr. Bob West and his splendid and lovable wife, Miss Selma and others. The motivating force in the hearts and lives of those who made possible the organization of this place of worship was the love of their Heavenly Father and the desire to further the Kingdom of their Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We are grateful today for their lives and their efforts, for not only has there been a place to worship at Spring Hill during all of the past years, but the edifice in which we now worship stands as a memorial to their love and foresight in the furtherance of our Lord's Kingdom in this town and community. For it was out of the membership at Spring Hill that this church was organized and the good work it has done through the years by the efforts and prayers of you who have since labored here stands upon its own merits.

The Mother Church isn't as strong as she used to be, but she still seeks to carry forward the banner of her Christ. Though now feeble, she may well rejoice in the success of her daughter. Surely there is nothing that makes a mother's heart happier than to have a child who daily serves the Lord Jesus.

Now, in the words of Paul and Timothy, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ which are at Philippi, or, if you please, Spring Hill Church, the servant of Jesus Christ, to the faithful servants of this church. . . . "Grace be unto you and peace from God the Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ! . . . We thank our God upon every remembrance of you. . . . Always in every prayer of ours we make request with joy for your fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now. Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ."

And this we now pray, "That your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offense till the day of Christ; being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God." Amen.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

HOUSES FOR FACULTY MEMBERS.

In mid-summer Elon College faced the alternative of losing valuable faculty members or providing satisfactory living quarters. Time was short. Material was hard to get and wages were high, but something had to be done.

The college had the opportunity of purchasing barracks of wood construction from the State of North Carolina at a nominal cost. These barracks were at Camp Butner, which is located between Durham and Oxford. The barracks were thirty-two feet wide and ninety-six feet long. They were two-story buildings. Paul Plybon, field secretary for the college, took students from the college, wrecked the barracks, and moved them to the college. Mr. T. R. Humphrey was employed to erect the houses. Three two-story houses have been erected. Two are complete and the other will be complete this week. They are heated from the central heating plant and the college provides the water. Each house consists of living room, dining room, kitchen, two baths and one half bath, and three, four, or five bedrooms. Dr. F. E. Reynolds, head of the Department of Philosophy and Religion, occupies one of these homes. Dr. J. C. Colley, head of the Department of Education, occupies another, and Mr. James Mallory, athletic coach, will occupy the third. These are convenient, comfortable, and livable houses. They are real homes and are located just west of West End Hall.

The remainder of the land purchased from the Huffines' estate some years ago and located west of the highway leading from the college to Ossipee has been surveyed and staked off in building lots. A street has been laid off leading from the highway and extending through the woods between Veterans Apartments and Dr. Caddell's home. It continues in a half circle and extends back to the highway just north of Dr. Amick's home, now owned by Dr. T. E. Powell. This street is to be known as Arcadia Drive. A number of beautiful home sites face this drive. Four cottages are being erected. These cottages include living room, dining room, kitchen, a bath, and two or three bedrooms. This is a very attractive section and makes a beautiful development. By November 15, we hope to have these seven houses completed and ready for occupancy. They will rent for from $45 to $75 a month.

This will not only prove an attraction and convenience for faculty members but will be a good investment for the college. If for any reason the Board of Trustees should not favor this project, the houses can easily be turned into money at a profit. It would seem good judgment, however, to provide comfortable homes for faculty members of Elon College. It gives a sense of security, stability, and is further evidence of the college's confidence in its own future and of its interest in the members of its faculty.

Trustees, Alumni, Friends and Visitors, who may be at the college at any time, are invited to investigate these homes as to location, design and construction. The administration will appreciate any constructive criticism that anyone has to offer.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

These are busy days for the local church. The work for the conference year must be completed. Local finances are to be taken care of, and conference apportionments provided. The church communication to its local conference must be prepared. Delegates to represent the church in conference are to be elected. Each church should make sure that all conference apportionments are in hand and either forwarded to the Convention Office, Dr. William T. Scott, Superintendent, or sent to the conference treasurer for proper distribution.

There isn't anything that will give greater confidence or enthusiasm to the local church than to say that the work of the year now coming to a close has been well done. When a church makes satisfactory progress, meets all of its obligations, it is in a good position to begin the new year with assurance and hope. Elon College is increasingly indebted to the churches of the Southern Convention for counsel, encouragement and support. It is hopeful that the annual apportionments for its support of $12,500 will be paid in full.

THE SUPERINTENDENT'S HOME HAS BEEN COMPLETED.

It is a source of gratitude to those of us whom the Convention charged with the responsibility of erecting a home for the family of its Superintendent. We are happy to report that the work has been completed and Dr. and Mrs. Scott were able to move on Monday, October 4.

There is some work yet to be done on the grounds, but the contractor is proceeding with that. Within a few days the entire front lawn will be a beautiful coat of lawn grass and we will have one of the most beautiful houses in this fine community as a symbol of the interest and progress of the Southern Convention.

Appeals have gone out to all our churches, and to a large number of individuals, asking for investments in this project to hold the final debt to the lowest figure possible. Many of our churches and a number of individuals have responded in accordance with that request. Checks are coming in and the amounts given are being applied daily to this fund.

Let it be said, so that all can understand, that unless our churches do respond to this Convention-wide appeal, we will have a debt which we do not want. It can be avoided now more easily than it can be paid later and we will all be happier when we have held the indebtedness to the minimum. This is likely the last time this project will be presented through THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

On behalf of the committee and the entire Convention, I wish to thank every church, Sunday school and individual who has had a part. I wish to urge those who have not to join the rest of us in bringing this matter to an immediate and happy conclusion. We shall anticipate your response at the earliest possible date.

JESSE H. DOLLAR,
For the Committee.

MISSIONARIES RETURN.

Dr. and Mrs. Harold S. Matthews of Boston, Mass., and East Sumner, Maine, sailed September 23, from New York on the Ivoran bound for Hongkong, China, enroute to Foochow, Fukien Province and vicinity. Dr. Matthews, who is China Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, is on a secretarial administrative visit which will take him throughout the Province of Fukien and probably into North China visiting the missionaries and work of the American Board.

Dr. and Mrs. Matthews are taking with them the special greetings and congratulations of the Congregational Christian Churches in America to the Foochow Mission as it celebrates its Centennial, November 15 to 22, in Foochow City. It was in special recognition of the progress and needs of the churches and their auxiliary institutions in the Fukien area that a beautiful kodachrome moving picture entitled, "Letter from China," was filmed last year under the auspices of the American Board of Foreign Missions, and is now being shown in the churches of the United States. The cast was made up of American Board Congregational Christian missionaries, their Chinese colleague and the boys and girls in the schools.

The Matthews lived at Goodwin Place, Boston, until last spring when they moved to 144 Hancock Street, Auburndale. They have a farm in East Sumner, Maine, where they spend their summers. One personal aspect of the trip will include a visit with their son, Rev. Alden E. Matthews, who with his wife and baby daughter have just begun service as Educational Missionaries in the Foochow Mission.

Dr. and Mrs. Matthews were missionaries in North China for over 20 years. They served there through periods of civil strife, flood, famine and war as well as in post-war days. He left China the last time on the first repatriation ship, Gripsholm, after six months as a prisoner of the Japanese invasion forces.

They expect to return to the U. S. A. around July 1, 1949.

ABOUT SHAOWU CHURCH.

By TIMOTHY CHANG.

Fukien is a province of South China. Foochow is one of the big cities in China, the capital of Fukien and near the sea. If we study the Chinese geography and history, we can find out there is an important city in North Fukien, named Shaowu, two hundred and fifty miles from Foochow, and that is the county I came from.

There are two ways we can take to reach Shaowu from Foochow: on the river by boat and on the highway by bus. If it had not been for the war by this time the railroad would have been finished. If we go up to Shaowu by boat, we must climb the rapids every time and the boat goes on. There is a proverb to describe Shaowu: "One rapid higher than another rapid; each rapid is ten feet high. So, Shaowu is as high as heaven." Thus, we know that Shaowu is on the upper stream of the Ming River. We must spend about twelve days to reach Shaowu on the boat (it is not a motor boat). We can see the scenery on both sides of the river and we can enjoy it as much as we wish to. The forests are somber, the trees standing motionless and silent on each side of the river. White, red and purple wild flowers are spread over the mountains, they make a beautiful scene.

If we go up to Shaowu by bus, we spend two days and we can appreciate the power of labor because the highway passes through the high mountains one after another and all built up by hand. And we also know what the difference is between North and South China because there are no mountains in North China.

There are many mountains around Shaowu. As a result communication was not convenient in the early times. But Shaowu was still big and important in Fukien. Rice, paper, wood, mushroom, tea and orange are famous products of Shaowu. The weather is like North Carolina.

Seventy-six years ago, Dr. Joseph Walker went to Shaowu and built up the Christian Church there. It was good fortune for the Shaowu people. After a few years, many Christian missionaries went to Shaowu. They helped the Shaowu Church to unite together and built up the Ming-Pe-Da-Hwi—North Fukien Synod. It contains seven counties. Ming-Pe-Da-Hwi is still working there. There are three districts under the Ming-Pe-Da-Hwi and every district has one or two pastors and several churches and chapels.

Shaowu district is an important district in Ming-Pe-Da-Hwi. So, I should tell you about that. There are four pastors in Shaowu—three Chinese and one American missionary. Besides the pastors, there are several preachers to help the pastors. There are three churches and many chapels in this district, but many chapels were closed several years ago because the communists came and no workers served it. There are many big buildings for church schools and hospitals. Twenty years ago there was a high school named Hem-Mei at East Gate. There are many buildings for school and the residences of Rev. and Mrs. Charles L. Storrs, Miss J. C. Walker and Miss Bement—they built their own houses surrounding the school. All these buildings made a beautiful campus there. So, many students studied in that school and many have now become famous men in Shaowu or Fukien or other parts of China.

At South Gate, there was an agricultural experimental farm. Mr. Riggs, an American missionary, studied agriculture there. The farm contains rice fields, horticulture, orchards, meadows and trees planted on the hill to make a forest there.

North Gate was the most important part in Shaowu Church because there were three schools—one kindergarten, one girls' high school and one women's school and hospital. The hospital is a big five-story building. Fifteen years ago, the communists came to Shaowu and destroyed everything in Shaowu. The Christian hospital and schools were destroyed by them, too.

Ham-Mai School is reopening this fall. Shaowu Church asked my second brother, Silas Chang, to serve as a principal. He was graduated from Fukien Christian University six years ago. He was a dean and teacher in F. C. U. Agriculture High School and other Provincial High Schools about six years. He is very interested in agriculture and young people's fellowship work. He hopes he can come to America to get more knowledge and better to train himself.

The Christian hospital was reopened last year. UNRRA and American

THANK OFFERING—1948.

By REV. F. B. EUTSLER, Chairman
Southern Convention CWVR.

As chairman of the Southern Convention Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction permit me, first of all, to thank the women of our Convention for taking CWVR as the object of their special Thank Offering in November. As most of you know, this is the last year of CWVR—though not the last year of our effort as a denomination in behalf of war-sufferers. In 1949 and 1950 all of our benevolence giving, for home and foreign missions and for "emergency services" will be unified under a single appeal to be known as "Our World Mission," and one million dollars has been put into the budget for 1949 under "emergency services" to continue our ministry of healing and relief for those whom war has reduced to pitiable need. We await the launching of Our Christian World Mission with thrilling expectation, but 1949 is three months away and we still have an enormous job to do.

A few days ago I attended the meeting of the State CWVR Chairmen in New York and there I heard discouraging news. As of September 1st (latest figures available) our denomination is short of its three year goal for CWVR by approximately $900,000.00. Of this amount the Southern Convention has been asked to raise this year only $8,917.49, but while our giving is slightly in excess of this time last year, we have contributed to date only $2,109.61, leaving a balance of $6,807.88 to be raised before December 31.

I wish you could have been with me at this meeting as we listened to first-hand reports from the members of our deputation to Europe this summer. Homelessness and hunger are still appalling. Millions of people still live at a sub-human level with less than the necessities of life, and with no hope that their situation will ever be better. Though we were discouraged by the news that we have fallen so far short in our giving, each State Chairman left that meeting with the determination to do his level best in the remaining three months of 1948 to raise the balance of the money which we have pledged ourselves to contribute as our denomination's share in the vast work of Christian compassion to war victims. I came away encouraged by the knowledge that standing behind our Southern Convention effort are the loyal women of our fellowship who never fail at anything to which they turn their hands.

May I clear up one possible source of confusion. The Thank Offering of the women is "over and above" the efforts of each local church, and because the women have agreed to help does not mean that any church can sit back complacently and think that the job will be done. In July a letter went out to each local church asking it to adopt voluntarily a quota for CWVR. Some churches have indicated that they will accept their quotas, but many are still to be heard from, and even if each church adopts its quota we will still need the generous giving of all our women's societies to go over the top. For the past two years our Southern Convention goal was $7,000 a year, or 14,000 for the bi-ennium. During that period we raised $13,125.47. In other words, we failed to reach our two-year goal by the amount of $874.53. As your Chairman, I hope very much that with your assistance we will not only attain our enlarged goal for 1948, but also make up the deficit of $874.53.

With the help of each church and each women's society we can do it. We are proud of the record of our Convention for increased apportionment giving. Let us wipe the slate clean on CWVR so that we can enter into Our Christian World Mission with a triumphant sense of having completed all our obligations.

May I suggest one or two practical steps whereby we can assure the success of our joint effort.

(1) Ask your minister what plans have been made to raise your church's quota for CWVR. Perhaps the letter of July lies buried on his desk. As a minister I know how easy it is for important matters to get buried on desks while the more immediate concerns of our own churches engage our attention.

(2) Plan now to make your Thank Offering the biggest success it has ever been. If necessary supplement it by a sacrificial meal, or by an auction of useful articles contributed by the members of your organization, or examine your treasury to see if there aren't some few extra dollars that can be spared. I venture the assertion that there are enough surplus funds in the treasuries of our women's societies to more than reach our Convention's goal.

(3) Write me (c/o The United Church, Raleigh, N. C.) for any materials that may be useful. There are some excellent materials available, including new descriptive folders, milk bottle labels, attractive offering envelopes for each of the next three months, inspiring services of worship for the dedication of CWVR gifts, one for each of the next three months, available in quantity. I have these supplies on hand and as soon as they run out I will request more.

In the words of your President, Mrs. O. H. Paris, in a recent issue, let us, with God's help, "make this our largest Thank Offering."

NEWS FROM LOCAL SOCIETIES.

PALM STREET, GREENSBORO.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Palm Street Christian Church had a very successful year under the leadership of Mrs. Pearl Hall, President.

We held twelve monthly meetings, with Vice-President Mrs. G. H. Hammer in charge of the programs.

In November the Thank Offering service was held at the church, with Mrs. W. F. Worsham as leader. We were fortunate to have Mrs. W. E. Wisseman as guest speaker for this service.

For acts of Friendly Service, sunshine baskets were sent to the shut-ins.

Our Christmas meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Hall. The guest speaker was Mrs. Murray. Pollyanna gifts were exchanged. Several boxes were sent to Miss Angie Crew, our missionary in Japan. Members of our society joined with other societies for the World Day of Prayer. Boxes of clothing were prepared and given in the city-wide collection for the needy in Europe.

On April 17, the society gave a spaghetti supper at the Community House for the young people of the church, after which Miss Lois Brady gave the book review, Great Is the Company. She had maps and took us for an imaginary trip around the world. At this meeting, all voted to organize a Young People's Society in our church.

On May 3, Miss Ruth Taylor invited the young girls of the church for a buffet supper, after which the

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

PARIS MEMORANDUM No. III.

[Prepared by Walter W. Van Kirk, Secretary of the Department of International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Dr. Van Kirk is attending the General Assembly as the accredited observer of the Federal Council of Churches.]

PALESTINE.

Introduction.

For thirty years the problem of Palestine has baffled the world's leading statesmen. Great Britain, weary of its responsibilities as the Mandatory Power, asked the United Nations to take over. The General Assembly at its second regular session in 1947, recommended that Palestine be divided into Arab and Jewish states, with an economic union. It was further recommended that Jerusalem be internationalized under the United Nations.

Great Britain declared herself to be unwilling to aid in the implementation of the recommendation against the will of either party. The Arab states refused to abide by the recommendation. The United States, which had favored partition, opposed the use of force to ensure partition. A special session of the General Assembly was convened in May, 1948, to consider the question of establishing a temporary trusteeship for Palestine. Instead, the General Assembly appointed Count Folke Bernadotte of Sweden as Mediator for Palestine.

Upon the expiration of the British Mandate on May 15, 1948, the Jews solemnly proclaimed the establishment of the State of Israel within the boundaries previously recommended by the General Assembly. Fierce fighting ensued between Jewish and Arab forces, particularly in Jerusalem. Truce appeals by the United Nations Security Council were largely ignored. Subsequently a four weeks' truce was agreed to under terms worked out by the Mediator. Thereafter, the Security Council, on July 15, 1948, issued a cease fire order. Scattered fighting continued. The situation remained tense.

Count Bernadotte Is Assassinated.

Count Bernadotte, on September 16, 1948, sent a letter to Secretary-General Trygve Lie urging that Palestine again be placed upon the General Assembly agenda. On the very next day Count Bernadotte was assassinated in open defiance of his privileged position as an official of the United Nations. I can testify to the fact that the murder of the UN Mediator profoundly disturbed the delegates of the General Assembly as they gathered in the Palais de Chaillot. Little else was talked about. The UN flag flew at half mast. Within a matter of hours Palestine had become the most immediately pressing of the many issues confronting the General Assembly.

Bernadotte's Recommendations.

Shortly before his untimely passing Count Bernadotte had transmitted to the Secretary-General a Progress Report which embodied his recommendations as Mediator. These recommendations were predicated upon the following premises: harmonious relations should be restored between Arab and Jew; a Jewish state called Israel exists in Palestine and there are no sound reasons for assuming that it will not continue to do so; the boundaries of the new state must finally be fixed by the parties concerned or, failing that, by the United Nations; adherence to the principle of geographical homogeneity and integration should apply to Arab and Jewish territories; the right of innocent people uprooted from their homes by the present terror and ravages of war to return to their homes should be affirmed; the City of Jerusalem should be accorded special and separate treatment; there should be international guarantees, as a means of allaying existing fears, and particularly with regard to boundaries and human rights.

In consideration of these premises the following conclusions and recommendations were reached by Count Bernadotte:

1. Hostilities should be pronounced formally ended either by mutual agreement of the parties or, failing that, by the United Nations. The existing truce should be superseded by a formal peace or, at the minimum, an armistice which would involve either complete withdrawal and demobilization of armed forces or their wide separation by creation of demilitarized zones.

2. The frontiers between the Arab and Jewish territories, in the absence of agreement between Arabs and Jews should be established by the United Nations with certain revisions in the boundaries previously defined by the General Assembly including the giving of Galilee to the Jews and the Negeb to the Arabs.

3. The disposition of the territory of Palestine not included in the Jewish state should be left to the Governments of the Arab states, special thought being given to the wisdom of merging the Arab territory of Palestine with the territory of Transjordan.

4. The United Nations should undertake to assure that the boundaries between the Arab and Jewish terriories shall be respected and maintained.

5. The port of Haifa should be declared a free port.

6. The airport of Lydda should be declared a free airport.

7. The City of Jerusalem should be treated separately and should be placed under effective United Nations control, with full safeguards for the protection of the Holy Places and sites and free access to them, and for religious freedom.

8. The right of unimpeded access to Jerusalem should be fully respected.

9. The right of the Arab refugees to return to their homes in Jewish-controlled territory should be affirmed by the United Nations, and their repatriation, resettlement and rehabilitation should be supervised and assisted by the United Nations.

10. The political, economic, social and religious rights of all Arabs in the Jewish territory of Palestine and all Jews in the Arab territory of Palestine should be fully guaranteed and respected.

11. The United Nations should establish a Palestine Conciliation Commission for supervisory purposes and to report promptly to the United Nations any developments in Palestine likely to alter such arrangements as may be approved by the United Nations or to threaten the peace of the area.

Definitive Action by UN Demanded.

Had Count Bernadotte not been assassinated the above recommendations might have been regarded as just another set of propositions to be voted up or down for political reasons unrelated to the actual state of affairs of Palestine. The murder of the UN Mediator, however, has invested these recommendations with a significance that is forcing the hand of the General Assembly. There is a feeling here that the UN is now required to take whatever steps may be necessary to restore and maintain peace in Palestine. Moreover, by contrast to the situation prevailing a year ago, the State of Israel has been established and further debate as to the wisdom or unwisdom of creating such a state would seem to be academic and wholly unrealistic.

Secretary of State Marshall has announced that the United States will press for the full acceptance of the Bernadotte recommendations. "My Government," said Secretary Marshall, "is of the opinion that the conclusions are sound, and strongly urges the parties and the General Assembly

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE.

The annual Fall Meeting of the Eastern Virginia Young People's Missionary Conference will be held at the Suffolk Christian Church, Sunday, October 24.

This article is intended to give each of you a better knowledge of Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and her team of international and national leaders who will be with us.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill is Educational Secretary of our Missions Council and is the leader of the excellent team. She is one of "our folks," having been born and reared in North Carolina and being a graduate of Elon College.

With her in Suffolk will be Rev. Harold W. Case of Fort Berthold, Indian Mission Reservation, Elbowoods, South Dakota. He went to stay one year but stayed 21 years. Why he stayed and what has been done in the intervening years is a fascinating story which Mr. Case will relate to us.

Another member of the team will be Dr. Alan B. Taylor, Medical Superintendent of the McCord Zulu Hospital, Durban, South Africa. He is home on furlough for the first time in ten years. He is head of the first and finest hospital for Africans in Natal, one of South Africa's four provinces.

Also appearing with the team will be Dr. Hiroshi Hatanaka, President of Kobe College, Kobe, Japan. Dr. Hatanaka is a Christian educator and pastor and it was he who guided Kobe College safely through the disastrous years of World War II.

The program is as follows:

THEME: "One World Through Christian Fellowship."

3:20 Prelude.

3:30 Worship Service—Damascus Y. P. Business Session (Minutes, awarding of attendance banners, reports, etc.) Special Music.

This Year's Literature—Mrs. Robert M. Kimball.

Benediction.

Young people, we urge you to come for we are sure the messages you hear on October 24 will really be worthwhile. We are depending on your attendance.

MRS. MELVIN P. BRINKLEY,
Supt. of Young People.

AN INVITATION TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Invitation is extended to all young people of Western North Carolina and North Carolina and Virginia Conferences to attend a two-conference meeting at Greensboro, N. C., on Sunday, October 31. The First Church of Greensboro will be the host church. Austin Lane, president of Pilgrim Stewards, in speaking for the young people of his church, has extended the invitation.

Here are several excerpts from his letter: "We are very happy to have you come to our church and to be able to have an outstanding event as part of the meeting. I refer to the team of persons which is touring the South. . . . Briefly, the Team is composed of Pattie Lee Coghill, Dr. Hatanaka, Dr. Alan Taylor, Rev. Harold Case and Rev. Stanley U. North. . . . Treats of the evening program will be the excellent missionary film, 'Letter from China,' and a talk by Dr. Hatanaka."

The program is as follows:

2:30 Registration.

3:00 Opening Worship.

3:15 Panel—Discussion of the plans adopted by the Pilgrim Fellowship Council: C. Baxter Twiddy, presiding; Bill Scott, Jr., Social Action Chairman; Melva Foster, Missionary Action Chairman; Evelyne Moore, Interdenominational Action Chairman.

Business Session.

Panel—Team headed by Pattie Lee Coghill.

5:00 Adjournment.

5:30 Supper (bring your sandwiches; the church will furnish the drink).

6:30 Movie: "Letter from China."

Talk by Dr. Hatanaka.

Closing Worship led by Fleta Moffitt, Personal Action Chairman.

In closing his letter, Austin Lane says, "We shall be looking forward to seeing you and the young people from your church at this conference."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

to accept them in their entirety as the best possible basis for bringing peace to a distracted land."

Secretary-General Trygve Lie has made it clear that he will urge the UN to provide adequate protection for its representatives in Palestine and in other areas of unrest to which UN representatives have been or may be sent.

Britain's Foreign Secretary, Mr. Ernest Bevin, told the House of Commons that the British will give "whole hearted and unqualified support" to the Palestine settlement proposals of Count Bernadotte, and urged that these proposals "be considered as a single integrated plan and put into operation in their entirety." This marks the first time that Great Britain has taken so categorical a stand in support of a Jewish state.

At this writing the State of Israel has promised to study the Bernadotte proposals objectively while at the same time protesting against the provisions bearing upon Jerusalem and the suggested ceding of the Negeb to the Arabs. Arab leaders have rejected the proposals in their entirety. The Arab League has countered by setting up an Arab government for Palestine despite the opposition of King Abdullah of Transjordan.

Such are the facts that should be borne in mind as the UN debate on Palestine gets under way.

As a matter of simple economics, the liquor traffic is a burden upon every other industry, every profession and every trade. Its end effect is to curtail income, decrease output, depreciate credit, and impair or destroy the financial independence of both drinkers and abstainers.

WISDOM LITERATURE IN THE BIBLE.

(TEMPERANCE LESSON.)

MEMORY SELECTION: He that walketh uprightly, walketh surely.—Proverbs 10:9.

LESSON: Proverbs 1:8; 3:3a; 4:1; 6:27-28; 8:1-11; 10:1-9; 15:1; 18:9; 22:1a 25 13ab, 28; Ecclesiastes 1-3; James 3:13-18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: James 3:13-18.

Distilled Wisdom.

The so-called "Wisdom Literature" of the Bible is a collection of wise sayings, or proverbs, a kind of distilled wisdom, the result of long observation and much thought. The classic example is the book of Proverbs, commonly attributed to Solomon. Solomon in fact wrote many of them, but not all of them. Embodied in this collection of proverbs or wisdom literature are many gems of practical wisdom and common-sense which offer guidance for sane and sensible living.

A Wise and Foolish Son.

"A wise son maketh a glad father, but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother." Multitudes of fathers and mothers know how true that is. How many parents there are whose hearts are made glad by the wholesome way in which their children live, and how many parents there are whose hearts are heavy because of the foolishness and the wickedness of their children. Many mothers carry heavy burdens because their children live foolish and futile lives.

Righteousness and Wickedness.

"The treasures of wickedness profit nothing, but righteousness delivereth from death." The pleasure of sin are but for a season. And so are its material gains. Wealth gotten wrongly does not enrich. "Jehovah will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish, but he trusteth away the desire of the wicked." There is a food for the soul that gives strength and sustains the spirit. But eventually evil desires burn the soul out.

The Worker and the Shirker.

"He becometh poor that worketh with a slack hand; but the hand of the diligent maketh rich." It is a principle tested by time. One reason why many people do not rise higher in life is because they do poor work.

They never get any higher because they work for hire. They are clock-watchers, and job-shirkers.

The Future Belongs to Those Who Save.

This is the slogan of an Insurance Company. It finds confirmation in the proverb, "He that gathereth in summer is a wise son, but he that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame." How foolish a man is who would sleep away the days when the wheat was ripe for the harvest, or the loaded peach trees were ready to give up their ripened fruit. The wise man saves something for a rainy day. We can learn of the ant and the squirrel in this matter.

The Memory of the Righteous and the Wicked.

"The memory of the righteous is blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot." Call the roll of the cruel and the wicked men of history—Nero to Hitler, gangsters Capone and Dillinger, the Nazi monsters, masters of the prison and concentration camps—their names stink to high heaven. But recall the good men, whose name is legion, not only the great, but the humble good folks we have known, and their names and memories comes as a blessing and benediction to those who know them.

Wise Man, Foolish Man.

"The wise in heart will receive commandments, but the prating fool shall fall." The wise man heeds advice, he knows he does not know it all, he knows this is a moral universe and he gives heed to its laws. But the foolish man "knows it all." He is wise in his own conceits. And sooner or later he falls, and great is the fall thereof.

Certainty Amid Uncertainty.

"He that walketh uprightly, walketh surely." We live in a world of uncertainty. There are so many things that we do not and cannot know about. But he that walketh uprightly, walketh surely. He can be certain that he will come out all right. To be sure religion and righteousness is no guarantee against trouble but they are guarantee against defeat. "He that perverteth his ways shall be known." Be sure your sins will find you out. There is nothing hidden that shall not be revealed. Let every man take heed how he walketh.

Vanity, Vanity, Vanity.

The man who wrote Ecclesiastes had lived long and he had lived well so far as material comforts were concerned. He had tasted life at many points and he had sought pleasure in many quarters. Like many a modern man he had turned to drink to find cheer and comfort. But in the end he found that it was vanity, altogether vanity. God has made us for Himself and our hearts are restless until they rest in Him. Christ satisfieth the hungry soul, and only He who is the Bread of Life can satisfy man who cannot live by bread alone.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

Young People's Circle was organized with twelve charter members present and Mrs. Pearl Hall, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman and Rev. J. L. Neese. Miss Carl Wallace was elected president and Mrs. Hall, counselor.

Family Night was held on Saturday, May 15, with about fifty attending. After a picnic supper, Mrs. Jerome Crabtree presented a well-planned program suitable for the occasion. Miss Ruth Taylor led in many interesting games, after which Curtis Brady and Junior Hall showed several rolls of films. A Life Membership was bought by the society for the Richard Jacksons.

A vesper service was held at the Guilford Battleground in August, with the young people in charge of the program. A picnic supper followed, and a special offering was taken for the Post-War Emergency Program. A large number attended.

The pastor, Rev. J. L. Neese, gave the Bible study book, Thy Kingdom Come, at a Sunday evening church service.

We covet your prayers that we may do more for our Lord during the coming year.

PLEASANT RIDGE (G).

The Woman's Missionary Society of Pleasant Ridge Congregational Christian Church is glad to report another successful year's work under the leadership of our capable president, Mrs. J. Wright Pegram. We held eleven monthly meetings with good attendance. Our programs have been planned by different members of the society each month.

The devotional booklet and two study books have been used in the society. In November our Thank Offering program was given in our church, with Mrs. O. H. Paris of Greensboro as speaker.

Clothing has been collected for war victims. At Easter, as usual, we sent clothes to the Orphanage at Elon. Two Life Memberships have been given this year. A box of dish towels was sent to Franklinton.

The annual Woman's Conference and Rally were attended by part of our members. We have tried to bring what cheer we could to the sick and shut-ins by sending flowers and cards to them. The young people's society of our church is doing a splendid work. We work jointly together, which makes our work more pleasant and enjoyable.

We want to thank our beloved pastor and his wife, Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, for the service rendered us the past year.

Now, as we start on another year's work, may we work harder and do more than we have in the past year. Jesus is saying to us today as he said to his Disciples over nineteen hundred years ago: "Go, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end."

MRS. S. F. HUFFINE,
Secretary.

INSTITUTIONAL MINISTRY.

was well enough that she could be permitted to get up from her bed for one meal a day, but she had grown so much in the several years that she had nothing which she could wear to the dining room. Some of the women from a church circle in Richmond made a trip to Charlottesville with patterns, and pins, and tape measures, and soon our little girl was outfitted. This service meant a great deal more than mere clothes for our cheerful little girl had no family and she was thrilled to make new friends who wrote to her occasionally and at such times as birthdays and Christmas sent her small gifts. I am happy to report that the girl's health continued to improve and that the day came when she could leave the institution healthy in mind and body and still possessed of a radiant personality and an unshakeable faith in a loving Heavenly Father.

One day a Negro came to the Chaplain's office at the penitentiary and said, "These mens ain't treatin me right." His story was that he had been sentenced for a period of three years but the prison records showed six years. Strictly speaking, this was not the Chaplain's job, but the prisoner had asked other persons and he had not been satisfied with their answers. The job would have been more appropriate for a lawyer or at least a social worker, but the Chaplain started writing letters and after some exchanges of correspondence with the Clerk of Court it was discovered that the prisoner's story was correct. In some way two copies of his conviction had been typed and so the record office of the prison had added three and three, total six. The extra and erroneous paper was withdrawn.

The most difficult part of my ministry is in connection with the men who are condemned to die in the electric chair. In the cell block where these men are kept the Chaplain sees many tragedies and some exhibitions of implicit faith. One such demonstration of faith I shall never forget. A young man whose faith in God was primitive but unshakeable was watching another man go down the corridor for the last time and called to him saying, "Willie, when you see the Master tell him about me." It was not the comment of one who takes his religion lightly, but the sincere expression of simple trust in a Heavenly Father.

The children who arrive at the industrial schools are usually frightened and undernourished. They need food for both soul and body and they need to have their confidence in mankind restored. Most of them have had unfortunate experiences which have led them to distrust almost everyone, and it takes several days for them to react to the kindness of the school staff and to accept the friendship and the helping hand of the religious worker. But after a few days most of them begin to relax and the process of rebuilding and rehabilitation begins. Our religious worker at one of the girls' schools had this experience with a nine-year-old girl who was listed as "incurable." Although it seemed impossible that a young girl could be so incurable, the religious worker reports that this child was just about the most hardened individual that she had ever seen. This girl did not relax. She trusted no one. She believed no one and was convinced that no one intended to help her in any way. Months went by and every effort of staff people and of the religious worker appeared to fail. Our religious worker was a devoted and sincere Christian who never quit trying, and one night in December as they were returning from rehearsing a Christmas play—a night that was clear and cold, with a multitude of stars in the sky—this worker felt a hand slip into hers and looking down was surprised to find that it was the little girl who trusted no one. She was further surprised when she said, "You know, I think it must have been on a night like this that Jesus was born." The worker said nothing but held that little hand firmly as they walked across the campus. That was the opening wedge that led to the salvation and the rehabilitation of the little girl who had been labelled "incurable."

I've told you some stories of prisoners who said they were innocent and that they'd been charged with offences which they did not commit. Sometimes we find the reverse to be true; as for example, one man with whom I was talking who was serving a term for bigamy. I soon learned that he should have been charged with "trigonometry."

One more story and I'm through. This one has to do with a boy who ran away from the industrial school in Powhatan County and got lost in the woods. He became frightened and began to pray. He promised God that if he could just get out of the woods he would go back to the school and finish his sentence and not only that—he promised God that he would surrender his life and live according to the pattern that Jesus set for us. The boy did eventually make his way out of the woods and he did return to the school and reported to the superintendent. The superintendent sent for me because we have no chaplain at this industrial school. I arrived three days later—much too late—to find that the boy's experience was real and that he was anxious to take the next step in his religious growth. I wrote to a minister in the community where his parents lived, for although his father was a drunkard, his mother was a Christian woman and a church member. The minister called on the mother and secured from her a promise that she would write for her church letter and join the church in the community where she was living. When next I visited the school the boy told me with great joy and enthusiasm, "I got a letter from the minister and he says that I can join the church the first Sunday that I am home. Mom and I will be together again." We were lucky with this boy. We cannot afford to trust to "luck" again. We must have a full-time chaplain at this industrial school. The Christian people of Virginia cannot afford to miss the missionary opportunity in our state institutions. This work is home missions at its best, and missions, like charity, begin at home.

More than five hundred persons are reported to have died in the holiday week-end over the Fourth of July. How many of these died because of increased recklessness, induced by alcoholic beverages?

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The Thanksgiving period is the time of year that we are allowed to make special appeals to the churches, Sunday schools, and individuals for offerings. It is the time we should take inventory of the blessings God has granted to us during the year. As we count them one by one we will find that they will add up far more than we had expected. After you have added them all up, realizing that you have been blessed with a good home, good health, good crops or salary, then ask yourself this question, "What have I done for others?" Nearly one hundred little children at our orphanage without a home, fatherless, motherless and dependent, what have I done for them during the year 1948?

Mr. R. H. Coble and family of near Burlington, N. C., sent in the first Thanksgiving offering this year. For several years he and his family have had this honor. We sometimes wonder out of our thirty-three thousand members why more of our people do not send us special offerings. It would be such a help to us in this work of love.

We expect the churches to send in their Conference Apportionment of $12,500, but what is $12,500 in running the orphanage at the present prices? These apportionments were set several years ago when prices were low. But for several years, now, they have climbed to a very high peak, some articles three times as high as they were several years ago. We are taking care of as many children as ever, but it is impossible to care for them now as we did several years ago with the high prices to contend with and the income far below normal.

At this Thanksgiving season won't you open your hearts and make a real offering to make it possible to give the homeless a home. Other orphanages in North Carolina give liberally toward the support of their institution. Our Baptist friends have seven hundred children in their care. We notice in their orphanage paper, the October 14 issue, that their churches have already sent in during 1948 the sum of $243,804.35. We feel sure that they will receive $200,000 more by the end of this year through the Thanksgiving period. The Methodist, Presbyterian and other orphanages will receive according to the number of children in their care. These denominations think orphans are worthy and they see to it that they are supplied with money to take care of their children. How about the Congregational Christian denomination.

ABOUT SHAOWU CHURCH.

Board helped it very much, but the doctors and nurses are still few. I hope the hospital can ask more doctors and nurses working in it to glorify God's love.

Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson and Dr. and Mrs. Edward C. Riggs came to Shaowu last year. They did a good job in Shaowu and Christians like them very much. Mr. Jackson walked through seven counties to visit every church and chapel with Dr. Riggs last fall. There is no good highway to every village except town to town. So we do not have bus line to every village but we can drive jeep, bicycle or motorcycle freely. So, I hope he can get one of them and it would help his work very much. Everything is new in Shaowu Church after they came. They can speak Chinese very well now. Mr. Jackson had several speeches in Chinese for Sunday service and young people's fellowship. Mrs. Jackson had several speeches in Chinese for young people's fellowship and women's prayer meetings. Dr. and Mrs. Riggs work as hard as they can for the hospital. Dr. Riggs can write many Chinese characters and read Chinese books pretty well.

The problems of Shaowu Church are: The pastors of Shaowu Church their work is very heavy because they are all more than fifty years old and have must serve church work and also arrange school and hospital work. So, Christians hope for young men to attend to church work and more missionaries to Shaowu, especially young women, because women's work in Shaowu is very important part of work in Shaowu church.

Ham-Mai High School is reopening this fall. I wonder that they can reopen that school successfully with only one thousand dollars for establishment fund and teachers' salary in one year. I believe that they want some more equipment and better teachers for students.

The Christian hospital began work again last year. Dr. and Mrs. Riggs and other Chinese doctors worked hard as they could but still need more doctors, nurses and equipment because the Christian hospital is only big hospital in North Fukien. They have an X-ray machine in Shaowu, but they don't have a powerful generator for it. So, they couldn't use it for cure.

In church we are son of God. Let us help together. Let us stand as close as we can toward the brotherhood of man.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Here I am—writing to the parents again, and calling special attention to the following article on jealousy by Janette Stevenson Murray.

We have two new babies in our neighborhood—they represent well the conditions described below. In the first family, there were three, mother, father and a four-year-old girl. She is what I call “spoiled”—more than that, she is constantly demanding the attention of all about her. Although her parents told her about the coming of a new baby, they mistakenly told her she was going to have “a dear little playmate.” Eventually, but not now at two months! Already an unhappy child, she is now miserable. On the other hand, there is a family of five, mother, father and three children who welcomed a new sister. Their mother read the Golden Book, A New Baby, to them; she let them choose what clothing to take to the hospital for the new babe to wear home, and on her return she remembered to bring each of them a tiny remembrance. In addition she introduced (very seriously, too!) each of the children to the new little girl and then she hugged them all close to her and said a prayer for their growing family. When this baby broke into her first smile, the children were delighted their mother tells me, and they jumped up and down saying, “She can laugh, she can smile with us now.” Their mother also says that this tiny infant tries to hold her head up when she hears one of the children near her.

God made families to grow together in love and happiness. Jealousy is an ugly, cruel thing. We are told that no child can be altogether free of it, for instance, the second child yearns to be as old as the first, and the third would like to be as old as the second, but gross jealousy need not be.

Have you planted a seed of jealousy in your children lately? You have if you set your children against each other by saying such things as “Look, Sister, John’s able to wash his hands, why are you so slow and dumb and have to be helped?” or “I do wish you were as smart in school as your brother.” Why not—“John’s hands are already washed, may I help you?” The suggestion of John’s “already washed” should be enough. As for the comparison, always, always praise children for their good points. This bit of psychology will pay untold dividends with children, parents and the world in general.

Jealousy is not flattering as some people may consider it. It is an unhealthy thing and unnecessary.

THE NEW BABY.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.
(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Many people think that those unadjusted persons whom they know—sometimes called “queer”—were born that way, but the doctors who study and treat mental diseases, the psychiatrists, are pointing out that a child is not born with peculiar behavior patterns. He develops these patterns as a result of faulty procedures on the part of those responsible for his upbringing.

These unnatural mannerisms can often be traced back through the college career, the high school, junior high school, and the grades, to the pre-school years. In other words, they begin with the little child in the home, under the parents’ care.

One of the most frequent causes of such peculiarities is a childhood resentment of a new baby brother or sister. It fastens itself upon the older child, hindering him from making proper social adjustments.

“I have watched my little neighbor, Mary, from year to year,” said one of a group of students. “Mary had a typical case of jealousy following the birth of a baby brother. And no wonder! Although previously treated with the utmost tenderness and solicitude, after the baby came no one had any time for the child, except to tease her about having her ‘nose put out of joint’ and to laugh at her resulting temper.

“In spite of her four years, Mary kept trying to hurt the baby. Then her parents punished her—when they should have given her more attention and love.

“She has never recovered from either this jealousy or its effects upon her. It has warped her—so that she is now secretive, unresponsive, and cannot get along with other children. She is developing bitterness and an inferiority complex, because she thinks no one cares as much for her as they do for her brother. The misunderstanding parents continue to punish her and to point out her queer-ness, disagreeableness, and general contrariness.”

Psychologists tell us that jealousy has been observed in children as young as twelve or fifteen months. Instead of taking these early manifestations seriously, parents often think them cute.

When Nathan Thompson petted his new baby, eighteen-month-old Ruth acted like a little spitfire. This jealousy amused the young father, so every time he came into the house he teased Ruth by showing great attention to the baby.

This teasing started a deep-seated jealousy in Ruth. She gave way to crying spells and tantrums, and she became bad-tempered and generally difficult.

As years passed, her trouble was aggravated by constant comparison being made between her and her happy and more popular sister. Her mother would say, “Oh, I do wish Ruth could be more like her younger sister.”

Both Mary and Ruth were normal children at first. In each instance it was jealousy of the new baby that had made the little girls odd and unsocial.

The other day we were in the home of a young mother who understood how to deal with her three-year-old son, who soon would no longer be “the baby.”

She said, “Two or three weeks before our baby was born, we told Bobby he was to have a little brother or sister. Bobby at once took our attitude that this would be perfectly lovely. He was intensely interested in helping us to change the guest room into a nursery. Every detail fascinated him. He had to be shown the clothes over and over as well as the basket with its toilet articles. He was ready to love the baby, wanted to help us take care of him, and he looked forward to having a playmate. After the baby came, we were careful that there should be no disillusionment. Bobby was made to feel that he was needed more than ever before, because of his little brother, and everything he did took on increased importance for him. We have never detected any feeling of jealousy.”

Men are often capable of greater things than they perform. They are sent into the world with bills of credit, and seldom draw to their full extent.

Why We Must Advance

By DR. RALPH E. DIFFENDORFER

"The foreign mission work of the churches has come to the parting of the ways. Either we are going to rise to the opportunities that are before us today or we are going to be moved increasingly upon the sidelines and other forces and agencies are coming forward with positive programs to meet the world's needs, agencies and forces that will not touch the deep spirit of life and satisfy the moral and spiritual longings of the people. We are confronting here and now as a Foreign Missions Conference our place in the life of the churches in the next twenty-five years.

"Our major concern now in foreign missions is not to consider methods of deploying our present resources more effectively but to turn our attention to ways and means by which we can greatly enlarge our resources. That is the challenge that the present situation puts before us, and I do not mean an increase of merely ten or fifteen per cent. The situation in the world today demands that the Church take a new look at its task overseas and do something comparable to meet it. When the need exists and is presented with conviction and when there is vision and power behind the movement and when an actual crisis is on, Christian people will give more than they are now giving. My proposal today is that for the next period we turn our attention to preparing a program of advance—an advance that is somewhat comparable with the need.

"What is the basis for an advance? First of all, the need of the world itself. For instance, what is it about Japan that has been on our lips so much? Here is a whole nation which has had its traditional moral and spiritual props knocked out from under it. Here is a call from our national Christians, and one from the military authorities. And, remember that while we are working on the university for the intellectual, there are forces in Japan today laying foundations among the common people that may determine the future of Japan. What is our program for them? Have we got anything to say to them? Not yet. No plan whatever. We ought to approach this problem by saying to ourselves, "What is our program for bringing Christ to Japan in this day?" and have that so well thought out that if any of us should have the experience of a man laying down $100,000 for this purpose, we would know how to expend it.

"My second point is this: America is ready for such a program and desires us to speak; indeed, is urging us to speak. There are a good many reasons for this. One of them is that the war has enlarged the horizons of American vision and interest. It was not an insignificant thing when recently one of our denominations brought together 600 G. I.'s to find out what they thought the war had done to their personal religious experience and what they expected of the churches, that the two addresses that brought those men to their feet were made by a missionary editor and a national bishop from India.

"There are many people in America who have a fear that we will fail to undertake something big in the face of the world's present chaos and desperation. They fear that the world will be made over only on the surface. They fear that many forces will try to eliminate poverty and illiteracy, only to have riches not used for the common good, only to have new literates reading salacious, derogatory literature with nothing else in hand. Yes, there will be attempts to cure the surface ills of the world, but it remains for the Christian Church to see to it that the deeper needs of men are met. Nobody else is going to do that. America is ready for that note. The great scientists are ready. They realize more than we do that something big and powerful has got to be done by the churches of America and of the world in order to curb the power of atomic energy and use it for constructive purposes. The scientists are with us. Far-sighted business men are with us. The magazines and periodicals will open to us.

"America is ready for this challenge. The raising of big sums of money for relief and reconstruction programs have prepared the way. Let none of us become discouraged because some say that since we have raised $25,000,000 and $14,000,000 and $2,000,000 we must lay off for awhile. Such giving is just prying open the springs of giving, and paving ways for giving in larger and bigger ways.

"I would like to see the Foreign Missions Conference begin now definitely to plan for a larger and more effective witness to the gospel and Christ's way of life on the background of the world's present-day need. We must lift our support up into two, three, or four times what the Church is now doing. Let us be courageous enough to challenge this America of ours with the fact that this is the most important business in the life of America today and that it challenges the whole direction of the Christian Church."

Consecration Prayer for Superintendent's Home

By MRS. O. H. PARIS, President of Woman's Convention

O God our Heavenly Father, we thank thee for the homes from which each one of us has come, shrined in hallowed affection and memories; where duty is made sacred and love nurtured and where we are free to worship and call thee Father.

We ask thy divine blessing on homes—humbled homes—all homes wherever families live and abide; may there be in them true accord, loving sacrifice and unfailing loyalty.

In this broken world we know there are many who are homeless, who are deprived of the security of home life. We ask thy blessing on them. May they, in their plight and loneliness, have a sense of oneness in the larger household of God.

And now, O Father, we give thee thanks for this particular home—set with special significance and worth among us. We are conscious of all those who helped to make this home possible—the planner, the builders, the contributors—and out of the depths of our gratitude we pause to ask thy presence in this home, now and always. May thy Presence here be a means of giving thee larger access to all our dwelling places and increasing welcome in every home. May the faith that has inspired men and women through the generations so abound in this home that new fires may be set burning on the altars of all homes.

We pray that this home may be the example of that which all our homes should be in love and goodness. May the Good Shepherd come in and out freely and find a true resting place here that all our homes may feel the influence of his redeeming fellowship radiating from these walls.

“Bless the four corners of this house,
And be the lintel blest;
And bless the hearth and bless the board
And bless each place of rest;
And bless the door that opens wide
To stranger as to kin;
And bless each crystal window pane
That lets the starlight in;
And bless the roof-tree overhead
And every sturdy wall
The peace of man, the peace of God,
The peace of love on all.”

Amen.

News Flashes

It is earnestly hoped that every Sunday school in the Southern Convention will receive a special offering this fifth Sunday for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation at Elon. Let's go "over the top"—now!

Many people renew their CHRISTIAN SUN subscriptions at conference. Superintendent Scott will attend the Eastern Virginia Conference at South Norfolk next week and will be happy to receive the subscriptions and renewals from your church. There should be many.

Dr. Mildred McAfee Horton has resigned the presidency of Wellesley College to join her husband, Dr. Douglas Horton, minister of the General Council. Mrs. Horton released this statement: "I am resigning in order to join my husband in New York because I am convinced that as a team we can accomplish more than the sum of the accomplishments of each of us working separately."

COMMITTEE ON MINISTRY TO MEET.

The Committee on Christian Education and the Ministry of the Western North Carolina Conference will meet at Asheboro Christian Church, November 1, at 7:00 p. m.

E. CARL BRADY,
Chairman.

THE LAYMEN SPOKE.

Sunday, October 17, the laymen spoke at the Winston-Salem and Pfafftown Churches. At Winston-Salem, S. L. Mauldin, chairman of the Laymen's Fellowship, gave a brief resume of the laymen's work in the church, nationally and in the Southern Convention. He emphasized the value of the laymen being Christian in all of their business relations and being loyal to their local church. Again, in the evening at Pfafftown, Mr. Mauldin spoke and was well received.

Mr. S. R. Peebles, president of the Winston-Salem Church Corporation, led the morning service. One would think he had been in the pulpit before. Mr. W. L. Padgett, superintendent of the Winston-Salem Sunday school, gave a word of appreciation to the men of the local church. The men have just completed installing a hot water system for the kitchen at the church, replacing steps, floors and sills for rest rooms, repainting most of the basement, as well as completing the nursery room. They have spent many long hours of work at the church, for which everyone is truly thankful. Led by C. J. Nelson, the work went smoothly and was well done.

At Pfafftown, Laymen's Sunday was observed as the beginning of the revival meeting there. Besides the message of Mr. Mauldin, Mr. C. E. Fulk spoke of the "Laymen in the Local Church," Mr. E. R. Luper witnessed for his Lord and Master, and Mr. Lee Grubbs spoke of the "Hopes for Our Revival."

This has been one of our foremost services in these two churches. One could feel the impulse of Christian laymen. Though neither church boasts of an active laymen's organization, yet the men at both churches are very active in the work of the churches. It is with appreciation to George Coleclough, president of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention, that the men of our churches are moving forward.

Last August, George Coleclough spoke at the Winston-Salem Church. His coming was sponsored by the laymen of the church and the service that Sunday morning was led by the laymen. Also in August, Mrs. O. H. Paris, president of the women of the Southern Convention, spoke, and her coming was sponsored by the women of the church. The coming of these two fine lay people has brought inspiration to all of us.

W. J. ANDES.

LAYMEN'S SUNDAY AT NEWPORT NEWS.

Our church observed Laymen's Sunday with an unusually fine service, sponsored and presented altogether by the men of the church. Mr. Charles E. Heath, Jr., a member of the Laymen's Fellowship in the Southern Convention, and local representatives in our church, presided over the service and led the devotional service. Richard Moberg offered the morning prayer. A men's chorus of about twenty voices rendered a special number, "Rise Up, O Men of God." Mr. Aubrey T. Jarvis read the Scripture Lesson. Mr. Heath then gave a brief and interesting account of the Layman's Movement, and of the part laymen can play in general in the life and work of the church.

Using as the general theme of the service the words of the prophet, "What doth Jehovah require of thee?" three laymen spoke as follows:

1. In the Home—Richard Moberg.
2. In Business—W. B. Williams.
3. In the Church—G. G. Givens.

It was an interesting and inspiring service, and congratulations are due those who planned and presented the program. I am glad to be pastor of a church which has such good and loyal laymen.

H. S. HARDCASTLE,
Pastor.

MT. CARMEL.

The Mt. Carmel Christian Church enjoyed a lovely service on the first Sunday in October. The attendance was good in both Sunday school and church. Special music was rendered by both Junior and Senior Choirs. One new member was added to the church, and the Loyal Woman's Sunday School Class presented the church with a lovely altar set.

Mrs. Irene Carr, one of the members of the class, said in part, "On behalf of the Loyal Woman's Class of this Sunday school, I wish to present this altar set to this church. May it ever remind us of the love, sacrifice, self-denial and humility of Jesus Christ who died on Calvary's Cross to redeem us from sin, and thus inspire us to greater love and nobler living for Christ and our church."

Rev. J. F. Morgan accepted the gift with appropriate remarks, thanking the class and suggesting that this altar set would be a constant reminder to the church of our loving Lord.

The church really is grateful to this class for this gift, and wishes to thank every member of the class for the part each member had in it.

LONG'S CHAPEL.

The work at Long's Chapel is very encouraging at this time. They have re-elected their present pastor, Rev. G. H. Veazey, for another year and are going back on full time service beginning November 1. The Every-Member Canvass was taken Sunday, October 10, and the budget was over-subscribed twenty per cent. Dr. Jesse H. Dollar held a Stewardship Institute three evenings the week before and great enthusiasm was manifested.

It is very interesting to know that all bills and apportionments are paid for the present conference year and that there is some money in the treasury.

The Woman's Missionary Society was organized in April of this year, and it has grown to be a very active one.

Laymen's Sunday was observed October 17. Prof. J. E. Danieley, a teacher at Elon College, was the guest speaker.

REPORTER.

Southern Convention Office

REV. WM. T. SCOTT, Superintendent

EXECUTIVE BOARD MEETING.

The exhibit of this famous docu-ern Convention met at Elon College,
N. C., October 12-13, at 2:00 p. m., with twenty-one members present and
Dr. John G. Truitt, president, presiding.

Drs. H. S. Harcastle, J. H. Dollar and F. C. Lester were elected to membership on the Board.

Dr. C. E. Newman appeared before the Board and commented on his investigation (on authority of the N. C.
& Va. Conf.) concerning the O'Kelly family cemetery. Upon his recommendation the Board established
"The O'Kelly Memorial Foundation" for the purpose of preserving and earing for the family cemetery in which
Rev. James O'Kelly is buried. The Board elected Dr. Newman as a trustee and the secretary of the Foundation for a term of three years. Additional trustees with terms beginning July 1, 1948, were appointed as follows: Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, three years; Miss Margaret Hall and Mr. H.
S. Basnight, two years; Mill Lillie
Fowler and Rev. Kenneth Register, one year. These trustees were empowered to take such legal actions as necessary to have the Convention become the custodian of the cemetery where the body of Rev. James O'Kelly is buried and right-of-way thereto.
The trustees were also to be the administrators of the Confernce or Convention desires concerning the cemetery. The Board also requested Dr.
Newman to work with Elon College in the development of the church history room at the college.

Reports were head from the Superintendent, Treasurer, Assistant, Treasurer and Field Director (Miss Chi-coine's report was prepared before her leaving and presented, as the others, in mimeographed form).

Dr. Smith and Mr. C. D. Johnston reported on the activity and progress of the college and orphanage, respectively.

Dr. J. H. Dollar, chairman of the Committee for Superintendent's Home reported that the contractor had almost completed his work and that the superintendent and his family had already moved in. The Board urged the churches of the Convention to give all the financial support possible to this committee. A most inspiring and appropriate dedication service was held at the superintendent's home at 5:00 p. m. Those responsible for the preparation of this service are to be highly commended.

Dr. Harrell, chairman of the Committee on Finance, recommended that the budget approved by the Convention be the working budget for each year of the ensuing biennium effective as of July 1, 1948.

The president of the Convention was empowered to appoint a committee to investigate the history of the Ministerial Loan Fund and report at the next session of the Board. The committee for the administration of the Ministerial Loan Fund (Rev. W.
M. Stevens, chairman, Mr. George Col-clough and Dr. John G. Truitt) appointed at the Executive Committee meeting, May 22, was continued until the next meeting of the Board. This committee also authorized to serve as administrator of the "Ministerial Scholarship Fund" until the next meeting of the Board. At that time this same committee is to present to the Executive Board some recommendations for the awarding of the Scholarship Fund.

Upon recommendation of the Finance Committee the Executive Board voted that the calendar year be the fiscal year for our churches and that this matter be submitted by Dr. Truitt to the Conferences, Boards and Institutions of our church for their approval. (This proposal was previously presented as a recommendation from the Mission Board and was suggested in the superintendent's report.)

PRAY FOR MISSIONS.

The way to purge our prayer life is to concentrate on missions. Prayer is the foundation of our Christian World Mission. No spiritual exercise, save that of praying for our enemies, is more Christlike. Therefore let our prayers rise daily, like a great Amen, lifting the missionaries and the mission fields to the throne of grace.

Thank God that mission fields such as Japan, closed during the war, are now providentially reopened to the preaching of the Gospel. . . . Thank God for the remarkable responsiveness evident in many lands where congregations are witnessing many converts. . . . Pray for the valiant Christians in Hiroshima who are struggling to rehabilitate their schools and churches. . . . Pray for the Christian refugees in South Korea and elsewhere. . . . Pray for the missionaries who live under conditions of great physical hardship without adequate fuel for these bleak winter months. . . . Pray for doctors and nurses seeking to maintain hospitals in damaged buildings without sufficient equipment and furnishings, yet ministering in Christlike tenderness to the suffering all around them. . . . Pray for our new missionaries already on the field, and those now preparing for service abroad, that God may lead them into multiplied spiritual victories. . . . Pray for individual Christians, alone in pagan surroundings, that they may bear a faithful testimony. . . . Pray for native churches and congregations, ravaged and scattered by war, as they seek to rebuild their broken properties and renew their Christian worship, witness and work. . . . Pray for our Congregational Christian missionaries, naming them one by one. . . . Pray that the Christian Gospel may prevail in our mission fields where conflict rages between great systems of thought and where Communism threatens with atheism and lawlessness. . . . Pray that we at home may learn to use our fabulous prosperity more effectively for the furthering of the Kingdom of Christ. . . . Pray that our whole church may be deepened in her devotion to Christ and in her commitment to her God-appointed task, the evangelization of the world.

EDITORIAL PEREGRINATIONS.

The meeting of the Southern Convention's Executive Board was the occasion of a trip to Elon College. The report of that meeting which appears in this issue reflects the wide, careful concern of that body for the interests and activities of the Convention. The report of the Superintendent reflects the work of the Convention through its efficient and official agent.

Members of the Board were guests of the College for the evening meal. The following members enjoyed the hospitality of President and Mrs. Smith for lodging and breakfast: Messrs. Mills E. Godwin, Jr. and S. M. Basnight; Revs. J. E. Neese, R. E. Newton, W. B.

O'Neill and R. L. House. One of the penalties as well as privileges of being the president of Elon is the necessity of entertaining church officials rather frequently.

Our Convention represents an impressive achievement in stewardship. Reflect on the fact that Elon is supported through regular gifts. New buildings have been added. The Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education is climbing to its impressive goal. Many of our people have contributed and many others will contribute at Thanksgiving to the Orphanage. Add to this record the outpouring of gifts for the erection of an adequate home for the Superintendent. Our people have not done all they could or should but many have been generous beyond the call of duty. Thank God for Elon, the Orphanage, the Superintendent and the Convention's parsonage. Yes, and thank God for a host of generous, responsive people throughout our Convention.

We hope to improve and expand our program of stewardship. This matter has been placed officially on our Convention agenda. Our people will respond to worthy causes. Our people who gave to the regular causes of our church, who gave extra to the Superintendent's Home and the Elon Memorial Foundation will give to other Kingdom enterprises. For instance, we may assume that our people would respond favorably and generously to the opportunity of establishing new churches in strategic areas. The cause provides the appeal.

A return trip by Duke University provided an opportunity of visiting Timothy Chang. His genial smile indicates that he is able to sing the Lord's song even in a strange land. We hardly realize how strange our civilization appears to people of other lands. We have many obvious inconsistencies. But Timothy's very presence at Duke is a splendid illustration of our diversified and multiplied stewardship.

The final stop along the way was at Franklinton Center, another memorial to our denominational stewardship. It is a great joy to witness the multifarious work of Christ in our midst and share to some extent in its sustenance and progress. May the spirit of the eternal and creative God lead us unitedly into larger manifestations of our stewardship and greater demonstrations of his Kingdom.

It is refreshing to have a denominational meeting occasionally in Richmond so that others may do the traveling. The majority of our churches in Eastern Virginia had representatives at the Richmond Conference on Our World Mission. There were representatives also from North Carolina and the Virginia Valley. The entire program was devoted to this world encircling mission. How wonderful it is to have a program of uninterrupted missionary emphasis! Meetings of this kind with multiple messages on missions should be held periodically. The World Christian Mission is the supreme test of our stewardship. The Program of Advance for Foreign Missions concludes with this statement: "The effectiveness of the Columbus Assembly and the regional meetings which follow depends under God upon the way in which the members of individual denominations increase their financial support of their foreign mission boards and respond with their lives to its calls to foreign service. Only to the extent that the resources of the member boards are increased can this program, their work and God's, be converted from proposals on paper to the actual processes of saving men and women around the world from sin and desperation and reconciling them to God, their Heavenly Father."

Partners in Obedience--The Call of India

By DR. HILDA M. LAZARUS, Director-Principal
Vellore Christian Medical College

India holds an unenviable position in the world today in regard to literacy and health. About 88 per cent of the population is illiterate, with 98 per cent illiterate women. The expectation for men is 27 and women is 26 years, while in this country you have only 5 per cent illiteracy chiefly in your southern States while the expectation of life is about 68. Of the six and one-half million deaths per year, three and one-fourth million are in our children at or below the age of ten, and half of these deaths are in children below one year. Many of these deaths are due to inadequate medical help, malnutrition, epidemics due to unsafe drinking water and unsafe and inadequate milk. It is estimated that we lose 200,000 of our mothers every year due to the normal physiological function of childbirth and four million of our mothers are disabled through it. Much of this mortality and morbidity can be prevented by suitable medical and nursing aid, proper prenatal care and adequate nourishment. India requires 400,000 doctors, 800,000 nurses, 74,000 midwives, 62,000 pharmacists and 92,000 dentists to come up to at least 90 per cent of the proportion of personnel that you have in the United States of America today.

The harvest truly is plenteous but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest. (Matthew 9:37-38.) This command of the Lord Jesus Christ if given to His disciples 2,000 years ago is still true and forcible even today and more so in India—be it Pakistan or the Union Government. The harvest is great. During the trouble in the Punjab last year where Muslims and Sikhs and Hindus lost all fellow feelings towards one another it was the Christian Nationals and Christians from overseas who were able to attend on Muslims, Sikhs or Hindus, welcomed by all the three sects, while Muslims refused to be treated by Sikhs or Hindus and vice versa. It was under the sign of the cross on their houses, carts and children that many a Hindu, Muslim or Sikh took refuge to escape from being molested, as Christians were not. The Christian proved himself to be a common friend to all whether Muslim, Hindu or Sikh. The Christian Medical College in Duddiana, Punjab, opened her hospital to all of them, and Vellore Medical College, to all refugee students in addition to sending two doctors and two nurses to help Dr. Polloch in her refugee work. Dr. Polloch worked so hard that she died of heart failure from sheer exhaustion.

The harvest is ripe. The Bible is recognized by the non-Christians in India as one that always has a message whether in times of sorrow or distress or in joy or in victory. I have non-Christian friends who asked for the Bible while in anxiety; others have taken it with them to read to non-Christian criminals in prison, while others have caused it to be read at the interment ceremony of Mahatma Gandhi's ashes and had it read as if it had something more to give away than their own religious books. I have heard Senators—Hindu and Muslim of a University testifying to the benefit they derived by studying the Bible in Christian Mission Schools and Colleges.

The harvest truly is ripe—non-Christian governments advertised for "doctors with a missionary spirit" to go out into the rural areas. They are anxious that non-Christians should acquire that spirit of Christ—of sacrifice and service, but they do not know the real truth, that it is the redeeming power of Christ in us and with us that we can go forth and work and witness for Him. For the last twelve years the congress and the government tried hard to get a non-Christian mission to take on the Leprosy Sanatorium near Madras but did not succeed. That true and faithful servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, and a great friend of lepers, blessed with the latest advances in their treatment, Dr. Robert Cochrane, asked to be relieved of part of his responsibility in the Christian Medical Center at Vellore to take charge of that government sanatorium which was run by Dr. Cochrane and his Christian missionary colleagues from its very inception.

Non-Christian parents are anxious that their sons and daughters be admitted into our Christian schools and colleges. They want their children to be benefitted by the teaching of the Bible and to come under Christian discipline. In forty Christian mission colleges in India there are 16,608 non-Christians as against 3,409 Christian students.

There is a scarcity of Bibles, shortage of accommodation in our schools, colleges and hospitals to meet some of these necessities and Christian students are giving up their leisure hours to help adult literacy. Traveling dispensaries from mission hospitals go out into the villages treating about 400 general medical cases and 150-200 lepers a day, carrying the Gospel of Christ, healing the sick and cleansing the lepers. Whole villages have been brought into the knowledge of the love and redeeming power of Christ. Untouchability was removed by the Christian missionary long before Mahatma Gandhi did so and it was the Christian missionary who proved to India that the untouchables had souls and were capable of rising up to the highest that God created man for and through the power of Christ in spite of great opposition in earlier years.

The heads of the gates are lifted up for the King of Glory. The King of Glory shall come in. Let him that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity nor sworn deceitfully, who shall receive blessings from the Lord and righteousness from the God of his salvation. Let him ascend into the hill of the Lord and stand in his holy place. (Psalm 24:1-10.)

The harvest truly is plenteous but the laborers are few. Enter into the field now before the gates are closed and before the communists get in. These have cells in every village, even among the illiterates. Will you sleep while it is day? India calls for prayer, personnel and pennies. Investments in His bank where moth and rust do not corrupt and where thieves do not break through nor steal; where your dividend is secure and great. Prove to the non-Christians that we are all one family irrespective of race or color or creed. World Citizens. The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world and all that dwell therein. One Church, one World, one Christ, one

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Ever-Ready Circle of the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union of the Suffolk Church recognized a quarter of a century of service by gathering at a supper to honor Mrs. Z. Turner for her twenty-five years as chairman of the circle, and to honor her faithful assistants. The records do not show many luscious dinners and suppers which Mrs. Turner and her workers have served to organizations of the church, and the churches; nor the number she has served to various organizations of the city, but they are many. Others have managed many such suppers and dinners and several of them were present and recognized during the program. Mrs. Turner presided in her own friendly and cordial manner. Everyone was proud of the fact that she could preside equally as well as she could feed the multitudes. Members of the large circle, officers of the parent organization, the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union, Mrs. Lycurgus Barrett, president; Miss Jamie Felton, secretary; and Mrs. M. O. Spence, treasurer, cut and served the large anniversary cake. Appropriate gifts were presented, beautiful music was rendered, kindly words were spoken; and the main address was made by Dr. H. S. Hardcastle, a former pastor who is always a favorite with the Suffolk folk, and was greatly appreciated in his references to the years of service rendered by Mrs. Turner and her fellow-workers, as well as many memories of his own years here as pastor.

The Sunday School Workers' Conference of the Suffolk Church is planning as this letter is being written to honor Supt. W. S. Beamon, of the Sunday school, now retiring from office at the conclusion of thirty-three years of service as superintendent. For a number of those years he was a member of the church's board of finance, and for many of those years he was chairman of the House of Worship Committee. The Workers' Conference appointed Miss Gladys Yates, teacher of the Philathea Class; and Mrs. William J. Baines, superintendent of the Junior Department, as a committee to plan the program. Floyd A. Turner, newly elected superintendent, will preside and present Miss Yates who will give a historical sketch of the thirty-three years, and act as toastmistress for the testimonials. Mrs. C. C. Rawles, teacher of the Young Ladies' Bible Class, will present the main tribute. I shall be among those who express appreciation of Supt. Beamon's long, faithful and efficient service. There are many, many members in this church greatly loved by their fellow members and he is one of them. One of the things that has inspired me most about the members of the Suffolk Church they co-operate with each other in a sincere, unselfish, and deocratic way. They are not seeking honor but are always ready to give a good word or a boost to the other fellow. The spirit of Christian democracy should be at its best in a church with a large membership and the Suffolk Church has made that a major goal for close on to a century.

THE BILL OF OBLIGATIONS.

Outstanding among the documents exhibited on the Freedom Train is the Bill of Rights—the charter of American liberties, embodying in the first ten amendments of our Constitution the statement of the “unalienable rights” asserted in the Declaration of Independence.

The exhibit of this famous document on the Freedom Train is only another means by which we are challenged to recognize and maintain our rights. While there is little danger that any of us will overestimate the value of these rights, there is much danger that many of us will fail to recognize the cost at which they have been made possible to us, and the conditions upon which they are to be maintained.

The written Bill of Rights is accompanied by an unwritten Bill of Obligations. The two are as inseparable as were the Siamese twins. Can you think of a single right that is unconditionally guaranteed to you? Can you point out a right that does not have its duty—a privilege that does not have its obligation?

Do you think the airplane of special privilege, upon which so many in our present social and economic situation are striving to ride, is adequately safeguarded against a crashing fall? Do you think children who are overly conscious of their rights, but woefully ignorant of their obligations, are in any danger of a juvenile-court career? To what extent is the tendency to get without giving—to insist upon rights without recognizing obligation—due to the lack of Christian Education.

The so-called “unalienable rights” are really very alienable. Of this the experience of untold millions bears witness. Their rights to one or more of the “Four Freedoms” have been taken away. To maintain our rights moral authority, character, a lively sense of duty are fundamentally necessary. For this purpose moral authority is more effective than atomic power.

The Bill of Rights, embodying the Ten Amendments of our Constitution, is conditioned upon the Bill of Obligations embodying the Ten Commandments of our Bible.

EASTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

The 123rd annual session of the Eastern N. C. Conference was held at the Henderson Church, October 19-20. The sessions were well attended and renewed interest in the work of the churches was evident.

President J. Frank Apple's address on the basic work of the church set the spirit for the conference's consideration of the Program of Advance of our denomination in “Our Christian World Mission.” The appearance of Dr. Hatanaka of Japan, Dr. Taylor of South Africa, and Mr. Case of the American Indian work of our denomination, gave us world-wide vision of the needs for Christ everywhere. The delegates present evidenced a real concern that the churches take their reasonable share of the responsibility of making Jesus Christ reign in our world. The Stewardship Committee set the financial needs and responsibilities before the people, and when the Apportionment Committee presented the apportionment table for the coming year based upon the increased askings of the Convention for the enterprises of the church the report was unanimously adopted.

The Conference Missionary Association was organized and a substantial sum collected for the mission work and church extension program of the conference itself. This was a most encouraging step and enthusiasm for its support was manifested. Rev. J. Frank Apple was elected chairman and Mr. A. H. McIver, treasurer of the Conference Missionary Association.

Officers of the conference for the coming year include the following: president, Rev. C. Carl Dollar; vice-president, Rev. Raymond T. Grissom;

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

AN EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION.

Elon College and I, personally, wish to express through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN our grateful appreciation of a number of our ministers, the editor, and the managing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN in making a united appeal to the churches of the Southern Convention to complete the campaign to secure subscriptions for the Staley - Atkinson - Newman Memorial Foundation, to be established at Elon College.

The paper gives a neat, dignified appearance and contains many helpful statements in the interest of Christian Education and a strong appeal to our people to give generous and loyal support to this worthy and worthwhile undertaking. I am sure that the church, as a whole, is glad to be reminded of the magnificent services rendered the church by these true servants of God, whom we seek to honor. It is also understood that this foundation is not simply to be a memorial to these three men but is intended to emphasize the importance of the pastorate in which Dr. Staley served, the cause of missions to which Dr. Atkinson gave his life, and the cause of Christian education in the college to which Dr. Newman dedicated his fine talents and abilities. It is to guarantee more efficient services at the college and a more inclusive curriculum in training young men and young women for these and other positions in the church. Let us hope and pray that the $100,000 in cash will be obtained at an early date. I assume that it is understood by the church, and the people in general, that this $100,000 is not for Elon College but for the Department of Christian Education. This money can never be spent. It will be a part of the college's permanent funds. It will be carefully invested and the income from the investment will be used for the Department of Christian Education.

I would also like to express great appreciation for the gifts of every church and every individual who is making this foundation possible.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

As we near the end of the conference year, many of our churches are paying their apportionments for the college. At this time last year we had received $7,149.33. Including this report today we have received $8,713.70 for this year. Our goal is $12,500. We have a good report this week and this is very encouraging and greatly appreciated. If your church has not raised its entire apportionment for the college, won't you please see that this is done prior to the annual conference session?

ELON'S "MAROON AND GOLD" GETS BACKING FROM BURLINGTON'S "TIMES-NEWS."

By HOYLE S. BURTON.

The staff of Maroon and Gold, the Elon College paper, have had occasion to discover what attitude the people of Burlington, five miles away, have toward their school.

At the beginning of the year, the college press was in poor condition. The machinery, old as it was, should have been capable of the work attempted on it and immeasurably valuable for training purposes.

However, the equipment was in a state of disrepair. Hand type, fallen to the floor, had been swept away by careless students or by janitors unfamiliar with the work. Make-up materials, all metal and consequently scarce until recently, had been dissipated and never replaced.

What was to be done? Materials were still short, and most orders for equipment could not be filled for months. Worst of all, the vital Linotype machine could not be counted on to run through an issue without a breakdown.

With composition work finished on hardly a page of the first issue, the Linotype did fail. With no mechanics available on the campus, an appeal had to be made to somebody in town.

Harry Puckett, press boss at the Burlington Times-News, an afternoon paper, and "the best Linotype mechanic in the South," according to his colleagues, was caught going home from work. Mr. Puckett had been in and out of Burlington for several years, was neither a native of Burlington nor an alumnus of Elon, and had little reason for feeling any loyalty to the school or its paper.

Tired as he was, he listened quietly to an appeal for a solution to Maroon and Gold's first problem.

"All my Linotype operators have gone home," he said, "but if you can have your copy at our office in thirty minutes, you'll make your deadline all right."

For six hours that night, Grady Frick, the company's fastest operator, sat at his machine and pounded out Maroon and Gold material. When he finished at midnight, he had worked a 15-hour day.

Galleys were carried to the Elon Press as Mr. Frick finished them, and the paper was put together during the night. Four students were up all night with their work.

That issue was perhaps the worst in Maroon and Gold history—it had been put together in too great haste. However, it had made its deadline—and it had made a point with certain Burlington people.

From that day on, the entire Times-News plant took a personal interest in the college paper. Mr. Puckett made a number of trips to the press at night to overhaul the Linotype machine. Mr. Frick gave up his only day off from work at the Times-News to become permanent operator of the school press.

The city editor, photographers, sports editors and press men continually inquire about Maroon and Gold's progress, give helpful criticism and insist upon getting copies.

In order to make it "the best paper the school has ever had," Mr. Puckett has furnished the school press with valuable material unobtainable elsewhere and permitted all heads and ads to be set on his modern equipment.

The advantages to the students are numerous. The staff can now devote their time to gathering and writing news, planning make-up, laying out heads, editing material and in general

The World for Christ

A NEW AFRICA.

By ALBERT J. LUTHULI,
Zulu Layman and Administrator.

Today, Africa which you have known as a great dark Continent is turning a corner. Where is Africa going? What will Africa be like tomorrow? These are the questions which are uppermost in my mind and in the minds of other African leaders.

Commerce and industry have played, and are still to play, a leading part in this change that is taking place in Africa. I need only speak of Cecil Rhodes in his efforts to win Africa for the British Empire. I need only refer you to the increasing inflow of United States capital into Africa and to say that such names as Ford Company, Dodge, etc., in the transportation world, are known even in remote African reservations.

Our boys bring to the reservations wonderful things they hear and see of America from the movies they go to in the cities. Illiterate Africans will go to a tailor shop and say: "I want to cut a suit in the American style." And so I could go on endlessly to show that ever since Western civilization made contact with Africa a new Africa has been coming into birth. Whether we shall have a noble progressive Africa wherein love, brotherliness, righteousness shall abound or a reactionary and sour Africa dominated by hate, anger, revenge and greed shall depend a great deal on the policies and attitudes adopted by secular agencies, commerce, industry and governments, and how they regulate their relations with Africa. We are, undoubtedly, now on the crest of a crisis in African affairs. We notice with great concern the new thrust that commerce, industry, and white settlers are making, under the auspices of the governments concerned, to make Africa an arsenal in the new strategy of world defence.

The position in Africa, as elsewhere in the world today, is aggravated by the appearance in growing strength in recent years of other "world views" making a strong bid to capture the soul of Africa; world views or faiths such as Islam, Communism, intense materialism, and secularism.

In this crisis, the simple African culture is crumbling in the face of the terrific onslaught of Western civilization with tragic results to her people who, save for the few who have accepted the liberating and strengthening Gospel of Christ with its message of spiritual and social salvation, are quite unprepared for such a dramatic and swift change in their way of life.

TELEGRAM FROM GENERAL MacARTHUR.

During my many years of service for country abroad I have had the opportunity to evaluate the enormous benefits which our foreign missions have rendered to human progress. Indeed the ministrations of our missionaries to the sick and underprivileged of foreign lands constitute one of the most inspiring chapters of American history. For they have done even more than to carry afar the Gospel of Christ. Through their teachings and practice of the immutable principles of Christianity—they have infused knowledge and understanding of the democratic concept, and wherever they have gone they have sown the seeds of human dignity and left in their wake an enlightened appreciation of the basic tenets which govern our own free way of life.

I send to all those of the North American Assembly of the Foreign Missions Conference, who have dedicated their lives to this noble Christian service, my admiration for their past contributions to human progress and my confident hope that they will continue vigorously and faithfully to meet the challenging opportunities which lie ahead.

DOUGLAS MacARTHUR.

General Headquarters,
Far East Command,
Tokyo, Japan.

The people of Africa are literally passing through a tragic period of spiritual, moral and mental confusion; there is a noticeably disturbing spiritual, moral and physical deterioration. Let me explain myself concretely:

Our grandfathers had almost limitless land for their gardens, homesteads and grazing ground and thus had food, milk and meat in plenty. Not so now! Hear what a Government Commission report in the Union of South Africa says, commenting on native health in native reservations: "It is becoming more and more evident that malnutrition, by reducing the resistance, is directly or indirectly responsible for much of the ill-health in the Reserves." With the climatic conditions as they are in South Africa it is difficult to make a living on such small holdings, to say nothing about ever hoping to reach a civilized standard of living. What is the result? Apart from the malnutrition and disease resulting therefrom, young people desert the reservations to seek new pastures in the cities. But here, too, an even more tragic story may be told. Work is either not obtainable or wages prove too low to maintain life on more than just the barest level of subsistence. The young people turn to questionable ways of making a living, and often drift to living a criminal or immoral life.

Educated men who have tasted more of the good fruits of western civilization suffer mental worry and anxiety about the schooling of their children and the general security of their dependents should they die or be incapacitated because they, too, are victims of low wages in labor centres and of small holdings in the reservations.

The seriousness of this deterioration of African life is worsened by the unhealthy atmosphere of uncertainty, confusion and frustration manifest in the world today with the gods of greed, unmitigated indulgence and selfishness dominating the world.

All these aggressive forces and revolutionary tendencies sharpen the challenge to the Christian Church and liberal forces to redouble their efforts to capture Africa for Christ. The task is for now or it will be too late.

I make no apology for appealing to secular agencies to help repair and rehabilitate the damage for which they are in no small measure directly or indirectly responsible, because their policies have not always safeguarded and promoted the welfare of the African. The hope of Africa lies in this cooperation between the Church and secular agencies, led by men and women of goodwill and with the willingness of the African to follow and work with the right leadership.

Creditable though the Christian enterprise has been in Africa, with limited human and material resources and faced with deep African ignorance and indifference, the Church must gear its machinery to attain the same standard in Africa that exists in other missionary lands, especially in the field of education and social rehabilitation, with special emphasis on securing and training African leadership, both clergy and lay. It is ac-

THANK OFFERING SERVICE.

Worship Center: Place a globe of the world on a table beside the cross, with an open Bible in the center.

* * *

PRELUDE: "We Gather Together to Ask the Lord's Blessing."

CALL TO WORSHIP: Psalm 95:1, 2—Leader.

HYMN: "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come."

INVOCATION AND LORD'S PRAYER.

HYMN: "O Master-Workman of the Race."

RESPONSIVE READING: (Copy sent to Society Presidents).

LEADER: "The poet, Oren Ned Renneau, has said in the opening lines of one of his poems:

'We thank thee, Lord'
Is but a phrase
We often use
And never seem to know
Just what it means.

"How true it is that 'We thank Thee, Lord' is but a phrase we often use—we who have never known hunger and desolation. How thankful, indeed, would the world's hungry and disease-ridden people be if they could experience our plenty. How thankful many would be, also, if they could know the way, the truth, and the life—even Jesus. Yet, in the face of their need, we give thanks for our plenty. Perhaps before we dare come into the presence of God to thank him, we should do more to alleviate their suffering. Perhaps, instead of thanking God for all we have, we should thank him, not only for strength of arm to win our bread, but also for strength to serve."—(Quoted from "The Candle of the Lord" by Hopper.)

SOLO: "I Thank Thee, Lord, for Strength of Arm."

SCRIPTURE: II Corinthians 8:1-11; 9:1-2, 6-7, 11-15.

MEDITATION: "Our 1948 Thank Offering" (Copy sent to Society Presidents).

UNISON PRAYER: (Before the offering is receive). (If copies cannot be made available for each person the leader may give this as a directed prayer):

"Out of gratitude to God, loyalty to my covenant as a disciple of Christ and member of his Church, and in fulfilment of my war-time promise that I would keep faith with those who gave their all, I bring my Thank Offering and dedicate it with the gifts of others: (1) To build churches in post-war unchurched areas; (2) To nurture churches caught in the post-war's population shifts and social change; (3) To train Christian leadership for the Church's tasks; (4) To send and maintain missionaries for new opportunities opened up in war's aftermath; (5) To strengthen Christian national leadership for the Younger Churches abroad in their hour of critical need. This I do in His Name and for their sake. Amen."

OFFERTORY (While offertory is being played have each person bring their gift to the altar and place before the open Bible).

BENEDICTION.

POSTLUDE.

NOTE: A complete copy of the program has been mailed to the presidents of all the Women's Societies in the Convention. If you have not received your copy please write the Convention Office at once.

It is suggested that this Service be held on Sunday, November 7, or some other date decided upon by the local group. The women are asked to sponsor the service and invite the entire church to participate.

By vote of our Woman's Board of the Southern Convention—and approved by the Women's Conferences—the money received for the Thank Offering for 1948 will go for the use of the Congregational Christian Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction.

MT. ZION.

The ladies of Mt. Zion Christian Church are happy to have accomplished all the achievement goals to be an outstanding small church under the capable leadership of Mrs. J. L. Gray, teacher. Through and by societies we have raised sufficient funds to clear all church and Sunday school debts. In November we observed our Thank Offering program. All through the year we sent cards, flowers and fruit to the sick and shut-ins. We have increased and paid all our apportionments, sent in special, over and above missions. We observed the World's Day of Prayer in cooperation with four other churches, which was held at Oakland.

We had a red and blue contest, which followed with a free fellowship supper. The mothers and fathers were remembered on their day with special music and gifts. A Vacation Bible School was conducted in June with an average attendance of forty-two pupils. We observed Mother and Daughter Fellowship Day with a banquet supper. In June, with the aid of Mrs. W. T. Harrell we organized the Woman's Missionary Society. At the last meeting twenty-six members and two visitors were present. As we start the new year with all the material in the packet, we realize that we are just beginning to work and be of service.

At a recent revival service, conducted by Rev. B. H. Watkins, we received into the church nine new members.

We do not want to forget our men, they, too, have a great part in the work we have accomplished. They organized a Bible Class, had their monthly meetings and helped us in many things.

We are looking forward to a full and progressive year.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. G. W. DIXON,
Church Secretary.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. House, Editor

Do you remember when Mrs. Wiseman wrote suggesting that we send copies of the Gospel of Luke printed in Spanish to the Stantons, missionaries in Mexico? Mrs. Robert Kimball of Franklin has sent the following radio play which her junior children arranged. It is based on a letter from the Stantons. Thank you, Mrs. Kimball and Juniors! I hope some of you will use it:

MUSIC: "O Zion Haste" as music fades the Announcer begins.

ANNOUNCER: Good morning. This is Station ABFM, the American Board for Foreign Missions, introducing a new program to all our radio listeners entitled, "Meet Your Missionaries." Today we are broadcasting from Mazatlan, Mexico, and we wish to introduce to you Lawrence and Constance Stanton. Hello.

LARRY AND CONNIE: Hello!

ANNOUNCER: Do you mind if I call you Larry and Connie?

CONNIE: No, go right ahead, everyone does.

ANNOUNCER: Tell me, Larry, how long have you been representing our churches here in Mexico?

LARRY: We came here in 1944, right after graduating from seminary.

ANNOUNCER: Would you tell me how you decided to become a missionary?

CONNIE: We received our inspiration from the Pilgrim Fellowship. It was in a Young People's Conference that we felt the call to dedicate our lives to missionary service.

ANNOUNCER: Now tell me about your work.

LARRY: I am Director of Youth Work for our churches. I am working to unite the young people of our ten churches into a growing fellowship, and am working to find young people who are willing to give their their lives to Christian Service. I have charge of two summer camps conducted by our churches, publish a magazine for Christian youth, hold Leadership Training Schools for Sunday School and Vacation Bible School leaders. Our churches are scattered over a wide area and I have to travel a great deal. Often I am busy for a month at a time.

ANNOUNCER: And how do you spend your time, Connie?

CONNIE: I have two children, Elizabeth, age two and one-half, and Paul, eight months, so most of my work must be carried on within the home. We feel that the kind of home we have plays an important part in the work we are doing. Our home is right across the road from our school. Mexican law does not permit religious teaching in our schools, so we have to do a lot of our religious teaching by religious living.

ANNOUNCER: Is there any special way that the members of our churches in America can help you?

CONNIE: There is very little that you can send to us in the way of hand-work supplies because of the high duty on imports, but we need money to buy supplies and most of all, we need your prayers and continued interest.

LARRY: I would like to make one suggestion. In my travels I come in contact with lots of men and women and boys and girls who have never owned a Bible. We need Spanish Bibles and little Testaments that I could distribute at meetings. I would like to tell you a story this morning about a boy who lost his Bible. This is a true story. It really happened here in Mexico some years ago. One morning a group of boys and girls were gathered in front of a church waiting for Sunday school to start. They were talking to a boy who had come to the school for the first time.

(There is music, and as the music fades children's voices are heard.)

BARTOLO: Come on in, Felipe. It's pretty in here. You'll like it.

CARMENCITA: I'll show you some beautiful pictures if you come in.

HERNANDO: I have a book, I'll show you.

FELIPE: A book!

HERNANDO: Yes. Come in, and I'll show it to you.

FELIPE: I had a book once!

CARMENCITA: I have a book, too. See the pretty pictures. Do you like it?

FELIPE: Yes, it is pretty. But it isn't like my book.

HERNANDO: Look at mine! There's real printing in mine.

FELIPE: My book was much thicker, and had much more printing in it.

NITA: Mine is just like Hernando's, but you may look at it. The stories in it are beautiful.

FELIPE: The stories in my book are the most beautiful stories in the world. Why, that book on the piano looks like my book. Who brought it here? No, it isn't my book.

NITA: Of course it isn't your book. That belongs to the teacher.

FELIPE: Well, it looks just like my book, and someone took it. It's the only book I ever had, and maybe it's the only one I ever will have. It was a big book, with pictures in it and wonderful stories.

NITA: Where did you get your book, Felipe?

FELIPE: My father gave the book to me because I could read so well. He told me to take good care of it, and I learned many of the stories.

NITA: And someone took it from you?

FELIPE: Yes, I took it to the Mexican school one day after my father died, and the teacher took the book away from me. He said it was an evil book. But I remember many of the stories. There was one about a boy named David. He had a slingshot, and once he killed a huge giant named Goliath. I tried to make one of those slingshots once, but it wasn't any good.

CARMENCITA: Oh, look! Here comes the teacher.

TEACHER: Well, isn't this splendid! We have a guest today, on the very day, too, when I have a new story to tell. You stay until I have told the story. Then you may go if you like.

HERNANDO: Sit down here with me, Felipe.

TEACHER: Many, many years ago, in a beautiful garden on a hillside, a number of friends were gathered together. No smiles were upon their faces and they scarcely spoke to each other at all. In a tomb on the hillside was resting the Friend of these people. Wicked men in the big city had crucified Him. Women came into the garden with spices in their hands. They walked carefully so that no sound would be made. They did not want the soldiers who were watching the tomb to see or hear them. They were weeping and saying, "He is dead. We shall never see our Friend again." But suddenly they saw that the great stone before the tomb was rolled away, and their Friend whose name was—

FELIPE (Interrupting): Jesus!

TEACHER: Why, yes, Felipe. How did you know that?

FELIPE: Because there was a story about him in my book just like the story you are telling.

TEACHER: A beautiful angel stood by the tomb and said—let me read the words to you from the Bible—"He is not here for He is risen."

FELIPE: That's my book. That's my book. That story you are reading was in it. How did you get my book? Please give it back to me. My father gave that book to me because I could read. Then a Mexican teacher took it from me. I have looked everywhere for it, but I could never find it again. It is my book, teacher, please give it back to me.

TEACHER: Felipe, how do you know this is your book?

FELIPE: I can tell you the stories in it. I know some of them by heart. After Jesus left the garden, he came to his friends one morning on a lakeside. They were sitting around a fire and were eating. And twice he said to Simon Peter, "Lovest Thou me?" And Peter said, "Yes, Lord, Thou knowest that I love thee." He said to him a third time, "Peter, Lovest Thou me?" Peter was grieved because he said unto him a third time, "Lovest thou me?" He said unto him, "Lord, Thou knowest that I love Thee." Jesus said unto him, "Feed my sheep."

TEACHER: The book is yours, Felipe. Take it, and keep it carefully. But remember this, it is a book which belongs to everyone. It is a book given to us by the Heavenly Father.

FELIPE: I have my book. My beautiful book of stories. Why, what is this written on the front page? "To Alice Brown on her twelfth birthday with love from her old Granddaddy." Why—I thought—isn't TEACHER: There are many copies of your book, Felipe. And my grandfather gave that to me when I was a little girl, but you may have it. There are not many copies of that book here, but some day we hope to have them. Perhaps someone will hear an echo of that last request on

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT.

By WM. T. SCOTT.

From April 1 to September 30, I have traveled 9,792 miles in the interest of the Churches, conferences, Convention and general work of our denomination. I have made forty-four visits to church, fourteen such visits having to do with assisting these churches to obtain pastoral leadership; preached seventeen sermons; gave fourteen addresses; attended thirteen Sunday school sessions; attended and participated in sixty-six group conferences; held 301 conferences with individual lay people regarding the work of the churches, and had 101 conferences with individual pastors. My expenses for this period total $549.95. A detailed financial statement is filed with the Secretary of the Executive Board.

The continued shortage of pastors and church vacancies give us real concern. The present number of vacant churches are as follows: Valley, 4; Eastern Virginia, 9; Western North Carolina, several; Eastern North Carolina, several; North Carolina-Virginia, Carroll County Mission and others. We have been gratified by the coming of two new pastors—Dr. Luther B. Grice to Holy Neck and Rev. Robert T. Woodruff, Jr., to Pleasant Grove and Ingram.

Much of my time must of necessity be consumed in counselling with ministerial students at Elon College serving as pastors of churches. Though this does consume a great deal of time it is a profitable service.

As is already known, Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Field Director, resigned her position and left August 15. Her resignation was accepted by the Executive Committee as their minutes will show and the Committee on Personnel was asked to study the possibility of electing her successor as soon as one can be found. Mrs. Dorothy Carson and Mrs. Edna Cob, bookkeepers and office secretaries, left our employ in May and June respectively. Upon recommendation of the Personnel Committee, the Executive Committee elected Miss Dorothy A. Scott as bookkeeper, office secretary, and assistant treasurer. Miss Melva Foster, who served part-time last year, is continued on this same basis by special arrangement with the college. Wm. T. Scott, Jr., has been employed part-time to work on THE CHRISTIAN SUN mailing list which consumes a great deal of time.

Through the Board of Christian Education, in cooperation with the National Board of Home Missions, a splendid program of Vacation Bible Schools was conducted during the summer, some thirty churches being served. We regret that because of the polio we were forced to cancel many of our summer programs: the School of Missions and Pastors' School, summer camps and young people's rallies.

We have given as much time as possible to the development of a Program of Advance authorized by the Convention and which should be given further consideration of the Board at this time.

In our denomination's Program of Advance, designated "Our Christian World Mission," Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Secretary of the Missions Council, has been assigned to the Southeastern Area for the next few months. She is arranging an extensive itinerary for the Team assigned to this Area, including both home and foreign missionaries and workers.

Miss Coghill, in addition to her splendid work in the particular interest of missions, is giving assistance in planning our young people's program of the Convention, which is a very helpful contribution inasmuch as we do not have a young people's field director. She is willing to give as much time as possible to the work of leadership training and plans a series of Vacation Bible School Institutes in the spring.

Our laymen's work, under the leadership of the Chairman, Mr. George D. Colelough, is making steady progress.

The Superintendent, serving as Executive Secretary of the Mission Board, must give considerable time to this important work of our Convention. The Mission Board in its recent annual meeting adopted a courageous budget of $62,000.00 for the coming year and included in this important work is the program for beginning a new church in Burlington.

We are grateful to Elon College for the work they have done in cleaning and waxing the floors in the office.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SUPERINTENDENT'S HOME.

To the Executive Board of the Southern Convention—

There are aspects of this report of which we are proud. In the first place, we feel exceedingly fortunate to be able to get the property which the Convention now has at a contract price of $14,000. We are happy, also, at the response being made to our appeal to the churches and individuals that our indebtedness might not exceed the amount of the loan already authorized from the Church Building Society. Although we cannot report this accomplishment as yet; we have faith that we will be able to raise a sufficient amount so that it will be over and above indebtedness for which anyone might be critical.

After deduction of the Thank Offering from the Women of the Convention and the loan from the Church Building Society, it became necessary to raise $4,741.91. This, we are seeking to raise by special appeal from the churches and individuals. The account is as follows:

Income.
Building Society	$ 7,000.00
Thank Offering	2,213.42
Churches and Individuals	2,436.52
Refund from Contractor	130.00
Due from Church Building Society	2,000.00
Income to date	$13,779.94
Cost.
Contract for house including lot	$14,000.00
Fees, insurance, etc.	955.33
Total cost	$14,955.33
Less income	13,779.94
Deficit	$ 1,175.39

Unless instructed otherwise, the committee will proceed with the raising of this deficit until possible resources are exhausted. It is only fair to say that the smaller churches of the Convention have responded more readily and in greater proportions than have the larger churches. If a few more of the larger churches respond in accordance with the suggested quotas, the deficit would be liquidated. Whether they will is anybody's guess.

We desire the Board to visit the property sometime during your meeting here for the purpose of evaluating and suggesting what else must be done. It will become obvious to you that some surface should be put on the driveway to make it useable and a step-up should be installed from the driveway to the porch step level. We have hesitated to go beyond the present work schedule without your instruction. The front yard is to be leveled and seeded as an item of the contract. Any work beyond that will be at our expense. We await your further instruction.

JESSE H. DOLLAR,
For the Committee.

DRAMA IN THE BIBLE.

LESSON VI.—NOVEMBER 7, 1948

MEMORY SELECTION: He knoweth the way that I take; when he hath tried me I shall come forth as gold.—
Job 23:10.

LESSON: Job.

DEVOTIONAL READING Job 23:3-10.

Dramatizing Truth.

There are many ways of presenting truth, but one of the most effective ways is to dramatize it—to act it out; to have people portray the truth. This is the appeal of the stage, the audience see the story acted out. This is the appeal of opera, the story is acted out to the songs of the soloists and chorus. This is the appeal of the movies, people see the story being clothed in flesh and blood on the screen. And if you please, this is the appeal in radio advertising, the thing is dramatized to make it more effective. Truth thus presented becomes more vivid and more vital. "One picture is worth a thousand words," says an old Chinese proverb. Plays and pagents are much more interesting and gripping than a mere reading or speaking of a story or account. Those who attended the recent Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference know how much more effective it was when Mrs. Kimball presented, with the help of several women, the missionary literature and helps in dramatic form, than if she had simply made a speech herself. That was an effective way of dramatizing truth. The public speaker or the teacher who can dramatize truth becomes all the more effective. Jesus himself dramatized religious truth. He told stories, He painted word pictures, depicted action. That was one reason why the common people heard Him gladly.

Now all this is by way of introduction to the book of Job which is the theme of today's lesson. For although it is not strictly speaking, a drama, like some of Shakespeare's plays, it can fairly be called a drama. To be sure actors do not move across the stage, but there is action, and movement in thought, and truth is dramatized in an effective way. There are some who list it among the world's greatest dramas. In any event it is a religious masterpiece.

A Baffling Question.

The Book of Job is concerned with an old and a modern question, or perhaps better, with two questions. "Why do the righteous suffer?" That is the question which folks asked in Job's day. Here is a good man who lives and does good, and yet misfortune and disaster strike him. And assail him, when some scalawag or evil man seems to go unscathed, and even to prosper. It just did not seem to make sense in that day. And to many it does not make sense in our day.

Closely akin to this question asked then and now is another question, which goes even deeper: "Is life really worth living?" In a world in which the best man faces a fate no better than the worst of men, in which he may even be less fortunate than the evil-doer, in a world in which men seem to be the plaything of fortune, can life have any real meaning or value? Why is man compelled to live a life which is so cruel and baffling? These questions were asked in Job's day, and they are asked in our day. And there are many who think that there is no answer, at least no satisfying answer.

An Attempted Answer.

The Book of Job is an attempted answer. Its central character is Job, a man of unquestionable character, and of large means, who suffers grievous losses in material things, and who suffers ever more grievously in bodily and mental suffering. Out of his material poverty, and his physical and mental agony he asks, "Why?" "Why?" Three of his friends think they have the answer, and proceed at great length to give it to him. Their speeches present the stock arguments of that day, in essence, that all suffering is the result of sin, and hence Job must have sinned. They repeat this argument in different forms in three cycles of speeches, each speaking three times. And always Job asserts his innocence. A fourth friend, Elihu, also joins the discussion, but like the other three, he gives no light on the dark problem. The fact is that the book itself does not give an answer in the sense that Job expected an answer.

The Answer.

The book comes to a dramatic climax when Jehovah Himself appears on the scene. Manifesting himself in a whirlwind He talks with Job, but not in the way Job—or we—might suppose. He does not give a direct or explicit answer. But in the revelation of Himself which He gives, Job got something better than a formal answer to his question. Life was worth the living, no matter how dark it might become, because of the revelation which God had given of himself. Job did not get an answer but he got the assurance that there was an answer. It was not what God had said that brought peace to the troubled soul and spirit of Job, but the fact that God had spoken. "I had heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear," said Job, "but now mine eye seeth thee."

As it was then, is now, and evermore shall be, there is no easy answer to the questions which Job asked. But we have a more satisfying answer than Job got. For our Lord Himself stated that suffering is not always caused directly by sin. And suffering takes on a new aspect when we see how the Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. And even in the darkness of the Cross, our Lord spoke of God as "Father," and rested His soul in Him. When we believe that God is like Christ we can wait and trust. We may not be able to understand all things, or His ways, but we know that all is done in love.

And as Henry Drummond that great saint of another generation said, "The moment we forget that God meant this life to be a school, the puzzle of life begins."

PARTNERS IN OBEDIENCE.

Kingdom—and we can all work and live together under the flag of the King of kings; that Christianity is not merely a religion of ideals but an everyday practical religion and the only solution for world peace through Him who was born to glorify God in the Highest and is giving peace and good will toward men.

I once illustrated the act of faith by the experience of a friend who was in an upper room of a hotel at night when the building took fire. He seized the escape rope that was in his room, swung out of the window, and lowered himself in safety to the sidewalk. He had a good opinion of that rope during the day when he saw it coiled up by his bedside, but it was only an opinion; when he believed on the rope, and trusted himself to the rope, it saved his life.

A NEW AFRICA.

cepted that education without religion is dangerous; but equally so is religion without knowledge. We are beginning to see in Africa the tragic effects of both in the indifference of the youth to the Church and in the multiplicity of native separatist religious sects.

Africa is indeed at the crossroads, faced with momentous decisions as to her future. Unsympathetic treatment of her people by the powers that be is bringing about a deep sense of frustration which is driving the people to hate and desperation which sometimes makes them fail to distinguish between friend and foe, as evidenced by these cynical expressions by some Africans: "Missionaries gave us the Bible in exchange for our land;" "Missionaries told us to look up and pray while their countrymen robbed us of our land;" "Christianity is the vanguard of imperialism."

Needless to say these are extremists' expressions shared by only a few Africans, but they are very significant danger signs.

EXECUTIVE BOARD MEETING.

The matter of a secretary of stewardship and evangelism which was also presented in the superintendent's report and which has been in the minds of some of the Southern Convention leaders as a possible way of implementing our "Program of Advance," was referred to the Committee on Office Personnel. The action of the Executive Board on that committee's report was: (1) That the matter of a secretary of Stewardship and evangelism, recommended by the committee, be deferred for future consideration. (2) That we begin work immediately by setting up Stewardship Institutes for the training of our ministers in conducting institutes in the churches throughout the Convention. (3) That a special stewardship issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN be printed at an early date. (4) That we continue our emphasis on evangelism.

Dr. Smith reporting on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation said that the $100,000 goal had not been reached. Upon the recommendations of the Executive Board, representatives of each of the five conferences (Rev. R. L. House, E. Va.; Dr. F. C. Lester, W. N. C.; Mr. S. H. Basnight, E. N. C.; Rev. R. A. Whitten, Va. V.; and Dr. J. H. Dollar, N. C. & Va.) were charged with the responsibility of urging the ministers of their respective conferences to present the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Foundation to their churches before October 31. Each church is urged to send in what it can for the Foundation.

The committee on the $2,000,000 campaign for Elon College appointed at May 22 meeting of the Executive Committee, reported that we approve of the campaign as authorized by the Convention and outlined by President Smith and that our program of procedure be: The completion of the S-A-N Foundation, construction of the Alumni Gymnasium, and then possibly a dining room or dormitory.

J. EVERETTE NEESE,
Sec'y of the Convention.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Children should be our greatest concern. Tomorrow they will take our places as this generation passes off the scene. It is up to this generation to see to it that they are well trained to be able to assume this great responsibility that will soon be theirs. In traveling over North Carolina we see beautiful modern school buildings of Supt. Beamon's long, faithful and which have cost the state millions of dollars to erect. Then, it costs the state millions more to pay teachers to teach and train the youth of our land. Why such an expenditure of money? It is because we are greatly concerned about the training of our youth. I don't remember hearing a single tax payer grumble about his school tax being too high, but I have heard many grumble about teachers' salaries being too low. While I am speaking of North Carolina, the same thing is happening in other states as well. The children are our concern. We are happy to see the improvements that have been made in the last thirty years. The writer has always been interested in children. Nothing appeals to him more than a little child, and especially a little fatherless child who is homeless and dependent.

Thirty-two years ago I dedicated my life to work in behalf of the orphaned and dependent children in our church, and tried to give them, through the church, an opportunity to develop into fine citizens. We think when you look at the fine boys and girls who have been reared at the orphanage and sent out, who are now occupying splendid positions in offices, sick rooms, manufacturing plants, and many other positions of life, you would say in your heart, "I am glad I had a part in helping them."

We have a group of little children in the Christian Orphanage today who need your prayers and your contributions. I noticed in the paper today that one orphanage in North Carolina has already received since January 1, 1948, to October 22, the sum of $251,991.88. The writer is well acquainted with the members of that denomination and he has never heard any member say he thought their orphanage got too much; not one. But they rejoice that their orphanage is so well loved.

We are going to give you an opportunity at this Thanksgiving period to show your love for the Christian Orphanage by your gifts. It takes money to run an orphanage, whether it be Baptist, Presbyterian, Christian, or any orphanage; at the present prices it takes more. Your orphanage needs you. Will you come to its rescue?

In addition, students interested in pressroom work are receiving the best of training from the genial Mr. Frick, an expert who thoroughly enjoys explaining things to students as he works.

As for the students, they are very conscious that the eyes of experts in Burlington are upon them. Journalism style books have been augmented, in their minds, with the "do's" and "don'ts" of Puckett and Frick and the Times-News.

"We'll have to correct that," one will say, "because Mr. Frick says it's wrong." Or, "That'll never pass Mr. Puckett's inspection!"

NOTICE.

Let's all attend the Pilgrim Fellowship Conference at the Greensboro, First Church, Sunday, October 31, at 2:30 p. m.

A Missions Team, headed by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill will be there to talk to us. Bring your sandwiches for the picnic supper.

To all young people of the North Carolina-Virginia and Western North Carolina Conferences who are planning to attend the Rally, the following are directions for reaching the Greensboro Church: It is located on the corner of Eugene Street and Walker Avenue. Eugene Street runs parallel to Elm Street (the main street running north and south through town) and is two blocks west of Elm Street. Follow Eugene Street south until it dead-ends into Walker Avenue and the church is on the left corner.

DAMASCUS FELLOWSHIP.

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Damascus Christian Church was organized in October, 1947, with an enrollment of twenty members.

We hold our meetings twice each month, and Monday night was selected because more members felt they could be present at that time.

We conducted several worthwhile projects during the year. Since our church building is new and something of which we are very proud we were especially interested in beautifying our grounds. An out-door furnace was erected, some yard benches were made and painted, and we had a flower garden which we tended so we might have flowers for our church decorations from our own church garden. At Easter time we planted several blooming shrubs and a pink dogwood tree. We bought horseshoes and tennis equipment, also, for our out-door recreational grounds.

For our indoor project the boys made a book case for our Sunday school room and the girls made and embroidered a beautiful white linen altar cloth. One girl gave a useful table to our Sunday school room, several scriptural pictures were bought for our walls, and a lovely cross for our worship center.

For our Friendly Service we collected clothing for C. W. S., and through our Lenten self-denial offerings we were able to send $15 to help displaced European people.

We held our public program at Christmas when the pageant, "Christmas Comes to the Cobbler's Shop," was given. We sang carols to the shut-ins of our community. We bought a small Estey organ for our group and we took this with us caroling.

We also enjoy giving public programs for our Sunday school offering exercises on special Sundays and occasionally we like to give a program for our Woman's Missionary Society.

We gave a life membership this year and have increased our apportionment for the coming year.

We realize that as an organization we are still very young, but we are hoping as we increase in years we will also grow in our knowledge of God and that our interests in the coming of his kingdom on earth may be manifest through our services.

JACKIE PIERCE,
Secretary and Treasurer.

CONSECRATION SERVICE.

was held at Elon College, North Carolina, October 12, 1948:

Consecration Sentences—

We, the members of the Executive Board of the Southern Convention, in behalf of the 33,000 members of our 200 churches, consecrate this home to symbolize always that best and truest use of all material blessings which shall truly light the way to life more abundant.

We consecrate this home to exemplify not only the outward, but also the inward qualities of beauty, thoughtful sincerity, appreciation, kindness and wholesome purity.

We consecrate this home to suggest always that building of substantial character and worthfulness of life, the building of all true and fixed purposes, constant usefulness and helpful service.

We consecrate this home for the comfort and well-being of the Convention Superintendent and his family that they may the better serve Jesus Christ and His Church.

Realizing that homelife is the cornerstone of Christian civilization and feeling that the servant of the Convention and his family should enjoy the privileges which only a sense of permanence of residence can give, we consecrate this home to shine forth always with that faith in God, hope in God, and love for His Kingdom which shall strengthen faith, hope and love among men, here and elsewhere to the glory of God, the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. Amen.

Presentation of the Keys—By Dr. J. Dollar—

In token of our faith in the Church of Jesus Christ and deep interest in its spiritual maintenance and up-building; in token of our appreciation of the service being rendered and to be rendered by the Superintendent of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches in our fellowship of churches; and as a declaration of the purpose of our united people to support and strengthen the hand of our servant of the Convention, providing for his comfort and that of his family, in the name of the Southern Convention and its Committee appointed to erect this Superintendent's Home I gladly present to you the keys that unlock and guard the privileges and blessings of this new home. May this home be a blessing to you and your family, and may you be a blessing to us all.

Response of Superintendent Wm. T. Scott—

On behalf of himself and his family the Superintendent receives the keys to this beautiful residence made possible by gifts from churches, individuals and women's societies of the Convention. We receive this home with deep appreciation of the generous and kindly spirit, the faith and courage it represents. So long as we remain your servant of the Convention we shall occupy this home with joy and pride. On behalf of those who may in the future serve you as Superintendent I receive this home. May God richly bless our Convention and may He lead us in continued progress that the name of Jesus Christ may be exalted and His spirit lived among men.

Superintendent.

UNITED STRATEGY AND THE WORLD

By Dr. Charles W. Ranson, General Secretary
International Missionary Council

The dominating fact in the life of the church in our time is that it is world-wide. Whatever the church's weakness and failures in the last 150 years, and they have been many, it has not forgotten its missionary mandate. The Gospel has been preached unto the uttermost parts of the earth and the church established in almost every land.

This has not come about by accident. It is the fruit of the out-pouring of prayer and devotion of the sacrificial offerings of life and substance. It is the modern missionary movement which has, under God, written this great chapter in the history of the Christian Church.

There is a temptation amongst those who have gained some knowledge of the modern expansion of the church to imagine that the missionary enterprise is almost at an end, that our main business now is to foster unity and good relations: "Behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Good relations are of very great importance and we have the highest authority for seeking to achieve the visible unity of the one body of Christ. But let us not forget that our Lord prayed: That the world may be one, Thou hast sent me.

The church is not at the end of its missionary task. It is only at the beginning. The world-wide establishment of the church is but the preparation for and the prelude to an even mightier task.

The real meaning between the Christian faith and contemporary systems of thought and life has hardly begun. Certainly, for the ancient systems of the Orient, the religious totalitarianism of Islam or of modern secular paganism—the real encounter with the Gospel lies in the future. The missionary enterprise is indeed moving out into a new era. It has passed through a period of strain and hesitancy but its pains have been the pangs of growth.

Now for the first time in history we operate from the very ground of a church that is world-wide. Older and younger churches are bound together in a partnership which renders obsolete some of the earlier conceptions of the missionary enterprise. The indigenous church and not the foreign mission is the focal point of the missionary strategy. Our whole concept of the church's function needs to be revitalized by a rebirth of missionary passion.

We need a strategy of evangelism matched to the greatness of this hour. Not since the collapse of the old Christian empire has history offered the church an assignment so difficult or so magnificent as that which confronts it now. God is calling the church to a tremendous task—an essentially missionary task. We must conceive that task as an obligation of the universal church and not exclusively the concern of the older churches. We must conceive it as a united task.

We must act together in bringing home to the whole church its missionary obligation. The Amsterdam Assembly of the World Council of Churches declared: "The evident demand of God in this situation of winning the whole world for Christ."

That will remain a pious hope unless we give bone and flesh to it by making this Advance campaign not just one more promotion stunt, but an instrument through which God, through us, can call the churches of North America to their greater assignment and to costly commitment to the Gospel.

Only a small minority in the churches at present support the missionary enterprise. Far too many regard it as a pious option. We must get it across that the man who is not a missionary has hardly begun to be a Christian.

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

VOLUME C.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1948.

NUMBER 44.

Preface to the Cambridge Platform

THE setting forth of the Public Confession of the Faith of Churches hath a double end, & both tending to public edification: first, the maintenance of the faith entire within itself: secondly, the hold forth of Unity & Harmony, both amongst, & with other Churches. . . . As (by the grace of Christ) we believe & profess the same Doctrine of the truth of the Gospel, which generally is received in all the reformed Churches of Christ in Europe: so especially, we desire not to vary from the doctrine of faith, & truth held forth by the churches of our native country. . . .

This Synod having perused, & considered (with much gladness of heart, & thankfulness to God) the confession of faith published of late by the Reverend Assembly in England,* do judge it to be very holy, orthodox, & judicious in all matters of faith: & do therefore freely & fully consent thereunto, for the substance thereof. Only in those things which have respect to church government & discipline, we refer ourselves to the platform of church-discipline, agreed upon by this present assembly: & do therefore think it meet, that this confession of faith, should be commended to the churches of Christ amongst us, & to the Honored Court, as worthy of their due consideration & acceptance. . . .

As this our profession of the same faith with them, will exempt us (even in their judgments) from suspicion of heresy: so (we trust) it may exempt us in the like sort from suspicion of schism: that though we are forced to dissent from them in matters of church-discipline: Yet our dissent is not taken up out of arrogance of spirit in our selves (whom they see willingly condescend to learn of them:) neither is it carried with uncharitable censoriousness towards them (both which are the proper, & essential characters of schism) but in meekness of wisdom, as we walk along with them, & follow them, as they follow Christ: so where we conceive a different apprehension of the mind of Christ (as it falleth out in some few points touching church order) we still reserve due reverence to them (whom we judge to be, through Christ, the glorious lights of both nations:) & only crave leave (as in spirit we are bound) to follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, & (after the Apostle's example) as we believe, so we speak

Is difference about Church-order become the inlet of all the disorders in the kingdom? hath the Lord indeed left us to such hardness of heart, that Church-government shall become a snare to Zion . . . that we cannot leave contesting & contending about it, till the kingdom be destroyed? did not the Lord Jesus, when he dedicated his sufferings for his church, & his also unto his Father, make it his earnest & only prayer for us in this world, that we all might be one in him? And is it possible that he (whom the Father heard always) should not have this last most solemn prayer heard, & granted? . . . If it be possible, for a little faith (so much as a grain of mustardseed) to remove a mountain: is it not possible, for so much strength of faith, as is to be found in all the godly in the kingdom, to remove those Images of jealousy, & to cast those stumbling-blocks out of the way, which may hinder the free passage of brotherly love amongst brethren? . . .

The Lord Jesus commune with all our hearts in secret: & he who is the King of his Church, let him be pleased to exercise his Kingly power in our spirits, that so his kingdom may come in our Churches in Purity & Peace.

Amen. Amen.

*The Westminster Confession.

THE EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The One Hundred Twenty-Third annual session of the Eastern North Carolina Conference of Congregational Christian Churches met in the Henderson Church on October 19 and 20, 1948. The session was well attended. The reports were heard with much interest. The addresses and discussions seemed to be better than usual.

Three outstanding guests appeared on our program. They gave very interesting addresses and slides of their work. These guests were Dr. Hiroshi Hatanaka, president of Kobe College, Japan; Dr. Alan Broadman Taylor, a medical missionary of South Africa, and Rev. Harold W. Case, who has charge of our American Indian work in North Dakota.

The most outstanding thing done during this conference was the organization of a conference missionary association with twenty-six charter members. The officers of this organization are as follows: Rev. J. Frank Apple, chairman; Miss Margaret Alston, secretary, and Mr. A. H. McIver, treasurer.

The conference officers for another year are: Rev. Carl Dollar, president; Rev. R. T. Grissom, vice-president; Rev. E. M. Carter, secretary, and Mr. W. J. Ballentine, treasurer.

The conference adjourned to meet in Southern Pines next year.

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.
Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

HUMAN NEED, OPEN DOORS AND ADVERSARIES.

One of the favorite projects of St. Paul's later missionary career was the collection for the needy saints in Jerusalem. Support of it was to be the visible sign of the loving loyalty of the Gentile Churches to the mother church at Jerusalem. In various letters Paul refers to it as "collection," "grace," "liberality," "fellowship," "bounty," "blessing," "service," "ministry," "alms," and "offerings." Stewardship is rich in its names and expressions. Grace and greenbacks have been inseparable in the benevolent ministry of the church, and are inseparable as well as indispensable in the far-flung ministry of Christ today.

Jerusalem normally had a large pauperized population and the distress among the Jewish Christians was causing growing anxiety. Poor at the time of their conversion, they probably had to meet the additional handicaps of boycott and persecution. In the need of the congregation at Jerusalem, St. Paul saw a clear call to the church as a whole to do the work of the Lord and apparently also a practical opportunity to further the unity of the church and to promote its expansion. Do we not have a similar situation today? There are many areas of crucial need. Since there are things which cannot be done by the local church itself, the entire church must move in upon these areas of deprivation and distress.

The last chapter of I Corinthians contains a memorable testimony of St. Paul. He hopes to go to Macedonia. For the present, however, great evangelistic opportunities with formidable opposition, keep him at Ephesus. "For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." While others hesitated and debated, Paul entered open doors and claimed new territory for Christ. His work, like that of many ministers and missionaries, was made doubly difficult by the presence of adversaries.

While we fume and fret over the ominous and impenetrable "Iron Curtain," national doors swing wide to welcome our missionaries. Ponder the words of Dr. Hilda Lazarus, head of Vellore Christian College: "The harvest is ripe in India. The gates are open. Enter in now before they close and before the Communists get in. These have cells in every village, even among the illiterates. Will you sleep while it is day? . . ." Chiang Kai Shek sent this cablegram: "The next few years are the greatest opportunity for Christian influence upon the changing life of Eastern Asia." Yes, there are difficulties and adversaries: communism, secularism and paganism. Said Dr. David MacLennan of Toronto: "While communism has slain its thousands, secularism has slain its tens of thousands." Unprecedented opportunities confront Christianity today through these doors which open around the world. Dare we enter them? That is the crucial question of our generation.

M. D.—A. D.—'48.

The great majority of adults are indebted to their family physician as well as their mother for their happy advent into this terrestrial sphere. Civilization therefore owes a great deal of gratitude to the general practitioner, servant extraordinary amid the widespread ills of mankind. He knows all roads and homes of every community and has visited them at all hours of the day and night. He has dissipated fear, banished pain, stayed the hand of death, restored valuable citizens to usefulness and exemplified in countless ways the spirit of the Great Physician!

The Medical Society of Virginia paid appropriate tribute to the general practitioner in its recent session at Richmond. "Surely," said Dr. Bryil Kirklin, "we have no need to remind ourselves that the general practitioner is indispensable to the public and is the basic unit of the medical profession. To him falls the duty of caring for innumerable cases of acute disease; of giving first and often final aid in emergencies; of doing minor and occasionally major surgery, and of treating successfully a great mass of patients for various acute and chronic ailments at their homes."

The Virginia Academy of General Practice was organized and plans formulated for a comprehensive program to encourage general practice of medicine in Virginia. Long live the family physician!

MISSIONS IN NORTH CHINA.

China is not a land of complete confusion, and Christian missionary work is not nearly wiped out by the advance of Communist troops—on the contrary, the situation in China is far from hopeless and there are opportunities for Christian mission work such as have never been known before, according to Rev. P. H. Wang of Peiping, North China. Director of Religious Education for the Congregational Christian Churches of North China.

Tall, alert, this genial Chinese Christian leader was pastor of a large Congregational Church in Peiping, North China, during the Japanese occupation. Whenever he went out on his parish work his wife handed him a small towel and a bit of soap for she never knew whether he would return home safely or end up in prison.

Mr. Wang states that training of Christian Chinese leaders is the greatest need and that there are many young people ready and willing to go into Christian work.

"Our Government found out during the war that mission school trained students were more dependable, more patriotic and more sacrificial than those trained in government schools and so they have recognized the great value of the mission schools to the nation.

"In North China four out of seven of the American Board Missions are now occupied by Communist troops.

When these troops took Fenyan and Takiu recently where four American Board women missionaries were working, they posted notices warning the people not to molest mission schools, hospitals and churches." This was undoubtedly due in part to the shortage of hospitals for Mr. Wang points out that there are probably not as many hospital beds in the whole of China as in the City of Boston alone.

One is never sure, however, as to what policy the Communists will follow, and Mr. Wang passionately urges that there be no retreating in the face of Communism. "What is Christianity made of?" he asks, "Is it a kind of fancy cake only good for a tea party and not solid food for health? We are dealing with a crucial period in the history of missions in China. What we do now will affect the next century. We need devotion to Christ's work and to God's will. We need faith, audacity and action."

Mr. Wang's family has been Christian for three generations and he, himself, is a graduate of American Board Schools in China and studied for four years at the University of London. He was in America in 1940 as a member of the Congregational Christian International Seminar. His present work in China takes him much into the country under difficult and often dangerous situations.

"In spite of the suffering, the uncertainty and the dangers the church work is growing and the life of the church is deepening," he declares.

China Today

By MRS. ROWLAND M. CROSS*

Miss Shannon, in her guide for the study of Frank Price's book China in the Asia of Today, uses this sentence with four emphases. "Let's get everybody talking about China—and see what happens. The emphasis first is on China. The second time the emphasis is upon everybody, the third time the emphasis is upon talking, and the fourth time upon see what will happen."

This is a happy way to introduce a study of China for we must, this year especially, as it is a year set apart for the study of China, really do some thinking, talking and acting if we are to have an intelligent understanding of the problems, needs, struggles, and sufferings of our China friends and how we as Christians can be of service to her.

Why Think of China Now?

But why is it important to think of China just at this time when urgent pressing problems challenge us from every land and cries for help are heard all across the world? After all, China has been here about 4,000 years and had a highly developed civilization way back to 221 B. C. Surely she can manage without our help when here in our own homes, in our churches, in our towns, and in our nation there are pleas for our assistance and concern.

*Mrs. Rowland M. Cross, one of our American Board missionaries to China, was to have been one of our teachers in the School of Missions this summer at Elon. Mrs. Cross was to teach our foreign mission study book for this year, "China in the Asia of Today." I have asked Mrs. Cross to write an article for The Sun on some of her impressions of China and things she would think interesting to you. This is her article.—Mrs. W. J. A.

John Hay, the American Secretary of State, said long ago, "Whoever understands the mighty empire of China, socially, politically, economically, and religiously, has a key to the world politics for the next five centuries."

China is important now, how important we cannot tell yet, but it is imperative for us to have some understanding of what she is undergoing now—her political, social and religious customs—and, most of all, to have an open mind and sympathetic heart for her struggles and a desire to help her through these terrible times of trial and suffering.

China is important because of her position in Asia, and Asia is important because of her place in the world. The sleeping giant of the Orient is waking up and when she is entirely aroused, woe to those who have not been her friends and blessed are those who have felt her potential greatness and desired to bring it to fruition.

Two-thirds of the world's people live in Asia; four out of every ten people in the world are either Chinese or Indians. The population of Asia is three times that of the rest of the world. Will these teeming millions be our friends or enemies? That is an important question in the world today.

China has 500,000,000 people and six-sevenths of them have to concentrate on only one-third of the land. The really inhabited portions of China are only one-half as large as the inhabited parts of the U.S. Consequently, there is an average of less than one-half acre of food-producing soil per person. Scarce rainfall, extremes in temperature, mountainous regions, various factors have produced this crowding, and the great masses of people are packed into the four regions of North China, Szechwan, in the West the Yangtze Valley, and the Canton region. These regions are, of course, but a small part of the total area. The Chinese infiltrate into other lands, carrying what they know of good and evil, their customs, their culture, their weaknesses and their strength with them. Indo-Asia, Siam, Burma, and the Philippines have strong and flourishing Chinese colonies. Is it important what ideas, ideals, what religious beliefs, what moral development they share with others? Shall these migrants scatter seeds of Communism or of Christianity? They are one reason why China is our concern now.

China Is Important Because of Its Proximity to Russia.

China is having to choose between democracy, fascism, and Communism. She is going through a terrible time of testing now. Perhaps she will repudiate all three of these methods and eventually work out a new system based on her own social culture and needs. The West shook China out of her age-old society based on the family system, forced new adjustments and new ideas upon her, and now there is a new menace from the North with a pressure of new and strangely up-setting ideas. Can we help her to make a choice for a true democracy based upon the principles of individual freedom and the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God?

This summer, while teaching in a young people's conference, I found the students impatient over China. "Why cannot she be strong as we are?" "Why isn't she industrialized?" "Why is there so much poverty and ignorance?" These are genuinely puzzling questions and to answer them adequately would take far back again and again to this thought. China has been a Republic for only 37 years. She had an imperial regime for about 3,500 years. She became a republic at the time Woodrow Wilson became our president. Can we expect her to become a smooth running, efficient republic in that short time? It has taken us considerably longer to become one ourselves, and we are not satisfied with every thing our country has accomplished yet. When China finally freed herself from corrupt Manchu government by a revolution in 1911, she could not build a new China at once; the old imper-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Young People's Missionary Conference of the Eastern Virginia Conference meeting in the Suffolk Church, Sunday, October 24, was a good success. Mrs. Vivian B. Harrell, Jr., president, and Mrs. M. P. Brinkley, Young People's superintendent, had planned an excellent program with the aid of Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, of the Home Missions Board, New York, and it was well received. The lower floor of the main auditorium of the church was well filled with an overflow in the balcony both at the afternoon and evening sessions. A roll call of the churches by Miss Claire Bradshaw, secretary, at the opening of the session while delegates were still coming in showed 296 already on hand for the count. A well planned and prepared supper was served by the Young Ladies' Bible Class under the direction of Mrs. L. G. Cones, Jr., and Mrs. W. H. Felton, was enjoyed by a goodly number.

The Damascus young people had the opening worship service. In the brief business session which followed Mrs. W. B. Williams, treasurer, made a report which showed the young people had raised for Missions during the year $1,119.12, which was an increase over the year before. Mrs. Robert M. Kimball presented the literature to be used in planning the year's meetings in local young people societies. Dr. Hiroshi Hatanaka, president of Kobe College, Japan, spoke briefly as he was the main speaker at the evening service. Dr. Alan B. Taylor of South Africa, superintendent of McCord Hospital and a famous surgeon brought firsthand information in an inspiring manner. The Rev. Harold W. Case, Elbowoods, N. D., did a good day's work for the Indian work in his address which was followed by pictures of the field. Supt. W. T. Scott, in the absence of Miss Coghill who was kept at home on account of the illness of her father, presented the speakers.

After the supper served in the Fellowship Hall there followed the evening service. Special music was in the afternoon, a solo, rendered beautifully by Miss Julianne Brinkley of Suffolk, in the evening the Suffolk Chapel Choir sang an anthem. They were accompanied by David Brown Harrell, church organist and choir director. Worship service in the evening was led by the Bethlehem young people. The feature of the evening service was an address by Dr. Hatanaka, in which he stressed the church's need of feeling its unity throughout all sections of the world, and making every part of the Church effective on an international scale everywhere. He stressed the need of the strong church in America making the church strong also in Japan. He likened the bonds of church fellowship to steel and iron reinforcement in modern concrete structures which holds bombed and shaken buildings together. He felt that the church should think of its oneness in Christian fellowship as the ties that bind the nations together in Christian cooperation in our modern times. Following the close of this service Dr. Taylor showed pictures in the Youth Chapel of the South African work.

CHINA TODAY.

ism was gone but nothing could seem to take its place. Foreign powers stepped in with encroachments and demands; the war lord era of strife alternating with periods of co-operation and competition produced unrest and turmoil everywhere. China so torn with strife so lacking in transportation so divided in language with her various dialects, so unaccustomed to government by the people, so poverty stricken, and so ignorant, could not become industrialized. Wars, periodic floods and famines kept her impoverished and the vast majority lived for all their lives on a subsistence level. Then came the unspeakably cruel war with Japan, and now the terrors and despair of a civil war.

And Now What?

I remember when the Japanese came, and the work of years seemed to be ending, and we were feeling as though the Chinese could not take any more suffering, one old Chinese friend said cheerfully, "Don't despair. In four hundred years it will be all right." He had the long look ahead and what he saw and had faith in, gave him comfort. The other day I heard one of our Chinese pastors relate some of the trials of life in China now. He had suffered under the Japanese for years, but had kept bravely at his work. He said, "We Christians must have 'stick-ti-bility' to go on in China and that is the only way."

The Chinese are showing this "sticktibility" in many ways. In spite of tremendous problems of living caused by inflation, tired by long years of conflict, frustrated in carrying out treasured plans, they are carrying on the Christian work in churches, in hospitals, in homes, and in schools courageously and well.

Go into any mission compound and see the throngs of earnest young students intent on getting as much education as possible while there is time, for the dark shadow of Communism looms ever before them. All schools are too crowded for efficient teaching but the students cannot be turned away. In our Bridgman Academy in Peiping, 1,000 girls are accommodated where facilities are adequate for only about 400, and this is true in most schools.

Young people cannot help but be confused and bewildered at the future before them. They are seeking help and comfort in Christianity and never has the demand for Christian teaching been greater.

Perhaps it is in the development of the Chinese women that one can see clearly what mission work has done for China. From the beginning of mission work, missionaries knew that girls and women must receive teaching if China was to have a place in the family of nations. Schools were established for girls against much opposition on the part of the old conservative Chinese who could not see much sense in wasting education on mere girls. Compare this with the status of women today. One of the Y.W.C.A. leaders reporting at the International Y.W.C.A. Conference in Hangchow last year, said, that the Chinese delegates were among the finest and most consecrated leaders in all the groups coming from all over the world. Not only are they successful wives and mothers, but in addition to heavy domestic duties, they carry big responsibilities for community, church and nation. In so few years have Chinese women come into places of leadership. Just to give a few examples from many there is Dr. Wu I Fang, president of Gingling College, leader of the Chinese delegation to the International Council in Madras in 1938, a Chinese delegate to the San Francisco Conference in 1945 and for eleven years chairman of the National Christian Council in China. When she finished her duties there, they paid her this tribute—"By her strength of intel-

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND OUR COLLEGE.

By DR. L. E. SMITH.

When our Church in the South decided to build a college for the education of her young people, she turned to her whole constituency for assistance. Appeals were made to our local churches. Our Sunday schools took up the challenge. Classes, departments, and other organizations within the Sunday school began raising money. It came in pennies, nickels, and dimes. These were small donations but they helped tremendously. In addition to giving financial assistance, the campaign proved to be a source of information and a means of education. Consequently, our whole constituency knew that the church was undertaking to build a college. They knew that it would cost money and that everyone was expected to contribute and to make his contribution worthy of his name and position in the church.

The college opened its doors for work in September 1890. Its greatest need was students. It turned again to our Sunday schools hoping to recruit its student body largely from this source. Today, after more than a half century, we are still looking to our Sunday schools. We look to them for an offering on every fifth Sunday and we hope that it will be generous. Our needs are great. We also look to our Sunday schools for students. Many of our best students come right out of our Sunday schools. They always have a wholesome influence on the campus. They have learned to be polite, courteous, unselfish, and considerate. Those whose lives are guided by Christian principles are always assets and never liabilities.

But it is not only a question of receiving. It is one of giving as well. The hope and purpose of the college is to take these fine, young people, who come from our Sunday schools and church people's homes, and guide them, instruct them, inspire them, and send them back to their homes, churches, and communities of much more value than when they came. Our Sunday schools need teachers—teachers who are trained and prepared. Our churches need pastors—pastors who are trained and prepared to minister to their people.

This is the main purpose of the college. This is the one legitimate reason for its existence. If the college did not prepare its young people for definite Christian service, who would? Not our private schools. They are too mercenary. Expenses are beyond the reach of the average family. Not our tax-supported schools. They are denied the privilege of giving specific religious instruction by the iron-clad rule of separation of church and state. The church college has a job to do which no other institution can do.

Our Sunday schools and our college are mutually dependent upon each other. They both have a start. Neither has to wait for the other. The Sunday schools may increase their support of the college and the college may multiply its efforts in the interest of the Sunday schools and their work. By working together, we may, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, build a greater church and help to build the Kingdom of God in a questioning and doubting society. We need the assurance and stability that comes only from authoritative information concerning God and His will. This information is trust-worthy resulting from sound religious instruction.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

By vote of the Southern Convention, in session at Liberty Church, Vance County, the calendar year was made the fiscal year of the college. It is hoped and earnestly desired that all churches may raise their conference apportionments for the college in full by the end of the local church year. Should any church fail to raise its full apportionment and wished to do so, it could take the remainder of this calendar year to secure the full amount. Then, it could be listed as a banner church. This is the first year for the operation of this new plan. I am sure that the churches of our Convention will be glad to cooperate with the Sunday schools so that we may determine for once that the entire apportionment for the college shall be raised.

We are getting along fine. To date a total of $9,689.43 has been received from the Sunday schools and churches through the Convention office on this year's apportionment for the college. We have only $2,810.57 to go. It will be a pleasure to all concerned to go the whole way this year. The college greatly appreciates the support of our churches.

TERCENTENARY OF CAMBRIDGE PLATFORM.

Congregationalism's "Platform of Church Discipline"—the Cambridge Platform was adopted on October 27, 1648. An anniversary service was held on Wednesday of last week in the First Church, Congregational, of Cambridge, Mass. Notable speakers included Drs. Douglas Horton, James B. Contant, Arthur H. Bradford, Fredrick M. Eliot and Prof. Roland H. Bainton.

The name "Cambridge Platform" probably means nothing to the average layman but it was the document through which the Colonial free churches of the New World announced in 1648 their right to conduct their own affairs and to be free from any secular or ecclesiastical higher authorities.

The three fundamental principles laid down in this historic document still hold in the Congregation Christian Fellowship, namely, that the church derives its life from its faith in God, as he is revealed in Jesus Christ by the Holy Spirit to its members; that the people of the churches only to the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Historians say that the 1648 document also held the seeds which came to fruition in the American Revolution 130 years later. The little group of church leaders who worked two years to frame the Cambridge Platform probably did not, however, look

OKINAWA NEEDS YOUR HELP NOW.

*Address by YOSHIO HIGA
Head of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A.'s
Youth Department of the Okinawa Association of Christian Churches.*

I have witnessed the warfare at its worst and am deeply impressed that war is terrible and that we must work to avoid it by all means at our disposal. Perhaps we of Okinawa suffered most in this last unfortunate and terrible war. Ninety per cent of our buildings were destroyed. Scores of thousands of civilians were killed. We on Okinawa learned by experience that war is "hell." I saw a baby sucking on his dead mother's breast. I saw many small children crying and wandering bewilderedly without parents and without food. It is not necessary to mention further such horrible scenes. War on Okinawa was these scenes multiplied by many thousands.

Soon, we pray, there will be a Peace Treaty. Great powers have already begun to make demands for Okinawa. We hope you will see that we do not become pawns in the game of World Politics. If this happens, we are afraid we will know all our sorrows and sufferings all over again.

Nor have Okinawa's hardships ceased since the war. Too many people are trying to live on that small island. The emigrants who have been returned are a big problem in the economic recovery of Okinawa. Though three years have passed since the war, thirty per cent of the people still do not have even temporary housing. The problem of finding materials for permanent housing is very important. So much of our always inadequate supply was destroyed, some by your bulldozers which scraped off about one-third of our top-soil in building roads and camp sites. Food is always short on Okinawa; proteins and fats are very short at present. The people are clothed in GI uniforms that are already beginning to wear out. We Okinawans are very conscious of feminine beauty and we hope that the time is not far distant when our women can dress in something besides khaki and GI shoes. Most children are barefooted.

Even more serious, school conditions are pitiful. Many schools have no buildings; all are very short of pencils, tablets, paper, chalk and teaching materials of all kinds.

In addition we need industrial machinery and equipment of all kinds if our business is to get back on its feet. Even before the war there were "leftists" on Okinawa. The confusion in which we have lived for these last years has provided good opportunity for agitators. Nevertheless, the Okinawans have remained firm in their determination to be a true democracy based on your patterns. You must, however, implement our common ideal as quickly as possible. There is no time to be lost in this matter. It is our earnest hope that America will continue and increase her help until we can become self-sustaining.

Before the war there were eighteen congregations with ten church buildings and eight hundred members. They were Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and a few other denominations. Today there are no denominations; all are united. There are forty congregations with over 3,000 members and four Bible study groups. At least 3,000 more attend services regularly. Why have we increased so rapidly? Partly because before the war the Japanese militarists oppressed Christianity and now we feel free to believe as we like; and also because during the war the Okinawan people saw many good Samaritans among the American Forces. It was a wonderful contrast! After the war came the beginnings of Democracy and freedom of faith. I do not mean that everything that Military Government and the members of the American Forces have done has been good. However, taken as a whole Okinawans have been greatly impressed with the religion that has made kindly men of victorious soldiers.

Now is the golden opportunity for Christians to Christianize the entire population of Okinawa. Only with the help of American Christians can this object be accomplished. We have been disappointed that in the three years since V-J day no missionaries have come to us.

We know that "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." We of Okinawa, proud of our ancient history and clinging to our unique culture, have certainly felt the chastening rod. But in these hard days we have found new meaning in John's words: "... God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away ... Behold I make all things new."

THE CHRISTIAN REVOLUTION IN THE MIDDLE EAST.

By DR. JOHN S. BADEAU, President of American University at Cairo.

The Middle East is more than an oil well, more than a political hotspot in a troubled world, more than the crescent banner of Islamic civilization. Before all else it is men and women, communities and nations, caught in the toils of life. Like us, it is human beings trying desperately to find peace and wellbeing in the midst of a problem-filled world.

This simple fact needs to be learned by all the forces of the Western world, and especially by those of us who believe in the Christian world enterprise. If Christianity has any mission in this day, it is not because it sets itself to oppose other religious systems as such. Its mission lies in its ability to be relevant to human needs. Its success will come only as it proves in the arena of actual living that it can help men solve their problems and find a fuller life.

In this light, look at the Middle East. What are the currents that sweep life there? Surely the most apparent—is it not in every headline?—is the struggle of Eastern people to live their own life. Ever since Napoleon landed his troops in Egypt, Western pressures of every sort have been brought to bear on the nations of the Middle East. France in Syria, Britain in Egypt, Zionism in Palestine—these appear to the Arab to be all parts of the same campaign by the Great Powers to penetrate and control Eastern lands. That is why the recent history of the Middle East has been written in discontent, demonstrations and warfare, for these are the ways in which the Eastern nationalist is voicing his deep desire to be master in his own house.

That the Middle East, like much of Asia, is beset with the ills of an ignorant and undernourished peasant society, is not news. The news lies in the growing concern of this genera-

WHAT YOUR 1948 THANK OFFERING CAN MEAN TO OTHERS, TO GOD, AND TO YOU.

By FRED S. BUSCHMEYER
Minister, Mt. Pleasant Church,
Washington, D. C.

It was my privilege to visit in the American Zones of Germany and Austria again this summer and to see and feel the difference that the passing of a year has brought. To state my conclusion at the end of the visit first, let me assure you that the need of our continued understanding and aid is at least as desperately urgent as ever! A Thank Offering now can make very real difference for the better, both in meeting the material needs and in building bonds of fraternal and spiritual understanding among literally millions of people who are sometimes even more hungry for friendship, understanding, and a renewed conviction that life may still offer worthwhile goals, than they are for food itself! And their needs for food would be considered very tragetically real from our standard of daily diet!

Two of the most hopeful differences that I observed were, first the effect of the monetary reform of June 1948 which has given the people a new faith in the eventual stability of their own economy and which has caused many heretofore idle people to go to work; and second, the fact that many of the most able bodied and technically qualified younger people among the Displaced Persons are getting a chance to move to the Benelux Countries, England, Canada, Australia, and South America, where they can become self-respecting productive parts of the economy of these countries. Both of these differences obviously give reason for a certain amount of rejoicing. But both of these conditions also bring a still more heightened condition of need for those very Displaced Persons least able to take care of themselves!

Here is the point. The monetary reform called in all the old German money and gave people in return five per cent of their former wealth in new Marks now, with the promise of another five per cent within the next year. With so little ready cash to live on, and with the old "black market" or barter system replaced by the new money, many upper middle class people have entered the labor market to take away the jobs of poorer people who now have neither legal money nor the old "black market" barter values with which to meet their daily needs. This also means that the financial reserves of local welfare organizations have been wiped out for the time being and cannot be replaced until more money has been earned and contributed. But in the meantime the poor and destitute are in even more pitiable plight than before! And by reason of this same sad condition our gifts of remembrance, brotherhood, and Christian concern have all the greater significance and helpful power!

The new burden of tragedy growing out of the younger people being moved abroad is the fact that frequently it means breaking up family units, leaving either or both children and aged parents behind with no one to support and care for them! The human tragedy involved at this point is more poignant as we approach the Thanksgiving and Christmas seasons here in our own homes. We will want to do everything we possibly can—even to actually going without some of the gifts that we might exchange amongst ourselves—in order that we might perform a genuinely needy ministry of brotherly concern in our Master's Name.

And still more overwhelming in its magnitude is the fact that there are more homeless people in western Europe today than there were immediately after the war was over! Hitler "displaced" approximately nine million people, approximately seven million of whom have now been cared for in one way or another. But our own Allied post-war political agreements with Russia have made another twelve million people homeless, some of them literally driven out and others of them choosing homelessness in the West rather than a life of slave labor—possibly in Siberia—under the rule of the Soviet Government! These are people who are truly exiles for conscience sake, and it would be a denial of all the finest in our own national and spiritual heritage for us to fail to give them all the aid and encouragement we can in their hour of choosing between the Totalitarian and the Christian and Democratic ways!

If you have ever asked yourself, "Yes, but what can I do as one person in the midst of these terrible and terrifying conditions?" your Thank Offering gives you both an answer and an opportunity! Contribute more generously than you can afford, and in your heart of hearts hear the Master saying, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me."

A Note About CWVR.

Although our program of Post War Emergency ends on December 31st, the time for getting in our Thank Offering to CWVR extends to January 15th. In our new program of Advance, CWVR will become a permanent committee, instead of an emergency measure for post-war.

LONG'S CHAPEL.

The Ladies Missionary Society of the Long's Chapel Christian Church met at the church hut, Tuesday, Oct. 5th at 8 o'clock.

Mrs. W. J. Fonville had charge of the program. Reports on the conference at Asheboro were made by the delegates that attended. It was a very interesting meeting.

Mrs. Elton Rudd and Mrs. Byrd Shepherd had charge of the social hour. Games were played and delightful refreshments were enjoyed by all.

The next meeting will be held the first Tuesday in November.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Boys and Girls,

I have just telephoned Mr. Kernodle, who publishes THE SUN to ask him if I had a Children's Page at the office and he said, "No, and please write something for the children this week." Recently the editor wrote about his travels and so I think I will tell you where I have been going.

In August, I made several trips to First Church, Portsmouth. This is a church that I love very much for I went there as a bride and they were good to me and forgave my foolish ways. In September I visited our church at Leaksville and found the people lovely and how I enjoyed the mountains!

The first of October, I went to Newport News for our Missionary Conference. The women elected me to be their president which is a great honor. I thought again and again that day of how fitting it was that my election came at the Newport News Church. I led my first worship service in the Willing Workers there and my mother and grandmother took me to church and meetings with them. I left that church when I became a minister's wife. In that church I received my training.

Last week I went to Elon for a meeting of the Woman's Board. I traveled by bus and it was a long trip. As I passed through towns where we have churches I thought about them and what the women and children were doing. The bus stopped in front of the church at Haw River and you may recall that I want to see the window commemorating the White Pilgrim's work. Well, it was late and I didn't. Dr. and Mrs. Smith graciously entertained Mrs. Leathers and me. It was good to be in their home again and I enjoyed eating in the college cafeteria.

When I came home I went through Reidsville and Danville and it was nice to remember the fine work being done in these churches: Reidsville, with its missionary program, and Danville with a program of social service.

This week I'll be in South Norfolk attending the sessions of Easter Virginia Conference and following that I'm going to Milwaukee for the National Assembly of the United Council of Church Women.

Did you have fun on Halowe'en? We had fireworks in the part in our neighborhood. They were so lovely that the goblins forgot to do mean tricks!

With best wishes,
JUNE JOY HOUSE.

WHO WAS AT FAULT?

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.

(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Ellen seems so unhappy when with her playmates, Mrs. Carson. I came to see you, hoping that together we might bring about a better social adjustment for her before she enters the third grade this fall," said Ellen's teacher.

"Yes, the condition is a problem," admitted her mother. "There's always some quarrel going on. Yesterday the girls said Ellen's white collar and cuffs were old-fashioned. Ellen cried. 'They're jealous,' I said, 'pay no attention. Show them you don't care.'"

"But that attitude will not make her happy, Mrs. Carson. When did the trouble begin?"

"When we moved here a year ago. I've tried hard to be nice to these girls. Ellen has treats for them, brings them in to play, and gives lovely parties. Of course, she isn't perfect, but these girls are downright 'catty.' Really, they're to blame nine-tenths of the time."

"What companions had Ellen before you moved here?"

"None; we lived too far from other children, but I played with her. She has lots of toys and is very particular about them. I think the girls sometimes disarrange things just to tease her."

"It looks like jealousy, as you say, and we'll have to remove it. Ellen shouldn't continue to be subjected to conditions that cause so much mental turmoil."

"No. What do you think causes this jealousy?" inquired Mrs. Carson.

"To get at the root of it we'll have to analyze the situation. Did it ever occur to you that Ellen is dressed much better than the other girls? Also, that her playthings, parties and treats are much more elaborate than theirs. Naturally, she feels superior, and she knows it. The girls resent this attitude and feel unfriendly toward her. If a girl is always making others feel inferior with regard to her-possessions, will she be popular? Think it over, Mrs. Carson, but don't say anything to Ellen or she will become self-conscious."

"You may be right," admitted Mrs. Carson after a long pause, "but it isn't a question of money—we have no more than many of our neighbors—rather, its time and attention. I just love to sew and to fuss over Ellen's affairs."

After this, the teacher noted that Ellen wore her simplest dresses; that her new spring coat was plain; that when the class brought favorite games she came with a simple top and passed it around; that instead of running away from her the girls now let Ellen walk home with them.

"You certainly opened my eyes," said Mrs. Carson to the teacher a few weeks later. "Soon after our talk, I suggested a dolls' tea party. 'Oh, goody!' cried Ellen, 'my new doll is the biggest.' 'Why not have Lydia Ann?' I said. 'She always goes to bed with you.' 'She won't look nice,' protested Ellen. However, I finally persuaded her to lend the big doll to a shut-in cousin. Then Ellen wanted to wear her new red dress and show it off. 'But you're the hostess,' I reminded her. 'Wear your tan, so you'll forget about yourself and make your guests happy.'"

"Well, the girls came to the party, carrying their dolls—all finer than Lydia Ann. 'Where's your big doll?' was the first question; they clearly expected to have their dolls overshadowed. 'She's away on a visit. Anyhow, I like Lydia Ann best,' said Ellen. The girls beamed on Lydia Ann with her scratched nose and on Ellen in her tan dress. They felt superior this time.

"Instead of having the girls carry out one of my usual perfectly-planned parties, I let them spread sandwiches, squeeze lemons, and set the table. Such a happy group!"

"'Oh, Mother,' exclaimed Ellen to me, after the last small dish was washed and the girls had gone, 'wasn't that the nicest party!'"

Money alone is only a means; it presupposes a man to use it. The rich man can go where he pleases, but perhaps please himself nowhere. He can buy a library or visit the whole world, but perhaps has neither patience to read nor intelligence to see. . . The purse may be full and the heart empty. He may have gained the world and lost himself; and with all his wealth around him . . . he may live as blank a life as any tattered ditcher.

Book Reviews

LET'S ACT—Now! By Richard Terrill Baker, 128 pages, New York: Friendship Press, 50 cents.

This is the keynote book for the Foreign Missions advance program. The book presents a strong argument for the use of the church in building a better world. It proposes a practical plan of Christian action for individuals as well as organizations. The author believes that there is an answer to the despair of millions of small men who are asking, "But what can I do about the shattered state of civilization? What can any one person do?" He feels that the answer, though neither short nor easy, is simple in its basic tenets. It is the traditional answer of the Christian religion—faith and works.

The author challenges Christians to join in action that will reach the very roots of the social and economic problems that lie beneath the troubled surface of our day. He describes in detail such varied projects of the foreign missions program as technical services, agricultural institutes, hospitals, and literacy classes. He tells the reader how the lives of individuals and entire communities have been lifted and given direction. It is clearly indicated that the progressive program of missions must be continued, extended and multiplied. The church must stand squarely in the center of the one world we envision, creating that world by giving spiritual motivation to industry, education, government, the home.

Mr. Baker places great emphasis on the place of the individual Christian in this plan as a unit of his church. He must belong, contribute, work! But first of all he must be enlisted and aroused to action. And this arousing is the place where Let's Act—Now fits in, as part of the great forward movement for a world-wide advance in the Kingdom of God. This book may be ordered from The Pilgrim Press.

* * *

The following poem by a business woman was inspired after reading the new book, Let's Act—Now! by Richard Terrill Baker, Friendship Press (50c). It has been suggested as appropriate in teaching or in preparing worship services in connection with this already nationally-known little volume:

Let's Act—Now!

He stands there pleading—this Christ of Galilee,

Of Paris and Peiping, New York and Tokyo.
Before the rubble of war-torn towns
And the hunger of wasted hills,
He reaches out hands of suffering and sympathy—
Hands that have caressed the curls of tiny tots
And carried health to the impotent
And borne the nail wounds on the cross;
They now reach out as to all the earth,
And fain would He gather them to Himself
To heal their every hurt and meet their every need;
But He cannot—not even He—alone,
And so He calls and pleads to you to help.
O, farmer-man, do you not hear? He needs your rake and hoe;
Your hands are His hands to feed the hungry.
O, medical man and nurses, He needs your help to heal the nations.
College man and maid, He needs your brains in every field, everywhere.
Homemaker, business woman, with your influence and purse
He bids you pray and use them.
Teachers, the Great Teacher bids you join with Him to lead the world to truth.
Man with a Bible, and woman, too, minister, missionary, layman—
Christ calls you; renew your pledge to Him.
For centuries He's pleaded, but few have answered "Yes!"
Too long the harvest has been white; it cannot wait always;
Death claims its toll, wars make desolation, darkness prowls the earth.
O, you who have the light of God within your souls,
How long will you keep it hidden 'neath selfishness and carelessness?
Heed now the Christ and join with Him to save the world.
Let's answer "Yes!" to Him. LET'S ACT—NOW!

—Madeline George.

tion in the face of such ills. The people struggling with such problems, what is the ministry of Christian work? Is it not a ministry of good will? The rendering of human service without asking either political influence or commercial advantage in return? We in this country have little idea of what such service means, for it is literally the only contact of the Middle East with the West that is not biased by some ulterior motives. This is why Christian institutions have won such a place in the heart of the Moslem world. They are expressions of a new principle of human relations—a principle that we know as the "Kingdom of God." Now more than ever that spirit is needed in the Middle East, and if the Christian forces do not implement it, no other forces will.

But we have, too, a ministry of service. Much is being done to meet social needs. Popular education is making remarkable progress, health programs are lengthening life. But there is still a great morass of stagnant humanity. To these the Christian forces have the ministry of service. It is no longer a service of merely primitive medicine or education. The Middle East needs much more than the one-room school—or hospital. Expert social work, advanced techniques of research, developed agricultural experimentation, education in new and modern fields—these are the places where life can be served. And to serve life is surely the basic task of the Christian enterprise.

Some would stop here, but so to stop would be less than fully Christian. For to its ministries of goodwill and service, Christian work has always added that indispensable ministry of salvation which is the concept of the Gospel. And here "salvation" is not a theological term, but a mark of the most incontrovertible realism. For we all need to be saved—saved from our own ignorance, selfishness, blindness to a new and more harmonious way of life and of life's relations. The East needs it no less than the West; we all need it together. That salvation is not a task distinct from goodwill or service; it is the soil in which these grow, the spirit by which they become possible. That experience shines forth from men's knowledge of, and contact with, Christ and all that his life and teachings and personality have meant to men. The East needs it, the world needs, if we are not to perish from our own folly.

so far ahead. They were too busy setting up a new type of church government.

The principle of local church autonomy still is widely practiced throughout the country, not only by churches descended from the New England Congregationalism, Disciples of Christ and others.

The Rev. Henry Wilder Foote of Cambridge, church historian, estimates that "today nearly half of the whole number of American Protestants belong to churches which are Congregational in polity."

The Rev. Dr. Frederick L. Fagler of New York, executive secretary of a joint committee sponsoring the anniversary celebration, has this to say of the document.

"The colonial churches, through the Cambridge Platform, made clear the right of a local group to have control of their own particular affairs. They took a long step in behalf of local self-government, and this became the cornerstone of New England political organization."

PROPHECY IN THE BIBLE.

LESSON VII—NOVEMBER 14, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: He hath showed the, O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.—Micah 6:8.

LESSON: Amos 5:21-6, 6, 7, 10-17; Micah 4:1-5, 5:2-4, 6:6-8.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 55.

Prophets and Prophecy.

There is a lot of confusion and misunderstanding in regard to a prophet and prophecy in the Bible. Many people, perhaps most people think of a prophet as one who predicts things, a kind of glorified "fortune teller" who could give every detail of the future long before it happened. And usually he did this in mysterious and extravagant language which only a few gifted people could understand. There are not a few people who think that the prophecies of the Old Testament are the most important books of the whole Bible, not excepting even the Gospels or the Letters of Paul. And many are the folks who are going up and down the land, playing upon and preying upon the minds of gullible people, and getting them all upset by strange teachings concerning the "times" and the "times to come."

Well to be sure there is an element of prediction in prophecy. The prophets of the Old Testament did foretell events that might, and events that did come to pass. And often they put their messages in strange and startling language. Nor would it be fair, or true, to say that these prophecies have no meaning for our day and the days to come. Many of them, of course, have already been fulfilled. Some are perhaps in the process of fulfillment. And some are yet to be fulfilled.

But essentially, and primarily, a prophet was one who "spoke for God" as the word itself indicates—"pro", in behalf of; and "phemi," to speak. A prophet was a man who had felt or heard the voice of God, and who spoke out for God. He knew the signs of the times, and he could put two and two together and know how things would come out. He believed that God had purpose in history, that the universe was grounded in morality, that disobedience brought penalty, that men and nations reaped what they sowed. The prophets therefore spoke out boldly in the name of the Lord, and declared His message. He was God's mouthpiece, God's voice to the people. Such elements of prediction as there were in his message were there because he knew how things were going, and how they would come out. And yet there was sometimes a conditional element in prophecy. If men or the nation would repent, things would be changed.

Priest and Prophet.

In a sense, the priest was the defender of the "status quo", the custodian of things as they were. The prophet was the disturber of things "as is." For the priest religion tended to become fixed in formula and form, in creed and ceremony. For the prophet, it was a living, changing thing, a matter of inner life and vitality. In a sense the priest was the pastor, the prophet the visiting evangelist, although it would not do to press the analogy too far. But ever and anon the prophet cried out against putting forth the effort to "put new wine in old wine-skins." For him the body without spirit was dead. There is always a sense of urgency in his message. There is always the sense of inner compulsion too. He prefaced his remarks with "Thus saith the Lord." The priest would say "As it was the beginning, is now, and evermore shall be." The prophet would say "As it was in the beginning, is now, but it must be changed."

A Country Preacher Goes to the City.

Amos was a "country preacher." He lived on the outskirts of civilization, and apart from city life. He had a lot of time to himself, and with God. He did a lot of observing and thinking. He had never had any formal religious training in the schools of his day, and he did not come from a family of preachers. But he had been taught by God, and that was the important thing. As a wool-gatherer he undoubtedly had occasion to go from time to time to the cities to sell his wool. And there his seeing-eye saw all—saw the elaborate religious rituals, the complicated religious exercises, the vast machinery of the religious system. He saw also the emptiness of it all, the low morality of the people, the social inequalities and injustices, the great gulf between profession and performance, the sham and hypocrisy of both priest and people. The thing stank to high heaven. He could not keep silent. The voice of the Lord had spoken to him, and he lashed forth with words that bite and sting, even after all these centuries. He uses consummate tact in getting a hearing for his message. Instead of denouncing the sins of the people directly and at once, he begins his sermon, or sermons, by denouncing the sins of the adjoining nations. One after another, he calls them to account for their sins, and pronounces in the name of the Lord, sentence and doom. And then suddenly he arraigns the people of his own nation. He exposes the superficiality of their worship and the sordidness of their lives. He holds up to the white light of God's truth, the social sins of the day. He pictures Jehovah as "being sick at His stomach" at their feasts and solemn assemblies, and their sacrifices and burnt offerings, and all because of their insincerity and inconsistencies. It is prophetic preaching at its best.

It took courage, scads of courage, for this plain countryman to stand at the center of the religious life of the people at Bethel, and rebuke them openly for their sins. The leaders ridiculed and reviled him and then threatened him. But because he had seen the face of God he was not afraid of the face of men. He pronounced doom, a doom that found fulfillment long after Amos had gone. He is the first of the prophets whose sermons have been preserved for us in writing. Much of his language, and parts of his message belong to another day. But he dealt with principles that are timeless and eternal. We need more Amoses today to criticize the social order and to call men and nations to repentance.

Another Country Preacher of Hope.

Micah, like Amos was a country preacher. He lived in a small village, a broad place in the road, about twenty-five miles from Jerusalem. He was a man of deep feeling and ardent patriotism, and a man of flaming zeal. He was conscious of a call from God, and like so many of his fellow-prophets he prefaced his messages with "Thus saith the Lord" or words to that effect.

His message was two-fold. In the opening chapters of the book which bears his name, he denounced the sins of the people and pronounced doom upon the nation unless it repented. It was this prophet who gave us what the later George Adam Smith said was the high point of the Old Testament "What doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly before God?" Religion might have forms and ceremonies, but its ultimate and acid test was the fruitage of personal life and social justice.

The latter parts of this book strikes a more tender, and softer note. They deal with the wonderful promises of the Messianic Age, and emphasize the gracious purpose and loving care of Jehovah for his people. But there is no minimizing of the penalty of sin, personal or social. It is only the grace and goodness of Jehovah that spares the nation complete destruction. And in sublime language which cynics ridicule, this peasant prophet foretold the day when nations would turn the instruments of destruction into instruments of helpfulness and healing. What a different world our modern world would be if all the materials and all the man-power that are now being devoted to military objectives, were devoted to the arts and activities of peace. Lord, what fools we poor mortals are! Be with us yet, lest we forget.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The writer was talking to the superintendent of one of our large orphanages some years ago, and he said his people counted their orphanage a large asset to to their denomination. They were helping the widow in her distress and giving orphaned children a home and care. In other words, they were doing for others. That denomination contributed nearly half a million dollars toward the support of their orphanage last year. That denomination grows like a green bay tree in North Carolina. The good Lord is surely with them and richly blesses them.

The kind Master was busy healing the sick, making the lame walk, raising the dead to life, feeding the five thousand. He spent a busy life helping others, and doing something for others.

The writer was in conversation with a superintendent of a small orphanage a few days ago. He has only forty children in his orphanage. I said to him, "How much does your church put in the apportionment fund to run your institution?" He said, "They give me $26,000 and all I can get from friends who are interested in orphaned and dependent children." Then I was talking to another superintendent a few weeks ago. His orphanage is the same size of the Christian Orphanage and has about the same number of children. I said to him, "How much did your church people send you last year?" And he said, "$88,000." My dear readers, I give you these facts to let you know what other denominations are doing in the orphanage work. Shall our people withhold their offerings and let us stand at the foot of the ladder?

The Orphanage has cared for more than six hundred children. It has sent out trained nurses, secretaries, civil engineers, railroad engineers, salesmen, and many other vocations of life. We took them in because they were dependent and helpless. They have made good and we feel proud of them. Are you interested in your Orphanage? If so, show your interest by your contributions at this Thanksgiving period. Our goal is $50,000 for the year, 1948.

CHINA TODAY.

modern modes of travel and all the new methods of medicine had been a part of her heritage forever instead of the superstition, ignorance, and opposition she has had to battle against all her life.

I cannot begin to tell of the number of ways the abundant life as taught by Jesus is being given to the Chinese. A whole new movement in children's care is being started. Nursery schools; classes for parents, religious education, play-grounds. A young woman, Miss Liu O Chen is a specialist in this work and spoke most effectively at the recent big conference of the Foreign Mission Conference. She was asked to broadcast her remarks over the "Voice of America" program to China.

A whole book could be written about what is being done for the rural people who make up eighty-five per cent of the population; only a tiny fraction of these people can read and write. Formal education will be impossible for them. The mass education movement with its motto "Teach another" is one answer to their need, and the Chinese respond eagerly. The Christian literature societies are trying to reach all classes with charts, pictures, popular magazines, books, and translations of the best from the West. How hungry these people are for reading as soon as they have mastered a few of the difficult Chinese characters. Schools for the training of rural leaders are springing up all over China with new methods of seed selection, breeding of animals, producing better chickens, better wool, better everything the farmer needs so badly.

What Can We Christians In America Do to Help?

We can get back to our boards with all we have in us. Our Post-War Emergency Fund must be completed before we can go on to the Advance program of our Christian World Service. We need $938,718 in the P.E.P. for War Victims and Reconstruction. For increased apportionment giving, we need $933,477, making a total of $1,872,195. Then—on for the Advance program of our Christian World Mission. What a challenge for building a world community with all men as brothers and with God the Father and leader of all. China is only a part of the great work of our missions. What is done in China for its churches, its schools, its hospitals, its youth, its children, and its women, for relief from its suffering, for its rural people—can be duplicated around the world. It is a great and challenging call. LET'S GO!

All my life people have been coming to me with plans to make over society and its institutions. Many of these plans have seemed good. Some have been excellent. All of them have had one fatal defect. They have assumed that human nature would behave in a certain way. If it would behave in that way these plans would not be necessary, for in that case society and its institutions would reform themselves.

—Elihu Root.

These three things—work, will, success—fill human existences. Will opens the door to success, both brilliant and happy. Work passes these doors, and at the end of the journey success comes to crown one's efforts.

—Louis Pasteur.

In Memoriam

TATE.

On July 7, 1948, God in His providence called from our midst one of the most faithful and devoted members of Concord Congregational Christian Church, Mrs. Sallie G. Tate.

Therefore, in recognition of her service as one of our loyal members, we offer the following resolutions of respect to her memory:

1. That while we miss her in the fellowship of our church, we will always cherish the memory of her friendship and faithful service.

2. That to her loved ones we extend our deepest sympathy.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, The Christian Sun, and a copy entered upon our church record.

Mrs. H. P. TERRELL,
Mrs. SAM TRAVIS,
Mrs. H. E. TERRELL,
Mrs. W. L. MILES,
Mrs. W. R. SIMMONS,

TATE.

We, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of Concord Christian Church, Caswell County, North Carolina, wish to pay loving tribute to the memory of our dear sister and co-worker, Mrs. Sallie G. Tate, who died July 7, 1948.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God who doth all things well.

2. That we express our deep sense of loss and our gratitude for the fine Christian spirit she lived in our midst.

3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the members of her family, and pray God's blessings upon them.

4. That a copy of the resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be entered upon the record of our Missionary Society, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

WEST.

We, the members of the First Bible Class of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church, wish to pay tribute to the memory of our beloved member, Mr. Hudson A. West.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father.

2. That we hold in loving remembrance his loyalty and love for his church, his home and his community.

3. That we extend our love and sympathy to his family and pray God's blessings may comfort them.

GRIGGS.

Whereas, it pleased our Heavenly Father, who always acts wisely, to call home our faithful member, Miss Buena Griggs, on September 26, 1948, we, the members of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church, offer the following resolutions:

1. That the society has lost a faithful member.

2. That we bow in humble submission to the divine will of our Heavenly Father.

3. That we extend our sympathy to the bereaved.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be entered on the records of the society, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Mrs. GEORGE E. ROGERS,
Mrs. HARRY P. TAYLOR,
Mrs. W. H. YATES,
Committee.

BALLARD.

August 31, 1948, our Heavenly Father in His infinite wisdom called home Mrs. W. H. Ballard who was a charter member of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church.

We, the members of the society, offer the following resolutions:

1. That we try to emulate the high Christian standards and high ideals of service and kindness which were her daily living.

2. That we extend our deepest sympathy to the family and commend them to God for comfort.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be entered on our records, a copy be sent to her daughter, Mrs. Wirkler, in Ohio, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Mrs. GEORGE E. ROGERS,
Mrs. HARRY P. TAYLOR,
Mrs. W. H. YATES,
Committee.

ELLISON.

We, the members of Pleasant Cross Congregational Christian Church, wish to express our deep sense of loss in the passing of one of our most beloved members, Miss Fannie Belle Ellison, who died on September 28, 1948, and to pay tribute to her memory as our dear friend and co-worker.

Sister Ellison was teacher of the Young People's Class at the time of her passing. She was quiet, sincere, unassuming and devoted to every interest in our church. Her strong Christian character and her life of loyalty and service challenges us to follow in her footsteps, and inspire us to live better, more useful lives of devotion for our fellow man.

Therefore, be it resolved, that we bow in humble submission to the divine will of the heavenly father in the death of our friend and sister, and that we extend our sympathy to the bereaved.

Mrs. JOHN Q. PUGH,
Church Reporter.

JOHNSON.

We, the members of the First Bible Class of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church, wish to pay tribute to the memory of our beloved member, Mr. Shepard Johnson, who departed this life August 7, 1948.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father.

2. That we hold in loving remembrance his loyalty and love for his church, his home and his community; and his patience and quiet endurance of his long illness.

3. That we extend our love and sympathy to his family and pray God's blessings may comfort them.

C. T. PARKER,
EMMITT HARRELL,
Committee.

CLEMENTS.

In loving memory of Mrs. Clara Clements, we, the members of L. F. Class of Antioch Church, desire to honor her memory and express our appreciation for all of her labor and endeavor as a charter member of our class.

Although afflicted for a number of years which prevented her attending all meetings, we felt she was with us in prayer. Oftentimes the class met in her home and she always greeted us all with a smile, and was ever ready to help in any way she could in building up God's Kingdom.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in her death we have lost a faithful member. Her life and devotion will be a sacred memory.

2. That we may strive to attain the Christian graces she possessed and be inspired to carry on the work that was so dear to her heart.

3. That we extend to her dear children our heartfelt sympathy and pray God's blessing on them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy be placed on the record of the class.

Mrs. J. H. GODWIN,
Mrs. W. E. GARRISON,
Committee.

BRINKLEY.

On Sunday, July 25, 1948, there was a hushed silence as each member entered the classroom of the Senior Philathea Class, to be informed that the death angel had invaded the home of Mrs. Ralph Artman, 222 Cedar Street, on that very Sabbath morning at 12:15 to take her only sister and our assistant teacher, Miss Julia Brinkley.

To the members of the Senior Philathea Class, she taught as she lived. Her going was beautiful in that she suffered only a short time. We feel, to quote II Timothy 4:6-8, that she could have said: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand; I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love His appearing."

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the Senior Philathea Class will miss her wise counsel, but we will have treasured memories of her Christian leadership as well as the many years of her service of love, and that by our loyalty to the class we would give expression to our gratitude.

2. To her loved ones we would extend our love and prayerful sympathy and commend them to the God of Love and Mercy.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be spread on the records of the Senior Philathea Class and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

The Challenge of Korea to the Christian World

Address by Mr. Kyung Chik Han, Vice-Chairman
National Christian Council of South Korea

Korea is the Berlin in the Far East today. Here Democracy meets Communism, America the Soviet Russia. The awful effect of this situation is beyond description—politically, economically, religiously and socially.

After many years of bondage under Japanese domination, we surely had hoped that Korea would be an independent nation after the war. Our political aspirations have gone to pieces. We are divided into two parts. We have what we call the 38th parallel—a boundary line within our own territory; an iron curtain within our own home.

Economically, we have all our natural resources and industry in the North; the South is agricultural. The industrial North needs the agricultural South, and vice versa. Now they are separated.

Most Christians live in the North. It means that the majority of Christian Churches are under a communist dominated, totalitarian police state today. Many prominent ministers are either in jail or their whereabouts are unknown. Many Christian young men have met the same fate.

The churches are still permitted to hold services on Sundays, but all other educational social activities are forbidden. The young people's organizations have been disbanded. Children are required to attend school on Sundays. Christians have been eliminated, usually, from their positions through "purgings." No missionaries are allowed to enter the North for missionary work.

There are more than three million refugees in South Korea today who have sneaked over from the North. Many Christian refugees are among them. Consequently, about two-thirds of the Korean population resides in the South—is confusion, turmoil and suffering.

Today is the formative period in the history of Korea. It seems plain that the spiritual destiny of future Korea will be decided by this generation. Will she be truly a Christian nation in the future? A new nation is emerging today. The future character of Korea will depend largely on what we do now. When we Korean Christians think of this fact, we feel responsibility, the weight of which no words can express.

It is our conviction that if we seize this opportunity in the right way and enter into this open gate promptly, Korea will be the first truly Christian, democratic nation in the Far East. There is evidence that those who have lost the old patterns of life are turning to Christianity for life-philosophy and salvation. Many feel that the new nation needs a new foundation which only Christianity can provide. There is keen interest in religion among students, laborers, and the rural population. Now is the time to set our aim and program for the complete evangelization of Korea. Now is the time to mobilize all our forces and offer all we have, and wait upon God for the manifestation of His mighty power. I am sure it can be done.

In order to accomplish this noble objective, we need your help. We need more of your fervent prayers and supplications. We need more workers—evangelists, teachers, doctors, rural and social workers. We need more and better-equipped institutions—Bible institutions, schools, colleges, hospitals and social establishments. We need more literature—Bibles, pamphlets, magazines and books.

More than half a century ago, Dr. Allan Underwood, Moffett and many other pioneer missionaries came and opened the long-closed door of our land. They were not only teachers of a new religion, but pioneers of a new learning, new medicine and social regeneration. Through their faith, courage, sacrifice and foresight, God has done a marvelous work in the past. Now we are entering into a new era of mission work in Korea. We have a rich heritage and new visions of Christian Korea before us. Certainly we Korean Christians will do our part. I find that these Christian refugees are like the first century Christians, preaching the gospel everywhere they go. More than forty new churches have sprung up through their efforts. The spirit of evangelism is high throughout Korea. Surely, I trust, the mother churches in America will not fail us in this time of great need.

“Light on Life’s Way”

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN
Mason City, Iowa

Those who walk life’s way in fellowship with the Man of Galilee do not walk in the dark, but have “the light of the knowledge of the glory of God” to dispell the darkness of unbelief and to scatter the fog of doubt that they may clearly see their way. Every person needs the light which knowledge of the love and goodness of God brings. Every person can have it by walking in fellowship with Jesus Christ—living in a filial relationship toward God and in a brotherly relationship with his fellow men.

Samuel Rutherford, a great mystic of his generation, when in prison because of his faith in God and his devotion to the Christ of God, wrote an interesting record of his experience. This is what he wrote: “Jesus Christ came into my prison cell last night, and before his presence every stone flashed like a ruby.”

Few, if any, in the present generation have the mystical sense so keenly developed that they ever will or ever could experience such exaltation of spirit as Rutherford and others of his generation experienced. But we need not doubt the authenticity and genuiness of the experience of the mystics of past generations or of the present simply because such experiences have not been ours. May it not be that God reveals Himself to us and to most people of our generation in a manner even more inspiring than was the experience of the mystics in past generations or in the present generation?

When we walk in sincere fellowship with Jesus Christ, seeking to do His will, working for His Church, concerned about the world for which He made the supreme sacrifice—when we earnestly seek to cooperate with the God of heaven and of earth in opposing the wrong and in promoting the right, there is a light not of this earth that shines upon our way; and every hill, every stone, every bush, every flower, every life and every relationship in life takes on new and larger meaning in the light of our growing knowledge of God.

“The light of the knowledge of the glory of God in Jesus Christ” puts a new meaning into all life, and makes even the commonplace to glow with the glory of the eternal.

News Flashes

Dr. George Shepherd spoke at Wakefield Thursday evening of last week and at Richmond Friday evening.

Sympathy is extended to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill in the death of her father in Henderson, North Carolina on Friday, October 29. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon, October 31.

Rev. J. Howard Smith is serving as interim minister of the Grand Avenue Congregational Church, New Haven, Connecticut. He is also professor of English literature and public speaking at Arnold College, and is completing graduate work at Yale University.

Dr. H. Shelton Smith of Duke Divinity School has been invited to deliver the Stone Lectures at Princeton Theological Seminary year after next (the academic year 1950-51). Meanwhile, the two lecturers respectively will be Principal Hugh Watt of Edinburgh University, and Professor H. C. Dodds of Cambridge University. Princeton is the oldest of all American Presbyterian seminaries, as it is also the largest. Dr. Smith's lectures are to be in the field of American Christian thought.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference meets this year at Lynchburg, Va., on the 16th and 17th of November. Since there will probably be quite a number of delegates who will want over-night entertainment, the host church would like to know in advance just how many people will be staying overnight so that arrangements for their entertainment can be made.

If the delegates who plan to stay overnight will contact the pastor of the host church, Rev. James B. Allan, 1509 McKinney Ave., Lynchburg, Va. as to your intentions it will be greatly appreciated. Please do this as soon as possible for the host church would like to have this information immediately.

AMERICANS IN CHEELOO SAFE.

All remaining American personnel at mission-supported Cheeloo University in Communist held Tsinan, China, are "safe and well," according to a report received by the United Board for Christian Colleges in China.

The report states that the Americans who remained in Tsinan at the time of its capture were courteously treated by the Communist forces, were promised food and were urged to continue their teaching. The Communists instructed all schools to remain open and permitted religious liberty, the report says. While there was some denunciation of "United States imperialism," there was no hostility shown toward individual Americans. The new mayor of the city is a graduate of a mission school.

TEMPERANCE MEETINGS.

We take pleasure in announcing an unusual event. The Virginia Church Temperance Council, in co-operation with the Methodist Board of Temperance, has invited Bishop Hazen Werner to speak at a series of five Community Mass Meetings during the week of November 14th, to be held in Norfolk, Roanoke, Lynchburg, Petersburg and Richmond. He will speak at Centenary Methodist Church, Richmond, Va. at 8:15 P. M. on Thursday, November 18, 1948.

Bishop Werner was a prominent pastor in the Ohio area of the Methodist Church and for many years was also a pastor in Detroit, Mich. Before he was elected to the episcopacy last July, he was professor of religious psychology at Drew Theological Seminary. He is also author of many books on psychology and is an outstanding public speaker. He has a most informative message to present on the problems of alcohol.

BEAMON HONORED AT SUFFOLK.

"It has been a long trip and I have enjoyed it all the way," were fitting words of W. S. Beamon as he responded to expressions of appreciation for his forty years of leadership in the Suffolk Sunday school. Three hundred fellow workers and friends packed the Fellowship Hall, October 26, to say "thank you" to him for his two score years of service. Seven of those years he served as assistant under the superb tutelage of C. A. Shoop, the remaining thirty-three he was general superintendent. Two hundred sixty-four officers, teachers, and 'scholars' sat at the table with him, while the others did faithful yeoman duty in preparing and serving the turkey dinner with all the trimmings.

Floyd A. Turner, who has served several years as secretary, then assistant to Mr. Beamon, presided—having been duly elected to take over as his successor. Miss Gladys Yates, teacher of the Philathea Class, a position held the late Col. J. E. West for thirty-two years, acted as toast-mistress. Miss Yates told of the years which are now history, paid tribute to the honored guest, recognized the superintendents of neighboring Sunday schools of the city, and his co-workers all the way from the Cradle Roll to the Home Department. Mrs. C. C. Rawles, veteran teacher, speaking for the teaching staff paid a prepared tribute to Mr. Beamon. The new superintendent, on behalf of the Sunday school presented him a large, handsomely engraved silver tray.

The program also included old, yester-year Sunday school songs, and special music under the direction of David Brown Harrell, and several brief testimonials. The honoree's response was very apt, witty, and expressive of genuine appreciation for all his fellow workers and their co-operation. Mrs. Beamon shared graciously in all the joy of the glad hour for she had helped on "the long trip . . . enjoyed all the way."

SIGNIFICANCE OF CAMBRIDGE

[Extracts from address by Dr. Douglas Horton, speaking Wednesday noon, October 27, before a luncheon at the First Church, Congregational, Cambridge, Mass., on the observance of the 300th Anniversary of the Cambridge Platform.]

The Cambridge Platform gave to the founders of New England the outline of what a happy social order must be in all times and in all places. It was formulated just when they were beginning to establish a new society in a new world.

It is stated that, first, the keynote must be cooperation. Second, that this cooperation cannot be imposed. It must grow out of the free decisions of a free people. Finally, both freedom and cooperation must be under God for when either of these is devoted to godless ends, disaster follows.

As we confront the confusion of the political world today, with the demands of totalitarianism balanced against the hopes of free peoples everywhere, and as we look into the modern economic world in which men as persons are threatened increasingly with the fate of becoming parts of a great industrial machine, the Cambridge Platform becomes more than an historical document. It should be hailed as a standard under which all free citizens should gather—as relevant today as it was 300 years ago.

FREEDOM PAMPHLETS.

A new Freedom Pamphlet Series, aimed principally at community leadership groups, is being published by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith as a non-profit venture.

Appearing bi-monthly, Freedom Pamphlets will deal exclusively with the relations of men with their fellow-men of various races, creeds, and national origins. They will analyze and suggest ways of improving human relations in a number of areas important to the welfare of American life—education, the theatre, radio, films, literature, art, politics, science, and labor. Prepared in cooperation with the American Education Fellowship, they will be written by men and women who have won recognition for competence in their respective fields and Dr. Theodore Brameld of the New York University School of Education is acting as Consultant.

The first Freedom Pamphlet, already off the press and titled, The Responsibility Is Ours, is written by Bonaro W. Overstreet, editor of The National Parent-Teacher, and formerly connected with the American Association for Adult Education.

Individual responsibility for worthy human relations with friends, within the family, the community, and the nation is the theme of this pamphlet.

It is ably and lucidly presented—and it is important.

For good human relations can be encouraged and maintained only if people take personal responsibility for them. How you treat the members of your family, your friends, your neighbors is your responsibility—not someone else's—not the State's. And American society is based on the assumption that men can be free because they have goodness enough and wisdom enough to take individual responsibility for respecting and safeguarding each other's rights and keeping open the door of opportunity for all.

It is a very great responsibility. Mrs. Overstreet's Freedom Pamphlet shows how Americans can exercise it—how the individual and what he aspires to can count for something in America today.

Numerous community groups can make excellent use of Freedom Pamphlets:

1. Religious leaders may employ Freedom Pamphlets in adult courses in Religious Education—for teacher-training courses—for congregational reading.

2. Radio stations may use Freedom Pamphlets as the subject of round-table discussions in which religious leaders of the community and representatives of various races would take part.

3. Parent-Teacher Associations may discuss them at regular or special meetings and devise ways to apply suggestions to immediate problems.

4. School and college teachers and educational leaders may use Freedom Pamphlets for clarifying the school's responsibility in the community for maintaining sound human relations. College teachers particularly will find them useful in sociology and education courses.

5. Adult education groups may use Freedom Pamphlets for becoming familiar with certain problems in human relations which, while unresolved, remain a threat to the stability of our society.

(Freedom Pamphlets cost 20 cents each. Less when bought in quantity. Direct requests to Harold Schiff, Publications Department, Program Division, Anti-Defamation League, 212 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.)

Some years ago, a youth named Wray entered Princeton as a volunteer for foreign missionary work. Once in the mission field, he simply lived the Christian life before the natives. And one day, according to the custom of the country, some of these natives were seated in a circle on the ground, listening to the instruction of one of their teachers, when the question was brought up, "What is it to be a Christian?" And no one could answer. Finally a native pointed where this young worker sat, and replied, "It is to live as Mr. Wray lives." Not one of them could read the Gospel according to Matthew, Mark, Luke or John, but every one there could read the Gospel "according to Wray."—Emile Caillet in "The Beginning of Wisdom" (Revell).

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE ANTECEDENTS OF A CONFERENCE.

One of the rare and refreshing as well as unexpected items on the program of the Eastern Virginia Conference was the report of the historian, Dr. N. G. Newman. A report was anticipated, but not the kind given. Dr. Newman passed over recent history in merciful silence, and lifted an obscure decade, 1875-1886, in engaging prominence. There for a season we exchanged our immediate problems for those of distant yesterdays. One was moved to reflect how our vaunted problems and differences will appear three score and ten years hence!

The arrogance of contemporaneity should be modified considerably by a proper historical perspective. This Conference was preceded and made possible by 128 years of church history; 128 years of evangelism and stewardship; 128 years of labor, sweat, tears and sacrifice; 128 years of preaching, praying and persevering. The vision, faith and ardor of those who founded these churches are unknown to the majority of us. We reap where others have sown. This chastening realization should temper any excess pride and set us to work anew with becoming humility and zeal.

Conferences are fluid and evasive. The minutes cannot tell the whole story. The antecedents and the by-products of the Conference are elusive but of inestimable value. That which defies recording may be the significant item: a new friendship, a secret impulse to enter the ministry or the mission field, the exposure of the human mind and spirit to the larger demands of the Kingdom. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but cannot tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the spirit."

The Eastern Virginia Conference was not without its high moments and memorable features: the flash of oratory by President F. L. Lewis, the exuding hospitality of Pastor O. D. Poythress, the culinary efficiency of the South Norfolk women, the first visit of Timothy Chang, the forthright address on missions by Dr. George Shepherd, the ordination of Rev. John Gallo, etc. Dr. I. W. Johnson preached the Conference sermon on "The Power of the Gospel." Here is a great theme for constant emphasis and illustration. The Church of today should manifest the power of God unto salvation in new dimensions. This is the significance of our Christian World Mission.

RADIO TO SHARE IN FIVE-YEAR MISSION EXPANSION PROGRAM.

All major Protestant foreign missionary boards have approved a united drive of missionary expansion, to be initiated this winter, according to Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference. The goal of the 108 foreign mission boards of U. S.

and Canada for the first five years is 150 million dollars, a doubling of present contributions.

One proposal designed to introduce new techniques into the Protestant missionary enterprise, is a cooperative radio and mass communications committee, under the auspices of the FMC. This committee will train foreign students in this country for radio work.

Plans call for the strategic location of recording stations, and development of radio programs abroad. Dr. Fairfield estimates that the initial cost of the radio and visual education project will be close to $100,000.

Isaiah was not speaking nonsense when he spoke of the time when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

THE VOICE OF THE COMMON MAN.

A political Pearl Harbor dazed the American people on November 2. Everybody said it was impossible, but it happened. What was predicted as a Truman dirge, turned into a Truman triumph. It was all the more remarkable, since the President fought his battle almost alone. Indeed, many local nominees feared to say a good word for him, lest they be defeated.

For weeks to come poll-takers and other readers of the political sky will seek clues to their erroneous prophecies. As yet, no one seems to have unraveled the mystery. Even now, however, one thing seems beyond denial: the President's victory was due largely to the voice of the common man, the so-called "little" man. The plucky little Missourian touched the heart-strings of the masses; they felt that he was one of them, and working for their well-being. Though they had not always agreed with his actions, they liked his down-to-earth sincerity. They were also awed and inspired by his readiness to champion the unpopular cause of human rights, even when the price seemed political suicide.

Thanks to Truman's tenacity, a liberal Congress will convene in January. We may therefore expect that the charter of human rights that was written under Roosevelt will once more be exalted. As our evening paper puts it, "Mr. Truman, if he desires and if he can measure up, has the opportunity to become another latter day prophet."

The Struggle for the Soul of China

Highlights of an Address by DR. GEORGE W. SHEPHERD before the Eastern Virginia Conference*

The real ills of China cannot be attributed solely to communism, the accumulated wealth of a few families, or to Western business, industry, and banking. The Church knows from its records of more than a century of close contact with the people of China, North, South, East and West, that the ills of the nation may be summed up as: Ignorance, Superstition, Malnutrition and lack of modern Medical Facilities.

United States diplomats and planners do not have the foggiest idea what to do with China over a long range period of time. This is not true of the Church. For a century missions have known what to do, and they are still following their original conviction that what is needed in China is men and women of character, who have both scientific minds and hearts that are loyal to the soul of China.

The struggle for the soul of China is a three way struggle. No nation has ever survived the loss of its soul, so it is important to know the forces that are bidding for the love and loyalty of China's four hundred million people.

In the first place we have the inept National Government which has time and time again thrown away its chances to reconstruct the life of the common people.

In the second place we have two million Chinese Communists who seem ready to sacrifice the interests of the Chinese people for those of Russia.

And in the third place we have American ideals of freedom and techniques of prosperity that offer China national independence and the repair of her shattered economy.

A bird's eye view in which this struggle is taking place reveals a Chinese economy that differs only slightly from our American economy of 120 years ago when men were engaged in back-breaking toil with very small rewards. As the Americans of that day were chained to the soil, so are the Chinese today. They have nothing but manpower, with some aid from animals and a rude use of water power. The tools and instruments are those which men may hold in their hands, oxen pull, or water wheels turn. Grains are hulled largely by hand with a 50 per cent loss of rice, and 30 per cent loss of sugar cane in milling and handling.

China's foreign trade is non-existent for the simple reason that the National Government of China has shut out all foreign trade. It is not even a mere trickle when it could be a mighty stream bringing prosperity to China and all her neighbors, including Japan.

The Confucian ethic never has had the magic claimed for it. Today it is like a dead battery in your car on a cold morning. It is powerless to turn over the starter for all the machinery that must be set running if China is to remain free, and become a prosperous and powerful member of the family of nations. Heaven has long withdrawn its mandate from Confucianism because man's conduct has for centuries merely used its teachings as a historical cover for personal power, and completely neglected the necessity for harmonizing conduct with its main principles.

The Chinese Communists, no matter how much territory they eventually control, will find themselves faced with the hostility of public opinion on the charge of fastening an alien dictatorship upon China. American ideals of freedom and our unprecedented record of prosperity are precious to the hearts of many Chinese leaders. Eventually they will turn to us for guidance and assistance, and in the meantime we should aid freedom loving Chinese to hold on to everything possible until the day of Russia's overthrow in China arrives.

With mission stations of the major denominations being overrun by Communist armies, organized church work, schools, hospitals, and rural welfare centers, supported by the churches of America will be almost completely extinguished in North China. American missionaries and their Chinese associates will be forced to move to South China, where it is hoped American government support will enable freedom loving Chinese to continue their struggle against the Russian invasion. This concentration of Christian forces may turn out to be a blessing in disguise, affording an opportunity for long discussed cooperation between the major denominations, and for more adequate education of Chinese men and women in the sciences and the humanities. It is essential that the Church be statesmanlike and forward looking in its realignment of forces that must be prepared to sweep back into North China when the "Peoples Revolution," ten or fifteen years from now will roll back the tide of Russian invasion and make China a great place for the Chinese.

In the Mirror of the Years

By REV. FRANK HERBERT PETERS, Defiance, Ohio

"The multitude of years should teach wisdom." So runs a line in a famous Old Testament Book meaning, no doubt, there can be no valid excuse for one who has lived a long time to be ignorant of the more obvious facts of human existence which normal people should learn in the school of life.

For myself, I must record that the "multitude of years" have brought me to points of view and beliefs, about nearly every matter of human interest, very different from those with which I began my life's work. Also to certain convictions about life and religion,—subjects which I have been trying to understand for myself and interpret for others through more than a half century.

First of all, awareness of the bigness of everything, utterly beyond rule or measure, which has gradually supplanted my youth-time conceptions. Every subject of study showing itself to be practically endless and with boundaries far beyond my capacity or ability to grasp.

Do "light years" and billions of miles have reality in human experience, or are they mere names for purposes of computation and record? Sirius may be one hundred and twenty billions miles away, requiring two hundred and forty thousand years, at a mile a minute, to reach it. But what does that mean to minds unable to sense one billion even though we mouth it so glibly? From practically everything within the preview of our senses there seems to be a line running out to infinity, whether it be bird or tree, atom or mountain, rain-drop or sea.

If in our youth-time our idea was that what we see with our eyes is about all the universe contains—and some of us did so suppose—in our mature years we know it is only the fringe. And by so much as our sense of the bigness of things has increased, by so much has our idea of God's being and power grown also.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The one hundred twenty-eight annual session of the Eastern Virginia Conference is history. South Norfolk Church entertained it well, rendered beautiful music, and gave a congenial, friendly setting for all the session. The Rev. John Gallo, pastor of Bethlehem, Disputanta, was ordained by Dr. H. S. Harcastle and other member of the ordaining presbytery. Baxter Twiddy and Paul Varga were continued as members of the Bible class, and M. A. Carson was retained as on his course of prescribed reading. Dr. Luther B. Grice, pastor of Holy Neck, was added to the roll as minister in full standing. Rev. John L. Gwin, pastor First Church, Norfolk, was given full recognition, as an ordained minister.

The Conference recognized the fifty years of faithful service of Dr. I. W. Johnson by appropriate resolutions. It was said to be the only case in the history of the Conference where a minister had served the same church for more than fifty years, and in the fiftieth year he received one hundred seven new members into his pastorate. Dr. Frank H. Lewis brought experience and understanding as well as wit and oratory in his president's address. Dr. Johnson, who preached the Conference sermon brought an inspiring message.

Dr. Will B. O'Neill deserves a hand for the excellent book of reports which he prepared and presented to all delegates, and he deserves another hand for keeping the records and trying to keep the peace (He is a Christian Irishman!). Having been a secretary myself I can appreciate his good work. He gave a great deal of time and painstaking effort to the Conference before the opening roll call.

Timothy Chang, from Duke University and our Shaowu Mission, made a most favorable impression on the Conference. Dr. William T. Scott, our congenial and efficient Convention Superintendent, presented him and Dr. Geo. W. Shepherd, who is a favorite Missionary speaker in these parts and lived up to his record. Dr. Scott made a great speech himself in advocating progress and advancement. One can easily see he has a burning desire to see the churches and Conferences move forward. And well he may, for to stand still now in this moving world is to go backward. If we cannot keep step we shall not be able to keep our status in this advancing civilization. Let us not forget that our churches, pastors, Conferences—all of us, need to work harmoniously together, in friendship and Christian love, to do the work demanded of our church in these years. These are great, history making days. May our church be able to make some real contribution.

The Conference voted, with very liberal interpretations, to accept new apportionment table proposed by Hon. Shirley T. Holland and the members of his committee. This will be a considerable advance but the local churches will make a real adventure in seeking to raise it. The note of the Conference was that of progress.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH PORTSMOUTH.

The last week in September marked a high peak in the life and growth of our church. The annual meeting which was held on Wednesday, the 29th, was well attended. A covered dish supper was enjoyed prior to the meeting.

The reports for the year were most heartening. The Treasurer and Financial Secretary reported that during the year $1,700.00 had been paid on the parsonage and $381.00 on interest; that all conference and convention apportionments had been paid in full, and a total of $400.00 had been paid on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund. The total received during the year for all accounts amounted to $9,030.00. After all bills were paid, $600.00 was carried forward. Benevolences raised for the year amounted to $1,035.00.

The report of the Pastor indicated that 43 members had been received into the membership of the church. The Church and Sunday school and the varied organizations of the church reported encouraging growth.

On Friday, October 1st the Reliable Bible Class held a banquet in the Social Hall of the church. A turkey supper served by the Ladies Bible Class was enjoyed by the fifty members and friends of the class present. Rev. Owen Kelley, pastor of the Cradock Methodist Church was the speaker. The evening drew to a close as the pastor installed the new officers of the class. Mrs. Herbert Martin, the new president, made a few timely remarks.

BRITTLE CONCLUDES MINISTRY AT CYPRESS CHAPEL.

More than 400 people were present to hear Rev. R. E. Brittle preach his final sermon at Cypress Chapel, Nansemond County, Virginia, on Sunday, October 31.

As an expression of appreciation of his 21 years of service in the church and community, the members gave to Mr. Brittle a $125.00 Masonic ring, and a sofa-bed, drop-leaf table and floor lamp to the Brittle family.

Under Mr. Brittle's leadership the church paid off a debt of $14,000, incurred during the depression, and the physical plant has been vastly improved.

He has received 510 persons into the church, and the membership now stands at 438.

Cypress Chapel has no immediate plans for a successor, but the church has formed a joint pastorate with Oak Grove and Damascus churches in the Sunbury, North Carolina, area, and a minister is expected to be called in the near future.

AMERICAN BOARD REPORT.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions announces through its Treasurer, Harold B. Belcher, a budget for the coming year of $1,519,254.75. The American Board, which is the overseas service arm of the Congregational Christian Churches has 403 missionaries and works in 10 countries.

Ending August 31, 1948 the total receipts and expenditures of the American Board were $1,908,330.29. Mr. Belcher explains that because normal receipts were not sufficient to meet the total expenditures it was necessary to use legacies for which special uses had been planned previously. In this way the total expenditures were met without surplus or deficit.

"The receipts from the Congregational Churches were in excess of those of the previous years as the result of the Postwar Emergency Program and this program also provided $214,662.07 for the rehabilitation of war damaged property in the foreign field," says Mr. Belcher.

The delusive idea that men merely toil and work for the sake of preserving their bodies, and procuring for themselves bread, houses, clothes, is degrading and not to be encouraged. The true origin of man's activity and creativeness lies in his unceasing impulse to embody outside himself the divine and spiritual element within.—Froebel.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

AN UNFINISHED TASK.

By DR. L. E. SMITH.

More than three years ago, the Southern Convention undertook, through its churches, to establish a foundation for Christian Education in Elon College. The purpose of this foundation was two-fold: first, to undergird the department of Christian Education in the college and make it possible for a more extensive curriculum in this field. All religion majors, which includes our ministerial students, those preparing for the mission field, and all students preparing for full time Christian work, are vitally concerned for the extension and development of this department. Second, the foundation seeks to honor three of the outstanding leaders in our church: Dr. W. W. Staley, who excelled in the pastorate and churchmanship; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who arose from a sick bed to dedicate the remainder of his life to the cause of missions in our church and for the world. Say what you will, the missionary vision and organizations which we have today within the churches of our Convention, are largely the results of his labors and advocacy. He was an advocate with persuasive power. And Dr. J. U. Newman, a scholar and a Christian gentleman, who gave himself, as few have, to the cause of Christian Education in Elon College.

The purpose and efforts on the part of the church to establish this foundation for the improvement of instruction in religion and kindred subjects, and thus, to honor these three fallen comrades and faithful servants is certainly commendable. All will agree, I am sure, that this foundation, when once begun, should be completed fully and speedily.

The Convention voted that the churches of the Convention should provide a minimum of $100,000 for this foundation. Each local church in the Convention was apportioned its pro rata share. Some have raised their apportionment for the foundation in full. Others have assumed their obligation to be paid over a term of years. There are some of our churches, however, that have not committed themselves in any way.

To date, a total of $79,758.50 has been raised and applied to this foundation, which is splendid, but I am sure that all will agree that we, the churches of the Convention, should arise and finish this task so auspiciously begun.

There are certain things which should be put down and understood while facts are fresh in our minds: (1) According to Convention action, churches, as such, that have not assumed their apportionments for the foundation as an obligation are not to be asked as churches to assume it. Individuals may be asked and may contribute at any time. (2) That all churches that have assumed their obligations are expected to pay in full within five years after the date of assuming this obligation. The church may secure funds for this obligation either from individuals or from its budget, as the church may elect. (3) That any church, even as of this date, may voluntarily assume this obligation and pay according to its own terms.

I am sure that by the time all cash payments and pledges to be paid are in that the entire amount of $100,000 will be in hand. In due time a complete report showing amount of cash received and pledges to be paid will be submitted. In the meantime, the church and the college wish to express appreciation of every dollar contributed, or pledged, of every effort made, and of every prayer offered in behalf of this commendable undertaking. May God bless the people of our church and of our college.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The conference year 1947-48 is about over. In fact all but two of our conferences have held their annual sessions. It would seem that the churches this year are following a different plan. In all previous years since the Sunday schools and Churches have been sending their contributions to the Convention office, which is then forwarded to the college, the college has always received some money from the conference treasurer after all reports to conference had been received. It seems now that no money is sent to the conference treasurer for the college. What the college is to receive, it receives in advance of the meeting of conference. I hope that this is in error for the college is considerably behind receipts of a year ago. To date, we have received from all sources on conference apportionments for the college a total of $10,035.76, which leaves the apportionments in arrears approximately $2,500. It is hoped sincerely that this amount will be received either by the time the remaining two conferences have met and adjourned or during the time intervening from that date to January 1, 1949. Our ministers and church people will recall that by vote of the Convention, the college year is extended to January 1 so that we have until that date to make up this deficit. In view of the high cost of living, operation of the college, and the great need of the college, let us hope that the church will not ask the college to operate without its full apportionment. We appreciate every contribution and pray that the church may be generous.

CROP ORGANIZATION IN NORTH CAROLINA TO DATE.

The preliminary organization for CROP in North Carolina has been set up as a result of several meetings of leaders of the churches and agriculture. On September 27, representatives of various groups met in Raleigh with Dean I. O. Schaub of the State Extension Service and agreed to undertake a campaign for farm produce through CROP in North Carolina. Prospective members of an over-all state committee were named and an Executive Committee was appointed.

The Rev. R. Wayne McLain of Moriah Church, Greensboro, has been released to serve as director of the campaign for the next three months. Mr. McLain began work on the campaign on October 15th. The CROP Office is now in Room 208 of the East Duke Building, Durham. The mailing address is Box 6637, College Station, Durham.

AUTUMN NEWS FROM THE SHAOWU MISSION.

October 27, 1948.

Dear Friends of the Southern Convention:

We arrived safe and sound in Shaowu on October 18th after a two and one-half day trip (250 miles). Little Lewis surely enjoyed riding, and stood the trip fine. I was a bit uneasy all the way as we drove up in our 2½ ton Ford truck (given us when UNRRA closed up in the Spring) as I cannot repair cars and there are no garages on the road. Fortunately we had no car trouble. But let me not say anymore. Here is a letter from Miss Leona Burr, the recent arrival to Shaowu. Miss Burr began her missionary career in Shaowu and because of communists, bandits and the like, she has not been up here regularly since. Now she will finish out her missionary service back on her old stamping ground, Shaowu. You will be hearing more about her later as she has come especially to work with the women of Shaowu.

DICK JACKSON.

Her letter follows:

There are very personal measures of enjoyment for the members of the Shaowu Mission in beginning the Fall work. For Ed and Frances Riggs, it meant having their own first home in a simple Chinese house. Dick and Dorothy Jackson had baby Lewis home at last and it took the remodeling of the apartment to establish a nursery suitable for his little majesty. For Leona Burr it meant getting to her home-city in China, after furlough.

An immense new feature in the mission is the UNRRA truck given to the North Fukien Synod. In early October it made history. Never before had missionaries reached the Shaowu field under their own power.

Devotions at the last breakfast in Foochow were auspicious. The line of scripture happened to be: "And Jesus led them into a high mountain." There were mountains one hundred times higher than any in Palestine which were to be crossed in two and a half days enroute, with Dick at the wheel. We mused over the "Voice" that had seemed to speak to us, just before taking off.

The trip "up-river", the age-old term for getting to Shaowu began a little after dawn, on a road so rough and recently built that it appeared little more than an indication of one. The second rice-harvest of the year in the country-side looked good and innocent of being the basis of economic problems in the nation.

The bridge at Kucheng was reached in the early afternoon. It was under construction, yet trucks had crossed over and influential men in Foochow had assured us it was passable. But there it was, with sections having nothing but air and water under them. Dick interviewed the chief engineer who announced that the cement was too fresh to risk; that it would take a day or two before it could possibly be crossed. The villagers young and old were crowding around the truck, primarily to see Lewis. The engineer became curious and pushed his way to the cab of the truck where Dorothy was holding the baby. He gazed solemnly at the little white boy, so removed from crib and all other baby comforts. He immediately began to shout orders; huge planks were placed over the gaping spaces and in fifteen minutes Dick drove the truck across the resounding make-shift bridge, through the city gate into Kucheng. The Methodist mission there gave hospitality and rest to weary travelers.

The next morning the road hairpin turned up heights of mountainous beauty. There were ranges below whose peaks stood out from cloud-banks such as one sees from windows of an airplane. By noon, there was the next river to cross at Kienou. The ferrymen have worked out original techniques that are effective. They heard honkings, whistles and shouts; they received messages that a truck was waiting to cross, but they loitered on the other side for two hours. The longer the delay, the more eager are passengers to get to Kienyang for the night, and the more willing they are to pay generously. At three P. M. the ferry-boat was deliberately poled across and the river was pronounced too shallow for a loaded truck and supplies must be carried over separately, they said, which would take until nearly dark.

But one is not dismayed at a familiar pronouncement; alarmingly uttered, such as that was. If baby Lewis could perform magic, so would a ten dollar gold yuen bill ($2.50 U. S.) get us out of this second situation. Half way across the old woman who seemed to be mother and authority of the ferry asked for payment, lest we repent of the over-charge bargain upon reaching the road again. The Angelican Mission was a haven that Sunday night, long after dark.

During the forenoon of Monday, the shapes of the mountains and valleys grew more familiar as we neared Shaowu. Just at noon the final river to cross was our own Min and the roof of the mission residence at North Gate loomed up over the city wall. Ed and Frances were there, and there was home, around which our work and interests centered. Baggage was safely in the house before dark and the last duty of October 11 was the sending a telegram to the Foochow Mission family, whose prayers had surely followed us into "high mountains."

The compound was overgrown with weeds, grass and banana plants. Good Catholic cows were invited in. The Shaowu Mission is not choosy regarding the sort of mowing machine available. The small fruit trees were festooned with squash vines, the gardener's "speciality," rather than corn and vegetables which he was supposed to have been growing.

There were bushels of persimmons ready to be picked. There simply was no time to try out the Chinese ways of treating this fruit such as drying it, or packing the unripened persimmons in earthen jars with pine needles which make a delicious flavor after a fortnight or so.

It was great news to learn that in the Ancient Temple joining the compound, a squad of men was housed for the surveying of the Canton-Hankow railroad. The American loan is making this possible, so at once we felt neighborly, even exultant. Perhaps Shaowu, a secluded city in Fukien maintains since the time of Christ, when a settlement first was made in this valley, would, within modern times become connected with China's commercial cities, by rail, rather than by wheelbarrow, and latterly, by truck.

Getting home meant identifying ourselves with the current perplexities of the market. Ceiling prices set by Government are resented and the NORTH CAROLINA BOARD MEETS.

Members of the North Carolina Woman's Board met Thursday, November 4, at Chapel Hill. The Board decided to change the names of Districts for more convenience. Instead of naming the District for the different counties involved, a central place was chosen for the name of each district. Please note the new names of Districts and mark them in your Year Book:

Alamance District is now the Burlington District—Mrs. W. W. Snyder, Superintendent.

Chatham-Lee-Moore District is now the Sandford District—Mrs. H. E. ennedey, Superintendent.

Durham-Wake District is now the Raleigh District—Mrs. Mamie Leonard, Superintendent.

Guilford-Rockingham-Forsyth District is now the Greensboro District—Mrs. Wm. G. Davis, Superintendent.

Halifax District is still the same—Halifax District—Mrs. H. B. Satterfield, Superintendent.

Randolph District is now the Asheboro District—Mrs. E. P. Boroughs, Superintendent.

Vance-Warren District is now the Henderson District—Mrs. E. M. Carter, Superintendent.

In the future, please refer to our districts in the North Carolina Conference as Burlington, Sanford, Raleigh, Greensboro, Halifax, Asheboro, and Henderson Districts. Let's not use the old names any more.

ELK SPUR NEWS.

Well it has been several months since I have sent in a piece from the Elk Spur Christian Church. But the summer has been so short and everyone so busy. In June Mr. and Mrs. Hurdle and family came to stay with us three months, we were so glad to have them. In July we had our Bible School, with several good teachers. It was a great success with an average of thirty.

In August Mr. Rickets from the Danville Church, came and held a revival for us. He was a good mixer, and a good preacher, and with the people's prayers six united with the Church. Two of these were my two girls, eight and eleven. The following Sunday we had a joint baptizing with the Rocky Ford Church with four-teen baptized.

In September, the Hurdles left us. We felt sad when they left because he had really worked hard and everyone liked him. Since he went away he has come back twice, he evidently liked us too. We hope so.

October 31, Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom and family and friends visited our Sunday school from Sandford. Everyone was glad to see them, he was our pastor twelve years ago. I will always remember him as one who guided me, when I was just a young girl.

Also Mr. Wright from Winston-Salem Moravion Church brought us an interesting message.

I mentioned sometime ago about hauling our folks in on a truck which was uncovered; and when the cold weather comes, it is almost impossible to ride in it. If we continue to have Sunday school through the winter we will have to have something to haul the folks in.

Two weeks ago my husband bought a bus down at Kernersville, N. C. and the first Sunday we used it, we hauled in 36 of the 56 present.

It was really something to see the smiles on the faces of children, and also the mothers who would have to stand and hold babies as they rode as far as five miles.

There is surely much to be done and God has truly blessed us and we are thankful to Him.

Death claimed Phillip McMillian, age 59 at Elk Spur Church, Friday October 29. He had been a member of the Elk Spur Church and Sunday school almost since the church was built. The funeral was held at Elk Spur Christian Church Sunday afternoon at two o'clock.

Phil was a crippled from birth, and Walked on crutches. He was a faithful attendant at church and Sunday school. He was handicapped in making money by being crippled, but it didn't hinder his way of living for God. The good words that were said and the many friends who attended his funeral showed the respect in which he had lived.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Life is full of surprises. As you grow older you will see this is a true statement. Recently I was surprised and pleased to have Dr. Samuel Lawrence of Chicago send me some messages for children written by Rev. Douglas Smith of Bedford England. Mr. Smith is the minister of the Howard Street Church in Bedford. And this is John Bunyan's old church. If you don't know about John Bunyan ask some grown-up to tell you. Better still, read his "Pilgrim's Progress." During the summer of 1946 the Rev. Mr. Smith came to the United States and preached at Greeley, Colorado. The minister at Greeley exchanged and preached in Mr. Smith's pulpit. Most important of all for you, however, is the fact that he is an author and has written children's books. So, many thanks to ministers Johnson and Smith!

"UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT."

By DOUGLAS A. SMITH, F.Ph.S., F.R.G.S.

A Salvation Army team was holding an open-air meeting in a city square, in the North of England. The speakers were interrupted several times by a man and woman who were not sober. After a time a Salvationist persuaded them to listen to the speaker. This they did for the remainder of the meeting. They seemed impressed and asked permission to join the company. When they were given a hymn book, both man and wife declared they could not read.

Next morning Bert and Daisy Cummings decided that, as they had joined the 'Army' they must do two things. First they must pay their debts. Second they must obtain a uniform for Bert so that he could attend the meetings as others did. Bert declared he must have a red waistcoat with some words written on it.

"Right," said Daisy, "you go to Ennals the grocer, while I see what I can do with this piece of red calico."

But Bert hung about the house waiting to see what his new uniform would look like. The garment was at last cut out, and tacked up. When he tried it on, he was as proud as a peacock, as he stood before the mirror.

"We must have the writing on it wife," he declared.

"I suppose we must," was the reply, "but where do we get it from anyway? I haven't got any writing!"

"There should be words, printed round a circle," argued Bert, "the uniform will not be complete until we get them put on."

"Oh, go off, and don't bother me!" exclaimed the irritated Daisy. "Go and pay those bills at the grocers, before the store closes. Why you have been hindering me all day. I might have got this finished by now if you hadn't stayed here telling me what to do. Get along with you."

Bert knew enough from what he had heard the night before, to know as a Christian he must not quarrel. So, for the first time in his married life he went without trouble, when Mrs. Cummings criticised him.

"Goodness me!" exclaimed that astonished lady, "here's a go—never a swear, not so much as a black eye, things have altered, may it last."

Bert Cummings went to the grocers and paid him debts, to the relief of the store owner. As he turned to leave the shop he noticed an advertisement streamer in the shop with silver lettering on a red background.

"Hi!" said Bert, "have you got another like that, that's just the thing I'm looking for."

"No," was the reply, "but as you have paid up, you can have that if you like; we have about finished with it."

Bert soon had the precious streamer unpinned, and rolled under his arm. He hurried home, and with excitement announced, "I've got it Daisy. Just the thing. Sew this on the front of the waistcoat, and I can go to the meeting in uniform tonight."

"What does it say?"

"Don't know, but it looks alright, fix it on, look like this, just across the chest."

The waistcoat was finished. Bert set off for the meeting along the dismal streets to the Congress Hall. His face was aglow with pride, as he pushed open the door, and stepped inside the lighted hall. The Salvationists turned, and saw their newest recruit in a smart garment with silver lettering on it. Someone jumped up to welcome Bert, he was led to the front of the hall. Bert just wished Daisy could see him at that moment, with all eyes fixed on him and his new uniform.

Suddenly a ripple of laughter came from someone in the front row; gradually the laughing grew until everyone in the hall was laughing. As Bert did not know why they were laughing, and laughter is catching, he laughed louder than anyone. That was something new for Bert too. But then lots of things were going to be different in the future, for proudly sewn on his uniform, by Daisy, was the notice from the grocers announcing that Bert was "Under New Management."

TEACHING OUR CHILDREN TO ENJOY THEMSELVES.

By ANNIE L. GAETZ,
Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

We are living in a materialistic age, and in our zeal to have our children develop abilities with reference to material needs, there is grave danger that we might allow the spirit of good-natured fun to become stifled. A cheerful disposition is a greater treasure than much riches. It helps on every occasion. Besides being a comfort to the owner, it is contagious. The child to whom it belongs is likely to be popular with his playmates, and in later years—if his character is as good as his disposition—he usually can be assured of a welcome at any gathering. Employers, too, appreciate a happy disposition in their employees.

The time to cultivate a happy disposition is in childhood.

Too many people make the mistake of putting aside all pleasure as "foolishness" and stressing only the work, which they believe to be all-important. When they do this they are missing one of the most precious blessings that life offers and an asset which, if rightly sought, is easiest to obtain. After the bare necessities of life, what the family needs most is good, old-fashioned fun. Indeed, we would not be far wrong if we classed fun as one of the bare necessities.

Don't cramp childhood. Many children who associate almost exclusively with older persons never learn to enjoy themselves, and in later years they feel that their childhood was sadly lacking. They never were children in the true sense of the word. As adults they usually become the "wallflowers" at social gatherings. Instead of doing all possible for their own and other people's enjoyment, they fail utterly to enjoy themselves and prove a source of worry to those responsible for their entertainment. They cannot enter into the fun, for they have never learned to play.

Youth at Work in the Church

ANN TRUITT, Editor; HELEN JACKSON, C. B. TWIDDY, Associates.

THREE GREAT YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS HELD IN THE CONVENTION.

The Young People of the Southern Convention had three highly successful meetings during the month of October, both from a standpoint of program and attendance. The attendance at these meetings has probably been greater than at any other Young People's meetings held in The Southern Convention in recent years.

These meetings were held under the sponsorship of the Pilgrim Fellowship of North Carolina and the Young People's Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia.

The speakers for these occasions were Dr. Hiroshi Hatanaka, President of the Southern Convention. These outstanding speakers portrayed a world in dire need of Jesus Christ and they vividly bore witness of the impact of the Christian Gospel upon the lives of the peoples of the world through our mission program. The result of these meetings should be a renewed consecration on the part of all those attending, in the surrender and dedication of time, talents, and substance. The climax of the North Carolina meetings came in the closing devotional service when those in attendance participated in a reconsecration service led by Miss Fleta Moffitt, Personal Action Chairman, when she presented a commitment card which reads as follows:

MY ACT OF CHRISTIAN COMMITMENT.

[] Desiring to make life count for the utmost in Christian service to God and to my fellowmen, I purpose, through the seeking of His will, to commit my life to Him.

My Covenant With Thee:

- [] Through the reading of Thy word and through prayer, I shall seek to know Thee more fully.
- [] In my avocation, no less than my vocation, I shall seek to glorify Thee.
- [] By giving of a generous portion of my income and talent, I shall seek to help in the building of Thy Kingdom.
- [] In hope that they may have the same joy in Christian discipleship that I have known, I shall tell others of Thee.
- [] Depending upon Thy continuing grace, I make this covenant with Thee this day.

Date Name

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Southern Convention invites all young people and adults to join in this act of Christian Commitment as a part of the Worldwide Mission of the Church of Jesus Christ.

dent of Kobe College, Kobe, Japan; Dr. Alan B. Taylor, M. D., Medical Superintendent of the McCord Zulu Hospital, Durban, South Africa; Rev. Harold W. Case, Director of Congregational Christian Church work among American Indians, Elbowood, North Dakota; Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Secretary of The Missions Council, Congregational Christian Churches. These distinguished speakers were made possible as a result of the Congregational Christian's denominational participation in the Program of Advance being sponsored by the Foreign Missions Conference of North America and functioning as a part of "Our Christian World Mission" of the denomination and the Program of Advance

The first of these meetings was held on Sunday, October 17, at Wake Chapel Church, Rev. Fred P. Register, pastor. Those attending this meeting were from the churches of the Eastern North Carolina Conference. The attendance at this meeting was approximately 150.

The second meeting was held at Suffolk on Sunday, October 24, when the annual meeting of the Young People's Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia held its sessions. More than 300 were in attendance at the afternoon session and at the evening church service which was devoted to the concluding service of the Conference the church was filled. Mrs. Vivian B. Harrell, President of the Young People's Missionary Conference presided over this session. Mrs. Melvin Brinkley, Superintendent of the Young People's Missionary Conference, was largely responsible for the splendid program. Dr. Truitt and the Suffolk Church provided the evening meal.

The last meeting was held at Greensboro, First Church on Sunday, October 31, and was attended by the Young People of North Carolina-Virginia and Western North Carolina Conferences. The house was filled to capacity for both the afternoon and evening sessions and more than 300 were registered in attendance. Though the attendance was much larger than anticipated Dr. Wisseman and the women of the church provided a bountiful supper for all.

At the Wake Chapel and Greensboro meetings, C. Baxter Twiddy, President of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship presided, and in addition to the guest speakers, the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship program for 1948-49 was presented by the four Commission Chairmen:

Interdenominational Action—Evelyn Moore, Chairman; Missionary Action—Melva Foster, Chairman; Personal Action—Fleta Moffitt, Chairman; Social Action—Bill Scott, Jr., Chairman.

These three great meetings bore evidence of the great potential which exists among the Young People of the Southern Convention. They are energetic, capable, and consecrated. A renewed interest and program are manifest. Let our churches and pastors encourage the work of our Young People. We sorely need the services of a Field Director to strengthen and organize the work of our Young People and it is hoped that one may be found in the near future.

The concluding rally in the Southern Convention will be held in the Valley of Virginia on Sunday, November 14, at the Evangelical and Reformed Church, Woodstock, Virginia, when Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed Young People and adults will come together for a great fellowship meeting. Participating in this meeting will be the visiting team to the Southern Area and leaders from the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

Life is too short to be unhappy in business. If business were not a part of the joy of living, we might almost say that we have no right to live, because it is a pretty poor man who cannot get into the line for which he is fitted.

POETRY IN THE BIBLE.

LESSON VII—NOVEMBER 21, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto my God.—Psalm 40:3.

LESSON: I Samuel 2:1-10; II Samuel 1:19-27; Psalms 23, 24, 103, 136: 1-19; Lamentations 3:19-39; Habakkuk 3:17-19; Luke 1:46-55.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 147: 1-12.

Poetry.

Poetry is the language of the emotions. It speaks from, and to the heart. It seeks to stir the imagination and to arouse the feelings. It deals with figures rather than facts, that is, its language is figurative and pictorial, rather than factual. Its function is not primarily to give information, but rather to give inspiration. It is one of the most powerful forms of literature.

Strange as it may seem, poetry is older than prose. This is true of every literature. All peoples seem to begin their literature in what are called "folk songs." Little children, when they begin to listen to reading like best the jingles and rhymes and nursery verses. And the great stories in English literature are in poetic form.

All this does not mean that poetry is a lot of moonshine, that the poets are starry-eyed dreamers, dealing in make-believe. The fact is that poets, real poets, deal with the great realities of life, and usually have insights that are profound and vital. Poets see not only with their eyes but through their eyes. They look at the things that can be seen, with eyes that see things that cannot be seen. Religion, as well as literature owes much to poets.

Poetry In the Bible.

It may come as a surprise to many people to learn that there is poetry in the Bible. This is true because the average Bible is not printed in such a way that its poetry is printed as poetry. But the fact is that there is a great deal of poetry in the Bible. In fact over one-third of the Old Testament is poetry. And there is some poetry in the New Testament. There are scattered bits of poetry in the Old Testament such as: "The Hymn of Hate" (Genesis 4); Jacob's parting words to his sons (Genesis 49); The Song of Moses, (Genesis 15); The Song of the Well, (Numbers 21); Balaam's prophecies, (Numbers 23, 24); Moses' Song and Blessing, (Deuteronomy 32, 33, respectively); Deborah's Song, (Judges); Hannah's Song, (Samuel); David's Lament over Jonathan and Saul, (Second Samuel).

And then there are whole books of poetry in the Old Testament. Except for the first two chapters and the last eleven verses of Job, the whole book is poetry. Psalms, Proverbs, Song of Solomon, and Lamentations are all poetry. And many of the prophets' messages are poetry. Poetry abounds in the Old Testament, all kinds of poetry, didactic, epic, dramatic and lyric poetry.

Hebrew Poetry.

One reason why people do not realize that so much of the Bible is poetry is because Hebrew poetry is not like English poetry. It does not use rhyme, and much of its meter is lost in translation. Furthermore, the striking feature of Hebrew poetry is what is called its parallelism, or rhyme of ideas. A thought is expressed in one line and repeated in a different form in the following line, or at times its contrast is stated. For instance the couplet "Who shall ascend unto the hill of the Lord, And who shall stand in his holy place," is of the first kind. While "The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, But the way of the ungodly shall perish," is of the second kind. Sometimes the second half of a poem, repeats in another form the first part of the poem. The study of Hebrew poetry opens up stimulating fields and is highly rewarding.

A Book of Poetry in the Bible.

The best known book of poetry in the Bible is, of course, the Psalms. It is not only a book of poems, but it is a book of poems designed to be set to music. Indeed it is the hymn book of the Hebrews—it contains the hymns which they sang in their worship of God. And for that matter, it was the first hymnbook of the Christians, and even today many churches use the metrical versions of the Psalms in their services of worship. "All peoples that on earth do well" which appears in practically every church hymnal, and which is sung to the tune of "Old Hundred"—the same tune to which we sing the Doxology—is simply a metrical paraphrase of the 100th Psalm. And many older hymnals have many of the Psalms set to modern music, and they are used by many churches.

These Psalms run the whole gamut of the religious life. Praise, adoration, thanksgiving, supplication, confession, intercession, reflection, penitence even imprecation are to be found in this treasure house of poetry. And they are both personal and national in subject matter. But for the most part they are "songs of the heart," and they cover all the deep and the sweet and the bitter experiences of life. They are well adapted to devotional reading. And ministers would do well to preach again and again a series of sermons on the Psalms. There is good food in them, attractively packaged.

Samples of Poetry in the Bible.

Today's lesson presents a few of the gems of poetry in the Old Testament. There is first of all that well-known, perhaps the best-known Psalm and section of Scripture, the Twenty-Third, or Shepherd Psalm, inimitable and immortal. It is one of the most personal of all the Psalms, and the inspiration and comfort of countless thousands through all the years. It was undoubtedly written by the sweet singer of Israel, David.

Then there is the Twenty-Fourth Psalm which sets the Divine Sovereignty of God, and bursts forth in a Chorus of Praise. The One Hundred Third Psalm embodies the spirit of Thanksgiving and Praise for the goodness and the generosity of Jehovah. The One Hundred Thirty-Sixth Psalm tells about God's Mighty works and His Loving kindness, a beautiful combination of His power and yet of His love for His children. Then there is that majestic Cry of Faith found in Habakkuk's prophecy (3:17-19) that is tonic for the soul in times of doubt and disaster. Or the hopeful cry of a suffering people as recorded in Lamentations. Finally there is that superb song of Mary as recorded in Luke's gospel, and which has been put to music and is one of the classics. (Luke 1:46-55. These are but few of the many and marvelous poems to be found throughout the Scriptures. They have in themselves the power to set the soul to singing, and to bring serenity and peace to the troubled heart. It is good for a man to read poetry. It is even better for him to read the poetry of the Bible.

No liberal man would impute a charge of unsteadiness to another for having changed his opinion.—Cicero.

THE MIRROR OF THE YEARS.

folly of being too much concerned, or overly anxious, about "time" as expressed in days and years. In terms of the ages which science insists have elapsed since Creation began, human history has been only a few minutes, and an individual's life but an instant flash.

Why are we so impatient of events, demanding that this or that desirable thing must come to reality this very day, and losing heart if it does not? If with God "a thousand years are but as a day," meaning that time as we count it has no particular standing in his plans, why should we require great causes to come to fruition with such immediate haste? Methusaleh lived 969 years, but to what purpose? Paul lived only a few years and changed the face of the world.

Fine living is not a matter of few or many days. At the bier of a sixteen year-old girl, a friend said, Her life could not have been more complete had she lived a thousand years. Far more important than added days, few or many, is the law of change which may operate constantly toward a better order. But not necessarily so; for faster and easier ways of doing things may mean neither higher ideals nor nobler living.

Some there are who, like the Prophet Jeremiah, 'ask for the old paths.' But Jeremiah had in mind a manner of life in keeping with the faith which the people professed instead of new fads which tended to lead them astray. He must have known that fundamental principles of righteousness and justice would bring a new order of life, not a return to old ways of doing things. The New Testament makes clear that the Kingdom of Heaven must be built in the earth out of things that are ahead not behind. The idea that all the real glory of life lies somewhere in past years is a delusion which is more or less common today. No one can point to times or places where the vanished glory was, for the simple reason that it never existed. To be sure, our own times seem to be confused, with many things "out of joint," and with moral standards lower than before. Even so, it does not prove much about the ultimate of the Kingdom of God, or the "consummation toward which the whole creation moves."

I once saw a man on a city street carry two heavy cases alternately, block at a time, to a rail road station. He arrived at his destination having walked one third of the time in the opposite direction.

In the "Mirror of the Years" we see the validity of the idea of freedom and unity in religion. Freedom to think, to believe, to act without "let or hindrance" from self appointed religious bosses of any name or order, and with loyalty to conscience and God given precedence over everything else.

Freedom to worship! How glibly we speak it! And yet, what formalists we have become, voluntary slaves to the "fud dubbery" of ritual and forms, with speaking directly to God from one's own heart in danger of becoming a lost art.

And unity? Our fathers pled for it under urgency of what they believed to be the prayer and example of Christ. To them, division meant weakness and failure. Unity meant strength and success. They contended for this faith with sustained vigor and unanswerable arguments as men contend for a dream they would help come true. Today this cause of unity has moved to the center of the stage and is calling the followers of Christ throughout the world to unite themselves into an irresistible force for righteousness and peace.

And there is increased evidence that military equipment and might, and charters and conventions and leagues can't save much of anything, far less our present confused and troubled world. Peace and brotherhood are the heritage of men of good will. And after every other human device has failed, Jesus and His way of life will still be the only real hope of mankind. Individuals and nations whom he called "the meek" shall ultimately "inherit the earth."

The Bible rule, "Will it please God?" is simple and to be held inviolate in every situation without exception or repeal. Robert E. Speer says, "If you want to know whether a thing is right or wrong, drag it out into the presence of Christ and see how it looks." Comparatively few of us to day, whether we be man or nation, dare ask, "What would Jesus do?"

Religion does not consist in being either for Paul or Apollos. It is being for both and God. Exclusion is littleness; inclusion is greatness. Always broadness of spirit is saner than narrowness. Our Christian faith is a land of far distances reaching to the utmost limits of the earth and all its peoples.

In the "mirror of many years" one may see that religion, in its fundamental sense, optimistic trust which looks in anticipation for a future better day for mankind on earth and for life everlasting in the world to come. The idea that to believe and talk about the future life disqualifies for the best living here, is polite rubbish. Did those saints who were pillars of the faith in the years now long past, fail in Christian living, or go out into oblivion? No. They set an example far in advance of their day, and went out into life, glorious and eternal.

There is a story of a man who placed a wonderful window high in his work-shop where he might easily behold its beautiful shadings of color, and e'er long, he himself was changed and every thing about him took on an aspect of order and charm.

Of course, what one is able to see in the "Mirror of the Years," will depend mostly on himself. But thrice happy will he be if, as he looks, he beholds in clear outline, the simple graces of humility, trust in God, and optimistic hope which, taken together, make living grandly worthwhile, and give promise that the spirit of Christ will ultimately prevail in the earth.

It seems to be difficult for some of us to keep the moral pace which our believing fore-bears set for us; and there is a kind of moral humiliation in having to confess that one's life level is lower than that of his father's. Even so, it is easy to become hardened to the idea—to spend time wandering amid the ruins of the departed glory of our ancestors. However this may be, great causes of deepest concern to all peoples of the earth are now demanding the best we can give in intelligent, consistent, consecrated service. And what we do about this call which, in truth, is the call of God, will be the true measure of life and religion, now and ever more.

NEWS FROM SHAOWU.

new gold yuen is beginning to double over night. Rice, meats, cloth and fuel are being held in reserve except when secret sales can be managed for high prices.

Being home also means committee work with the Chinese colleagues for hospitals, churches and schools and in spite of "nothing to buy" on the streets, there has been hearty fellowship at several unpretentious meals with the closest Christian friends.

As autumn fog clears away a little later each morning, a realization of much opportunity, much work to do keeps us feeling very busy and glad that we were sent to be about our Heavenly Father's business.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The little boy's picture shown on this page is a fine little boy and a loveable child. He is always so nice and gentle, and one cannot help but love a fine little boy. He and his little brother came to live with us several months ago. Under the circumstances it was necessary for them to be sent to the Christian Orphanage.

Children in an orphanage craves as much as any other child and perhaps more, because there is a vacant place in their life that is hard to fill. It is the duty of the orphanage personnel to do their best from day to day to fill this vacancy by kindness and love.

Some weeks ago we had several cases of mumps in Johnston Hall, and little "Jackie" Wilkins, a little boy four years of age, had them on both sides at the same time. His jaws were swollen badly. He came to my office door and looked in, and he was feeling so badly he looked like he wanted someone to sympathize with him. I said to him, "come in Jackie and let me sympathize with you because I know just how you feel." He came in and crawled up in my lap and laid his little head on my shoulder. I patted his little back and told him that I had mumps when I was a little boy and my jaws were swollen like his and they throbbed and hurt just like his were doing, and in a few days mine got well and he would soon be well, too. It seemed to do him lots of good to have someone to love and sympathize with him in his trouble.

I have often thought what a blessing the Christian Orphanage is to meet the needs of so many children who have been left fatherless and dependent, and what an opportunity it gives all of us to open our hearts and give as the Lord has blessed us, in meeting the needs of the orphaned and dependent child. The Orphanage needs money. I cannot conceive of a more opportune time than at this Thanksgiving season to open your hearts and give as God has prospered you. A prominent man who visited the Orphanage sometime ago said to me, "If people would visit the Orphanage and could realize its conditions thirty-two years ago and what has been accomplished during the years since, you would not have any trouble getting money to run this institution."

FOR THE CHILDREN.

The subject of amusement is one which we must take into serious account when rearing a family. The wise mother provides her children with happy thoughts, just as she provides them with bread. She brings laughter and pleasant conversation into their daily experiences and teaches them to see a bright lining in many a cloudy situation. The mother who realizes that it is her privilege to bring the universe to her children is a many-sided, wonderful creature. Her family does not live by material food alone, but also by spiritual and mental food provided by her. She could no more allow them to stagnate mentally or morally than she could feed them stale, tasteless food.

In order to set what they consider a proper example of seriousness before their children, some parents assume an air of reproof toward any childish glee; this of course, is a kill-joy to the spirit of fun. Variety is the spice of life, and we need to broaden our children's outlook in every good way. We should give the child the chance to do as many wholesome things for entertainment as his leisure hours will permit.

There are many parents who, by lack of cooperation, encourage their children to seek their fun away from home. Boys and girls who find their fun at home are not likely to go badly astray. An old man who was very fond of young people let them gather at his home evenings and play cards. A neighbor said to him, "Don't you know the devil is always where cards are?" "Yes," was the answer, "that's why I let the youngsters play in my home; in that way I can keep an eye on him." It need not be an important drawback to children if they live in out-of-the-way places and have little opportunity to mingle in society. Such families can construct their own world and create their own amusements.

However we are situated, we should not allow any phase of harmless pleasure. (Continued on page 15.)

In Memoriam

GRIGGS.

Miss Buena E. Griggs, 56, of Nansemond County, died September 26, 1948, in a Suffolk hospital after a long illness. She was a faithful member of the Suffolk Christian Church, and engaged actively in the work of its organizations. She was always ready to respond to every enterprise of the church, and was a good neighbor and greatly loved by her people and those who knew her best.

She was survived by two brothers, M. A. Griggs, of Suffolk, and J. L. Griggs of Nansemond County. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, and the Rev. R. E. Brittle, and interment was made in the Bethlehem Christian Church cemetery. May God's blessings be upon her bereft loved ones.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

ELEY.

John Mills Eley, 79, died September 28, 1948, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Robert R. Harrell, Jr., 613 North Broad Street, Suffolk, Va., survived by his wife, Mrs. Addie C. Eley; a daughter, Mrs. Robert R. Harrell, Jr.; a son, Lawson Eley of Suffolk; and one sister, Mrs. Percy T. Bradshaw, Zuni, Va.

Mr. Eley was a good and faithful member of the Suffolk Christian Church, one of the best known citizens of this community, and a man who loved his home, his church, and his fellowmen. He had been in poor health for a long time. His funeral was conducted by his pastor and the Rev. J. Lester Lane, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Suffolk. May God's blessings be upon his bereft loved ones.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

ELEY.

Mrs. Dorothy Morrison Eley, 41, president of the Virginia Federation of Woman's Clubs, official in the Suffolk Christian Church and a teacher in the Sunday school, died September 27, 1948, at her home in Riverview, Suffolk, Va. She is survived by her husband, Claud E. Eley; one son, Claud, Jr., who is a student at VMI; a sister, Mrs. William R. Pate, of McColl, S. C.; a step-mother, Mrs. J. D. Morrison, of McColl; a niece, Mrs. John R. Mitchell, of Ft. Knox; a grandniece, Dorothy Jeanne Mitchell; and two brothers-in-law, John C. Eley, Suffolk, and W. R. Pate, McColl, S. C.

Mrs. Eley was unusually active in church and community affairs, and was well known throughout the State for her charming personality, and her ability in the public presentation of whatever cause was near to her heart. She added dignity and worth to life for the way in which she lived it. May her fondest dreams be realized in her loved ones.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

SIMPSON.

God in His infinite love has seen fit to call to His heavenly home one of our oldest and most faithful members, Mrs. Nannie Simpson.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the First Christian Church of Burlington desires to record our appreciation of her life and sorrow in her passing.

Ever faithful to her church and family, Mrs. Simpson exemplified those quiet Christian virtues of one of God's noble women.

We extend to her bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and earnest prayers.

We desire that a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, a copy spread upon the minutes of the Auxiliary and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

TROLLINGER.

The year 1947 left some vacancies in our church family and among them, with sorrow and sadness, we saw the passing of our faithful member, Mrs. Cora (H. W.) Trollinger.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we keep her memory green and that each of us will pledge ourselves to come to every meeting that she would have graced with her presence if she were still with us, and in that way fill the chair made vacant by her going.

2. That we extend to her family our deepest sympathy and may their faith in God and His promise of their eventual meeting with their their loved one ease their grief and sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, a copy to the family and a copy be placed upon the church records.

Respectfully submitted,
SADIE V. FONVILLE,
Mrs. W. W. HORNE,
Mrs. C. T. HOLT,
Committee.

HOLT.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the First Christian Church of Burlington sustained the loss of one of its oldest and most beloved members, Mrs. Ella Moore Holt on June 3, 1948.

Mrs. Holt was the last surviving charter member of the local church of which she had been a member since young girlhood.

She was devoted to her church and the Woman's Auxiliary and will be greatly missed. Quiet and unassuming in her manner she exerted a wholesome influence over those with whom she came in contact, not only in her own church but also in the community at large.

We feel that while we mourn her passing, Heaven has been made richer by her entrance into the Heavenly Kingdom.

We wish to extend to her bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and earnest prayers that God's blessings may always be about them and give them comfort.

We desire that a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, a copy spread upon our minutes and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

BARRETT.

At a meeting of the Town Council of Dendron, Va., held at the Mayor's office on Tuesday, September 14, 1948, on motion made and duly seconded, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Town Council of Dendron, Va., and the Town Officers feel with great sorrow their loss in the death of their Mayor, Mr. W. S. Barrett; and,

WHEREAS, The town has lost a faithful servant and leader, who by his high ideals, splendid character, great courage of spirit and devotion to duty, has contributed much to the welfare of the community. His value has been evidenced by his many activities and honors in his community, his county and his state; and,

WHEREAS, The Council of the Town of Dendron and the Town Officers desire to recognize and pay tribute to the accomplishments and deeds and the many years of untiring and faithful service of their deceased Mayor whose life was characterized by his Christian influence, and his willingness to give of his time and talents to serve his fellow man; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED, That the members of the Council of the Town of Dendron, and the officers of the Town, express their high esteem and acknowledge their appreciation of Mayor Barrett's contributions to the community and of the inspiration he provided those with whom he was associated.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That a copy of these resolution be included in the minutes of the Town Council, that a copy be sent to his bereaved family and that a copy be released to the press.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

sure to escape the notice of our children. We should never allow life's joys to remain a sealed book to our family. There is a mental development—yes, and a spiritual development—in games and other home amusement. The remembrance of such childhood games as blindman's bluff and hide-and-seek remain in our memories long after a theater play or a public social has been forgotten.

We should do our part to make our children's lives round and full; no avenue for good should be allowed to remain closed. One of the best ways to help our boys and girls to build well-rounded personalities is to encourage them to find wholesome pleasure and amusement — always such as are in happy accord with their duties—under whatever circumstances they may be placed.

Evangelical Christianity in the Philippines

By Mr. Mateo F. Occena, Purchasing Agent, Philippine Republic in the United States.

Like other Spanish colonies, the Philippines was a monopoly of Roman Catholicism, the only religion prescribed and permitted by the Government. This had been going on for over three hundred years and there was not a single Filipino evangelical Christian when the American forces landed there in 1898 in connection with the Spanish-American War. About one year later, even before peace was completely established, your first evangelical missionaries came. They did not foist themselves as substitutes of Christ on earth, but taught that we could have direct contact with Jesus and God. They did not ram dogmas down our throats nor suppress personal opinions but, on the contrary, encouraged freedom of conscience and expression. Instead of outlawing the Bible, they gave copies of it free and urged everybody to study it. They did not demand obedience; they tried to persuade and serve. The refreshing atmosphere of this new and wholesome democratic Christianity had an instant appeal to the Filipinos. Perhaps more persuasive than the preaching of the missionaries was their genuine desire to be friendly and helpful. Throughout the entire enemy occupation of the Philippines, the fervor with which the Evangelical Church responded to hardships and sufferings, established conclusively its vitality and permanence. As a matter of fact, its growth and strength were accelerated by the religious awakening stimulated by the perils of war.

Today, although no official and accurate figures are available, it is safe to estimate that out of the eighteen or nineteen million Filipinos, about half a million are Evangelical Christians, plus approximately as many more who are not technically Evangelical but are essentially so in their religious views. To these must be added two million Aglipayans who, undoubtedly influenced by the favorable example set by the Evangelical Christians, recently concluded a working agreement with the Protestant Episcopal Church. This makes a total conversion of about three million, or sixteen per cent of the whole population, in less than fifty years. Moreover, during this last war the presence in the Philippines of hundreds of thousands of American GI's crowding into Evangelical Churches and hundreds of American chaplains occupying Evangelical pulpits graphically proclaimed that Evangelical Christianity is the religion of the majority of our liberators and gave the Evangelical movement in the Philippines a tremendous boost. And, although Evangelical Christians are still in the minority, their influence is far beyond that which would be expected from their proportional numerical strength.

Before the war, we in the Philippines spoke glibly of the need for freedom; but, on the whole, it was just so many words. Later, our country was occupied by the enemy and was placed under a most rigid military dictatorship for three years; we did not know what was going to happen to us in the next hour; every car which stopped in front of our house, every knock at our door, struck terror into our hearts, because it might mean being hauled into the torture chambers of Fort Santiago; when we left in the morning to look for rice, we did not know if we would ever come back because, if we were not lucky, we would meet soldiers who would load us on trucks for forced labor on some airfield. Then we knew, as no mere theorizing could have made us understand, just how indispensable liberty really is to the human heart and the human soul. Comparing the stifling and oppressive atmosphere during the enemy occupation with the present freedom enjoyed by the Filipinos is like coming out of a stuffy, dark dungeon into the fresh open air and sunshine. That is why the Filipinos, who have sampled the blessings of democracy and the horrors of despotism, will never agree to dictatorship. They want democratic freedom. If that is true in government, it will be that way also in religion.

America has a special stake in the Philippines, because the relationship between the two countries has been a pioneering venture that is unique in the annals of colonial administration. That the experiment was undertaken and that it succeeded, was due to the Christian spirit of the American statesmen concerned. And so it can be truthfully said that the independence of the Republic of the Philippines, which we Filipinos now enjoy, came over on the good ship "Mayflower" when she cast anchor near Plymouth Rock in 1620. The same is true of our Evangelical Church in the Philippines. No matter what happens, it is an American project. Therefore, it is to the interest of America to have Evangelical Christianity succeed quickly and convincingly in the Philippines so that the one billion people of the Far East, looking on, will see a shining example and will also be won over.

Let's Make It a Real Thanksgiving at The Christian Orphanage

The small children whose picture appears on this page are just two of a large family of children, living in a home known to many of us as The Christian Orphanage. That they may have an equal opportunity with other Congregational Christian children, The Christian Sun is appealing to you at this Thanksgiving period to remember them liberally. You can do this through the special offering being taken by your church or through a personal gift. The important thing is that you remember these children and make sure that they, too, have reason for Thanksgiving.

News Flashes

Mrs. R. L. House is attending the National Federation of Church Women in Milwaukee this week.

Eden Theological Seminary (Evangelical and Reformed), Webster Groves, Missouri, will celebrate its Centennial next year.

A Junior Choir has been organized in the Rosemont Church, Norfolk, under the leadership of Mrs. Royal Gallup.

Rev. Stuart I. McElroy, Secretary of the American Bible Society, will speak at the Eastern Virginia Ministers' Association in Suffolk on Monday.

Dr. Vaughn Dabney, Dean of Andover-Newton Theological Seminary, will spend a sabbatical year in Hawaii and Japan. He will lecture in the theological school of Doshisha University.

Rev. Edward J. Vorba, subscriber and contributor to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, was installed as the minister of the Congregational Church, Bradford, Vermont, on Thursday, October 28. He is a native of Mason City, Iowa.

Special Issues.—The observance of the Isaac Watts Bicentennial next week will be the occasion for a special issue devoted to Sacred Music. In accordance with the action of the Executive Committee of the Southern Convention, the following issue will be devoted to Christian Stewardship.

Church World Service has produced a single transcription for Thanksgiving Day use. Called "The Beach" the program stars Henry Fonda who is now appearing in the Broadway hit, "Mister Roberts." "The Beach" presents a story of a Japanese boy and an American GI, told against the background of Church World Service work in the orphanage of Okinawa. The 15-minute program is directed by Frank Papp. Expectation is that 600 stations will use it Thanksgiving Day.

The moderate drinker is likely to be at least as great a social liability as the heavy drinker. In the last stages, the problem is simply to isolate the drunkard, and let him alone. . . . Most of the liquor drinking in the world produces only dullness and stupidity. If a man is docile and gentle in his natural disposition, alcohol will not make him mean. But it will remove restraints. Along with "dull care," it throws off repressions, and, if down beneath there happens to be an ugly disposition, the drunkenness will expose it and bring it to expression. It

THANKSGIVING DAY, 1948

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

As the traditional day of thanksgiving approaches, our thoughts incline, as in previous years, to the richness of our blessings. The spiritual endowments of our country are undiminished; we may, as always, walk as free men unafraid. Our harvests have been bountiful, our production of goods abundant. Our resources have permitted us to aid the needy and helpless of other lands.

We are privileged to participate in international efforts to advance human welfare. We are profoundly grateful for the existence of an international forum where differences among nations may be submitted to world opinion with a view to harmonious adjustment.

We pray this year not only in the spirit of thanksgiving but also as supplicants for wisdom in our approach to the problems confronting this Nation. Believing in the dignity of man and his right to live in freedom and peace, we ask divine guidance in helping to safeguard these gifts for ourselves and other peoples of the earth.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, HARRY S. TRUMAN, President of the United States of America, in consonance with the joint resolution of Congress approved December 26, 1941, designating the fourth Thursday of November in each year as Thanksgiving Day, do hereby proclaim Thursday, November 25, 1948, as a day of national thanksgiving; and I call upon our citizens to observe that day by giving thanks to Almighty God for the bounties which have been bestowed upon our Nation and by resolving to render generous assistance to the hungry and homeless in other lands, thus renewing our devotion to the cause of goodwill among men.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

DONE at the City of Washington this twelfth day of November in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and forty-eight, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and seventy-third.

MISSIONARIES LEAVE FOR FOOCHOW.

John Francis Fairfield, World War II veteran, and his bride, Betty Smith Fairfield, sailed November 8 on the S. S. Borgholt from New York bound for Foochow, China, as lay missionaries under the American Board.

Born in Taiku, North China, where his parents were then Congregational Christian missionaries, John Fairfield is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Wynn C. Fairfield. His father was for sixteen years Secretary of the Far East of the American Board and is now General Executive of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

Johnnie Fairfield came into the news when in August, 1947, he sailed from Boston Harbor as radio officer on the tiny white missionary ship, Morning Star VI, bound for the South Sea Islands. He stayed with the little boat until it reached Hawaii where as previously planned, a different crew was secured and Mr. Fairfield flew back to the U. S. A. One portion of this voyage was a period of forty days under sail from the Galapagos Islands to Honolulu during which time the crew did not meet any ship or get any word from the outside world.

In Foochow, China, Mr. Fairfield will serve as Treasurer and Business Agent of the American Board Foochow Mission. Since his return from his trip on the Morning Star VI he has been preparing for his service in China by studying business methods of the American Board at International headquarters, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, as well as at Berea College in Kentucky and has also studied the Foochow dialect at Yale University since his knowledge of Chinese is that used in North China.

Mr. and Mrs. Fairfield are the missionaries of the Bushnell Congregational Church of Detroit, and were commissioned there in a special service, Sunday, November 7.

"I feel that everyone has a right to his own faith but I believe that if I can show others by Christian living that Christianity is the religion to give them a fuller life, I should do this. We are all brothers under the skin and Christian principles should work in our race relations," says Mr. Fairfield.

While his young bride, Betty Smith Fairfield, adds: "If we as Christians believe actually in the desirability of a Christian way of life for every one it is our duty to practice this type of life ourselves and to try, by illustration and by teaching, to convince others of the truth of Christ's principles, as well as help them to lead the Christian life."

Some Recoveries

By BISHOP EDWIN HOLT HUGHES.

Amid all the gloom that has been cast over the temperance situation in the United States, it has not always been easy for the conscientious foe of the liquor traffic to maintain his courage. The "faithful remnant" has often beheld but dimly the guiding cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night. Indeed the day itself has become night, while the normal night has seemed to become triple darkness.

But, if we may change the figure of speech, we now behold some tokens of recovery. Standing at the bedside of a nation that has been made sick by rum, we look upon charts that indicate a movement toward better health. The pulse is more nearly normal, the respiration less eccentric, the blood pressure less frightening, the gaspings less torturing, and the eye, indicating intelligence, is more lustrous. The diagnosis does not at all reveal perfection; but it does give some evidence that the patient is not in extremis.

I.

There is a recovery of helpful climate. The most fertile regions do not do their own work. Even California needs irrigation of the right sort, and must provide walls against threatening floods; and steel girders and concrete foundations against earthquakes that stagger like drunken forces. Climate, left without earnest reformers of the soil, returns to desert and wilderness. Only unspeakable human effort brought the Imperial Valley from the despair of the jack rabbit and made it to provide its eight and ten crops, annually, of nourishing alfalfa.

So now the liquorites are disturbed by the extent of territory that has been won back to sober growth. The statistics are favorable for the temperance cohorts. We continue to enlarge our dry territory, until today the saloon advocates warn their partners of the ominous advance of the fanatical army. Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky, in various degrees, throw alarms into the camps of the distillers and brewers. Indeed, the traders are our unconscious and involuntary assistants. Evil always goes too far into its own increasing evil. It makes minor Calvaries, and discovers that the crosses it creates become the weapons of its foes. Haman is often hanged upon the gallows that he builds for Mordecai, and his twisting and dying body sways upon the structure of his own building. Surely there is a sufficient recovery of dry territory to put into the hearts of the alcoholic oligarchy the fear of the men whom they were caricaturing two or three years ago. Cannon and McBride and Wheeler are finding their names renewed on the lists of heroes.

II.

There is, also, a recovery of moral attitude. The areas of courage are being extended. The false cry of partisan politics in the pulpit is having less influence. Extremists do not so often tell us that since liquor is a direct platform issue, we must not discuss it in our churches; or that since it is not an issue in a national campaign we must be silent. This double law is surely a double cross, and one that would forbid bold speech at all times. Those who say that liquor is not an issue today are both blind and deaf. Men may trifle with their own apostasy and may fasten the label of "prudence" rather than of conscience upon their conduct; but, as God is neither deceived nor mocked, so are His sincere people proclaiming more bravely the shameful entries in the record of liquor disasters and tragedies. If the birthright of some soul has been surrendered for alleged economic advantage, or for the sake of political officers, more and more men and women are recovering their courage, are forsaking their vociferous stillness, and are moving toward the platforms of outspoken righteousness. God has given us the title to the moral and spiritual realm, and we do not propose to deny His signature. Our commands come, not from a national convention, but from the Universal Ruler.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.
Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

ANTICIPATING THANKSGIVING.

The first disciples were characterized by an overwhelming thankfulness for their own salvation and all its concomitant blessings. The peremptory forsaking of houses and lands, the fourfold restoration, the broken alabaster—all are typical examples of uninhibited gratitude. The greater the consciousness of indebtedness, the greater were the gifts they brought.

Have we any keen consciousness of indebtedness, any soul-stirring appreciation of the blessings which, without our creating or deserving them, have been lavished upon us? We need a fresh and cleansing experience of gratitude. How may it be recaptured? By an imaginative recreation of the Biblical story, through acquaintance with new light and life experiences on the mission field, by reckoning our lives and our heritage in the light of the Cross.

There are manifold ways of expressing all the degrees of gratitude. Many channels and agencies of helpfulness are available:

The Christian Orphanage.

One expression of pure and undefiled religion is the care of orphans. Our people give with a great deal of satisfaction to this benevolent institution within our Convention. In gratitude for our parents, for all paternal blessings, and especially for the providential care of a Heavenly Father, we remember the fatherless in our giving at Thanksgiving. We rejoice that we have a should reach the lives of others. Whenever and where, a Christian home, for the unfortunate ones in our midst, and that we may have a share in this indispensable ministry. None of us knows when a child in our home, church or community may become an orphan. Faithful members of our churches who have supported the orphanage through the years will not fail to do so this Thanksgiving. God bless the children—and Bro. Charlie!

Missions.

What Jesus expected of his followers at the beginning, he expects of them still. It wasn't enough that they themselves should be possessed of the Good News, that in their own lives they should have received His blessings. Their significance lay in their creativeness which ever Jesus has helped a man He expects him to become a worldwide force for His Kingdom.

The expression of our gratitude may reach the ends of the earth. Happily, our church is so organized to make this possible. The Jacksons, Riggs, Thelins, Christians, Dilles, and the rest of our missionary personnel are the fingers of the Body of Christ. How wonderful it is to have such skillful and and consecrated emissaries in these needy areas of God's world! Some churches are endeavoring to complete their quotas for the Committee on War Victims and Reconstruction.

Destitution and need are widespread. There are many worthy causes at home and abroad. Let Christian gratitude have its fullest expression and widest benefits this memorable Thanksgiving.

DENOMINATIONAL MISOGAMISTS.

From time immemorial there have been those who, through ignorance or some form of perversion, hated marriage. This strong aversion to marriage usually had a psychological or emotional basis. It is readily understandable in the miser, the prodigal, and the misanthrope. One who nurses a hatred of marriage is invariably one who is selfish or misunderstands the opposite sex. This pronounced aversion may be a form of compensation for some thwarted purpose in life. Because one good is denied, another is condemned.

Just now, at least, there seem to be a considerable number of people who have a strong aversion to denominational marriages. O yes, they believe in "church union," especially "church federation!" Confronted, however, with an immediate, concrete proposal for denominational union, they hedge and find a host of reasons for breaking the engagement.

Just now there are a number of people who are quite certain that marriage with the E. & R. Church is not feasible. They are working overtime, digging into family history, finding skeletons in closets, unearthing technicalities, and publicizing their findings. Fear has usurped the throne of reason. These denominational misogynists should be referred to a pre-marital counseling service.

E. Stanley Jones has been conducting a Crusade for a United Church. A letter to members of his Ashram states:

"We started on this Crusade on September 5 at Kennebunkport, Maine, a summer resort, and will end up tomorrow in Newark, New Jersey, going to 26 cities in 28 days. Today we are in Providence, Rhode Island, but every day we seemed to live "in Providence;" without Divine Providence it could not have been done. But the joy of being in something big—something full of destiny, and something that we were not carrying on, was healing while it was wearing.

"This crusade has gone deeper and wider than last year's Crusade, by far. Now, the people are beginning to see what it is all about, beginning to see that it can really happen and that it is possible now. I wish I could impart to you the inspiration of seeing great crowds taking it, and taking it joyously, as a long-awaited dream come true. We did not ask for audiences to vote but they themselves demanded it from the floor. I shall give you a few of the places where votes were asked: in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, out of an audience of 2,500, only two against; in Enid, Oklahoma, out of 3,000 only two against; in San Antonio, Texas, out of 4,000, only 11 voted against; in Houston, out of 3,000, two against; Memphis, Tennessee, out of 1,500, two against; in Champaign-Urbana, Illinois, the University Hall was packed with 2,800 and when a vote was asked, only three voted in the negative. A Negro congregation in Memphis was unanimous. This also happened in Charleston, West Virginia, in the Baptist Temple, and in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. In Louisville, Kentucky, in the Municipal Auditorium, when the Episcopal bishop put the matter to a vote, out of 2,000 there were only six against and this almost unanimous vote included Southern Baptists and Southern Presbyterians.

"Cincinnati, Ohio, was the only place we returned to on this Crusade. It was a test. Would the people come back the second time on the same subject? The large crowd in the Taft Auditorium voted for it almost unanimously, only 10 voting against. Cincinnati is going out to get a majority of church members to sign cards.

"A movement of the Spirit is on and the amazing thing is that although we are presenting the most controversial subject possible—union of the churches—we have not left behind a controversy or a split condition in any local situation. It has been healing. Only the Spirit of God could have produced that."

It has been said that fortune knocks once and if the door of opportunity does not open, he sends his daughter—misfortune. Fortune is knocking at the door of our denomination. Other church bodies are jealous of the opportunity which is ours. We would do well to weigh carefully the testimony of Stanley Jones. If we reject our present suitor it may be that our second state will be worse than the first. Ours is the great opportunity of contemporary Protestantism.

Africa in the World Christian Community

By DR. EMORY ROSS, Secretary.

Africa Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

Africa today is regarded by European nations as a chief bulwark and aid of western economy and power. At the same time thousands of educated and capable Africans are demanding greater authority in their own economic and political life, and a certain number seek to force immediate independence. Both in Europe and in Africa these are new attitudes. They present hard new problems to Africans and the world.

Britain is undertaking in Africa—as no nation has ever before attempted anywhere in such proportions and in so short a period—a development program on a 1,500 million dollar scale.

France is intently bent on incorporating all its African territories into the new Union Francaise, has given the vote to all its colonial peoples and sees the prime necessity of an economic development of its overseas areas such as had never before been undertaken.

Intensive programs of development of natural and human resource are under way in non-colonial African territories; in Liberia, Ethiopia, Southern Rhodesia and the Union of South Africa. Hundreds of millions of blue prints are already on hand for the rapid and widespread development of Africa.

There are four principal factors responsible for this completely altered attitude toward Africa:

1. Strategic considerations.
2. Serious economic insufficiency and insecurity in Europe.

3. Reduction or disappearance of Far and Middle Eastern sources of sure and cheap supply.

4. The all-important fact, as the Western world sees it, that Africa is the only large populated and productive area left in and about which, for the years just ahead, the outside nations of the world can do pretty much as they please—if they please to risk it.

It is the fourth factor which the Christian Church must squarely face. It bears heavily upon us. For the Christian people of Canada and the United States, with their fellows in Western Europe, bear great and perhaps eventually dominant responsibility for the world's attitude and action regarding Africa.

That attitude and action may be on any one of three general lines, or more likely, on some combination of all these:

1. To repress and suppress African initiative and advancement, trying to keep Africa under the clear domination of white power, as much of it now is.

2. To delay and retard such initiative and advancement until African mass, and perhaps armed resistance forces change, as has been the experience in certain other parts of the world.

3. To move with sincerity and mutual confidence, steadily and purposefully toward African self-government and voluntary African participation in a world society and economy organized for maximum good of all peoples, including Africans.

The third is the only line of action which in this next generation is likely to yield the richest returns for all the world.

This goal has now been chosen by some European political authorities in Africa, though not yet by all. It is being passionately demanded by a gradually increasing number of Africans. But even where this goal is chosen, its attainment carries grave problems. If Christians believe in and accept this goal for Africa their problem then becomes two-fold: to work together right across national lines for the Western world's full acceptance toward this goal, at the same time to go all out in the immensely important, basic tasks of helping Africans prepare themselves spiritually, mentally and socially for their highest contributions, individually and collectively for God and man.

Both these tasks are best approached by Christians in two ways: (1) by informed individuals' initiative and effort to get this goal for Africa accepted and backed, and (2) by strong group support and extension of the greatest single force introduced into Africa in this past century—Christianity.

The major North American expression of the Christian Church in Africa is represented in this gathering—in the membership of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. Those Protestant Missionary agencies have worked for a year and eight months with their sister agencies in Europe and Africa on proposals here presented to the North American Church. These proposals should have compelling claim upon the North American Church.

Of all the many needs of Africa and of the world, Christian Community is absolutely basic. Without it there is no sure way whatever to move with sincerity and mutual confidence, steadily and purposefully, toward the highest development of Africans and of their relationships with the world. With it, and within it, knowledge and love grow side by side, man rises and the world lives.

Every one of the fourteen sections of the Africa program submitted has basically within it these two elements for building Christian Community: the education and training of Christian African leadership, and the mass winning and commitment of Africans to the Christian life.

It is not for nothing that Christian

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It was a joy to see George Gunter, a layman, presiding over the Western North Carolina Conference in its annual session last week in our Pleasant Union Church near Asheboro. And it was thrilling to see the church packed with ministers, delegates, and interested visitors, and to catch the spirit of the loyal Christian people who make up that fine, old conference. That conference 37 churches. Six of them are named "pleasant" which is reminiscent of the days when people had much time to linger about the rural church doors, to visit with one another, before and after their hour of worship—perhaps I am using the word "hour" here figuratively. As I was saying there are six "pleasant" church: Pleasant Grove, Pleasant Hill, Pleasant Ridge, Pleasant Cross, Mt. Pleasant and Pleasant Union. And if you had seen the bountiful picnic dinner, partaken of its bounty, and shared in the fellowship in the bright sunlight of a fair autumn day you would have known yourself to be in a pleasant place among pleasant people.

Cyrus Shoffner, another laymen, is treasurer of the conference, and a laywoman, Mrs. F. C. Lester, is its most efficient secretary. So of the four executive officers only one of them is a minister, the Rev. B. J. Earp, who is vice-president. There were ten regular reports to be made to the conference covering all phases of the work, and they were beautifully mimeographed and presented in a booklet form—but better still they showed signs of real work done by conference leaders, churches, and members during the year. Their churches range from city churches to towns and churches in the rural communities. When one looks at their lovely country with rounding hills and fertile fields, and the busy industrial towns and cities; their pretty homes, their excellent schools filled with the best of boys and girls—when one looks at all this, I say, and then thinks of some sections of the world, one is led to humbly lift one's heart to God in gratitude, and pray for a bigger spirit to do better and better things for those who have so much less.

It is a joy to work for the Church. It is a pleasure to be a part of an organization that has heaven to offer, and I am not saying that patently and glibly, but because I have seen the need of it and known the joy of seeing men and women accept the Christian way of life and live it until their homes became fortresses of real strength and goodness in their community. May the pastors of our churches, the teachers in our Sunday schools, the volunteer workers at scores of posts never tire in patiently bringing their message to the people about them, and faithfully contributing of their means to carry that message to those who are at the present so much less fortunate. I was thinking today how many people had done volunteer jobs in all the churches that make up the year's work of any conference, of what joy came to them in doing those jobs, and of how much so many people missed by not having a share in the work of the Church.

WE'VE TALKED OF LOVE.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT.

We've talked of love and talked of fear,
In every walk of life we hear
A fulsome line of good advice
On what is great and what is nice;
A million words on what is true,
And a million more on what to do—
Now let us up and face the facts
With loving deeds and kindly acts.

It's well enough to know the way
To save the State, the world, the day,
To have our slogans good and rare
And reams of words on what to share
With who needs what and just how much
Of differing sorts of such and such—
But a starving child before he's dead
Would like less talk and a bit more bread.

APARTMENT FOR PEGGY.

Picture of the month, selected by Protestant Motion Picture Council.

The warmly appealing story of a student-veteran and his eager young wife, with all the ups and downs of their early years together, "Apartment for Peggy" is one of those rare films of young married life that manage to provide good entertainment without the aid of such shopworn props as marital triangles and cock-tail marathons. Our congratulations to 20th Century-Fox and Director George Seaton. They have set a pattern worthy of study by their peers.

"Apartment for Peggy" is in every way a skilled and sympathetic rendering of a novel by Faith Baldwin, whose name these days guarantees a lively plot, wholesome situations and a sound approach to social problems. Simply and straightforwardly told, it spins out the kind of drama we can all applaud—real without being "realistic," tender but never maudlin, humorous but never faucous. And as timely as the predicament of that young couple around the corner!

The predicament at first belongs to Jason (William Holden), a returned veteran, who is trying to find a home and economic comforts for his pretty young wife, Peggy (Jeanne Crain). While overseas he caught hold of a compelling ideal which leads him, sustained by her faith and encouragement, to go back and finish his education. He believes in this ideal; he holds it high in spite of rough going and slow progress. The vicissitudes of the high cost of living and increasing responsibilities make him falter. He loses his ideal in the relentless conflict of dollars and cents versus the less tangible recompense of being a teacher.

As Jason gives up the struggle and sets himself to make money the quickest way he honestly can, Peggy feels their love and their bright dream slipping away. Even the friendship of their guardian-professor of philosophy, Dr. Barnes (Edmund Gwenn), leaves her hopeless. The professor takes it upon himself to go to Jason and persuade him to come back, only to have his own financial shortcomings thrown up to him by the disillusioned young man.

Parallel with the young couple's problems is that of the professor who has planned deliberately to end his life when a book he is writing is completed and he feels no longer useful or wanted. How his plans are changed and how all three straighten out their difficulties make an engaging piece of comedy-drama.

A young woman facing motherhood, and her ideals for her forthcoming offspring, contrasted with the old man's regrets on a life that has lost its savor, brings an honest approach to responsibilities which must be met by many young people these days. The frankness with which it is treated is healthy, clean and commendable.

The life on a university campus—any campus—is well depicted, and the visual and auditory accompaniments of technicolor and music add to the general pleasure.

In the business of life, Man is the only product. And there is only one direction in which man can possibly develop if he is to make a better living or yield a bigger dividend to himself, his race, to nature or to God. He must grow in knowledge, wisdom and understanding.—V. C. Kitchen.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

TO THE PARENTS OF OUR CHURCH.

By DR. L. E. SMITH.

Do you have a son or daughter ready for college? Have you selected a college for him or her as the case may be? Did you give your own church college, Elon College, a consideration? I trust that you did and that we shall have the joy of enrolling that fine son or daughter in January or September, 1949, as a member of our freshman class. If you are not planning to enter your son or daughter in your college, would you mind saying why? Is our college lacking in the essentials or non-essentials of modern education? If so, have you brought these deficiencies to the attention of the administration and the Board of Trustees? Have you done all that you could do, financially and otherwise, to make our college the kind of college to which you would like to have your son or daughter go for his or her education and from which you would like to have him or her graduate?

Elon College was founded by our church and has been supported, in part by our church. For what Elon College is today, the church is responsible. The church has made it. What Elon College shall be in the future shall be determined by you and me, the entire membership of our church in the South. Elon College is a good school today. It should be a better school tomorrow and it shall be with your help.

Elon College is operating on the semester system which means that students enter twice a year, September and January. Our Spring Semester begins January 24. We had a full school at the beginning of the school year in September. We have had some withdrawals, which is expected. There will be a number to complete requirements for graduation by the end of the present semester. There will, in all probability, be some failures. Let us hope not but we may be hoping against hope. At any rate, there will be room for about fifty new students when the Spring Semester begins. We have a number of applications for admission for the second semester, but if there are those from the homes of our churches who wish to enter Elon College for this semester, if they will apply immediately, we shall do our best to find room for them.

Sometimes we hear some of our own church people speak critically of the small number of our Congregational Christian Church young people in our own college. In comparison with the total number of students enrolled in Elon College, the number of our own church young people is small. But, also, when you compare the number of our own young people in Elon College with the number of our church young people enrolled in other colleges, the number still seems small. That is to say, if all the young people from the homes of our church would enroll in our own college, we would have more than twice the present enrollment. If this would happen, our whole church program would be strengthened immeasurably. It would do more than anything else to engender a spirit of loyalty and of confidence in our own church and its program than almost anything else that could happen. We should make this observation, that if we do not patronize our own college, how could we expect it ever to become the kind of college we would like for it to be and, further, how may we expect the general public to continue to patronize our college? It is admitted that at present we have far too few of our own church young people enrolled in Elon College, but ask yourself who is to blame. You could change the situation. Have you, my Brother Pastor and Brother and and Sister of our local church, done your best? If not, will you now exert your influence, express your preference, and do what you can to change this picture so that the homes of our churches may be more generally represented in the student body of our college than heretofore.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Four of the five conferences constituting the Southern Convention have already held their annual sessions. The North Carolina and Virginia Conference holds its annual session this week and will have met and adjourned before this copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN reaches its subscribers. At present we are $1,794.18 short of the goal set by the Convention for the college and apportioned to the churches through the conferences. With the almost unprecedented increase in the cost of everything that is required to run a college, it is hoped that the entire amount may be raised and sent to the college. With all other agencies of the church receiving their full apportionment and in many instances far beyond, it would seem that our people, knowing the value of the college, would put forth special efforts to see that this minimum support is given their college. The college is depending on our church and if the church does not give its support, it has no one else to whom it may turn. We are depending upon you.

All the wild ideas of unbalanced agitators the world over in their pitiable quest for happiness through revolution, confiscation of property and crime cannot overthrow the eternal truth that the one route to happiness through property or government is over the broad and open highway of service. And service always means industry, thrift, respect for authority and therecognition of the rights of others—W. G. Sibley.

PLEASED WITH THE ORPHANAGE.

As a new member of the Board of Trustees of the Christian Orphanage I have had the privilege of attending two of their meetings, and I wish to say that I was agreeably surprised at the excellent work that is being done for the orphan children of our constituency. I knew and admired Superintendent Johnston greatly before I came on the Board, but having had first-hand knowledge of his work, and having seen the orphanage in action has increased my appreciation of his work. Our Church has a great opportunity there, and if we all understood what is being accomplished, I am sure we should not have to make undue appeals for help. There is a piece of work that has taken the very best of a good man's years, and through his love and consecration to his Church and to little children, the orphanage has become a success of which we can all be proud. It would please me a great deal to see us rally to the call of our Superintendent, and to the need of our children, and go over the top this fall with the goal which has been set. May I add my word of appeal to churches, Sunday schools and individuals to remember the orphanage liberally.

J. P. CROSS,
Suffolk, Va.

IN BEHALF OF THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

As one who has been connected with this Institution in capacity of Trustee for all too many years, I want to say that it should command our most generous support. While I would make no comparison between this and other Christian endeavor, I think it can hardly be denied that the work of child-care, such as is afforded by our beloved children's home, should stand high in the distribution of our benevolences. There is no responsibility that surpasses that of child training; and we cannot escape it whether it be our own or foster children.

It must be remembered that our Communion long ago, now nearly fifty years, committed itself when we established this home, and as members of the Congregational Christian Churches we have a very definite obligation to give and give liberally for its support. And incidentally, we have there the same problem of high cost of living, without the advantage of unprecedented income, that confronts our membership, and its friends. There is no one of us who would fail to care for a child left on our doorstep—we just could not avoid that uninvited responsibility. Well, we have about one hundred children at the orphanage, who have been invited there to make their home, and they have no one to answer their cries but you and me.

If you could but read the roster of

"THE ORIGINAL"

The original orphanage building, known as the "Main Building." Completed in the year 1906. It opened its doors in 1907 for the admittance of the first inmate. The building has been recently thoroughly renovated and painted on the inside. This building is now in first-class condition and houses the orphan children, the "Baby Home" and "Johnston Hall," where young men and women reared in that home, who are now matching wits successfully with those we regarded as more fortunate children, you would feel rewarded for every dollar you have invested there. I sometime think we abuse money too much. As a matter of truth, earning money honestly and then giving generously are real Christian Graces, as I see it, and I do not think anything can afford us more pleasure. With most of us our giving is out of our abundance, and if that be true, then nothing can be easier.

All of this is to bring to your attention the Annual Thanksgiving Offering for the orphanage, and to ask that you make an especial effort to give a substantial contribution, and to induce others to do likewise. Our effort is to raise fifty thousand dollars this year, which is slightly more than we did last year. Our appeal is based on needs, and also as a tribute to our highly esteemed Superintendent, Mr.
 Charles D. Johnston. Will you join the many others in our church circle, and many who are identified with other Communion, but who appreciate the worth of this child-caring institution, in making a most generous offering in November at Thanksgiving time? I am confident that such aid will bear you grand dividends in well equipped men and women, who will render good service as members of our society — many of them as useful Christian workers. What could be more worthwhile?

A LETTER TO MR. JOHNSTON.

Fuquay Springs, N. C.,
 October 27, 1948.

Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, Supt.,
 Christian Orphanage,
 Elon College, N. C.
 Dear Sir & Brother:

Have thought of you lots of times since my last visit as I am more sure each time that you could get a much larger response to your appeal for help if you could induce a large per cent of the church and Sunday school membership to visit the orphanage and see first hand the happy and well-behaved children, the nice, clean buildings, and the home-like atmosphere that appears throughout the entire institution. Those who can recall the poor conditions that existed both financially and otherwise when you assumed control can better appreciate what you have accomplished. Wake Chapel Church membership hopes to make you happy when they send in their Thanksgiving Offering after the third Sunday in November.

Hoping that you will reach your goal, I remain,

Yours truly,
 W. J. BALLENTINE.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

ROOTS.

By DOUGLAS A. SMITH,
Bedford, England.

A quiet, friendly little man was looking wistfully over the rail of the ship Cavina, as she steamed past Newfoundland, on her voyage to Montreal from Liverpool in June, 1946.

"It's good to see the old land again," he said to a fellow traveler.

"Have you been away long?"

"Well, not so long, really, a year or more I guess. I have been over to England, to Kew Gardens, and many of the forests, studying roots."

"Roots?"

"Yes, roots. Most folk when thinking of trees think only of timber, and foliage. But I am interested in roots. You can't have timber nor foliage without roots you know, and they have to be in the right place, too. I have been searching for trees with roots that will stand a chance of survival on this rocky old land of ours. I am a forester employed by forestry people. When I see a piece of timber I can tell you if its roots were in the right place; the same as you can tell whether a certain person has had his roots in decent places, like a good home, a Sunday school, or church. Doesn't Ezekiel speak of a tree like this, 'This vine did bend her roots toward God?' So will anybody with a grain of sense.

Recently a London Church was repaired after suffering some damage. It was just a small church. Someone suggested that a really important person should be invited to open it.

"As the minister's wife," suggested a church member.

"Oh, no," interjected that good lady, "we must have an interested outsider."

"Ask the President of the London Council of Churches," said another.

"No, he won't do," commented a young man, "we want someone really important. Why not ask the Lord Mayor? Why I would be prepared to ask Queen Mary!"

"No, no, no!" said the church secretary, "I am not writing to the Queen. We could not ask such a thing for a small church like this."

"I'll do it then," said the young man, "if the meeting will give me permission."

Another meeting was held within a month. The young man was asked if there was news from the Queen.

"Yes," he replied, "and she is coming!"

Then the people were in a worse trouble than before. How did you welcome a real live Queen? They began to wish they had not asked someone quite so important after all. Someone suggested that on Her Majesty's arrival she should be escorted to the platform, and then presented with a bouquet. After much discussion it was decided that a boy from the Sunday school should present a bouquet. He was later told what to do, what to say—that only, no more, no less.

The great day arrived. Queen Mary went to the church as she had promised. After she had been escorted to the platform Jimmy moved forward with the bouquet. He bowed, and presented the flowers with a word of welcome.

Just as Jimmy turned to move away, Queen Mary stopped him, and spoke to him for a few moments. No one else could hear the conversation, but it was noticed that the Queen smiled, and patted Jimmy's hand as he left her.

Her Majesty opened the building, and after the service left for her home. It was then that Jimmy was besieged with questions—"What had the Queen said to him?" "What had he said to the Queen?"

This was the conversation:

Queen Mary, "These are beautiful flowers. Thank you so much. Do you like flowers?"

Jimmy, "Yes, thank you, Ma'am."

Queen Mary, "Have you a garden of your own?"

Jimmy, "A small one, thank you."

Queen Mary, "Did these flowers come from your garden; did you gather them?"

Jimmy, "No, Ma'am. They will die. If I had, I should have kept the roots on."

LOOKING UP TO FATHER.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Irene stood by the kitchen table watching her mother slice the ham. "Grace's father carves at the table," she announced. "He always cuts nice thin slices for us girls. But you never think Dad can do anything."

"Whatever gave you that idea?" answered Mrs. Turnbull. Then her eyes fell. "Here," she said, "carry this platter to the table. I'll dish the vegetables."

She was conscience-stricken. Without realizing it, she had shown the children that she felt superior to Ross, her husband! But why had she this feeling of superiority, she questioned, as she put the mashed potatoes into the vegetable dish.

She continued thinking. Her mother, who belonged to a prominent pioneer family, had always made the most of her husband's faculty position and of the opportunities for entertainment offered by their big house. As a result, she, their daughter, had become an acknowledged social leader in the town. Ross, on the other hand, had come to college from a nearby farm. Naturally, because of the lack of money and proper clothes, he had felt somewhat awkward and uncomfortable. But before long his keen mind and his many abilities had made him the president of the class and the captain of the football team. How soon he had become erect and confident! And directly after graduation he had, through his own efforts, obtained his present fine position as a commercial chemist.

"We were so happy after our marriage," she mused. "But Mother has never thought Ross good enough—she has always treated him as though he were an inferior. I suppose her attitude has influenced me."

Mrs. Turnbull was forced to admit to herself, too, that even the children had unconsciously accepted their grandmother's evaluation of their father and had been treating him with similar indifference.

When they sat down Mrs. Turnbull looked across the table at her husband—he had a defeated look. No wonder!—there had been no recent promotions. Could it be that she was to blame?

The next evening she was on the porch when Ross turned the corner. His listless air smote her. "Ah, there's Dad—run fast and surprise him!" she exclaimed.

The children dashed down the street. The father stopped—his face lighted—he threw out his arms to catch the flying children.

His wife met him at the door. "My, what a handsome man!" she said, and kissed him. Ross stood bewildered, then straightened up.

"Our daddy is nicer-looking than Grace's daddy," said Irene, looking proudly combative.

Mr. Turnbull's smile of evident amusement showed, also, genuine pleasure.

PARABLES IN THE BIBLE.

LESSON IX—NOVEMBER 28, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: No man ever spake like this man.—John 7:46.

LESSON: Isaiah 5:1-7; Matthew 13: 31-33, 44-46; Luke 10:25-27; 15: 3-32.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 13: 10-16, 51-52.

Everybody Loves Stories.

Children love stories. "Tell me a story" or "Tell me another story" are words frequently on the lips of children. And wise parents and Sunday school teachers will use stories in teaching, as well as in entertaining children. To be able to tell a story well, and have a generous supply of good stories to tell, is a must for good Sunday school teachers.

But grown folks like stories, too. They like to read them and they like to hear them told. And they like to see them acted out on the movie screen. The most popular magazines, and the largest sellers, are the magazines that feature stories, all kinds of stories. Stories have a universal appeal. They always have had. They always will have—mankind will never outgrow its love of stories.

Stories in the Bible.

Because the Bible is a book of Life, it was inevitable that it would be a book of stories. It is full of stories, all kinds of stories. The book of Ruth for instance is perhaps the greatest love story ever written. And many of the important truths of the Bible are embodied in stories. Thus they are more effective than simply abstract truth. When children ask for stories, they should be given some of the great stories from the Bible. Such a book as Hulbert's Story of the Bible or Bible stories is a treasure house of biblical stories put in understandable language. Fortunate indeed is that child who has heard again and again the stories of the Bible.

The Greatest Story Ever Told.

This is the theme, as I recall it of the series of broadcasts sponsored by a great industrial organization, and presented on Sunday nights over a national hook-up. It is the story of the life and activities of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is fitly named. The story of His life is the greatest story ever told. And the story of His life is for the most part told in story form.

That gives it its charm and power and appeal.

The Greatest Story-Teller.

Jesus was the greatest story-teller who ever lived. John was right, "never man spake like this man"—thus he reports the words of those who had been sent to take Jesus, but who were amazed at His words, and forgot their errand. He used the story again and again in His teaching and preaching. Indeed in one place it is stated that without a parable (a story) he did not speak. The reason is clear and simple. One picture is worth a thousand words, and at its best a story is a picture, at least Jesus' stories were vivid pictures. Truth put in story form sticks in the memory. It gets the attention and long after an abstract truth has been forgotten, a story with its moral will be fresh in the mind. Jesus used stories, and He was a master at story-telling.

Some of His Stories.

Some of Jesus' stories are given as the background for this lesson. They are striking examples of the purpose of a story, and of Jesus' power as a story-teller. For instance here was a group of ordinary men and women gathered to hear the Great Teacher. He wanted them to know about the Kingdom of God. But that phrase was to them vague and indefinite. It needed to be put in terms that they could understand. So Jesus told some stories, or parables, prefacing them with the words, "The Kingdom of heaven is like. . ."

The Kingdom of heaven is like unto a grain of mustard seed . . . which is less than all seeds, but when it is grown it is greater than the herbs and becometh a tree. . . . It was a dramatic way of saying that even from the smallest beginnings, in an individual life, or in society, the Kingdom of God can develop and grow and assume great proportions. And how this truth was verified in the Christian movement itself. Beginning with Jesus Himself, and the small band of twelve men, one of whom betrayed Him, it has grown into a world-wide movement, and its influence on modern life is incalculable.

Or again, Jesus takes such a simple thing as a woman making bread, and uses it to illustrate how the Kingdom works. "Have you ever seen a woman take a batch of dough and put a little yeast into it?" said Jesus. "And you have seen how that little bit of yeast works silently and persistently until that big batch of dough is thoroughly leavened, haven't you?" Well that is the way with the Kingdom. It is a new spirit introduced into life and silently, persistently it goes on working until in due time it changes the whole life.

Then there was the matter of the supreme importance of the Kingdom, its worth as compared with other things. How was He to make that clear? Well, He used two simple stories or incidents which he put in story form to drive home this truth. In one instance he told a story of a man who was ploughing in a field, when the plow turned up a rich treasure which had been buried there, for safe-keeping, as was the custom in those days. In his joy the man sold all that he had in order that he might buy the field and thus possess the treasure. In the other instance he told the story of a man who had looked long and eagerly for a great and goodly pearl (this was more highly regarded in Jesus' day than a diamond). One day he saw the answer to his dream—a pearl of great price. He, too, went and sold all that he had so that he might buy that pearl. Jesus did not have to add the moral—it stuck right out in the faces of His hearers. The Kingdom is life's supreme value. It is worth more than anything else. By the way, although the parables emphasize the same point there is a difference between them. In the first story, the man stumbles upon the great treasure; in the second story he finds it after diligent search. Thus do men find Christ and the Kingdom.

A fellow once asked Jesus a tough question. "Who is my neighbor?" asked the lawyer. Instead of giving an abstract answer, Jesus simply told a story, the familiar and immortal story of the Good Samaritan. It was the answer to the question. When Jesus had finished and asked the man which of the three men on the Jericho road was neighbor to him that fell among thieves, the man immediately knew the answer. And from that day to this, the word neighbor has had new meaning.

And finally there are the three stories as told by Jesus, in Luke's gospel, designed to meet the objections of the supercilious and self-righteous scribes and Pharisees who were taking Jesus to task for having fellowship with publicans and sinners. The Lost Coin, The Lost Sheep and The Lost Son—there they are in their simplicity and

A LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

Shaowu Christian Hospital,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
September 24, 1948.

DEAR FRIENDS OF THE
SOUTHERN CONVENTION:

If you will excuse the paper and the typing mistakes, I think I will attempt another direct letter, instead of relying on the system of having it mimeographed in Boston and sent out from there. This time, as well as with my last letter two months ago, I have a trip to report; and while I did not range as far this time, or do any thing quite as exciting as getting married, still it was a very interesting and worthwhile excursion into the North Fukien back country. For instance I got to see the entire process of manufacturing of the kind of paper this letter is typed on, all made from bamboo fibers by hand, with wooden and bamboo machinery; so that instead of apologizing for using this paper, I am a little bit proud of it, because, although not as good as American-made, the process shows a considerable degree of skill and ingenuity, and a good product is put out with the materials at hand.

But to go back a bit: After my last letter, in which I reported a very exciting two-month honeymoon trip to North China, Frances and I settled down to what we supposed would be a rather humdrum routine of hospital work for the next few months, at least till the Jacksons got back in September or October with their new son, and with Miss Burr, fresh back from America. But I am learning that there is never a dull moment in Shaowu. I am not referring particularly now to the strictly medical business. Patients during the past two months, while very interesting, were not very numerous and did not keep us excessively busy except for short spurts.

The most serious and dramatic ones were a series of severe anemias, most of them the result of severe malaria, and several of them in pregnant mothers, complicating childbirth and constituting a serious threat to the life of the mother and child because of the severity of the anemia. In America this would be no problem at all, because of the availability of blood transfusions; but the Shaowu people are scared to death at the idea of parting with any of their blood, even to save the life of a loved one; and even the offer to use American funds to pay professional donors a sum which would be the equivalent of half a month's or a month's salary brought no response!

The principal excitement, however, was not strictly medical but pertaining to hospital administration. We had not been back at work long before we began to realize how seriously the rapid deterioration of the economic situation in China was affecting the hospital staff, all of whom have to depend on patients' fees for their salaries and livelihood. Because of the inflation the prices of the necessities of life were rising with dizzying speed, but charges to the patients could not keep pace, because most people in the community would rather go without medical care than spend what they consider an excessive amount of money for it, even though the costs of other things are in proportion. Even with the low fees, hospital business dropped way off and the total earnings became ridiculously inadequate to support even a small proportion of our staff. There didn't seem to be any hope of alleviation of this situation in the near future, because the character of the government and the progress of the civil war and the international situation did not give any hope that the inflation would be overcome, and I had already discovered that the Chinese consider it impossible to reduce the size of the staff of an organization which is too large for the amount of business, because it is against their ancient rules of courtesy and personal relationships to deprive a friend of employment, once having promised it to him. They would rather pay everyone starvation wages and have the whole "family" stand or fall together than support a smaller staff decently and put the rest out of a job. The Superintendent, Dr. Chu, didn't see any way out of the dilemma, and deciding, also in typical Chinese fashion, that the troubles of the hospital were technically his fault, and also feeling that his own salary was too small to be fair to his own family, he threatened to resign the first of October. Since, if he did so and if the hospital financial troubles were not solved by then our surgeon would also undoubtedly quit, that would leave me as the Superintendent and only doctor, I was considerably upset by this turn of events. I was advocating reducing the size of the staff, but not at the expense of the doctors, and I didn't want the Chinese to walk out on me, leaving me holding the bag, so that the hospital would hereafter be considered a foreign institution and stand or fall on my efforts alone. I had already been disappointed in that the wealthier members of the local community were not responding to appeals to help the hospital financially as we would expect them to do in America. But in other ways this hospital was developing as a typical Chinese institution, and the Chinese staff were considering it as their own, and not as something foreign imposed from the outside, and I didn't want them to lose that feeling by having the superintendent quit on me and leave me in administrative charge.

The issue was finally settled in a typically Chinese compromise. The hospital board, after having failed to take any constructive helpful action for months, finally, the end of August, met and elected me as vice-superintendent, with almost equal standing with Dr. Chu, and gave the two of us blanket authorization to do the very un-Chinese action of firing as many of the staff as we pleased in order to reduce the scope of the hospital to fit our income. This seems very obvious and routine in America, but it was quite an achievement here. So Dr. Chu and I got together and worked out a definite budget, for the first time since the hospital was opened, agreeing to cut the staff down to the size that could be supported, with decent salaries, by donations from churches and individuals in America, which could be counted on and would be independent of the deterioration of value of Chinese money. Then all earnings from operation of the hospital would be used, each in its separate classification, to pay for the actual running expenses of the hospital exclusive of salaries, and for the purchase of medicines, food, fuel, etc., as actually needed and used. Frances and I also decided that in the future, if we wanted to use money for any improvement in medical or nursing standards which the hospital couldn't afford out of its current earnings, we

CHURCH WOMEN MEET IN MILWAUKEE.

The Biennial Assembly of the United Council of Church Women meets in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, this week—November 15-18. Southern Convention women should be proud to have three of their own members to go and represent our denomination. Mrs. Robert L. House goes to represent the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference and the Richmond, Virginia, Council of Church Women. Mrs. M. T. Garren goes representing the Greensboro Council of Church Women. Mrs. F. C. Lester is going as a representative of the North Carolina Woman's Conference. Let us remember our representatives as they make this trip and pray that they will make good delegates. It is fine to send our leaders to this important conference—where women from across the United States, representing all denominations, will meet and work together for the future of the World Church.

Among the speakers will be several persons who attended the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam this summer. Dr. Henry P. Van Dusen will speak on "Amsterdam and the Future of the World Church." Mrs. Harper Sibley, President of the United Council, will deliver the closing address on "And Here We Offer and Present Unto Thee, O Lord, Ourselves." Others appearing on the program are: Dr. Georgia Harkness, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, Mr. Henry Luce, Mrs. J. D. Bragg and Dr. John A. Mackay.

Why do church women go to the Assembly at Milwaukee? For many reasons: To demonstrate spiritual unity with other Christian women; to add another voice to a united Christian voice; to seek encouragement and to hearten other Christians; to help set up Christian standards to which we can dedicate our service; to receive religious experience; to wait with other Christian women for God's power and God's leading; to accept our share of the responsibilities resting on all Christians; to look at the world problems from a Christian point of view with other Christian women and to seek to possess the breadth of vision and the spiritual insight to help meet these problems.

The Assembly of the United Council of Church Women is open to all church women. Those of us who cannot go can think about it and pray for its success. When our leaders return, we can hear them and learn what some of our responsibilities are as Christians in the World Church.

MRS. LEVERING OF CARROLL COUNTY.

Mrs. Samuel Levering of Ararat, Virginia, spoke to the Greensboro Council of Church Women on their World Community Day on the theme for the day, "Peace Is My Responsibility." Mrs. Levering is well acquainted with our work in the Carroll County churches and recently showed the Wissemans around up there. Mrs. Levering has an interesting article in the October issue of the Church Woman entitled "World Government, Why Not?" Get a copy and read it. Mrs. Levering and her husband are both ardent World Federalists and believe that we can have peace and avoid war by having a World Government based on strengthening the United Nations. They have been doing quite a lot of good work in their community, having taken several car loads of people to Washington to appear in Congress in behalf of World Government to insure peace and avoid war.

would finance it out of our own pockets; in the past, whenever we made such a request, the money in effect would come from the pockets of the staff because it would be money which would otherwise have been used to pay them more adequate salaries; so, especially when they did not see the reason for the improvement, they would often show considerable resistance or opposition to our suggestions.

All these reforms are to take place beginning the first of October. We are awfully sorry to have had to let some very fine nurses go, as well as faithful members of the business staff, and not to take on a new class of nursing students this year. The load on each remaining member of the staff will be much heavier, but we figure that the improvement of morale, which had descended to intolerable lows, would result in such increased efficiency that the smaller staff would be able to put out as much work as the former larger number, when each one could count on a fair salary and dependable income, month after month. Thus the gifts from America, representing the stable dependable American money, will be able to give the hospital the necessary boost that will mean so much here where the money situation has gone to pieces so, and at present could not possibly be used to any more worthwhile advantage.

Scarcely had all these new plans been completed than the Chinese government suddenly announced the new currency reform, with a new kind of money, price ceilings, and promise of better economic sailing ahead for the whole country. Although we have scarcely seen any of the new money here as yet, and although there is as much trouble already with price controls as there was in America during the war, still, for the present, prices are lower and the situation definitely looks brighter, thus contributing to the increased morale in the hospital.

So, after a rather rough summer from the hospital administration and morale standpoint, we face brighter days ahead. Meanwhile Fran & I have been feeling more and more that our program should not be limited to the curing of disease in the hospital; that the challenge of preventive medicine and health education was too great to be ignored and that we would have to get outside the hospital to meet it. Our prolonged spring trip, and the summer vacations of the schools, delayed some of the projects we had in mind several months ago. But last month Dr. Chu and I used UNRRA materials and equipment to spray with DDT the inside walls of every room of every house in a small village outside of town as a demonstration project in its usefulness in killing mosquitoes to prevent malaria, the greatest scourge of the countryside. Also the wife of a theological student arrived here from Kienning, a small town way out in the country, to start an intensive course in midwifery and public health practical nursing under Fran with the idea that she could work with her husband in whatever small country pastorate he is assigned to after completing his training, and bring some of the advantages of better health methods for mothers and children than they have known before. She is an unusually bright and willing girl, and a tremendous help to Fran in her work here, in addition to learning fast what Fran has to

AMERICAN BOARD SENDS NEW MISSIONARY TO AFRICA.

Miss Corinne M. Nordquest has been appointed as a career religious and social work missionary in South Africa by the American Board. Miss Nordquest hopes to sail for her new post in Johannesburg as soon as transportation plans have been completed—probably within a month.

A graduate of Schauffler College, Cleveland, Ohio (BS 1944), Miss Nordquest served as Director of Religious Education in the First Congregational Church of Hyde Park, Mass., from 1944 to December, 1947. From February to June of 1948 she held the same post in the First Congregational Church of Auburndale, Mass., and at the same time took graduate work at Andover-Newton Theological Seminary. While in New England she has been making her home at 479 Huntington Avenue, Hyde Park, Mass.

Born in Ashtabula, Ohio, Miss Nordquest, while a student at Schauffler College in Cleveland, was active in children's work at the Congregational Church in Hudson, Ohio; sang in the Schauffler choir; was Superintendent of Sunday schools in Brookline Village (Cleveland); and worked at Hiram House in Cleveland.

"As far back as I can remember, I have been interested in people of other countries and in the work of missionaries," says Miss Nordquest. "The hope for a world of peace lies in the permeation of all of life with Christian standards and ideals. The supreme need in our world today is for more people with Christ-like character. I would like to have an active part in the great missionary enterprise of bringing the gospel of life, love and joy to millions who so earnestly seek it and desperately need it."

teach her, so we are quite pleased with the find. This fall, Fran will open two well-baby clinics in parts of town remote from the hospital, do school nursing in two church-supported schools, and perhaps start "Mothers' Classes," in addition to continuing her midwifery service. In order to have time for all that she has decided to resign completely from work and responsibility in connection with hospital nursing and the nursing school, leaving that to the Chinese nurses with whom she had already worked for several months last year.

Finally there is the challenge of the country villages, remote from Shao-wu, but still in our "territory." So when Dick Jackson left his Kuliang vacation spot near Foochow the middle of August to come up here and then to Kianning, the town our midwifery student came from, to help run a one-week Laymen's Training Conference in religious matters, Fran and I accepted the invitation to go along and put in our two cents worth for health education. So at the end of last month we started out again, with Dick and a Chinese Church worker, on another walking trip similar to the one we were on last fall. But this was the first time for Fran. The weather was hot so we didn't walk too fast, and took four days to cover the seventy miles to Kianning, thru gorgeous mountain scenery. The conference was interesting, and the experience gained in the attempt was valuable to us in planning future attempts at the same. We gave talks, and we hung health posters which we had picked up during our travels in the north last spring. But Dick had along a portable generator and projector and showed slides and film strips, and all we had on visual education was one solitary film strip on the life cycle of the mosquito. From the attendance and audience response to this method of education we wished heartily that we had been able to get more suitable material on health education; that is certainly the ideal technique to use.

From Kianning Dick went down by boat directly to Foochow, to collect his wife and baby and Miss Burr and bring them back up to Shaowu for the grand reunion and homecoming for our Mission. Fran and I had intended to walk back the way we had come, but at the last minute yielded to the temptation to prolong our trip with a detour to Tsianglo, where Dick and I had gone last year. But this time we went down there by boat, thru canyons of breathtaking beauty, past exciting rapids, and including the thrill of shooting rapids by moonlight. We saw the famous cave at Tsianglo, then started back toward Shaowu, walking directly over the mountains. The mountain scenery was the most beautiful we have seen yet; Fran had acquired her walking legs by now and made thirty miles in one day, all uphill. We stopped over one day on Erh Shih Tu, the former summer resort of the Shaowu Mission, only one day's walk from the city, but so high that there is always a cool breeze or cold wind. It was there that we saw the paper-making industry, and were entertained in the home of a family with twenty-six members; there, also, although most of the old foreign summer cottages were in ruins, we saw the well-preserved grave of my great-uncle, Charlie Riggs, who died there in 1925 while visiting his son who was working in Shaowu at that time.

We were gone almost three weeks, and covered 130 miles by foot over rough mountain trails. (This latter feat by Frances quite impressed the Chinese, because it seemed that in the old days the missionary women usually made such tours by Sedan-chair!) Now we are about to settle down again, to work and to an uneventful (?) fall season ahead. At the moment we are engaged in the delightful and thrilling experience of moving into our new and first home, and have been given a week's extension of leave of absence from the hospital for that purpose. During the summer we selected a house across the street from the hospital, originally built by the Mission but along Chinese lines and occupied most of the time by Chinese Church workers. Like all other structures in Shaowu it needed quite a bit of repair work, and house-repairing is slow business in Shaowu these days. So during all that time we lived in a room in the hospital, the one occupied by the Jacksons the first two or three weeks they were in Shaowu last year, waiting for their home to be fixed up, and lived in twenty years before that by Dr. Judd, while he was running this hospital. But when we came back from our trip we found the work on our home far enough along so that we could move in. The walls are being papered now, as I write this, and we still lack a lot of ordinary household equipment; but at least we are here and starting on our own, and it is a big thrill. Fran has a woman to do the cooking and housework for us, and is teaching her how to make foreign breakfasts, although our other two meals will be Chinese. We have a Chinese-style reception hall, a living room bedroom for ourselves, a bedroom for the servant and one for guests, and a general storage and utility room. Oh yes, and a dining room, and a Chinese-type kitchen shed in back. There are lots of trees all around the tiny house, and a tiny front yard where we will have a vegetable garden. I have to pinch myself all the time, because I never expected anything like this would happen to me!

Best regards to all,

ED RIGGS.

AFRICA IN THE WORLD CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

missions carried virtually alone for a century the burden of public education in all Africa south of the Sahara, and that they still carry 85 per cent of the educational load. It is not for nothing that the Christian enterprise for three generations was the principal interpreter of Africa and its people to the nations of Europe and North America.

But the church and its missions, in Africa and outside, have so far failed in living their Christian principles as to bring Christianity to its greatest crisis in Africa.

History testifies that true Christianity can never do too much but that frequently, in its 2,000 years, it has not done enough. That is so in Africa. It has begun, and done well—better than any other power at work in Africa. But it has not done enough.

Christianity preached but not practiced means fission, human fission, the most dangerous thing in the world. Christians' failures to practice and live Christianity to the full have armed the Godless ideologies of our day with pirated ideals of which they blatantly promise immediate, certain and exclusive fulfillment. Those promises are being made to Africans of every group, and are attracting many. But those promises are impossible of fulfillment by those thus making them.

The personal and collective actions of too many North Americans and Europeans in their racial, economic and political relations belie their Christian principles, deny the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. That basic need of Africa and the world, Christian Community, can never be met by such denial in Christian living.

The Christian Advance Program is the most serious collective Africa planning ever done by Christians. Its support and execution can make all the difference between Christianity's regression in Africa, and its winning the hearts and undefeatable loyalty of great masses of African people—African Christians, prophets and practitioners of a great new age in Africa and the world; the age of Christian Community.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

"I'm nice-looking like Daddy," piped Sonnie as he extended his chest and marched beside his father.

Mother, looking at them all with a new understanding, only said, "Dinner is ready. How about hands?"

The roast was at Father's place. The children looked at Mother inquiringly.

She answered casually, "After Dad carves he'll tell us how his college won that last game of the season when he was captain of the football team."

The man's face flushed with pride, but he lifted the carving knife hesitatingly, looking at his wife. "But—maybe I won't—"

"It needs the steel," she interrupted. "You always sharpen my knives better than anyone else."

Reassured, he picked up the steel and whetted the knife with a flourish.

Irene regarded her father with shining eyes. So he had really been captain of the football team—they had never known that—she would ask him to cut her meat very thin.

And Mrs. Turnbull, noting Irene's adoration, resolved that this beginning should be diligently followed up—that Ross, from now on, should be paid the deference due him as father of the family.

power. They tell us more of God's care and concern for the individual than some folks could tell us in a whole book. And they tell it in such a simple, compelling way that even children can understand it.

No wonder the common people heard Jesus gladly. He spoke to them in parables or stories or word pictures. He used words that they understood. He talked about things with which they were familiar. He clothed his truth in living characters and in simple incidents and things, and it came alive. We call Him Master and we do well, for so He is. He stands supreme as a story-teller.

SOME RECOVERIES.

III.

We are justified, again, in claiming that there is a recovery of balanced education. For a time the demand for an educational method meant, with some timid souls, that moral passion was not to be given its chance. One of our colleges used "Ten Nights in a Barrom" for an evening of burlesque. The lines of the song:

Father, dear father, come home to us now,
The clock in the steeple strikes one;

were classified as a joke; while in moving pictures, occasionally, the staggering drunkard was offered as a spectacle of merriment. More and more solid sentiment asserts itself against such a silly trifling with the life of a people. Our educational program is dealing more passionately with the incalculable loss brought to personal, domestic and national life by our alcoholic spree.

The return of the Crusaders is a slow process; but there is a sound of going amid the mulberry trees. The combined influence of mind and heart wrought mightily in our former victories. The anti-liquor forces in those old conquests achieved an alliance of education and agitation. Benjamin Rush was a preceding partner of Lyman Beecher. The whisky makers smiled when Frances E. Willard and her allies secured temperance instruction in the schools of our states and territories. Doubtless the teaching was not always ideal; but the scholars were taught, however superficially, that alcohol affected every inch of the body, moved on to "addle" the brain, and left a rudderless ship to the mercy of winds and rocks. The women of the Crusades were intelligent; they were also tearful. Their wise speech and their ardent prayers converted many saloons into altars of reformation.

IV.

There is a fourth form of recovery—in the church itself. The recruits for a renewed campaign must be gathered in large measure from the ranks of those who believe vitally in Christ. Many politicians have forsaken us, "having loved this present world" of cocktails, and having, as Emerson stated it, cared more for the next election than for the next generation. Some of these show signs of returning to the fold as sheepish converts. The boycott, represented by the ballot box, is beginning to assert itself. A persuasive sound among the rustling papers of the voting booths grows more distinct. Recently in a State election, a decisive factor was the alliance of one candidate with the leader of the liquor forces. Over the nation the defeat was ascribed wholly to another cause. But the knowing ones foretold what would happen to a candidate with a liquor front; and in the days following the election the advocates of beer and wine and hard liquor began to conceal steins and glasses and kegs behind heavier curtains.

Of course, the goal is not yet reached. It lies over there beyond the hopeful horizon. But there are streaks of light that prophesy the dawn of a new day. The doctrine of "the final perseverance of the saints" has its application in our reforms. So we can proclaim to our foes in the liquor groups that the faithful remnant gathers its recruits and marches on, and will not stop until our enemy's black flag is pulled from its false height.

HE TOOK OVER IN A CRISIS

When the writer was a lad of fourteen or fifteen years living at Elon College, there was an election in Alamance County. And this lad was much interested in that election for his "Uncle John" was running for re-election on the Democratic ticket as Clerk of the Superior Court, and the Republicans were threatening to sweep the county—and they almost did. However "Uncle John" squeezed through. I think he held the job altogether for about a quarter-century. But, if one remembers correctly, there was a young man on the ticket who didn't just squeeze through—it was Register of Deeds Charles D. Johnston. He just led the ticket—that's all!

About that same time, the plans for a Christian Orphanage had developed to the point of becoming a reality—the first building was being built at Elon College. This building was completed, and several different people served for short times as orphanage superintendents. Then came the crisis. Something had to be done. I do not know who thought of this "politician" who had been able to lead his ticket in a crisis, but someone did. And they persuaded him to lead another ticket in another crisis. Since that time he has given his time, his talent, his very life to the work of this institution which belongs to your church and mine.

Now, Mr. Johnston has asked me to say something about the Orphanage and its needs. There is little that needs saying, for his example speaks louder than anything one could say. We know that he has sacrificed that the little children of the orphanage might become useful men and women. We know that he has wisely used the material resources which we and others have placed at his disposal. We know that to deny these orphan children the means necessary for their development, would make him unhappy and should make us very unhappy, too. So let us climb to the top of his metaphorical ladder during this Thanksgiving period. Let's be sure that the fiftieth rung is reached.

You, Mr. Pastor, you, Mr. Superintendent, you teachers in the Sunday school, you scholars, let's all get together and see that the job is done. Make this Thanksgiving the greatest ever for "Uncle Charlie" and his children.

Prayer for Music Sunday

By RALPH C. WADDELL

Eternal Melodist, whose Presence is the Music of the Universe, we thank Thee for this singing world. We praise Thee for the laughter of the streams, the crash and splash of waterfalls, the organ music of the mighty breakers of the sea, the songs of birds, the hum of bees, the mystic silent music of the spheres—for the rhythm and melody of life.

We praise Thee for the deeper melodies, the silent melodies of the human hearts: for joy in the laughter of little children; for the visions and high ideals of youth; for the courage and devotion of those who bear the burden and heat of the day; and for the dreams and expectations of those who walk life's western slope towards the sunset sun.

We thank Thee for all the harmonies of love: for the bonds of affection that unite us in home and family; for the love of true mates, a glorious ecstasy in its beginning, ripening and deepening through the years in loyal comradeship; for the love of friends, by which our souls are enriched and our lives made beautiful.

We would pray this day for all our loved ones. May the Divine Presence support and sustain them in every experience, whether of joy or of sorrow, victory or defeat; and may the music and the joy of this hour reach them across the lands and across the seas, giving them a lift of soul and a new assurance of spiritual significance in a fellowship of love.

We pray Thee that out of the conflict and discords of the present time may there come a new world harmony, a new world symphony in which all nations shall have a part. May our ears be attuned to catch the song of the angels, "Peace on Earth, Good Will toward Men." Above all the din of battle may we listen also for "the still sad music of humanity, not harsh nor grating, though of ample power to chasten and subdue." May we help to make that music more joyous and triumphant till the whole world send back the song which now the angels sing, and Thy sun, rejoicing, shed its light upon a holy brotherhood of peoples.

Forgive us for the discords of our individual lives. Cleanse our hearts of weariness and fear. Grant us even now a new beginning of life, and hope, and love, that we may sing, as it were, a new song. Amen.

THE SINGING BIBLE.

A new idea, combining music with the Bible has just been developed by the Singing Bible Society. With the cooperation of an advisory board of leading churchmen, the society is producing recordings of great Biblical passages in song.

These recordings are for all interested in greater appreciation and understanding of the Bible. New music has been especially written for the purpose by well known composers and the words sung are actual words of the Bible, without deletion or variation.

The records, with a Biblical passage on each side, are being issued one each month on subscription. In the home, they are an aid to making the Bible a close part of family life. Also, these records are most suitable for Sunday schools, Bible classes, institutions and churches which have no choirs.

The music is simple and melodic for greater enjoyment by everyone—

FOUR MINISTERS OBSERVE 25TH ORDINATION ANNIVERSARY.

Rev. Archie H. Hook, D. D., Washington; Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, D. D., Elon College, North Carolina; Rev. Wm. T. Scott, D. D., Elon College, North Carolina; and Rev. Sion M. Lynam, Freehold, New York, observed the 25th anniversary of their ordination to the Christian ministry on November 16, 1948. These ministers were ordained at the session of the North Carolina-Virginia Conference held at Bethlehem Christian Church, Alamance County, North Carolina, November 15-16, 1923. The ordaining presbytery consisted of Dr. C. H. Rowland, Conference President; Dr. W. S. Long, first president of Elon College; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary of the Southern Convention; Dr. N. G. Newman, then pastor of the Elon College Community Church.

Dr. Hook served for a number of years in the Southern Convention following which he studied at Yale Divinity School and for twelve years served as pastor of the Congregational Christian Church of Troy, Ohio. Three years ago he became superintendent of the Congregational Christian Conference of the State of Washington.

Dr. Dollar, after graduating from Elon, studied at Vanderbilt University, taught at Southern Union and Birmingham Southern Colleges, Alabama, served as pastor in Reidsville, North Carolina, LaGrange, Georgia, and Newport News, Virginia. He came to Elon College as pastor of the Community Church two years ago.

Mr. Lynam, after graduating from Elon College, taught at Southern Union College, Alabama, served a Christian Church in Canada for five years and for the past twenty years has been pastor of the Congregational Christian Church in Freehold, New York. He has been active in the work of the churches and holds responsible positions in the Conference of the State of New York.

Dr. Scott, after graduating from Elon College, attended Yale Divinity School and served churches in Dayton, Ohio, Salisbury and Winston-Salem, North Carolina. For seven years he was Superintendent of the Congregational Christian Churches of the Southeast with offices in Jacksonville, Florida. He returned to the pastorate in 1943, serving our church in Franklin, Virginia. In 1946 he became Superintendent of the Southern Convention with headquarters at Elon College.

Prophet of the People's Praise

By ROLLAND G. EWING.

The Hymn Society of America has the cooperation of the Federal Council of Churches in suggesting that special attention be given in our churches this fall to the bicentennial of Isaac Watts. Undoubtedly too few of our Protestant people, even among the clergy, are aware of the truly prophetic part that Isaac Watts played in the development of Protestant worship. He has been called "the father of English hymnody." The pioneering work which he did in furtherance of truly congregational singing, should earn for him the far more significant title, "the prophet of the people's praise."

The facts of his life are not especially notable. He was born in Southampton, England, in 1674, about fifty years after the Pilgrims landed on our shores. He was the son of dissenter parents. His father, a layman, was impressed under Charles II because of his non-conformist views. Isaac Watts was educated at a non-conformist academy in Stoke Newington, London. After tutoring for a year or two, he became assistant pastor and then pastor of the Independent Chapel at Mark Lane, London. Ill health prompted his resignation from this post after some years. He was invited to pay a visit at the country estate of his friend, the former mayor of London. He went for a week and stayed thirty-nine years. It was here that he did his great work. He wrote learned treatises on logic, astronomy, geography and theology, all of which have long since been outdated. His enduring work was the writing of hymns. He wrote over seven hundred in his lifetime. He died on November 25, 1748, at the age of seventy-four.

In order to appreciate fully his part in the development of Protestant worship, one must realize something of the history of worship up to his day. Roman Catholic worship of the Middle ages had little or no place for the participation of the people. It was entirely in the hands of priests and choirs. They performed the act of praise on behalf of the people. The Protestant Reformation, which had occurred about two hundred years before Watts flourished, has as one of its basic tenets, "the priesthood of all believers." By this principle there was greater emphasis on the responsibility of individual Christians. They must answer for themselves before God. No other person, no matter how clothed with ecclesiastical authority could answer for them nor take from them their own inescapable personal responsibility before God.

This new point of view was reflected almost immediately in the innovations which the reformers suggested in public worship. Both Luther and Calvin emphasized participation of the people, especially in congregational singing. It was fully in the spirit of one of the great Psalms:

Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye peoples.

Serve the Lord with gladness,
Come before his presence with singing,
Enter into his gates with thanksgiving,
And into his courts with praise.

As a matter of fact, the most immediate and obvious source from which to meet the need for congregational praise, was the Psalms. Luther did more with hymns than Calvin did. His hymn, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," is evidence enough of his interest in this matter. John Calvin was fearfully afraid of ornamentation in worship lest it become a distraction and even an end in itself. He ruled sternly against the use of an instrument of any sort.

The Reformation was very much a Bible-centered movement, and that made it the more natural that Protestants should so long depend almost exclusively on the Psalms and some other Biblical material for use in public worship. The words were sometimes used in a chant. But as time went on, metrical versions of the Psalms became standard practice, and there were many versions rendered in the effort to get singable forms which would adequately express the people's adoration of God. In the absence of an instrument, it became the custom

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

ABSTEMIOUS THANKSGIVING.

The problem of the English diet, we are told, is one of "standing in endless queues, of making ration coupons cover the period for which they are intended and, above all, of getting some variety into the daily diet. It's the deadly monotony of the average English menu that makes it so devastating." This general condition, with varying extremities, has prevailed for nine weary years.

We know the conditions are even less favorable in many other lands. Here in our land of plenty it is difficult for us to comprehend the widespread deprivation throughout God's world. Rationing is only a memory for us. And even in war time there was food to ration.

Ponder these words from the Women's Thanksgiving Service: "How thankful, indeed, would the world's hungry and disease-ridden people be if they could experience our plenty. Perhaps before we dare come into the presence of God to thank him, we should do more to alleviate their suffering."

An imaginative, sympathetic, abstemious, vicarious, Christlike Thanksgiving in America could release untold resources for God's destitute children in other lands. "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother hath need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" . . . "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye give them not these things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?"

THE ISAAC WATTS BICENTENNIAL.

More than two hundred years ago a young man returning from church complained to his father about the hymns they had just been singing.

"If you don't like them, perhaps you could write better ones," suggested his parent.

Perhaps he could, indeed! Isaac Watts accepted his father's challenge, and wrote his first hymn at the age of 18. At his death he had composed 600 songs of worship.

The year 1948 brings the 200th anniversary of the death of Isaac Watts, the famous hymn writer. Watts died on November 25, 1748, in his 75th year. This occasion provides a natural opportunity for a special issue devoted to sacred music.

In recognition of Dr. Watts' great contribution to modern church music, the Hymn Society of America has declared 1948 as "Watts Year." Religious, choral and historical groups are planning hymn festivals and exhibits in his honor. It is especially fitting that the Congregational Christian Churches should participate in this anniversary, since Dr. Watts was a notable figure in English Congregationalism. Perhaps some of our people do not realize the contribution of Congregationalism to modern hymnody. After 200 years, it would seem that another popular exponent (in the best sense of that word) of sacred music is overdue in our midst.

ORCHIDS TO THE ORGANISTS.

Scattered across our great country in every city and town, and in the countryside, are multiplied servants of Christ who preside each Lord's Day at the console of an organ. Add to this number an approximately equal number who play the piano at Sunday school, church and some auxiliary meetings. With deft and devoted fingers they lay the melodic foundation for the praise of Almighty God.

The great majority of these keyboard artists serve without financial remuneration. Their services, collectively if not individually, are indispensable. How could we pay them adequately for their services? Of course, some of these under-trained or outmoded performers leave a wee-bit to be desired, but their total contribution is impressive!

This vast multitude whom no man can number, coming up out of many localities, nationalities and denominations will certainly form one of the largest contingents in the ranks of the redeemed.

One of the least things that could be done for this unselfish army of melody makers would be to provide them with adequate and accurately tuned instruments. Where salaries are unknown or unthinkable, a new or improved instrument would make practice more tolerable and playing less like work. Surely this is one kind of compensation which should not be overlooked or withheld.

THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Strange as it may seem the choir has been called the war department of the church. What an indictment! The appellation is not without justification in many instances. Jealousy, vanity, conceit and competition flourish in many choir lofts. This lofty position does not preclude the spread of selfishness. It is tragically true that there are soloists who sing not for the glory of God, but for the personal gratification and prestige which it affords. The clash of temperamental personalities, the human tendency to take sides, the augmentation of trivialities, the "hanger-on" and the "die-hard" have all contributed to the unenviable and lamentable description, "the war department of the church."

Some of this ferment and belligerency is quite understandable. Most musicians have marked convictions. Some have had their musical aspirations greatly inflated by patronizing teachers. People come into any given church from a variety of backgrounds and schools of thought. Musical fads which help one church may may not only hinder but do actual violence to another. So there are many opportunities for frustration and friction.

And yet this well known description and condition is a sad commentary on the church choir. Just as the minister upholds the Priestly tradition of the church, just so the choir perpetuates that of the Levites. Both are high and holy callings. Neither should be desecrated by belligerency. Both should honor and exemplify the Beatitude of our Lord: "Blessed are the Peacemakers."

Every rehearsal should so liberate the creative faculties, should so drench one in the spirit of the Master and Savior of men, should create harmonies of such exquisite beauty that all evil should be obliterated or transformed. The comradeship of the choir loft should be exalted and satisfying. The Choir is the harmony department of the Church. Sacred music should furnish the instruction and inspiration for this Christlike service.

What of the Future---for Church Music

By ARTHUR LESLIE JACOBS

The future is always the result of the present. Nothing happens quite by chance. History amply supports this statement. The reasons for the rise and fall of Rome have long since been perfectly clear. The French revolution was not an over-night flare-up. Johann Sebastian Bach, in the realm of music, was the culmination of the entire polyphonic ideal in music. Inescapably, what we do with music now, determines what music will be in the days to come.

Music, erroneously called the youngest of the arts, is in reality, one of the oldest, and one of the most fundamental. Man made music in the form of rhythms before he developed speech. Rhythm is life itself. The entire body must vibrate to stated rhythms in its several parts. When the balance is upset, sickness comes. The colors in the lovely chancel window are blues and reds because of a particular rate of light rhythms. Music developed other qualities in time—melody, pitch, measure, but these must all have their being in rhythm. Music, whether considered an art, or as something of nature, must be thought of as a basic part of life for art and nature are inseparable.

The Greeks of antiquity brought music to a high degree of perfection. Music was considered so important that many ancient Greek cities supervised minutely and required the study of music by their youth. The city of Sparta no less, decreed that men must keep up their musical studies to the age of thirty. Paul Henry Lang, in "Music in Western Civilization," a tremendous treatise based on very recent archaeological findings writes thus of music in ancient Greece, "The primary role of music is a pedagogical one, which, in the meaning of the antique world, implied the building up of character and morals; therefore, its practice is not a 'private matter,' but eminently a 'public affair.'

Every melody, every rhythm, and every instrument has its own peculiar effect on the moral nature of man, and the state of good music promotes the well-being of the public while bad music destroys it. Therefore, good and useful music is closely bound to and determined by the norms of moral conduct. . . . It is doubtful whether the art of music will ever again occupy such a high position in the mental and spiritual life of a nation."

Like all peoples since, the Greeks became conservative, preservers of empire, soft, luxury-loving. The muse of music declined in importance to daily life. Music became mere entertainment, sentimentalized, ear tickling, a veneer for culture, an accompaniment to small chatter during meal time. . . . Music lost its primary role.

Under the Romans, the art and science of music made little advance. Music was considered a hall mark of culture, and belonged exclusively to aristocratic society. Nero was much more concerned about being known as a fine fiddler than as a great emperor. Music, though, with him was even then only an amusing pastime.

With the rise of Christianity with its background of Judaism in which music played a large part, music once more found a purpose. Under theegis of both the eastern and western branches of Christianity, music flourished. Music in the Roman church developed its supreme achievement in the great composer, Palestrina. Later in history, Protestantism used music, and raised up a Bach.

Music again suffered a decline, became thoroughly secularized, was a plaything of the nobility. True enough the music-loving aristocrats of the 17th and 18th centuries kept music alive for posterity by their subsidies of composers. Music grew away from the church. The latter offered no incentive, for the church froze the forms of music and thus stifled evolution. The only real music was that developed by many peoples and termed "folk music." The 19th century with the romantic composers brought music a little more into general use. Music, though in this twentieth century has donned seven-league boots in technical growth, in popular appeal, and in growing appreciation of its powers. The church has had an exceedingly small share in this amazing growth. Most of the credit goes to the public schools. The attitude of boys and girls today to music is quite different from my boyhood when music was considered sissy. However, music is at another crossroads; it must again find a purpose, a challenge, a cause, must meet a need.

The church today faces a thrilling and challenging opportunity to help chart a course for music. The church must once more command the immense resources and power of music. Only a bold church can do so. Music is a powerful ally, not a sweet hand-aiden. Music must be treated as real and strong a thing for the church as guns, and ships and bombers are to the general.

What can the church do to restore her power in the realm of music, and be the inspiration for music that she once was?

The church can again encourage composers to write almost exclusively for the church and guarantee that their compositions will be used. Denominations as a whole or individual churches of means must subsidize composers of merit and integrity. Composers now earn their living by writing almost exclusively for the secular world. Publishers of music say that the sale of good church music is pitifully small. The Congregational Church would do something supercolossal, using the language of Hollywood, on the day when it started to support financially a composer who would write with our needs in mind, a composer who would be a part of our staff.

The church needs more and better trained musical leadership. Musicians generally, with the capacity for leadership and executive responsibility, do not enter the service of the church because of inadequate salaries, because of the low estate in which the church herself holds music and musicians, because of the jibes of other musicians, and because, sad to relate, of the jealousies and pettinesses of many of the clergy. The general secular attitude towards church music is summed up in this recent true story. One of the best known American

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The casual words we speak, or hum, or sing, may be like stray seed sown in good soil—especially if we speak them before some little child who loves and admires us. What an array of people have planted thoughts in our minds from childhood. For instance, a good many people are just getting well acquainted with the word "hurry." We live in such a hurry they say. This is an age of hurry, we are told. Well, its nothing new to me, for in the quiet little home in the heart of Carolina where I was reared one of the first words I learned was "hurry." It was "Hurry now," and it was hard not to hurry if you ran or trotted—so mostly I was told to trot. I did so much running for my dad and my mother when I was a boy that finally I just ran for the fun of it when I had caught up with all my running for them.

We were hurried out of bed mornings, and hurried to breakfast after we had hurriedly fed the stock, and then we were hurried out to the fields, or hurried off to school. We hurried to the mill, the church, the country store, the home of a neighbor, or to the end of some task. I hear people talking about the quiet, unhurried days of their childhood on the farm but as I recall it they were busy days, yes, and happy days.

There was always time, however, to envision the future. It was out there in front of us, and we were taught to hurry up and get ready for it. Clearly I can see my teachers: the postmaster at the neighborhood store, the community wag, the man on the pine box with that knife in his hand, the miller, the country doctor, my kin, the folks that made me hurry, and last but not least, the people who kept the little public school. I could write you a whole page on many of the things they said, to me or in my hearing, the latter stuck as much as the former. Let me illustrate that first line in this letter with the following verses:

When something brought my mother joy
She didn't whistle—no;
But pretty verses she would say,
And I did love them so!

Of "funny words" those rhymes were made,
To me they had a power;
"How doth the busy bee," was one,
"Improve his 'shining hour.'"

Some times my mother sang old songs,
And they were pretty quite;
But best for me those music words,
Which well she could recite.

And when her boy began to read
Those singing words he'd see,
"The shining hour" or "Jack be nimble"—
So like "the busy bee."

And so those seed sown there to sing
From one year to another;
Will now in book-form take their wing,
A tribute to my mother.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE MINISTRY.

An anniversary is an opportunity for remembering and appraising. The fact that one observes an anniversary at all, implies that there is something of value, in that, the beginning of which, is observed.

THANKSGIVING PRAYER.

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift; let thy blessing rest upon us in this festival of thanksgiving.

We praise Thee as the Bountiful Benefactor from whose gracious hand all our blessings have come. We remember Thy loving kindness and tender mercy toward us through all the years, and with grateful hearts we lift up to Thee our songs of joy.

For all the gifts Thou hast bestowed upon us, and upon our land, and upon the whole family of man, we give Thee humble and hearty thanks. May we show our gratitude by faithful lives devoted to Thy service; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

—A Book of Worship.

While we make nothing of apostolic succession, and are not at all exclusive about it, still it is significant that the Christian Ministry has been a continuing thing handed on from generation to generation. Ordination by the laying on of hands is a beautifully symbolic ceremony. Few men have set themselves apart for the Christian Ministry. They have been set apart by men who in turn were set apart. It is a kind of laying of Elijah's mantle, a separating of a man from his fellows for the performance of a certain work, perhaps to be a sort of sacrifice. All religions seem to have had a similar ceremony, sometimes for their priesthoods, sometimes for sacrifices, but whichever it is, the Christian Ministry assumes through ordination, a peculiar place in human relationships.

Ordination to the Christian Ministry opens to a man a way of opportunity, perhaps privilege would be a better word, to serve, to sacrifice and to suffer. It does not sound inviting, this way of the Christian Ministry. It was never meant to be inviting. There are not too many attractive opportunities for success, as men account for success, either in money or in honor. When or if this is true, why do men seek it? They do not. They are sought. Our fathers called it "Called to the ministry."

The considerations bring up the matter of the call to the ministry. I shall never forget the question some member of the examining committee put once: "Why do you think you are called to the ministry?" You have to search your soul for an answer to that one, and the search goes on through the years long after the examining council has let you go.

The ministry is not without its rewards. Service, sacrifice, even suffering, have satisfactions. There is a great deal more. There are the people along the way, associations with whom leave "memories that bless and burn." There is the everlasting turning to God for renewal and for guidance. Your need, your helplessness against the overwhelming world, in front of insurmountable obstacles bring you to extremities often, and then you discover that your necessity for turning often to God becomes the source of your chiefest joy.

Memories hallow the years and discovery and exploration into the unfathomable riches of Christ: the illimitable expanses of God and the ineffable worth of man go on. There is so much freshness and newness in it always that we run and are not weary—we walk and faint not.

Last year our report directed attention to the crucial importance of the Marshall Plan for European recovery, and urged the active support of the churches of this Conference. We are glad to note that this Plan was adopted, and that it is now effectually aiding the economic and social life of Europe.

Our report this year limits itself to an emphasis upon some important social issues that were faced by the

THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS CONFERENCE.

Three years ago in conference with Mrs. E. E. Holland, the widow of the late Col. E. E. Holland, a statesman and churchman, the idea of the Christian Workers Conference for our churches in the South was conceived. The purpose was to bring together our ministers, church, and Sunday school officers for a week's fellowship, study and meditation. It was necessary for a number of Christian leaders representing the different phases of our church life, to be secured as instructors and spiritual interpreters. It was conceded that such a program would entail considerable expense but that it was worthwhile.

It was suggested to Mrs. Holland that she establish a foundation at Elon College, the income from which to be used to defray the expenses of the conference. After due consideration, Mrs. Holland agreed to provide ten thousand dollars for this purpose. A substantial payment has been made to begin the foundation so that the conference might begin.

The first session of this conference was held in February, 1946. Dr. Charles R. Brown, Yale Divinity School, Dr. Wofford Timons, Executive Secretary of the Evangelistic Department of our United Church, and Dr. Philip Widenhouse of our Denominational Headquarters in New York City, were among the leaders for the conference. There was a fair attendance other than faculty and students of the college and a very profitable session was held.

It was planned to hold the 1947 session of this conference in connection with and as a part of the School of Missions and Pastors' Conference to be held at Elon College during the summer months. It was later decided that three meetings in one would be too much and that, perhaps, neither would be too successful. The plans for the Christian Workers Conference were accordingly dropped for that particular time. There was a feeling, however, that this was a mistake and that the conference should be conducted on an annual basis.

Definite arrangements have been made for the Christian Workers Conference to be held at Elon College during the week of February 6, 1949. Faculty members for the conference are being secured. It is hoped and expected that the ministers and churches of the Convention will be interested in this undertaking and that they will give their cooperation and assistance, not simply for the sake of the conference but for the sake of our own local churches and work among our churches. There will be assembled here on the campus some of the outstanding workers of our church, who with their preparation and experience, will be able to speak with authority on the different phases of our local church programs. We have a number of good pastors and excellent churches, but both, pastor and church, could profit greatly by additional instructions and outside suggestions as to plans and procedure. We need our minds and spirit refreshed and invigorated so that we may be in readiness for greater undertakings and more fruitful efforts in our church that the Kingdom of God may come in its fullness.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

All of the conferences of the Southern Convention have held their annual sessions and are now anticipating the opportunities and privileges of a new church year. Annual sessions, however, do not necessarily mean that the work of the year just closing has been completed. I trust that the other boards, institutions, and committees, which are supported annually by the church, have received their full apportionments. Unfortunately, Elon College has not. According to our records, resulting from money forwarded by the Convention Office, the college has received to date a total of $11,506.44 which leaves a balance of $993.56 due on the total apportionment. This is $652.73 less than the total last year. We, as churches and pastors, should remind ourselves that by Convention action, the college period does not end until January, 1949, and that the remainder of this year may be used by churches and Sunday schools to secure the full apportionment for the college. I am sure that our Superintendent, Dr. W. T. Scott, will be conferring with you about this deficit and this fine opportunity that we have to fully discharge our obligations to the college for current expenses. In the face of extreme high prices and limited funds, may I beg of you, pastors and churches, to please take the matter to your church and give it an opportunity to give this support to our college. The college wishes to express grateful appreciation for your assistance.

TESTIMONIES CONCERNING ISAAC WATTS.

"Some of his hymns will be sung, I fancy, so long as men praise God together; for most heartily do I grant that of all hymns I know he has produced the best for public use."—Geo. MacDonald (1824-1905).

—o—

"As his mind was capacious, his curiosity excursive, and his industry continual, his writings are very numerous, and his subjects various. . . . Few men have left behind such purity of character or such monuments of laborious piety. He has provided instruction for all ages. . . . He has left neither corporeal nor spiritual nature unexamined; he has taught the Art of Reasoning and the Science of the Stars."—Samuel Johnson (1709-84).

—o—

"Dr. Watts may be called the inventor of hymns in our language, for he so far departed from all precedent that few of his compositions resemble those of his forerunners, while he so far established a precedent to all his successors that none have departed from it otherwise than according to the peculiar turn of mind in the writers, and the style of expressing Christian truths employed by the denomination to which he belonged. . . . It has pleased God to confer upon him, though one of the least of the poets of this country, more glory than upon the greatest either of that or of any other, by making his 'Divine Songs' a more abundant and universal blessing than the verses of any uninspired penman that ever lived."—James Montgomery (1771-1854).

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
November 2, 1948.

DEAR FRIENDS OF THE
SOUTHERN CONVENTION:

My, it's good to be back home again even if we're not settled as well as we'd like to be. Our trip up from Foochow in the two and one-half ton truck given us when UNRRA closed up last spring, was thrilling and the scenery was beautiful. Usually, in China, each car has its own driver and mechanic. Very few people drive their own cars as there are no garages or mechanics along the road. However, we could not afford this luxury, so I drove the car up myself. I was surely thankful for my experience in driving a school bus in Waverly. I was anxious throughout the trip of 250 miles as we wound around over mountains and valleys miles from habitation with our precious cargo of Lewis, Dorothy and Miss Leona Burr. We arrived safely on October 11, thankful that we had no engine trouble. You have already, no doubt, read Miss Leona Burr's account of the trip. The next day after arriving in Shaowu, the fuel pump quit working and the battery went dead, so the truck hasn't moved since. Foochow is the closest place to get parts so I'm afraid the truck will be idle for some time.

I was happy to find, upon our arrival, quite a few copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN waiting for us, and we eagerly devoured the Southern Convention news. We look each week to the list of churches contributing to our Shaowu work and we are grateful beyond words for your generosity.

Sometimes we receive letters asking what special things church groups or individuals can send us. Such thoughtfulness is greatly appreciated and in the past we have received some useful and valuable things for ourselves and for our Chinese friends. Now the government has announced a new revision in taxes which so raises the tariff that we just cannot afford to receive gifts. The tax on woolen clothing is about 200 per cent of the American value. We'd like to suggest, therefore, that if your church group wishes to do something for us that you make a special effort to raise money and send it to the Convention Office for our work. If the full appropriation is not raised, our work has to be curtailed by that amount. There is, however, one item which we would be most grateful for—used X-ray film. It can be washed off and used as window glass. There is no tax if marked: "Exposed—of no value." Our Han Mei School has not one pane of glass and it cannot be bought in Shaowu at any price.

After about a month's breathing spell, conditions in China have again become unstable. A new currency was issued in August and everyone's hopes rose. But the past few weeks has seen the old pattern of inflation return. Prices have quadrupled in a few weeks. Part of the difficulty is because many have lost confidence in their government because of Communist victories in the north. Merchants and workers compute wages and prices in rice—they don't want money. Wealthy people are hoarding rice and other goods as fast as they can with the result that commodities are scarcer than ever.

We have heard over the radio that foreigners in North China have been advised by the American Consul to leave. Most missionaries, naturally, do not want to leave their posts until the end, always hoping against hope that something will happen to relieve the situation. If all must go, we hope some of our North China colleagues will come to North Fukien to help us. There are places to live although in pretty bad state of repair.

We are wondering, as we hear of the evacuations in North China, if the Communists will continue to come Southward. There is no evidence at present that they will come to Fukien, but the drive southward seems to be gaining momentum.

Dorothy is happily engaged this term in teaching English to a class of sixty Junior High School students in Han Mei School. It is a mile and a half walk to East Gate each morning, so between teaching, caring for Lewis, and looking after the house, she is pretty busy. She loves to teach, though, and I hope she will write to you about some of her experiences before very long. Miss Leona Burr has plunged right into the women's work. Many of her former students and friends are beginning to show an increased interest in the church.

Our churches are preparing for the annual Conference (December 2-7). We have some difficult problems to meet and we hope that, at that time, every Christian and every church in the Southern Convention will pray for us here that the Holy Spirit may guide us in our plans for the year to come.

Little Lewis is now growing daily and is the smilingest, happiest, most loveable baby (we think) in Shaowu. Our Chinese friends are amazed to see his blue eyes, blonde hair and pinkish white skin. He loves to eat the baby food many of you sent and he is the best dressed baby in China because of the thoughtfulness of our Southern Convention friends. Many, many thanks.

When you read this letter, you will probably be getting ready for Thanksgiving. We Americans have much to be thankful for. Most of us don't know what it is to be without food, clothing and shelter. This past summer, in Foochow, I saw the bodies of several beggars who died on the street from starvation. The majority of the Chinese do not have enough of the right kind of food to eat and many live from day to day not knowing where the next day's rice is coming from. America, rich in the resources of the earth, must share with them.

Above all, America needs to be thankful for the Christian heritage which is ours—for our churches, our charities and for the feeling of concern for others which is prevalent in every community in the land. We ought to share our food, our clothing and our money with China. But, most of all, we ought to share our Master. Most of the evils of Chinese society can be traced to evil, grasping men who seek their own advantage regardless of the effect on the public good. Only our Master can change the heart and implement within a desire to serve others rather than self. Such a transformation, China needs above all else.

Timothy Chang has written of the wonderful reception you have given him and he is deeply grateful. So am I, and his being in America is another link in the chain of Christian fellowship which shall one day unite all peoples of the earth.

Sincerely yours,

DICK JACKSON.

SUFFOLK REPORTS "NEW LOOK."

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Church got the "New Look"—when the first meeting of the church year was held October 11, at 6:30 p. m.

Nine rooms in the church building were lighted to receive the nine circles, for their own business meeting. Promptly at 7:00 o'clock the corridors and halls overflowed and all steps turned to the Fellowship Hall, where Circle No. 1, with Mrs. J. B. Kent in charge, had tables arranged with Hallowe'en table settings, and even the candy carrying out the orange and black color scheme.

Now some "new looks" have a bustle, so every one bustled around a well-laden table stocked with covered dishes brought by each member, and carried the food of their choice to their table. A well-filled crowd with no "wasp waists" at 7:45 filed into the church auditorium for David Brown Harrell's inspiring organ meditation and Dr. Truitt's study from Galatians, the Bible Study for this year.

From the auditorium, the members went into the Philathea classroom for the regular business session and the program—which was a playlet entitled, "It Could Be You." The meeting closed with "Our Purpose" and "Our Prayer."

The "New Look" of the society seemed to go over in a big way for the first time, and it may be our "new outlook" for 1948-49.

LEMMIE B. RAWLES,
Secretary.

* * * *

NOTE: Mrs. Truitt reports that the women like very much the new arrangement of circle and society meeting together. Before, if they had 40, it was a good crowd. At the first time of the new way of meeting they had 63, and in the November meeting they had 81 present. This is worth trying for some women's groups whose attendance has not been up to par. It means that you have just the one big meeting each month and not the meeting of each circle separately and the coming together of all for the auxiliary meeting. The one meeting a month could be for morning, afternoon, or evening, including a meal if you prefer but not necessarily each time. The circles can meet separately and then come together for parts of the program, especially the inspirational parts. This idea is also good because it gives the women a chance to see all the women with whom they are working in the church and not just their own little circle, especially if it is held at a time when all circles can attend.

THE ORGANIST'S CREED.

By Jessie L. Brainerd.

- I. I will consider my position as subordinate to the director of the choir. Though my duties are important, after all the director is responsible for the general success of the service.
- II. I will be punctual at all rehearsals and services.
- III. I will follow the conductor's beat and phrasings, and will respond to the mood of the composition.
- IV. I will cooperate with the choir, the director, and the pastor, so that the services may be coherent and well balanced.
- V. I will feel my responsibility at all times and in the case of possible errors by anyone, will endeavor as best I can to cover these from notice.
- VI. As good hymn playing is one of the most important duties of the organist, I will try at all times to grow in a feeling for rhythm and musical values.
- VII. In the accompanying of a soloist, I will at all times try to lose any personal conceptions in those of the artist interpreting the leading part of the composition.
- VIII. I will try to realize that the chief office of the choir and organ is to lead the congregation in their worship in song.
- IX. I will choose preludes, offertories and postludes that are spiritual, uplifting and that will be appropriate to the mood of the particular service.
- X. I will remember always that music in the church service is not for display but a part of the worship.

in churches of the Reformed tradition to have the Psalms given out line by line by a leader sometimes called the precenter. Some versions of the Psalms attempted to be as literal as possible and therefore were quite stiff and awkward. Others were freer in spirit and in form and were usually correspondingly more valuable.

It was not until 1700 that Isaac Watts began to write and that modern hymnody can be said to have begun. As a young man, he objected to the metrical Psalms then being used. He felt that they were inadequate to the fullest expression of Christian worship. When he was told to do better, he did just that. He argued that we preach from the New Testament and we pray in the name and spirit of Christ. Why then are Christians compelled to sing only in words that are pre-Christian? To that end he essayed to render some of the Psalms very freely indeed, but in New Testament language. For this reason he felt free to go beyond the literal text, and even beyond what he felt was the pre-Christian mood of the Psalms. One of his publications he called, "Imitations of the Psalms of David in the Language of the New Testament." His hymn, "Our God, Our Help in Ages Past," is a free paraphrase of the 90th Psalm and well illustrates this. Having done this, it was not a very long step to go the full way and write hymns which were fresh inspirations not necessarily based on the Biblical text. His hymns made such an appeal to the people of his and succeeding generations that he became the bridge into a new day of hymnody by which Protestant Christianity in the English speaking world found its collective singing voice for corporate worship and for the spread of the gospel. Watts said of himself, "It was not my design to exalt myself to the rank and glory of poets. But I was ambitious to be a servant to the churches and a helper to the joy of the most ordinary Christian."

Because Isaac Watts felt so deeply the need that the common people find adequate means of praising God, he began a tradition of openness to the inspiration of God, which has provided the wide array of hymns that fill our modern hymnals. Not only did other hymn writers follow in his train, but the lines of many authors unintended for hymns, have been set to music and have enriched our hymnals. Moreover, these hymns come from all branches of the Christian Church, and their presence is a living witness to the true catholicity of the gospel. Because of Isaac Watts' pioneering work in the writing of hymns adequate to free, corporate worship, he deserves to be gratefully remembered by the church. Isaac Watts was a prophet in the true sense of that word, the prophet of the people's praise.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

TEN YEARS AFTER.

By HILDA RICHMOND.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

There are some parents who, though they quote to their children the old saying, "Rome was not built in a day," quite forget to apply this adage themselves. For instance, they try to rush their boys and girls along to achieve top rank in the grades and in high school. They plead with their children and offer rewards for "straight A's" in their lessons. It is foolish and positively harmful to drive, coax, or urge children to excessive study, merely for the sake of seeing their names in the local newspaper on the list of the ten highest-ranking pupils. A boy or girl may need the extra time, which would be required to gain a place on that list, for outdoor exercise and sleep. And time spent this latter way might give the parents something even more satisfying to look upon than the gratifying sight of their child's name on that high-scholarship list.

If fathers and mothers will take the trouble to select a class known to them ten years ago, and now out in the world of business or professional enterprise, and make a careful study of the members then, and now, it will do them—and consequently their children—a great deal of good.

In one class of graduates ten years ago, there was the usual number of ambitious, eager pupils whose fond and proud parents had never required any home tasks of them. Their time had been carefully guarded so that nothing should interfere with school or home study. Many a mother of the average type of pupil had, more than once, gone home from the club or class meeting to shed bitter tears, because her offspring was not "ambitious" and she could never tell, with happy complacency, that her boy was "leading his class" or was being constantly sought after when public exhibitions were to be held.

But ten years after this graduation, some of these mothers had the experience of noting that their slow, plodding—sometimes, seemingly indifferent—sons were forging ahead of many of the pupils that these mothers had formerly envied. They were in good health, married, supporting their little families—happy in their own homes, and climbing the ladder of success with confidence in their own abilities. Six of the former "show" pupils had been obliged—when hard times had struck the land so forcibly—to look to their parents for support, and—alas!—two of the once high-ranking pupils were in sanitariums. The fond and foolish parents saw, too late, what crowding and over-cramming had done to their children. The fact that Herbert had "led" his classes and had taken the forefront in all plans and intellectual contests, winning prizes right and left, did not, later on, keep his parents from bitter tears, caused by the realization that they were largely responsible for the ill-health and inability to work from which the young man was suffering.

"If others can do it, you can do it," had been the cry of these ambitious parents. Perhaps one of the most deplorable outcomes of having made high scholastic standards the aim of school life had been a "priggishness," on the part of the leaders, which showed that these boys and girls felt they were a little better than most of their schoolmates. It is possible that many of them, during the depression, might have been happily employed but for the foolish idea that they should not take unimportant positions because they were fitted for better things. The ordinary student might accept a task at the foot of the ladder, but with their records they must wait for something higher up. And this attitude has been forced on them very largely by the ambitious home folks. A certain talented young man, in his early thirties, has never done any

SOME HYMNS BY ISAAC WATTS.

Many effective anthems have been composed on Watts' hymns, some based on the tunes with which they are associated, others original and perhaps hymnic in form. A few of them are listed here, graded as follows for performance: Easy, Medium and Difficult.

1. Awake, Our Souls, by Adolph Hesse, original. O. Ditson (Presser). M-15c.
2. Christ Hath a Garden (a lovely text, well set).
 - a. By Eric Thiman, original, hymnic. Gray. M-16c.
 - b. By Roland Diggle, original. Carl Fischer. M-15c.

3. Come, Let Us Join Our Cheerful Songs.
 - a. By Norman Churchill, introducing London New. B. Music Co. M-15c.
 - b. By Percy Whitlock, original. Oxford (Carl Fischer). E-20c.
4. Hush, My Dear, Lie Still.
 - a. By C. S. Lang, original (unison or sop. solo). Gray. D-16c.
 - b. By Powell Weaver, on Nettleton. Galaxy. E-16c. (Solo with hummed accom. text "Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing" is also added.)
5. I'll Praise My Maker. By Matthew Greiter, arr. Sanders, on Old 113th. O. Ditson. E-15c.
6. Jesus Shall Reign. By Ferris Towner, original, hymnic. Gray. M-16c.
7. Joy to the World.
 - a. By S. R. Avery, on Antioch. O. Ditson. E-15c.
 - b. By Edward S. Barnes, old French melody. Schirmer. M-15c.
8. Lord of the Worlds Above. By T. Tertius Noble, original, hymnic. Galaxy. D-15c.
9. Our God, Our Help in Ages Past. This is so well known that we cannot list generally used settings. We add one for festival occasions by Katherine K. Davis: St. Anne—8 parts. B. Music Co. D-15c.
10. Sweet Is the Work. By R. Walter Robson. Gray. M-16c.
11. The Lord My Shepherd Is (an antiphon). From tune by Battell, arranged by C. Dickinson. Gray. E-10c.
12. There Is a Land of Pure Delight. By G. H. Federlein, original. Gray. M-10c.
13. When I Survey the Wondrous Cross.
 - a. By T. Tertius Noble, original. J. Fischer. D-15c.
 - b. By Ralph Harris, on Hamburg (solo and obblig.) Flammer. M-15c.
 - c. Hamburg, arr. for ch. and congregation. By W. B. Olds. Hall & McCreary. E-12c.
 - d. By Sidney Thomson, original, solo, soprano. Schirmer. M-50c.

These anthems are well suited for use in a Commemorative Festival for Isaac Watts, but they also serve as a real addition to the choir library for Christmas and general use.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The seventy-eighth annual session of the Western North Carolina Conference was held at Pleasant Union Christian Church, November 11-12. The theme, "Our Christian World Mission," was strongly presented in inspiring addresses by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill; Dr. Hiroshi Hatanaka, President of Kobe College, Japan; Rev. Harold Case, Elbowoods, North Dakota, Director of Indian Work; Dr. Alan B. Taylor, Medical Director, McCord Hospital, South Africa.

The worship services conducted by Rev. F. C. Lester, D. D., also emphasized the theme, his subjects being, "We Look at Our World," "We Hear God's Call" and "We Organize for Work." Mr. George Gunter, President of the Conference, set the spirit and atmosphere of the Conference with his timely address on the subject, "A Program of Advance for Our Conference." Dr. John G. Truitt, President of the Southern Convention, challenged the Conference to a larger ministry in these trying days.

Mr. S. H. Pell, Chairman of Laymen's Work, showed in his report that the laymen of the Conference are at work in an effort to fulfill the objective of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention—"Every Man in His Place in His Church Doing the Job That Needs to be Done." Mrs. E. P. Borroughs, Superintendent of the Asheboro District of the Western North Carolina Conference reported on the effective work of the women's societies. Dr. L. E. Smith, President of Elon College, and Superintendent C. D. Johnston, of the Christian Orphanage, reported progress in these institutions of our Church. Rev. Carl R. Key, Director of the North Carolina Council of Churches, was present and presented the program for relief of the suffering peoples of Europe. Rev. B. J. Earp, Chairman of the Committee on Stewardship and Apportionments, presented a strong report and urged the churches to adopt the increased apportionments in accordance with the expanded financial program of the Southern Convention. The report was unanimously adopted.

The officers were re-elected as follows: George T. Gunter, President; Rev. B. J. Earp, Vice-President; Mrs. F. C. Lester, Secretary; Rev. M. A.

Pollard, Assistant Secretary; Cyrus Shoffner, Treasurer.

Rev. B. H. Lowdermilk and his good people of Pleasant Union Church are to be commended for the hospitable manner in which they entertained the session of Conference, which was one of the best attended in recent years. Financial reports indicated that more of the churches paid in full their apportionments than in previous years.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The one hundred twenty-third annual session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference was held at the Congregational Christian Church of Lynchburg, Virginia, November 16-17. The Conference was well attended throughout and a strong program was presented. Special speakers for this Conference were Dr. Alan B. Taylor of South Africa; Rev. Harold Case of Elbowoods, North Dakota; Dr. Hiroshi Hatanaka, President of Kobe College, Japan; Miss Pattie Lee Coghill of New York, who presented "Our Christian World Mission." Dr. Thomas Anderson of Central Church, Atlanta, Georgia, was guest preacher at the Conference, speaking Tuesday evening and Wednesday morning.

The Conference Apportionment Committee presented the schedule of apportionments in line with the increased giving recommended by the recent session of the Southern Convention. This report was unanimously adopted.

The report of the Committee on the Ministry by Dr. Stanley C. Harrell was most encouraging from the standpoint of new leadership in this Conference. The report revealed that a number of students are preparing themselves for the ministry, and two were licensed—Bland Leebrick and Richard Cook. Rev. Robert T. Woodruff, Jr., minister of Ingram and Pleasant Grove Churches, was received by letter of transfer from the Baptist Church. Rev. William P. Smith, assistant pastor of the Burlington Church was received by letter of transfer from the Baptist Church. Rev. W. M. Morgan, a member of the Baptist Church and professor of Bible at Appalachian State Teachers College, was ordained to the Christian Ministry.

Dr. L. E. Smith, President of Elon College, and Superintendent C. D. Johnston of the Christian Orphanage, presented encouraging reports from these institutions of the church and urged a larger support by our churches to them.

Rev. James B. Allan, the host minister, and the Lynchburg people are to be commended for the splendid manner in which they entertained at Conference. The Lynchburg Church, located in one of the most promising residential sections of that city, received commendation from the Conference for their good work and as an evidence of faith in the future growth of the church.

The officers were re-elected as follows: Rev. Kenneth D. Register, President; Rev. W. Millard Stevens, Vice-President; Rev. Wm. J. Andes, Secretary; Mr. Russel V. Powell, Treasurer.

The reports to the Conference indicated substantial gains during the year in membership and financially, most of the churches paying in full their Conference apportionment.

young and old—and passages are sung in solo, duet and chorus by musicians with church, operatic and concert experience. Organ and other instruments provide appropriate accompaniment.

In the series of recordings now being issued are the Lord's Prayer, the Beatitudes, selections from the prophets, and favorite psalms. Records are full ten-inch size and are of unbreakable Vinyl-based permalite for high fidelity reproduction and elimination of needle scratch and surface noise.

The entire series consists of ten records in all. New subscribers receive an additional gift record of the Twenty-Third Psalm, which has on its other side the passage from Proverbs—"Let Thine Eyes Look Right On." The cost of each record is $1.50, paid each month as each record is received. Or the entire cost of $15.00 for the series may be paid in advance; in that case an additional gift record is received—or twelve records in all.

At present, Singing Bible records may be obtained only from the Singing Bible Society. All who are interested are invited to write to the society's headquarters at 401 Broadway, New York City. If desired, the Gift Record and first record in the series may be sent for and heard without obligation before a subscription is ordered.

HISTORY IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON X—DECEMBER 5, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Go ye therefore and make disciples of all nations.—Matthew 28:19.

LESSON: Acts 1:8; 2:1-4; 4:1-4; 8:4-17, 25; 11:1-18; 13:1-3; 14:26-27; 16:1-10; 28:16, 30-31.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Acts 4:23-31.

A Physician Historian.

The Acts of the Apostles was undoubtedly written by Luke, the beloved physician. He was an intimate friend of Paul, and accompanied him on many of his travels. He therefore wrote at first-hand concerning some of the incidents recorded by him in this book. But Luke was an honest and a careful historian, as well as a physician. If one reads the opening verses of his Gospel, he will see with what painstaking care he examined his sources, and with what fidelity he recorded the facts. He brings the same scrupulous care and the same fidelity to the book of Acts. Thus we have an important historical source book concerning the early spread of Christianity.

But only a sketch, as it were of the greatest movement in history, as anybody who reads the Acts of the Apostles carefully will discover. Indeed it would seem that Luke had taken the words of Jesus, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth," and made it the outline of his history of the spread of Christianity. It seems to be his purpose to show how the movement began in Jerusalem, spread into Judea and into Samaria, and then through Paul's missionary journeys went unto what was then the uttermost part of the earth. It might be called "A Historical Sketch of Early Christianity." We wish we had written much more in detail and at much greater length, but we thank God for this beloved physician who through his writings brought healing to the soul even as he, through his work, brought healing to the body.

Great Things from Small Beginnings.

Jesus once said that the Kingdom of heaven was like a grain of mustard seed, which though the smallest of seeds, actually developed into the greatest of herbs, thus showing in dramatic form how even from the smallest of beginnings the greatest of historical movements grew. The lesson for today is a miniature of that movement, a thumb-nail sketch, as it were. From a little band of twelve men, one of whom was a betrayer, the Christian movement has grown until both its numbers and its influence are incalculable. The parable of the mustard seed has new meaning in the light of today's lesson.

A Commission and a Promise.

It began, of course, in the heart of God even from the foundation of the world. It was his eternal purpose that men should be saved. But it found vocal and vivid expression in the last recorded words of Jesus according to Matthew in what we call the Great Commission. Conscious that all power both in heaven and on earth had been given to Him, our Risen Lord commissioned, or commanded His disciples, to go into all the world and make disciples of all nations, teaching them and baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit. And even as He commissioned them, He promised to empower them. Then as always, God gives power to do the thing He asks us to do.

The Promise Fulfilled—The Church Is Born.

The disciples took Him at His word, and He kept His word. They waited as He had commanded them, and He poured out His Spirit upon them as He had promised. Pentecost might well be called the birthday of the Church. It was then that the Holy Spirit, which of course had always been in the world, came with new fulness and power, or at least when the disciples received and appropriated it in its marvelous power. They became new men in Christ Jesus. They set out to be witnesses for Christ even unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

Obstacles and Opposition.

All was not sweet and light in the world of that day. All men did not want the gospel. And not only were large numbers of men indifferent and uninterested, but a powerful group was aggressively opposed to the gospel. It was not long before the leaders of the new movement ran into opposition on the part of the religious leaders of the day. And then, behold, the new movement ran into persecution from the political leaders of the day. Christianity soon was baptized with fire, literally. Witnessing for Christ in that early day, took courage and often cost life itself. But those early Christians were made of stern stuff. They knew whom they had believed and they were not afraid of men.

Breaking Down Barriers.

Strange as it may seem, and amazing in its implications, the gospel broke down barriers between Jew and Samaritan, high and hard barriers that had been there through the years, and ere long Christians were carrying the good news to the Samaritans. And the hearts of this people, who in the eyes of the Jews were "dogs" responded, and many of them believed. True religion, or at least the Spirit of Christ will break through and break down the prejudices and barriers of men. Christ alone has the solution to the differences and bitternesses between races and religions.

Widening Horizons.

The gospel did not stop in Samaria. It began to spill over into the larger Gentile world. It was preached to Gentiles at Antioch where the disciples were first called Christians, and where Jews and Gentiles were brought together in a common fellowship in the Church. The gospel was interpreted in more universal terms here. It manifested itself not as a Jewish sect, but as a new movement, the genius of which was not observance to the law, but obedience to Christ through faith. And the gospel spoke to the hearts of this Gentile people. The work grew to such proportions that Barnabas who had charge of it had to have help, and he enlisted Paul as his co-worker. Thus began a great partnership in Christian service.

Growing Frontiers.

From Antioch the gospel really began to go places. Acting under the sure impulse of the Holy Spirit the Church there felt constrained to give of its best to share the good news with the larger Gentile world, and they set Barnabas and Paul apart with prayer and the laying on of hands, and sent them westward to preach the gospel. History turned on that decision and that event. For from Asia the gospel was carried to Europe and from Europe it was eventually carried to the Western world, and the end is not yet. The grain of mustard seed has grown until now it represents the greatest

THE ORGAN AND THE ORGANIST.

By DR. F. W. BOREHAM.

The organist is an ecclesiastical vagabond. He is a nomad and a non-descript. He lives in a kind of nomad's land. In the rationale of our spiritual economy he has never been provided with a home. We have never made up our minds whether he is simply a cogwheel in the mechanism of our church organization or one of the controlling forces of the sanctuary. If our theologians had read their Bibles as carefully as our organists have read their music, they would certainly have discovered that the Scriptures have some very fine things to say about the organist. Here for instance is a cluster of great Old Testament stories which should have helped us solve our problem long ago. Jehoram, the wicked king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat, the good king of Judah, have for a while joined forces that they might fight side by side against the Moabites. But in the course of the campaign their united armies fall into sore straits and Jehoshaphat longs to hear some guiding voice. In his perplexity he hungers for fellowship with the skies. His soul ached to speak with God. Is there not a prophet? Elisha is found, and the kings stand before him, and beg him to prophesy. But the lips of the seer are sealed, he has no message; he is dumb. Then he cried: "Bring me a minstrel!" And it came to pass, when the minstrel played, that the hand of the Lord came upon Elisha, and he prophesied."

The point is that we recognize the organist. It is instrumental music pure and simple. There is no question of words, whether clearly or indistinctly enunciated. An emphatically spiritual effect was produced. We must be honest, even though we be theologians. We must be fair, even towards an organist. Two irresistible conclusions emerge. The first is that the organist is clearly part and parcel of our spiritual economy. In the first stories, it was through his agency that the Divine Spirit was received. In another story, when David took his harp and played before Saul, the evil spirit departed from him, "When Saul heard the music of the psaltery and the tabret and the pipe and the harp, the Spirit of the Lord came upon him," and thus by means of a melodious ministry an evil spirit was expelled.

These are two great essential functions of the church in every age, to invoke a fresh inrush of spiritual enlightenment and reviving fervor, and, to exercise and expel all that is unrighteous, unholy, and unclean. Lest our friends of the music benches should become exalted above measure by the brilliance of the Old Testament revelation, we hasten to emphasize the second principle that emerges from its beautiful splendors. It is manifest that the music of the minstrel is not an end in itself. Just as the work of the minister is not in itself spiritually effective, but is the channel through which the excellency of the divine power may communicate itself, so the harmonies of the organ are but a means of grace.

A DECLARATION OF THE RELIGIOUS PRINCIPLES OF THE AMERICAN GUILD OF ORGANISTS.

For the greater glory of God, and for the good of His Holy Church in this land, we being severally members of the American Guild of Organists, do declare our mind and intention in the things following:

We believe that the Office of Music in Christian Worship a Sacred Obligation before the Most High.

We believe that they who are set as Choirmasters and Organists in the House of God ought themselves to be persons of devout conduct, teaching the ways of earnestness in the Choirs committed to their charge.

We believe that the unity of purpose and fellowship of life between Ministers and Choirs should be everywhere established and maintained. We believe that at all times and in all places it is meet, right, and our bounden duty to work and to pray for the advancement of Christian Worship in the holy gifts of strength and nobleness; to the end that the Church may be purged of her blemishes, that the minds of men may be instructed, that the honor of God's House may be guarded in our time and in the time to come.

Wherefore we do give ourselves with reverence and humility in these our endeavors, offering up our works and our persons in the Name of Him without whom nothing is holy. Amen.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE—FOR CHURCH MUSIC.

composers was asked the whereabouts of a brilliant former pupil. The answer came quickly without facetiousness. "O he is buried somewhere in church music."

The church at large must put its musical staff on an equal footing with specialists in other fields in salary—in respect—in rank. In complete fairness, it is necessary to state now that this church practices these three principles of adequate remuneration, respect, and rank. When the church musician's self-respect as well as that of yours is attained, and he is given a living wage, then more qualified persons will enter the field, the all too few schools now training church musicians would grow so that still better training could be offered. The whole would be an endless circle for good.

I should want to suggest something further . . . Create an ecclesiastical order for church musicians which would grant a title to qualified persons giving their whole time to church music. As a man is ordained into the ministry of the gospel, so induct an individual into church musical leadership. The title must carry meaning and respect. The presently used title, "Minister of Music," is most graciously used by a few churches.

Further, the churches in smaller communities or groups of smaller churches in larger cities should forget their differences to call someone to organize and supervise their musical work collectively. Thus a person of much larger calibre and training would give these churches the fine musical leadership which they cannot possibly now afford. An assistant in each church would assume immediate charge of the program in each church. This procedure would give an unbelievable impetus to church music for the good of everyone.

The church still further, should be the center of musical education. If the church is to recapture musical leadership, all phases of music must be controlled. Classes in both instrumental and vocal techniques must be organized, and put on a graduating basis. It would take courage and financial backing for the church with enough vision to start such an all embracing scheme.

Scholarships in music should be offered. The recipients would in return become the principal choral group. A variant of the idea would be for selected young people to live together under church supervision, be given their education under church supervision both in musical and academic subjects, in other words, a Choir School. Any variant of such a plan would give us great music, be a courageous step in the advancement of church music and make us truly leaders.

There should be more music festivals—festivals of children's groups, hymn festivals by the congregation, festivals of the combined choirs of smaller churches. We can foster choral clinics. There is no limit to what we can do except as limited by our vision, capacities and energies.

Men are often capable of greater things than they perform. They are sent into the world with bills of credit, and seldom draw to their full extent.—Walpole.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The Christian Orphanage has a lot to be thankful for. The Lord has blessed the children with good health. We have had no serious sickness or accidents and no deaths during the year thus far. He has blessed us with sunshine and beautiful rains. Our farm has produced well. He has blessed us with many warm friends who are interested in our large family of little children. As Thanksgiving and Christmas draw near, our people are becoming more interested. They are beginning to call for all the children's names and ages in order to mail them Christmas gifts. They get lots of joy out of buying gifts for some little boy or girl to make them happy on Christmas morning. It is a fine thing both for the giver and the child who receives it, because it gives one joy to know he or she has made some little fatherless child happy. It touches a little spring in one's heart that bubbles over with joy, and the little child who receives the gift bubbles with joy, too. So both are made happy. When we count our blessings one by one during the year, we find we have lots to be thankful for.

We are greatly interested in the Thanksgiving offering this year. Our churches have a long way to go to reach $25,000.00 by December 31, as that date ends the orphanage year. The orphanage year runs from January 1 through December 31. In other words, we run with the calendar year. If the churches will do their duty it can be done. Up to this date the churches have sent to the Christian Orphanage the sum of $9,583.34. This amount counts on Conference Apportionments. If all the churches raise their apportionments in full in the Southern Convention it would only amount to $15,000.00, but all of them will not raise their full quotas. If they do, can you expect me, as your superintendent, to run the orphanage on $15,000.00?

You have heard lots about going the second mile; I hope you will be willing to go the second mile at this Thanksgiving. Let us make it a "Banner Year" for the orphanage. I have given you more than thirty-two years of my life as superintendent. I have forgotten self in my zeal to make the orphanage an institution that the churches may well feel proud of, and to train boys and girls to be good citizens. The work we have done in thirty-two years is shown in nice buildings, nice farm and dairy, and the many fine young men and women we have sent out.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

serious work since he graduated, and his family speak of him as showing "a very sweet disposition" in his patient waiting for something "in his line" to open up. As a matter of fact, he is conceited but very unhappy, while most of the boys with whom he grew up, although struggling along with limited budgets and hard work, are happy.

Parents and teachers should work together to provide well-balanced programs for childhood and youth. There is so much more for our young people to learn and practice than our school books can supply. As far as academic subjects are concerned, each child should be encouraged constantly to strive to surpass his own record—not those of his classmates. If this is his purpose, he can be kept on his toes, so to speak, in his lessons, without any danger to his health. However, some children need special incentives to make them want to join in outdoor activities. Always, the spirit of democracy should govern both in the school and in the home; therefore, as proper outdoor exercises must be insisted upon, the choice of activity should generally remain with the child.

A World Christian Church.

A thousand years in God's sight are sometimes as a watch in the night. But He shall not fail or be discouraged until He sees the travail of His soul and is satisfied. A milestone was passed, however, last August when the World Council of Churches was formed at Amsterdam. It has the promise of a better day, which shall ultimately find fulfilment only when we are "one in Christ Jesus."

Deliberate with caution, but act with decision; and yield with graciousness, or oppose with firmness.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL ACTION.

First Assembly of the World Council of Churches, meeting at Amsterdam from August 22 to September 4, 1948. That Assembly brought together the leaders of 135 churches from 44 countries, and it undoubtedly marked an epoch in the ecumenical life of non-Roman Christendom. In addition to creating a permanent World Council of Churches, it commended to its constituent bodies, for serious study and appropriate action, a wide range of problems that currently confront Christians throughout the world. Your Committee hereby lifts out for our particular attention some of the major actions that were taken by Section III—"The Church and the Disorder of Society," and Section IV—"The Church and the International Disorder" (a complete Report of Amsterdam may be secured at 25 cents per copy from The Christian Century, 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago 5, Illinois). The particular headings given below are ours, but the text consists of direct quotations.

1. The Social Crisis.—"The world today is experiencing a social crisis of unparalleled proportions. The deepest root of that disorder is the refusal of men to see and admit that their responsibility to God stands over and above their loyalty to any earthly community and their obedience to any world power." (Sec. III, pt. 1.)

2. The Renewal of the Church.—"The greatest contribution that the church can make to the renewal of society is for it to be renewed in its own life in faith and obedience to its Lord. Such inner renewal includes a clearer grasp of the meaning of the gospel for the whole life of men. . . . If the church can overcome the national and social barriers which now divide it, it can help society to overcome those barriers. This is especially clear in the case of racial distinction. It is here that the church has failed most lamentably, where it has reflected and then by its example sanctified the racial prejudice that is rampant in the world. And yet it is here that today its guidance concerning what God wills for it is especially clear. It knows that it must call society away from prejudice based on race or color, and from the practices of discrimination and segregation, as denials of justice and human dignity, but it cannot say a convincing word to society unless it takes steps to eliminate these from the Christian community, because they contradict all that it believes about God's love for all his children." (Sec. III, pt. 5.)

3. Communism and Capitalism.—"The Christian Churches should reject the ideologies of both communism and laissez faire capitalism, and should seek to draw men away from the false assumption that these extremes are the only alternatives. Each has made promises which it could not redeem. Communist ideology puts the emphasis upon economic justice, and promises that freedom will come automatically after the completion of the revolution. Capitalism puts the emphasis upon freedom, and promises that justice will follow as a by-product of free enterprise; that, too, is an ideology which has been proved false. It is the responsibility of Christians to seek new creative solutions which never allow either justice or freedom to destroy each other." (Sec. III, pt. 4.)

4. War and the Will of God.—"War as a method of settling disputes is incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . The greatest threat to peace today comes from the division of the world into mutually suspicious and antagonistic blocs. This threat is all the greater because national tensions are confused by the clash of economic and political systems. Christianity cannot be equated with of these. . . . A positive attempt must be made to insure that competing economic systems such as communism, socialism or free enterprise may co-exist without leading to war. . . . The churches have a responsibility to educate men to rise above the limitations of their national outlook and to view economic and political differences in the light of the Christian objective of insuring to every man freedom from all economic or political bondage. Such systems exist to serve men, not men to serve them." (Sec. IV, pts. 1 and 2.)

5. Christ Our Hope.—"Great are the tasks and fateful the responsibilities laid on Christians today. In our own strength we can do nothing; but our hope is in Christ and in the coming of his Kingdom. With him is the victory and in him we trust. We pray that we may be strengthened by the power of his might and used by him for accomplishing his design among the nations. For he is the Prince of Peace and the risen and living Head of the Church." (Sec. IV, pt. 5.)

NORTH CAROLINA TO ORGANIZE FRIENDSHIP TRAINS.

Plans are completed by the North Carolina Church Rural Overseas Program (CROP) to organize friendship trains for shipment overseas. Two trains are foreseen, one to be assembled in Salisbury, December 1, and the other to be assembled in Raleigh or Wilson, December 15. A minimum goal of 100 freight carloads of farm produce was set by the state committee.

The plan of organization involves the setting up a CROP committee in each county, composed of ministers, farmers and farm organization leaders, press and radio representatives and school and civic organization heads. A time will be set to make the canvass, approximately a week later, the farm produce will be collected to a county warehouse, packed, loaded on the boxcars and shipped to the point of assembly, Salisbury or Raleigh. Local church and agricultural leaders are being and will be contacted from the state office in the setting up of county committees.

Wheat, cotton, corn, rye, oats, potatoes, peanuts, pecans, syrup, molasses, canned milk, meats, peas, beans, rice, sugar, and salt are among the farm products to be collected.

Distribution of CROP materials overseas is handled largely through Church World Service, the cooperative Protestant relief agency. This means that church leaders already on the field, men who know the people and their needs, are in charge of the distribution. Ocean freight for all CROP materials is paid for by the United States Government. CROP's overhead last year amounted to only 4.77 per cent.

Though three years have passed since the end of the war, the need for aid, food and raw materials continues in central Europe and in great areas of Asia. For example, in Germany, with 20 per cent of its farming land lost through the Potsdam agreement, 22 per cent more people must be supported in the remaining territory. Rations, though officially set at 1,550 calories a day or a little more, are never met in many areas. Diets fall as low as 700 or 900 calories a day. To people existing under this diet, it is "too little to live on, too much to die on." Through CROP the farm people of North Carolina may join in giving life to many more abroad who otherwise will suffer disease, starvation and death this winter.

'Tis not the dying for a faith that's so hard; 'tis the living up to it that is difficult.—Thackery.

THE SINGING CHURCH

By Dr. WALTER H. STARK

The Scripture records that on the night of the Last Supper, the disciples, after singing a hymn, went out to the Mount of Olives. What would we give for the words and music of that hymn? It would become a part of every Communion Service. On Maundy Thursday, the day before Good Friday, it has become customary to hold a Communion Service, featuring music, and closing with Communion, after which a hymn is sung and Christians go out into the darkness of the night with the light of music in their souls.

The Christian Church has been a singing church, and even its darkest days and periods of peril have brought forth great hymns of courage and faith. In our modern hymnals the best hymns of the ages have been brought together and we should carry in our hearts and minds the words and music of these songs of spiritual uplift. The dark days of peril produced solemn chants, the happier days the chorals, and times of peace produced the great oratorios. Before the days of printed books the leader lined out the words. In the days before common education there was endless repetition in varied strains. The revivals brought hymns of enthusiasm. Today we have the best collected in one book.

Paul urged early Christians to sing with the harp, that beautiful stringed instrument which was the precursor of the piano. Harps then were rather small and could be carried to the places where Christians, often in secret, gathered for services. When Christians grew more numerous, after Constantine had given official approval to Christianity, great throngs gathered and used trumpets, cymbals, and other instruments common to the times. Following the days of monasteries, when the services of the Church were almost entirely in the hands of priests, the ritual, chanted prayers, the Te Deum and responses, were rendered by priests and choirs, the congregation looking on and listening. With the development of the organ it became the musical lead in worship.

The pipe organ was an expensive instrument and could not be owned by all churches, so the reed organ became common in church and home. For some reason the piano became a secular instrument and the soft tones of the organ were preferred in worship. The perfecting of the pipe organ, especially when electric power became available to furnish ample wind power and to operate the action, brought new life to the church, and congregational singing came into its own. All the voices of sorrow, pain, joy and exaltation became possible with the large pipe organ. It can range over the entire field of human emotions, whisper a prayer or shout a Hallelujah.

In our worship we choose hymns to be sung by choir and congregation. Rise with the choir and, if not gifted with voice, follow the words, letting the melody provide the accompaniment, and thus the message and the music will add to your worship. Let ours be a singing church and our congregations will increase. Young people will find the choir not only a place of musical instruction, but a real course in religious education, for music is set to great scripture, poetry and the best thought of the ages.

NUMBER 48.

A MODERN PARABLE

By JOHN G. TRUITT

Once upon a time there was a good man who said: "Life is short at best, so I am going to see how much help I can be to my family and to others." He pondered over it much of the day while he was at work, and one night he dreamed about it. "What is the best way to be a blessing?" That was his question.

In his dream he saw himself, his wife, little seven-year-old Tommy, and Mary, their three-year-old daughter, walking down the aisle of the church on Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock. The usher gave them a good seat, they bowed their heads—and Tommy and Mary felt the quiet come upon them, for they knew what bowing heads meant. The organ began its sweet music—and the man was awake. It was only a dream, but he could not get that beautiful picture out of his mind.

And so the good man said to himself: "It means that my family and I should go to church every Sunday, and not just occasionally and separately as we do now." He said he would tell his wife and their children about his dream and ask them if they would help him to make it real. He told them that he believed it came to him because he wanted to make the most out of life, and to discover the real way in which he could help other people most.

His wife and children were glad there was something which they could all do together, and be together as they went out among their neighbors and friends. They sat very proudly together at church, and strangely enough they all liked the service. But still more God looked down upon them with His lovingkindness. They grew intellectually, spiritually and socially. People liked him, and they had favor with both God and men. And their regular contribution to the Church became more than money—it became a part of God's LOVE!

News Flashes

Dr. Frank Laubach will speak at Norfolk, Virginia, on December 3, and at Duke University, December 4 and 5.

The choir of First Church, Greensboro, North Carolina, gave a program of sacred music at our Winston-Salem Church on Sunday evening, November 21.

Elizabeth Irene Moore, formerly of the Christian Orphanage, and Charles Floyd McCall were married at Richmond on November 20 by Rev. R. L. House. The couple will reside at 120 Ware Street, Greenville, S. C.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Virginia Missionary Association will be held on Tuesday, December 7, at First Church, Portsmouth, Virginia. There will be an afternoon session, beginning at 4 o'clock. Supper will be served and an evening session will follow. Rev. Robert Kimball is the president of the association. It is to be hoped that all old memberships will be renewed and many new ones received.

Dr. Reginald L. McCall, executive secretary of the Hymn Society of America, writes: "I am delighted with the issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN devoted to the 'Handmaid of Religion.' Many of our officers and leaders would like to share its message, and I am asking you if you have enough extra copies to sell us a sizeable number. I send special items like this to the British Society, affiliated with us, and the Congregational aspect of your journal will strike some of them favorably."

WORLD COMMUNITY PROGRAM HELD IN HOLLAND.

Five churches of this community participated in a program on World Community Day. The service was held in the Holland Baptist Church with Mrs. W. M. Aston, Jr., presiding, and a program on "Peace Is My Responsibility," given by the following ladies from the different churches: Holland Baptist—Mrs. H. L. Foster; South Quay Baptist—Mrs. Garland Saunders; Somerton Friends Meeting House—Miss Peggie Rountree; Holland Congregational Christian—Mrs. E. T. Batten; Holy Neck Congregational Christian—Mrs. Luther Grice; Prayers were made by Mrs. B. D. Jones and Dr. Will B. O'Neill.

In the "Teenage Project," twenty-eight towels were packed and a box of miscellaneous supplies sent to New Windsor and $10.68 in money.

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN- EVANGELICAL & REFORMED UNITED MISSIONS AD- VANCE RALLY.

Approximately 200 Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed people of the Valley of Virginia assembled at St. Paul's Evangelical and Reformed Church, Woodstock, Va., Sunday, November 14, for a fellowship meeting in interest of the promotion of the programs of advance of the two denominations.

The meeting began at 2:00 p. m. with the address of welcome by Rev. E. A. Lautenschlager, host pastor, and the worship service led by Rev. Wilson Cheek, Director of Youth Work of the E. & R. Church. The Congregational Christian missionary team promoting "Our Christian World Mission" was presented by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill in a panel discussion. Statements were made by Superintendent Wm. T. Scott, Dr. Hiroshi Hatanaka, Rev. Harold W. Case, and Dr. Alan Taylor. Dr. Cheek made a statement on the advance program for Christian Education.

Following the general meeting in the afternoon the assembly divided into various interest groups:

Laymen—Discussion led by Dr. H. Miller (MD), a layman of St. Paul's Church, Superintendent Scott, and Dr. Alan B. Taylor (MD). More than 60 laymen were in this group.

Women—Mrs. Guy Benchoff, Vice-President of the national E. & R. Woman's Organization, Mrs. R. A. Whitten, President of the Congregational Christian women of the Valley Conference, Miss Coghill, and Rev. Harold Case were discussion leaders in this meeting. Approximately 100 women were in attendance.

Young People—Miss Coghill, Rev. Wilson Cheek, H. Carper, President of the Congregational Christian Pilgrim Fellowship of the Valley Conference were leaders for this group which was attended by about 40 young people.

Ministers—Twenty-five Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed pastors were in attendance. This group was directed in discussion by Rev. R. A. Whitten, President of the Valley Conference and Dr. Hatanaka.

A sandwich supper was served at the church following which Drs. Taylor and Case showed pictures of their work in Africa and North Dakota, respectively.

The evening worship service at 7:30 was in charge of the host pastor and St. Paul's Choir. The principal speak-

OUR CHRISTIAN WORLD MISSION IN THE SOUTHERN CON-VENTION.

“Be it resolved that our spiritual, human and financial resources be mobilized, committed and directed in a Program of Christian Advance during the biennium 1948-50.” (Action of the 1948 session of the Convention.)

Inasmuch as our national boards and agencies have launched a Program of Advance as our denomination’s part of the larger interdenominational program of advance designated “Our Christian World Mission;” and realizing our responsibilities to be better stewards of our time, our talents and the treasures entrusted to us that the redeeming love and mind of Jesus Christ may be realized in all of our life, the above resolution was adopted by the Convention believing that our people are ready to move forward. Before we can move forward there must be a new commitment by us all. No better way can be found to make such a commitment real and vital than to consider ourselves in the light of stewards of the Lord. Therefore we propose

Progress Through Giving

Christian progress in giving has to do with more than our money. It means our enlistment in the spirit of Christian Stewardship, which is the practice of systematic and proportionate giving of time, talents, and material possessions. We base this action upon the conviction that all that we have of time, talents and possessions are a trust from God, to be used in His service and to benefit all His children.

The abnormal times here in America have greatly distorted our sense of values. There are causes for concern over the abnormal abandon with which earners of larger incomes are wasting their substance either in riotous or ignorantly extravagant living. This is not only a violation of human business and social principles, but it is a flagrant violation of God’s holy laws. It is our business as Christians to possess for ourselves and impart to others an intelligent respect for the real value of money, teaching our fellow men in precept and example—respect for God, one’s neighbor and himself in the wise use of material possessions. One’s possessions are inseparably bound up with one’s genuiness of dedication to the Christian life. “Where a man’s treasure is, there will be his heart also.”

Let us think of our Stewardship (acquiring and use) of material things in terms of investment of our

THE FELLOWSHIP OF CHRISTIAN STEWARDS.

A Christian Steward:

- RECOGNIZES that God is the Creator and Giver of all things.
- ACCEPTS these gifts as evidence of God’s loving favor.
- ACKNOWLEDGES his responsibility for the use of time, abilities, and material possessions as God’s steward.
- BELIEVES that stewardship requires regular, systematic, proportionate giving in the service of Christ.

I hereby enlist in the fellowship of Christian stewards—

- 1. By agreeing to give a tithe (10% or more) of my income to the church and the work of the Kingdom [] or
- 2. By agreeing to become a proportionate giver by giving% of my income to the church and the work of the Kingdom. I believe this is my Christian proportion. []

CHURCH AND CONVENTION STEWARDSHIP.

This would seem to be a propitious time to emphasize stewardship—midstream between Thanksgiving and Christmas. The harvest time is the time for stewardship. The claims of stewardship should be pressed during the flush of new money and the temptation to extravagance. A generous yield coupled with uniform high prices create unprecedented stewardship opportunities. This is the time for the church to “lengthen its ropes and strengthen its stakes.”

The churches of our Convention need to face squarely the issues of stewardship. It is so easy for us to be deluded with the assurance of a superior stewardship. Compare your stewardship record with the following described by Thomas M. Elliot in the Atlanta Constitution: “Dr. Stuart R. Oglesby and the Atlanta Central Presbyterian Church, of which he is pastor, deserve a whole armful of orchids, tied with velvet ribbon. How come? you ask. Well, it’s this way. Looking for churches that give as much for others as they use for current expenditures, so that orchids might be tossed out, I find that Dr. Oglesby and the Central Presbyterians have been following that practice for eighteen years. During those eighteen years they have contributed $579,025 for others, and have used $490,862 for themselves. That record is something to write home about, and I am giving them a whole wheelbarrow load of the best orchids I can find.”

We face a number of acute stewardship problems within the Convention. We lose some of our finest ministers who find it necessary to seek more adequate if not more lucrative support elsewhere. Our Convention enterprises must have additional funds to maintain normal operation, not to speak of expansion.

We earnestly hope that no church will be frightened over its increased apportionment for the new conference year. This is a test of faith as well as stewardship. Give it a fair trial, a chance to succeed. God and God’s people have done wondrous things. Who knows, even greater things may be done yet!

THE LIMITS OF STEWARDSHIP.

Conversation with a returned missionary finally turned to the subject of stewardship. The many advantages and achievements of stewardship were noted. Continued progress in this important phase of Kingdom service was anticipated. But, my missionary friend noted, there is a limit to stewardship. The feeling is widespread that any expenditure is legitimate provided it is “in the budget.” A program of stewardship may lift the level of giving in one instance and put a ceiling on giving in another. The climax of stewardship is sacrifice and, the difference in degree between the two may amount to a difference in kind. Sacrifice is at the heart of the New Testament and it was at the heart of the early church, just as it has been at the heart of the missionary movement. All our glib talk about stewardship stops short of its shining goal unless and until it is crowned with sacrifice. Advent reminds us of One who lived and died sacrificially. “If any man would come after me,” said He, “let him deny himself, take up his cross daily and follow me.”

CHRISTMAS IS COMING.

Have you finished your Christmas shopping? Many people are still wondering what they will give for Christmas presents. One easy way to solve that problem is to give a subscription to your church paper. This simplifies your shopping problem and provides a religious gift in fifty varied installments.

There are indications that our publication serves a real need, that it is read with interest and appreciation by people in many sections of the country. For instance, a subscriber in Vermont writes: “I have appreciated the value of The Christian Sun more since I have been in New England. Mother sends us The Sun and we get more news of the Congregational Church, keep up with National officers, etc., than we do with any other magazine we take, and we take quite a number.” Congratulation to that spiritually vigilant mother! A gift subscription to a daughter may bring not only interesting news and spiritual food for thought, but also weekly memories of a thoughtful mother. Try it!

Rev. Alvin O. Jacobs of Newton, Illinois, a subscriber of many years, writes: “I am now nearing my seventy-third birthday. I was a reader of the Herald of Gospel Liberty for years and enjoy reading The Christian Sun now. I was ordained in 1897 and have been a member of the Wabash, Indiana Conference since 1894. I am active every Sunday. I was twenty-two years at Olney, Illinois, where the Lord wonderfully blessed us in our work. I served about eighteen years in our First Church at Newton, Illinois, but now I go to rural churches every Sunday. It was my privilege to be at the Conventions at Norfolk, Virginia, and Burlington, North Carolina. I attended Union Christian College. I pray God’s blessings upon you and your good work down South.” Blessings on you, Brother Jacobs, and the Wabash, Indiana Conference!

What we need most today is confidence. It is becoming of Christians to look for confidence that cannot be shaken. Springs of confidence are available that are not concerned whether the dollar is worth 60 cents or $1.50. The first great spring of confidence in the Scripture is the kept promise of God. We have a God in the Bible who put a promise on every page. Someone once counted 36,000 such promises. Not one of these promises has ever been broken; that is why we have faith in God.

The Two Wills of God

By MARY FRANCES THELIN, Ph.D.*

In the closing minutes of this North Carolina and Virginia Conference in session at Lynchburg, Va., it is fitting that we turn our thoughts to God. In Him we live and move and have our being; and without His help none of the good causes of which we have spoken here would have begun.

The thought I propose for our meditation is this: God has two wills. One of them is concerned with perfection: the steady will that there be absolute goodness, beauty, and truth, as in heaven, so throughout all the created world. The other is concerned with immediate possibilities: the will that each individual, each group, each nation, shall in this moment lay hold—not on perfection—upon the noblest possibility which is open to him, considering the sort of being he is now, and what theology calls his "acquired second nature of sin."

Every parent has such a double will for his child. He has both a vision of the kind of man he would like the child to grow up to be, and a more immediate goal based upon intimate understanding of the child. In history, the Greeks understood God's steady concern for perfection; and the Hebrews understood His passionate immersion in the relativities of history. Both are true, and it is the glory of the New Testament that it finds room for both eternity and history. Those of our theological writers who are currently seeking to win us away from the Greek in the name of "Biblical theology" are on the wrong track; they are going backwards from the New Testament to the less adequate insight of the Old.

But now, what is the relationship between the will of God as perfection, and the will of God as immediate possibility? How does one get from the minister's sermon on Sunday morning, with its portrayal of the beauty of holiness, to God's guidance for one's own life? How does one get from the standards of life in the Kingdom of Heaven to a next step in my own struggle with my unregenerate ego?

The usual method is to start with perfect love, is it not, and then to tone it down, to compromise. And how wrong it is! The perfection of God is way up here (imagine a line as high as one can reach). Can I be this good (somewhat lower gesture)? Or this good? Or only this good (way down)? Whatever the answer, the result is discouragement, frustration, defeat. Yes, God forgives us in the midst of sin; else there is no hope for us. But where is the joy of the Christian life? Where is the experience of grace as power?

The fact of the matter is that the knowledge of the relative will of God for me, the possibility toward which I really ought to stretch every nerve,

HAMLET'S SOLILOQUY

FINANCIALLY INTERPRETED.

To pledge or not to pledge—that is the question:

Whether 'tis nobler in man to gather

The Church's blessings free and to leave to others

To foot the bills and spread the gospel tidings,

Or to take a pen to sign a pledge that's duplex

And share the cost. To write—to sign—to pledge—

To pledge—perchance to pay! Aye, there's the rub;

For in six months I may have lowered salary, Stocks may have shrunk, or bad investments swat me,

And then, besides, the increased cost of living

Must give me pause; then, too, there's the respect

I owe myself to run a costly motor,

The dues to clubs, the children off to college!

Why not content myself with casual giving On pleasant Sundays, when I journey churchward,

And not commit myself to certain giving? Why not? Because I always do my part!

And since this is my duty, my concern,

I, therefore, will not shun my task

And lose the name of action.

—Author Unknown.

does not come from the general prescription of the sermon. Neither does it come from the teacher of the Bible. It can only come to me from prayer. (This is where the irrationalists among theologians and the Christian psychotherapists have been right, and some of our moralistic liberal preaching has been shallow.) And I have in mind here prayer in which man strives before God for the most difficult of all human achievements, true self-knowledge. I mean prayer in which all the conflicting desires within us are allowed their say, while the self stands by to observe, and at times cries out that this it does not wish. In prayer of this sort we discover the meaning of our creaturehood, and our sin, and the ineffable grace of the God Who is redeeming us.

The relationship between the perfect will of God and His immediate will for us is not this and this (from high to low). The seed of the preaching must sink down into the depths of our being and there abide in the darkness until it has really taken root. It is sown as ethics; it comes up as psychology. We study the Jesus of history; our Redeemer is the Christ of faith.

It has seemed to me that this conception of a double will of God might conceivably help some persons who have been put off from prayer by a too simple thought of God and His righteousness. How many persons at one time or another say, "There is no use in my praying, because I can't offer myself to God. He would tell me to give away my goods, or to turn the other cheek, or to overcome my racial feelings, and I'm not prepared to do that. Like Augustine, I want to be saved—but not just yet. So there's no use." How does such a person really know that God would make just this demand, that this would be the first thing He would ask? Perhaps eventually, for all of these are conceivably a part of God's will for perfection; but is there any evidence that these are the faults to which He would first direct attention? He is love; He is wise; He is understanding. Should we not at least turn to Him, and see what He will do?

Art thou weary, art thou languid,

Art thou sore distressed?

"Come to me," saith One, "and coming, Be at rest."

Hath He marks to lead me to Him

If He be my guide?

In His feet and hands are wound-prints, And His side.

Is there diadem, as monarch,

That His brow adorns?

Yea, a crown in very surety, But of thorns.

If I ask Him to receive me,

Will He say me nay?

Not till earth, and not till heaven Pass away.

Finding, following, keeping, struggling,

Is He sure to bless?

Saints, apostles, prophets, martyrs, Answer, "Yes."

The story of Saul, the first king over United Israel, is one of the most pathetic in all the Old Testament. That the man was popular is very evident; that he was courageous cannot be denied; that he genuinely loved his nation and his people appears again and again. The tragedy, however, lies in the fact that he was never able to measure up to the responsibilities that his powers laid upon him.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is good to know that God has planned it so that we can all have a definite part in helping to make this a good and beautiful world. Those who read these lines will appreciate the fact that the Church is God's effort in carrying on the good work of Jesus Christ in the world. We know that God so cared for the world that he sent Jesus to bless it and to save it. Jesus established an ever-increasing succession of followers to carry on his work. And he vouchsafed for that group of followers the Holy Spirit to bless and help them. There is no doubt—at least for those who do not doubt God—that the Church is the custodian of the ways and truths for the coming of a better and more Christian day. We are a part of the Church. We are co-workers together with God. It is good that God has been so gracious to us that it may be that way, and that we may have the joy of helping in so great and divine task.

To that purpose we are called as his followers. Some of us can give our lives as ministers, others as choir directors, others as directors of religious education and church assistants, others as missionaries of many different vocations such as preachers, teachers, nurses, doctors, etc. Right now all these avenues of church work at home and abroad need to be presented to youth. Many of them should be challenged to hear the call of God to the giving of their lives in service such as above mentioned. By believing in the Church, and its divine purpose, and its place in the world—by believing in it very strongly, strongly enough to talk favorably about it, to give liberally to it, and to work and pray earnestly for it, we may help to recruit for the Church many of the very finest youths from our congregations. They will know that it is a really great and practical way to serve the world—to serve God by serving their fellowmen.

What I set out to say, however, is that by our faithful contribution of a fair portion of our earnings to the avenues of the church week after week and month after month we can help God in bringing about a better world. These tiny streams of hard-earned, prayerfully-presented, and regularly-given sums of money are no doubt the streams that water the Christian faith in both the seen and known, and the unseen and unknown, places throughout this troubled world. "The stream whereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacle of the Most High; God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved: God shall help her and that right early. The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice" (Ps. 46:4-6). Yes, perhaps, through our all too little gifts. The sweet voice of God, at home, abroad in this troubled world. My little gifts regularly given—rightfully, proportionately, persistently presented—and yours, and yours, will build the stream which shall indeed make glad the city of God. He is counting on us being good stewards—"not to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved."

JOHN G. TRUITT.

MONEY TALKS.

Nothing is more true. Money talks the universal language of "Give me what I want most." It tells the world what its possessor thinks about and desires. It speaks louder than words in declaration of its possessor's religious faith and interest in the Church of God, or of its possessor's lack of faith and of religious concern. The men and women and boys and girls who compose the membership of your church rally each year to its support because of their love for God and their church which proudly carries their names upon its Membership Roll. Their pledges and their gifts voice their appreciation of what their church has accomplished and of its inspiring Christian fellowship. Their pledges are their votes of confidence, their declaration of loyalty, their way of saying "Yes" to their faith—their way of saying, "My Church must continue to 'Grow and Glow and Go.'"

MISSIONS ADVANCE PROGRAM.

A meeting that attracted unusual interest was the Missions Advance program held at Woodstock, Va., November 14, 1948, in the old historic St. Paul's Evangelical and Reformed Church, and sponsored jointly by the Evangelical & Reformed and Congregational Christian Churches of the Valley of Virginia and surrounding territory. This regional meeting was arranged by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Secretary of the Missions Council and planned by the Rev. E. A. Lautenschlager, pastor of the host church.

It was indeed a memorable occasion when the large congregation assembled at 2:30 p. m., and following a worship period, were privileged to hear messages from world leaders who presented a challenge for advance in World Missions. Rev. W. T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, briefly outlined our proposed program, world-wide in its scope and calling for the enlistment of every one of our churches. Rev. Wilson Cheek, National Youth Leader of the Evangelical and Reformed Churches, reviewed the program of the E. & R. Churches in which the young people would be able to accomplish much for the Kingdom and for the youth of our world. Doctor Hiroshi Hatanaka charmed the audience with his earnest and inspirational appeal for helpful Christian fellowship and service. Rev. Harold Case gave a most vivid account of the Indians and their problems, whose lives will be uprooted and greatly disturbed by the building of the mammoth dam on the Missouri River.

Group meetings were then held for ministers, laymen, women and young people. The ministers' group was led by the writer, and Doctor Hatanaka answered questions proposed by those present, and much interest was shown in the discussions. More than twenty ministers were present during the afternoon and evening. The laymen's group was headed by Dr. H. Miller and the guest speaker of this group was Doctor Allan B. Taylor. The women's group had as their leader, Mrs. Guy Benchoff and the guest speaker was Rev. Harold Case. The youth meeting was presided over by Howard N. Carper, Jr., President of the Valley P. F., and Mr. Cheek was the speaker for the young people.

Following the group meetings a picnic supper was served in the basement of the church and proved to be a most enjoyable part of the program. After the meal was served, pictures of the Indian work were shown on the screen by Mr. Case, followed by pictures presented by Doctor Taylor showing a number of scenes in Durban, Africa, and our Hospital there of which Doctor Taylor is Superintendent.

More than two hundred people remained for the evening worship service which concluded the meeting. Special music was a special feature of the worship period and Doctor Taylor inspired the audience with his in-

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

THE CHURCH AND FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR THE COLLEGE.

What will the Church do in providing for the financial support of Elon College?

The Convention apportioned a total of $12,500 to the several conferences constituting the Convention. The conferences in turn apportioned their allotments to the local churches constituting their conference. The Convention also authorized the churches to send their payments on apportionments to the Convention office and instructed the Convention office to transmit the same to the college.

Many of our churches have complied fully with the Convention's request and the Convention office has cooperated with the college in a very satisfactory way. This is all good and well but, unfortunately, for the college we are short of our goal by $954.47. Not within years has the apportionment for the college been paid in full. The apportionment is small enough, far too small, and when it is not raised in full the college is left in an unfortunate condition. The Convention realized this fact and at its recent session voted that the college year run concurrently with the calendar year. This means that we have until January 1, 1949, to secure the balance to the college on apportionments.

Some of the churches that have not paid their apportionments in full may want to make a special effort so that they may be listed as banner churches so far as the college is concerned. I know there are churches in the Convention that have raised and paid their apportionments for the college in full and are anxious to see the college apportionment paid in full for one time. It would be a fine thing if all of our churches and Sunday schools would, on a given Sunday before Christmas, give the members of the Sunday school and the individuals of the church congregation an opportunity to make a free-will offering to Elon College so that the college apportionments for 1948 might be raised in full.

In these days of high cost of operating, unusual expenses, and increased faculty salaries, the needs of the college cannot be over-emphasized. This is an appeal to our church, all of our churches within the Southern Convention, to join hands and gifts that the college may receive the assistance that the Convention authorized. If some one church would lead the way, I am sure that others would follow.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The Sunday schools and churches of the Southern Convention have done a very good job for the church year of 1947-48. Yet, they, together, are short of their goal for the college. Many of the churches, of course, have raised their apportionments in full. Others have not. The question confronting them now is, "Shall the stronger churches help the weaker ones or shall the willing churches pay part or all of those that are unwilling and refuse to cooperate?" If neither of the above mentioned plans is pursued and the full apportionment for the college is not raised, obviously, the college will suffer. A second effort on the part of our more influential churches would result in a complete victory for the college in regard to apportionments for this year.

We are reporting a total of $39.09 received from the Convention office last week. The question is are these contributions to be counted on 1948 or are they meant for the 1949 apportionment.

Attention should be called to the fact that according to the Convention action we are still in the present college year and will be until January 1, 1949. This provision is made so that our churches might by cooperative efforts reach the goal set for the college by the Convention before we begin on the next year.

The college greatly appreciates any assistance given and is always anxious to abide by the wishes of the giver.

full life—which includes time, talent and treasure—for the fulfilment of Jesus' plan for the world.

Progress through giving is our growth in the right use of the material and spiritual blessings God has entrusted to us for the betterment of all His children—our Brothers!

Progress through giving is to manage in a Christian way one's life and all its resources for God and the good of all.

Progress through giving calls us to look gratefully at our pocketbooks and bank accounts; to look sympathetically at the needs of others; and to look understandingly at God's Cross: "Ye are not your own for you have been bought for a price—Jesus Christ."

formative, inspirational and challenging address. After the benediction was pronounced by Mr. Case, the choral response and silent prayer we turned our faces homeward inspired in heart by what we had seen and heard and with a feeling that we, too, are part of a world-wide program for Christ and resolved to give ourselves unreservedly in the service of our Lord whose challenge has come to us through His faithful followers.

WORKSHOP TO BE HELD.

The annual North Carolina Church Recreation Workshop will be held at Mitchell College in Statesville, N. C., this December 28 through 31 (lunch). Allen C. McSween of First Presbyterian Church, Lincolnton, N. C., and Bob Fakkema of Duke University will direct the Workshop.

For the past two years, the Workshop has been held at Wilson, N. C. The Workshop emphasizes recreation that might be used in the local churches. All church leaders, ministers, Sunday school teachers, directors of religious education, should be in attendance. There will be handicraft, much wood work and metal work, metal modeling, making of slides for projectors, folk songs, folk games and folk lore. Games and stunts of all kinds will be taught. Visual aids will be demonstrated.

Plan now to attend the Recreation Workshop for church leaders and young people at Mitchell College during the Christmas holidays. The cost will be announced later.

GREETINGS FROM AMERICA.*

It is a real joy to express the deep and sincere wishes that our Congregational Christian Churches would send to you in Great Britain. Surrounded here as I write by the serene and rugged beauty of the Green Mountains of the State of Vermont, I recall so vividly the many expressions of goodwill you asked me to carry back to these United States last year. I have done so and am doing so. Now let me express for our people the hearty greetings they would send in return.

Know that in these difficult days our thoughts are with you. Be assured that whatever comes our prayers are for you. The bonds that lie between us are far deeper than our ties of language. They are bonds of a common ideal and heritage. They are of a surprisingly similar view of life. Those bonds are of a religious nature.

You must ever remember that we are people like yourselves. Judge us not by the films of Hollywood nor by the magazine advertisements. Look at your own average life, and you glimpse something of the American average life. We have our slums and poor as you do. We have our trials and tribulations just as you do. Please think of us not as superhumans nor as spivs. We are more like you than you often think we are.

Be patient with us as well. You see, it is hard for us to realize we as a people are in a place of leadership and power today. We have never really wanted to be there. Now we are not sure what to do since we are here. Yet, we will not fail to respond to this responsibility as it stands before us. We will make mistakes, but have faith in us. We over here shall live in such a way, so all of us shall live—for we will be living for all the world.

Remember that we have not experienced the conditions of war as you did. Try to help us enter into what you knew and know now. It is a gap far wider than you realize. Help us to understand. We will do our best and try to enter into all you have gone through and all the struggle you are going through now.

And please do remember this, Friends of Britain: What we have done and are doing for you is not done because we feel sorry for you. It is not a charity affair. Never think of it as that. We do not. You see, you are our fellows in Christ. We are joined by the great bond of Christian fellowship. Today we happen to have the means and advantages in the world. We must use them to serve God better. We share them with you because we are of One Family under our God. Out of our love for you as Christian with Christian, we share with you.

So we here in these United States of America send you our deepest greetings now as we do continually. To you who are in Christ we who are in Christ also wish you grace, mercy and peace, and ask God's richest blessings ever to rest upon you. We are miles from you, but we are near in the Body of Christ.

CAREER MISSIONARY APPOINTED.

Miss Jean Barr Littlejohn, daughter of Mrs. Ethel Dicker Littlejohn of 1615 Washburn Street, Scranton, Pennsylvania, has been appointed as a career missionary by the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, Massachusetts, for religious and social work in Foochow, China.

Miss Littlejohn, who was born in Scranton, is now Director of Religious Education at the First Congregational Church of Ravenna, Ohio, but will be leaving her post there in December to prepare for China.

A graduate of Schaufler College, B. S. in religious education, Class of 1944, Miss Littlejohn did social work while still a student in Cleveland and spent one summer in work with migrant Americans of Mexican descent in western Ohio under the Home Missions Council.

"I believe that Christianity has the answer to the world's needs and that some consecrated trained people must go to the various places in the world to share its message. I want to be a part of the great missionary adventure, to serve and live with people whom I believe, through their close understanding of the way of Jesus may help to lead the rest of the world from its materialistic philosophy to the acceptance of 'true Christianity,'" said Miss Littlejohn when questioned as to her reason for enlisting in foreign Christian service.

MISSIONARY EDUCATOR DIES.

Dr. Howard S. Galt, distinguished Congregational Christian missionary educator under the American Board of Foreign Missions, since 1899, died November 7 in Claremont, California, in his seventy-sixth year. Dr. and Mrs. Galt retired in 1944 after forty-five years of service in North China. They first reached China just before the dramatic year of 1900 when the Boxer Rebellion occurred, and went through the siege of the British Legation from June to August, 1900. Dr. Galt has lived and worked with Chinese students through many succeeding crises. His last term of service ended while he was a prisoner in the Japanese internment camp at Weihsien. He returned home on the second repatriation ship, Gripsholm, in 1943.

First teaching in North China College of which he was for a time president, Dr. Galt worked with other groups in negotiating for a union institution which eventually became Yenching University. For years he was a professor of this university teaching mathematics, education and sociology. Three different times he was acting president of Yenching.

LIFE IS GIVEN US TO SHARE.
A Cluster of Valuable Stewardship Illustrations from Life Compiled
By Mrs. W. M. ALEXANDER.

I.

The urgent call had come from the church telling of the great need for funds to feed the hungry people of our war-torn world. The church school teacher had told the children of hungry boys and girls in other parts of the earth and suggested that they save some of their allowance to help send food to these children. One little girl, impressed by this need, secured a little bank and began to save for this fund.

Not many weeks later she was stricken by a dread disease and almost before even her parents realized she was gone. Several days after the funeral, the heartbroken father went to his pastor's study carrying the little bank in which was $1.47. The pastor talked about Mary and what a lovely child she had been, and said to the father, "What is the thing about Mary that you prize most as you remember her?" The father pointed to the little bank and said, "That—she didn't live but eight years but she lived long enough to learn the lesson that many people never learn. She learned that life is given to share; and has taught it to the rest of us."

II.

Elizabeth's mother was away from home and she had been left in the care of Lucy, the Negro maid. After awhile Lucy missed the little girl—suspected that she was calling upon two ladies who lived next door. She went to get the child and remarked, "Come on, I'm going to the store and you can go along." As the child was leaving one of the ladies got her purse and handed her a nickel and said, "Get yourself an ice cream cone at the store."

Elizabeth took the nickel and looked at it a moment and then handed it back with these words: "Thank you very much, but a nickel wouldn't buy Lucy one, too." One does not need to be told the kind of parents and grand parents that had had a part in the training of this little girl—all of them devoted Christians, giving largely of their time, ability and money to the church's program. She was also learning the lesson "that life is given to share."

III.

Katherine had been greatly interested as she had heard her father and mother discussing their contribution to the rehabilitation program on the mission fields which their church was undertaking. The father had been buying war bonds and Katherine had been receiving credit for these in the contests which the grade schools of the city had sponsored. As the matter of their church contribution was being considered, Katherine said: "Daddy, let's give one of our $100.00 savings bonds." The father had not been thinking in such an amount and told the child that was too much. The little girl insisted but to no avail. The next Saturday she slipped away and called on her next-door neighbors, telling them that she wanted her father to give $100.00 to the special fund which her church was raising to help feed the hungry people of the world but that her father felt they couldn't give that much, so she was helping him raise it. And then she suggested to the neighbor that perhaps she might be willing to let her and her mother wash her heavy blankets now that it was spring. The neighbor, with an effort to keep a straight face said, "And how much would you charge for the blankets?" Katherine replied, "O, I'll leave that for you to decide; it's the Lord's money and whatever you think is enough will be all right with me."

Imagine the mother's surprise when her daughter arrived with her little wagon piled high with the neighbor's blankets, but she would not fail the child, so together they did the laundry. Of course the father gave the $100.00 instead of the $75.00 he had planned, and Katherine is paying the extra $25.00 out of her weekly allowance which has been generously increased to meet the emergency.

This story became noised abroad in the local church of his family and many a subscription was increased because of the loyal devotion and unselfish spirit of little nine-year-old Katherine.

"A little child shall lead them."

If you can't be a large giver, give what you can. God will understand.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR FRIENDS:

While you have been enjoying the excellent stories written in England, I have been traveling. First of all, I did a silly thing—I stuck a rusty nail in my foot and almost didn't get to go on my trip. I had to take anti-tetanus serum and it made me sick. I was doubly sick, because of the serum and because I thought I would miss going. But finally, I seemed well enough to go, and so on Sunday, the fourteenth of November, I flew to Willow Run Airport where I was met by friends, whom I visited, and saw their new baby girl. She is lovely and it is nice to meet new little friends. From there I flew to Milwaukee to attend the National Assembly of the United Council of Church Women. I was representing the Richmond Council of Church Women, Eastern Virginia Congregation Christian Women and also received press releases for this paper.

There were over 2,000 women attending these sessions which were held in the large Milwaukee Auditorium. There were so many people there that I didn't see a friend of mine from Richmond during my entire stay! And we looked for each other, too. Our day began at 8:00 o'clock and no matter how hard I tried it was always midnight when I got back to the hotel. And because of my foot I was supposed to be taking it easy and getting lots of rest. The day's schedule was divided into different types of things: business, inspirational talks, and workshop groups that studied various problems of our day.

One evening the women of the Congregational Christian denomination had a meeting. Mrs. Sarah Murdy, the head of our National Fellowship, presided and the women of Wisconsin served us delicious red apples. I enjoyed spending some time with Mrs. Lester and Mrs. Garren of North Carolina. It was good to hear their accents! I was always having to say things over for the crisp speaking people of Milwaukee.

At the banquet given by the Church Woman, the magazine published by the United Council, we were given leis of different colors to wear around our necks. The women of Wisconsin had made those and they were colorful and appreciated. On the same evening we saw the first full-length movie made by the Protestant Film Commission—"Prejudice," and you may be seeing it soon.

Many people have asked me what was the high spot for me. That is hard to say—there were high moments every day. There was the warmth of spirit which came when I hear Dr. Antonie Nopitsch of Germany, Dr. Hilda Lazarus of India, and others tell what good had come to them from the World Day of Prayer offerings. There was the joy of communing with 2,000 other believers in Christ, many of whom were of different races. I was constantly amazed at the ability and leadership which women can and do assert in our world. Because of our united efforts the women have made their voice really heard! Mrs. Harper Sibley was re-elected president of the Council and she is a woman of great insight and has a firm hand for steering so large a group.

I left Milwaukee by plane just before the snow came to the Midwest and I flew to Washington in four hours. It was a lovely night with a full moon shining on our plane and it was so calm and smooth that I felt as if the plane was standing still; but we were—we were covering more than 200 miles an hour! It is good to be home again although it was hard to come back to the realities of every day after such an inspirational meeting. I hope that many of you will grow into leadership for the United Council of Church Women!

Have you placed your Advent candles? Remember, you need four—one to be lighted each Sunday until all are burning the Sunday before Christmas.

PEACH JAM.

By JOY C. BAKER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

The delicious aroma of ripe peaches greeted Mrs. Mayes as soon as she entered Jerry's room. She dropped the newly-ironed handkerchiefs upon his dresser, beside the airplane model which he hoped would win a prize at the fair tomorrow, and quickly pulled out a drawer.

Peach fragrance flooded out over her. Delving deeply, she brought out ten big golden peaches. "Where did he get them?" she asked herself, troubled by her discovery. "They're not market fruit."

Home-grown peaches were scarce. Nobody had any left—except Mr. Warren, who was saving his to exhibit at the fair.

"Did Jerry rob his tree?" Inquiringly she frowned at the largest peach, from whose rosy side a piece had been bitten. Strangely, the bite had not been eaten but lay, oozing rich juice, by the side of the rest of that largest peach.

She remembered Jerry's "nine" had played ball in that park that morning. "But," she realized grimly, "the park adjoins the Warren garden."

Slowly she went downstairs. At sight of the fruit on the buffet, she asked herself angrily, "Why didn't he eat those peaches? He deserves severe punishment. And he'll get it!"

However, on second thought, as she prepared dinner, she decided, "We must give him a chance to make amends—if he can."

Jerry's father agreed to this. "His conscience can punish him severely," he said. "Give him until tomorrow noon."

Dinner finished, Jerry slid from his chair and smiled coaxingly. "I have to help with an exhibit at the fair."

Without spoken objections they let him go. At eleven he came in quietly and slipped upstairs. Soon his room was dark.

Next morning, as Mrs. Mayes was cooking breakfast, Mr. Mayes came in frowning. "This is serious, Ann," he said, holding up their small-city daily for her to see the headlines:

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS RAID SANDERS FRUIT STAND

Police-Chief Gage Says Boys Involved in Theft of Melons Will Be Apprehended Soon

The laid the paper where Jerry would see it when he sat down to breakfast. After Mr. Mayes finished saying grace, they saw that Jerry's face was very red. Breakfast over, Mr. Mayes, his usually pleasant face sternly set, rose to go to the office.

Very soon, Jerry left for the fair, carrying his plane model proudly. Mrs. Mayes went to his room and looked into the drawer. With transparent tape the bite had been fastened back into the biggest peach.

At twelve-thirty Jerry did not appear for lunch—nor at one.

His mother sat down in the dining room and, yawning wearily, began mending Jerry's shirt. Her head nodded and drooped.

Jerry's footsteps were racing across the porch—"running away from

MERGER NEWS.

Evangelical and Reformed young people and Congregational Christian young people are frequently getting together for fellowship. They are learning more about each other and are finding out how closely we are related in beliefs and practices.

Rev. Arthur Detwiler of Mt. Hope E. & R. Church, spoke recently to the Ministerial Association of Elon College on the position of the Evangelical and Reformed Church in the World Council of Churches. Those present enjoyed his presentation of the subject. After the meeting he spoke to several of the students about coming out to his church on the evening of November 7 and joining in a panel discussion on the merger. We were to speak before the newly-organized young adult fellowship. Before he left that evening, Mr. Detwiler was assured of having a group come out to his church.

Melva Foster, John Sturtevant (a PF'er from Rhode Island and past State Social Action Chairman) and I went to the meeting and were happy to be with the young people of the Mt. Hope Church. By the way, they have a new hut in the proximity of a lake. A fine place for fun and fellowship. It was in the hut that we met. The panel was composed of two of the E. & R.'s, Melva Foster and myself. (John injected the "northern viewpoint" when needed.) Another E. & R. acted as moderator for the discussion. History, organization and policies were brought out by both sides.

Following was a period of folk games and refreshments. We learned to know each other a little better.

On the 21st day of November, the Mt. Hope Church was the host for the State Meeting of the UCYM. Around 350 were present for the one-day meeting.

I would like to mention, finally, that E. & R.'s met with the C. C.'s in the Valley on November 14. In this conference meeting, the Missions Team, composed of Dr. Hatanaka, Dr. Taylor and Rev. Case, brought to the "merged" gathering of adults and young people messages of inspiration.

Ever so often, there are occasions for getting together as "kin" denominations. We should take these opportunities and put them to use for better understanding and greater Christian fellowship.

THE MAGIC OF SHARING.

We really do not own anything until we begin to share it with others, and even then we are only partners in its ownership. Stevenson tells of Hazlitt, the English writer, visiting a great man's house to view his paintings. Suddenly he began "to triumph over these noble and wealthy owners, because he was more capable of enjoying their costly possessions than they were; because they had paid the money and he had received the pleasure."

We own nothing until we start to share our ownership. Then it spreads out and begins to pay its dividends. In my library are many choice books that I love, and which others have loved, as evidenced by the bookplates in them, and some day others will own these same books. I dare say that every other owner, if he still lives, still owns their contents, as well as I do. I am just a keeper for a time.

We all own the daylight, the beauty of earth, all the sunsets, every flower that our eyes see and admire, and every song our feathered friends give forth. Where appreciation is, there is ownership. The human mind is a tenant of ours, and it is through this mind that we are able to acquire the love of things and own them as they stimulate our mental and spiritual innate qualities.

No one can long be happy with any possession that he cannot share with others. It would grow rusty and useless, otherwise. The spread of ownership is in the price first paid. The man with a car delights in the enjoyment that others may have in it. The lover of a book is not satisfied until he has spread the news of its worth to many others.

It has been said that the only things that we keep are the things that we give away. We may give away the thing, but keep the love—and love is something that spreads out, with never an end to it. With love and admiration I turn the pages of some book that a former owner has carefully marked and enthused over. There is something so much more precious than the intrinsic value of such a book.—The Pilgrim Tidings.

CHRISTMAS SEALS.

Americans are quick to create symbols for their cherished institutions and ideals: Thanksgiving, Mother's Day, and the buddy poppy. Very few symbols in American life are more readily recognized and respected than the double-barred cross of the nationwide tuberculosis campaign, or the annual Christmas seals which spread the offensive against the silent killer of all ages.

Very shortly the Richmond Tuberculosis Association will dispatch its 1948 seals to households throughout Richmond. And thus will fortunate folk, like you and me, have the opportunity to do our little bit against one of the severest infectious diseases known on our continent.

Last year 125 people died in Richmond of tuberculosis, representing a death rate of 55.3 for each 100,000 people. This was somewhat higher than that death rate of 39.9 throughout the State at large. Since Virginia is in that belt of states having a relatively high incidence of TB, it can be understood that Richmond suffers from the disease with relative severity.

When you buy Christmas seals, the Richmond Tuberculosis Association is provided with funds by which to conduct examinations of school children, factory and office workers, and other groups; to spread educational matter that will prepare individuals to deal with TB; to enable TB sufferers in the City's Pine Camp Hospital to fight their affliction and to recover from it, meanwhile keeping happy and acquiring new skills with which to enhance their spiritual and economic resources.

Should you fail to receive your seals, don't hesitate to call the Association at 407 North 12th Street, Richmond, Va.—Dial 2-0638.

LETTERS IN THE BIBLE.

LESSON XI—DECEMBER 12, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: I write this to you who believe in the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life.—I John 5:13.

LESSON: Philippians, I Timothy, I John.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ephesians 3: 13-21.

Letters in the Bible.

There are a number of references in the Bible to letters. The Old Testament refers to a letter which David wrote (II Samuel 11:14), which Hezekiah received, (I Kings 19:14), which Jezebel wrote (I Kings 21:8) and many other letters which were written and passed from one to another, conveying news, and making demands. But few of these letters are recorded.

It is when we come into the New Testament that we find letters, and then some more letters, in the best sense. There are twenty-one in all, and Paul wrote thirteen of them. He undoubtedly wrote other letters, perhaps many letters which have not been preserved in the New Testament. But the letters we do have are priceless, and they have wielded an incalculable influence on the history of the world.

Paul's Letters.

As has been stated above, Paul wrote thirteen of the letters in the New Testament. They are varied in length, in theme, in style, in contents, in purpose, in emphasis. Some are doctrinal, while some are more personal. All of them exalt Christ and the Church, and all of them, even though they are doctrinal, emphasize the practical aspects of Christianity. Paul believed that creed should express itself in character and conduct. He wrote doctrine that his people might know how to live. He gave a reason for the faith that was in him, so that they might share his peace and his joy. There are difficult sections in some of his letters. Peter wrote that our brother, Paul, wrote some things hard to be understood—perhaps he was thinking about portions of Paul's letter to the Romans. But by and large, one can understand Paul well enough to know what he ought to do for Christ and in Christ's name.

It should be remembered, too, that Paul's letters are among the first writings in the New Testament. In fact, scholars are rather well agreed that First Thessalonians is the first book that written in the New Testament. And several of Paul's other letters antedate the gospels. Furthermore, it is from Paul's letters that we get most of our information concerning the organization and the life of the early church. And it was the letters of Paul which gave the Christian movement its literature in its early days.

Other Letters.

Other apostles wrote letters which have been preserved in the New Testament. Peter, James, John, Jude also wrote letters to their fellow-Christians and the churches. They give valuable information in regard to the life of the church, in regard to the dangers which beset the church, and in regard to Christian conduct.

The Miracle of It All.

Come to think of it, there is an element of the miraculous in these letters. Here were men of that far off day who now and then sat down and rather laboriously wrote letters to their friends or to churches, for the most part because some problem had arisen, or because some information was desired, and then sent their letters off, usually by the hands of friends. Little did they think that there was any likelihood that the letters would survive even through their generation. And yet, here we are, nineteen hundred years later, all around the world, turning to these letters for light and inspiration, and the end is not yet, for until the end of time these letters will be the foundation of our Christian teaching and the grounds of our Christian doctrine. Furthermore these letters, together with the remainder of the Bible, have gone through the fires and the desperate and evil designs of men who sought to destroy them from the face of the earth. When one thinks of this, the wonder grows, and one sees in it the hand of God and His overruling providence.

A Letter of Thanks.

Philippians is primarily a letter of thanks. It was written from a jail by a man who was facing the death penalty. Some of his friends in Philippi had sent him gifts, and out of a heart of gratitude, Paul wrote to thank them. But of course he could not just say "thank you." His heart was filled with a great joy and peace in believing and he had to tell his Philippian friends about it. It is a warm, personal letter, and its dominant note is joy, even though it was written by a man in prison, awaiting the end. It makes good reading, inspiring reading, thrilling reading. Within the brief compass of this letter there are packed away many, many gems of spiritual insight and uplift. Read it through at a sitting to get the full impact of its spirit upon your heart.

A Letter to a Young Friend.

I Timothy was written by Paul to Timothy, whom he loved to call his "son in the faith." Converted under the preaching of Paul, and then a companion of Paul and one of his trusted and capable helpers, Paul had a deep and warm affection for the younger man. He wrote him at least twice, and his letters to the young Timothy are full of personal counsel, as well as of principles of church government, and matters of sound doctrine. Every minister, young and old, should read I and II Timothy again and again. Such a discipline and delight would help one to be a good minister of Jesus Christ, and a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

A Letter to a Church.

I John might be called a letter to a church. Written late in life by a veteran of the cross to his Christian friends, it is a "love letter" in a double sense. It is written out of love, and it is written about love. For this man, who knew his Lord most intimately, religion in essence was love. But although the letter was a "love letter" it was rooted in the earth. It has some plain and practical words concerning the heresies of that day and of this day, and some timely warnings against the temptations to which the church and its members are always subject. As one reads it, one can see something of why the Early Church could in all sober reality conquer the world which at first despised it, then hated it, and finally bowed before it. And one sees how the church of today must prepare itself for the battle of the present age if she is to triumph as the church of old triumphed.

In the matter of tithing there is a direct and personal challenge in the book of Malachi: "Prove me now, herewith, if I will not pour you out a blessing."

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON STEWARDSHIP OF N. C. & VA. CONFERENCE.

The General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in its June, 1948, session voted unanimously to emphasize Christian Stewardship during the next biennium. Christian Stewardship is the directing of all of life toward doing the will of God. The constituency of our churches is called to that kind of commitment which manifests itself in the systematic and proportionate giving of time, abilities, and possessions to God as an act of worship and of recognition of our responsibility to our fellow men. The continuing mission of the Church is dependent upon our practice of Christian Stewardship.

Emphasis upon Christian Stewardship necessitates the enlistment of every Christian, that he may give his prayers, his personal influence, and his full share of funds. As one contributes his abilities as a steward he casts his vote in favor of the consummation of the Church's mission. An emphasis upon Christian Stewardship reveals three objectives, each of which can be realized through a living of Christian Stewardship. The first objective is to grow in individual spiritual stature. This is the seed-bed of Christian Stewardship, for the strength of a Christian group depends upon the power of each of its members. A second objective of Christian Stewardship is the advancement of our local churches in spiritual power and moral influence. The latent power of our churches must be loosed that they may bring God's Kingdom to the human heart. The third is to see more clearly the world-wide program of our fellowship. Through Christian Stewardship we can dedicate our time, our talents, and our possessions for the building of a Christian world—one which accepts the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

That these three aims of Christian Stewardship may become an actuality, your committee recommends:

First, a sevenfold program of Personal Christian Stewardship as suggested by the Commission on Stewardship. These are:

1. Reading the Bible daily, together with the "literature of power."
2. Worshipping weekly with fellow Christians.
3. Arranging recreation, physical and mental, to balance the main vocational interests.
4. Giving a certain number of hours of Christian work each week for which no pay is received.

5. Making certain one's income is a result of constructive activity, especially in the field of investments in stocks and bonds.
6. Assigning a definite percentage of one's income for Christian purposes.
7. Telling others of Christ, and helping them to lead disciplined Christian lives.

Second, that our churches encourage Scriptural methods of finance, and that tithing be recommended as a working scheme of proportionate giving by which we can make the principle of stewardship actual and living.

Third, that our people be encouraged to listen to the radio program, "Stewardship on the Air," to be broadcast over ABC network from Station WJZ, New York City, each Friday until March 25, 1949, at 8:45 a. m. and 11:30 p. m. The speaker is Rev. Arthur Henry Limouze, D. D.

Fourth, that a systematic program of Stewardship education fitting local needs be inaugurated in every church. Some methods are sermons, addresses, adult study classes, Church School lessons, young people's programs, panel discussions, literature distribution, books for reading, essay contests, poster contests, display charts and graphs.

Fifth, that our churches secure and make use of Stewardship literature made available by our denomination and other agencies. An excellent Stewardship Bibliography (1948-49) for all age groups may be secured from the United Stewardship Council, Hillsdale, Michigan.

It is not possible for every person to be a large giver, but everyone can be kind. It is not possible for all of us to stand before audiences and testify to our faith, but all of us can be tolerant and charitable of mind.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The Christian Orphanage had a beautiful Thanksgiving Day. The day was clear and warm, and the sun was shining. The good ladies from our Ingram Church sent us a coop of nice fat hens, and the dietician had them well cooked with all the fixings that go with a Thanksgiving dinner. The children were very happy and really enjoyed their dinner.

The always look forward to three extra good dinners each year—Easter, Thanksgiving and Christmas. We see to it that they have these good dinners, too. It is very kind of the good ladies of the Ingram Church to make us this annual contribution for the children to enjoy.

Our Thanksgiving offerings are coming in very nicely, but we are a long distance from our goal. When we made out our report for THE CHRISTIAN SUN this week, which will be published December 2, we had received from the churches this year, the sum of $12,499.01. We have received so far this year from outside sources the sum of $17,717.84, making a grand total so far this year of $30,216.85. We still lack $19, 783.15 of being to our goal. Will you see to it that we reach it? If you will, I will be under lasting obligations to you. I will then have accomplished my wish. We have hundreds of men and women in our churches who could send us from $10.00 to $100.00 and not miss it. How many in our churches will be willing to go the second mile and help me reach our goal?

As soon as the weather gets cold enough we want to kill hogs, and then we will have backbones and spare ribs and sausage galore, and the children will have a good time. We have twenty-four hogs to kill this season. It has been many years since we have bought a pound of hog meat.

home?" She glimpsed him, bundle in arms, turning the corner.

A little while later the telephone rang. Her neighbor's voice began, "Mrs. Mayes, did you know that those horrid boys who robbed Sanders'—"

"Whoopee!" cried Jerry, sprinting back into the house. "I won first prize, Mom!"

Exusing herself hastily, his mother jammed down the receiver. She clasped his sunburnt hands. They smelled of peach juice.

"Jerry!" Her voice was accusing. "Yes'm—I took the peaches back to Mr. Warren. After I got the prize, I knew how I'd have felt if someone had carried off my plane."

"Dear!" Her arms went around him.

"I gave him my three-dollar prize money."—This was money with which Jerry had hoped to buy a superplane model!—"He made me take it back. He took the peaches right over to the fair—all except one."

"What about the melon raid?" she thought to herself anxiously.

"You know," he confessed, suddenly shy, "that peach 'jam' worried me badly. I pity those fellows who helped themselves to Sanders' melons. The peaches got me down; melons would have been something!"

REPORT OF E. N. C. CONFERENCE COMITTEE ON STEWARDSHIP.

Your Committee on Stewardship wishes to call your attention to some things which have become matters of record, but which, when recognized, give added emphasis to the recommendations which shall be made by this committee.

We should note that according to Year Book figures, in the years '45, '46 and '47, only one-half of our churches paid all of their apportionment on all of the apportionment items. During that same period, on the basis of yearly averages, three of our churches paid nothing on apportionment, four churches paid on only one item in the apportionment, and four churches paid on only two items. Well over one-fourth of our churches each year pay on less than one-half of the items in the apportionment. When these facts are considered, it means that in 1945-46, only the Christian Orphanage apportionment was paid, and, apart from the orphanage payments, less than five-sixths of the apportionment was paid. In 1946-47, although the orphanage apportionment and the superannuation apportionments were met, just three-fourths of the total apportionment was paid: These are not facts of which we can be proud. They take on a still more unhealthy color when we remember that at each of our conference sessions, and at the sessions of the Southern Convention, strong "stewardship" resolutions were passed committing us to increased emphasis upon stewardship education and practice.

It was against such a background that last year's Committee on Stewardship recommended, among other things, that "stewardship literature" be placed in the hands of our people, and that we conduct at least one Stewardship Institute during the year. Although this report was adopted by this Conference, your Stewardship Committee was not given any authorization for the carrying out of these recommendations. The Executive Committee of the Conference has not taken action in this direction either. Therefore, we must confess that nothing constructive has been done toward "stewardship education" of either pastors or people during the past year! It is our hope that if this present report is adopted, steps will be taken to implement our recommendations with authorized action.

We recommend that two specific stewardship education leaflets be placed in the hands of the worshippers in each of our churches during the coming few months: What Do You Do With Your Money?—Dr. Douglas Horton; A Layman's Creed—Dr. Wm. C. Jones. (Both of these can be obtained free from the Commission on Stewardship of The Missions Council, 287 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.)

We further recommend that the office of the Southern Convention prepare mimeographed copies of "Stewardship Messages from the Word of God" prepared by Rev. Millard Stevens of the Committee on Stewardship of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. Those mimeographed "Messages" should be furnished at cost to the churches of this Conference. The Chairman of the Board of Deacons in each of our churches should be urged to take responsibility for disturbing this folder to the total church membership.

We recommend that each church in the Conference provide its pastor with a copy of Stewardship Facts, a publication of the United Stewardship Council, Hillsdale, Michigan. (Price, 25c.)

We further recommend that during the next few months, every church in this Conference hold a service of Holy Communion which shall include opportunity for each worshipper to sign the "Communion Covenant Card" prepared for just such an occasion when the stewardship emphasis of the Communion Service is recognized. These "Communion Covenants" are available to all churches, on order from the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

We recommend that this Conference petition the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN to secure permission to reprint selected materials issued by our denominational Commission on Stewardship, and similar materials issued by other denominations. If such materials are reprinted in THE CHRISTIAN SUN as a matter of continuing emphasis, the whole Convention will benefit, and the Convention's Weekly will be cooperating with the whole denomination in its emphasis upon Christian Stewardship through the coming bi-ennium.

We, of your Stewardship Committee, make these recommendations in the hope that by the use of these materials, surrounded always by the atmosphere of worship, the churches of this conference will be led to hear, and respond affirmatively to these words from our denominational Stewardship Commission: "We call the members of our churches to that kind of commitment which will issue in the systematic and proportionate giving of time, abilities and possessions to God as an act of worship and as an act of recognition of our responsibility to our fellow men!"

BERNARD V. MUNGER,
Chairman,

MR. I. H. VICKERY,
MR. W. H. MOSS,
Committee.

SUPPORT THE ORPHANAGE WITH YOUR GIFTS.

October, November and December are the months set aside by our Convention for special emphasis upon the support of the orphanage. It is hoped that our churches and Sunday schools made liberal offerings on Thanksgiving Sunday for the orphanage, but in case your church has not yet made its offering we hope you will do so immediately.

"Brother Charlie" Johnston, the faithful Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, deserves and needs the generous support of all of our people. The orphanage family, like all of our families, is experiencing high prices and high cost of living. To take care of 75 to 80 children is not an easy task. We can help to lighten the load and to make the well-being of our children at the orphanage secure with our generous gifts. Let us lend a hand to "Brother Charlie" in the raising of the goal of $50,000.00 this year.

WM. T. SCOTT, Supt.,
The Southern Convention.

MISSION ADVANCE RALLY.

er was Dr. Alan B. Taylor. Others participating in the service were Rev. R. A. Whitten, Rev. Wilson Cheek, Rev. Harold Case and Dr. Hatanaka.

This rally of members of the Evangelical & Reformed and Congregational Christian Churches was highly satisfactory to all who attended. The number of churches of each of our fellowships in the Valley is about equal. The meeting not only gave opportunity of acquaintance of these two denominations considering union but the cooperative undertaking gave strength to the program of the church in these days when the Church must be at its strongest.

It is hoped that other such meetings may be held in the near future, the first of which will possibly be a joint meeting of the laymen's organizations of the Valley.

Church Building Financial Notes

By CURTIS R. SCHUMACHER
Church Financial Adviser

The card placed upon the tray with your bill by the Pere Marquette Railroad Company reads, "If our service pleases you, your continued patronage will be our reward—'No tipping, please.'"

Perhaps you are one who has found the only way to get some service already paid for was by giving someone something in addition—a tip. Notices such as this railroad uses probably give you a real traveling thrill, to realize that here one can give value for equal value received.

I have observed tippers for some time. Very, very often I have noticed a patronizing air in the tipping. Or the attitude is suggested, "If I don't tip, I'll get no service."

So much of church giving is done in that manner. As if it were possible to patronize God! So much is given with the thought, "If I don't give, I'll incur the displeasure of God." It is forgotten that God is not in business selling things; He is our Father Who loves and gives. We cannot buy from Him or bribe Him. We cannot tip for extra benefits. We can only give from love. The more we love, the more we give. The more we give, the more like Him we become. The more like Him we become, the more He loves us and trusts us with.

Church financing would be so simple if members were all imbued with this spirit. Financial Project workers should be so trained, and should use this approach in their canvass. Churches can be built, expansions made, debts liquidated, if proportionate giving were more emphasized. We need to build up faith that Christ's statement is true. (Luke 6:38.)

"Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again."

Truman B. Douglass, in his booklet on "We Deal in Essentials" says, "When Christian faith grows cold in the hearts of church members they begin to take a timid and apologetic view of the central task of the Christian Fellowship—the proclamation of the gospel and the establishment of a church."

"The Book of All Nations"

By JAMES V. CLAYPOOL, D.D.

Secretary for Promotion of Bible Use of the American Bible Society

The theme chosen this year for Universal Bible Sunday is "The Book of All Nations." The Bible is the only book that could be given such a designation, for it is available to nine-tenths of the human race. Some part of it has been translated into 1090 tongues. This amazing number is constantly increasing, as through the continuing labors of missionary-translators, the Book finds its message recorded in new languages.

Not that translation is an easy task. It requires never-ending application of consecrated, spiritual followers of Christ to express the eternal truths of God in words that speak in familiar sounds to the primitive native.

Dr. Eugene A. Nida, director of the American Bible Society's translation program, tells of a missionary who was translating the New Testament for the Mongo-Knundo people who live along the Congo River in Central Africa. One of the big words in the Bible is the word "love" used in that all-inclusive sense incarnated in the person of Christ. Every translator in Africa must find a native expression for this idea. After many years of unrewarding search, the missionary one day picked up the expression he heard mothers use in speaking tenderly to their littlest children. He asked one mother what it meant. She answered, "This is the word I use when I mean that I care so much for this little girl of mine that when I think what is going to befall her when she grows up—it hurts me." "Caring so much it hurts"—the missionary knew he had his word.

One likes to think of the African native, who exclaimed in surprise, "I am in that book," when for the first time he heard the Bible read to him in his language, in words that he used himself. Or of Dr. Nida's further experience in Mexico, where the Chinantec expression for "fields" could not be translated in the exact term. "In that rugged, mountainous part of southern Mexico, where the only cultivatable ground lies on the steep, jungle-covered mountain, which cradles each village," he says, "the Chinantecs can only understand Jesus' words in John 4:35 by their own idiom, 'look up with your eyes and see the sides of the mountains,' for only there on the precipitous slopes does the corn grow, and only there can the harvests be ready. The translator cannot always find an identity of words, but he can find the similarity of meaning which has made possible the telling of the matchless story of the Bible."

Today there is another problem, that of seeking to provide Scriptures to the multitudes who hunger for them. Before the devastation and suffering of the last war seared the homes and lives of millions of people, the publishing of the Bible was an active pursuit in many countries. The British and Foreign Bible Society, from its headquarters in London, reached into the far corners of the world; the National Bible Society of Scotland, the Netherlands Bible Society, the Japan Bible Society—and many kindred organizations made the publication and distribution of the Scriptures their sole purpose. But war laid waste many printing plants; it melted the mighty machines; it reduced the precious paper for Bible pages to ashes; it destroyed millions of personal Bibles, so that a great part of the world was faced with a real Bible famine. And never, it seemed, has there been such hunger for the Word, the true source of strength and courage and hope. What can be done to meet this situation?

Among eight helps suggested by the American Bible Society on its list of daily selections for its Worldwide Bible Reading program is the following: "Set aside and keep a definite daily time for reading." Planned reading, if followed carefully and earnestly, pays big dividends. As a person becomes more familiar with the vibrant truths in this Book, his outlook automatically broadens and he wants to share with others the uplifting experience he has enjoyed. He will want to make the Bible, in a more real sense, "The Book of All Nations."

News Flashes

Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, chairman of the Board of Christian Education, has called for a meeting of the board at Elon College on Tuesday of next week.

The Eure Christian Church, Gates County, N. C., would like to hear from any church disposing of its old pews. Kindly contact Mrs. John Artz, Gatesville, N. C.

With the beginning of the new conference year, Rev. T. Fred Wright becomes the pastor of Mt. Auburn Church, Manson, N. C. Mr. Wright is now pastor of Liberty (Vance) and Mt. Gilead churches.

Omission.—The following Committee on Christian Education was omitted from the Standing Committees of the Eastern Virginia Conference, which appeared recently in THE CHRISTIAN SUN: Robert Lee House, L. E. Smith, H. G. Council, Jr., Peter Young, J. Everette Neese.

Rev. E. M. Carter, who for thirteen years was pastor of the Mt. Auburn church, now becomes pastor of Pope's Chapel. Mr. Carter was pastor here nine years beginning 1926. Pope's Chapel is one of our oldest churches—was originally a Methodist church but withdrew with James O'Kelly to become a Christian Church.

The speaker at the November meeting of the Eastern Virginia Ministers' Association was Dr. I. Stuart McElroy, district secretary of the American Bible Society. Dr. McElroy used as a general theme, "The Need of the Bible in the Present World Crisis." On page eight of this issue there is an appeal from his office for the giving of the Bible to the world now.

THE O'KELLY MEMORIAL FOUNDATION.

The trustees of the O'Kelly Memorial Foundation, a foundation established for the purpose of preserving and caring for the family cemetery in which Rev. James O'Kelly is buried, met at the Christian Church, Durham, N. C., Sunday, November 28 at 3:00 p. m. Prayer was offered by Rev. K. D. Register. Dr. Stanley Harrell was made permanent chairman.

The trustees being empowered by the Southern Christian Convention to take such legal action as necessary to have the Convention become the custodian of the cemetery in Chatham

I. STUART McELROY.

County, N. C., where the body of Rev. James O'Kelly is buried and right-of-way thereto, transacted the following business:

1. S. C. Harrell and H. S. Basnight were named a committee to secure a right-of-way from the highway, a distance of one-half mile, to the cemetery.

2. The secretary, C. E. Newman, was authorized to secure a quit-claim deed from authorized members of the O'Kelly family to the Southern Christian Convention.

3. Miss Maggie Hall and Miss Lillie Fowler, granddaughters of James O'Kelly, were asked to secure such information as necessary to aid the secretary in complying with the request of the trustees.

After talking in a general way concerning the importance of the duties placed on the trustees by the Convention, the meeting adjourned to convene again at the call of the chairman.

MODERATOR ON UNIVERSAL BIBLE SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.

The voices of eminent leaders of the religious life of America will introduce Universal Bible Sunday (December 12) with programs over four major networks.

On Saturday afternoon, from 3:30 to 3:45 (EST), Mutual Network will present Miss Helen Kenyon, first woman moderator of the Congregational Christian Churches and Dr. Douglas Horton, minister of the General Council of the same communion. They will discuss the greater use of the Bible in our American homes and increasing the Christian's sense of responsibility in furnishing Bibles in foreign languages to war-impoorished countries.

Dr. Taku Matsumoto, principal of the Methodist Girls High School, and well-known Bible scholar of Hiroshima, Japan, the only religious leader who survived Hiroshima who has come to America, together with Dr. H. C. Tucker, veteran missionary pioneer in charge of the American Bible Society's work in Brazil for 47 years, will be interviewed over the National Broadcasting Company on Saturday, December 11, on the popular program, "Public Affairs," at 12:15 p. m. (EST), by Dr. James V. Claypool. Of the nine hundred girls enrolled in the Hiroshima School, three hundred and fifty were killed. The school is functioning again, classes being held in barracks, with an enrollment of 1,600. The Christian influence of the girls, Dr. Matsumoto, declares, has enhanced the popularity of the school.

Dr. Elmer J. F. Arndt, professor at Eden E. & R. Theological Seminary, Webster Groves, Missouri, will be presented by the Columbia Broadcasting System's Church of the Air, speaking on Sunday, December 12 from 10 to 10:30 a. m. (EST), on the subject, "The Religion of the New Testament."

On Sunday afternoon from 5 to 5:15 (EST) the America Broadcasting Company has arranged an interview between the Chief of Chaplains of the U. S. Army, Chaplain Luther D. Miller (Major General), and a representative of the Chief of Chaplains of the U. S. Navy, Chaplain Thornton C. Miller, with Dr. Frederick W. Cropp of the American Bible Society. The topic under discussion will be the use of the Scriptures and religious cultivation in connection with the new peace-time recruits of the armed services.

Hundreds of local stations, throughout the country, will also join in the celebration of the Society's program.

REPORT OF THE CLEVELAND MEETING.

By ALBERT W. PALMER.

[Portion of Dr. Palmer's regular radio broadcast on "Religious News: World-Wide, National and Local," given Saturday, November 20, 1948, at 1:15 p. m., over KFAC. Auspices of the Los Angeles Church Federation.]

Many of you doubtlessly, are listening in today to hear my promised report on a very important meeting in Cleveland which I went East to attend last week in an effort to prevent a schism in the Congregational Christian Churches. Now what are the causes for the danger of a split-up in the ranks of Congregationalism? And what was done at Cleveland in an effort to prevent it? You listeners who are not Congregationalists may find this interesting to follow because a similar situation might arise some day in your own denomination.

The trouble has all grown out of an effort going on for over six years now to unite two denominations, the Congregational Christian and the Evangelical and Reformed, into one church body to be called the United Church of Christ. Everything went happily until about a year ago when a group of influential Congregationalists, calling themselves "The Evanston Meeting," raised serious objections to the organizational plan which had been prepared for the merger and which was called the "Basis of Union." This group feared that certain freedoms characteristic of historic Congregationalism were not sufficiently safeguarded in this proposed outline for the organization of the United Church. They were apprehensive of a possible drift toward a Presbyterian polity because the Reformed section of the Evangelical and Reformed Church had been organized along Presbyterian lines. In particular, these Congregationalists felt that further guarantees were needed to preserve beyond question the traditional and deeply cherished autonomy of the local church. That means its right to own and control its own property, choose its own minister and, in general, run its own affairs.

This whole matter was brought up last June at the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in Oberlin, where I had the honor to be the moderator. After full and free debate, eight "interpretations" of the "Basis of Union" were adopted. They were regarded as protective clarifications, rather than amendments, and were definitely stated to be "in harmony with the spirit and purposes" of the "Basis of Union." The Council further declared that it accepted these "Interpretations" as the basis upon which its future action would be taken, and postponed further until approval of the merger by 75 per cent of the churches should have been secured. It then voted approval for itself, as a Council, of the "Basis of Union" and the "Interpretations" by a vote of about 1,000 to 12. After this harmonious and reassuring action, we all sang the doxology, the Evanston Meeting voted to disband, and we thought the problem had been solved in a Christian and democratic manner.

But, within the last few weeks, further and vigorous opposition to the merger has arisen. This new opposition feared that the Oberlin "Interpretations" would not be lived up to, but would be by-passed and disregarded as not having equal authority with the "Basis of Union." They also called attention to the fact that the Evangelical and Reformed Church had never passed on the "Interpretations," and so they urged that they should be made bi-lateral by being submitted to the synods of the Evangelical and Reformed Church. They also criticized certain aspects of the General Council's procedure.

It was to meet these objectives that last week's meeting was held in Cleveland. It consisted of the executive committees of the two denominations and the two committees to whom had been committed responsibility for promoting the merger—about 50 people in all.

Joint action was taken by this official group, representing both denominations, affirming the "Interpretations" to be equally authoritative with the "Basis of Union" as the basis on which the Congregational Christian Churches would be entering the union.

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.

5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

OUR BIBLE.

Our Bible is a library. Scholars tell us that it was written on two continents, in three languages, by one hundred authors, in the course of a thousand or more years. In the Old Testament part of this library are 39 books, and in the New Testament 27 books, 66 books in all. Bibles published a few generations ago contained 14 other books, called the Apocrypha, which were deemed less inspired and authoritative than the other books. So there were 80 books in the Bible which contained the Apocrypha.

There are many uses of the Bible. The devotional and the homiletic engage our attention most frequently. Rev. Kenneth Clinton of Columbus, Ohio, offers this helpful suggestion: "Read some very familiar passage of the Bible. Spend five to fifteen minutes in meditation over a particular section. The familiarity of the passage tempts us to pass over it quickly, and we are apt to say, 'Oh, I know that.' But in such quick passing we may have missed a great message from a well-known truth. Slower reading of shorter passage plus meditation over single thoughts or the thoughts in a single word may reveal hidden spiritual light, hitherto overlooked." How true!

Too many of the rank and file of people feel that the historical and scholarly study of the Bible is irrelevant. We need to ponder these deliberate words of Dr. Hubert Cunliffe-Jones: "The historical study of the Bible, with its profound unsettlement of the older theological interpretation, has come to stay, and awareness of the problems which it raises must be present at every stage of the achievement of a new theological interpretation. But the gaining of that new interpretation is a matter of life and death for the Christian Church. In default of it, we feed on the husks the swine did eat and not on the food of our Father's house."

One of the supreme tests of Bible study is the social interpretation or application. Years ago Matthew Henry wrote by way of exposition on Ruth 1:16 the following passage which might be taken as the recent pronouncement of a social gospeller or the Federal Council of Churches:

"When we take God for our God, we must take his people for our people, in all conditions, though they be a poor, despised people; yet if they be His, they must be ours. Again, having cast in our lot among them we must be willing to take our lot with them and fare as they fare. We must submit to the same yoke, and draw in it faithfully; take up the cross and carry it cheerfully; go where God would have us go, though it be into banishment, and to lodge where He would have us lodge though it be in prison; die where He will have us die, and lay our bones in the graves of the upright who enter into peace, and rest in their beds though they be but the graves of common people."

FEWER DUSTY BIBLES.

Seeing an unused Bible lying about in his home, a small boy asked his mother whose book it was. "It is God's Book," she is reported to have said, "Well," replied the boy, "don't you think we should return it. Nobody seems to read it!"

Stories like the above do not apply to all the homes of America, according to Dr. Frederick Cropp, Secretary of the American Bible Society, who has spent a considerable amount of time investigating just this situation. "People are wrong who say that while the Bible may be the world's best seller, it is the least read book and the book that nobody knows," continued Dr. Cropp.

The use of helps for reading the Bible and lists of suggested Scripture passages is way above pre-war years as indicated by the figures of religious publishing houses. "The Bible Society alone," declared Dr. Cropp, "distributed last year on request more than 15,000,000 copies of the bookmark containing a list of readings for the Worldwide Bible Reading between Thanksgiving and Christmas. In addition the list was reprinted more than 20,000,000 times.

Commercial and religious publishing houses continually bring out "new" Bibles, new in the sense they contain outlines, explanations and many references to help the reader in understanding obscure and difficult passages. The Revised Standard Version of the New Testament, a version in the plain and direct language of today, held its place in the list of religious best sellers for many months, following its publication in 1946. The Bible, that used to appear in nothing but a sombre binding of black, can now be found in attractive, colored bindings, appealing to the eye in format and readability of type.

Uncounted millions of Americans listen every Sunday in their churches to ministers reading from the Scriptures. One of the most popular radio programs of its class, according to a Hooper rating, is the half-hour broadcast on Sunday evening of "The Greatest Story Ever Told," based entirely on incidents taken from the Bible. This program came on the air for its third year on September 12. It is short-waved throughout the world, over the World Radio University of Boston through its three outlets.

At the last annual convention of the Rabbinical Council of America, Rabbi Uri Miller of Baltimore, Maryland, spoke for his colleagues when he said that "the Bible is our greatest source of prestige. We must continue to be a Bible loving, Bible studying people."

At a recent solemn mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, one of the Catholic staff called upon all followers of Christ "to read and know the Scriptures better than we know any book written by any human being." NONE OTHER NAME.*

A Sermon

By REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE.

TEXT: "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:12.

It has been well said that throughout the Bible runs the red thread of God's redemption through Christ. The Old Testament proclaims the promise of the coming Messiah. The New Testament fulfills this promise and seals it with the blood of the everlasting covenant. So, indeed, it is true that throughout the Bible runs the red thread of God's redemption through Christ.

It has been my purpose these fifteen years in the Christian ministry to emphasize through varied means, methods and messages that "there is none other name given among men, whereby we must be saved." Whatever length of time I witness for Christ from this pulpit—whether that time be extensive or brief—I shall always and eternally contend that man's need is to know Christ and to live by His principles. Through all my messages, plans and programs, to and for this church, will run the red thread of redemption through "none other name" but the name of Christ.

I have come here not work at temporal tasks, but to preach Christ and Him crucified. I have come here not as a servant for the church, but as a servant of Christ ministering to your spiritual needs in His name. It is my sincere hope that our association will be most pleasant and that we may be "in one accord" in our interests and work for this church and for God's Kingdom. If this be the end toward which we work and toward which we pray, God will bless this church and consequently bless each of us.

In the morning lesson, Peter has been taken into custody by the Temple authorities. When the time of questioning came, he was asked, "By what power or by what name?" have ye healed this impotent man? You will remember that it was when Peter and John came to the Temple at the hour of prayer and finding a lame man at the gate who asked for alms, replied, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee, in the name of Jesus of Nazareth, rise up and walk."

What happened? Did this man sit there and bemoan his physical condition? Did he reply with a regret that these two men didn't even have a copper to give him? Did he say, "You tell me who has been ill of this infirmity for years to rise up and walk in the name of a carpenter's son from Nazareth—what can He do? He is not even here."

No! none of these things apparently entered the man's mind. Perhaps he had heard of this man Jesus. Perhaps His name had been spoken in commendation or condemnation among his circle of friends. This much was sure, he had faith. That kind of faith that makes one stake his very life upon a Man with a godly principle. With this faith, the impotent man began to be-stir himself and soon he arose and entered with Peter and John into the Temple leaping and praising God for having been healed.

Because of this kindly act, Peter must now defend his actions before the Temple authorities. And Luke, recording the incident said, "Peter (being) filled with the Holy Ghost said unto them" . . . and you will recall how Peter berated these supposedly religious leaders and ended his defense with the words: "Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

I.

What was the secret of Peter's courage that enabled him to boldly proclaim salvation in "none other name" but the name of Jesus?

I think that we can truthfully say that he had become possessed of a truth which acted upon him with nothing less than creative force. From the timidity and shyness of a Galilean fisherman, Peter had become courageous and strong because he had met Christ.

Peter did not say, "I think I have met Him." Or, "Perhaps, it was He whom I met." Peter knew in whom he believed. There was no guess work with him.

Some years ago the United States Government was discussing the feasibility of putting a lighthouse at a certain point off the coast of Florida. The government sent out letters to several Commanders, asking their opinion regarding the place. One said, "I think it is safe." Another said, "Perhaps, there ought to be a lighthouse there." And so the letters ran, but none of them stated anything definite. By and by there came a letter which read, "I know there is danger there, for I have touched the bottom there." That settled it. The lighthouse was built.

So, God's word comes to us—not with "perhapses" and "guesses" and "maybes"—but with certainties; and it declares that there is none other name whereby we can be saved. Peter knew this. Peter emphasized this. Peter had experienced this—and because of his conviction concerning it, he courageously preached it.

So it is with me and so it is with you. When we have found Christ in the forgiveness of our sins and when we have yielded our all to Him, then His spirit enables us to live courageously for Him.

Last Sunday after I had preached my last sermon to the Bay View congregation where I have served for the past seven and one-half years, and after we had enjoyed the fellowship of a luncheon, a member of the Board of Deacons ushered me into the study and closed the door behind him. Turning to me with a hazy mist in his eyes, he said, "Mr. Neese, you have helped me to find Christ and to find myself and I want you to know that I am deeply grateful. I'm going to remain true to my convictions, come what may. You and the Master can depend on that." Then he took my hand and pumped it hard and left without another word.

Beloved, the reason we are not any more courageous than we are in our Christian living is because too many people play at religion like children playing at dolls. They flounder around in the shallows of Christianity possessing neither the courage nor the determination to venture out into its depths where the love of God flows free. When we are willing to meet Christ on His terms—then and only then can we boldly declare, "I know there is none other name given among men whereby we can be saved."

II.

What is the secret of courage in the church today? Both you and I know something of the chaotic condition through which the world has recently gone and from which it has not yet evolved. We know that the church has never faced such an hour

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The men of our churches—what a force they are and what a force they may be! Men moved by that good impulse to serve their church, and to serve their Christ, can step up the pace of our churches greatly. I have been pondering that simple little command of Jesus to his disciples: "And he shall show you a large upper room furnished: there make ready. And they went and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover" (Luke 22:12-13). It is only a little piece, a simple bit of instruction, command, and the carrying out of that command; but is a little piece that is a part of the whole. These men made good for their master. They could do a small, particular, piece of work well. They would do greater things well. It is a lovely little half-paragraph out of a lovely page. It expresses in it team-work between Jesus and the men who were with him. He could trust them, and they could trust him. He could give the plan of action and they could gladly follow it. He told them what they might expect. They followed the paths he pointed out, found exactly what he had promised, and completed their part of the work. Perhaps some will say I am laying too much stress on some of these words, but I like to group them something like this: "They went . . . found . . . made ready." There is no hesitation expressed there. They did not halt, or pause, on the proposed program. They did not doubt, debate, nor demand a repetition of the instructions. They went. Then and ever men trained in the divine fellowship have dared to go unquestioningly for their Lord. Perhaps most often it is some simple piece of work, but it is a part of the whole, and whoever can do the small task well will do the larger task in time. And even the adding up of the small, first-hand tasks will make at least a life of triumph and victory.

To be sure we are to use our minds. They did, or they would never have been with their Lord. But when has there ever been anything against being a good member of a team and following the call of the plays. "They found . . ." what he said. The men of our churches, for instance, have been told that they, too, may become fishers of men, and may win others to their church and their Christ. They team up, make their plans, organize their efforts, and go—and they find that it works. Their own fellowship has been greatly enriched, and others have been brought in to share that fellowship. Or they may decide that their church house is drab and needs redecorating, or their Sunday school needs additional rooms, or that their organization should make an inspiring contribution to Missions, or that a new work should be begun in a thickly settled community where no church is—they go, they find the large opportunity, and there they do their piece of work.

What those men did there was prologue to the Lord's institution of that memorial supper. Their simple tasks well done but led them to moments when their master might personally express to them what would be happening when he died for them on the cross. And while they would not understand it fully, then nor later, it would become nevertheless one of their greatest avenues of renewal, both for them, and countless others down across the centuries. Much awaits men today who are willing to be under the divine direction of their Lord and Master.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

REPORT OF E. N. C. CONFERENCE COMITTEE ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

There is a little story of a pastor who preached the same sermon over in the same church three Sunday mornings in succession. When the third sermon was over the Deacon Board waited on him and asked the reason why. His answer to this was, "When you begin to translate it into life, I will preach another." Your committee on Christian Education does not mean to be impudent, but it does seem to them that the same old probles face those of us who are concerned with Christian Education today that faced us yesterday, yet they continue and little or nothing is done about them.

It is a sorry thing to walk down the street or drive through the country and see a building incomplete perhaps for lack of funds. It is a still sorrier sight to see a task half done perhaps for the lack of courage. One of these tasks of which we speak, which needs so much labor, so much more than we have given; which needs so much enthusiasm, so much more than we have spent, is the Sunday schools of our churches, the spiritual life of the youth of our membership. This committee dares to make certain recommendations to this body, with a hope in their hearts and a prayer on their lips that you may find them helpful—helpful and more useful. Useful in building strong Christian men and women out of boys and girls who are just beginning to walk in the faith; great souls out of little ones. We believe our first need is a Sunday school faculty just a little more consecrated; just a little more interested; possessed with just a little more enthusiasm to make Jesus Christ just a little dearer, a little nearer to Johnnie and Susie. To this end we suggest more study by our teachers; more research, in order to bring, if you will excuse the expression, Jesus Christ to life and make him real and attractive to boys and girls. So real indeed, that he can be taken back to their homes and school and play and translated into real life. In short, children must be made to know that Christ—his gospel—is more than the tale of a dreamer, that honestly and purity and love actually work. But we certainly cannot teach children about the love of God if those children are home in bed on Sunday mornings; therefore, we must concern ourselves about attendance and the beginning is with the home. Fathers and mothers must be made to know that they cannot just

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

WHAT OF THE FUTURE OF OUR COLLEGE.

The founders of Elon College were concerned for the future of our church and for the future of our ministry. They realized that the future of our church would be determined by the consecration, ability, and efficiency of our ministers. That if our ministers were to be efficient, influential and successful, they must be properly equipped, mentally and spiritually. They had visions of a strong liberal arts college—a college of our own, built, supported, and directed by our own people. Inspired by such visions and encouraged by expressed convictions, they arose, issued the call, pointed the way, and out of determined efforts and sacrificial giving, Elon College was built. In September, 1890, her doors were opened for students and thus began our church's successful efforts in the field of higher education. For more than a half century, we have been on the firing line for Christian service training young men for the ministry, laymen and laywomen for higher services in the programs and councils of the church. Our church has gone forward at a creditable rate. Elon College deserves and receives due credit.

We look at the past with a bit of pardonable pride. We have seen our college increase from less than 100 students to an enrollment of more than 800. Our faculty has increased from six members, the number in the original faculty, to more than two score. We have seen our material values increase from less than $25,000 to more than two million dollars, but to preserve the past we must look to the future. Churchmen, what of tomorrow? Are you concerned for the future of our college? The future of our college depends on you, on me, on all of us. No one can shirk his responsibility. He may neglect it, but he cannot evade it. Our college (our church) is facing a serious situation.

I am returning from the annual meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. This is the organization that determines the course, the standards, and the standing of our college. Here are some of the requirements in prospect: (1) A broader curriculum to include vocational training not now attempted. (2) Smaller classes in all subjects taught. (3) An increased number of faculty members, commensurate with student enrollment. (4) A material increase in faculty salaries so as to meet the increased cost of living. (5) Increased library facilities based on student enrollment. (6) Buildings and equipment for instructional and living purposes sufficient for immediate and reasonable future demands. (7) Increased support for current needs. (To be in line with what other denominations are giving for the support of their colleges, the churches of our Southern Convention should be giving for the support of Elon College a minimum of $35,000 annually, instead of $15,000, the amount apportioned annually for the next two years.) (8) A greatly increased endowment. Instead of $300,000 as now required, the requirement will likely be $500,000.

We as a church must make up our minds regarding two things and they are vital and immediate. (1) Do we regard Christian education—education with Christian content and the Christian emphasis as important to individual freedom, and the continuance of our American way of life? Also the efficiency and permanency of the church itself. (2) Do we want Elon College? Do we want to continue our contribution to the cause of Christian higher education? If so, we have got to pay for it. There is no other way out of it.

To high pressure our people into giving for this or that cause will not answer. To turn a deaf ear to the appeals of the colleges and to close your purse against its needs will not suffice. As we lift the other interests and enterprises of the church, we must lift our college—our one source of trained leadership, or the whole program will eventually halt, totter, break and fall.

I plead. I pray for an adequate and pro rata support of our total church program, that we may "keep our house" efficient and in order. Will you do your part? Begin now. Don't wait on your brother. Your brother may have already done his share.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Elon College is $909.14 in the red so far as conference apportionments are concerned. This deficit is not due to the lack of interest or effort on the part of the college. In our present organization for the Convention, this is the responsibility of the Convention Office. The Convention Office is given the task of receiving apportionments for the interest of the church, Elon College included. The college is sorely in need of the funds asked by the Convention. The college year is not over. There are three more Sundays in which our Sunday schools and churches might and should receive contributions for the college that the entire apportionment might be raised. It would be a generous Christmas gift to the college if our Sunday schools and churches would give their membership the opportunity to make a Christmas gift for the college and raise the entire apportionment.

The college is most appreciative of every generous thought, helpful word, and the contributions given in these days of necessity and stress.

house in good order while we remain as its occupants. Your minister and his family realize that this lovely house represents the loyalty, sacrifice and love of the members and friends of this church, and it stands today as a symbol of your faith and devotion to Kingdom service. May God give us eyes of faith to catch the vision of greater works to be done through the instrumentality of our labors together as pastor and people of this church, and richly reward you for your loyal and faithful service.

Prayer of Consecration.—Father of all mercies, God of love, Founder of the home, we invoke Thy blessings upon this service and consecrate this house as a means of uniting our hearts in Christian fellowship. We consecrate this new home to Thee as an instrument to be used for Thy glory, for our good and for the promotion of the work of this church here, and throughout the world. We, here, renew our faith in the cause of Christ and consecrate our hearts to the task to which Thou hast called us.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WELL DONE, GOOD AND FAITHFUL SERVANT.

Word has just reached the headquarters of the American Board of Foreign Missions in Boston, Mass., of the death of Mrs. Amy Bridgman Cowles, one of its distinguished veteran missionaries to Africa, on last Saturday, November 27, at her home in Claremont, Calif., at the age of eighty-two.

Mrs. Cowles was the wife of the late George B. Cowles and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Martyn Bridgman, also American Board missionaries in Africa. She was born in Umzumbe, South Africa, and educated at Connecticut State Normal School and Oberlin College.

After her education in America was completed, Mrs. Cowles went back to Africa for two years' work in Umzumbe where she was born, a primitive area in a lonely valley ninety miles from the city of Durban. She returned to America to marry George B. Cowles, Jr., then YMCA Secretary in New Britain, Conn. In 1893 Mr. and Mrs. Cowles went to South Africa taking with them a five-month-old daughter born in New Britain, Conn. Mr. Cowles took charge of a school for Zulu boys at Adams. Here they worked for eighteen years until Mr. Cowles' health made necessary a prolonged furlough in America, but they returned to Umzumbe in 1915, the station where Mrs. Cowles was born, which was still an isolated outpost as far as white neighbors were concerned.

Mrs. Cowles served a total of 38 years in South Africa.

Mr. Cowles died in Durban, Natal, South Africa, in 1929 and Mrs. Cowles came back to America and retired from active service in 1930. For many years following her retirement Mrs. Cowles thrilled her audiences with stories of witch doctors' primitive superstitions and the amazing tale of the growth of the Christian faith in South Africa.

She has been living at 259 West 6th Street, Claremont, Calif., and for two years her daughter, Ruth C. Cowles, R. N., Nursing Superintendent of Alexandria Health Center and University Clinic, Johannesburg, South Africa, has been with her.

THE CLEVELAND MEETING.

It was also agreed that, as soon as the Congregationalists had the approval of 75 per cent of their churches and were authorized to proceed, the Evangelical and Reformed Church would take the whole matter up in a special meeting of its General Synod and, if favorably acted up there, with its 34 local synods.

In addition, the Congregational executive committee authorized its Committee of Fifteen on Union to report this joint action to all the churches. This is being done by a "letter missive" enclosing a ballot and giving churches that have voted an opportunity to vote again, if they desire, and urging churches that have not voted to do so at once.

It is hoped that these actions will meet the objections raised, clear up certain misapprehensions and enable the churches to consider the proposed merger calmly and objectively on its merits, without any fears of losing their historic local control of their own affairs. Congregationalists are usually regarded as a cool-headed, tolerant, and fair-minded people, not given to church quarrels. They will undoubtedly find a happy issue out of all their present troubles since the high type of leadership on both sides realizes, as do all other intelligent Christians, that, in the face of the world's desperate need and spiritual poverty, this is no time for Christian folk to be wasting money and energy fighting one another. So I look to see the leaders of the denomination speedily find a way to heal its wounds.

One happy thing about this difficult situation should be particularly stressed, and that is that this whole disagreement is entirely within the Congregational Christian denomination, and does not involve the slightest criticism of the Evangelical and Reformed Church or its members. They are held in high honor by all Congregationalists, and no word of disparagement of them has ever been uttered. Nor is this difficulty based on any theological differences. It is purely a matter of church organization and procedure. As such it surely can be settled satisfactorily by friendly Christian people.

GIVE THE BIBLE TO ALL THE WORLD NOW!

The world must have the Bible now if the people of the world are to know Christ, the One Hope of men and nations, since the Bible is the one primary source of knowledge of Him.

In today's "uneasy peace" when the hearts of all mankind are gripped by fear that we will not be able to control the destructive forces set loose by our own inventive genius, men are facing the fact that the Bible presents the only real answer to the needs of men.

The ending of the war opened lands which, for years, had been denied the Bible. Emergency supplies of Scriptures in many languages printed in advance to meet this need, were promptly sent by the Society. Millions of volumes must still be supplied. The world-wide shortage is carefully estimated to be 20 million Bibles and 40 million New Testaments.

But it is a race against time. Today's hungry-hearted eagerness for the Word of God may not last indefinitely; opposing forces are at work.

Regular mission fields are calling for ever increasing quantities of Scriptures. Most of the millions of people around the world who are earnestly asking for Bibles, cannot possibly have them without the help of Christian America. The American Bible Society is the only agency equipped to supply the needed Scriptures on a world-wide scale. The opportunity and responsibility to meet this need rest upon every Christian Church.

There are three suggestions by way of taking care of the need:

1. Take an offering for the American Bible Society on Universal Bible Sunday.
2. Put the American Bible Society in your church budget.
3. Enlist individuals to become members of the American Bible Society by supplying at least five or more people with a Bible in their own language at an average cost of $1 per Bible.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER REPORTS WOMAN'S MEETING IN MILWAUKEE.

"Thy Kingdom Come" was the theme of the biennial session of the United Council of Church Women held November 15-18 in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. The two thousand women present, representing more than thirty Protestant denominations, were led toward that end through prayer services, Bible study, dynamic speakers, and "Town Hall" sessions.

There were present from the Southern Convention Mrs. Robert Lee (June Joy) House, President of the Richmond Council of Church Women and of the Eastern Virginia Congregational Christian Women; Mrs. Martin T. (Birdie Rowland) Garren, President of the Greensboro Council of Church Women; and Mrs. F. C. (Emily Carleton) Lester, President of the North Carolina Congregational Christian Women, and a member of the Board of the North Carolina Council of Church Women. Among those present were Mrs. Sarah Murdey, National President of the Congregational Christian Women, and Mrs. E. E. McClintock and Miss Elizabeth McDuffie, our National Women's Secretaries.

Mrs. Harper Sibley, President of the United Council of Church Women, combined enthusiasm, great personal interest, and grace in her presiding. There was seldom a dull moment even in business sessions.

The only two women on the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches, Mrs. Leslie Swain, President of the Northern Baptist Women, and Mrs. C. S. Harrington of Texas, a member of Presbyterian Church, U.S., reported on the Amsterdam meeting, as did five other women delegates, including Dr. Georgia Harkness, whose books many of us have read.

This picture of the work of the World Council of Churches, augmented by Dr. Henry Pitt Van Dusen's speech on "Amsterdam and the Future of the World Church," was the backdrop against which the work of the United Council of Church Women was presented.

There were many "highlights" at this meeting. For some, it may have been the opening processional, led by flags of many lands, when women from Brazil, Germany, India, Canada, Japan, Colombia, and the Philippines were welcomed by Mrs. Sibley, along with fraternal delegates from some forty organizations, including our Dr. Robbins Barstow of Church World Service, Mrs. D. Leigh Colvin of the W.C.T.U., Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune of the National Council of Negro Women, and Mrs. K. L. Kleinpell of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Another "highlight" was the address by Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church, in which he emphasized that we must translate our religion into practical terms in dealing with hunger, injustice, poverty, and racial discriminations, in order to have peace in the world.

For the practical minded, the "highlight" may have been the presentation of twenty "Experiments in Christian Living," presented in the form of two radio broadcasts in which women from many city and rural areas gave practical ideas used by local councils of church women in an effort to make Christianity more effective in their communities. Mrs. Galen Russell, wife of our minister at Southport, Conn., was responsible for these experiments and acted as the "announcer" of Radio Station U.C.C.W.

A "highlight" for others was the daily "Vesper Hour" when Rev. Howard Thurman, formerly of Howard University and now co-pastor of the "Church for the Fellowship of All Peoples" in San Francisco, led our thoughts in a period of quiet meditation.

The communion service on the last morning was another "highlight" for many. The meditation was given by Rev. A. Frederica Mitchell, woman pastor of the Keene Valley (N. Y.) Congregational Church.

One of the "highlights" for everyone was the music of Rosa Page Welch, Negro singer of Chicago, who interpreted the mood of the audience at each session, calling us to work in our world with Malotte's "The Lord's Prayer," or stirring our hearts with "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord?"

It was a great meeting in Milwaukee. Out of it for me came these convictions:

1. We need to strengthen American family life through some form of daily family worship.
2. We must work hard to bring democracy to all people in our own land before we can act as the champion of democracy in world affairs.
2. "It is later than it has ever been before" in the realm of world relations. The Church, working unitedly, must make its voice heard if we are to have peace.
4. The Advance being planned by United Protestantism is important and necessary. We should do all we can to aid this missionary program.

WORLD COMMUNITY DAY IN WINSTON-SALEM.

The Winston-Salem Council of Church Women sponsored the observance of World Community Day at St. Paul's Episcopal Church, beginning at 11:00 o'clock with a business session. Women from all churches in and near the city were invited.

At 12:00 o'clock, all adjourned to the dining room, where a delicious pot-luck luncheon was enjoyed by all, each woman having brought one dish of food.

After lunch, Mr. Robert J. Leach, Assistant Professor of History at Salem College, spoke to the group on "World Peace and What We Can Do About It," explaining the plan for World Government as suggested by the World Federalist Movement.

Over 250 towel packs were sent, including those brought to the church and sent out later by individual churches, going to teen agers in Displaced Persons' Camps in Europe and Asia.

WORLD COMMUNITY DAY IN ASHEBORO.

The Asheboro Women's Missionary Society invited members of societies in our nearby churches to join them in an observance of World Community Day.

Mrs. Paul Craven, President of the Asheboro Society, conducted the worship service. Members of the Pleasant Ridge and Asheboro groups participated in the program, as did a visitor from the Asheboro Friends Church.

At the close of the program those present brought their packed towels and gifts of money to a table at the front of the church, at the center of which was an open Bible. Messages were read from Pleasant Grove and

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR FRIENDS:

Are you thinking about Christmas? We are. Someone brought an arm-load of holly with the shiniest leaves and brightest berries and we have it upstairs and down. We have been talking about the people we want to remember and our Advent candles are on the mantel. We have been singing carols and Christmas songs, too. As a family we love music and as individuals, too. We use the piano mostly, but sometimes we can persuade the oldest member of our family to play the clarinet. Golden Books have a nice carol book for 25¢ and ours is getting worn, especially at "Deck the Halls With Boughs of Holly" and even two-year-olds can sing "Fa. la, la, la, la," with ease. I hope you are enjoying the whole month because thinking about and getting ready for the big day is such fun.

This year we are enjoying another book this season. It is called The Family Celebrates Christmas, and it was written by Dorothy Carl and can be ordered from Pilgrim Press, by whom it was published, for 50¢. The address is 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. There are some things in it addressed to parents, songs, stories, poems and ideas of things to make, including directions for a creche. That is the French word for cradle and means the little figures depicting the manger scene that are used at Christmas in homes and churches. Photographs illustrate this book and I think you will like it.

Last Christmas I gave a Christmas cookie recipe and all year people have been asking me and writing me for it again. Well, this time it is going to be candy—an easy kind to make. Make it for yourself or to give to someone. I know a group that will visit older people at a home and they plan to make candy, wrap each piece and remember everyone with this plus a nice card they will make. Here it is.

HOLIDAY CEREAL TREAT.

¼ cup margarine or butter.

1 package marshmallows (about 30).

1 teaspoonful of flavoring (vanilla or almond).

1 cup candied cherries, or

½ cup cherries chopped in pieces.

1 small package of popped rice cereal.

Melt the margarine in a saucepan over low heat, add marshmallows and flavoring (if you can't stir it constantly make it in a double boiler to avoid burning marshmallows). Stir until it is thick and marshmallows are melted. Add the cherries. Pour over the cereal that is in a well greased bowl, stir with a fork until it sticks together.

This candy may be shaped into balls, rolled in powdered sugar and cellophane wrapped. Or cookie cutters (snowmen, Santa, star) can be used to cut the candy. Roll remaining bits into balls. Decorate snow men and Santa Claus with a little melted chocolate. Dip a toothpick into the chocolate and make eyes, mouth, etc.

Hope you will enjoy the making, giving and eating!

Christmas is the birth remembrance of Jesus, the friend of boys and girls. Let us ever think about that and not be too excited about Santa Claus. Because Jesus came we have this wonderful day. Let us make it His day!

I'M GLAD MY PARENTS AREN'T SEPARATED.

By RUTH PECK McLEOD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I sure am glad that my mother and dad aren't separated. There's Tom Tatum, my friend; he stays over at our house most of the time, because he's lonesome for his daddy. He goes fishing and camping with Dad and me lots of times. You see, Tom lives with his mother. She can't get along with his dad, and so his dad lives somewhere else. There's no excuse for them to be separated, my mom says, because all people have their little fuses. Why, even I am on the war-path with my folks sometimes, and they get provoked with me—but usually, when we talk it over, everything gets settled fine.

Mother and Dad, too, have their little argument once in a while, but—shucks!—soon they get over it and always kiss each other and make up. Mom says that if Mrs. Tatum hadn't lived so close to her mother she'd still be with her husband. She was spoiled the worst way, Mom says, and if Tom's dad wouldn't do just what she wanted him to do, she'd go right over to her mother and tell her about it and, of course, her mother would always be on her side.

Then there's Sam Rayburn—I pity him. He lives with his dad. When his folks separated, his mother became an actress and went away, and so he stays with his father in a hotel. Mom says she likes to mother Sam because he has to eat out so much; he loves her homecooking. He has nobody to sew his buttons on or to darn his socks. And he has no place to play in, unless he comes out to some other guy's house.

But about the worst case I know is Jim Stockwell's. He stays with his mother a while, then he goes to live with his father, and then he comes back to his mother—and he has to keep that up. It seems to me that would make a boy's life very queer. Jim told me, confidentially, that his mom always tries to say little things against his dad and his dad's always saying he can't see why he ever married Jim's mother. Mom says it's awful bad for one parent to run down the other, because every guy wants to be proud of his own folks.

At Christmas it's so sad for all the children of the couples who are separated, and, as Dad says, that should be the happiest time for the family. Then on birthdays and other celebrations—when a fellow wants to be really happy—he can't be very happy if both his parents aren't with him.

When your folks are separated, Jim says it makes you feel mixed up. Because he lives part of the time with his dad and part of the time with his mom, he feels kind of helpless and homeless—as if he wouldn't know where to go if anything hapened to him. Now if I get hurt or have any trouble in school, I come straight home to my parents because I know they'll fix things up. Jim overheard the principal at school telling one of the ladies of the Parent-Teacher Association that Jim, his parents being separated, didn't feel "secure." He didn't know exactly what she meant by that, but, he said, he does know he's all mixed up.

Everybody has arguments; why, my chum Charley, and I have lots of them. Sometimes, seems as if we get furious with each other; then, after a while, we become ashamed of the mean things we've said and make up, because we really are good pals. That's the way life goes. I'm quick-tempered, but I get over it easily. Dad's like that, too. Now Mom's more even-tempered and very seldom angry, but when she is angry you'd better be careful; she doesn't forget as quickly as Dad and I do!

We have one of those old-fashioned framed mottoes hanging up in our dining room that says, "Love One Another." It belonged to my great-grandfather. Mom said he gave it to her when she was married, and he said, "Little Granddaughter,"—he always called her that—"whenever you have any trouble in the family just come and read this motto and it will give you all the advice you will need." And—oh boy!—he sure knew what he was talking about!

FROM THE HILLSIDE. Gaius Glenn Atkins. The Pilgrim Press. $2.

For a host of readers, a new book by Gaius Glenn Atkins needs no recommendation, only publication. Mature judgment, dependable scholarship, exquisite phraseology, homiletic gems—these features may be confidently anticipated in every book by this beloved Congregational author.

From the Hillside is a preacher's appraisal of the Sermon on the Mount. Here is one of his polished insights: "By every test of concise and perfect form the 'sayings' were inwardly phrased on the hillsides before they were said on the hillside. They were fashioned to the staccato of his carpenter's hammer, having in their impact that very quality. They subdued vast matters to brief simplifications as he worked tough-grained wood to some domestic use." His critical and homiletic treatment of the Beatitudes should inspire a new round of sermons on these mighty themes.

"Thereafter," says the author, "the Sermon defines, illustrates, and expands the implications of the Beatitudes and gives definite content to the saving and illuminating quality of the Gospel, becomes itself the Gospel. . . . The Sermon, centrally, deals with human relations in their most difficult conditions: enmities, estrangements, hoarded and inherited bitternesses. There is our difficulty, always. It is easy, Jesus said in substance, to get along with people you like, easy to exchange good will given for good will received; but to meet ill will with good will, injury with forgiveness, is a challenge not only to the hero in the soul, but to the saint in the soul."

The layman could hardly find a more appropriate Christmas gift for his pastor.

MASTERPIECES OF RELIGIOUS VERSE.

Edited by James Dalton Morrison. Harpers, New York. $5.

In these days of high prices, when $5.00 doesn't ordinarily buy much, it is refreshing to find something on the sales counter that is more than one's money's worth. Such a find is Morrison's Masterpieces of Religious Verse, which presents 2,020 poems by 900 poets.

The editor's particular contribution is his fine labor of love in grouping the vast treasury of poetry into one hundred and sixty-six subject classifications, the main divisions being: God, Jesus, Man, The Christian Life, The Kingdom of God, The Nation and The Nations, and Death and Immortality.

James Morrison is a careful gleaner, and there is little chaff indeed in his wheat. Realizing that the work of minor poets is often major, the editor has given the reader a wealth of poetry that is thoroughly spiritual, and (mirabile dictu) rarely pedantic.

For the minister who seeks to enrich his worship and life; for the leader of youth who strives to inspire with beautiful and meaningful worship services; for the average layman who longs for help and hope, this anthology is a must!

James Morrison has succeeded in a most difficult task, that of making poetry popular and helpful. His anthology is a major event in the realm of religious publication.

THE AUTHORITY OF THE BIBLICAL REVELATION. Hubert Canliffe-Jones. The Pilgrim Press. $2.50.

Need your theological wits sharpened? This book will help you. The author writes with a conviction that "One of the most urgent tasks for the renewal of the Christian Church is the enabling of Christian believers who are not technically biblical scholars to read their Bibles for themselves;" that "The gains of the intensive historical study of the Bible must be taken up into a positive theological understanding of it as the revelation of the living God." The book is a persuasive plea for the interaction of the historical and theological studies of the Bible. Dr. Canliffe-Jones has served Congregational churches in Australia and England. He now serves as Principal and Tutor at Yorkshire United Independent College, Bradford, England.

TAI-LEE'S PRECIOUS SEED. Mary I. Beck. Friendship Press. $1.75.

DIKE AGAINST THE SEA. Mary Brewster Hollister. Friendship Press. $1.50.

THE RED CHAIR WAITS. Alice Margaret Huggins. The Westminster Press. $2.75.

Here are three books about China. The first two are for younger readers and the last is for young people and not boring for adults. Now that Christmas is upon us, we think of books as gifts for many friends. We may also consider that China is being studied by Christian women throughout America as their foreign mission study and the tremendous events that are now happening in China. It is interesting to note that all of these books were written by missionaries, and Alice M. Huggins wrote hers while interned during the war.

Tai-Lee's Precious Seed is most appealing for boys, and it is suitable for boys and girls from twelve to fifteen. It tells the story of a boy and his sister and how they carried and cared for the "precious seed" given to Tai-Lee by his father. The air of mystery is cleared happily. Illustrations by Jim Lee.

Dike Against the Sea is a book packed with exciting adventures for children from nine to twelve. Star and True, sister and brother, lived on the Chinese coast behind a dike that kept the sea from them. The village school, church and festivals are all portrayed. Illustrated by Kurt Wiese.

The Red Chair Waits—written while under the Japanese occupation Alice Margaret Huggins and her collaborators, Earle H. Ballou and Hugh Laughlin, have told a tale of a Chinese Christian school. Although the story moves slowly at times, it is a good picture of the change being wrought in China and will give young people added insight to their fellow students' problems. Chien Shu-Lan forgot herself and refused to follow the plans of her parents but her victory was great and brought happiness to all. Book is enhanced with decorations by Jeanyee Wong.

GOOD NEWS IN THE BIBLE (CHRISTMAS).

LESSON XII—DECEMBER 19, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Be not afraid for behold I bring you good news of a great joy which shall come to all the people.—Luke 2:10.

LESSON: MATTHEW 1:18-2:1-12;
Mark 1:1-11; Luke 2:1-20.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 9:2-7.

The Meaning of Christmas.

There is an interesting story in the Old Testament of a king who had a strange dream, a dream which troubled him greatly. He summoned his astrologers and his wise men, and commanded them to interpret his dream. They asked him what he had dreamed. "I dreamed" said he "I dreamed eh—well the thing is gone from me." He had forgotten the central pivotal fact, the thing that gave meaning to everything else, the only thing that really counted. And that simple and striking story is a parable of Christmas as it concerns thousands of modern men and women, boys and girls. They forget altogether the meaning of Christmas, the central, pivotal fact of Christmas.

In the rush and crush of pre-Christmas activities, and the secular observance of Christmas, to say nothing of the commercialization of Christmas, they forget that Christmas is the anniversary of the birthday of our Lord Jesus Christ, and as such it is the central and pivotal day in the moral and spiritual history of the human race, and the dating of all history. For thousands of people, Christmas is merely a holiday, it bears no semblance to a holy-day. For thousands it has no moral or spiritual significance. For thousands its deeper meaning is lost in the superficial and even sinful observance of the day. And alas, for thousands of children in this Christian land, the central figure in Christmas is Santa Claus, and not Jesus Christ. These things ought not so to be. Christmas means too much thus to be regarded and treated.

No Christmas Without Christ.

If we stop to think about it there would be no Christmas if Christ had not come. All that Christmas means in its highest and finest expression stems from the fact that it had its birth in the Birth of the Babe of Bethlehem, and that it gets its significance, from Him and His influence on mankind. If He had not come, there would be no Christmas, no Church, no New Testament, no Easter, no gospel, no Savior. There would be great, gaping breaks in literature, art, sculpture, music, drama, religion itself. One can better understand what Christmas really means by looking at pagan lands in which Christ and Christmas are not known. To spell Christmas without Christ is to leave nothing but a "mas(s)" of meaningless activities and even burdensome services.

The Good News of Christmas.

Christmas is essentially "good news." God's holy angles themselves said so, on that first Christmas morning. Behold I bring you good tidings or good news of great joy, said the angel to the shepherds as the heavens became vivid and vocal. And why should we wonder that the heavens did burst forth in splendor and in song at the birth of the Son of God! It would have been strange if they had not done that in connection with such an epochal event.

Yes, Christmas came as good news—the good news that God had come down to dwell with men, the good news that in the Babe of Bethlehem, grown to manhood, men saw the image of the invisible God, the good news that God sending His Son in the likeness of flesh had given human life a new dignity, and had also made possible to it a new liberty, the good news that through faith in this Saviour men by the grace of God could have forgiveness for their sins, and be brought into a new relation with God through faith, and all this not by merit of their own or by good works, but simply through the grace or the unmerited love of God, the good news that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, the good news that here and now men could experience life more abundantly, life with new depth, the good news that immortality had been brought to light through His gospel. All that is inherent in Christianity, all its blessings and its benedictions came potentially with that first Christmas. Christmas is the best news that ever broke forth in this old world of ours. All the other good news of all time is good news only because of the good news of Christmas.

The Christmas Story.

There is no need to recount in detail the Christmas story. It is familiar to both young and old, at least in content, if not in import. It remained for Luke the beloved physician to give us the best and the only detailed account of the birth of our Lord. And he does so with exquisite skill and grace. Reverently, delicately simply he condenses the story of this epochal event—all history is dated with reference to the birth of this Babe—into a few verses. One has only to read it quietly and reverently to feel something of its charm and spell. Here was a man and his betrothed wife, a young virgin, by a strange ordering of Providence, making their way at the command of a pagan ruler, to their ancestral city to be enrolled or taxed. And while they were there, the Babe was born, and thus an ancient prophecy was fulfilled in a literal sense. Although He was born a king, He borrowed nothing from his surroundings—He was born in a stable and, after being attended to by His mother, He was laid in a rude manger as His first bed.

Then there is the story of how humble shepherds, watching their flocks in the fields at night, were startled by angelic visitors who announced His birth, and set the heavens and their hearts to singing, and sent them to Bethlehem to see the things that had come to pass there. Strangely enough the sign that there had been born unto all people a Savior Who was Christ the Lord was that they should find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and laid in a manger. Sure enough it was even as the angles said unto them. And wonderingly, worshipfully the shepherd went back to their old tasks, but they went back in a new spirit.

Matthew also records an incident in connection with the birth of Jesus, but of a later date. Wise men from the East, their interest quickened by a strange star which they had observed in the East, followed the star and at journey's end found the Christ Child. They too, with true wisdom as well as with proper reverence, bowed down and worshiped the Babe. Representing as they did the Gentile world, it was a prophetic act, a symbol of His sovereignty and His saviourhood of all mankind. the Jew and the Gentile as well.

It is a story to be read with the heart as well as with the head, and indeed more with the heart than with the head, This does not mean, however, that it is mere fancy or legend or myth. Ah my friends the most solid and stubborn fact in history is the fact that Jesus, was born in Bethlehem of Judea. The coming celebration of Christmas is simply more evidence of the miracle of Christmas. And the Miracle of all miracles is Christ Himself. Of the increase of His government and of peace there shall be no end, and He shall reign forever and forever. Amen.

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to the readers of these notes and to the members of THE CHRISTIAN SUN family.

EDITORIAL

that country greater interest among people in the reading and studying of the Bible. To help in this, the Spanish Society has distributed thousands of copies of the Scriptures. Distribution of Protestant Scriptures is now allowed in Spain in English, French and German.

This phenomenon of increased reading of the Bible is not confined to our own land. A recent visitor to Japan has reported seeing the Japanese reading copies of the New Testament on park benches and while riding in tian Association there operates make-shift sidewalk Bible stalls in Tokyo where the passerby may secure a copy of the Scriptures, so great has been the demand for the books.

In Edinburg, it is learned, a six-year schedule is being launched in Scottish schools which will insure that every boy and girl will receive Scripture training "on a par with mathematics and languages," and "know the Bible as well as their grandfathers."

NONE OTHER NAME.

as this. How adequate is the church going to be to meet humanity's need? This much I know, up to now the church is hardly scratching the surface of that need. Thousands are floundering around in the whirl-pools of the world seeking to satisfy their souls.

Our churches have too many empty pews and too inadequate a program of finance and spiritual recruiting for God's Kingdom. Why is this? We are just too much afraid that our religion is going to cost us something in cash and conviction. It will not be until we, as a church, are willing to say, unitedly, that there is none other name save the name of Christ whereby we can be saved—not until then will the church get a spiritual "shot in the arm" and renew its courage and move on to the fulfillment of God's purpose for it.

Before the early church fell the mighty forces which had held sway over the minds of the people for generations past. The forces of evil which had held a strong grip on the lives of men met their conqueror in a courageous church with a message of power. The Gospel became the power of God unto salvation. Thus, they witnessed with courage because they had found Christ.

Today the church has a message—the only message to meet the needs of men. But her words will be as sounding brass or clanking cymbals unless behind what she says and what she does, there is the living evidence, that, for her, Christ has become a reality and is the Lord of life.

I have often wondered what the strength and import of the church might be in a community, if all of its members having found Christ would stand by Him and by their church. This fellowship here, I dare say, is little different from all others. Today there are empty pews. All Sundays it has been the same. And yet this church has on its roll and this church ministers to more than enough people to fill it twice each Sabbath day. Where are those who are supposed to be Christian and members of the church? You know where they are as well as I. And that is just the reason the outside world looks with skepticism upon the church. It says, "I see little difference between the man on the inside and the man on the outside of the church."

Regretfully, the church has made little difference in many people. And it will not be until this or any other church constituency takes seriously the task of the Kingdom and becomes endowed with "power from on high," because they want it—not until then will it have the conviction and courage to witness boldly to the saving and regenerating power of Christ.

III.

It takes a spiritual church to effectively proclaim Salvation in none other name.

Today we came together at this sacred altar to renew our covenant with the Master. Recall again that He said, "This do in remembrance of me." That by remembering Him we may be better men and women, spiritually, and thus make the church of which we are a part a greater power for good and for God.

A spiritual church is one that is interested in the things of the spirit.

Such as: The Bible, which is the word of the Spirit; seeing lives changed, which is the work of the Spirit, and in showing loving-kindness which is the fruit of the Spirit. A spiritual church is a praising church. The early Christians came together for worship, not reluctantly nor through some grim sense of duty, but because they loved the Lord and wanted to lift their voices in praise to Him.

A spiritual church is a friendly church. When Jesus was about to leave His disciples He said, "A new commandment I give you, that ye love one another." And if Christians are to love one another they must know one another.

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson once said, "There are many city churches whose members do not know one another and do not want to. And there are many village churches whose members know one another and are sorry that they do." Such churches cannot greatly advance the cause of Christ. The pagans said of the early Christians, "Behold, how these Christians love one another." When a church becomes like that it draws people to God. I hope that in the days ahead, this church, with a heart made warm by the love of Christ will take up and re-sound again the words of Peter, "There is none other name given among men, whereby we must be saved." None other name.

I love the words of Jean Perry which I leave with you as the closing thought of the morning:

I knew of a Name, a beautiful Name,
That angels brought down to earth;
They whispered it low, one night long ago,
To a maiden of lowly birth.

I know of a Name, a beautiful Name,
That unto a Babe was given;
The stars glittered bright throughout that glad night,
And angels praised God in heaven.

I love that blest Name, that wonderful Name,
Made higher than all in heaven;
'Twas whispered, I know, in my heart long ago—
To Jesus my life I've given.
Let us pray!

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our Thanksgiving offerings are coming in very encouragingly. We are still a long distance from our goal, but we hope to reach it. We will not give up until we have made our final report on December 31, and if then we find we are short of the $50,000.00, we will give up and be disappointed in our people. But we still believe our people, whom we have served for thirty-one years, will not let us down now. If everyone will do his or her part we will reach it.

One day last week Mrs. Corbett and Miss Georgia Bradley and a little girl (I failed to get her name) from Mebane, N. C., paid the orphanage a very pleasant visit. Some friend had presented Mrs. Corbett with a large pumpkin weighing fifty-two pounds, and she said she couldn't use fifty-two pounds of pumpkin. It worried her as what disposition to make of it. She said she woke up the night before, worrying about the pumpkin, and the thought came to her to give it to the Christian Orphanage at Elon College. That solved her problem and she decided to deliver it to the orphanage the following day, which she did. Then it became my problem as to how to get it out of the car. All the boys were in school, the men folks were all out on the farm, and no one in sight to help me. I told Mrs. Corbett that I was young and strong and I could easily carry the pumpkin in, and I did. I carried it up the front steps, through the living room, dining room, into the kitchen, and I did not look much for a place to lay it down. The little girl, bless her heart, brought twenty pounds of sugar to sweeten the pumpkin pies, and Miss Georgia Bradley brought a basket of nice red apples to treat the children. We cut the pumpkin in thirds and sent a section to each of the other buildings so all the children could enjoy pumpkin pie.

Mr. Wagoner, our assistant, killed over two thousand pounds of pork this week and salted it down. This is the first killing. We will have three more killings this season. The children are enjoying pork chops, sausage and spare ribs now.

Our people are thinking of Christmas and are calling for the children's names and ages so they can send them a present for Christmas to make them happy.

kinds of worthwhile things for parents and children to do together during the weeks before Christmas.

We are confident that this is something that will not disappoint pastors, parents or children. It is a sample of the kind of booklet we expect to issue each quarter beginning in 1950. But if this should be a flop, sales-wise, we might have to conclude that the quarterly production of such materials is too big a financial risk. To make such booklets possible it is necessary to sell at least 25,000. Will you be willing to make the promotion of this booklet a major effort this fall? We thank you heartily.

In Memoriam

BARRETT.

On August 26, 1948, it was God's will to call from our midst Mr. Waverly S. Barrett. As he lived so he died—quietly, peacefully in the faith. In his death the family lost a devoted and kind father, and the wife a loving husband. The church loses a loyal friend, and the entire community feels the loss greatly.

We know that God doeth all things for our good, therefore, in the going of our friend and co-worker we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we are thankful for the remembrance of his devotion, and cherish the memory of his faithfulness.

2. That in his going we have lost a valuable member of the Dendron Christian Church, one who was generous in his giving, and untiring in his efforts.

3. That we extend to his family our sincere sympathy and commend them to our loving Father's care.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

COGHILL.

It was said a long time ago that the human race goes forward on the feet of children. This is true. The children grow into mature life and make their contribution to church, state and nation. This, of course, varying in proportion to the contribution that may have been made in the formative period of development.

Fuller's Chapel has lost one of its best and most useful members in the passing of my friend and a friend of man, Mr. Samuel Fuller Coghill, October 29, 1948. He was always humble. Not much to say, yet he was found on the right side in matters pertaining to the best interest of the church and community. In his conversations one could feel that it was not his own interest that he was presenting but that of others. He lived in making it possible for others to live. He was a man of an enduring faith. He believed in an unselfish devotion to God. He wanted others to have that same faith. He felt, in that faith, God would take care of his own. It was a source of inspiration to associate with him.

The church and community will miss "Brother Sam." But in the things that are for the best advantage we may be sure of his interest, as if he were here. We need other good men. Men who are willing to invest in the things that will build strong churches and preserve the best in the community. I feel that it does not take so great an effort, but it takes deep consecration and a will to let the Lord have his way in the things which one does. "Brother Sam" Coghill was a good man, and we are praying for others to take his place.

HOLLAND.

The Holland Christian Church and its community suffered a grievous loss early this year in the sudden translation of J. Bernard Holland to the life eternal.

He was the son of the late Wilson J. Holland, and Mrs. Irene Jones Holland. Upon leaving Virginia Polytechnic Institute he joined the Holland-Jones Company of which concern his father was the president. Later upon the death of his father he entered into business for himself, trading under the same company name. As a merchant in the field of men's clothing he had achieved a wide and enviable reputation for his business acumen and personal integrity. Like his father before him he was a born merchant and saw to it that every customer received value for his money.

Since boyhood he was a member of the Holland Christian Church and in later years became its head usher. To this important service he brought ability and understanding. His was no superficial service, he gave to it careful thought in working out each detail, always, with a view to improving the service. He graced this position with dignity and regularity.

Bernard was interested in every department of the church's life. He served as a trustee and as president of the Men's Bible Class and to each position to which he was elected he gave generously of himself and of his resources.

He loved his native town and joined in every good movement for its improvement. As a member of the local Ruritan Club he found many an opportunity to unite with men of like mind in working for better relationships between town and rural peoples, and this he did with a willing heart.

At the age of forty years he was called to the service of the larger life beyond. His mother and two sisters, Mrs. George D. Underwood and Miss Eloise Holland, survive him.

E. N. C. CONFERENCE REPORT ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

push children in the direction of church hoping they will get there. Fathers and mothers must be made to understand that they cannot place a Bible on the nightstand of their children, hoping that it will be read. Fathers and mothers must be made to realize that they cannot simply suggest an evening prayer for their boys and girls, hoping that prayer will be said. Ah, no, those hopes are never realized. We must make parents know for a certainty that children need more than three meals a day, shelter, warm clothing and education. We just must challenge them with their part in helping the churches teach God. They must take their boys and girls by the hand and lead them to God's house. They must help them in the study of God's word. They must teach them to pray.

Once some years ago, out in the State of Indiana, a father stood by the open grave of his son. Bitter sobs shook his entire being, tears ran down his cheeks, and he was heard to cry out, "Oh, this can't be my boy. It just can't be." Yes, he had provided a high school education, three meals a day, warm clothing and shelter, but never once had that father led his son to church or read to him the Bible or taught him how to pray. "Oh, this can't be my son. It just can't be." But it was his boy and as he stood there weeping tears of bitterness, America rejoiced because G-Men had shot to death Public Enemy Number One, his son, John Dillinger.

There are many testimonies for Christian Education wherever we turn, wherever we look, but there is none better than that coming from a New York Juvenile Judge who says that within the past five years, some fifty-five hundred juvenile delinquents had paraded through his courtroom charged and convicted with every crime of the record, but not one of this number was a member of a Christian Sunday School.

Let us watch our attendance. Let us be sure of the full cooperation of fathers and mothers and if we cannot be sure, then let us be half sure, let us all at least make this effort.

Already this report seems too long. Maybe we can sum up all we have to say by reminding you of a man who came upon a building under construction. He said a pleasant good morning to a workman and asked the question, "What are you doing, my friend?" The workman did not even bother to look up, but he answered, "I am laying brick." This man moved on and spoke to a second workman. "What are you doing, my friend?" he asked the second time. This man did not look up, but with a growl in his voice and a frown on his face he answered, "I am making ten bucks a day." Again the man passed on and for the third time spoke to a workman with the question, "What are you doing, my friend?" This time the workman straightened up, stepped back and smiled as he looked upon his work and answered, "Oh, I am building a cathedral." Is the analogy too far drawn? Is it not true that we are making an effort to build cathedrals, great Christian lives out of those just taking their first steps in the faith, great souls out of little ones?

Let us not weary of our task. Let us realize our responsibility as builders and never let the sun set without praying, "Dear God, give courage for the day and strength for the task."

TUCKER G. HUMPHRIES,
Chairman.

Our National Stewardship

The Congregational Christian Churches of the United States have just announced plans to raise over $6,280,000 during the year 1949 for their Christian World Mission. Nearly $2,000,000 of this total will be used by the American Board for strengthening its work in 14 missions in Asia, Africa, the Near East and the South Seas, where right now people are trying to decide whether to go the way of Christianity or to follow materialistic voices.

More than $1,700,000 will be used by the Board of Home Missions for re-locating churches in suburban areas; building much needed new churches; helping under-privileged groups; promoting better race relations, and increasing Christian church contacts with students on campuses.

An estimated $1,500,000 will be spent by the State Conferences throughout the United States for strengthening work among laymen, lay women, youth and children. Approximately another $1,000,000 will be allocated to emergency needs and will be administered through the Christian Service Committee, Church World Service and other relief agencies.

Over $165,000 will be used by the Council for Social Action in keeping members informed on social, economic and industrial problems from the Christian point of view.

Our churches are facing some startling facts, among them: There are 3,009 Congregational Christian Churches listed as "marginal"; there are more than 5,000 new Protestant churches needed in the United States, and our share is 205; the high cost of living is seriously affecting all church-founded and conducted institutions.

The American Board is struggling with inflation abroad which is more vicious than here at home, in mid-October a Chinese mission high school teacher in North China had to pay $25US for a 44-lb bag of flour, or the equivalent of his entire month's salary. The Board needs by 1950 at least 39 new missionaries, doctors, nurses, social workers, teachers, ministers and agriculturists, to assist the Younger Churches overseas. While these are doing their best, they are desperately in need of aid in training new leaders, and the schools and hospitals abroad are tragically understaffed and under-equipped.

This Christian World Mission of the Congregational Christian Churches, important as that may be, is not just a money-raising program. It has for its purpose the deepening of the spiritual life of every man, woman and child in our fellowship and the application of the Christian way to the actions of nations as well as individuals. Without this spiritual base no financial goal can be reached.

Says Dr. Albert Stauffacher, "People around the world are being challenged by conflicting loyalties and philosophies. We must strengthen swiftly our Christian program at home and abroad."

VOLUME C.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1948.

NUMBER 50.

New Vice-President of Federal Council

MRS. DOUGLAS HORTON

Congratulations to Mildred McAfee Horton, newly-elected Vice-President of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Mrs. Horton, president of Wellesley College and war-time head of the WAVES, is the first woman elected to a major office in the history of the Council. The election for the biennium of 1948-50 took place at Cincinnati, Ohio, on December 3.

Recognized as one of the nation's most distinguished educators and civic leaders, Mrs. Horton comes from a family traditionally associated with the church. Her father, the late Rev. Dr. Cleland Boyd McAfee, was former secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy at Park College, Parkville, Mo. Her husband, Dr. Douglas Horton, is minister of the General Council and former chairman of the American Committee for the World Council of Churches.

Since 1927 she has served both as a teacher and college executive in some of the nation's leading colleges. Starting as an acting professor of economics and sociology at Tusculum College, Greenville, Tenn., she has been successively Dean of Women at Centre College, Danville, Ky., executive secretary of the Associate Alumnae of Vassar College, and Dean of College Women at Oberlin College. She was named president of Wellesley College in 1936. She recently announced she would retire in June, 1949.

Mrs. Horton holds a master's degree from Chicago University, and eighteen honorary degrees from universities and colleges. Honorary doctor of Law degrees have been awarded Mrs. Horton by Boston University, University of Pennsylvania, Tulane, Princeton, Mount Holyoke, Oberlin, and Smith.

As a board member of several colleges in the Orient, she is associated with Yenching University, Kobe College and the Christian College of China. In addition, she is a trustee of Walnut Hill School, Natick, Mass., Dana Hall Schools, Wellesley, Mass., and Northfield Schools, East Northfield and Mount Hermon, Mass.

News Flashes

Suffolk Church received four new members on Sunday, December 12.

Rev. James R. Hailey, ministerial student at Elon College, is pastor of the Damascus Church, near Chapel Hill.

Dr. F. C. Lester represented the Congregational Christian Churches at the Federal Council meeting in Cincinnati.

Rev. W. M. Lake has offered his resignation as the Director of Franklin Center to become effective January 31, 1949.

Rev. Johnson L. Griffin, graduating from Duke Divinity School in February, has been called to the pastorate of our Bay View Church, Norfolk.

Superintendent Scott, Dr. F. C. Lester, Dr. H. S. Hardeastle, and Dr. W. B. O'Neill visited the Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, Va., December 6.

Rev. Clyde L. Fields is the new pastor of Pleasant Ridge (W. N. C.), and Rev. Weldon T. Madren, formerly pastor of Pleasant Ridge, is serving the Ether and Shady Grove Churches.

Our Chapel Hill Church is installing a new furnace—and they are paying cash for it obtained “by sacrificial gifts”—and not “money raised,” writes Rev. B. V. Munger, the minister of the church.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN regrets to learn that Mrs. W. S. Beamon, prominent and beloved member of Main Street Methodist Church, Suffolk, Va., and wife of Mr. W. S. Beamon of the Suffolk Christian Church, died December 10.

Congratulations to Dr. Albert Buckner Coe, who has resigned as pastor of First Congregational Church in Oak Park, Illinois, to succeed Dr. Ralph Timberlake as Superintendent of the Massachusetts State Conference.

The Norfolk-Portsmouth pastors together with Dr. H. S. Hardeastle, Dr. W. B. O'Neill and Dr. F. C. Lester of the Mission Board met with Superintendent Scott at the Bay View Church on Monday, December 6, to discuss ways and means of assisting this important work. The future is most hopeful for Bay View.

The service of consecration for the new parsonage of the Winchester, Va., Church was held Sunday, December 5. Superintendent Scott participated in that service and delivered the sermon at the morning worship of the church. This new parsonage is a joy to pastor and people at Winchester. Besides providing very adequate home facilities for the pastor, Rev. R. A. Whitten, and his family, the basement affords a large social room equipped with kitchen and other facilities for the church social life.

MEN'S CLUB ORGANIZED AT UNION (N. C.).

On Saturday night, December 4, fifty-nine men of the Union Church community met in the church Hut for a barbeque supper and a fellowship meeting. Claude Walker presided at the meeting and spoke words of welcome to the group. Invocation was given by the pastor.

George Colelough, guest speaker for the evening, then gave a most informative and inspirational address. Mr. Colelough pointed out the great need of a more active part in the work of the church by the laymen. He gave instructions as to how a club could be organized in the local church and led a discussion on the objectives of such a group.

Bill Mahan presented tentative plans of the organization to the group for approval and proposed that a club be organized within our own group. The idea of forming a local club was greeted with great enthusiasm and the group voted to organize immediately.

Claude Walker was elected president; Marvin Bowland, vice-president; Claude Ward, secretary; and Lacy Hooper, treasurer. A paper was circulated among the group and forty charter members signed for active participation in the local club.

Plans are now under way to arrange interesting programs for each month of the year; four of which are to be dinner meetings.

We feel that this was one of the most important steps taken in our church in many years and it has promise of being a most helpful agency in our community. From the spirit and attitude visible that night we feel that you will be hearing more about this club in the future. They really mean business and they are determined to make this club a success.

Pastor.

ACTIVITIES FOR THE HOME AT CHRISTMAS TIME.

1. Base plans on the spirit of giving, not getting. This means giving of yourself, giving services.

2. Go caroling. Wouldn't it be fine if each community had groups of family and neighborhood carolers? Sing for the aged, the shut-ins, the sick; sing for each other. Let's revive the old-fashioned evenings of family singing when father's bass and mother's alto delighted the children. Perhaps it will also surprise them.

3. Let the word “together” enter into your planning. Trim the tree together; make the cookies together; decide upon the dinner menu together. Go calling together. Include even the youngest child in some of the plans. Encourage “secrets,” surprises. Let the children help to decide when and how to light the tree, open the gifts, serve the dinner.

4. Revive holiday calls. There are many people within walking distance of your home who will be glad to have you drop in. This might lead to new friendships—right at your doorstep.

5. Go to church—go as a family group; sit together during the service.

6. Have fun. Freedom to laugh is a value to cherish.

7. Retain family traditions. Each family has them. Perhaps it is the way you decorate the house, or light the windows, or wrap the packages, or open them.

8. Write letters to absent ones. Make them newsy letters. Tell them what you did during the holidays, how you observed the day at home, where you called or who dropped in to see you. Tell them about your caroling and the fun you had during practice.

9. Let your Christmas spirit overflow. Include the neighbors. Remember the newcomers in your community. They have left homes and friends such as you have—Christmas intensifies the feeling of aloneness, you know.—Prof. Alice Sowers.

HOLY NECK JUNIORS.

The Junior Missionary Society of Holy Neck Church wishes to report a successful year's work for the church years of 1947-48.

Our meetings have been held each month with devotionals led by one of the juniors at each meeting.

We completed our study book, The Bible Goes Around the World, using parts of it at each of our meetings.

On the second Sunday in August we presented our public program, using as our theme, “The Bible Goes Around the World.”

We had a Christmas party and the

"I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day. The night cometh when no man can work."—John 9:4.

Our Master's life was a busy life. How crowded were the three years of His ministry. On the occasion of our text, He had restored the sight of a blind man. The disciples asked of him, "Master, who sinned, this man or his parents, that he should be born blind?" Jesus answered, "Neither did this man sin, nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him."

Jesus referred to this act of mercy as an opportunity to glorify God. The opportunity for service, He pointed out, must be grasped when it presents itself. "I must do the works of Him that sent me while it is day. The night cometh when no man can work."

Someone has asked the question, "What is the dominant mood in America today?" One person answers, "The dominant mood in America today is that of happiness." In the July 12 issue of Life magazine, there is a report of a round-table discussion by a number of prominent educators, publishers and authors on the subject, "The Pursuit of Happiness." Beatrice Gould, editor of the Ladies Home Journal, reported that in a survey made by her magazine people were asked, "Are you very happy, fairly happy or unhappy?" This survey was not confined to our country, but our people by a large majority declared that they were happy: 46 per cent of our people said that they were very happy, 45 per cent fairly happy, and only eight per cent unhappy. But the members of the round table found it difficult to reconcile Mrs. Gould's figures with certain rather depressing facts. How, they said, can a nation be really happy when its divorce rate stands at so high a level? When juvenile delinquency is an ever present and disturbing problem? When our crime record today stands nearly at the all-time high established in 1946? When our liquor bill of nine billion dollars is three times greater than the national school bill? And when one person in every twenty will be in a mental hospital at some time? When one considers these facts, the statement that the majority of the people in this country are happy or fairly happy is open to serious doubt.

Another person suggests that the dominant mood in America is that of hysteria. People the world over are in the grip of hysteria and fear. "How can anyone be truly happy," says this writer, "with the threat of the atomic bomb hanging over his head like the sword of Damocles?"

But Dr. Lucock suggests that the dominant mood in America is nostalgia. We are homesick for the past. Homesick not so much for a certain place as for a certain time. Gripped with fear, hysteria and anxiety, finding real happiness beyond our reach, we look lovingly and longingly to other days. One need not go far afield to substantiate this claim. Any novel depicting the life, manners and customs of fifty or a hundred years ago invariably has a wide circulation. Such productions as "I Remember Mama," "Life With Father," and now "Life With Mother" play to packed houses.

This mood of nostalgia has also invaded our homes. There is an insect known as the "antique bug." I confess to having been bitten by this bug myself. Some time ago I was riding

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

EXTENSION OR EXTINCTION.

A release on the report of Dr. Earl R. Brown of New York, executive secretary of Home Missions and Church Extension, carries this arresting assertion: "The Methodists must establish one new Church a day for the next four years to keep pace with the population shift." More specifically, he declared, "Methodists must (1) establish and build 1,461 new churches by the end of 1951; (2) lift all city churches to the minimum level of effective strength—500 members; (3) double church school enrollment." Think of it!

Church extension should be made a major objective of our home missionary enterprise. A greater intensification and concentration of our resources toward this neglected objective would give fresh validity to our professed mission, open the doors for new evangelistic opportunity, and provide a Conventionwide stimulus to stewardship. What is to be our tempo of Church extension—a new church a day, a year, a decade, or a century?

TRENCHMEN, ON YOUR MARK!

Dr. George S. Reamey, editor of the Virginia Methodist Advocate, tells the story of an omnivorous Advocate representative in the Alexandria District. One James E. Dood was appointed by his people to solicit new subscriptions. Whereupon, he arose during the church service and said he would like for members of the congregation to see him after the service so that he might take their subscriptions. He added that those who didn't come to him could expect a visit from him in their homes. Furthermore, they could expect him to stay for dinner. Dodd's fellow church members knew his reputation as a "big eater," so they hastened to turn in their subscriptions after the service!

Surely each pastor can find at least one trenchman in every church within the Convention! Appoint them on the spot. Perhaps this is the quickest, the most interesting and painless way to secure the 800 additional subscriptions now being requested by the Board of Publications.

NONSMOKERS UNITE.

The United Press announces that a counterpart to Alcoholics Anonymous has sprung up in Pullman, Washington, for chain smokers. It is known as "Nicotine Unlimited," designed for those who are fed up on smoking and want to stay that way. This nonsmokers fraternity, which is beginning to spread nationally, has an elaborate certificate for membership which carries two verses.

Tobacco is a filthy weed
'Tis said the devil sowed the seed,
It robs the pockets of the clothes
It makes a chimney of the nose.

The other goes like this:

Now I lay me down to smoke
Insured for $5,000, ready to croak,
My wife will get her first real break.
If I should die before I wake

War is a grim teacher, but many lessons were learned in the recent war which should not be forgotten. Apropos to the above, here is the story of S. H. Horn.

"I never found greater satisfaction in being free from tobacco slavery than when I suddenly found myself, with thousands of others, a prisoner in one of the Oriental internment camps during the recent World war. For weeks we were deprived of the most essential necessities of life.

"But while I felt keenly the lack of soap, a razor, and a toothbrush, most of the prisoners suffered to the highest degree by a craving for tobacco which was unattainable. Some who could stand this torment no longer, made cigarets from dry grass and magazine paper, with some resultant serious irregularities of digestion.

"Many confessed at the time that they regretted deeply ever having started the habit which gave them more misery now than any of the other inconveniences with which they had to live. When the first tobacco came into the camp and was equally distributed, many smokers gave up their meager food ration to trade it for precious cigarets.

"Never in my previous experience had I felt more intensely the great blessing of being free from tobacco slavery than at that time of imprisonment. Since I have been able to speak with more emphasis than ever against the tobacco evil which is forcing millions into slavery from which there is hardly any escape."

FEDERAL COUNCIL, 1908-1948.

The Federal Council of Churches, our major Protestant body, comprising 25 denominations, has just completed an important meeting in Cincinnati, Ohio. Protestant affiliates should acquaint themselves with the findings of this body. We are therefore including generous excerpts from the "Roundup" issued by Public Relations Director, Don Bolles.

For the first time delegates were assigned to six Sections, each of which considered a special field of interest and then recommended action to the plenary session. Dr. Rosewell P. Barnes, announcing this "experiment or innovation" as a response to comment that delegate participation in the past was not adequate. "Whatever keeps this Council a genuinely democratic body, with each member and constituent denomination taking part, is a necessary part of our procedure." Sections dealt with Lay Participation, Ministry of the Church to Older People, United Evangelistic Advance, Church and Human Rights, Church and Juvenile Delinquency, and Aid for Displaced Persons. Each Section was asked to bring its report and recommendations on the final day of the Council meetings.

Keynoting the fortieth anniversary, Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, who has been general secretary since 1921, traced the dramatic changes apparent in four decades, and pointed out that the real testing of the new ecumenical movement is "in Main Street and Jonesville and Middletown. . . . It is a sheer illusion to talk of an ecumenical Church unless there is a truly ecumenical spirit in the local community where Christians of different denominations live together day by day." Dr. Cavert went on to note the increase in lay participation which has characterized the Council's history, symbolizing the Reformation doctrine of the priesthood of all believers.

Point to Expanded Program.

This expansion of the Council's program was highlighted as Dr. J. Quinter Miller, associate general secretary, presented the 33 staff executives who now head up the Council's activities as part of the total personnel of 105 Council workers. Council membership, he commented, now includes 22 Protestant and three Eastern Orthodox bodies, with a combined communicant membership of nearly 28,000,000 American Christians. (At this session, two more denominations were added as their applications for membership were accepted: the Religious Society of Friends of Philadelphia and Vicinity with some 5,000 members and 50 meetings, and the Romanian Orthodox Church with 21,000 communicants in 42 parishes. Both were accepted by the Council without dissenting vote.)

At a great dinner in the Masonic Temple on the first day of the biennial, four ex-presidents of the Council gathered up program and insights of the first forty years and pointed forward. Memorable anthems by the Hughes High School's a cappella choir set the mood as Methodist Bishop Francis J. McConnell (president, 1928-32) emphasized the courageous social action program of the Council, especially as represented by the weekly publication, "Information Service," which he said "has always kept the great human values in focus." Another ex-president (1934-36), Bishop Ivan Lee Holt of St. Louis, reviewed the effective program of evangelism which the Council has advanced since 1936.

The address of Dean Luther A. Geigle of Yale Divinity School, Council president, 1940-42, traced the trends which are leading toward formation of the National Council of Churches. The Federal Council and seven other national inter-church agencies may be included.

"Local church councils, pressure of united religious education and home missions effort, and needs among college students, all demand even greater cooperative effort, such as the National Council can provide," he declared.

One of the few women speakers, Mrs. Van Stantvoord Merle-Smith, Presbyterian, U. S. A., of New York, in presenting "a church member's view" of the Council, spoke enthusiastically of the new National Council as an enlargement of the program of the Federal Council. "Being a woman," she said, "I know it is possible to change one's name without changing one's personality."

Witty, 79-year-old Dr. George W. Richards, president emeritus of Lancaster Seminary of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, spoke as one who had attended the first session of the Council in 1908, and has been a member continuously since that time. He spoke of a new day of cooperation, in which the so-called "essentials" of our forefathers have become today in many instances "parts of a passing system; and with the conscientiousness that compelled our fathers to hold on, we are compelled to let go." The result, Dr. Richards attested, is "not Protestant division, but Apostolic unity of spirit with diversity of forms."

A fourth ex-president of the Council, Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York, made ringing claims regarding this "Apostolic unity" as it has affected areas of life larger than the Federal Council. "The idealism behind the United Nations charter, and behind the great World Council of Churches formed this autumn at Amsterdam, is in large part traceable to the program of the Federal Council," Bishop Oxnam declared. To document this claim, he read a passage from the United Nations charter preamble framed at San Francisco, where the Council's Commission on a Justice and Durable Peace was importantly represented by its chairman, Mr. John Foster Dulles, and its secretary, Dr. Walter Van Kirk. At the same time, he said, "I doubt we could have had the World Council of Churches without these forty years of history in the Federal Council here in America."

In his presidential address, Mr. Taft pounded home the recurrent theme of his two-year term: that the Church must become more relevant to every aspect of lay concern and vocation. "The layman is more than 99 per cent of the churches, but nobody would know it from the way they move ecclesiastically or talk for the newspapers. . . . Most of us are tame laymen, well broken to harness, guaranteed not to upset too much." The Church, he demanded, must place the Gospel squarely in the midst of lay job life and personal experience, and use laity more fully in church programs as well. Granting that through the message of able pastors, "many men in high places do surprisingly enough turn out to be Christians and seek God's purpose," he called for an entirely fresh appraisal of lay participation in the activity and thinking of Christianity.

Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr, professor at Union Seminary in New York, the other major speaker at the large public meeting, dealt with equal vigor with the relation of the Church to secular life. In characteristic form, he painted Christianity as the one alternative to either complacency or despair, but warned Christians against utopianism, sentimentalism, and cocksureness. "Like Jeremiah," he said, "we must no longer pray for the impossible 'peace of Jerusalem,' but settle for the 'peace of Babylon' in the very place of our captivity."

Ministry of the Church to Older People was considered by a Section chaired by Rev. Otis R. Rice, chaplain of St. Luke's Hospital, New York. In his address outlining this field, Rev. C. E. Krumbholz, executive secretary of the Lutheran National Council's Department of Welfare, pointed out that in 1900, 6.4 per cent of Americans were over 65, whereas now 10.5 per cent Dr. Krumbholz said, "Old (Continued on page 13.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Christian Missionary Association meeting held December 7 with the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, was a good success. The host pastor, the Rev. W. Stanley Carne, and church were well prepared to entertain it. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers, the music was appropriate and sweet, the dining room was lovely and the sixty-three dinner was bountiful and delicious. Both the afternoon and evening programs measured up both in interest in the work being done, and the speeches and addresses that were made. I went a little doubtful as to what the success of the meeting might be but came away enthusiastic for the next year's work.

The retiring president, Rev. Robert M. Kimball, of Franklin, was succeeded by the Rev. B. H. Watkins, of Union (Southampton). The finances were just about up to last year—in the neighborhood of $2,400.00, and just about the same number of churches and members contributed to it. Dr. I. W. Johnson's pastorate paid in over $600.00 and Dr. H. S. Hardcastle's over $500.00. Two great, contributing pastorates—the latter of them to a very large extent a product of the Christian Missionary Association. Newport News is "good news" when her reports are read!

Speeches were made by President Kimball, Superintendent Scott, and the new president of the Mission Board, Dr. F. C. Lester, and others. Three churches are to be aided by the funds collected: Union (Southampton); Bay View, Norfolk; and Little Creek, Norfolk. These three churches proved their cases worthy. Their past year's records showed real growth and progress in new members, in increased giving, and enlarged vision for the future. Union (Southampton) under the direction of the Rev. B. H. Watkins is now full time, has a beautiful new parsonage, and a bright future; Bay View has called the Rev. Johnson Griffin to succeed the Rev. J. Everette Neese (Second, Norfolk), and Mr. Griffin has accepted to begin work in February when he expects to finish at Duke University; Little Creek has been improving its building and enlarging its hold on the community under the leadership of the Rev. M. E. Taylor. At Bay View we must build soon, as their building is now very inadequate. Union (Southampton) has a lovely little church building with few Sunday school rooms but it, too, is quite inadequate. They must build quickly.

The spirit of this session of the Christian Missionary Association was as usual very big and good on the part of all who attended it. It is doing a good work. I hope many more of our churches will begin to see the value of this fine type of Home Mission work, and pledge themselves now to attend the meeting next year at the First Congregational Christian Church, Norfolk, Rev. John L. Gwin, pastor. The meeting was quite pleased with the reporting of the work which has been done at Asheboro, N. C., by a church which was helped with mission funds when it needed it very much, and is now able to be a helping church. Churches which can do so should be thankful to have the privilege of getting really fine churches started by giving in their time of need.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

The Christmas season approaches. Everyone is thinking of gifts. All those who can do so should give gifts. "It is more blessed to give than receive." There are many in our world who cannot give—not even a present to their own loved ones. There are those in our world who can give, but because of selfishness, and a lack of stewardship teaching, will let the season's opportunity pass by without making sad hearts glad. God so loved that he gave. He gave His best. Heaven's choicest gift went to Bethlehem's manger, and to Calvary's cross, that man might have Eternal Life. What a gift? He tells us to "Give, and it shall be given unto you." There are too few people in our world who really and truly believe these quotations. They are accepted in a way, but not enough to put into practice in daily living, weekly worship, and the month of December. If the Psalmist is right, and he is; if we are children of God, and we are; why not prove our faith by our gifts? "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." We may sleep one day under the surface of the earth, but we will not take away any of its possessions or properties. Then why not use God's property entrusted to our care as good and faithful stewards?

Jesus said: "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven. For where your treasure is there will your heart be also." His bride should receive gifts. His unfortunate ones, for whom he died should receive gifts. His gospel should be sent to all the world. The opportunity is ours. It is gift month. We approach the Christmas season. Shall we keep it as a Christian? Shall we observe it as a heathen?

MISSIONARY INTERESTS IN CHINA.

The long conflict between military forces in China is causing deep concern to interests in the United States other than commercial and political. This country has a cultural and philanthropic relation in China that is far-reaching and involves large expenditures and much personnel.

Aside from the travel and study in China by many citizens of the United States, missionary and educational interests financed by contributions large and small of millions of citizens and supplemented by foundations have placed a stake in China that is being closely watched as the holocaust continues.

The first missionary from the United States to China was Elijah C. Bridgeman, who was sent in 1829 by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. His beginning was small, as would be expected, but today several thousand Protestant missionaries of all nationalities are doing work there. The American Catholic missionary societies also play a conspicuous part in religious and educational work in China.

The early missionary effort in China, as was the case in other countries, was to preach the gospel directly to the people. Gradually this single effort was enlarged so that other functions were performed by missionaries. Teaching, doing medical work, and building hospitals were added to missionary effort. In recent years attempts have been made by missionaries to assist in the development of agriculture, mainly because of the widespread famines from which China has so long suffered. These new undertakings have constantly called for more highly educated and specialized personnel.

Missionary effort in China has resulted in conversion of more than 500,000 Chinese to some form of Christian religion; and while the majority of these converts are of the humbler class, the revolution of 1911 gave missionaries a greater opportunity to reach the better educated classes.

CHRISTMAS COMES WITH ITS BLESSINGS.

Isaiah, the prophet of God, stood on vantage ground. He saw God. He saw the world. God was seated upon His throne high and lifted up. There was a halo of light about His head and the seraphims hovered above Him. The world was in darkness, the darkness of disobedience, of superstition, and of unbelief. The people were engulfed in idolatry, infidelity and sin. The prophet saw a new day—the coming of one with power of deliverance who would bring healing and hope to mankind. He declared, "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light. They that dwell in the land of the shadows of death, upon them hath the light shined." The light was perhaps shining dimly in that far away day, but in the fulness of time that light broke upon the world in its fullness and in all of its glory. It lighted up the sky of Palestine and flooded the streets of Bethlehem. Christ was born. The hope of the world had come.

The angels were the first to sing His praise and the shepherds were the first to tell His story. The hallelujahs have multiplied with every passing year and an ever increasing host unflinchingly bear witness to His everlasting love and redeeming grace. Christmas with all of its cheer, its generosity, its kindness, and its good will comes again. In hymn and anthem we praise His name. We vie with the angelic host in our efforts to magnify Him. We go with the speed of the shepherds of Bethlehem to tell the world of His coming. We open our hearts and our purses and bring our gifts that the lonely may have companionship, the hungry fed, the naked clothed, and the poor may have the gospel preached unto them.

We live in a good day. The light has shined upon us. "The lines have fallen to us in pleasant places." But even so, the world is full of disappointment, suffering, sorrow and distress. A hungry world looks to us to be fed and broken humanity turns to us to be healed. What are we going to do about it? We care, yes. We have given, yes. But does our care carry us beyond our selfishness and are our gifts in keeping with our blessings?

There is still a lot of darkness in the world—dark hearts, dark homes, dark countries, and dark continents. He is the light of every heart. He is the light of every home. He is the light of the world. Rise up, O Men of God. By faith, light thy candle anew and send the light, the blessed gospel light to the ends of the earth that all who walk in darkness may find the way of truth and life.

OUR REIDSVILLE CHURCH TAKES A GOOD STEP.

This week I received a letter from Rev. Joe French, pastor of our Reidsville Church, stating that his church had voted to receive a Christmas offering for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund. The Reidsville Church has not accepted its full quota for this Fund. It has, however, contributed $327.63 to this Fund. It is now making a heroic effort to try to raise its full apportionment. This is a most worthy undertaking and as an example for our churches in the Convention that have not paid their quota in full or accepted their quota. There is still due on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund more than $18,000. This money is needed very badly. If any church that has not paid its entire apportionment is in a position to make a payment now, it would help tremendously. Our Reidsville Church and its pastor should be congratulated on its intention to raise its quota and in giving the members of its church an opportunity to express their interest in a Christmas offering.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The churches and Sunday schools of the Convention have done a good job in giving financial support to the college but the job has not been completed. We cannot yet say "well done." Time is running out. The year 1948 will soon be a matter of history and so will our contributions to the college. The Convention asked the churches to contribute to the college during this year $12,500. They have contributed a total of $11,661.13 leaving $838.87 due. The apportionment is far too small to begin with. I am sure that we all realize but perhaps we are not aware of what the Convention is asking the college to do in lieu of the amount the church contributes to the college.

First of all, we are asked to contribute $3,220.00 for ministerial scholarships and full time Christian workers; second, $675.00 for the support of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. These amounts must be paid whether the churches pay their apportionments or not. After the above deductions are made we have $8,605.00. Then deduct the amount due and we have $7,766.13 which is the net amount the church contributed for the support of our college. Not any of the other institutions, committees, or boards that are supported by the church are required to make contributions for ministerial education. We do have a ministerial education fund that is being raised by the churches. Could contributions be made out of this fund to relieve the college of a part of its responsibilities in the matter of our ministerial students and full time Christian workers?

Please be assured that Elon College is always happy to abide with the Convention's decisions and will do its utmost to discharge its responsibilities to the fullest possible extent. It would be most helpful if our churches would come to the rescue of the college and make up the deficit on apportionments before the end of the year.

OUR CHRISTIAN CHRISTMAS.

It is strange to suggest that the Christian community return to the real meaning of Christmas. It is needful to remember that the celebration of the gift of God to the world of the Saviour is distinctly a Christian occasion. The strange part about it is that it should be said.

We cannot but be glad that other interests have taken up the idea with such gusto. Surely there is no harm in everybody enjoying the carols, the gift-exchanging, the general good will and joyousness. Let everyone who can respond to the magic of the season.

The especial plea to the Christian fellowship is to beware of following this popular procedure without recognizing the deeper meanings and implications of the season of remembrance. It may lead to the folly of impertinence and the sin of triviality.

Let the Christian provide for the spiritual interpretation of this festival. This is the distinct difference between making the occasion another holiday and making it a holy day.

A MODERN MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

Missao de Elende,
Cuma, Angola,
Portuguese West Africa,
September 25, 1948.

DEAR FRIENDS:

We are just back from twelve days in the villages and we want to share with you some of the experience of that trip.

Our first stop was a Thank Offering Service in Pastor Marcolino's area. Harvest is just past, a good time for a Thank Offering service. This is a new area and the services were held in a village in the most distant and newest part of that district. On the way we doubted the wisdom of the pastor in choosing that place for the meeting. How wrong we were!

The village couldn't begin to hold the crowds that came, so people slept everywhere in little grass shelters. A nice grass house had been built for us, and the people had built two and a half miles of road, so that we could drive right to the village. True, the road was not what you would call a road. We had to take most of it in low gear as we bounced along over old worn-out fields and through dry creek beds. But it was truly a "Road of the Loving Heart," so we gladly chugged and bounced along in our Pennsylvania Jeep, "Penny."

We were greeted by the choir, with songs and flowers, and then by the stalwart pastor, son of a famous king, and his lovely wife, and by their people. Then the work began, as the pastor outlined the work he had planned. Carl was to preach that night and Lois was to close the service by playing some Portuguese and Uumbundu hymns on the victrola. Lois was to preach the next morning, Carl in the afternoon, and both help with discussion groups. That night, Saturday, Lois gave a stereoptican lecture on the life of Christ while Carl operated the machine. Sunday morning Carl served communion, baptized seventeen babies and twenty-one adults and preached. The afternoon found us in another conference, and at 8:30 p. m. we went into the last conference of that weekend.

Such a brief description can't begin to tell the story. Pastor Marcolino has some 400 church members scattered in forty villages where worship services are held regularly by village leaders. On Saturday Lois preached to over 1,200 people. Pastor Marcolino said it was the first time many of the women had heard the story of Christ told by a woman. Once, as Lois said in her sermon: "O my sisters, recognize what this means to us as women" it seemed as if all the women just leaned forward as one. They weren't missing a word. The woman's lot is a hard one here in Africa, especially in pagan society, and most of the women present were pagans. But here was a woman talking to them of a faith that was interested in helping them not only to know God, but to find a full, new life. A faith that was interested in helping them save their babies—there was hardly a woman there who had not lost at least one child. A faith that could bring song and joy into otherwise drab and burdened lives.

On Sunday there were over 2,000 people present, 2,068 by actual count. And that in an area where we have only 400 church members. That meant Carl was preaching to some 1,600 people who were not believers, and to many who were hearing the gospel message for the first time in their lives. You who are preaching at home, ask yourselves what you would do in a situation like that. I prayed, and prayed hard, while the pastor conducted the worship service. I did not hear much of the orderly service he led. I was frankly scared. Finally, I sort of put it up to the Lord this way: "Lord, this is too big a job and opportunity for me. I don't know what to preach. Please make me say the right thing to touch these people's hearts."

This week Pastor Marcolino was here for a meeting of all the pastors. He told of how the people had come to him after we had gone, both Christians and pagans; to tell him how much spiritual help they had received from that weekend of meetings. He said: "You can't realize how much good you did for us. My people will talk about what you said for years, actually years." It surely makes one humble, and most careful of what one says, in trying to present the Christian faith to a non-Christian people.

Tuesday evening found us in Pastor Gaspar's district, at the Center village. Before the Thank Offering service that week-end, Carl wanted to help them lay out an irrigation ditch. The people now walk over a mile—round trip—for every drop of water they use. We felt guilty every time we took a drink, knowing that some woman or child had made that long trip for the water. Lois had a conference with the deaconesses while Carl, the pastor and the men of the Center went to see if they could get water to run to the village. Before leaving the mission, Carl had assembled a home-made transit with some pine boards from a packing box, a carpenter's level, and a mirror from Lois' purse. The ranging pole was a pine board with a piece of white paper taped onto it. The only possible place to get water high enough upstream to reach the village proved to be some two miles from the village along the side of a big, rock-strewn mountain. We sighted and measured, went forward until stuck, then backed up along our line of stakes and tried a new path. After six hours of steady going in the boiling hot sun we had crossed or skirted four small ridges and three hollows and ended up in the very center of the village. In all our measuring, Pastor Gaspar learned to operate the transit. So now we are fixing him up an outfit to use when they begin the actual digging of the irrigation ditch—they are waiting for the rains to come, when the ground will soften up. Rocks as big as a truck had to be circled. Some just couldn't be by-passed, so the people will build fires on them until they are good and hot, then crack them by throwing on cold water.

That week-end found us doing more preaching and holding more conferences. On Saturday afternoon the conference was on agriculture and its relation to the whole program of the church. Carl was no longer a pastor, but with ears of corn as his starting point, held forth as a sort of "County Agricultural Demonstration Agent," discussing seed selection, soil conservation, plant diseases, vegetable gardening, diet and health.

On Sunday afternoon we held a conference on the Christian Home and Family Life. What a session that was! Here were people just a step away from paganism and its lack of respect for women trying to measure their family life by Christian standards. The men, at first, tried to blame the women for all that was wrong, then

WOMEN AND WORLD PEACE.

Women more than men? Yes, women more than men. There are more of us—a million more of us in the United States; so our vote decides—we will be to blame if there is another war. Also we women are more used to dealing with underlying causes. Said his Grandfather, "That child needs a spanking." "It's temperature, not temper, I think," replied his mother; and finding it was 103 degrees, she put him to bed. Such experiences should prepare women to cure the sickness of nations which produce behaviors that men want to punish. Moreover, most women have more time than men—though we all think we are too busy. Some of that busy-ness is due to tinting our canned pears pink and green as I did last week, or doing other things that make us feel virtuous, but wouldn't seem essential if our homes were destroyed.

"But won't our denomination work suffer if we do all this Council work for relief and the United Nations? I haven't time for both," said a local denominational chairman. Most of the "added" work was recommended in her denominational program, and so far had not been done. Time would be saved, and efficiency increased if this work were done together. And she is trying to do everything herself, instead of hunting and training new younger women. A Christian World Order cannot be built with the spare minutes and pennies of already over-taxed budgets and days. The rest of life must be built around that purpose, as a woman would do, even to become President of the city "Woman's Club."

Building a Christian World Order is particularly women's responsibility. It is a task more important to our families than what goes on in our homes. It must be expected to take a great deal of time. But there are enough women with enough time and ability, if only we will discover them, train them, and so fire their interest that it is the other things for which they are too busy.—Mrs. George B. Barbour in the November issue of Church Woman.

EURE WOMEN TO HOLD MISSION STUDY COURSE.

The Women's Societies of Eure Congregational Christian Church and the Harrell's Methodist Church were joint hostesses for the presentation of the mission study book, On Our Own Doorstep, by Frank S. Mead, on November 29. The theme of this study was "America's Geographical Frontiers." This includes the Panama Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands, Hawaii, Alaska and Puerto Rico.

Miss Mary Parker of Norfolk presented the study on the Panama Canal Zone. She spent last year teaching at Cocoli and brought many illustrations of her work which were helpful for our understanding of the work she did.

Others taking part on the program were: Mrs. Linwood Askew, who discussed Hawaii; Mrs. T. A. Collins, Alaska; Mrs. John Artz, Puerto Rico, and Mrs. Lyeurgus Howell, "Tomorrow."

The ladies of these two missionary societies had as their guests four other missionary societies (total of six missionary societies). There were: Sunbury Methodist, Gatesville Methodist, Winton Methodist, Zion Methodist, Eure Congregational Christian, and Harrell's Methodist.

The study began at 7:30 p. m. and met in the Harrell's Methodist Church. The hostesses served at the social hour delicious refreshments. Dr. and Mrs. Luther Grice, pastor and wife of Eure's Church, were present also. The fellowship existing among all these churches was most delightful. A wonderful time and a lovely way it was to enjoy a real study course. About 85 ladies and three men were present.

PLEASANT GROVE MISSIONARY SOCIETY MEETS.

The Pleasant Grove Congregational Christian missionary women held their regular meeting December 11 at Mrs. H. H. Brays. The meeting was opened with Devotional by Mrs. G. P. Bray. Mrs. James Caviness, president, presided over the business session. Mrs. Kermit Brady read a Christmas story. Also the study and discussion of Galatians Unlimited was studied by the group.

The members present enjoyed a Christmas party. Gifts were exchanged around the Christmas tree. Also the hostess served delicious refreshments in the Christmas colors.

The meeting adjourned to meet with Mrs. James Caviness on January 8.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR CHILDREN:

One of the many symbols used for Christmas is the candle. A symbol means a sign. When you see folded hands and a bowed head, you think of prayer. A pumpkin may remind us of Hallowe'en or Thanksgiving. Candles, trees, reindeer, pine cones and branches, holly and the Infant Jesus with his mother are symbols of Christmas.

I made a linoleum cut to illustrate our page but the printer says it will not stand the weight of the heavy presses. You might like to try doing some. If a commercial printer is going to make your prints on a job press you must have it type high, otherwise just a piece of linoleum will do. Whitecoated is fine for you can see the design more clearly. Mounted blocks cost as little as 12c. Draw your design and if you use any word, remember to make them in reverse for the left side will be the right when it is printed. Next come the tools—you could use a razor blade, pen knife or paring knife, but linoleum cutters are so cheap that it is better to use them. A good line cutter (or veiner) as it is called can be had for 35c. It is good to have v and u shaped veiners for deep gouging.

Now you are ready to cut your design. What will you do—have black line or white? What is cut away will be white, what is left will be black. You can have a combination. Then cut your design very slowly and carefully. Too hasty work may result in a cut in the wrong place or a cut finger! After the design is cut go over it to make additional touches and remove all high spots of the cut-away areas.

Next comes the printing. Here again you must be careful! If you are going to have a commercial printer to do it—no worry, but if you are going to do it. You must have paper, ink, roller and a press. Printer's ink can be used. You can use colors but black is usually chosen for wood and linoleum cuts. A composition roller is good to spread your ink, but a small rubber brayer can be bought at a stationery store. If he has water-color ink you might use that in preference to printer's ink. It is easier to clean up afterward. Wipe the roller clean, smear your ink on a slab—a piece of glass will do or a piece of marble is fine. Get ready and roll ink on your cut.

To print without a press is fun but it takes weight! If your cut is small use hand pressure, larger, use your feet. Lay your paper down, put the block on and push evenly if possible with your hands. If using your feet, put magazines on floor to make a cushion, lay down paper, then the inked cut. Center it on paper and place the ball of your foot on its back and gently let your weight on it. Might be good to have mother or dad help with this. Remove linoleum block carefully. Let your prints dry. Use as cards or pictures for gifts. Any paper will do except linen which gives a ragged finish. It is work but lots of fun.

EVERYTHING IN MODERATION— EVEN MOTHER.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

While living in a family hotel, I had repeatedly observed a young mother and her three-year-old who came once each week for luncheon. Just the two came. After the meal the mother would sit in the foyer, and her small daughter would go from one guest to another, as if each person were a member of the family or an old friend.

One day I remarked to the mother, "What a friendly little girl you have!"

"Thank you." The mother's eyes lit up with interest. "We came to this town as strangers. My husband had to be away most of the day, and when he returned home it was Carol's bedtime. I discovered she was becoming too engrossed in 'Mother,' so I consulted an acquaintance who has made a careful study of young children.

"There are many mothers who have your problem," she said. "That is because there are many families where there are no grandmothers, other relatives, or even household employees living in the home. Such very small families often become emotionally overcharged. I suggest you go out and make new friends for yourself and Carol. Help her to acquire a talent for friendliness. Teach her, as she grows older, to understand people and to expect them all to be different from one another. So many adults have a secret resentment toward those who do not conform to their idea of what a human being should be.' "

It was delightful to watch this little one's expanding personality. The hotel foyer was like a large, comfortable living room, and most of the guests were residents. From time to time one guest would tell Carol a story, another would take her to see the garden or the picture of her grandchild, still another would read to her. This child never appeared to make herself troublesome. The mother sat by, chatting and knitting, seemingly oblivious to what her small daughter was doing, but, in reality, being quietly watchful.

Not every mother can solve the problem of making new friends for herself and her child as easily as this one did. However, when a mother sees a youngster becoming too dependent upon her, she should make a conscientious effort to broaden the environment. This might be accomplished through any of several ways—by engaging in selected church, welfare, or club work; by taking walks through the neighborhood or the park; or by a little simple entertaining.

Every child should spend a part of the time away from Mother, if possible. In a neighborhood where there are several mothers who have children of about the same age, it has been found to be beneficial to take turns in entertaining small groups of children. This is especially true when all the mothers belong to the same child-study group. The youngsters learn the casual give-and-take that is an asset in helping them to acquire the art of getting along with others.

One grandmother, who I know, is glad to have her daughter-in-law choose one day a week on which Grandma calls for her small grandson and keeps him from morning until bedtime. This grandmother lives in an apartment building which has a children's playground, and Bobby looks forward to seeing his once-a-week chums.

It often happens that children who become too much attached to their mothers become jealous even of Dad. When the young lieutenant father of my four-year-old neighbor, recently returned from World War II, playfully put his arm about his pretty wife one evening and began to dance with her, Michael became almost hysterical with jealousy.

A child, like an adult, needs a well-rounded life with everything in moderation—even the time he spends with mother! His emotional growth should at all times parallel his physical development.

URGENCY OF THE PRESENT.

with a friend. The other occupants of the car were his wife and a neighbor's wife. My friend drove along the highway at a speed of about forty or fifty miles an hour. But on occasion, suddenly and without warning, he would speed up to seventy or more. When we returned home, I questioned him about his unusual method of driving. He answered, "Didn't you see those antique signs? You know what would have happened if the ladies had gotten a glimpse of them! Every time I saw an antique sign, I stepped it up to seventy."

There is something commendable about this passion to recreate the past, but at the same time there is also something very disturbing. In the first place, we are laboring under a false delusion. Distance always lends enchantment to the view. The "good ole days" have never been as good as we picture them to be. We visit such historic spots as Mt. Vernon, Monticello and Williamsburg. We are completely captivated by their charm and beauty. How pleasant and peaceful life must have been in those "good ole days." But there is another side to the picture. Those were days of strife and sacrifice and conflict. Days when the colonies were fighting for their freedom and life was neither easy nor quiet nor peaceful. What we are prone to forget is that the majority of our people in those days didn't live at a Mt. Vernon or a Monticello. Most of our people possessed only the bare necessities of life. If anyone pines for the "good ole days" let him read Woodward's book, How Our Poor People Lived. A hundred years ago not a pound of coal had been burned in this country. No iron cook stoves were used; pine knots or tallow candles furnished lights for the long winter nights. Only one room in any house was heated. Men and women of a hundred years ago undressed and went to bed in a temperature colder than our barns and woodsheds. Roads were often impassable and travel was slow. It took two days to go from New York to Philadelphia. Of course, this homesickness for the past is not too difficult to understand. How nice it would be to go back to a day when there were no Communists and no atomic bombs. However, no matter how much we long for the "good ole days" we know that we cannot turn back the hands of the clock. No generation can escape its times.

Another disturbing feature about this nostalgic mood is that sometimes it leads to stagnation and stark tragedy. Consider the field of politics and international affairs. Have you ever noticed that tyrants and dictators always want to return to the past? Hitler hypnotized the German people with a dream of world conquest. He tried to bring back the ghost of Bismarck—Bismarck, who believed that man is only an animal, that nations are herds, and that God Himself is a god of blood and iron. Mussolini sought to restore the glory of ancient Rome. The Jew has never been able to forget the golden age of Solomon. In our own country, there are those who would like to return to the days of isolationism. They want to go back to the days when there were no entangling alliances and we could carry a big stick and walk softly. A short time ago, an article appeared in one of our leading periodicals under the title, "The Decline and Fall of the United States." The authors, Joseph and Stewart Alsop, tell us that at a political convention held in Philadelphia a dark horse was chosen as the nominee for President. His name was Homer Winsome, popularly known as "Pop" Winsome. His political slogan was "Give business the green light." He was an out and out isolationist, but in his political speeches mentioned little about international affairs. However, he talked a great deal about what we might do with the atomic bomb. He was elected to office. Under the pressure of his political friends, he practically cut off all aid to Europe and increased our expenditures for defense by many billions of dollars. Our country was thrown into a state of hysteria when it was discovered in the year 1950 that Russia had the atomic bomb. Europe fell to Russia without striking a blow. On October 11, 1951, Winsome flew to Moscow and made a deal with Stalin to divide the world. He introduced a reign of terror in America, establishing a gestapo similar to that in Russia, and gave them the name "Rowden's Roughies." Such men as Dewey, Taft, Thomas and Truman were executed or sent to concentration camps, and democracy died in America. Now, of course, we say that that couldn't happen here, but let us not be so sure. Recent events have proven that the forces of isolationism are not dead. They are patiently waiting to find a weak place where they may make a breach in the wall and go over. The writers of this article say that this tragedy might never have taken place if our country had adopted a policy of dispassionate firmness toward Russia. If it had determined to help a war-shattered world to its feet and if the American people had the character and determination to carry the freedom and liberty placed upon their shoulders. To return to the days of isolationism is to return to democracy's certain death.

Again, there are some people who want to go back to the good old days of denominational competition. The days when every denomination believed that there was only one way to heaven and that they had it. May I tell this story, and let it be said that this story is no reflection on the Presbyterian Church—a church which has always been most friendly and co-operative. In a city in North Carolina there is a Presbyterian minister who has several sons. One Sunday at dinner, one of the smaller boys said, "Dad, our Sunday school teacher said that Jesus was a Jew." His father replied, "Yes son, that is correct." The little fellow answered, "Well, Dad, I always knew that God was a Presbyterian, but I never knew that Jesus was a Jew." Now, there have always been some denominations who have felt that they had a corner on God. Happily, those "good ole days" are passing. Surely the things that unite us are more important than the things that divide us. We are moving toward the day when, in letter and in spirit, the dream of the Master will come true, when there will be one fold and one Shepherd.

What I am advocating, of course, is not that we should completely sever ourselves from the past. I am not one of those who believes that history is "bunk." A nation must be true to her ideals and traditions. I am in favor of going back to the "old time religion"—provided we go back far enough. However, and at the same time, we cannot permit the past to become a millstone around our necks, nor can we permit it to paralyze our minds and our hearts so that we forget the duties and obligations of the present and the hopes of tomorrow. Too many people today live in the past tense, and to too many church members Christianity is a memorial rather than a challenge and an adventure.

If there are people who live in the past tense, there are also many people who live in the future tense. The dominant mood of their lives is the mood of tomorrow. They are like Felix pleading for a more convenient season which never comes; like the rich farmer in the parable who counted on a dawn which never broke. You remember how this man counted on tomorrow. He said, "I will tear down my barns and build greater and say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years—take

APOCALYPTIC LITERATURE IN THE BIBLE.

LESSON XIII—DECEMBER 26, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: The kingdom of the world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever.
—Revelation 11:15.

LESSON: Daniel 7; Revelation; 4, 8b, 11:11, 15b; 1:3b-4; 21, 22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Revelation 7: 9-17.

Apocalyptic Literature.

We come today to a strange form of literature, the apocalyptic literature. To be sure if we had studied all the prophets carefully, we would have found something somewhat similar to it, at least a first cousin, if not a brother to it. For in some of the prophecies there are visions and symbols and signs, strange, mysterious things that border on the apocalyptic literature found in today's lesson. The word means literally, the "unveiling" or a "revelation."

Even a casual reading of apocalyptic literature such as Revelation of St. John reveals the fact that it is made up of strange and mysterious signs and symbols and figures and visions, and what have you. This sign language is very difficult to follow, and students and scholars are baffled in their attempts to interpret some of the language. To be sure there are those who "know all the answers"—they have it all figured out to the last detail. But many other sincere, studious Christian people are not so sure.

On one thing most folks are agreed. Apocalyptic literature was purposely written in signs and symbols so that the hidden meaning of the books would not be clear to the enemies of the righteous. These books were written to men and women who were being persecuted for their faith, who were undergoing great hardships and suffering, who were being tempted to give up their faith, who could not seem to make sense out of the fact that God did not seem to be doing anything about matters, and that evil seemed to be in the saddle. Throughout these books or sections of books there runs the refrain, "Be patient, be strong, be brave, be steadfast. God is not defeated. God will fulfil His promises. God will win the victory. God will vindicate your faith." Read in the light of these truths apocalyptic literature brings comfort and courage and conquest to its readers. It is when every detail is taken literally that difficulty begins. One must look for principles. One must take into consideration that ideal conditions are pictured for the future.

A Letter from a Concentration Camp.

That is just what the Revelation of St. John the Divine—that is the title of the last book in the Bible—is, a letter written from a concentration camp. For this man, John, the aged apostle it seems, had been banished for His Christian faith to the lonely island of Patmos in the Great Sea. He was probably too old to take part in the forced slave labor of the place, but he was a prisoner nonetheless. And as he was "in the Spirit," God gave him this strange message for his fellow-Christians who were undergoing cruel treatment and bitter persecution at the hands of the Roman Empire. Beneath all its strange symbolism and signs there is the central and significant message to these harassed people: "Be patient, endure, believe, stand fast, make no compromise. God is still active in His world. Evil is doomed. Righteousness shall triumph. Christ will be crowned King and He shall rule forever and ever."

One can readily see how a message like this, coming as it does from a man who is also suffering for his faith, would bring courage and hope to his fellow Christians. Its message hidden from the unsuspecting Romans and Gentiles by its signs and symbolism would be understood by the suffering Christians. And in succeeding centuries men and women have turned to it in times of persecution and suffering and doubt, and hearts have become brave again and arms have become strong.

Warnings.

There are solemn warnings in this book. Evil is powerful and sometimes it is organized. Its purpose is diabolical and its end is death. It is not to be trifled with or blinked at. Neither is it to be compromised with. But it does not have the final say. The future does not belong to it. Ultimately it shall be put down and destroyed.

Anthems of Praise.

The outstanding note of the Book, however, is praise and adoration.

Great choirs of the redeemed sing again and again noble and resounding oratorios before the Throne and unto the Lamb. In them are the notes of victory, not yet won but assured and proclaimed because of a simple sturdy faith in God and in His power and purpose. Handel incorporated a portion of one of these triumphant anthems in his "Messiah." Who can hear that immortal oratorio without being moved to his depths! And what must be the effect of that celestial choir, a great host which no man can number as they sing in perfect harmony "the song of Moses and the Lamb"? The writer of these Notes will hardly qualify for a place in that choir if skilled musical ability is a condition for membership, but he will be among the congregation when that celestial choir, accompanied by the celestial orchestra gives a concert. To be sure one must not take literally all the things that are said and pictured about the Holy City, the New Jerusalem. But it would be strange indeed, if music which has such a large place in the religious life here, should not have any place in the redeemed life hereafter.

The Lamb on the Throne.

It is a striking statement, a Lamb on the throne. But it is all of one piece with what the Master himself said. At the beginning of His ministry He said, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." And in this book of "Unveiling" "the Lamb made war with the beast." But it was the Lamb and not the beast which won. The brute powers of blind force and sheer material resources are not to have the victory. The Lamb of God, slain from the foundation of the world, reigns from His throne, and He shall reign forever. "Wherefore my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable."

Blueprint of the City of God.

John, in his inspired vision and spiritual insight, saw the New Jerusalem, coming down from heaven, dressed as a bride for her husband. Language was inadequate to describe her perfectly, streets of pure gold, walls of jasper, gates of pure pearl, precious stones and jewels in the foundations of the walls, and so on. But emphasis was not upon a place, but upon persons. One must not take the description literally—spirits do not need a material city for their abode. But although he was using material objects and pictorial and poetic language, he was dealing with hard facts. Life here and hereafter is undergirded with reality. There is an abode for the spirit. When the earthly house of our tabernacle is dissolved, we do have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. In the Father's house there are many mansions, and room for all the redeemed of God.

In this city of God there is no pain, no sorrow, no tears, no death. Neither is there any evil thing. There is no night there, and they shall not need any light of a lamp or of the sun—the Lord shall give them light. And strangest of all, there is no temple in that city—God's presence will be so real and personal that there will be no need of a symbol of His presence.

people are worthy of reverence not because they have lived so long, but because they have lived so much!" Approval was voted of an intensified program of study and publication in this field.

The Section on Plans for the United Evangelistic Advance was presided over by Professor Elmer G. Homrighausen of Princeton Seminary, whose recent work on evangelism for the World Council in Geneva provided fresh background, was keyed by Dr. Edwin T. Dahlberg, Baptist pastor in Syracuse. Calling for 1950 as a "Year of Evangelism" Dr. Dahlberg, president last year of the Northern Baptist Convention, commented that the century's "first fifty years have been tragic beyond measure, with wars, depressions, and skepticisms that have worked havoc in all the relations of men with God and with each other. The second half of the century should be a challenge to redeem our record"—inaugurated with a dynamic campaign. This Section report was enthusiastically approved by the Council.

Back Human Rights Proposals.

New history was made by the adoption of the Section report on the Churches and Human Rights. Professor William G. Mather of Pennsylvania State College gave the initiatory address, declaring that "Christians must decide whether men are to treat each other as if each were a nuisance to be suppressed or tolerated . . . or a son of God whom Jesus of Nazareth thought worth enough to die for."

For the Section on Church and Juvenile Delinquency, the chairman was Dr. Shelby Harrison, executive director of the Babe Ruth Foundation. In his address dealing with this field, Mr. George Stoll, Louisville, Ky., attorney, described the program carried on by the Louisville Council of Churches' committee on institutions, whose club and legislative program has cut down materially in delinquency there. He called for church programs based on the claim, "no action without research, no research without action" in dealing with youth problems.

In addition to the Section reports, the Council received with considerable discussion a report of the Commission on the Witness of the Church in Our Time, presented by Professor Walter M. Horton of Oberlin Graduate School of Theology. Its three main chapters—Security, and Almighty God; Peace on Earth, and Christ the Reconciler; Moral Stamina, and the Holy Spirit—were summed up as the basic concerns of the Kingdom of God.

Climaxing the discussion of program content, and bringing to a close the inspirational sessions of the Council, was a solid address by Rt. Rev. Stephen Neill, formerly Bishop of Tinnevely, India, who is now associate general secretary of the World Council of Churches. He declared: "I can devote myself to the service of the World Council only on the understanding that its primary concern is just this, to get the Gospel of redemption through Jesus Christ out into all the world, to see to it that this message is proclaimed literally to every human being now living in the world." Formerly, Bishop Neill said, "Our ancestors were quite clear that all eternity depended on the answer demanded by the Gospel. It was literally a matter of life and death. But why should the world be concerned about all that," he asked, "when we are so little concerned about it ourselves?"

Bishop Stamm Is President.

Selecting its leadership for the biennium of 1948-50, the Council took unprecedented action in the choice of a president and vice-president. At the Friday morning session the delegates elected Bishop John S. Stamm, Harrisburg, Pa., as the successor to Mr. Taft and chose a woman, Dr. Mildred McAfee Horton, vice-president. Bishop Stamm, vice-president the past two years, and senior bishop of the Evangelical United Brethren Church, is the first representative of the evangelical churches to head the 40-year-old Federal Council.

Mr. Taft Turns Over Gavel.

In the closing hours, the new president was inaugurated. Mr. Taft, still recovering from an attack of virus pneumonia, smilingly turned over the symbol of his authority—the 40-year-old gavel—to his successor.

Bishop Stamm said he was humbled by the responsibility but had accepted "with a firm dependence upon Him whose wisdom is unfailing and Whose strength is all sufficient—the great head of the Church—Jesus Christ our Savior and Lord."

He paid tribute to the selection of Mrs. Horton as vice-president with the statement that "this year a new approach to the total task of the Church is made in the selection of one of America's great Christian women to serve in this capacity. . . . I have every confidence that the influence and work of Mrs. Mildred McAfee Horton will add much to the work of this Council."

In praising the administration of President Taft, first layman to serve as president, Bishop Stamm said, "I share with all of you in my sincere appreciation of the devoted and distinguished leadership he has given."

"The years immediately ahead will no doubt present added urgencies for united Christian action," he continued. "The task facing the churches can only be accomplished if the thought, prayer and service of the churches are pooled in a larger way. There are those who believe this can be accomplished through a complete change of patterns. Those who see the only hope in church union. Others see through the kindling of a greater sense of unity in and through the spirit a more spiritually dynamic way. By the use of the churches they believe the larger measure of united service can be achieved. Perhaps both methods must be used. There are more churches which can and should unite. The most important thing is not church union but Christian unity. Only as there is achieved unity in union will there be progress in united action."

the women blamed the men. After a time, however, things settled down to "what can we do to have a better home and family life?"—with some real earnest seeking.

Later the Pastor said people came to him on Monday morning asking to hear more about how to achieve a better family life. One non-Christian in the group said, "Why, we never thought of such things before. We didn't know your faith had anything to do with homes and families. We want to know more."

These two pastoral districts flank what we know as the Seles area. If the Program of Advance you are now

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Thank Offerings are still coming in very nicely. Our financial report shows that the churches and Sunday schools have sent in the sum of $16,542.62, and from sources outside our church we have received the sum of $19,774.70. We still lack $13,682.68 of being to our goal. Will you help me reach it?

Our children are looking forward to Christmas with a lot of expectation. I hope "Old Santa" will not disappoint them. The writer well remembers many years ago how anxious he was for Christmas to come, and when it was passed it seemed the next one would never come. Little boys and girls today are about the same as they were then, except they have finer opportunities now than we did. There is no excuse for a boy or girl today not to get an education and do something worthwhile in life. So many of them have friends they can borrow from and pay it back when they begin to draw a salary. Out of the many boys and girls we have helped to further their educations, all of them have paid their notes in full. Not one has failed to pay.

The orphanage has trained and sent out many boys and girls of whom we feel very proud. Twenty years ago we took in a little boy from a cotton mill community. He looked so frail and undernourished that we felt uneasy about his health. He began to grow and develop into a fine appreciative young man and honest as the days are long. When he reached the age limit he got a job in a mill in the western part of the state, but he did not forget the institution that gave him a home when he had no other, and gave him a chance when he had no other. He says there is no place like the Christian Orphanage to him. It is the only home he had. He appreciates what the orphanage did for him so much that he contributes five or six hundred dollars each year to help give other unfortunate children a home and a chance, too.

INTERESTS IN CHINA.

about 250 with a total of more than 500 foreign doctors and nurses, about one-half of them being Americans. With a total bed capacity of some 16,000 and caring for about 200,000 in-patients annually, the influence of this particular type of missionary work has had a telling effect.

Prophecy as to what will be the ultimate outcome in China, and what effect internal changes may have on religious and general cultural activities is risky. But it appears that deep-rooted influences in the country by altruistic efforts will survive regardless of what economic and political changes the final struggle may bring.

HOLY NECK JUNIORS.

Juniors drew names and exchanged gifts.

In the summer we had a "weenie roast." Nearly all of our juniors and several of the parents were present.

In June, we had a very good Vacation Bible School. Our Junior group represented a large per cent of the attendance.

Our Friendly Service gift was a gift of pillow cases sent to Franklinton Center.

We paid for all our literature for the past year and also for all literature to be used during 1948-49. We paid our apportionment over and above the required amount.

Two of our boys built a bookcase and we are collecting all the old Junior Missionary books we can to put in it so that all of our Juniors might have a chance to read them.

As we begin a new year's work our hope is that we may do greater things to help carry on the work of our Master.

URGENCY OF THE PRESENT.

thine ease, eat, drink and be merry!" But he never saw the new barns and he never reaped the golden harvest. God said to him, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." It is folly to count too much on tomorrow. Tomorrow we will be kinder, tomorrow we will accept Christ, tomorrow we will cast out some besetting sin, tomorrow we will saddle a dream and ride to the mountain top. But tomorrow may never come—"the night cometh when no man can work."

Dream not too much of what you'll do tomorrow,
How well you'll work perhaps another year;
Tomorrow's chance you do not need to borrow—
Today is here.

Boast not too much of mountains you will master,
The while you linger in the vale below;
To dream is well, but plodding brings us faster
To where we go.

Swear not some day to break some habit's fetter,
When this old year is dead and passed away;
If you have need of living wiser, better,
Begin today!

Finally, there are people who have lofty ideals and noble dreams, but who are perfectly content to put off their realization to some far distant future. One generation shifts its responsibility to the next generation, and the result is a vicious circle of inactivity and stagnation. If a generation cannot escape its times, neither can it escape its responsibilities. The responsibilities of today cannot be put off until some happy tomorrow. There are many things which should and could be done today if we had the courage, the faith and the vision to do them. We are willing to discuss the problems of juvenile delinquency: we all agree that something ought to be done, but how much are we willing to do today? Tomorrow may be too late for hundreds of our boys and girls. What are are you and I doing about this important problem in our own community? Now is the time to work for better housing conditions and better educational and recreational facilities for our young people. I spent the past few weeks in the New England states. I went to Maine for the express purpose of catching the fish mentioned in the Fisherman's Prayer, "Lord, help me to catch a fish so big that even I, when speaking of it afterward, need never have to lie." I caught that fish. Right now I can feel the strike, hear the whir of the reel, see the fish break water, and then at last my companion slip the lading net under him. It was a good fish; it was a great thrill. I could talk about that fish for a long time. But the greatest thrill was the thrill of God's out of doors. I saw the sun sink like a ball of glowing fire behind the green woods of Maine and leave a shower of rainbow jewels dancing on the waters of the silver lake. We traveled through the White Mountains, the Berkshires, one one's soul was filled with the majesty and the beauty of it all. But when one visits the slums of Boston and New York City, one is struck with the terrible, tragic contrast. There are thousands and thousands of cows, horses and sheep in this country that are more comfortably housed than many men, women and children. These conditions exist on a smaller scale in many American communities. Such conditions condemn many people to misery, poverty and crime, and dishonor the Father of us all. What are we doing to bring about better housing and living conditions for our less fortunate brethren? Not what are we doing tomorrow, but what are we doing today?

Again, we are willing to see the Kingdom of God come tomorrow. But how much are we doing to make it come today? What are we doing today to make our Church a better Church, to further the missionary program, to bring others to Christ? One of the cleverest devices that the devil ever invented is the idea that the Kingdom of God can be put off until tomorrow. Not what did we do yesterday, nor what we will do tomorrow, but what have we done today? "The night cometh when no man can work."

I didn't know, when I came here, that the motto of the Assembly was "America needs a Great Spiritual Awakening—why not now." Yes, why not now?

If we are going to live, we must live today. If we are going to speak out for Christ, we must speak today. If we are going to act, we must act today. There is an urgency about the present world situation which makes immediate action imperative. It may be later than we think. One of our leading columnists has written the following words "We have improved our world but failed to improve man. And now we possess miraculous machines and horrifying engines of destruction, but the world still lives in spiritual darkness and we are afraid. There is no hope for mankind except in spiritual regeneration. For every weapon there is a defense, but against the atomic bomb there is no defense except the one given to us by Jesus of Nazareth 2000 years ago, 'A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, and thy neighbor as thyself.' Synies may scoff and the complacent may be unable to fear a danger they cannot see, but people of understanding must work together quickly and with all their might." People of understanding must work together quickly and with all their might, for "the night cometh when no man can work."

Trust no future, however pleasant;
Let the dead past bury its dead.
Act, act in the living present,
Heart within, and God o'erhead.

MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

engaged in brings in the extra funds we are all hoping and praying it will, we have hopes of being able to really open up that area for Christ. At present Bailundo and Elende Mission Stations are doing the best they can to evangelize the area, and the progress has been remarkable, considering the time and funds and leadership available. But our work has only touched the surface.

Imagine some 1,600 pagan people coming to hear the gospel preached in a village on the edge of the area. Sixty-eight of them made a public confession that Sunday. We are hoping the Program of Advance will make it possible for us to have enough missionaries out here to really develop the work in that area. The opportunity is tremendous, a vast, almost untouched country. Only through increased Apportionment Giving can the Board send us workers for that and other needy fields. Our prayers are with you at home as you face the big task, and opportunity, of putting over the Program of Advance in a big way. The fields are truly white unto the harvest here and the laborers are so few. But our African leaders here are remarkable. We feel very humble in the presence of our courageous African pastors and their wives. They carry a tremendous load, and with a high heart and a brave smile in spite of difficulties that would crush lesser spirits. Pray for them, and for us that we do not fail them.

Just a personal note in closing. Nancy and Tommy are in the school for missionary children in Dondi, some 120 miles from here. We have our Rural Life School started, with fifteen fine young men (about all we can handle this first year) training for village church leadership. Our next letter will have to tell you more.

Sincerely yours,
CARL & LOIS DILLE.

WOMEN AT PRAYER

Arranged by Hazel T. Wilson

This book is written for those millions of women who believe that new and untried ways to peace will be found through prayer.

"The author has very wisely included only the Prayers without comment, and usually the Prayers themselves are by the great ones of all time or are from books that have already come into classical usage. . . . For many readers the fresh touch with Muriel Lester and Frank C. Laubach will help to make the book precious, as will also the author's own Call to Prayer, especially the Call to Regularity of Prayer."—Ruth Isabel Seabury.

Immortal Christmas Gifts

By C. REXFORD RAYMOND
Circular Congregational Church
Charleston, South Carolina

*The baby born in Bethlehem became
The seer who brought eternal life to light;
Today His life puts mortal fears to flight.
His loving service and His Cross proclaim
That death cannot destroy love's glowing flame
The tides of time have no enduring might;
When sunset draws the curtain of the night,
The starlit sky, exulting, sings His name.*

*Immortal Christmas gifts we would bestow
On our beloved ones who live afar,
Beyond the darkling purple sunset sky.
Bereft, we ask our Lord to let us know
How gifts can go beyond the vesper star:
To feed the hungry here, is His reply.*

News Flashes

According to an established policy of publication, there will be no issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN next week.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. J. E. McCauley of Waverly is convalescing after an illness of several weeks.

The North Carolina Recreation Work Shop, scheduled for Mitchell College during Christmas, has been cancelled.

Mrs. R. L. House spoke to the Eastern Virginia Ministers last Monday on her recent trip to Milwaukee to attend the National Council of Church Women.

At this Christmastide the editor, the editorial staff and office of publication join in very appropriate good wishes to all our subscribers. May it be a blessed Christmas!

Dr. H. S. Harcastle visited his mother at her home in Delaware just recently. Mrs. Harcastle was eighty-three years young the first of last November. We wish for her all of the joy that the sunset of life can bring.

South Norfolk is responding to the call of the Board of Publications for new CHRISTIAN SUN subscriptions and proposes to send the church paper as a Christmas gift to twenty shut-in members. An excellent idea for all our churches! Rev. O. D. Poythress has received thirty-four new members since conference.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN learns with deep regret of the death of the brother of Dr. H. S. Harcastle on Saturday, December 12. Known to his many friends as "Hap" or "Happy," Mr. Harcastle had been with the Jarman Motor Company of Baltimore for over thirty years. He leaves a wife, a daughter, a grandson. He is also survived by his mother and our own "Hardy," his brother. To all of them we extend our sympathy.

THE MODERATOR SPEAKS.

TO OUR BELOVED FELLOWSHIP:

Perhaps I have kept silent too long. I keep remembering, with gratitude, that at the General Council meeting in which I was elected moderator, an overwhelming majority of our thousand and more delegates, each representing a thousand of us, showed clearly by their vote that they desired union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church and that they also desired to resolve differences in our denomination.

I want you to know that our Executive Committee and the Committee of Fifteen are patiently trying to carry out both of these directives. I hope and pray that before the ending of this year the Union may be forwarded and that peace may have descended upon our hearts.

At this season with especial meaning, we hear Jesus' quiet words to his disciples: "Even as my Father hath loved me, so have I loved you, continue ye in my love. This is my commandment, that ye love one another."

HELEN KENYON.

A CHRISTMAS PRAYER.

Our Heavenly Father, we give thanks unto thee for this greatest of thy mercies: that thou didst send the holy Child, the Prince of peace, the Lord of life, to lead us into a truer knowledge and to lift us to larger love of thee.

We are gathered for prayer, but prayer is praise upon our lips for that thou hast spoken to us so simply, hast come to us so fully, and hast revealed thy redeeming power and purpose so movingly.

O grant us eyes to see, and ears to hear, and minds to know. So touch us now that we may make room for thy coming; we ask it in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ, whose birth into the world we celebrate. Amen.

REIDSVILLE CHURCH ADDS MINISTER OF MUSIC.

Miss Margaret Burdell of Florence, South Carolina, has accepted a position with the Reidsville Church as Choir Director and Organist, according to an announcement of the pastor, Rev. Joe A. French.

Miss Burdell graduated last spring with a Bachelor of Music degree from Greensboro College. For her degree in music she did her major in piano and her minor in voice. She is continuing her graduate study this year with a major in organ. Miss Burdell has studied musical theory with Prof. Carl C. Baumbach; she has studied piano with Prof. Gustav Nelson, and voice with Prof. Charles Coll Underwood.

Growing up in the Central Methodist Church in Florence, South Carolina, of which she is a member, Miss Burdell has served in many capacities in her own church. She has been a member of the church choir and has done solo work in her own church, in Greensboro church, and over the radio. She has worked in Vacation Bible Schools during the summers of her college work.

REPORT FROM HEBRON AND LEBANON.

The Sunday schools of the churches in the Southern Convention play a vital part in the promotion of the work of the Kingdom. To use the oft quoted phrase, the Sunday school serves as a "feeder" for the church. Whenever a Sunday school is not on the forward march, it seems to sap strength from the church of which it is a part. On the contrary, when the Sunday school is glowing with vitality, the church as a whole seems to sense the heat from the spiritual fire.

Two conspicuous examples of the effect of the Sunday school on the church are found at Hebron Congregational Christian Church, Nelson, Va., and at Lebanon Congregational Christian Church, Semora, N. C. These two Sunday schools have recently regrouped their members and added classes and teachers and pupils.

Hebron Sunday school has had an enrollment and attendance of ten to twenty, with no Sunday school during the winter months. The people felt the need of a stronger Sunday school and under the leadership of their Superintendent they went to work. Mr. Carl Chandler, a veteran of the war, is their Superintendent. Through his inspiration and guidance, new classes were formed, additional teachers secured, and new pupils enrolled. The Sunday school is now on a twelve-month basis instead of the nine-month plan. Their enrollment now reaches the forty mark with an above-the-average per centage in attendance.

The story is quite the same with Lebanon. They were struggling along with about a dozen to twenty members in attendance. The leaders got together and made plans to expand their Sunday school. Three new classes were formed and prospective pupils were listed. A letter invited them to Sunday school and this was followed by a visit of the teacher or of the Superintendent, Mr. R. Stickney Taylor. On the opening day when the new classes met for the first time, thirty-seven were enrolled. Forty to forty-five are now in attendance.

When the writer is present in each of the Sunday schools once a month, he feels the atmosphere of progress and new interest. With the Sunday schools of these churches evidencing new life, the church as a whole has been stirred to greater enthusiasm. May the guidance of the Father God lead these churches to greater service still.

MEMORANDUM ON RELIEF AND RECONSTRUCTION IN 1949.

(Emergency Services.)

By vote of the General Council at Oberlin the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction will complete its promotional task on December 31, 1948. However, the job of relief and reconstruction is by no means finished and the following plans are made for continuing that work in 1949.

1. The unified budget of our Christian World Mission for 1949 carries an item of $1,000,000.00 for relief and reconstruction (Emergency Services). Relief and reconstruction is the term to be used henceforth, rather than C.W.V.R. or Emergency Services, in speaking of this work.

2. The Executive Committee of the General Council will appoint an Allocation Committee to allocate the Relief and Reconstruction funds. The treasurer of the American Board will be the receiving treasurer for these funds, and he will pay them out, on order of the Allocation Committee, to our Congregational Christian Service Committee, Church World Service and other agencies to which funds are voted by the Allocation Committee.

3. The Missions Council has elected to its staff the Rev. R. Norris Wilson of Wakefield, Massachusetts, as Associate Minister and Executive Secretary. He, aided with adequate office assistance, an advisory committee and Joint Staff cooperation, will assume primary responsibility for the promotion of the item of Relief and Reconstruction in the unified budget of our Christian World Mission. A National Committee, made up of the chairmen of the Conference Committees on missionary education, promotion and stewardship, will function for the total program as did the Conference Chairmen under C.W.V.R.

4. Relief and Reconstruction (Emergency Services) will receive its proportionate share of the receipts for our Christian World Mission. Special offerings and individual gifts received during the year will be credited to the Conference and Church from which they come. Churches are and will be urged to channel all Relief and Reconstruction giving to whatever purposes (such as CARE and other non-or interdenominational agencies) through our denominational channels. Designated gifts will go to the purpose designated and credit will be given therefor to the Conference and the Church from which they come on their accepted budgetary goals in our Christian World Mission.

Inasmuch as Relief and Reconstruc-

OFFERING FOR AGED MINISTERS AT CHRISTMASTIME.

The Convention authorized a special offering to be received at Christmastime for our retired ministers, ministers' widows, and dependents of ministers. This offering is administered through the Division of Ministerial Relief of the Board of Home Missions through which the superannuation gifts of the Southern Convention are channeled.

The Christmas Fund is an extra and constitutes an emergency fund from which our Veterans of the Cross receive at Christmastime an extra check in addition to the regular payment on superannuation. The superannuation payments are too small during these times of high cost of living, and a Christmas check going to our retired ministers, ministers' widows and ministers' dependents will mean a great deal. It is hoped that our churches will be generous in their gifts this year to the Christmas Fund. These offerings should be sent to the Convention Office and designated "for the Christmas Fund." The Christmas Fund does not count on superannuation apportionment, but any church desiring to have apportionment credit for offerings taken at Christmastime should so designate, it being understood that such offerings will go to the regular apportionment and not to constitute an additional gift at Christmastime to our Veterans of the Cross.

As a result of our Christmas Fund offerings in 1947, the superannuated ministers of the Southern Convention received last Christmas checks of $65 each, and widows received $55 each. Won't you help to make it possible for these servants of the church thus to be remembered in 1948?

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

WHODUNIT?

The widespread manifestations of religious influence demand an explanation. There must be a cause for every effect. There must be a Character back of Christmas. Here are multiplied evidences of altruism. Good works abound. Whodunit?

This question persists in the Bible. "Who hath believed our report and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" . . . "Who is he that is born King of the Jews?" . . . "Who is this that forgiveth sins?"

We know the answer; the brief, simple, but all inclusive answer—Jesus. Dr. John Henry Jowett once tried to visualize the achievements of Jesus by picturing the world minus his influence. He wrote: "In the realization of such a plight we have to transform the world; merely to imagine it we should have to be busy for days and weeks, turning our lights, and darkening windows, shutting doors, and cutting up literature, and destroying art, and silencing music and song."

A prodigious amount of energy and money is being expended just now to carry out the spirit and teachings of the eternal Character back of Christmas. The Christian Century tells the story of three Congregational Churches. The women of First Church in Oak Park, Illinois, do a large part of sewing on garments destined for use overseas, and in addition are giving $5,000 for aid to war victims. The church school is giving $1,000 and the church, including the school, expects to complete at Christmas a total sum of $16,500 for foreign relief. First Church in Washington has secured names of people in Asia as well as Europe for church organizations and families to help with packages. First Church in Berkley, California, is alive with social concern. One section of the woman's organization of the church is giving $680 to the United Nations Appeal for Children, and is sending 325 articles of clothing to Finland. Another group has sent several encyclopedias to impoverished schools abroad. A youth group has forwarded many parcels to Japan. A sewing circle has collected 284 boys' sweaters, girls' dresses, infants' garments and quilts. Half of the Christmas offering, which usually exceeds $3,000, will go to Church World Service and the remainder to denominational benevolence.

Look out upon our world today with its churches, colleges, hospitals, orphanages, ministers, social workers, missionaries, etc. Go from continent to continent and estimate the quantity and quality of institutions set for the amelioration of society. Whodunit all? The answer may be epitomized in one word, Jesus, and the spirit is reflected in another, Christmas.

IMPERIAL MEGALOMANIA.

Man's egoism is God's greatest problem. Sin and egoism are practically synonymous. Megalomania, a form of mental aberration marked by delusions of grandeur, was conspicuously documented by Adolph Hitler. The penalties of egoism are far-reaching.

How much of our religion is tinged with egoism? P. T. Forsyth describes a "belief in immortality which hankers for a life after death just to give the old egoism supernatural opportunities." Such is the stark and brutal reality of selfishness. Jesus found it necessary to warn his followers to beware of engaging in religious practices "to be seen of men."

Proud, egotistical Herod is remembered only for the evil he wrought. Christmas with its story of the humble birth of Jesus, should purge us of all haughtiness. Jesus proclaimed and exemplified the truth: "The meek shall inherit the earth."

CELESTIAL VISITS.

An ordinary visit may prove to be an extraordinary event. A visit is a revelation of purpose and interest. From the time the Queen of Sheba visited King Solomon, the Wise Men visited the Child Jesus, down to the current visit by Madame Chiang Kai-shek to the United States—a visit has been a thing of interest and of destiny.

Happy memories of childhood cluster around visits: neighbors, relatives, and an occasional celebrity. There was a cousin, this writer recalls, who spent his annual vacation visiting relatives. He came from a distance. His interest, and affection were unmistakable. Other cousins had vacations, but lacked the visitation motivation. This cousin was a singer. He brought melody and harmony into the home. His visits were anticipated with eagerness and remembered with satisfaction.

An uncle made periodic visits. Since he owned and operated a store, he could be depended upon to bring along a box of candy. Sweet uncle! He never wore out his welcome.

The minister, a man of rare charm, thorough training and wide experience, made his established itinerary. His conversation ranged over many subjects. News from other churches and communities came as a refreshing diversion from shopworn subjects. He had an answer for our long pent-up questions. He brought illumination. All our problems, even our sorrows, were transfigured by his contagious spirit.

Music and harmony, sweetness and light—are these not the needs of every home? Thank God for all celestial visitors who dispel strife with harmony, bitterness with sweetness, and darkness with light.

At Christmas we gratefully remember that "the Dayspring from on High hath visited us." Let this momentous truth startle us. God has visited—and does visit—us! Remember what happened when Jesus visited people. A dishonest man was moved to restore fourfold. The sick forgot their weakness. Those who sat under the shadow of a great darkness saw a new light. The centuries testify to the harmony, sweetness and light which His visit brought to our world. There are still darkened hearts and homes which need a visitation from on High. Let us go forth to visit in His name and Spirit. That is the Christmas Way.

One Evening in 1216

By SAMUEL L. JOHNSON, Minister, Park Manor Church, Chicago, Illinois

"Hear ye now, m'lords and ladies, to the story of Achan the Egyptian. I would tell ye of the greatest sooth-sayer of the ages," cried Roderick the minstrel.

The great hall of the castle was bedecked with holly fresh picked that very morning from the hedge rows. The waxy surfaces of the fresh green leaves reflected yellow light from the smoking torches which surrounded the room. Branches of evergreen were piled up in the corners and festooned round the huge pillars.

In the immense fireplace at the north end a tremendous fire was blazing. During the afternoon knights and pages had gone gayly forth into the woods to cut the yule log—while others brought forth what remained of the last year's fire, for all knew that it would bring bad luck in the year to come if the fire were not started with a bit of last year's blaze.

The log had been chosen by the master of the castle early in the fall. One day as he was riding with his retainers, hunting the wild boar, he had called it to their attention. "See ye yonder stump," he had said, "mark it well for that must burn on our hearth come this Christmastide."

It was such a large log that preparations were made for several horses to be harnessed together in order to pull it home. The pages had gone ahead with axes and adz to clear the brush. The horses had had to strain every muscle to move the cut tree. Fortunately, there was snow on the ground and once it was started it slid along quite easily.

The maids and ladies of the castle had stood on the wall above the main gate and watched excitedly as the men dragged the log across the field of joust up even to the draw bridge. Those at the chains had been ready and lowered the bridge and drew up the port-cullis that the men at arms might ride in.

Now it was there as the backlog of the night fire. Last year's yule log, or what was left of it—dry as tinder—was the forestick and a lively blaze leaped up between them.

Sir Leonard was loved by his people for he was just and kind. None had ever been in want since he had become lord of Absworth. And different from people at some of the neighboring castles, they paid their rent—it was more like sharing with their master as he so often shared with them. Knights, ladies, or serfs, it made no difference to Sir Leonard —he loved his people, "his children in the Lord," he called them.

Tonight they were all there. Tables had been arranged about the great hall facing the fire. Sir Leonard and Lady Irene were seated on a raised platform at the south end of the great hall.

The seneschal had been preparing for months for this night. The tables were loaded with food, enough for all. It took four men to carry in the platter upon which rested a whole pig, well cooked—holding a red apple in his mouth. Chestnuts, freshly roasted, were piled high on plates of silver. Bowls of fruit, strange to the eyes of many, were brought in. Pomegranates from the tropics filled with deep crimson juice, so refreshing after a hearty meal; grapes in profusion, all the way from sunny Spain, beck-

CHRISTMAS.

God whispered, and a silence fell; the world
Poised one expectant moment, like a soul
Who sees at heaven's threshold the unfurled
White wings of cherubim, the sea impearled,
And pauses, dazed, to comprehend the whole;
Only across all space God's whisper came,
And burned about her heart like some white flame.

And earth again jarred noisily to life,
With a great murmur as of many seas;
But Mary sat with hands clasped on her knees,

And in her heart, the rapture of the spring
Upon its first sweet day of reckoning.

—Anonymous.

oned cheerfully. Oranges and olives from Italy added color. There were flagons of white wine from Southern France and dark red wine made from currants crushed during the summer in the castle's wine cellars.

It was this wine the friar liked to use when he gave communion in the little chapel. "Made by our own hands," he would say, "a worthy gift to offer to our Saviour." He would probably repeat those words tonight before the supper was done—he did so every year when Sir Leonard called for a toast. Then everyone would lift his cup and say as with one voice, "Little Jesus child, baby of Bethlehem, be with us in our hearts throughout the year." Then the friar would pray.

Early the day before, Roderick the minstrel had come to the postern. No one knew from whence he came, nor where he went but every year for so long—as long as the oldest could remember, just two days before Christmas, Roderick had come to the small door. Roderick liked cold duck and each year for so long—as long as the oldest could remember, cold duck had been waiting for him. Christmas wouldn't be Christmas for anyone without Roderick's annual story.

"He told last year how the great stone Sphinxes spoke to the Christ child," little William.

"Aye, but the year before," cried Anne, "do you remember the tale of the nine seraphs who saved the baby when brigands would have stolen him to sell as a slave?"

The great hour had now come. The seneschal himself stirred the fire. He did it that way every Christmas eve, it was almost like a signal, for everyone became quiet. A chair was moved out into the center of the hall into the open end of the "u" made by the tables. Old Roderick, tall and thin as a hop pole, his head a mask of hoary white with the snows of many winters, walked to the chair carrying his lute in his hands.

"Here ye now m'lords and ladies, the story of Achan the Egyptian." He hesitated, the room was quiet except for the crackling of the logs. "No one had greater fame in all Egypt than Achan." A warm glow spread over the face of the minstrel as though he were happy at meeting an old friend.

"Achan read the stars with such skill that the great of Egypt all consulted him. He had the art of mixing herbs and strange unknown things in such a way as to cure diseases. When men broke bones none had more knowledge of how to set them and do so without hurt than Achan. 'Perhaps,' men said, 'there may be something in this talk of his about this Nazarene . . . tis said that he, too, cured diverse diseases.' Said Achan, 'I do all things through Him.'

"Achan, though he lived many years in that strange place, was not an Egyptian. He was born in a little town in that land which we now call Holy. His father was a shepherd, his grandfather had been a shepherd and his father before him, way back to the beginning of time. His father, his grandfather and his father before him, way back to the beginning of time had watched the stars and followed them in their courses.

"One evening when Achan was a little boy he took food which his mother had prepared and carried it out to the mountainside where his father and brothers were herding sheep. It was a beautiful night—clear as the clean, fresh, cool water his sisters brought from the well. The air was fragrant as the dew fell on

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The "Suffolk Cook Book" made a full page headline in the Richmond Times-Dispatch of Sunday, December 12. Mrs. R. Fillmore Norfleet in the full-page article says, "Suffolk has other treats besides peanuts, especially at Christmas," and then she goes on to set forth some of the best recipes of a "best" cook book—the last of the bests with the help-quotes is my own, for I have eaten many things cooked according to that book. Mrs. Norfleet is the distinguished wife of one of our own Suffolk boys who has made a place for himself in the literary and educational circles of Virginia. She describes how she herself, after patiently striving for a number of years, learned the Suffolk art of cooking. To properly learn to cook by the Suffolk recipes one should stand by one of the ladies who helped to write the book and see how she does it, because according to Mrs. Norfleet, in the recipe she forgets to tell you some deft trick which she thought you knew all along. In other words a very good cook would know some things which are not written into the book. The article is quite cleverly written and describes a typical Suffolk Christmas dinner, tells how Suffolk ladies prepare their white fruit cake, their chicken salad, other cakes, etc.

The funny thing about it is that although the book was first published when the now W. W. Staley Missionary Society was the Girls' Society of the Suffolk Christian Church, and has been making some sales all across the years, this article has brought forth new interest and new customers. From different sections of the State requests have come in for the book. One Suffolk girl now married and living far away says when she gets lonely for home she sometimes takes up her Suffolk Cook Book and turns its pages to read the recipes and the names of her friends who put them there, and she is back on the wings of memory to other days. She sees such names as Mrs. C. A. Shoop, Mrs. George W. Nurney, Mrs. Frank Butler, Mrs. A. T. Holland, Mrs. C. R. Wallace, Mrs. C. J. Dennis, Mrs. H. Ralph Artman, Mrs. David L. Rawls, Mrs. Emmett H. Rawles, Mrs. W. V. Leathers—and one could go on and on. Some of those who have gone on to the better land are: Mrs. Hersey Woodward, Sr., Miss Julia Brinkley, Mrs. J. M. Butler, Mrs. Susie Holland, Mrs. John King, Mrs. O. S. Smith, Mrs. W. W. Ballard—and again I must stop with saying one could go on and on.

Memory of yesterday—and knowledge of today for many Suffolk firms hold fast across the year—is to be revived by a short section of advertising. SONG OF THE ANGELS.

By Robert Armster Whitten.

Angels from the realm of glory
Sang the news to men of earth.
Shepherds heard the simple story
Of our blessed Saviour's birth.

Christ was born in Bethlehem's manger.
In the Inn no room was found.
Son of God—to men a stranger
Holy place—that sacred ground.

Lowly cattle bowed before Him,
While the men of Bethlehem slept.
Shepherds brought their gifts unto Him
While the stars their vigil kept.

Born of Mary, virgin mother;
Clothed in flesh, the son of man
Born to every man a brother.
Bear the news to every land."

—From "Along Life's Way."

Holland & Lee Company—well, I cannot go further, else I shall be charged up for advertising. Let me conclude by telling you that even the revised edition is now twenty-one years old, and that by and large it is a great book.

WISE MEN AND A STAR.

"We have seen his star in the east and have come to worship Him."

Christmas itself may be a portent for us, as the star was for the wise men. They saw a sign, a promise of joy and power and of a beautiful new world. In answer to the sign they sought a person, they brought rich gifts, they changed and dedicated their lives. Christmas summons us to change and dedication. It is a portent of a world to come, a world of peace, and of invincible good will. To our glad surprise we discover it is more blessed to give than to receive. We learn again that ties of friendship are stronger than distance or neglect. We see that love is mightier than hate; that what is false and mean must give way to what is beautiful and true.

Let us renew our hope at Christmas, and our faith, and love. Let us say to one another, as did, perhaps, the wise men on the way to Bethlehem as they pondered the meaning of the star and of the King they were trying to find and the gifts they were to give, "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and everyone that loveth is begotten of God. Beloved, if God so loved us, we also ought to love one another."

W. R. CATTON.

HOW CAN A MAN CONTINUE TO PREACH.

How can a man continue to preach the transforming power of God in Christ, when he can't discover the fruits of that power in the lives of his parishoners? How can a man continue to preach the power of God in Christ to transform self-centered spirits into loving self-sacrificing spirits, when he can't discover any signs of such transformation within the lives of those to whom he has preached? How can a man continue to preach about the "fellowship-making power" of the Holy Spirit of God in the Church, when he can't discover any such fellowship existing within his parish? How can a man continue to preach the power of God in Christ to transform a man until nothing stands prior to "seeking the Kingdom of God and His righteousness," when he can't even count the number of things which stand prior to the Kingdom in the minds and lives of his congregation? How can a man continue to tell the Christmas Story of the birth of "One who will save His people from their sins," when sinfulness so abounds in the lives of those who know the story at best?

I have my own answers to those questions. Except in my most "despairing" moments, these answers satisfy. However, because I feel that I am not alone in seeking answers to these questions, I am wondering if there are ministers or laymen in the Southern Convention who are willing to take the time and effort to suggest answers? If you have an answer for me, or for any of the other brethren who need their faith strengthened, and their long-suffering patience increased, won't you please send those answers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN! Who knows, your answer may be one which will enable many of us ministers to gain new power and inspiration for our work. Who will be the first to share his answer with his brethren?

THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Our church paper has served the churches of the Southern Convention for more than a hundred years. It has served well, not as well as it should, perhaps, but nevertheless it has served. THE CHRISTIAN SUN may not be the kind of paper that we like. It may not be as good a paper as we should have. It isn't, I am sure, but after all, it is the only paper that we have, and we have made it what it is. It is our product. It is the product of our church. If we do not like it, we should make it better. If we are not capable of making it better, perhaps, it is as good as we should have. If it were better perhaps we could not appreciate it. It may be a better paper now than some of us realize.

We are inclined, I fear, to call attention to failures and not express appreciation of successes; to magnify imperfections and minimize virtues. In our attitude toward THE CHRISTIAN SUN, our church paper, we should remind ourselves that our paper is the projection of the mind and the personality of its editor, associate editors, and contributors but largely of the editor. We of the church are asking a great deal of our editor. We expect him to serve as pastor of one of our city churches, a church that demands good preaching, morning and evening, a full program of religious education, multiplicity of pastoral services daily, and a good clean cut business administration for the church. This is quite enough to ask of any one man but, in addition, we demand of our editor a first-class religious journal representing every phase of our church's life, world-wide religious news in step with the recognized religious press of the world. In addition, editorials that are timely, informative, convincing, and succinct. All this and more of one man. Brethren of the Southern Convention, it can't be done. There is a limit to human abilities as well as mental capacities.

For one, I would like to see THE CHRISTIAN SUN improved, greatly improved, but really, aren't we getting more than we are paying for? Two dollars ($2.00) for a sixteen page paper going to our homes weekly throughout the entire year.

Under existing circumstances, isn't our editor doing a very good job?

Better, I fear, than the most of THE CHRISTIAN SUN critics. Our church paper has served a good purpose. It is needed today. We shall need it tomorrow. Let the church take counsel, enumerate its needs, determine its course, and consecrate its abilities to higher ends for the Kingdom.

Let us not underestimate the value and necessity of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. If our churches live, they must live together. No one church can live alone. Our church paper is our medium of communication, information, and instruction. We should remind ourselves that the Apostle Paul felt it necessary to communicate with the churches that he established and that we are blessed with his glorious epistles to this day. THE CHRISTIAN SUN must continue. We, of the church can make it a better paper if we want to.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The old year is coming to a close. The door of opportunity, so far as 1948 is concerned, will be shut tight. Time has a way of closing its records. They cannot be re-opened for corrections or additions. They may be improved upon in the days that lie ahead but they cannot be changed. What the churches have given to Elon College on conference apportionments, they have given. What they have failed to give remains a part of the record. To date, the churches are in arrears with the college $748.87. I can't feel that in the light of amounts contributed to other causes that the churches of our Convention will be content to let this deficit stand. One church says "We paid our apportionment, that is our share." But is it? Some churches, a number of churches, have failed. They are either too weak or too indifferent to pay. Shall our willing and generous churches be content with the deficit? Would it not be better for the interested churches to take upon themselves the responsibilities that are abandoned or neglected by other churches.

We have yet another Sunday in which to make our contributions on the college's apportionment for 1948. I believe that this is the only apportionment for any of the causes that is in the red. Will we change it or leave it there?

The college is most appreciative of every kind thought and generous contribution for the support of its program of Christian education for the church.

LITERACY MISSION.

Dr. Frank C. Laubach, noted pioneer missionary educator, will leave New York by plane December 28 for Bangkok, Siam, where he has been invited by the Siamese Government to spend ten weeks initiating a nationwide literacy campaign, according to an announcement made recently by the Committee on World Literacy and Christian Literature of the Foreign Missions Conference at 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

The invitation was forwarded by the Siamese Government's Department of Education and constitutes the first time a westerner has been invited to head a campaign of this kind, the announcement revealed. American missionary groups and UNESCO, United Nations education organization, will cooperate in the campaign, the announcement added. Dr. Laubach will be accompanied by his son, Robert, who will serve as business manager and reporter. The literacy team also will include two artists, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Gray, of Boulder, Colorado, who with local workers will devise and construct literacy lessons.

Instruction of key personnel in the use of Dr. Laubach's literacy methods and a promotional tour utilizing radio, newspapers, and other mass media will be part of the campaign, it was revealed.

The campaign will be aimed at the forty-five per cent of the population unable to read or write, the announcement said. The Siamese language, reported to be one of the most difficult to learn, will be translated by Dr. Laubach into simple charts utilizing the association of pictures, words, and syllables. Dr. Laubach's phonetic method, which has been used successfully to teach 162 languages, relies on the depiction of ideas and word sounds through pictures of familiar objects, it was explained.

The literacy team also will visit India to aid in the initiation of a RETURN TO AFRICA.

A half-ton jeep pick-up named "Pal" accompanied Miss Florence C. Malcolm, Massachusetts teacher, when she sailed from New York December 10 on the freighter Bastogne bound for her post among the Ovimbundu in Chilesso, West Africa, which is seventy-two miles from the nearest railroad on which there are only two trains a week!

The jeep pick-up has been named "Pal" for two reasons, says Miss Malcolm. One, because it will do the work of another missionary, and two, because PAL includes the letters from the names of two of the largest donors who made possible the purchase of the automobile. Many other smaller gifts were made toward this much needed means of transportation by people in the Congregational Christian Churches across the country.

Miss Malcolm needs a rugged car to traverse the rough roads of her area which in her earlier days she covered by means of an African hammock carried by two men. Even now she will often have to leave her "Pal" at the beginning of a narrow trail over which she can pass only on foot.

Since she first went to Africa in 1928 Miss Malcolm has witnessed a dramatic change in the attitude of the Africans toward education, especially that of girls. Today there are more pupils than her school can care for.

In her work Miss Malcolm not only conducts a fine school, but does a great deal of traveling among the kraals or African villages. During her last term of service before coming home on this most recent furlough she was adviser and friend-at-large to the seven hardworking Umbundu pastors who try to cover the thirty Christian churches and 210 places of worship spread out over an area equivalent to that of Massachusetts and Connecticut.

In Chilesso Miss Malcolm has to use Portuguese, the official tongue, and Umbundu, the native language. Her return trip, which is on a freighter, will probably take her over a month. Having spoken 240 times from coast to coast in America during the past year and having traveled enough miles in this country to take her to Africa and back twice, Miss Malcolm welcomes the leisurely progress of a freighter in spite of her eagerness to get back to her work.

THE SIGN OF CHRISTMAS.

A Sermon

By REV. BERNARD V. MUNGER, Minister, Chapel Hill, N. C.

*"Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the City of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you: you shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger."

As you know, these words are the climatic words of the Christmas Story as Luke tells it in the second chapter of his record. These are the words which, according to Luke, an angel spoke to the frightened shepherds, that first Christmas night. . . . These words will be my text throughout this Christmas Season. Not because tradition has it that an angel said them. Rather, because these words contain the very heart of the Christmas message.

I want to deal with that portion of the text in which it is said: "This is the sign that your Saviour has been born, you shall find the baby wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger." Goodspeed and Moffatt both translate this: "Here is proof to you that the Saviour has been born." Which all adds up to this: The angel declared that the proof that a Saviour had been sent by God is to be found in a baby, wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger. The Sign of Christmas is a baby, wrapped in swaddling clothes, and lying in a manger!

Isn't that easy to forget? The sign of Christmas is a baby in a manger! Who would think of it? Look about you as we are preparing for Christmas. What does it all suggest? You would think that Santa Claus, or the evergreen tree, were the signs of Christmas. But, says the Gospel of Luke, the sign of Christmas is a baby, wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger!

So long have the poets sung his praises, and so often have the painters pictured him, that since the days of our childhood we have seen him through our imagination or memory, just as they have represented him. We see him crowned with a little identifying halo, and surrounded with all the romantic radiance with which art and poetry could portray the stable of Bethlehem. Yet, this fictitious magic is ignored by Luke. In the tidings imparted to those shepherds, it is but a two-fold identifying sign that is named. Two matters which are significant for the identification of this Saviour of men: He is wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger. That is all! But, it has something to tell us.

WE PRAISE THEE.

O Thou eternal Spirit, we praise thee that thou dost mysteriously wait to touch with light and fill with love the hearts of those who wait before thee.

We praise thee that thou hast made the days glad and the nights bright with the memory of the birth of one who revealed the might and gentleness of thy spirit.

Grant that when we rejoice in the nativity of Jesus the Christ, our hearts may be made humble like his heart, and our spirit filled with desire for thy spirit.

We pray that our lives may be so ordered before thee that they shall show forth thy praise. We bless thee. We glorify thee. Amen.

—A Book of Worship.

First, the child that lies wrapped in swaddling clothes is no less feeble and helpless than any other baby born into this world. The mother must care for him lest he perish, must wrap him in swaddling clothes lest he freeze to death, must nourish him lest he die of hunger. The swaddling clothes are a characteristic sign of the Saviour. They speak to us of how much "at the mercy of men" God put Himself when He came into the world to be man's Saviour!

In the second place, the manger, too, is a sign: a sign of the homelessness of this baby: "There was no room for them in the inn." The manger is a sign of the life and death of the Saviour. Who was to be forever without a place that He would call His own: born in a manger, offered as a last resort because there was no other place; growing into manhood, where he was forced to say of himself, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." Dead and buried, in a tomb which was prepared for another and given to Him! The manger is a sign of a Saviour Who was from first to last, poor and homeless!

Let us look deeper and ask what the human helplessness and earthly homelessness of the infant Jesus can tell us. They tell us first of all that when God comes to man as Saviour. He came without reliance upon His Lordship over men. He comes without reliance upon His Lordship over nature. He comes relying only upon the response which human responsibility and love will make! He puts Himself at the mercy of men. He puts Himself at men's mercy in a poor, simple, humble home. When God comes to man as Saviour, He comes in such a way as to be cared for only as there are those who respond in love! "A baby wrapped in swaddling clothes"—and this, says the angel, is the proof that God has sent a Saviour. How strange! How amazingly different from what we would expect! How unbelievable of God! . . . Yet, how characteristically significant of the Saviour: beginning life in swaddling clothes, at the mercy of men; ending life in like manner, at the mercy of men who nailed Him to a cross! No wonder an early Church father suggested that, "the passion of Christ begins with His swaddling clothes!" This is the suffering of God: that He enters uniquely into human history as a helpless one, as one to whom men can do what they will, as one who lays aside all protecting power and just abandons Himself to whatever response men would make to Him in His helplessness. "Unto you is born a Saviour, and this shall be a sign unto you. You shall find a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes." Oh, the mystery, and the grandeur of that sign!

The other sign of the Saviour: a homeless baby; a baby lying in a manger. God stakes out no place which He demands for His own. He comes asking for a place in human events and human life. He relies upon men's willingness to give Him a place! And, it was just their unwillingness which made it such that from manger to grave, He had no place to call His own. God comes as Saviour, as one who asks men to express hospitality. Yet from a manger offered to Him because there was no room in the inn, to a grave which was offered Him because He had no property of His own, the Saviour went His homeless, possessionless way, staking out nothing which He labelled, "My property! Mine! My place!" Instead, He simply asked men that they make a place

*This is the text from which Pastor Niemöller preached Christmas Eve in 1944, in Dauchau concentration camp. His congregation numbered six. It was his first religious service after seven and a half years in confinement. This text is admirably adapted to such an occasion, and Niemöller made it a truly living word, as his volume of "Dachau Sermons" reveals.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR FRIENDS:

Christmas is nearly here. There are lumpy and odd-size bundles hidden in the closets, cards are arriving, cookies are baking and Sunday school parties are in full swing. It is the most wonderful of all birthdays! In the mail there was a Christmas greeting plus a poem and I give it to you now.

A Christmas Prayer.

The world so weary grows of war and strife.
The nation now with greed and hate are rife.
The land where once the Prince of Peace was born,

By clash of arms and bitterness is torn.
Where once His words of love and peace were said,

Are people filled with fear and dread.
When will the men who long for pomp and fame,

Yield to His will, acknowledge His dear Name?

Hasten the blessed day and hour,
When saying, Thine, the kingdom and the power,

Nations will bow at Thy dear feet,
And peace at last to all the world complete.
O, that our lives may be so given to Him,
That His sweet peace, and love may dwell within.

That we may seek to help our neighbor, friend.

To trust the peace of God that knows no end.

O, Manger Child so meek and lowly,
O Son of God most high, most holy,
Heal thou the hurt of all the world tonight.
In place of clouds and darkness, give thy light.

Let high and low alike in ecstasy proclaim
The Prince of Peace has come to reign.

—Mrs. T. H. Peters.

This prayer for Christmas was written by a friend in Defiance, Ohio, who helped me recall some of the early men and women of our church. Thanks, and a Christmas of Peace and Happiness to Mrs. Peters and all of you!

JUNE JOY HOUSE.

THE TRUTH ABOUT SANTA.

By ANNIE L. GAETZ.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"How does Santa come down the chimney, Mother?"

I was watering the house plants and I continued my work as I answered, "I really don't know, Bob."

"Isn't it funny!" I heard Jean remark. "Mother knows so much about everything else, but she never seems to know a thing about Santa."

"I've noticed that, too," said Bob. "Jerry's mother told him that Santa draws a big breath and blows himself up like a balloon. Then, when he wants to go down a chimney he just lets the air out, as if he were an inner tube, only he doesn't make a big bang like a tire puncture does. When he gets out of the chimney he draws a big breath and blows himself up again. That is why he's so round and fat."

"Well! Is that how it is done?" said Jean. "I've often wondered, too, how the reindeer get to the top of the house with their load; Edith's mother says that the reindeer give one big leap and sort of fly to the top of the house. It is queer that Mother never seems to know things like that."

Most parents feel that the happy confidence which children have in Santa is too precious an experience to be utterly denied or to be torn ruthlessly away from them. However, it should always be remembered that unquestioning confidence in the world of a father or mother is an even more precious experience. We shall be on the safe side about Santa if we never allow ourselves to be tempted to say anything regarding him that could not be truthfully said of a merry personification of unselfed giving. Gradually, then, as children grow older, the physical Santa Claus will be transformed into an ideal without causing any disillusionment.

Bob and Jean have now reached the years of understanding, and Christmas is again approaching. The other day I heard Bob say to Jean, "Jerry talks dreadfully about his mother. He told the boys he doesn't believe anything she says. He said he never has believed her since he found out that she had lied to him about Santa Claus. Up to that time he had been sure that if she told him anything it would be true. Now, he says, he knows better."

I was glad to know that neither of my children would be likely to talk about me that way. I have always refrained from saying anything if I could not tell them the truth. I want them to feel that my word can be depended on; otherwise, how can I expect to teach them to be truthful and honest?

There are parents who, in their desire to be strictly truthful, refuse to allow their children to have any fanciful ideas about Santa Claus. This, it seems to me, is a mistake. In the years to come these children may well feel that they have been cheated out of something that would have been very dear to them. As they travel up the hill towards manhood or womanhood and down the other side towards old age, from their book of childhood recollections there will be a beautiful page missing—the page that registers the joy and the mystery of Santa's visits. Among childhood memories this can be made one of the most deeply cherished and the most enduring.

Is it not wise to allow our boys and girls to weave their childish fancies around Santa and Santa's delightful visits? It is not necessary to tell them farfetched tales about the manner of his coming. "That's what the story-books say" is a satisfactory response in many cases when a child asks for the verification of anything that a number of his playmates accept as true. To say, "I don't know" would, of course, often be false. One mother of my acquaintance sometimes says, "Ask me when you are older." Again she will say, "When anything cannot really be known, people sometimes make up 'play-stories' about it."

Actually, it is the spirit of the dear Saint that we want to dwell upon and to enlarge upon—the spirit of loving and giving. We must help the children to understand it, and consequently thoroughly to enjoy it, by allowing them to become Santa's representatives.

THE STAR OF PEACE.

The world is hoping for peace; the truly wise men of all nations are diligently working and hoping against hope that the forces of misunderstanding, of hatred, of greed, shall not conquer.

It is so much like the search for peace some two thousand years ago; a story that we can well listen to again as it will be dramatized on the air on Sunday, December 26, in that outstanding public service radio program, "The Greatest Story Ever Told."

On that Sunday evening, at 6:30 p. m. (EST), the American Broadcasting Company network will present a dramatization of "Star of Peace," the story of the three wise men searching for the Prince of Peace; going from one section to another, following the star, meeting obstacles, overcoming situations that arose to sway them from their journey.

Thus oft it haps that when within
They shrink at sense of secret sin,

A feather daunts the brave;
A fool's wild speech confounds the wise

And proudest princes veil their eyes
Before their meanest slave.

—Walter Scott.

REPORT OF RELIGIOUS LITERATURE COMMITTEE N. C. & VA. CONFERENCE.

The text for our report on Religious Literature might well be taken from the charter of the United Nations. From the charter are these words: "Since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defenses of peace must be constructed. . . . A peace based exclusively upon the political and economic arrangements of governments would not be a peace which could secure the unanimous, lasting and sincere support of the peoples of the world. Peace must, therefore, be founded, if it is not to fail, upon the intellectual and moral solidarity of mankind," and we of the church would add, "spiritual solidarity" of mankind.

What is in our minds then, as well as in our hearts, is of great importance. We are reminded that, "As a man thinketh so is he." What are we, of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference thinking? Consequently what are we?

What defense of peace have we constructed in our minds since our last Conference? What have we been reading recently that has brought peace to our own minds and hearts and that is now an instrument in helping us to promote understanding and goodwill among our fellowmen?

Surely, if peace is to be founded upon an intellectual, moral, and spiritual basis, then it behooves us to take inventory of our own mental and spiritual resources. Many of us will have to begin by dusting the cobwebs from our unused mental cells and by airing and freeing our minds of the many stale and "lackadaisical" thoughts. Most of us will find our minds quite empty of the highest and best thoughts that come from the reading of religious literature.

There is such an abundance of religious literature or the "literature of power" as someone has expressed it—that one can scarcely give the excuse of not having anything to read. The book stores are full and overflowing with good literature. Our libraries stand willing and able to serve us. Many of our churches have provided ways and means for us to read that which is worthwhile, and certainly we can trust the reviews of the many splendid books carried in all of our religious and church papers. So, a dearth of literature is not our problem. Your Committee is convinced that what we need "is" the inspiration for more and better reading. It seems we must be prodded and guided even through we know the value of good reading.

Our first recommendation then is that our ministers become alert to what is good literature, thus, helping to challenge their people to better reading and encouraging the best in religious literature. An ideal goal might be book clubs within the church or a church-sponsored reading list. During our next Conference Year may we resolve to begin more of our conversations with an enthusiastic, "Have you read?"—and then name some good book that you have read.

Your committee further recommends some of the "must" on your reading lists. First of all must be the Bible. This Book of books furnishes everything that one could need and it is upon the rules of this Book that the defence of peace must be constructed. Wars will not begin in the minds of men who read and follow the teachings of the Bible. Keep it open—and read it:

The Fellowship of Prayer, The Quiet Hour, Daily Devotions, and The Upper Room are recommended as further materials for personal daily devotions.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN must be read for it serves as a guide and a goal in the promotion of our own work in the Conferences and in the Convention. The Advance must be read if we would be informed about our larger fellowship. The Missionary Herald is unequalled in our missionary education and information.

Pilgrim Youth continues to be the best in inspiration, helpfulness, and instruction for young people. Children's Religion is a "must" magazine for the children in the home and in the church.

The International Journal of Religious Education is helpful for Sunday School officers, teachers, and administrative leaders. Social Action must be read if we would keep informed of social, moral political, and economic trends of our nation and how these affect the religious life of our people.

The Seminar Quarterly contains many helpful suggestions and good reading material for the minister. All church people must read and become familiar with our mission study books for the year. "China in the Asia of Today" is our foreign mission theme and "America's Geographical Frontiers" is the home mission theme. Any and all of the recommended books on these themes should be read, for sure.

Finally, the committee would recommend for our reading The Christian Herald which is a magazine of interdenominational scope of great value for personal devotional reading and for general use in the home and church. All of these may be thought of by us as our defense. May we read them.

Books are the quietest and most constant of friends,

They are the most accessible and wisest counsellors,

And the most patient of teachers.

NO PEACE . . . BUT CHRISTMAS HAS NOT LOST ITS MEANING.

By C. B. RIDDLE.

While messages of "peace on earth, good will toward men" are exchanged and choristers around the globe sing, "O little town of Bethlehem, how still we see thee lie," almost the very opposite is being manifested in many parts of the world.

After nearly 2000 years during which men have hoped for peace, prayed for peace, and extolled the birth of the Prince of Peace, this long-sought event in the history of mankind has not arrived. On the contrary, peace at the moment, even to the most optimistic, seems remote.

But possibly one of the most discordant notes of the 1948 Christmas is the absence of peace in Bethlehem. A town of some 15,000 inhabitants, long associated with the religion of brotherly love and the gentle art of the shepherd, Bethlehem has frequently, in its 30 centuries of life, been the scene of strife and bloodshed.

Its first mention in the Bible is associated with death, that of Rachel, nearly 2000 years before Christ. Tending his sheep around Bethlehem was the boy named David, who later slew his ten thousands to the mere thousands of Saul. In Bethlehem according to the Bible, occurred Herod's massacre of the infants, at the same time of Christ.

Nearly a thousand years ago one of the turning points of the Crusades occurred at an old church just outside Bethlehem, where Richard the Lion Hearted gave way before Saladin, while only recently in the present Holy Land warfare, the Tomb of Rachel near the entrance of the city was a hotly contested area.

But with all the disturbances of the world, even in the cradle where the great Apostle of Peace was born, men live and pray for peace, and Christmas has not lost its meaning and its hope.

When a man is wrong and won't admit it, he always gets angry.—Exch.

THE WORLD IN WHICH JESUS LIVED.

LESSON I—JANUARY 2, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: When the fullness of the time came, God sent forth His Son.—Galatians 4:4.

LESSON: Matthew 22:15-23, 39; Luke 2:3, 1-3; Galatians 4:1-5.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 1:45-55.

The Greatest Story Ever Told.

We are beginning this week a study of the life of Jesus Christ. The lessons for two quarters will be centered around this theme. It is the greatest story ever told. Nowhere in literature, anywhere, is there anything that equals it. The great corporation which sponsors a weekly Sunday evening program under the general theme, "The Greatest Story Ever Told," has rightly named it. Incidentally this program ought to have a wide hearing among church people, for it is well done and is very much worth while. And for six months our teachers will be sharing with us out of the treasures of their hearts, things both old and new, about this important, this interesting, this incomparable story. Thanks be unto God for this great privilege both for those who teach and those who are taught.

The Greatest Life Ever Lived.

The story of the Life of Christ is the greatest story ever told, because His was the greatest life that was ever lived. He is absolutely unique in the history of the human race. There has never been anybody like Him. He lived like no other man ever lived—a sinless life. He spake like man never spake before or since—His words were spirit and life. His death on the Cross had meaning that no other man's death ever had—He died for our sins and through His death we find reconciliation with God. He rose again from the dead like no other man ever did—He became the first-fruits of them that slept. The centurion was right when he said with a note of awe and wonder in his voice, "Surely this man was the Son of God." No wonder the story of the Life of Jesus Christ is the greatest story ever told: it is the story of the Greatest Man that ever lived, the Son of Man and the Son of God.

The World in Which Jesus Lived.

The lesson material for today is concerned primarily with giving us the background of the world in which Jesus lived. They do not give us all the information we would like to have, or all the information we have about the world of Jesus' day. But they do give us significant glimpses of the kind of world in which He lived, and of some of the groups of people with whom He dealt. At the risk of being somewhat prosaic, some facts will be given herewith.

1. It was a small world. To be sure the world was as big then as it is now. But comparatively speaking it was a small world so far as the people of Jesus' day and of Jesus' country were concerned. It bordered the Mediterranean, or the Great Sea. The name itself is significant, "the Sea in the Middle of the Earth." The world of Jesus' day was the world around that sea.

2. It was a world under Roman Rule. Proud and mighty Rome ruled the world. To be sure the land in which Jesus lived was ruled by Herod when He was born, and by Herod's sons, when He began His ministry. But their authority was limited, their government was a puppet government and Rome had the last word in all matters. The fact that it was a Roman world had its advantages. There was peace—"the Rome peace." There was a system of solidly built roads leading from Rome to practically all parts of the Roman empire. There was a free interchange of peoples and ideas between the various people of the empire. And there was freedom of religion for all peoples as long as the peace was not disturbed. On the other hand there was heavy taxation, and often the spirit of arrogance, and the Jews, at least most of them, were bitter in heart, and seething with the spirit of revolt.

3. It was a world of Greek culture. Rome had conquered the world, including Greece, but Greece in turn had conquered Rome with its ideas. Greek ideas, Greek customs, and particularly the Greek language had gone far and wide and also deep into Roman life in most of the provinces. This was true even in Palestine. Even the sacred Jewish Scriptures had been translated into Greek about a century before Jesus was born. And Greek ideas and customs had infiltrated into, and profoundly affected Jewish life in large areas.

4. It was a religiously bankrupt world. The old religions had broken down. There was little vitality in them. And there was a great and a deep heart-hunger for a religion that would renew life from within and bolster it against life from without. This was evident from the way in which people turned to the "mystery religions" of the East. Judaism was, of course, the religion of the Jews. But there had been no prophetic voice for four or more centuries, and religion had become largely a matter of ritual and form and ceremony, and above all else, of law. But religion loomed large in the life of the Jewish people for all that. It centered in the Temple of Jerusalem, where alone sacrifices and offerings could be made unto God. But the important matter of worship and instruction centered in the local synagogues, which were established not only in Palestine but all over the Roman world wherever there was a sizeable number of Jews. In spite of the fact that Greek ideas and customs were prevalent in Palestine, the Jews held tenaciously to their religion. But it was not adequate to the needs of the world.

The Rulers of the World Into Which Jesus Came.

Tiberius Caesar was emperor of the Roman Empire and ruled with an iron hand. Herod the Great, an Idumean, ruled over all of Palestine when Jesus was born. Upon his death his three sons, Archelaus who ruled over Judea and Samaria, Herod Antipas who ruled over Galilee and Perea, and Philip who ruled over the extreme northern portion of his kingdom, took over the government. Archelaus proved incapable of ruling his tetrarch and was deposed, being replaced by Pontius Pilate who was governor of Judea and Samaria. "Suffered under Pontius Pilate"—thus has the Roman governor's name been perpetuated with a stigma through the centuries.

The men above were the political rulers of Palestine. But there were also religious rulers, the priestly party headed by Annas and later by Caiaphas the high priests. And there was the Sanhedrin composed of seventy men who administered the religious life of the Jews and also had some part in the civil government.

ONE EVENING IN 1216.

the dry grass. The stars sparkled in the sky like precious stones scattered on a deep blue scarf. There was no moon.

"That day in the synagogue school the boys had learned a bit of scripture that quite pleased him and as he walked it kept coming to mind like a familiar song: 'Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth: I have put my spirit upon him; he shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street. A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench; he shall bring forth judgment unto truth. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he has set judgment in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law.' (Isa. 42:1-4) 'I wonder,' thought the little chap, 'just how long will it be before the Messiah will actually come?'

"'Father, grandfather, Esau, Adonijah, I have your supper,' called Achan as he came close enough to see the sheep lying like many white rocks on the hillside.

"'Over here,' answered his father.

"It was as they were finishing the last few mouthfuls that it became visible. Adonijah saw it first and spoke to the others, 'Have any of you seen anything before like that yonder star? It glistens like a jewel in a monarch's crown.'

"His father followed his gaze and replied, 'Nay, my son, that is different from any star that ever was. What say you others?'

"Achan's grandfather, a man who knew the heavens well, looked and confirmed his son's judgment. 'We must watch it closely, my children—it is a portent, truly it is a portent. See how it moves.'

"Throughout the early evening they studied this strange star and wondered at its meaning when suddenly it appeared to stand directly above them and the heavens were filled with a majestic light—different from the light of the sun but as bright and the whole firmament was filled with angels singing.

"All shuddered with terror. Achan was the first to recover from his fright and in childish wonder asked the meaning of it all.

"'Fear not,' said one of the heavenly host, 'for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. Go to the village and there in the stable of the inn, ye shall find a babe which is Christ the Lord.'

"The shepherds questioned among themselves until grandfather said, 'Come, my children, let us go and see this wondrous thing that has been proclaimed unto us.'

"There in the stable, wrapped in swaddling clothes, as was the custom of the people, they found a babe—and such a babe it was. He was like others but so different that the shepherds felt compelled to fall upon their knees before him, much as we would if presented in King Henry's Court.

"Aye, kings also came that night to the lone stable. Kings from the east. Men of great bearing. Dressed in their finest raiment and carrying rare gifts—they, too, fell upon their knees and worshipped before the babe.

"Little Achan grew in wisdom and in stature with God. Then he left the fields of his father and traveled to Jerusalem and there worked for a while in the shops of the mixers of fine perfumes and crushers of herbs that he might learn their secrets. Ever was he learning—he had a thirst for knowledge. He drank deep of the wisdom of the scholars at the temple schools. He walked among the makers of glass and studied their art. He turned the potter's wheel. There was naught to which he set not his hand.

"By the time of this thirty-sixth year no name was better known in the Holy City than that of Achan. Men marveled at his learning and stood in awe of him. But in all of this time he had not forgotten the babe whom he had seen that night in old Bethlehem. And hoped that some day he would meet the man who had been that babe. It was as he was mixing the juice of plants that a pupil came to him and told of one who walked throughout the countryside working great miracles of healing.

"'By what is this man of healing called?' asked Achan.

"'They say he is known as Jesus.'

"'Jesus, Jesus, I recall the name—it must be the same. I would see this man. Surely it is he.'

"Achan left his shop; left Jerusalem and followed wherever he heard that this Jesus had been, until finally he found him.

"It was in Capernaum one day that he learned that the Nazarene, as some called him, was near at hand. At the house of Simon, a disciple, Achan was told that the Master walked somewhere alone—perhaps by the seaside.

"The wise man from Jerusalem set out at once in search. It was close to the shore some little way from the town that he first saw him . . . at a distance he knew him. Clearly he recognized in the man the babe. Goodness came from the person of Jesus like a sweet perfume and filled the air of the countryside around. Achan hungered for that odor.

"A strange flood of vibrant life poured into his veins and he 'halloed' to the Master. Achan walked fast, then began to run—but with his long flowing robes he could not move fast enough—therefore he drew them up and girded them about his loins.

"Coming to Jesus he cried, 'Thou art the babe of Bethlehem.' Jesus smiled. Had anyone from Jerusalem been there they would not have believed for Achan the Great wept. 'Child of Bethlehem at last I have found thee. Ever am I thy servant.'

"For hours they sat and talked and Achan became filled with the 'glory of the Lord.' When at last they had finished Achan would have stayed close to the Master—but there was other work for him, and Jesus said:

"'Go ye then back to Jerusalem—for the time comes when I will be in need of friends in the city.'

"It was Achan who persuaded Joseph of Arimathaea and others. Ever did he work in favor of Jesus.

"After that grim night on Calvary, Achan left the Temple City and traveled to the south. Although all others had lost hope Achan knew in his heart that the man who had hung on the cross was the Christ and he remembered the words of the prophet Isaiah when he said, 'He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from him—behold thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that know not thee shall run unto thee because of the Lord, thy God.'

"'I shall go to such a nation,' he said.

It was thus that Achan came to Egypt, but his fame had gone before him. Kings, scholars at the university, physicians sought him. Poor men and rich came to his door. Healing was in his touch but ever as he healed he would say, 'This I do for him.'

"'Twas not long before men asked, 'Who is this whom the great Achan serves? Is it Osiris or one of the foreign gods?'

"'Nay,' 'twas noised about, 'he serves one who was crucified in Jerusalem—the malefactor, Jesus.'

"'Jesus was a fool,' said some.

"'But could he have been such a fool,' many asked, 'if Achan followed him?' And gradually many were won to the way."

The fire on the hearth burned low, a chill settled over the hall but the hearts of those who had listened to the story told by Roderick the minstrel, were warm.

DEAR FRIENDS:

When we made out our financial report this week we found our churches and Sunday schools have sent in $17,531.68, and from outside sources we have received $21,509.20, making a total of $39,040.88. We are a long ways from our goal, but we still hope to reach it and make this our "Banner Year" in this work.

Forty of the children chosen from all the buildings were invited to Chapel Hill by the Chi Phi Fraternity of the University of North Carolina last Sunday, to be entertained at a Christmas party and they played Santa Claus to them. This same fraternity played Santa Claus to them last year and enjoyed it so much they invited them back again this year. We were met at the Fraternity house by a group of fine boys and girls (the girls being invited to help the boys entertain), and they put on a two-hour program. They sang Christmas carols in which all the children took part. Then they were invited into the dining room and were given ice cream. Next they went to the living room where Santa was waiting for them. After some remarks about Christmas, they put on a movie, showing old Santa and his reindeer landing on top of a house and going down the chimney with his pack and filling the children's stockings while they slept. It was very interesting to the children as well as the grown-ups. The boys had a sheet hanging up next to the ceiling, and to their surprise they let one end down and filled the room with long balloons which the children enjoyed very much. Chancellor House of the University of North Carolina was present and gave several selections on his harmonica. It was all a very happy occasion, and they made us promise to bring the children back next year.

One class in the Hopedale Sunday School put on a nice treat for the children in Johnston Hall last Saturday night. They came in cars and took all of them, with a matron and Mr. Wagoner, to a club house near Burlington and played Santa Claus to them. They had eats, Coca-Cola, and a present for each child. They reported a very enjoyable time, and it was very kind of this class to do this for the little fellows here.

1. The Pharisees were the Puritans of that day, also called "separatists." They made no obeisance to Rome, they had no truck with Greek ideas and customs. They were the strict religious party. They dotted every "i" and crossed every "t" of the law. Circumspect, formal, exclusive, but devoted to the law.

2. The Sadducees. They were the "four hundred"—the aristocracy. They were the priestly party and they ruled the affairs of the Temple, and lived well by virtue of its privileges. They had vested interests in it, and although they had but little interest in religion as such, they soon rose up in arms when Jesus began to cut across their vested interests and their special privileges. They did not believe either in the spirit or in the resurrection.

3. The Herodians. A small party, really political rather than religious. They were in favor of Herod, and were what might be called "cheap politicians" of that day.

4. Essenes. Another small group, intensely religious, ascetic in manner of life, and living somewhat apart from the common life. There are those who think that John the Baptist was an Essene.

5. "The Devout." Simeon was a good representative of this small group. They held tenaciously to the Messianic hope and eagerly looked forward to the coming of the "Deliverer" while patiently waiting for His coming.

In the Fulness of the Time.

God's clock struck, and in the fulness of time, He sent His Son into the world. It was not chance or even coincidence. It was all a part of the divine plan.

MISSIONS CONFERENCE SET.

The best methods and techniques for missionaries to adopt in areas dominated or penetrated by Communism will be among the major topics for discussion at the annual meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America at Buck Hills Falls, Pa., January 4-7.

The proposals will cover such subjects as the best types of missionaries for work in Communist areas, the most acceptable types of missions projects, the most effective literature as a counter-weapon to Communist propaganda, and an over-all Protestant missions policy toward Communism in Latin America, China and other "critical world areas," Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference, disclosed.

"With Communism on the offensive in many parts of the world, particularly China," Dr. Fairfield said, "it is essential for this conference to rethink the role of the missionary. Christian missions need to adopt realistic, if not revolutionary means to interpret their message and service in the face of fast-moving world conditions."

In addition to airing the Communist issue, the conference will take action on the proposed National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. This suggested organization would establish an inclusive Protestant body comprised of eight interdenominational agencies. To date, only two of the agencies, the United Stewardship Council, and the National Protestant Council on Higher Education, have formally voted to join the Council. However, the other six agencies have expressed approval of the plan in principle.

The conference will also hear reports from member boards on their progress in carrying out the "Advance Program" announced last October. These reports will stress the new techniques being applied on mission fields, and will include summaries of new projects and personnel.

Other conference reports will deal with future plans for relief and rehabilitation, Christian work in American communities abroad, the development of friendly relations with foreign students here, and methods for recruiting new missionaries.

THE SIGN OF CHRISTMAS.

for Him in their world, in their lives! "This," said the angel, "shall be a sign unto you, of your saviour. You shall find the babe, lying in a manger!" No wonder the early Church proclaimed with reverent awe how God had emptied Himself, in order to become man's Saviour. As Paul said, "Jesus Christ, though He was rich, yet for our sakes, He became poor!" This is the glory of Christmas: this self-renouncing, self-sacrificing, utterly self-abandoning love of God in Christ!

Perhaps a fable will help. Perhaps a story told by P. T. Forsyth, will illustrate. Suppose, therefore, an Oriental court in adventurous Arabia. There is a foolish, headstrong young Sultan. There is also a venerable old court adviser, wise, vigilant and devoted. Suppose, too, a group of plotting chieftains, pashas, eager to dethrone the Sultan. As the venerable court adviser sits next to his Sultan master at a feast, he observes a pinch of poison stealthily dropped into the imperial cup. He has heard a rumour of a conspiracy. He knows the nature of the poison. It means slow paralysis and lingering death! In a moment he has decided. He takes resolute action for there is no other way. He challenges the Sultan to a pledge in exchanged cups. In due course, he feels the consequences in the impaired powers with which he drags through a year or two of life. He lives thus, till the ruler at last learns of his devotion, is straightway stung to his inner spirit by this loving sacrifice, and shows his gratitude by such a change of life and such a growth in royal worth, as to reward his saviour's love for all it had borne. . . . See there the love, the self-less will which decided to take the drug, full knowing its cost and how he must part with his own powers, his own life, for no other course could save the young man he loved! There is a story which suggests that about which we're thinking this morning.

God, in Christ, by the same loving, sacrificing will, abandoned Himself to the mercy of the humanity he had created, even to the point of being victimized by it, being done to death by it. But, in that very act, He not only brings salvation to those He loves, but he also gives the supreme and saving expression of His own Nature! This self-renouncing, self-retracting act of the will of God in Christ; this reduction of Himself to helplessness and homelessness before men for the purpose of being their Saviour; this is the great assertion of His loving nature! It is in this that all men can see and know that God is Love. To come amongst men and act as man's redeemer; to be born, to suffer, and to die, was the mightiest act of God's love. Herein was love most fully exercised. Herein was love portrayed most abundantly! Here is the most amazing expression of holy love. And, let us never for a moment forget that, holy love is the supreme description of Almighty God! God is love, and God so loved that He gave! That is the good news! And the sign of this saving love, the proof that God's love is such as will stoop to man's needs and save man, is in this baby: wrapped in swaddling clothes, and lying in a manger. Would God that at this Christmas season it were given us to see the swaddling clothes and the manger as something far more than "props" to add enchantment to the Stable Scene. Would God that it were given us to see in the swaddling clothes and the manger that which God wants us to see: the signs of His great love toward us! In God's willingness to put Himself at the mercy of men, to appeal directly to their love and to rely upon nothing else, we see the greatness of God's Love!

Mrs. Thomas King, former missionary to Africa under the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, Mass., died November 27, 1948, at her home in Craigmere, Southern Rhodesia, Africa. She was buried beside her husband in the cemetery at Mt. Silinda. Mr. and Mrs. King were members of the East Africa mission from December, 1905, to October, 1920. Mrs. King would have been seventy-nine on January 1, 1949.

ON CHRISTMAS

By Rev. William C. Kernan, Executive Director
Institute for American Democracy, Inc.

This is a Christmas message. It begins 2,000 years ago—in Judea—when Christ was born. It begins with the song of the Heavenly Host—“Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.” This is the greeting of heaven to earth on Christmas. This is the Christmas message to men everywhere.

It comes to us again in this year of grace, 1948. It comes amidst strife, discord, and confusion. It comes to some in whose hearts bitterness is so great that their ears cannot hear at all.

But in spite of this the message of Christmas remains—timeless and eternal—“Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.” There is nothing to be gained by defying it. No one needs to defy it. Everyone can accept the message and proclaim it. The future of our life, our society, our country, depends on our doing that.

For we have only to realize that America needs unity today as she never needed it before. We know that the members of no one race or religion built this country, fought its wars, wrote its Declaration of Independence, drew up its Constitution, developed its industries. We know that America has become great—and remains great—because our people have trusted in God, because men of every race and many religions have poured their lives, and imaginations, and energy into the making of this America of ours. We know that without good will and understanding between Americans of such diverse origins and religions the process of building America as a land of opportunity for free men must stop.

“Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men.” The angelic song, heard when Christ was born, is not only for the ears and hearts of the countless unheralded folk of the earth. It is for the powerful and influential, too. It is for everybody. And it is for each of us to do something about—something which will please and honor God—something for which all men of good will will bless us and for which America will pronounce us worthy sons of a great and noble country.

Our country needs us now—needs our prayers and our help—to make America a land where no man fears to hold his head high, to cast out the demons of hate and suspicion and discord, to keep this good land free for men of every race and religion, to make our democracy work in better and surer ways.
